

CORNELL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

BOUGHT WITH THE INCOME OF THE SAGE ENDOWMENT FUND GIVEN IN 1891 BY HENRY WILLIAMS SAGE

Cornell University Library
PE 1584.P17

Folk-etymology:

3 1924 027 422 405

oia

Cornell University
Library

The original of this book is in the Cornell University Library.

There are no known copyright restrictions in the United States on the use of the text.

<http://www.archive.org/details/cu31924027422405>

Folk-Etymology.

FOLK-ETYMOLOGY,

A

DICTIONARY

OF

VERBAL CORRUPTIONS OR WORDS PERVERTED IN FORM OR MEANING, BY FALSE DERIVATION OR MISTAKEN ANALOGY.

BY REV. A. SMYTHE PALMER,

CURATE OF STAINES; LATE SCHOLAR OF TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN; AUTHOR OF "LEAVES FROM A WORD-HUNTER'S NOTE-BOOK."

LONDON: GEORGE BELL AND SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

1882.

B742707

~~P. 193~~

305

~~D 26(2)~~

CHISWICK PRESS :—CHARLES WHITTINGHAM AND CO.
TOOKS COURT, CHANCERY LANE.

JT

CONTENTS.

	PAGES
INTRODUCTION . . . . .	i—xxviii
ENGLISH WORDS CORRUPTED . . . . .	1—456
FOREIGN WORDS CORRUPTED . . . . .	457—514
PROPER NAMES CORRUPTED . . . . .	515—567
CORRUPTIONS DUE TO COALESCENCE OF THE ARTICLE . . . . .	568—591
CORRUPTIONS DUE TO MISTAKES ABOUT NUMBER . . . . .	592—607
ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS . . . . .	608—664

INTRODUCTION.

By Folk-etymology is meant the influence exercised upon words, both as to their form and meaning, by the popular use and misuse of them. In a special sense, it is intended to denote the corruption which words undergo, owing either to false ideas about their derivation, or to a mistaken analogy with other words to which they are supposed to be related. Some introductory remarks on the predisposing causes of this verbal pathology and its symptomatic features may conveniently find place here.

In every department of knowledge a fertile source of error may be found in the reluctance generally felt to acknowledge one's ignorance. Few men have the courage to say "I don't know." If a subject comes up on which we have no real information, we make shift with our imagination to eke out what is wanting in our knowledge, and with unconscious insincerity let "may be" serve in the place of "is." Another infirmity of mind which helps to foster and perpetuate the growth of errors is the instinctive dislike which most men feel for everything untried and unfamiliar. If, according to the accepted maxim, "the unknown ever passes for magnificent," it is no less true that in the majority of instances the unknown arouses active feelings of suspicion and resentment. There is an Arabic proverb, says Lord Strangford, An-nâsû a'dâûn mâ jâhalû, of which the French C'est la mesintelligence qui fait la guerre is a feeble shadow, and which we may freely translate "When men see a strange object which they know nothing of they go and hate it" (Letters and Papers, p. 86). The uneducated shrink from novelties. A thing is new, i.e. not like anything in their past or present experience, then it is "unlikely," unsafe, untrue.

Thus, significantly enough, in Spain, a country which has more yet to learn than most in Europe, novedad, novelty, is in common parlance synonymous with danger. Reformers in all ages have had unhappy experiences of this popular feeling. To leave the common track is to be delirious (de lirâ), if not something worse. Fust, the innovating printer, is in general belief no better than Faust, who juggles with the fiend. How the attitude of the popular mind towards the vast field of human knowledge will be influenced by this prejudice may easily be imagined. When it is a foregone conclusion that the only thing that will be, or can be, is the thing that hath been, every phenomenon which refuses to adapt itself to that self-evident axiom will be doubted or ignored; and, if it persists in obtruding itself as an obstinate fact, it must be manipulated somehow till it fits in with the old formula. This unreasoning conservatism of the populace, which has handed down many an ancient superstition and delusion in the region of Folk-lore, has had a marked effect in the province of language also. Multitudes of words owe their present form, or present meaning, to the influence exercised upon them by popular misconception. The Queen's English is for the Queen's subjects; and if they treat it like the Queen's currency—thumb it into illegible smoothness, or crooken it for luck, or mutilate it now and then if suspected as a counterfeit, or nail it fast as an impostor whose career must be stopped—who can say them nay? "They will not use a foreign or strange word until, like a coin, it has been, to use the technical term, surfrappé with an image and superscription which they understand. If a foreign word be introduced, they will neither use it at all, or not until they have twisted it into some shape which shall explain itself to them" (Farrar, Chapters on Language, p. 138). For if there is one thing the common folk cannot away with, it is an unknown word, which, seeming to mean something, to them means nothing. A strange vocable which awakes no echo in their understanding simply irritates. It is like a dumb note in a piano, which arouses expectation by being struck, but yields no answering sound. Every one has heard how O'Connell vanquished a scolding fishwife to tears and silence with the unintelligible jargon supplied by Euclid. Ignotum pro horrifico!

"If there's any foreign language [read to them] which can't be explained, I've seen the costers annoyed at it—quite annoyed," says one intimate with their habits in Mayhew's London Labour and the London Poor (vol. i. p. 27). He read to them a portion of a newspaper article in which occurred the words noblesse and qui n'est point noble n'est rien. "I can't tumble to that barrikin" [understand that gibberish], said a young fellow, "it's a jaw-breaker." "Noblesse!" said another, "Blessed if I know what he's up to," and here there was a regular laugh.

The feeling of the common people towards foreigners who use such words is one of undisguised contempt. It seems supremely ridiculous to the bucolic Englishman that a wretched Frenchy should use such a senseless lingo. Why say oh when it is so much more obvious to say "water" in plain English? How perverse to use we for "yes," and then noo for "we"! If any word from his vocabulary be adopted, it must, as contraband goods, pay heavy toll ere it pass the frontier. It must put on an honest English look before it receives letters of denization—Quelques choses must pass as kick-shaws, and haut goût as hogo. To the unlettered hind still, as to the Greeks of old, every foreigner is a mere "bar-bar-ian," an inarticulate jabberer.

Nay, even a foreign garb awakens our insular prejudices. Should an Oriental stranger pace down the street of any of our country villages in all his native grace and long-robed dignity, he would, to a certainty, be pronounced a "guy," and might congratulate himself if he escaped with being ridiculed and not hooted and pelted by a crowd of grinning clod-pates. If he would but condescend to change his barbaric turban for the chimney-pot of civilization, and his flowing robe for a pair of strait trousers, and, perhaps, beflour his bronzed countenance, so as to "look like a Christian," he might then go his way unmolested, and probably unobserved. It is much the same with the language he imports. The words of his vocabulary must be Anglicized, or we will have none of them. They will be regarded with suspicion till they put on an honest English dress and begin to sound familiar. The unmeaning bihishti (a water-carrier) must become beastie; sipahi must turn into sepooy or (as in America) into seapoy; Sirāju-d-daula must masquerade as Sir Roger Dowler.

Thus Barker saheb aya, cover the Jew, is the popular transmutation in the Anglo-Indian lingo of the Hindustani bahir ka sahib aya khabir dijo, i. e. "a stranger has come, please give the news" (Duncan Forbes).

The Margrave of Baden Dourlach was called by the people the Prince of Bad-door-lock (Horace Walpole, Letters, vol. ii. p. 208).

Longbelly was the popular form at Durban of the name of the S. African chief Langabalele (Froude, Short Studies on Great Subjects, 3rd Series, p. 354).

Bellerophon, the ship that carried the first Napoleon into exile, became the Bullyruffian, and another vessel, the Hirondelle, was known as the Iron Devil. The Franctireurs became the Francerrors (Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 26).

In a similar way the lower classes in Hungary often deface foreign names when they are contrary to euphony, and try to transform them into compounds that shall have a meaning as Hungarian words; Lord Palmerston, for instance, was called Pál Mester (Master Paul), Prince Schwarzenberg, the Governor of Transylvania, was known as Sarczember (The tribute man), and Prince Reuss Köstritz as Rizskása (Rice pudding).—Pulszky, in Philolog. Trans. 1858, p. 23.

The Romans contrived to make the one word serve for a guest, a stranger, and an enemy—pretty good evidence that those ideas were intimately associated in their minds. In English, too, "guest," "host," and "hostility" have the same underlying identity: and to our verbal guests, at all events, it must be admitted we as hosts are often hostile. We give them a Procrustean reception by enforcing conformity to our own manner of speaking, and our treatment of alien words, or even native words which happen to look like strangers, is intolerant and arbitrary. In popular and colloquial speech these mutilations and abbreviations abound. If a word appears to be of undue length it must submit to decapitation. Hence 'bus, 'van, 'plot, 'wig, 'drawing-room, &c. If the head is spared, the tail must go. Hence cab', cit', gin', mob', phiz', tar' (= sailor), wag', slang cop' (= capture), spec', &c.

Sometimes a word is simply cut in two and each half, worm-like, has henceforth a life of its own. An old game at cards was called lanturlu in French; this became lanterloo in English (lang-trilloo, in Shadwell's A True Widow, 1679). The latter part of the word yielded loo, the former lanter, and lant, the names still given to the game in Cumberland and Lincolnshire. "At lanter the caird lakers sat i' the loft" (Dickinson, Cumberland Glossary, E. D. S.). So Alexander yields the two Scottish names Alec or Aleck and Saunders. Sometimes, again, nothing but the heart or dismembered trunk is left in a middle accented syllable, as in the slang 'tec', a detective, and sometimes the word, if not quartered, is clean "drawn" or eviscerated, as in alms, proxy, sexton, prov. Eng. skeg (for "suck-egg"), the cuckoo.

But of all the tricks that the mischievous genius of popular speech loves to play upon words, none is more curious than the transformation it makes them undergo in order that they may resemble other words in which some family relation or connexion is imagined. This is Folk-etymology proper. If the word does not confess its true meaning at once, we put it on the rack till it at least says something. "The violent dislike which we instinctively feel to the use of a word entirely new to us, and of which we do not understand the source, is a matter of daily experience; and the tendency to give a meaning to adopted words by so changing them as to remove their seemingly arbitrary character has exercised a permanent and appreciable influence on every language" (Farrar, Origin of Language, p. 56).

In the world of animated nature the curious faculty with which many creatures are endowed of assimilating themselves to their surroundings in colour and even shape is one of the most interesting phenomena that engages the naturalist. It is one chief means such animals have of securing themselves against their natural enemies, or of eluding the notice of their prey. Thus the boldly-striped skin of the tiger enables it to crouch unobserved amongst the stalks and grass of the jungle; the tawny lion exactly counterfeits the colour of the sandy plain over which he roams; the russet feathers of the woodcock render him scarcely distinguishable from the withered leaves amidst which he lurks. Fishes will imitate to a nicety the exact colour of the bottom over which they swim, changing, it is said, as it is changed; while the so-called "leaf insects" of Ceylon simulate the very form and veining of the foliage amongst which they live. It is due to this protective mimicry that the white Arctic foxes are often enabled to escape the pursuit of their natural enemies amongst perpetual snows. In the domain of philology, something very analogous to this may be observed. A word conspicuous by some peculiarity of foreign shape or sound only gains immunity by accommodating itself to its new habitat. It must lose its distinctive colour, and contrive to look like an English word in England, like a French word in France, if it is to run free. This pretence of being native when indeed foreign is made by many words in every language. Thus bangle, jungle, toddy, which look familiar enough, are accommodations of Hindustani words; awning, curry, juckal, caravan, are Anglicized Persian words; caddy is Malayan;  jerked-beef is Peruvian. So Fr. redingote is only a travesty of Eng. riding-coat, as old Fr. goudale, goud-fallot, are of Eng. good ale, good fellow. Many French words are Scotticized out of all resemblance; blenshaw, Burdyhouse, gardeloo, killyvie, jigot, proochie, are not at once recognizable as blanche eau, Bordeaux, gare de l'eau, qui là vive, gigot, approchez (Jamieson).

An immense number of English and Latin words are imbedded in Welsh, but so Cambrianized that they pass for excellent Welsh; cwppwrdd, llewpart, ffodlgraff, pwrcau, sawgart, are disguised forms of cupboard, leopard, photograph, purchase, safeguard; and cysylltu, swllt, ystywyll (= Epiphany), of Lat.

consolidare, solidus, stella (the wise men's star). See Rhys, Lectures on Welsh Philology, p. 74. Similarly Gaelic abounds in borrowed words, which, like stolen children, are disfigured that they may not be reclaimed. Thus Armstrong's Dictionary gives prionnsa, priomhlaid, probhaid, prionntair, which merely stand for prince, prelate, profit, printer; Campbell cites daoimean for diamond, and probhaisd (lord mayor) for provost. Similarly in Gaelic, Lat. oblatum takes the form of abhlan, sæculum of saoghal, apostolus of abstol, episcopus of easbuig; discipulus becomes deisciopuil; sacerdos, sagart; baptizare, baist; consecrare, coisrig; confortare, comhfortaich (vid. Blackie, Language and Literature of the Highlands, p. 31). Adbhannsa, noision, coitseachan, deasput, phairti, represent Eng. advance, motion, coaches, dispute, party (Campbell, Tales of W. Highlands, vol. iv. p. 167). Bhaigair, fuluir, reismeid, are the Eng. words beggar, powder, regiment, in disguise (Id. p. 183). So lukarn, karkara, aikeits, are Gothicized forms of the Latin lucerna, carcer, acetum; in Hebrew sanhedrin is a loan-word from Greek sunêdrion, while it lends siphonia to the Greek as sumphonia. Who would recognize at a glance the Greek prosbolê in the Rabbinical Pruzbul, "the defence," a legal document (Barclay, The Talmud, p. 81).

In the same way the Northmen often adopted bastard Greek words into their own tongue. Thus, from Hagiosophia, the famous church of St. Sophia, they made their Ægisif; from the Hippodrome, their Padreimr. So Elizabeth became Ellisif, Hellespontum was twisted into Ellipallta, Apulia became Pulsland, Sátalias-gulf became Atals-Fjord. See Prof. Stephens, Old Northern Runic Monuments, p. 964.

Even within the limits of our own language the likeness assumed by one word to another is so deceptive that dictionary-makers have over and over again fallen into the mistake of supposing a radical identity where there was only a superficial and formal resemblance between them. Cutlet, for example, seems very naturally to denote a little cut off a loin of mutton, a "chop," as we also call it; and cutler seems equally suggestive of one who has to do with such cutting instruments as knives and razors. Accordingly Richardson, with easy credulity, groups both these words under the verb to cut, not penetrating the English disguise in the one case of Fr. côtelette, a little rib (from côte, Lat. costa), and in the other of Fr. couteilier or cotelier, Lat. cultellarius, the man of knives (Lat. cultellus, a knife). Similarly clipper, a fast sailing vessel, from the analogy of cutter, readily falls into a line with clip, to speed along, and has often been ranged as a derivative under that word, with which it has really no connexion, as will be seen at p. 66. The same lexicographer also confuses together press and press-(gang), stand and standard, a banner, tact and tactics, and thinks an earnest is a pledge given of being in earnest about one's bargain or agreement—words totally unrelated.

Again rantism, an old pedantic word for an aspersion or sprinkling of water, especially in the rite of baptism, has nothing to do, as Richardson imagined, with the verb to rant, or, as Johnson puts it, with "the tenets of the wretches called xanters," being simply the Greek rhantismós, a sprinkling, adopted bodily (Trench, On Some Deficiencies in our Eng. Dictionaries, p. 22).

“We but an handfull to their heape, but a rantisme to their baptisme.”—Bp. Andrewes, Of the Sending of the Holy Ghost, Sermons, p. 612 fol.

Pitfalls like these await word-mongers at every turn, and there are few but tumble into them sometimes. I may mention one or two which I was nearly caught in while engaged on this work. Meeting the word green-sickness in Suckling (Fragmenta Aurea, 1648, p. 82), and The Spectator (No. 431), the chief symptom of which malady is an unnatural longing for unwholesome food, I was for a time tempted to see in this the Scottish verb green or grene, to long (e.g. in Dalryell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland, p. 206), from A. Sax. gyrnan, to yearn, georn, desirous. However, it really bears its true meaning on its face, it being, as Johnson says, “the disease of maids, so called from the paleness which it produces,” from green, used for pale; and so its scientific name is chlorosis, from Greek chlôros, green, Welsh glaswst, from glas, green, pale, proving my too ingenious conjecture to be unfounded. Again, on discovering that the Low Latin name for the common wild cherry is Prussus avium, and having read that Prussic acid can be made (and I believe is made) from the kernels of cherries and other stone-fruit, I concluded for the moment that Prussic acid must be that manufactured from the Prussus. Further investigation showed me that it was really the acid derived from Prussian Blue, as witness the Danish blaasyre, “blue-acid,” Ger. berlinerblausäure, “Berlin-blue-acid,”—that colour having been discovered by a Prussian at Berlin.

A similar blunder, though plausible at first sight, is Tyrwhitt’s theory that the old expression hot fot or hot foot, with all speed (Debate between Body and Soul, in Mape’s Poems, p. 339), or fote hote (Gower, Chaucer), is a corruption of an old Eng. haut fote, adapted from Fr. haut pied, as if with uplifted foot, on the trot or gallop (see Cant. Tales, note on l. 4858). The suggestion might seem to derive corroboration from Cotgrave’s idioms:—

“S’en aller haut le pied, To flie with lift-up legs, or as fast as his legs can carry with him.”

“Poursuivre au pied levé, To follow foot-hot or hard at the heels.”

However, as impetuosity and quick motion are often expressed by heat (cf. Hotspur; “A business of some heat,” Othello, i. 2; heats in racing; and Shakespeare speaks of a horse “heating an acre”), this supposition seems unnecessary, and is certainly wrong. The worst of it is that learned men have had such confidence in the truth of their theories that they have sometimes even altered the spelling of words that it may correspond more closely to the fancied original. Thus abominable was perverted into abhorrible, voisinage into vicinage, and many other instances will be found below.

Dr. J. A. H. Murray, remarking that Abraham Fleming’s alteration of old Eng. bycoket, a military cap, to abacot (Holinshel, p. 666, 1587), was doubtless in accordance with some etymological fancy, adds that all the corruptions of the English language have been thus caused. “The pedants of the sixteenth century, like the sciolists of the nineteenth, were strong for ‘etymological spelling’; their constant tinkering at the natural and historical forms of English words, to make their spelling remind the eye of some Latin or Greek words with which they were thought to be connected, was a curse to true etymology. They exemplify to the full the incisive remark of Prince Lucien Bonaparte that "the corrupters of language are the literary men who write it not as it is, but according to their notions of what it ought to be."—Athenæum, Feb. 4, 1882, p. 157.

Julius Hare had long before given expression to much the same opinion:—"A large part of the corruptions in our language has arisen, not among the vulgar, but among the half-learned and parcel-learned, among those who, knowing nothing of the antiquities of their own tongue, but having a taint of Latin and Greek, have altered our English words to make them look more like their supposed Latin or Greek roots, thereby perpetuating their blunder by giving it the semblance of truth. Thus nobody now doubts that island is connected with isle and insula, rhyme with ῥυθμός, whereas if we retained the true spelling iland and rime, it would have been evident that both are words of Teutonic origin, and akin to the German Eiland and Reim. Such corruptions, as having no root among the people, as being mere grafts stuck in by clumsy and ignorant workmen, it is more especially desirable to remove. Their being more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other is attributable to its mongrel character: the introduction of incongruous analogies has much confounded, and ultimately blunted that analogical tact, which is often found to possess such singular correctness and delicacy in the very rudest classes of mankind: and the habit of taking so many of our derivatives from foreign roots has often led us to look abroad, when we should have found what we wanted at home. For while the primary words in our language are almost all Saxon, the secondary, as they may be called, are mostly of French, the tertiary of Latin origin; and the attention of book-mongers has been chiefly engaged by the latter two classes, as being generally of larger dimensions, and coming more obtrusively into view, while our Saxon words were hardly regarded as a part of our learned tongue, and so were almost entirely neglected. On the other hand, a great many corruptions have resulted from the converse practice of modifying exotic words under the notion that they were native; and this practice has prevailed more or less in all countries" (Philological Museum, i. 654). Thus our unfortunate vocabulary has been under two fires. The half-learned and the wholly unlettered have alike conspired to improve words into something different from what they really are.

"Ignorance has often suggested false etymologies; and the corresponding orthography has not unfrequently led to false pronunciation, and a serious perversion of language." Thus the old word causey came to be spelt causeway, and life-lode was turned into livelihood, and the pronunciation, as Dr. Guest observes, is now generally accommodated to the corrupt spelling; but he was certainly too sanguine when he wrote, thirty-five years ago, "that no one who regards purity of style would, under any circumstances, employ terms so barbarous" (Philological Proceedings, 1848, vol. iii. p. 2).

"It is usual," says Thomas Fuller, "for barbarous tongues to seduce words (as I may say) from their native purity, custome corrupting them to signifie things contrary to their genuine and grammatical notation" (Pisgah Sight, 1650, p. 39). The working of this principle of misconstruction has left its mark on the Authorized version of our Bible. "In some cases the wrong rendering of our translators arose from a false derivation which was generally accepted in their age. Thus ἀκέραιος (Matt. x. 16, Phil. ii. 15) is rendered 'harmless' [as if originally 'hornless,' from a, not, and kéras, a horn], instead of 'simple, pure, sincere' [lit. 'unmixed,' from keránnumi]. So also erithéia (Rom. ii. 8, Gal. v. 20, &c.) is taken to mean 'strife, contention,' from its supposed connexion with eris, whereas its true derivation is from érithos, 'a hired partisan,' so that it denotes 'party-spirit'" (Bp. Lightfoot, On a Fresh Revision of the New Testament, p. 137).

In our nursery tale Folk-etymology has clothed Cinderella's foot with glass in the place of minever. It is now generally believed (e.g. by Mr. Ralston and M. Littré) that the substance of la petite pantoufle de verre in Charles Perrault's story of Cendrillon (1697) "was originally a kind of fur called vair—a word now obsolete in France, except in heraldry, but locally preserved in England as the name of the weasel [see FAIRY, p. 116]—and that some reciter or transcriber to whom the meaning of vair was unknown substituted the more familiar, but less probable, verre, thereby dooming Cinderella to wear a glass slipper." Balsac, so long ago as 1836, affirmed that the pantoufle was sans doute de menu vair, i.e. of minever (The Nineteenth Century, Nov. 1879).

Thus it is not alone the form of a word that undergoes a metamorphosis from some mistaken assimilation, but its signification gets warped and perverted from a false relationship or analogy being assumed. Many instances of this reflex influence will be found throughout this volume. An early instance is exhibited, it is supposed, in the name of the tower of Babel, originally Bab-el or Bab-bel, "the gate of God or Bel," which by the quaint humour of primitive times had been turned to the Hebrew word "Babel," or "confusion" (Stanley, Jewish Church, vol. i. p. 7). But Babel or Bab-ilu is itself a Semitic translation of the older Turanian name Ca-dimirra, "gate of God" (Sayce, Trans. of Soc. of Bib. Archaeology, vol. i. p. 298).

Similarly, with regard to the early belief in a stone-sprung race (λίθινος γένος, Pindar), human beings are represented as having been created out of stones in the Greek legend of Deucalion and Pyrrha, from a notion that λαὸς, people, was derived from λάας, a stone (Von Bohlen, Genesis, ii. 170), just as if we were to connect "people" (Welsh pobl), with "pebble" (old Eng. pooble).

The fact is, man is an etymologizing animal. He abhors the vacuum of an unmeaning word. If it seems lifeless, he reads a new soul into it, and often, like an unskilful necromancer, spirits the wrong soul into the wrong body. In old writers we meet the most ludicrous and fanciful suggestions about the origination of words, quite worthy to range with Swift's osler for oat-stealer, and apothecary from a pot he carries. Alexander Neckam, in the twelfth century, delights in "derivations" like "passer a patiendo," "ardea quasi ardua," "alauda a laude diei," "truta a trudendo," "pellicanus, the pellican, so called because its skin (pellis) when touched seems to sound (canere) by reason of its roughness" (De Naturis Rerum, I. cap. 73). Other mediæval etymologies are equally amusing, e.g. Low Lat. colossus, a grave-stone, i.e. colens ossa, "bones-keeper" (Prompt. Parv. s.v. Memoryal); Lat. nepos, a spendthrift, from negans pussum, sc. ad bonum, not a step taking to anything good (Id. s.v. Neve); "sepulchra, id est, semipulchra, halfe faire and beautiful" (Weever, Funeral Monuments, p. 9, 1631), "extra nitidum, intus fœtidum" (T. Adams, Sermons, ii. 466). Durandus thinks that Low Lat. poliantrum, a tomb or mausoleum (for polyandrum, the place of "many men"), is from pollutum antrum, a polluted cave; and cemetery, "from cimen which is sweet, and sterion which is station, for there the bones of the departed sweetly rest"! (Symbolism of Churches, p. 102, ed. Neale). Philip de Thau, in his Norman-French Livre des Creatures, derives Samadi, Saturday, from semuns, seed (l. 251); Septembre from Lat. imber, rain; furmi, an ant, Lat. formica, because "fort est e porte mie" (l. 502), it is strong (fortis) and carries a crumb (mica); perdix, partridge, so named because it loses, pert (perdit), its brood. Equally whimsical is his affiliation of verrex, a wether, on ver (vermis), a worm (l. 563). In the Malleus Moleficarum, 1520, it is explained that the etymology of Lat. femina, a woman, shows why there are so many more female sorcerers than male, that word being compounded of fê (= fides), faith, and minus, less, the woman having less faith (p. 65, see R. R. Madden, Phantasmata, i. 459). Mons, it was believed (apparently on the Tertullian principle of its being impossible), was derived a movendo, "A mount hath his name of mouyng" (Wycliffe, Unprinted Works, p. 457, E. E. T. S.), just as "stella a stando dicitur,—A star, quasi not stir" (T. Adams, Sermons, i. 455). Indeed Thomas Adams is much given to these quaint derivations; so is Thomas Fuller, whose style and vein are very similar. Devil for Do-evil is one of the suggestions of the former (ii. 41), while the latter is responsible for compliment from completi mentiri (Joseph's Parti-coloured Coat, 1640); malignant, as a political nickname, "from malus ignis (bad fire) or malum lignum (bad fewell)" (Church History, bk. xi. p. 196);—the latter already hinted parenthetically by Quarles, with allusion to the forbidden tree, "totus mundus in maligno (maligno) positus est" (Emblems, I. i.);—crocodile, from the Greek χρικό-δειλος, or the Saffron-fearer, "proved by the antipathy of the Crocodiles thereunto" (Worthies of England, i. 336). To Fuller also is due "Needle quasi Ne idle, the industrious instrument" (Id. ii. 50), for a parallel to which he might have added the somewhat similar Lithuanian word nedèle, a week, originally the Sabbath, from ne, not, and dielo, labour, and so denoting "the day of rest" (Pictet, Origines Indo-Européennes, ii. 601; compare negotium, business, from nec otium, "not leisure"). As other old guesses which did duty as etymologies, may be noted Ascham's war, from old Eng. werre (Scot. waur), that thing which is worse than any, and lesing, a lie, as if losing; Peacham's penny, from Greek πεινία, poverty, as if the poor man's coin (Worth of a Penny, p. 30, repr. 1813); Latimer's homily from homely, as if a familiar discourse; Henry Smith's marriage from merry age, "because a play-fellow is come to make our age merry" (Sermons, p. 12, 1657); mastiff from mase-thief; Ben Jonson's constable from cyning and staple, "a stay for the king" (Tale of a Tub, iv. 2); rogue "from the Latine erro, by putting a G to it"! (Conversations with Drum- mond, p. 34, Shaks. Soc.); and harlot "from Arlotte, mother of William the Conquerour" (Ibid.),—the last notion being found also in Camden, Remaines, p. 159 (1637), and Cartwright's The Ordinary; Spenser's elf, "to weet quick" (F. Queene, II. x. 71), as if alf, from alife, alive, like old Eng. wight, which has both these meanings, just as the old feminine name Ailive is the same as Ælfwine, elf-darling (Yonge, Christian Names, ii. 349); his commentator, E. K., rather extracting Elfes and Goblins from the Guelfes and Gibelines (Shep. Calender, June, Glosse on Faeries). Another fancy of Spenser's is that Germany had its name from certain brothers, Lat. germani, the sons of Ebranck,

"Those germans did subdew all Germany
Of whom it hight." Faerie Queene, II. x. 22.

An older writer accounts for the name in a way not less ingenious:—"Wel nyghe all y<sup>e</sup> londe that lyeth north-warde ouer the see ocean of brytayne is called germanic. For it bryngyth forth so moche folke. Germania comyth of germinare that is for too borge and brynge forth" (Polycronicon, P. de Treveris, 1527, f. 184). As correct as either, probably, is Carlyle's assertion, "German is by his very name, Guerre-man, or man that wars and gars" (French Revolution, Pt. II. bk. iii. ch. 2). Erasmus affirms that Sunday (Sonntag) is "called in the commune tongue of the Germanes Soendach, not of the sonne as certayne men done interprete but of reconcilynge" (On the Commandments, p. 162, 1533), as if like söhn-opfer, expiatory sacrifice, from (ver-)söhnen, to reconcile. Bracton says Low Lat. ringæ (belts, evidently = Eng. rings) are so called because renes girant, they encircle the reins (De Legibus, bk. i. cap. 8). "Baptisme," says Tindal, "is called volowynge in many places in Englande, bycause the preste sayth volow" (in Sir Thomas More, p. 49), the true word being fulling, from A. Sax. fullian, to whiten, cleanse, or baptise.

Many quaint popular etymologies occur in the Old English Homilies (2nd ser.) of the 12th century, edited by Dr. R. Morris; e.g. fader is a name given to God, "for that He us feide," formed or put us together, or because he fedeth (feedeth) us (p. 25); a king is so cleped, "for that he kenneth" (p. 45); Easter "is cleped estre dai, that is estene da (= dainties' day, p. 99); old Eng. hindre, deceit, is explained to be from bihinden, behind, "for it maketh a man to be behind when he weened to be before" (p. 213). In the same volume (p. 99) is given an old folk-etymology of the A. Sax. word húsel, the sacrifice of the mass (Goth. hunsl, a sacrifice), as if Hu sel, "How good!" from hu, how, and sel (= seely, Ger. selig), good. "This dai is cleped estre dai that is estene da, and te este is husel, and no man ne mai seien husel, wu god it is"; i.e. "This day is called Easter Day, that is dainty day (day of dainties), and the dainty is the housel, and no man may say how good it is."

The Wycliffite Apology for the Lollards seems to have derived priest, old Eng. prest, from Lat. præest, "he is over (the flock)," at least it more than once translates præesse by "to be prestis" (pp. 2, 4). Wycliffe himself spells "privileges" pravelegies, evidently to suggest a connexion with Lat. parvus, crooked, wrong; "They meyntenen false praueligies agenst charité & good conscience" (Unprinted Works, p. 139, E. E. T. S.).

Coming down to later times, borel, or borrell, an old word meaning rustic, clownish, illiterate, as in "borel folk" (Chaucer), "borrel men" (Gascoigne), was supposed to refer to "the rudeness and simplicity of the people that are seated far North," as if derived from Lat. borealis, belonging to the north country, as in Bishop Corbet's Iter Boreale (or Journey to the North), 1648 (so "Aurora borealis," the Northern lights); "Which no doubt is intimated by a vulgar speech," says The Optick Glasse of Humors, 1639, p. 29, "when we say such a man hath a borrell wit, as if we said boreale ingenium." The word is really from old Fr. burel (borel, bureau), coarse woollen stuff of a russet colour (Lat. burrus, reddish, Greek purros, fiery red), and so means coarsely clad as a peasant is, frieze-like, rude, plebeian; to which usage we find numerous parallels, e.g. russeting and russet-coat, a clown (Hall, Satires, i. 3); "poor grogran rascal" (B. Jonson); Gaelic peillag, coarse cloth, also a peasant; Fr. grisette, a grey clad wench; It. bizocco, coarse cloth, also clownish, rude; and with the phrase "borrel wit" we may compare "coarse freize capacities, ye jane judgements" (Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 5, 8), and Shakespeare's "russet yeas and honest kersey noes" (Love's L. Lost, v. 2, 413). See also Diez, s.v. Bujo, and Skeat's Notes to P. Plowman, pp. 208, 249.

"How be I am but rude and borrell."

Spenser, Shep. Calender, July.

"They deem a mighty lord

Is made by crown, and silken robe, and sword;

Lo, such are borel folk."

W. Morris, The Earthly Paradise, p. 318.

Another word which readily lent itself to popular etymologizing was sincere (old Fr. sincere, Lat. sincerus), pure, unmixed, which formerly had a material significance rather than an ethical, as in P. Holland's "sincere vermilion." The original signification was conceived to be free from alloy or mixture, as honey is which is without wax, sine cerâ. Thus it is recorded of François de Sales, "Un jour quelqu'un luy demandoit ce qu'il entendoit par la sincerité: 'Cela mesme, respondit-il, que le mot soune, c'est à dire, sans cire. . . . Sçavez vous ce que c'est que du miel sans cire? C'est celuy qui est exprimé du rayon, et qui est fort purifié: il en est de mesme d'un esprit, quand il est purgé de toute feintise et duplicité, alors on l'appelle sincere, franc, loyal, cordial, ouvert, et sans arriere pensee'" (L'Esprit du F. De Sales, ii. 73, ed. 1840).

Dr. Donne no doubt had the same conception in his mind when, contrasting the covert nature of bees' working with the open labours of the ant, he wrote, "The Bees have made it their first work to line that Glasse-hive with a crust of Wax, that they might work and not be discerned. It is a blessed sincerity to work as the Ant, professedly, openly" (LXXX. Sermons, 1640, p. 713).

Then we have Overbury's "sergeant quasi see argent" (Characters, 1616);

Sir John Davies's world, so named because it is whirled round, though Hampole had already resolved it into wer elde, worse age (Pricke of Conscience, l. 1479); Verstegan's heaven from heave-n, the heaved up; otherwise

“Which well we Heaven call; not that it rowles
But that it is the hauen of our soules.”

G. Fletcher, Christ's Triumph after Death, st. 45 (1610).

Richardson may end the catalogue with his curious remark, “Writing from the heart [Lat. cor] as the very word cor-responce implied” (Clarissa Harlowe, iv. 291).

Some of the instances above quoted were doubtless, like Howell's foolosopher for philosopher, and Southey's futilitarian for utilitarian, with many others similar in The Doctor, merely humorous suggestions not seriously believed in by their originators, and so deserve to be ranged only with such coinages of “the Mint-masters of our Etymologies” as those mentioned by Camden, “for they have merrily forged Money from My-hony, Mayd as my ayd, Symoñy see-money, Stivrup a stayre-up, &c.” (Remaines, p. 34, 1637). While rejecting these, however, Camden accepts as reasonable, not only the derivation of God from good, and Deus from δέος, “because God is to be feared,” but also, which is more strange, “Soyle as the Sea-haile, Windor or Window as a doore against the winde [see below, p. 441], King from Conning, for so our Great-grandfathers called them, which one word implyeth two most important matters in a Governour, Power and Skill” (ibid.).

Many of the corruptions we meet in old writers are intentional and jesting perversions of the true form of the word, and are therefore not folk-etymologies proper. Such, for example, is bitesheep, or biteshipe, a satirical corruption of bishop (in Fox, Book of Martyrs), to denote an unfaithful shepherd who ravages his flock instead of feeding them. In the Records of the English Catholics under the Penal Laws, vol. i. (ed. Knox), mention is made of one Tippet, a student of Doway, being “brought before the bitesheepe of London and M<sup>r</sup> Recorder” (1578). This spelling was not invented by Bale (as the Saturday Review states, vol. 46, p. 761), since we find in old German writers bisz-schaf for bischof (Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 36).

Fischart, in the 16th century, has many ingenious and humorous word-twists, Jesuwider (Anti-Jesu) for Jesuiten, Jesuiter, a Jesuit; Pfotengram, foot-grief, for podagra, the gout; Sauvezähnen, “sour-teeth,” for Sarazenen; Notnarr (narr = fool) for Notar; Redtorich (as if from rede, speech) for Rhetorik; Untenamend (as if from unten, beneath) for fundamentum; maulhenkolisch (as if down in the mouth) for melancholisch (Andresen, p. 33); the latter recalling Moll-on-the-coals, an Ayrshire word for a gloomy-minded person, a ludicrous perversion of the word melancholy (Jamieson). Allkühmisterei, “All-cow-mistery,” is Pastor Schupp's rendering of Alchimisterei, Alchemy; and Zanktüffe is a good twist that some German Socrates gave to Zantippe when applying it to his scolding wife (as if from zank, a quarrel or bickering).

Coming now to deal with Folk-etymologies properly so called :—

“The nation always thinks that the word must have an idea behind it.

So what it does not understand it converts into what it does; it transforms the word until it can understand it. Thus, words and names have their forms altered, e.g. the French écrevisse becomes in English crayfish, and the heathen god Svantevit was changed by the Christian Slavs into Saint Vitus, and the Parisians converted Mons Martis into Mont-martre" (Steinthal, in Goldziher's Mythology among the Hebrews, p. 440).

"People in antiquity, and even in modern times those who are more affected by a word than a thought, were fond of finding in the word a sort of reflexion of the corresponding thing. Indeed, many component parts of ancient stories owe their existence only to such false etymologies. Dido's oxhides and their connexion with the founding of Carthage are only based on the Greek byrsa, a misunderstood modified pronunciation of the Semitic birethâ, 'fortress,' 'citadel.' The shining Apollo, born of light, is said to be born in Delos, or Lycia, because the terms Apollon Dêlios and Lykêgenês were not understood. The Phœnician origin of the Irish, asserted in clerical chronicles of the middle ages, only rests on a false derivation of the Irish word, 'fena, pl. fiôn, beautiful, agreeable.' Even the savage tribes of America are misled by a false etymology to call Michabo, the Kadmos of the red Indians (from michi, 'great,' and wabos, 'white') a 'White Hare.' Falsely interpreted names of towns most frequently cause the invention of fables. How fanciful the operation of popular etymology is in the case of local names is observable in many such names when translated into another language. By the Lake of Gennesereth lies Hippos, the district surrounding which was called Hippene. This word in Phœnician denoted a harbour, and is found not only in Carthaginian territory as the name of the See of St. Augustine, but also as the name of places in Spain. The Hebrew chôph, 'shore,' and the local names Yâphô (Jaffa) and Haifâ, are unquestionably related to it. But the Greeks regarded it from a Grecian point of view, and thought it meant Horse-town. Did they not call ships sea-horses, and attribute horses to the Sea-God? Then the Arabs directly translated this ἵππος, Hippos, into Kalat al-Husân; husân being 'horse' in modern Arabic" (Goldziher, Mythology among the Hebrews, pp. 331-332).

A good woman, the hostess of the inn, proud of her skill in etymology, once assured Wordsworth the poet that the name of the river Greta was taken from the bridge which surmounted it, the form of which, as he could see for himself, exactly resembled a great A.

In provincial German we find the name Beauregard transformed into Bûrengârn (Boor's-garden); Belle Alliance at Waterloo changed into Buller dans, "Thunder dance;" a Westphalian mine called Felicitas commonly known as Flitzentasche; Philomelenlust, a grove at Brunswick, changed into Vielmannslust; Cheval blanc, an inn at Strassburg, becomes blanke Schwalbe; Brunos Warte, a district in Halle, becomes braune Schwarte (Andresen, Deutsche Volksetymologie, p. 45).

The gypsies, both in England and on the continent of Europe, have a rough and ready way of giving a Rommany meaning to towns they visit, some fanciful resemblance of sound suggesting the new form. Thus Redford becomes Redfoot (Lalopeero) ; Doncaster, Donkey-town (Milesto-gav) ; Lyons, Lion-town (Bombardo) ; Augsburg, Eyes'-town (Jakkjakro foro), &c. (Smart, Dialect of Eng. Gypsies, pp. 11 and 87).

The common gypsy name Boswell, as if "Buss-well," they translate into Chumomisto, from choom, to kiss, and misto, well ; while Stanley becomes Baryor, as if "stone-folk." A more curious metamorphosis still is that by the Spanish gypsies of Pontius Pilate (Sp. Poncio Pilato) into Brono Aljenicato, i.e. "Bridge-fountain," Poncio being confused with Sp. puente (Lat. pons), a bridge, and Pilato with Sp. pila, a pillar, especially that of a fountain (G. Barrow, Romano Lavo-lil). In our own local etymology Lancaster is said to have its name from one Lang Kester or long Christopher, who, like the saint so called, used to carry people across the Lune in the time previous to bridges (Notes and Queries, 4th S. xii. 27).

"Either be Cæsar or Niccolò" is a popular Italian folksaying (G. Giusti, Proverbi Toscani), i.e. a man or a mouse. Niccolò here stands for no historical Nicholas of proverbial insignificance, but is a personification in the mouths of the people of It. nichilo, nothing, Lat. nihilum, often in the middle ages spelt nichilum ; the saying is therefore only a modern version of "Aut Cæsar aut nihil." A similar perversion is annigulate, Anglo-Irish for annihilate, "If you do I'll annigulate you" (W. Carleton, The Battle of the Factions). A somewhat similar perversion is that by which "Teste David cum Sibyllâ," in the Dies Iræ, has been transformed into "David's head," testa David, by the Trasteverini, who use it as a by-word for something enigmatical.

Underneath the window of the cell of Roland's Tower in Paris were engraven the words TU ORA, "Pray thou." "The common people," says Victor Hugo, "whose plain common sense never looks for profound meanings in things, gave to this dark, damp, loathsome hole the name of Trou aux Rats" (The Hunchback of Notre-Dame, bk. v. ch. 2).

M. Gaidoz observed that in the German invasion of 1870 popular etymology ran riot, and as many outrages were committed on the French language as on the people. But retaliation was sometimes made on the enemy. M. de Brauschitsch, the Prussian préfet in Seine-et-Oise, was known by the people as M. Bronchite,—and indeed he had them by the throat. In Lorraine, the peasants called the soldiers of the landwehr "langues-vertes." During the siege of Paris the national guard always spoke of the casemate in which they hid themselves (on se cachait) from the projectiles of the enemy as la cachemate. At the same period a woman was found searching everywhere to get some huile d'Henri V. for her child : the desideratum was merely huile de ricin !

"Donnons un exemple de ce procédé populaire de la déformation des mots. C'est ainsi qu'en français le nom de courte-pointe désigne une sorte de couverture, bien qu'il n'y ait là, comme le fait remarquer M. Littré, ni courte ni pointe. Le mot vient du latin culcita puncta, qui signifie "couverture piquée," et avait donné régulièrement en ancien français coulte-pointe. Coulte ne se comprenant plus a été déformé en courte qui semblait fournir un sens. De même de l'allemand Sauerkraut "herbe sure" nous avons fait choucroûte, qui n'est pas la traduction du mot allemand et qui a de la croûte quand le mets en question n'en a pas. Voilà ce qu'on appelle une étymologie populaire.

"Les mots de ce genre sont en linguistique de véritables monstres ; car les lois qui président à la génération du langage voient alors leur action paralysée par une influence étrangère. L'instinct de la fausse analogie, on pourrait presque dire du calembour, fait échec aux règles de la phonétique, et le mot en question acquiert des lettres adventices auxquelles il n'avait pas droit, comme les monstres de l'histoire naturelle acquièrent des membres nouveaux. Ces mots, déformés par l'étymologie populaire, échappent aux lois ordinaires du langage comme les monstres aux lois de la nature. La bosse ne rentre pas dans le type normal de l'homme, et pourtant elle existe chez un certain nombre d'hommes. Eh bien, il y a dans toutes les langues beaucoup de mots bossus qui vivent, se mêlent aux autres mots du dictionnaire, et qui cachent si bien leur infirmité qu'elle échappe à tout autre personnes qu'aux linguistes" (Revue Politique et Littéraire, No. 35, p. 830).

To be distinguished from true folk-etymologies are those intentional perversions of words which for the main purpose of raising a laugh, or supporting the vrai-semblance of the character, are put into the mouth of illiterate personages in works of fiction, such as Mrs. Malaprop, Mrs. Partington, Mrs. Brown. To this class belong Mrs. Quigley's honey-seed for homicide, canary for quandary, calm for qualm, in Shakespeare ; Mrs. Honeysuckle's "clients that sue in forma paper" in Webster's Westward Ho ; and Lackland's occupations, losophers, diricksstories, extrumperry, and nomine in Randolph's Hey for Honesty, instead of occupations, philosophers, directories, extempore, and homily.

To the same category of jocularly prepenze belong Costard's "Thou hast it ad dunghill, at the fingers' ends" (ad unguem), Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1, 80 ; "a stay-at-home-at-us tumour" in one of Lever's novels, as if a sluggish one, toujours chez nous, for steatomatous, tallow-like ; Coleridge's favourite author Spy Nozy (Spinosa), which the eaves-dropper regarded as a personal allusion to himself (Biographia Literaria, ch. x.) ; Sam Weller's "have-his-carcass" for habeas corpus ; "delicious beam-ends" in Anthony Trollope's Dr. Thorne (ch. xl.) for delirium tremens, of which a slang corruption is triangles ; Sham Elizas for Champs Elysées in Russell's Memoirs of Moore, iii. 171 ; Punch's coaly-hop-terror for coleoptera, which is, perhaps, also the original of crawly-whopper, a black-beetle, mentioned by Dr. Adams in the Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1859, p. 96. Such also are Deborah Fundish, an old corruption of De Profundis ; Solomon David, a cockney form of solemn affidavit ; and the "Angry cat" which, spoken by a Jewish costumier, does duty for Henri Quatre (Punch, vol. lxx. p. 78). And so in many modern works of humour. "Those long sliding opra-glasses that they call tallow-scoops" is an ingenious make-up, individual, and not popular. When Mrs. Ramsbottom in Paris bought "some sieve jars to keep popery in," she gave for the moment a familiar and homely ring to those strange and outlandish words Sèvres and pot-pourri, with a lofty disregard to mere propriety of meaning. If those forms were generally and popularly accepted they would be folk-etymologies. As it is they are a mere play on words. In the following instances, thrown together at random, but all fairly authenticated, we may see the mischievous genius of folk-etymology more undoubtedly at work. "The poor creature was that big, sir, you can't think. The doctor said there was a porpoise inside her." I conjecture it was nothing worse than a polypus. A servant man has been heard to convert an Alpine-stock into a helping-stick. A cook who used antipathies for antipodes also spoke of "the obnoxious gales" at the time of the equinox. Another asked leave to attend "the aquarium service" on the death of the last pope, evidently a requiem. A Devonshire maid informed her mistress she had "divided her hair into three traces," for tresses. An Irish domestic spoke of "trembling coals," i.e. trendling or trundling, round, rolling coals, Cumberland trunlins. "As for my husband," remarked a pastrycook, "poor man, he is a regular siphon." Another Irish woman of diminutive stature complacently described herself to a lady hiring her services as "small but wicked." Wicked here, as sometimes in provincial English, is manifestly a corruption of Yorkshire wick, lively, active, nimble, properly alive, another form of quick, A. Sax. cwic, as in "wick as an eel" (Whitby Glossary), the word being confused with wicked, old Eng. wicke, wikke. In the Cleveland dialect a very lively young man was characterized as "T' wickest young chap at ivver Ah seen" (Atkinson), and in a Yorkshire ballad occurs the line:—

"I'll swop wi' him my poor deead horse for his wick."

Ballads and Songs of the Peasantry of England, p. 210 (ed. R. Bell).

In Scotland needcessity is commonly used for necessity (e.g. Whitehead, Daft Davie, p. 190); in England ill-convenient for inconvenient, equal-nomical for economical, human cry for hue and cry, natural school for national school, hark audience for accordion, queen wine for quinine wine, uproar for opera, cravat for carafe, in Ireland croft, Notes enquiries for Notes and Queries, have all been heard. A lady of my acquaintance always uses tipsomania for dipsomania, a natural confusion with the word tipsy, and less pardonably transforms acetic into Asiatic acid. "Would you like it square-edged or bible-edged?" asked an upholsterer of a lady ordering a sofa (Notes and Queries, 4th S. xii. 276), meaning no doubt bevil-edged. "This here is the stage front or proscenium," said a Punch-and-Judy showman pointing to the proscenium (Mayhew, London Labour and the London Poor, iii. 53). Jeremy Taylor's old pulpit in Uppingham Church is shown by the sexton as "Gen'ral Taylor's pulpit, or Gen'l man Taylor's, I don't mind which" (Sat. Review, vol. 50, p. 422). The Wardevil is a London cabman's attempt to give a native appearance to the Vaudeville Theatre. A Hampshire parish clerk when a certain passage came round in the psalms always spoke of "snow and vipers" fulfilling His word. Another of that fraternity would strike in "Thur go the shihs, and thur's that lively thing, whom thou's made take hee's bastime thurin" (Chambers' Journal, 1874, p. 484). "Aye, sir," said an old sexton, "folks like putting up a handsome memorandum of those that are gone." "The old gentleman likes telling antidotes of his young days." "We set up a soup-kitchen, and a report gets about that it is Horsetralian meat" (Miss Yonge, Womankind, p. 294), which suspicion of hippophagy is quite enough to condemn it. "Shall I let out the white uns or the dark uns," inquired a Hampshire man of his master, whose fowl he kept, ingeniously discriminating between the Dorkings and a lighter-coloured breed that happened to be in his charge. The same man, an invaluable factotum, once expressed an opinion that a hemp holder would do for the pony, meaning thereby a halter. A young farmer of East Anglia with a liking for fine phrases appropriated "otium cum dignitate," and assured his friends that he enjoyed his "oceans-come-dig-my-taty," apparently = plenty as the result of his potatoe digging. According to a Stratford-on-Avon MS. quoted in the last edition of Nares, it was the business of a juror at an inquest to inquire whether the person found dead was "a fellow of himself," i.e. a felo de se.

In a wretched farrago of a book entitled The Rosicrucians, by H. Jennings (p. 41), the author evolves the word scara-bees, or the imperial "Bees" of Charlemagne, out of the Latin scarabæus, a beetle. It occurs also in Mouffet's History of Insects, and in Beaumont and Fletcher. A New York paper once used Sanscript for Sanscrit. The Americans of the Southern States, having already 'coonery' as a descriptive word for Whiggery, from the shifty habits of the raccoon, transformed chicanery into shee-coonery, as it were feminine Whiggery. The lower orders in Ireland have got jackeenery, as if the conduct of a jackeen or cad, out of the same word. "The physic is called 'Head-e-cologne,' or a sure cure for the head-ache," explains a showman in Mayhew's London Labour and the London Poor, vol. iii. p. 56, referring to eau-de-Cologne. An old woman in a country village to whom it was recommended for an obstinate toothache, gratefully remarked that the power of that O-do-go-along was, indeed, wonderful (Nomen omen). Another belonging to Surrey observed, "Doctor has give me this here stuff, and my! I do believe it's silver latiny" (Notes and Queries, 5th S. x. 222), and sal volatile it was.

This word-twisting, or, as Ben Jonson calls it, "wresting words from their true calling," is especially observable, as might be anticipated, in the case of learned and unusual words, such as the names of diseases, medicines, or flowers.

Thus we hear of complaints as extraordinary as "the 'hairy sipples,' 'green asthma,' and 'brown creatures' of the English poor'" (Monthly Packet, vol. xxiii. p. 253), which seem to be disguised forms of erysipelas, tenesmus, and bronchitis. The last disease also takes the different forms of browngetus, brownchitis, and brown-typhus. "He's down with a bad attackt of brown crisis on the chest," said a Sussex peasant of his neighbour (Parish, Sussex Glossary, s.v. Down). Information of the lungs is not uncommonly met with. So, in German, diphtheritis has been turned into giferistik, as if from gift, poison, and gastrische fieber into garstige fieber (Andresen, p. 42).

"It often happens that gardeners become acquainted with new plants, or new species of old plants, that are brought to them under a foreign name; not understanding this name, they corrupt it into some word which sounds like it, and with which they are already familiar. To this source of corruption we owe such words as dandy lion (dent de lion), rosemary (ros marinus), gillyflower (girofle), quarter sessions rose (des quatre saisons), Jerusalem artichoke (girasole), &c. (Farrar, Origin of Language, p. 57). Southey mentions that the Bon Chrétien pear is called by English gardeners the Bum-Gritton (The Doctor, p. 349, ed. 1848), French gardeners having already manufactured Bon Chrétien out of Gk. Panchrêstos, universally good.

Other gardener's mistakes are China oysters for china asters, Bleary eye for Blairii (rosa), Bloody Mars for Fr. Blé de Mars. An Irish dancing-master professed to teach his pupils to go through "petticoatees and coatylongs (cotillons) with the Quality" (P. Kennedy, Banks o' the Boro, p. 136). Another Irish peasant made misty manners out of misdeemeanours (Carleton, Traits and Stories, i. 309, ed. 1843). Polly Ann and Emma Jane have been observed as negro corruptions of Pauline and Imogen. "We have heard of a groom who, having the charge of two horses called Othello and Desdemona, christened them respectively Old Fellow and Thursday Morning. Lamprocles, the name of a horse of Lord Eglintoun's, was converted by the ring into 'Lamb and Pickles.' The same principle may be seen at work among servants; we have heard a servant systematically use the word cravat for carafe, and astonish a gentleman by calmly asking him at luncheon, "If she should fill his cravat with water?" (Farrar, Origin of Language, p. 57).

Peter Gower, the Grecian and "mighty wiseacre," who, according to Leland's Itinerary (temp. Hen. VIII. ed. Hearne), first introduced the mystery of masonry into England, having learned it of the "Venetians" (= Phœnicians), is none other, as Locke first pointed out, than Pythagoras, Frenchified into Pythagore, Petagore, and then turned into a naturalized Englishman. Worthy to keep him company is Paul Podgam, not this time a Christianized heathen, but a personified plant.

"An old man in East Sussex said that many people set much store by the doctors, but for his part, he was one for the yarbs [herbs], and Paul Podgam was what he went by. It was not for some time that it was discovered that by Paul Podgam he meant the fern polypodium" (Parish, Sussex Glossary). A German apothecary has been asked for Ole Peter, for umgewandtem Napoleon, and even for umgewandte dicke Stiefel (a "quick-thick-boot"!), when the real articles wanted were oleum petræ, unguentum Neapolitanum, and unguentum digestivum (Andresen, Deutsche Volksetymologie, p. 40). In the Americo-German broken English of the Breitmann Ballads, Cosmopolite becomes "moskopolite, or von whose kopf [head] ish bemosst [= bearded] mit experience" (p. 17, ed. 1871), mossyhead being a German college phrase for an old student; and applaud becomes ooploud (up-loud), "For sefen-lefen minudes dey ooplouded on a bust" (p. 135); applause, up-loudation (p. 138); while Guerillas appears as Grillers.

Amongst other ingenious word-twists which may be heard in Germany are canailenvögeln for canarienvögeln, frontenspitze for frontispiece, sternlichtern for stearinlichtern, rundtheil for rondelle, erdschocke for artischocke, erdapfel for kartoffel, the last being, indeed, a partial reversion to the original meaning, as kartoffel itself stands for tartufol, It. tartufola, tartufo, from Lat. terræ tuber, earth tuber. Andresen, in his Volksetymologie, also mentions the popular corruptions bibelapthek, parteisen, seeländer, biefstück, for bibliothek, partisane, cylinder (= hat), beefsteak (of which a further corruption is the French waiter's biftek du porc). So the unpopular gendarme was cleverly turned into schand-arm; the French pear-name beurré blanc (= Ger. butter-birne) was naturalized as beerblang (where Low Ger. beer = Mid. High Ger. bir, a pear); and bleu mourant, a faint or sickly blue, acquired a prettier form in blümerant, with its apparent relationship to blume. Kellerassel (cellar millepes) is more familiarly known as kelleresel, "cellar ass;" but this again is an unconscious reversion to the right meaning assel, a wood-louse, being identical with Low Lat. asellus oniscus, Greek ὄνος and ὄνισκος. In prov. German pfeifholter, a butterfly, is a corruption of feifalter, and maul-rose of malve, the mallow.

The good folk of Bonn, with their thoughts running on apples, sometimes degrade aprikosen, apricots, into mere appelkosen. The Westphalians have coined a word glaszeug, as if glass-ware, out of klaszeug, signifying properly the presents supposed to be given by the good St. Klas, or Santa Claus, i.e. St. Nicolaus (see Andresen, Deutsche Volksetymologie, p. 38).

Many of the corruptions which words have undergone are doubtless due to the wear and tear of

"Time, whose slippery wheel doth play
In humane causes with inconstant sway,
Who exiles, alters, and disguises words."

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, 1621, p. 173.

"Our language hath no law but vse : and still Runs blinde, vnbridled, at the vulgars will."

Id. p. 261.

Or, as Tennyson expresses it :—

"A word that comes from olden days,
And passes through the peoples ; every tongue
Alters it passing, till it spells and speaks Quite other than at first."

A word having been once thus altered, we must be content to take it as it is, and pass it current for its nominal value. For example, to take a word commented on by De Quincey :—

"The word country-dance was originally a corruption, but having once arisen, and taken root in the language, it is far better to retain it in its colloquial form : better, I mean, on the general principle concerned in such cases. For it is, in fact, by such corruptions, by offsets on an old stock, arising through ignorance or mispronunciation originally, that every language is frequently enriched ; and new modifications of thought, unfolding themselves in the progress of society, generate for themselves concurrently appropriate expressions. Many words in the Latin can be pointed out as having passed through this process. It must not be allowed to weigh against the validity of a word once fairly naturalized by use, that originally it crept in upon an abuse or corruption. Prescription is as strong a ground of legitimation in a case of this nature as it is in law. And the old axiom is applicable—Fieri non debuit, factum valet. Were it otherwise, languages would be robbed of much of their wealth. And, universally, the class of purists, in matters of language, are liable to grievous suspicion as almost constantly proceeding on half knowledge, and on insufficient principles. For example, if I have read one, I have read twenty letters, addressed to newspapers, denouncing the name of a great quarter in London, Mary-le-bone, as ludicrously ungrammatical. The writers had learned (or were learning) French; and they had thus become aware that neither the article nor the adjective was right. True—not right for the current age, but perfectly right for the age in which the name arose: but, for want of elder French, they did not know that in our Chaucer's time, both were right. Le was then the article feminine as well as masculine, and bone was then the true form for the adjective" (Works, vol. xiv. p. 201).

Karl Andresen observes in the preface to his Deutsche Volksetymologie (1876), that it is a strange fact that his own volume, notwithstanding the very curious and interesting nature of the subject, was the first work of the kind professedly devoted to popular etymology, and he expresses his surprise that philologists should have so long neglected it. M. Gaidoz accounts for this by remarking:—"La raison de la négligence ou pour mieux dire du dédain que les linguistes montrent à l'égard de l'étymologie populaire est que celle-ci ne se ramène à aucune loi, et qu'ils étudient de préférence les phénomènes qui peuvent se ramener à des lois. Peut-être aussi voient-ils d'un œil de défiance et de mécontentement des faits en quelque sorte hors série exercer une influence perturbatrice sur le développement mathématique des lois générales du langage. Il faut pourtant tenir compte de l'influence exercée sur le langage humain par le raisonnement et la volonté de l'homme. Il est aisé de voir, ne fut-ce que par l'exemple des langues vivantes, et malgré l'action conservatrice de la littérature et de la grammaire, combien sont puissantes ces tendances qu'on peut réunir sous le nom d'analogie, par exemple dans la conjugaison dont l'analogie cherche à détruire les irrégularités et même la variété" (Revue Critique, 19 Août, 1876, p. 118).

The same judicious writer elsewhere gives the following summary of the whole subject:—"L'étymologie populaire joue un certain rôle dans le développement des langues, et elle s'applique d'abord aux mots et aux noms étrangers, puis aux mots savants et aux termes techniques, en d'autres termes, à tous les mots et à tous les noms auxquels la conscience linguistique du peuple n'est pas habituée. Dans les mots ordinaires de la langue, l'usage fait qu'on voit distinctement en eux, non la combinaison de sons ou de lettres qu'ils forment, mais la chose même qu'ils représentent. Ce sont des monnaies que le peuple passe comme il les a reçues, sans s'occuper d'en regarder l'effigie ou d'en lire la légende, puisqu'il sait qu'elles sont bonnes. Les mots de la langue ordinaire frappent son oreille dès son enfance, et sa curiosité ne s'y arrête pas, parce que ces mots sont pour lui des choses. Il n'en est pas de même des mots étrangers ou inusités qu'il entend pour la première fois. Sa curiosité est mise en jeu, et comme il a une tendance à croire que tout mot a une signification, il cherche et se laisse guider par une ressemblance de son avec des mots déjà connus. Il en arrive de la sorte à déformer les mots par fausse analogie. Cette tendance est dans la nature des choses, et les puristes auraient bien tort de s'en indigner" (Revue Politique et Littéraire, No. 35, p. 831).

"How many words," says an old writer, "are buried in the grave of forgetfulness? grown out of use? wrested awry and peruersly corrupted by diuers defaultes? we wil declare at large in our booke intituled, Symphonia vocum Britannicarum" (A. Fleming, Caius of Eng. Dogges, 1576, p. 40, repr. 1880). This promise I think was never redeemed. A part of his projected plan I have here endeavoured to carry out, by forming a collection, as complete as I could make it, of words which have been corrupted by false derivation, or have in some way been altered or perverted from their true form or meaning by false analogy. Such words may be conveniently ranged under one or other of the following analytical groups (see Farrar, Origin of Language, p. 58):—

1. Words corrupted so as to be significant and in some sense appropriate; such as acorn, ambergrease, aureole, battlement, belfry, blindfold, buttress, carnival, cat's cradle, cause-way, chittifaced, cockatoo, counterpane, court-card, crawfish, declamp, excise, fairway, flushed, furbelow, geneva, hanger, hastener, hollyhock, instep, meregrot, runagate, touchy, traveller's joy, wormwood, &c.

2. Words corrupted so as to convey a meaning, but one totally inappropriate, though sounding familiarly to the ear; such as battle-door, cast-me-down, cheese-bowl, fairmaids, farthingale, featherfew, gingerly, goose-horn, hammer-cloth, stick-a-dove, titmouse, wheat-ear, wise-acre, &c.

3. Words corrupted so as to give rise to a total misconception, and consequently to false explanations; such as attic, bitter-end, cannibal, horn-mad, humble-pie, hurricane, husband, &c.

4. Words which, though not actually corrupted from their true shape, are suggestive of a false derivation, and have been generally accepted in that mistaken sense; such as camlet, carp, colonel, cozen, crabbed, fraternity, God, hawker, henchman, hop-harlot, hussif, incentive, muse, recover, tribulation, world, &c.

In this latter case it is the meaning of the word that has got warped from some mistaken relationship or incorrect analogy having been assumed. Many instances of this reflex influence of the form on the meaning will be found. Fuller, for instance, remarks that men who being slow and slack go about business with no agility are called "dull Dromedaries by a foul mistake merely because of the affinity of that name to our English word Dreaming [compare old Sax. drōm, a dream, Icel. draumr, Dut. droom] applied to such who go slowly and sleepily about their employment; whereas indeed Dromedaries are creatures of a constant and continuing swiftness, so called from the Greek word Δρόμος, a Race" (Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 385).

In popular Italian belief the plant comino or cummin is supposed to have the power of keeping animals and young children from straying from home, or a lover near his mistress, owing to an imagined connexion of its name with

Lat. cominus, close at hand, near (De Gubernatis, Mythologie des Plantes, p. xx.). The people of the Abruzzi in a similar manner fancying some relationship between the plant-name menta and It. rammentare, to remember, lovers in that region are accustomed to present a sprig of mint to each other as a memento, with the words:—

“Ecco la menta,
Se si ama di cuore, non rallenta.”

(Id. p. 236.) Compare the popular misconceptions with regard to the word aimant, s.v. AYMONT, p. 16.

I have thought it well, for the sake of completeness, to notice those words which, though not really corruptions at all, have long passed for such, from men through an excess of ingenuity not being content to take a plain word in its plain meaning, such I mean as beef-eater, fox-glove, John Dory, Welsh-rabbit.

To the English words I have appended a collection of foreign words which have undergone similar corruptions, and also lists of words which have been altered through agglutination of the article, or through being mistaken for plurals when really singular, or vice versâ.

I have to thank Professor Skeat for his great good-nature in looking over many of my earlier sheets, and in setting me right in several instances where I had gone wrong. It is needless to say that I had his invaluable Etymological Dictionary always in use, so far as it was issued when going to press; but from letter R to the end I could only make use of it for my Additions and Corrections. I am also indebted to Mr. Wedgwood for kindly making a few suggestions which I have utilized.

A DICTIONARY OF CORRUPTED WORDS.

A.

AARON. A popular name for the arum plant, Gk. aron, Lat. arum, a corruption into a more familiar word. (Prior, Pop. Names of British Plants.) It was sometimes called Barba-Aron, as if "Aaron's beard" (Gerard, Herbal, 1597, p. 685).

ABBEY. The Somerset name of the white poplar tree, the Dutch abeel, whence O. Eng. abele, abeel, of which this is a corruption. The origin is Low Latin albellus, whitish.

He attempts to destroy her child before birth with the leaves of the abbey-tree.—D. Wilson, Old Edinburgh, vol. i. p. 175.

Another side of the garden was girt with five lofty jagged abele-trees.—A. J. C. Hare, Memorials of a Quiet Life, vol. ii. p. 147.

ABHOMINATION, an old mis-spelling of "abomination" (Lat. abominatio, from abominor, ab and omen), something to be deprecated as evil-omened, as if it were derived from ab and homo, something alien from the nature of man, or inhuman.

The Hebrews had with Angels conversation, Held th' Idol-Altars in abomination.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 273 (1621).

Holofernes the pedant censures the pronunciation of the "racker of orthography,"

This is abominable,—which he would call abhominable.

Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1. l. 27
(Globe ed.).

Abhominable is found in the Promptorium Parvulorum (c. 1440) and the Apology for Lollard Doctrines; abhominacioun in Wycliffe's New Testament;

while Fuller presents the form abhominial.

The Rev. Jonathan Boucher actually assumes the etymology to be ab and homo and defines the word as unmanly, unworthy of a man!—(Fitzedward Hall, Modern English, p. 159.)

ABIDE. Frequently found in old writers with the meaning to expiate, atone, or pay the penalty for, some wrong-doing, is a confounding of the old Eng. verb abie, abeie, abegge, A. Sax. abigcan, to buy, redeem, or pay for, with abide, A. Sax. abidan, to expect or wait for.

Let no man abide this deed

But we the doers.

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, iii. 1. l. 94
(Globe ed.).

If it be found so, some will dear abide it.

Ibid. iii. 2. l. 119.

Ay me! they little know

How dearly I abide that boast so vain.

Milton, Par. Lost, Bk. IV. l. 86.

Instances of abie are the following—

For if thou do, thou shalt it dere abie.

Chaucer, Chanones Yemannes Tale, Prologue.

Yet thou, false Squire, his fault shalt deare aby,

And with thy punishment his penance shalt supply.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV. i. 53.

Yf I lyue a yere he shal abye it.

Caxton, Reynard the Fox (1481), p. 11
(ed. Arher).

Yf he wente out . . . to stele myes to a prestes hows and the priest dyde hym harme sholde I abye that.—Ibid. p. 30.

In both these instances, and elsewhere, the editor incorrectly prints aby [d] e.

Spenser, on the other hand, sometimes uses abie incorrectly instead of abide, to endure or suffer, e. g.—

Who dyes, the utmost dolor doth abye.
F. Queene, III. iv. 38.

But patience perforce, he must abie
What fortune and his fate on him will lay.
Ibid. III. x. 3.

ABLE, is old Eng. hable, Fr. habile, Lat. habilis, "haveable," manageable, fit, apt (from habeo, to have). We still say habilitate, to en-able, not abilitate, habit, not abit (cf. also habiliments, fittings, clothes; dishabille, undress). The word seems to have been assimilated to—perhaps confounded with—old Eng. abal, strength, ability, "pin abal and craft," Cædmon, 32, 9, which Ettmüller connects with a root form, aban, to be strong. (Lex. Anglo-Sax. s. v.) See Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, i. 2.

Able, or abulle, or ahylle. Habilis, idoneus.
Promptorium Parvulorum, 1440.

Which charge lasteth not long, but vntill the Scholer be made hable to go to the Vniuersitie.—R. Ascham, Scholemaster, p. 24 (ed. Arber), 1570.

ABRAM- OR ABRAHAM-COLOURED, as applied to the hair in old plays, is a corruption of auburn, which is spelled abron in Hall's Satires (iii. 5, "abron locks"). Shakespeare, Cor. ii. 3. (folio) speaks of heads, "some brown, some black, some abram" (vide Nares). The expressions Cain-coloured and Judas-coloured for a red-haired person may have contributed to this mode of spelling. In old German it is found as abramsch, abräumisch. In old English, where the word occurs in the forms of abron, aburne, uborne, it denotes a colour inclining to white, e. g.—

He's white-hair'd,
Not wanton-white, but such a manly colour,
Next to an aborne.

Two Noble Kinsmen, iv. 2. l. 123 (Quarto, 1634, ed. Littledale. See his note, p. 155.)

It is another form of alburn, white, Lat. alburnum.

It. alburno, the white part of any timber, also the whitish colour of womens haire which we call an Alburne or Aburne colour.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

ABRAHAM'S BALM, a popular name for a kind of willow, is probably a corruption of Abrahams-boom (i. e. Abraham's tree), a Dutch name for the Vitex

Agnus-Castus.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 4 (E. D. Soc.).

ACORN, has generally been regarded as another form of "oak-corn," e. g., A. Sax. âc-corn, âc-cærn, êcæren, as if from âc, êc, an oak; so Ger. eichel, as if from eiche, oak. Old Eng. forms are okecorne, accharne (Ortus), accorne (Prompt. Parv.), akehorne (Florio, s. v. Acilone). Compare, however, Icel. akarn, Dan. ager, all near akin to Gothic akran, fruit, originally a crop, field-produce, from Goth. akrs, a field, Icel. akr, Gk. âgrôs, Lat. ager, A. Sax. æcer, Ger. acker, our "acre." See Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, i. 31. Dean Wren notes of the oak,

Besides the gall, which is his proper fruite, hee shootes out oakerns, i. e. ut nunc vocamus acornes, and oakes apples, and polypodye, and moss.—Sir Thos. Browne, Works, vol. i. p. 203 (ed. Bohu).

See AKEHORNE.

ACT OR PART, in the phrase, "I will take neither act nor part in the matter," is a corrupted form of the old Scottish law term, "To be act and part in the committing of a crime, i. e., when the same person was both a contriver and acted a part in it."—Bailey. L. Lat. artem et partem habuit (Jamieson). See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v.

Acknowledging his sinnes, hot na ort nor part of the King's father's murdour wherfor he was condemnit.—Jas. Melville, Diary, 1581, p. 117 (Wodrow Soc. ed.).

ACWERN, the Anglo-Saxon name for the squirrel, which Bosworth and Ettmüller rank under the heading of derivatives from âc, in company with âc-beám and others, as if it was the animal that lives in the oaks (Ger. eichorn), is really = Icelandic ikorni, and that, according to Cleasby, is a corruption of the Latin and Greek sciurus, "the shadow-tail," the diminutive of which, sciurulus, yields our squirrel. Cf. O. Eng. ocquerne, Lambeth Homilies, p. 181.

ADDER. A. Sax. êttor, so spelt as if denoting the poisonous snake, from êttor, âtter or âtor, poison, Prov. Eng. atter, Dan. ædder, Icel. eitr (like Icel. eitr-ormr, "poison-worm," the viper), is a corrupt form of A. Sax. næddre, a snake (mistaken for an æddre), Welsh nadr, Irish nathair, originally perhaps a water snake, Lat. natrix, "the swimmer," a serpent.—(W. Stokes, Irish Glosses, p. 46; Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 93.) Compare addircop (Palsgrave) = attercop, a spider; also natter-jack, a (venomous) toad (Suffolk), and Ger. natter, an adder. In S. Matt. xxiii. 33, where Wycliffe (1389) has "See serpentis, fruytis of eddris," the A. Sax. version (995) has "ge næddran and næddrena cynn." The poisonous nature of the adder is frequently dwelt on in old Eng. writers.

We ben also þe nedre hie haueð longe liued, and we longe leien in sinne. Hie haueð muchel atter on hire [i.e. We are as the adder, she hath lived long, and we lay long in sin. She hath much venom in her].—Old Eng. Homilies, XII. Cent. 2nd Ser. p. 199 (ed. Morris).

þe Neddi of attri Onde haue seoue Kundles [The adder of poisonous envy hath seven offsprings].—Ancren Riwle (1225), p. 200.

þe attri neddi [sleað] alle þeo ontfulle [The poisonous adder (slayeth) all the envious].—Id. p. 210.

Ðanne þe neddre is of his hid naked, and bare of his brest atter.

Bestiary (ab. 1250) l. 144, Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 5.

In swete wordis þe nedder was closet.

The Baebes Book, p. 305, l. 207 (E.E.T.S.).

Eddyr, or neddyr, wyrme. Serpens.—Promptorium Parvulorum (1440).

Topsell says of the adder :

Although I am not ignorant that there be which write it Nadere, of Natrix, which signifieth a Watersnake, yet I cannot consent vnto them so readily, as to depart from the more vulgar received word of a whole Nation, because of some likelyhoode in the deriation from the Latine.—Historie of Serpents, p. 50 (1608).

ADJUST. So spelt as if the primitive meaning were to make just or even, to set to rights, and so Fr. adjuster, "to place justly, set aptly, couch evenly, joyn handsomely," Cotgrave; O. Fr. adjouster, to add, set or put unto, It. aggiustare, "to make iusti, even, or leuell" (Florio), Prov. ajostar. Diez is of opinion that these words are derivatives not of just, giusto, but of O. Fr. joste, juste, Prov. josta, It. giusta, Lat. juxta, near, as if aggiustare, to set near together. Hence also Sp. justar, O. Fr. joster, juster, Eng. "to joust" and "jostle."

ADMIRAL, an assimilation of the older form amiral, amyrayl, Sp. almirante, Portg. amiralth, It. ammiraglio, to "admire," "admirable," as we see in the Low Latin forms, admiralis, admiralius, admiraldus, admirans, admirandus (Spelman, Glossarium, s. v.); admirabiles and admiralli in Matthew Paris, O. Fr. admiraulæ (Selden, Titles of Honour, p. 103.).

Amiral is from the Arabic amir, a prince or lord (compare Heb. amir, head, top, summit). "Amerel of the see, Amirellus."—Prompt. Parv. O. Fr. halmyrach, an admiral (Cotgrave), seems to have been assimilated to Gk. halmyros, the briny sea.

Engelmann supposes that amiral is shortened from Arab. amir-al-bahr, commander of the sea, but the oldest meaning of the word in French, as M. Devic observes, is a general or commander of troops.

Sir Lancelot . . . slew and detrenched many of the Romans, and slew many knights and admiralls [= emirs or Saracen chiefs, Wright].—Malory, Historie of King Arthur, 1634, ch. xciv.

Admiral occurs in Layamon's Brut., A.D. 1205.

It may be noted that the handsome butterfly called the admiral is also known as the admirable, which was probably its original name.

Much difference there is about the original of this word, whilst most probable their opinion who make it of Eastern extraction, borrowed by the Christians from the Saracens. These derive it from Amir, in Arabick a Prince, and Ἀμιρ, belonging to the Sea, in the Greek language; such mixture being predated in other words. Besides, seeing the Sultan's dominions, in the time of the Holy War, extended from Sinus Arabicus to the North Eastern part of the Midland-Sea, where a barbarous kind of Greek was spoken by many, Amirall (thus compounded) was significantly comprehensive of his jurisdiction. Admirall is but a depraving of Amirall in vulgar mouths. However, it will never be beaten out of the heads of common sort, that, seeing the Sea is scene of wonders, something of wonderment hath incorporated itself in this word, and that it hath a glimps, cast, or eye of admiration therein.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 18 (ed. 1811).

ADVANCE, } so spelt as if com-ADVANTAGE, } pounded (like ad- venture, adverse, etc.) with the Latin preposition ad, to, are derivatives of Fr. avancer, avantage (It. avanzare, vantaggio), which are from avant, forward, Lat. ab-ante.

Other mistaken assimilations of the first syllable of a word to prepositions are—

Enlarge for O. Eng. alarge (Wycliffe), Fr. eslargir, Lat. ex-largior.

Engrieve (Chaucer, Spenser) for ag-grieve. Entice, Fr. attiser.

Impair for appair. Imposthume for aposteme.

Invoice, from It. avviso (advice). Example for ex-ample.

Encumber for O. Eng. acombre, ac-combre (Townley Mysteries).

Encroach for accroach, Fr. accrocher.

Embassy, an ambassage, Low L. ambascia, Lat. ambactus.

ADVOWTRY, } an old word for adul-AVOWTRY, } tery. O. Fr. avoutrie, as if a breach of one's marriage vow (Fr. voue), is a derivative from Lat. adulterium through the Provençal forms azulteri, aülteri, avulteri, just as Lat. gladius yields Prov. glazi, glai, glavi, Fr. and Eng. glaiive; and Lat. vidua yields Prov. veuzza, veuva (Diez).

Duke Humfrey aye repined,

Calling this match advoutrie, as it was.

Mirror for Magistrates [Nares].

The pharisees brought a woman taken in advoultrey.

Carton, Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 73 (ed. Arber).

Enen such vnkindnesse as was in the Lewes . . . in committing advoultre and hordom.—R. Ascham, The Schoolmaster, 1570, p. 56 (ed. Arber).

Avoutre (i. e. a-outre = a(d)ulter) occurs in the Norman French Vie de Saint Auban, l. 62 (ed. Atkinson).

ÆGLOGUES. Spenser's spelling of eclogues from a mistaken theory that—

They were first of the Greekes, the inventors of them, called Æglogai, as it were αἰγῶν or αἰγόνων λόγοι, that is, Goteheards tales.—General Argument to the Shepherds Calender.

“Eclogue” of course is the Gk. eklogê, a choice poem, a selection. So E. K. his commentator thinks it necessary to note that Idyllia is the proper name for Theocritus's pastorals “and not, as I have heard some fondly guesse . . . Hædilia, of the Goteheards in them” (Spenser, p. 472, Globe ed.).

ÆLMESE, } an Anglo-Saxon word
ALMASSE, } for a charitable deed, our “alms,” so spelt as if derived from æl, fire, and mæsse, an oblation, the mass, “a burnt offering” (so Bosworth and H. Leo), is really a corrupt form of L. Lat. elimosina, Gk. Eleēmosíne, an act of pity or mercy, whence It. limosina, Sp. limosna, Fr. aumône (almosne). This word has been peculiarly unfortunate in the treatment it has received at the hands of popular etymologists. Thus Brother Geoffrey the Grammarian, c. 1440, when registering the word “almesse, or almos, Elimosina, roga” [? a pyre, a burnt-offering], vouchsafes the information that “Elimosina is derived from el, which is God, and moys which is water, as if water of God; because just as water extinguishes fire, so alms, elimosina, extinguishes sin.” Florio similarly defines It. Elimósina, “a word composed of E’li, that is to say God, and Mois, that is to say water, that is to say Alms or water of God to wash sinnes away.” “Elimosiniere, an Almoner, a giuer of almes or Gods water.” (Id.)

In Mid. High. German the word (Ger. almosen) takes the form of almuosen, as if containing al and muos (pap, food), and sometimes of armuosen, as if from arm, poor-food.

AEROLITE, a corrupt spelling of aerolith, air-stone, from the Greek lithos, a stone, just as chrysolite is for chrysolith, “gold-stone,” from a desire probably to assimilate these words to others terminating in ite, such as anthracite, malachite, &c. So coprolite for coprolith.

AERY, } in old Eng. also spelt “aire, AIERY, } airy, a Nest of Hawks or other birds of prey” (Bailey), Low Lat. aërea, a nest (Spelman, Glossarium), as if so called from the airy or aërial height at which the eagle builds (Lat. aëreus, 1 airy, 2 elevated), is derived from Fr. aire, an eagle's nest, airer to make a nest or airy (Cotgrave). See AIR.

An eagle o'er his aiery tow'rs
To soune annoyance that comes near his nest.

Shakespeare, King John, act v. sc. 2.

Another frequent corruption is eyrie, eyerie, as if for ey-ry (old Eng. ey, an egg), i. e. egg-ery, a collection of eggs.

AFFORD, so spelt as if connected with Fr. afforer, affeurer, is a corruption of old Eng. iforðien of the same meaning, cf. iforðium, to further or help (Morris), aworthi in Bp. Pecoock.

Do pine elmesse of þon þet þu maht iforðien.—Old Eng. Homilies, 1st ser. p. 37 (E. E. T. S.).

See Oliphant, Old and Mid. English, p. 179.

AGHAST, so spelt from a mistaken analogy with ghastly, "ghost-like," is an incorrect form of old Eng. agast, a participial form from A. Sax. egesian, to terrify, Goth. usgaisjan, from A. Sax. ēgesa, ēye, "awe," fear, Goth. agis.

þe deouel schal 3et agesten ham.

Ancren Riwe (1225), p. 212.

Wallace was spedý and gretlye als agast.

Henry the Minstrel, Wallace, Bk. i. l. 230 (ab. 1461).

Of euery noyse so was the wretch agast.
Sir Thos. Wiat, Satires, i. l. 39 (ab. 1540).

There sall ane Angell blawe a blast

Quhilk sall mak all the world agast.

Sir D. Lindsey, The Monarchie, Bk. iv. l. 5386 (1552).

Another corrupt spelling is agazed, as if to imply standing at gaze, with eyes fixed and paralyzed with fear.

As ankerd fast my sprites doe all resorte
To stand agazed, and sinke in more and more.

Lord Surrey, Songes and Sonnettes, 1557.

The French exclaim'd, The devil was in arms;

All the whole army stood agaz'd on him.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. Pt. I. l. 3.

See however Prof. Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v.

AGNAIL. This word in all probability has nothing to do, as its present form would suggest, with the nails of the fingers (A. Sax. agnägl (?), pain-nail). It was formerly spelt agnel, agnayle, agnayle, and denoted a corn on the toe, or generally any hard swelling. It is doubtless the same word as Fr. angonailles, botchis, (pockie) bumps, or sores (Cotgrave), It. anguinaglia, a blain on the groin, "also a disease in the inside of a horse's hinder legs," (Florio). Anguinaglia, as Diez shows, is for inguinalia, a disease or affliction of inguine, Lat. inguen, the groin or flank (Sp. engle, Fr. aine).

Palsgrave (1530) has "agnayle upon one's too," and Turner, Herbal, speaks of "agnaylles and such hard swellings," Florio of "agnels, wartles, almonds, or kernels growing behind the eares and in the necke" (s. v. Páno).

The inner flesh or pulp [of a Gourd] is passing good for to be applied to the agnels or corns of the feet.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. ii. 36 (1634).

Frouelle, An Agnell, pin, or warnell in the the [? toe].—Cotgrave (ed. 1660).

Agassin, A corn or agnele in the feet or toes.—Id.

Ghiandole, Agnels, wartles, or kernels in the throat.—Florio.

AIR, word for a person's mien, manner, or deportment (Fr. air, It. aria), as if the subtle atmosphere, or aura, which envelopes one and emanates from his idiosyncrasy, is a confusion of "air" = Lat. aer, with quite a distinct word, Old Fr. aire, family, breeding, natural disposition. This aire, derived from Lat. area, seems to have gone through the transitions of meaning: (1) a space of ground for building, (2) a dwelling or nest (whence our airy, or eyry, an eagle's nest), (3) race, family, disposition, quality. So old Eng. debonaire, good-natured, Fr. débonnaire, was originally applied to "un faucon de bonne air," of a good nest, i. e. breed or strain—well bred and consequently well conditioned.

See Litttré, Histoire de la Langue Française, tom. i. p. 61.

Prof. Skeat thinks that L. Lat. area, an eyrie, is itself only a corrupted form of Icel. ara-hreiðr, "eagle's-nest" (Etym. Dict. p. 10).

AIRBELL, a name for the Campanula rotundifolia, is corrupted from the commoner name Hairbell. The old forms of this word are Hare bell and Hare's bell (Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 34).

AKEHORNE, an old mis-spelling of acorn (Urry, Chaucer, p. 364). Other old forms of the word are akernele, akeron, akker, akkern, akran, and akyr (Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 9). See ACORN.

AKERSPIRE, } provincial words, ACRESPIRE, } meaning to sprout or ACKERSPBIT, } germinate, corrupt forms of acrospyre (from Greek ákros and spéira) to shoot at the extremity.

They let their malt akerspire.—Regiam Majestatem, p. 293 (Wright).

A more corrupt form hecklespire is found in some counties.

ALACOMPANE, an old name for the plant Inula Helenium (Bullein, Book of Simples), as if from a French à la compagne, is a corruption of the old Latin name enula campana, through the forms elecampane and allicampane, used in Cheshire. (See Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 11.)

ALBATROSS, as if connected with Lat. albus, white, is corrupted from the older form alcatraz (e. g. in The Mirror for Magistrates), which is the name of the bird in Portuguese and Spanish.

"Alcatraz, a kind of fowle like a seamew" (Minshew), old Fr. alcatros. M. Devic has shown that alcatraz is the same word as Portg. alcatraz, Span. alca-druz, Arab. al-qādūs, a vessel for drawing water, having originally been given as a name to the pelican, which was believed to fill its huge bill with water and convey it to its young ones in the desert (Chardin). For this reason the pelican is called by the Arabs sagqa, "the water-carrier."

ALFIN. } The old English name
 AWFYN. } for the piece in the game of chess which we now call a bishop is a corruption of its oriental name, Arabic Al-fil, "The Elephant," Persian Pil or Fil (compare the borrowed words Icel. fill, Swed., Dan. fil, an elephant). In Russian it is called stonie, an elephant (vid. D. Forbes, History of Chess, pp. 40, 210).

Aufyn of be chekar, Alfinus.—Promptorium Parv. c. 1440.

Afyn, a man of the chesse horde, avfyn.—Palsgrave, 1530.

Al-fil was assimilated in English to alfin, an oaf or lubber, just as fil became in O. French fol, a fool. An Italian corruption is dalfino, "adolphin, also a Bishop at Chesse,"—Florio; Old French dauphin, as well as auphin, aufin, compare Span. and Portg. alfil; It. alfino, alfido; Low Lat. alfilus, alphinus (Devic).

ALL AMORT, dejected, for à la mort.

Shall he thus all amort live malcontent!
 —Greene, History of Friar Bacon, 1594.

What, all a mort! How doth my dainty Nell?—Peele, Edward I. (1593), p. 392, ed.
 Dyce.

What all a mort? No merry countenance!
 —Chettle, Kind Hurts Dreame.

ALLAN, a name in Cornwall for October 31st, is a curious condensation of Allhalloween, i. e. The Eve of Allhallows or All Saints Day.

At St. Ives, "Allan Day," as it is termed, is one of the chief days in all the year to hundreds of children, who would deem it a great misfortune were they to go to bed on Allan Night without their Allan apple to hide beneath their pillows. A large quantity of apples are disposed of in this manner, the sale of which is termed Allan Market.—R. Hunt, Pop. Romances of West of England, 2nd Ser. p. 177.

ALL AND SOME, a very common phrase in old Eng. meaning all together, one and all. It is a corruption of alle in-same, all i-some, = all together; in-same, A. Sax. cet-samne, together, from sam, samen, together (see Notes and Queries, 6th S. II. 404).

The lady lawghed and made good game
 When they came owte all in-same.

The Wright's Chaste Wife (ab. 1462)
 1. 692 (E. E. T. S.).

[He] bade assemble in his halle,
 In Pantheon alle in-same.

Stacyons of Rome, 1. 792 (E. E. T. S.).

Uppon holy boresday þer on his nome
 Heo weren i-gedered alle i-some.

Castel of Loue, 1. 1418 (ab. 1320).

Sir, we hene heare all and some,
 As boulede men, readye bonne.

Chester Mysteries, ii. 87 (Shaks. Soc.).

His wife tolde him, all and some,
 How Dane Hew in the morning would come.

A Mery Jest of Dane Hew, 1. 41 (Early Pop. Poetry, iii. 136).

Now stop your noses, readers, all and some.

Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, ii. 457.

Two hours after midnight all and some,
 Unto the hall to wait his word should come.

W. Morris, Earthly Paradise, ii. 478.

ALLAWAYS, the Lincolnshire word for the drug aloes (Peacock), assimilated apparently to carraways.

ALLELUIA, a popular name for the wood-sorrel (Bailey), sometimes also called lujula and luzula, is held by Coles, Adam in Eden, 1657, and Withering, to be a corruption of the Italian name Juliola; see, however, JULIENNE infra.

Florio (1611) has "Luggiala, an hearbe very sharpe in taste."

ALLEY, the Lincolnshire word for the aisle of a church, of which probably it is a corruption.

ALLEY, a boy's marble of a superior description to the ordinary clay ones, is probably a shortened form of alabaster, of which material it is said (in the language of the toy mart) to have been made.

Mr. Pickwick enquired "whether he had won any alley tors [? = taws] or commonneys lately (both of which I understand to be a particular species of marbles much prized by the youth of this town)."—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxxiv.

ALLIGATOR, It. alligatore, so spelt as if a derivative of Lat. alligare, to bind (cf. boa constrictor), is a corruption of the older word alagarto, which is the Sp. lagarto with the article el (al) prefixed, Lat. lacerta, a lizard. However, if a writer in the Penny Cyclopædia, s. v., be correct, lagarto is itself a corruption of a native Indian word leguteer. Raleigh mentions alegartoes in his History of the World, fol. p. 150.

Jonson spells it alligarta in Bartholomew Fair, act ii. sc. 1. Mrs. Malaprop, as every one knows, gave the word a new twist into "an allegory on the banks of the Nile." Per contra, the lizard seemed to the Ettrick Shepherd a diminutive alligator.

There's nane [serpent] among our mosses, only asks, which is a sort o' lizards, or wee alligators.—Noctes Ambrosiane, vol. i. p. 145.

ALL SAINTS' WORT, a popular name of the Hypericum Androsæmum, is a mistaken rendering of the French name toute-saine (Tutsan) "All-heal."

Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names (E. D. Soc.).

ALLYANT, a variety of alient, the old English spelling of alien, from a desire apparently to accommodate it to "alliant or ally, one that is in league, or of kindred with one (Blount, 1656), sc. one's enemy."

Yonder cometh Richmond over the ffood with many allyants out of ffair countrye, hold men of bone and blood;
the crowne of England chalengeth hee.
Percy, Folio MS. vol. iii. p. 241, l. 145-148.

If any alyant in his absence durst adventure him seluen to visitt or inuade, our most valiant realme.—Ibid. vol. i. p. 215, l. 60.

Halliwell and Wright [in Nares] while quoting "Among alyauntes [=strangers, aliens] he had easily cured very many of all kyndes of diseases" (Paraphrase of Erasmus, 1548), confound this word with allyaunte, allied, akin, in More's Utopia, 1551.

Aliant, an alien, occurs in Coverdale (Judges xix., Jer. viii.) and A. V. 1611 (Job xix. 15, Lam. v. 2).

ALMERY, an old Eng. word for a cupboard, otherwise spelt aunry, "a Cupboard for the keeping of cold and broken victuals" or other alms, as if for almonry, cf. "awmebry or awmery, Eleemosinarium" (Prompt. Parv.). It is the same word as Ger. almer, quasi A. Sax. almerige, Sp. almario and armario, Low Lat. almaria, armaria, Fr. armoire; all (according to Diez) from Latin armarium, a chest for holding arms.

Almary or almary, Almarium.—Prompt. Parv.

Almery of mete keypyng, or a saue for mete. Cibutum.—Ibid.

Almery, aumbry, to put meate in, unes almoires.—Palsgrave.

ALMOND, is derived from Fr. amande, Provençal amanda, and these from amandola, which was supposed to be a diminutival form, but really represented the Latin amygdala (Gk. ἀμύγδαλη). The etymologically correct form would be something like amandel, cf. It. mandola, Ger. mandel. See DATE.

So the French ange has been formed from ang-el by dispensing with the supposed diminutival termination el (Philog. Soc. Proc. vi. 41).

ALPINE, a Cheshire name for the plant Sedum Telephium, is a corruption of Orpine (Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 12, E. D. Soc.), Fr. orpin, contracted from orpiment, which is from Lat. auripigmentum, with allusion to the golden-coloured flowers of one species.

ALL-PLAISTER, a provincial corruption of alabaster (Yorkshire), which in old English is frequently spelt alabaster. cf. YELLOW-PLASTER, infra.

Her alabaster brest she soft did kis.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, Bk. III. 2, xlii.

AMBERGREASE, a corruption of Fr. ambregris. Grey amber (gris amber, Milton, Par. Reg. ii. 344). So verdigrise for vert-de-gris.

Jacobus de Dondis, the Aggregator, repeats ambergreese, nutmegs, and all spice amongst the rest.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, 16th ed. p. 436.

A mass of this Ambergreese was about the third year of King Charles found in this county [Cornwall] at low water.—Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 206 (ed. Nichols).

A fat nightingale well season'd with pepper and ambergreese.—S. Marmion, The Antiquary, act iv. sc. 1 (1641).

AMBRY, } a cupboard or pantry, is AUMBRY, } the Fr. armoire, originally a chest in which arms were kept. The word was sometimes spelt almery, and being applied to the general receptacle of broken meat such as would be given in alms, was confounded with quite a different word, aumry or almonry, the office or pantry of the awmbrere, awmnere, or almoner, the alms dispenser. Wedgwood.

AMOREIDE, } old Scotch corruptions
EMERANT, } of the word emerald,
O. Eng. emeraud. The English word traces its origin to Gk. smaragdos, maragdos, which may be the same word as Sansk. marakata, a beryl, (Fürst), cf. Heb. bāreketh, a beryl. (See Speaker's Commentary, Ex. xxviii. 17.)

AMPERZAND, an old name for “&,” formerly &̄, the contracted sign of et (=and); the Criss-Cross row of the old horn-books commonly ending in x, y, z, &̄c, &̄. These final characters were read “et cetera,” “et per se, and.” When the modern & was substituted for &̄, this came to be read “and per se, and,” of which amperzand, ampus-and, ampassy, are corruptions. Similarly the letters A, I, O, when standing by themselves as words, were read in spelling lessons “A per se, A,” “I per se, I.” Chaucer calls Creseide “the floure and a per se of Troie and Grece.”

But he observed in apology that it [z] was a letter you never wanted hardly, and he thought it had only been put there to finish off th' alphabet like, though ampus-and would ha' done as well, for what he could see.”—Adam Bede, ch. xxi. p. 205.

In the Holderness dialect, E. Yorkshire, it is called parseyand. See ANDPUSSY-AND, infra.

ANBERRY, or anbury or ambury.

A kind of wen, or spongy wart, growing upon any part of a horse's body, full of blood.—The Sportsman's Dictionary, 1785.

Lincolnshire nanberry, from A. Sax. ampre, a swollen vein, which still survives in the Dialects of Essex and the East counties as amper, and in the South-Eastern counties as ampery, decayed, unhealthy (Wright, Provincial Dict.).

pri ampres were an mancyn ær his to-cyme [i.e. three blemishes were in mankind before His coming].—Old. Eng. Homilies, XII. Cent. 1 Ser. p. 237 (ed. Morris).

Ampre may possibly be connected with old Eng. ample, ampulle, a globular vessel, Lat. ampulla, something inflated. Cf. Fr. ampoule, a small blister, wheal, powke, or rising of the skin (Cotgrave).

ANCHOVY owes its present form to a mistaken notion that anchovies or anchoveys was a plural, whereas our forefathers used formerly to speak of “an anchoveyes.”

Acciuga, a fish like a Sprat called Anchioies.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

Anchoyes, ou Anchioies, The fish Anchoveyes.

—Cotgrave.

Anchoves (fish). Anchou, anchoies, anchoyes (poisson).—Sherwood, English-French Dict. 1660.

We received the word probably from the Dutch, who call the fish anchovis; but compare Fr. anchois, Portg. anchova, &c.

ANCIENT, an old and frequent corruption of ensign, Fr. ensigne, Lat. insignia, denoting (1) a flag or banner.

Full of holes, like a shot ancient.—The Puritan, i. 2.

It was a spectacle extremely delightful to behold the Jacks, the pendants, and the ancients sporting in the wind.—Don Quixote, p. 569 (ed. 1687).

(2) a standard-bearer.

'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.

Othello, ii. 4.

Master, Master, see you yonder faire ancient? Yonder is the serpent & the serpent's head.

Percy, Folio MS. vol. i. p. 303. l. 77.

“Enseigne, An Ensigne, Auntient, Standard bearer.”—Cotgrave.

Enseigne, it would appear, was confounded with ancien.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

Othello, act v. sc. 1.

ANDIRON, whatever be the origin of this word, iron probably is no real part of it, as we see by comparing the old forms awnderne (Promptorium, 1440), awndyern (Palsgrave, 1530), andyar (Horman, 1519), old Fr. andier, andin, Low Lat. andena, anderius.

Further corruptions are ENDIRONS and HANDIRONS.

AND-PUSSEY-AND, } Printers' names
AMPUS-AND, } for the character
AMPERZAND, } &, are corruptions of the old expression, "and per se, and," applied to it, I believe, in the horn-books.

The pen commandeth only twenty-six letters, it can only range between A and Z; these are its limits—I had forgotten and-pussey-and!—Southey, Letters, vol. i. p. 200.

Popular etymologizing has busied itself here to some purpose.

The sign & is said to be properly called Emperor's Hand, from having been first invented by some imperial personage, but by whom the deponent saith not. It is commonly corrupted into [!] Ampazad, Zumpy Zed, Ann Passy Ann.—The Monthly Packet, vol. xxx. p. 448.

The character was also sometimes called anpasty, anpassy, anparse (Wright), i. e. "and per se."

ANGEL-TOUCHE, an O. Eng. name for the earth-worm, is said by Nares to be from the French anguille. More probably it is the twitch (A. Sax. twicce), or worm for angling with. (See Philological Transactions for 1858, p. 98.)

I made thee twine like an angle-twitch.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 28.

Tagwormes which the Cornish English terme angle-touches.—Carew (Couch, E. Cornwell Glossary).

ANGER NAILS, a Cumberland word for jags round the nails, as if connected with angry, in the sense of inflamed (Dickinson, Cumberland Glossary, E. D. Soc.) is a corruption of ang-nails. See AGNAILS supra.

ANGLE-DOG, in Prov. English a large earth worm, is a corruption of A. Sax. Angel-twicce.

ANKYR, a borrowed word for a "recluse, Anachorita" (Prompt. Parv.), Gk. anachōrētēs (a withdrawer, a hermit), in old Eng. and A. Sax. âncer, has been assimilated, regardless of meaning, to the word "ankyr of a shyppe, Ancora," A. Sax. âncer. The A. Sax. word was probably regarded as a compound of ân, alone, and ceran (=versari), as if one who lives alone (qui solus versatur), like Gk. mónachos ("monk"). Bosworth actually ranges âncer as a derivative under ân, one, alone.

A curious piece of popular etymology is given in the Ancren Riivle, ab. 1225.

For þi is ancre icleoped ancre, & under chirche iancred ase ancre under schipes borde, uorte holden þet schip, þet uŕen ne stormes hit ne ouerworpen. Al so al holi chirche, þet is schip icleoped, schal ancren oðer ancre þet lit so holde, þet tes deoftes puffes, þet beoð temptaciuns, hit ne ouerworpe. (P. 142.)

[i. e. For this (reason) is an anchoress called an anchoress, and anchored under the church, as an anchor under a ship's board, for to hold that ship, that waves or storms may not overthrow it. Even so all holy church, which is called a ship, shall anchoresses, or the anchor, so hold, that the devil's puffs, which are temptations, may not overthrow it.]

Lady Fayth . . . is no Ankers, shee dwels not alone.

Latimer, Sermons, p. 58 verso.

ANNY SEED, a corrupted form of anise seed, quoted by Dr. Prior from The Englishman's Doctor.

The Promptorium Parvulorum has "Aneys seede or spyce, Anetum, anivsum" (c. 1440).

ANOINTED, in provincial Eng. employed to denote a worthless, reprobate, good-for-nothing fellow, e. g. "He's an anoined youth," in the Cleveland dialect nointed, has generally been understood to be a perverted usage of the ordinary word, as if it meant consecrated, set apart, or destined to evil courses and an evil end. (So Mr. Atkinson, Glossary, s. v.)

It is, without doubt, a corruption of the French anoienté (Roquefort), another form of anéanti, brought to nothing, worthless, good for nothing. Wielif has anymtische, anentyisch, to bring to nought, destroy (Ps. lxxiv. 9, &c.)

ANOTHER GUESS, meaning different, of another description, dissimilar, is a corruption of the older phrase another gates, or other gates, i. e. other ways. Compare Scot. this gate, this way, thus.

This will never fail
Wi' them that this gate wooses them.
Ramsay, Christ's Kirk on the Green,
canto ii.

Our race to heaven [is] another gates business.—Frank, Sermons, vol. i. p. 436.

His bringing up [requires] another gates marriage than such a minion.—Lilly, Mother
Bombie, act i. sc. 3.

He would have tickled you othergates than he did.—Twelfth Night, v. 1.

Hudibras, about to enter Upon another gates adventure,
To Ralpho call'd aloud to arm.

Butler, Hudibras, Pt. I. canto iii.

This is quite another-guess sort of a place than it was when I first took it, my lord.—
The Clandestine Marriage.

You hean't given to malting of a morning—more's the pity—you would be another guess sort of a man if you were.—Tales by a Barrister, vol. ii. p. 353 (1844).

Her's another gess 'oman than Dame.—
Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 12.

My lady Isabella is of anotherguess mould than you take her for.—Horace Walpole,
Castle of Otranto, ch. ii.

So Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield, ch. xix.

I am constrained to make another gessse
divertisement.—Comical History of Francion, 1655.

I co'd make othergess musick with them.
—Flecknoe, Love's Kingdom, 1664.

Wolfe Barrington came. Quite another guess sort of pupil.—The Argosy, Dec. 1870,
p. 447.

Somewhat similarly "any kindest thing," is a Devonshire phrase for "any kind-is thing" (an old genitive,
A. Sax. cynnes), and so old Eng. alkins, no kennes, nonkyns, &c.

ANTHYMN. Johnson's amended spelling of anthem, as if a hymn sung in parts or responsively (anti). It is so written by Barrow. The old forms are antem, anteme, antempne, antephne, A. Sax. antefn, from Lat. and Greek antiphona, It. and Sp. antifona. (Vide Blunt, Annotated Book of Common
Prayer, p. lxii.)

Fr. antienne, an antem.—Cotgrave.

Hymnes that are song interchangeably in the Church, commonly called Antemes.—
Hammer, Translation of Socrates, 1636.

A volume that has run through many editions (Sullivan's Dictionary of Derivations) actually gives as the origin anti and hymnus, alleging the following passage from Bacon in support of it,
"Severall quires, placed one over against another, and taking the voices by catches, antheme-wise, gave great pleasure."

On Sondaies and holidiaies masse of the day, besides our Ladymasse, and an an- thempne in the afternoone.—Ordinaunces made for the Kinges [Hen. VIII.'s] household.

Efter hire viue hexte blissen tel in þe
antefnes.—Ancren Riwle (ab. 1225), p. 42.

"After her five highest joys count in the anthems," where another MS. has antempnes.

ANTIEN, a frequent mis-spelling, as if connected with Lat. antiquus, of ancient, which is a derivative of Fr.
ancien, O. Fr. aincois, It. anziano, Sp.
anciano, Prov. ancian, all from Lat.
ante ipsum (Diez). It is the customary form in writers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

So in this last and lewest age

Thy antient love on some may shine.

Vaughan, Silex Scintillans, 1650.

It must have been by a slip of the pen that such an orthographical purist as Archbishop Trench speaks of "the antient world" in his latest work (Mediæval Church History, p. 393), as he elsewhere always uses the spelling "ancient."

ANTI-MASQUE, so spelt as if denoting an interlude opposed (anti) as a foil or contrast to the more serious masque, was perhaps originally antick-masque, a form put by Ben Jonson into the mouths of two of his characters. Bacon in his Essay Of Masques and Triumphs
(1625), says of Anti-Masques,

They have been commonly of Fooles,
Satyres, Baboones, Wilde-men, Antiques
(p. 540, ed. Arber).

And Wright quotes antick = an antimasque from Ford.

Sir, all our request is, since we are come,
we may be admitted if not for a masque for an antic-masque.—Jonson, The Masque of Augurs (1622), p. 631, Works (ed. Moxon).

O Sir, all de better vor an antic-mask, de more absurd it be, and vrom de purpose, it be ever all de better.—Id. p. 632.

ANXIOUS, BARBAROUS, &c., a misspelling of anxius, barbarus, to bring them into conformity with such words as glorious, famous, odious, &c. (glorio- sus, famosus, odiosus).

APPARENT, in the phrase "heir apparent," would seem naturally to mean the manifest, evident, and unquestioned heir, Lat. apparens.

Fabyan, however, writes it "heir paraunt," which Richardson thinks is for paravaunt, Fr. paravant, before, in front (like paraunter for paraventure). He understands apparent, therefore, to be from old Fr. auparavant, meaning the heir who stands foremost, or first in the order of succession. So Spenser speaks of one of the Graces.

That in the midst was placed paravaunt.
Faerie Queene, VI. 10. xv.

In the Alliterative Poems (XIV. cent.) Sodom is described

As oparaunt to paradis þat plantted þe dryztyne.—B. l. 1007.

It may, however, only mean next of kin; compare Fr. apparenté (from parans) of Kin, or neer Kinsman, unto.—Cotgrave.

APPLE-PIE, in the phrase "Apple-pie order," seems to be a popular corruption of cap-à-pie (Fr. de pied en cap), with reference to the complete equipment of a soldier fully caparisoned from head to foot. The apple-pie bed of schoolboys is an arrangement of the sheets by which head and foot are brought close together.

Take an Englishman Capa pea, from head to foot, every member he bath is Dutch.—Howell, Instructions for Forrein Travell, 1642, p. 58 (ed. Arber).

APPLEPLEXY, a vulgar corruption of apoplexy. Polish in The Magnetic Lady, iii. 3, turns it into happyplox.

But there's Sir Moth, your brother,
Is fallen into a fit o' the happyplox.

Ben Jonson, Works, p. 448 (ed. Moxon).

ARBOUR, so spelt as if it described a bower formed by trees (Lat. arbor, a tree). Sydney, for instance, speaks of "a fine close arbor"—

It was of trees whose branches so interlaced each other that it could resist the strongest violence of eye-sight.—Arcadia [in Richardson].

It is really a corruption of harbour, old Eng. herberwe, though the two words are distinguished in the following:—

To seek new-refuge in more secret harbors
Among the dark shade of those tufting arbors.
Sylvester, Du Bartas, 1621, p. 194.

They have gardens . . . with their harbers and bowers fit for the purpose.—Stubbes, Anatomy of Abuses, 1593.

Wynter, all thy desyre is the belly to fyll:
Betw' were to be in a grene herber, where one may have his wyll.

Debate betwene Somer and Wynter, l. 58.

An older form of the word is erbar or herber, which was used sometimes in the sense of a bower, sometimes in that of a garden, e. g. "Erbare, Herbarium."—Prompt. Parvulorum, c. 1440.

Of swuche flures make þu his herboruwe wiðinnen þe suluen.—Ancren Riwe (ab. 1225), p. 340.

"Of such flowers make thou his bower (or lodging) within thy self." The Latin version here has herbarium.

ARCHANGELL, appears in company with various other birds in the Romaunt of the Rose (l. 915), "With finch, with larke, and with archangell," and translates the French mésange (also marenge) a titmouse or titling.—Cotgrave.

The word was perhaps interpreted to be compounded of mes (= plus) and ange, an angel. It is really a corrupted form of the Low German meeseke, Picardian maisainque, Icel. meisingr. Other forms are old Fr. masange, Wallach. masenge, Rouchi masinque.

This corruption was the more natural from birds being often called angels by old authors in accordance with the saying of Thomas Aquinas "Ubi aves ibi angeli:" e. g. wariangle, an old Eng. name for the shrike or butcher-bird, Ger. würgengel, i. e. the worrying or destroying angel (vid. Cotgrave, s. v. Ancrouëlle); Ger. engelchen (little angel), the siskin. Similarly G. Macdonald calls a butterfly "the flower-angel" (The Seaboard Parish, p. 414). Compare

The dear good angel of the spring, the nightingale.

Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

And aerie birds like angels ever sing.
Barnabe Barnes, Spiritual Sonnets, x.

Not an angel of the aire,
Bird melodious or bird faire,
[Be] absent hence.

The Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. l. 16 (1634).

See Littledale's note in loco, and Prof. Skeat's note on Vision of Piers Plowman, xviii. 24, 33, where he traces the idea of the excellence of birds to the expression "volucres cœli," the birds of heaven, Matt. viii. 20.

ARCHICHOCKE, an old mis-spelling of artichoke (Turner, Herbal, 1551-1568), as if compounded with Gk. archi.

"Artichoke" is itself a corrupted form of Fr. artichaut, Sp. artichofa, It. articiocco, from Gk. artutiká, heads of artichoke (Devic). But compare the Arabian al charsjof, Sp. alcarchofa (Dozy, Scheler), or Arab. al kharcháif, as Engelmann transcribes it.

The latter part of the word has been sometimes understood to refer to the core of the vegetable, which is likely to stick in the throat, and is in Lincolnshire called the choak.

It was sometimes spelt hartichoake.

Oringoes, hartichoakes, potatoe pies,

Provocatives unto their luxuries,

The Young Gallants Whirligig, 1629.

Low. Lat. corruptions are articactus and articotus.

ARCHIMASTRYE, an old corruption of alchemy in Norton's Ordinall of Alchemie, as if the chief of maistries or "arch-mystery" (see MYSTERY). Old Eng. alkamistre, Old Fr. arquemie.

Maistryefull, merveyulous and Archimastrye

Is the tincture of holi Alkimy;

A wonderfull science, secrete Philosophie.

Ashmole, Theatrum Chemicum Brit. p. 13.

In the Proheme to his curious poem Norton says:—

This Boke to an Alchimister wise

Is a Boke of incomparable price.

Op. Cit. p. 8.

Florio gives "Archimista, an alchymist," and Archimia for Alchimia. New World of Words, 1611.

Fuller says that Alasco, a Pole,

Sought to repair his fortunes by associating himself with these two Arch-chemists of England [viz. Dr. Dee and Kelley, the Alchemists].—Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 473 (ed. 1811).

ARGOSY, a ship, a merchant-vessel, is a corruption of Ragosine, i. e. a vessel of Ragosa or Ragusa, influenced probably by the classical Argo in which Jason went in search of the golden fleece. The old Fr. argousin, the lieutenant of a galley (Cotgrave), which would seem to be connected, is the same word as It. aguzzino, and a corruption of alguazil, Sp. alguacil, Arab. al-wazir, the vizier (Devic).

Your argosies with portly sail . . .

Do overpeer the petty traffickers,
That curtsy to them.

Merchant of Venice, i. 1. 1. 9.

See, however, Douce, Illustrations, in loco.

ARK, recently used for citadel or stronghold, as if identical with ark, a place of safety (Lat. arca), is a corruption of Lat. arx (arc-s), a defence, bulwark (from arcco, to keep off), seemingly mistaken for a plural.

Lord Hartington said that he had no information concerning the defences of Candahar; but it is well known that its ark, or citadel, is naturally untenable against artillery.—The Standard, July 30, 1880.

ARMBRUST, a corruption of arbalest, arblast; cf. old Dan. arburst, Icel. arm-brysti, a cross-bow, Ger. armbrust, as if an arm fired from the breast (brust).

AROW-BLASTE, } an old spelling of ARWEBLAST, } the word arblast,
arbalest (arcu-balista, bow-catapult), a cross-bow, as if derived from the old Eng. word arwe, an arrow, and blast, to expel forcibly. Arow-blasters is Wycliffe's word for crossbowmen, 2 Kings, viii. 18.

The form all-blawsters occurs in Morte Arthure, l. 2426 (c. 1440, E. E. T. S. ed.), aireblast (air-blast!) in William of Palerne, l. 268.

ARQUEBUSS, It. archibuso, arcobugia, is the Dutch haeck-busse or haeck-buyse, Dan. hage-bøsse, Ger. hakenbüchse, i. e. a gun, busse, Ger. büchse, fired from a hooked or forked rest, haeck, hage, haken. The word when borrowed was altered in form so as to convey a meaning in the vernacular, as if a derivative from arco, Lat. arcus, a bow. Hence the words arcobugia, Fr. arquebus, Eng. arquebuss. Sir S. D. Scott, however, thinks that the word was originally arc-et-bus, "bow and barrel" (Dutch bus, Low Ger. büsse) in one (The British Army, vol. ii. p. 262), and so Zedler. It was sometimes called the arquebus à croc (Scott, p. 268). See also Spelman, Glossary, s. v. Bombarda.

ARRANT, thorough, downright, notorious, as applied to a knave or a fool, seems to be the same word as old Eng. and Scot. argh, arch, Scot. arrow. A. Sax. earg, cowardly, Dan. arrig, arrant, rank, Ger. arg, Icel. argr, a coward (cf. Gk. argos, idle, lazy), conformed to old Eng. arrant, errauant, wandering about, vagabond. Low Lat. arqa was a contemptuous term for a stupid, lazy, or mean-spirited person.—Spelman, Glossarium, s. v.

Pusillanimitas, bet is, to poure iheorted, & to arch mid alle eni heih ping to undernimeu.—Ancren Riwele (ab. 1225), p. 202 (MS. C.).

Pusillanimitas, that is, too poor hearted and too cowardly withal any high thing to undertake.

Dotterel. So do I, sweet mistress, or I am an errant fool.—May, The Old Couple, iv. 1 (1658).

Old Eng. argh, arwe, cowardly, lazy, Scot. arrow, A. Sax. earg, Gk. árgos (a-ergos, not working), curiously correspond to arrow, the swift dart, O. Eng. arwe, A. Sax. earh, from earh, earg = Gk. árgos, swift.

ARROW-ROOT. The first part of the word is said to be a corruption of ara, the native name of the plant which yields this substance and grows in the West Indies. Arrow-root is also a popular name for the arum (maculatum), of which perhaps it is a corruption, though a kind of starch resembling arrow-root is actually made from its tubers. As a Suffolk name for the Achillea Millefolium, it is a perversion of yarrow-root, just as Green arrow is of Green yarrow (Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 17).

ARSMETRICK, a common old spelling (it is found in Lydgate and Chaucer) of the word arithmetic, as if it were the metric art. The Low Lat. form arismetica is probably from It. arismus, risma, for Gk. arithmós (number). Cf. Sp. resma, Fr. rame, Eng. "ream."

Arsmetrike is a lore: þat of figours al is & of drauhtes as me draweþ in poudre: & in nombre iwis.

S. Edmund Confessor, l. 224 (ab. 1305).—(Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1858, p. 77.)

ARTHUR'S WAIN, an old popular name for the constellation of the Great Bear, has arisen, in all probability, from a confusion of Arthur, Keltic Arth, Art, Arthwys (cf. Ard, high), the name of the legendary British prince, with Welsh arth, a bear, Irish art, the same word as Lat. arctus, Gk. árktos, a bear, especially the constellation so-called (whence our "arctic"), Sansk. riksha,

(1) the bright, (2) a bear, (3) Ursa Major. Cf. Welsh alban arthan, the winter solstice; Arab. dubb, a bear, the constellation. In particular, Arcturus (Gk. Arktóuros, the Bear-guard, a star in Boötes) would readily merge into Arthurus. Gawin Douglas calls it Arthurys-hufe.

Arthur's slow wain rolling his course round the pole.—Yonge, Hist. of Christian Names, ii. 125.

Similarly the Northern Lights were sometimes called "Arthur's Host."

Arthur has long ago been suspected of having been originally the Great Bear or the bright star in his tail.—Quarterly Review, vol. 91, p. 299.

Sir John Davies writing on the accession of Charles I., says:—

Charles, which now in Arthure's seate doth raigne,
Is our Arcturus, and doth guide the waive.
Poems, vol. ii. p. 237 (ed. Grosart).

ARTOGRAFYE, an old spelling of orthography, as if compounded with art. How spellet thou this word Tom Couper
In trewe artografye.
Interlude of the Four Elements (Percy Soc.), p. 37.

ASHORE, a West country word for a-jar, i.e. on the jar (the phrase which so perplexed Mr. Justice Stareleigh), A. Sax. on cærre, Old Scot. on char, on the turn.

A Wiltshire girl I have heard ask her mistress, "Shall I leave the door ashore, mam?"

ASK, a provincial word applied especially to keen biting winds, or Hask (pronounced ask) in the Holderness dialect, E. Yorkshire, stiff, bitter, tart, is Icel. haskr, "harsh."

ASPECT, an incorrect Scottish form of aspick, Fr. aspic the asp (Jamieson).

ASPIC, a term of cookery for a species of jelly served as a condiment with dishes, Fr. aspic (as if from being cold as a snake or asp!)—Littre, was so called from having been originally made with espice, or spikes of lavender, as one of its ingredients.—Kettner, Book of the Table, p. 47.

Aspic, the herbe Spickenard or Lavander Spike.—Cotgrave.

ASS-PARSLEY, } a popular name
ASSE-PERSELIE, } for the plant

chervil. The first part of the compound is probably a corruption of old Eng. and Fr. ache, parsley, such pleonasm being not uncommon.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 19.

Wij alisaundre bareto ache & anys.
Böddeker, Alteng. Dichtungen, p. 145, l. 14.

ASTER, } an old corruption of ASTUR, } Easter, owing to a false derivation explained in the following quotation from Mirk's Festival of Englyssche Sermones.

Hit is called astur day . . . for welnyg in ych place hit is þe maner to do þe fyre owte of þe halle at þis day, and þe astur þæt hath be alle þe wyntur brend w<sup>t</sup> fyre and baked w<sup>t</sup> smoke, hit schall be þis day araed w<sup>t</sup> grene rysshe and sote flowrus.

Aster, also spelt astir, aistre, and estre, is an old Eng. word for a hearth or fire-place, O. Fr. aistre, L. Lat. astrum.

So þæt ye mowe w<sup>t</sup> a clene concience on astur day receyue þe clene body of owre Lorde Ihu cristie.—Festiall of Englyssche Sermones. See Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalend. vol. ii. p. 24.

Two other popular etymologies of the word are given in the Old English Homilies edited by Dr. R. Morris, "þis dai is cleped estrene dai, þat is aristes dai, for þæt he þis dai aros of deaðe" (2nd Ser. p. 97), i. e. "This day is called Easter day, that is, day of arising, because He arose from the dead on this day."

"þis dai is cleped estre dai þat is estene da, and te este is husel" (Ibid. p. 99), i. e. "This day is called Easter day, that is, day of dainties, and the dainty is the husel."

ASTERISKS, for hysterics in the language of the street folk.

"Lemontation of Judy for the loss of her dear child. . . She goes into asterisks," says a Punch and Judy exhibitor in Mayhew's London Labour and the London Poor, vol. iii. p. 55.

Compare STERAKLES.

ASTONY, } These, as well as O.
ASTONISH, } Eng. astone (Chaucer), are perversions of astound (regarded perhaps as a past participle astoun-ed), A. Sax. astundian, to stupefy (cf. stunt, stupid, stunian, to stun, or stupefy), and assimilated to Fr. estonner, "to astonish, amaze, daunt, . . . to stonny, benum, or dull the senses" (Cotgrave), as thunder does, from a hypothetical Latin ex-tonare. Thus astoned was regarded as equivalent to thunder-struck (Gk. embrontētos), dunder-head (=num-skull), Massinger, The Picture, ii. 1.

Besides astoned (A. V. Job, xvii. 8), we find astonyid, astoneyed, Wycliffe (Lev. xxvi. 32, Deeds ii. 6), stoned, stoneyd, stonyed (Ibid. Gen. xxxii. 32, Matt. x. 24), astunned, Hall (Rich. III., fol. 22 b) North speaks of Alexander being astoned, i. e. stunned, (Plutarch, p. 751), and Holland of the torpedo being able to astonish, or benumb, those that touch it.

Astonyed, or a-stonyed yn mannys wytte. Attonitus, consternatus, stupefactus, percussus.

Astoyryn, or brese werkys (al. astoyn or brosyn). Quatio.—Promptorium Parvulorum (c. 1440).

Vor her hors were al astoned, & nolde after wyll

Sywe noþer spore ne brydel, ac stode þer al styll.

Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle (ed. 1810), p. 396.

An old MS. recommends "coste" as a suffreyne remedie for sciatica and to þe membris þat ben a-stonyed.—A. Way, Prompt. Parvulorum, p. 94, note 4.

ATTENDANT, Defendant, Confidant, &c., for the more strictly correct forms attendent (Lat. attendent(t)-s), defendent (defenden(t)-s), &c., from the mistaken analogy of words like inhabitant, vigilant, militant, ignorant, arrogant, from Lat. inhabitan(t)-s, vigilan(t)-s, &c. Respondent, correspondent, preserve their primitive form.

ATTIC, the name given to a room at the top of the house, Fr. attique, has nothing to do with an Attic style of architecture. It seems to have been borrowed from the Hindus, as it closely corresponds to Sanskrit at'taka (in modern pronunciation attak), the highest room of an Indian house, from a't'ta, high, lofty. (Heb. attik, a portico, can be only a coincidence.) Prof. Goldstücker (Philological Transactions for 1854, p. 96). Similarly verandah, Portg. varanda, is from Sansk. varanda, a portico.

Rev. Isaac Taylor is therefore mistaken in tracing the Attics of a house to the upper tiers of columns displayed in Attic architecture (Words and Places, p. 424, 2nd ed.).

ATTONE, a very frequent old spelling of atone, to set at one those that are at two, i. e. at variance, as if to at-tone, to bring them to the same tone, or into concord, to harmonize.

Accorder, to accord,—to attone, reconcile parties in difference.—Cotgrave.

Attonement, a louting again after a breach or falling out.—Baret, Alvearie, 1580.

High built with pines that heaven and earth attone.

G. Chapman, Odysseys, 1614, Bk. ix. l. 266. He that brought peace and discord could attone.

Dryden, Poem on Coronation, 1661, l. 57.

I am comming forth to make attonement betwixt them.—R. Bernard, Terence in English, 1641.

White seemes fayrer macht with blacke attone.—Spenser, F. Queene, III. ix. 2.

For the old use of atone compare—pis Kyng & þe Brut were at on.

Robert of Gloucester, p. 13.

If my death might be

An offering to atone my God and me.

Quarles, Emblems, iii. 6 (1635).

I was glad I did atone my countryman and you.

Cymbeline, i. 4, l. 42 (Globe ed.).

Udal speaks of a "trialectic of atone-mente" (Erasmus, Luke, p. 118), and Bp. Hall of Discord 'twixt agreeing parts

Which never can be set at onement more.

Satires, iii. 7 (ed. Singer, p. 68).

Fleshly action . . . doth set foes at frendship, vnanimitie, and atnement.—A. Fleming, Caius's Eng. Dogges, 1576, p. 36 (repr. 1880).

AUELONG, also avelonge, aveylonge, an old English word defined oblongus in the Promptorium Parvulorum, elsewhere avelonge, Suffolk avellong, as if compounded with A. Sax. awoh, oblique, is an evident corruption of oblong.

AUREOLE. A luminous appearance encompassing the head of a saint in Christian art is termed an "aureole." This is generally imagined to represent the classical Latin aureola (sc. corona), a diminutive of aurea, and to mean "a golden circlet," as indeed it is generally depicted. It is highly probable, however, that, not aureola, but areola (a little halo),<sup>1</sup> a diminutive of area, is the true and original form, aréole in French, and that the usual orthography is due to a mistaken connection with aurum, gold, just as for the same reason urina became, in Italian, aurina,<sup>2</sup> It. arancio became Fr. orange, L. Lat. poma aurantia; Gk. oreichalcos became Lat. aurichalcum. This is certainly more likely than that it is a diminutive of aura, a luminous breath or exhalation, which is the view put forward by Didron in his Christian Iconography (p. 107). He quotes a passage from an apocryphal treatise, De Transitu B. Mariæ Virginis, which states that "a brilliant cloud appeared in the air, and placed itself before the Virgin, forming on her brow a transparent crown, resembling the aureole or halo which surrounds the rising moon" (p. 137). Here, obviously, areola would have been the more correct word to have employed, and it is the one which recommended itself to De Quincey. He writes—

In some legends of saints we find that they were born with a lambent circle or golden areola about their heads.—Works, vol. xv. p. 39.

So correct a writer would not have applied the superfluous epithet of "golden" to this "supernatural halo," as he subsequently terms it, if the word were to him only another form of aureola.

From his use of the word in "Queen Mary" (act v. sc. 2), it might be supposed that Tennyson connected "aureole" with aurum—

Our Clarence there

Sees ever such an aureole round the Queen,
It gilds the greatest wronger of her peace,
Who stands the nearest to her.

George Macdonald has been influenced apparently by the same idea.

The aureole which glorifies the sacred things of the past had gathered in so golden a hue around the memory of the holy cotager.—David Elginbrod, p. 265.

Aureola, in the ecclesiastical sense

<sup>1</sup> This bright phenomenon was called by the Romans area—a word which runs exactly parallel with the Greek halós, meaning (1) a plot of ground, (2) a threshing-floor, (3) a halo round one of the heavenly bodies.

<sup>2</sup> Florio, s. v.

of a golden discus, is not found in Mediæval Latin (vide Du Cange). Dr. Donne, who understands by it a crown of gold, traces its origination as follows—

Because in their Translation, in the vulgat Edition of the Roman Church, they find in Exodus [xxv. 25] that word Aureolam, Facies Coronam aureolam, Thou shalt make a lesser Crowne of gold; out of this diminutive and mistaken word, they have established a Doctrine, that besides those Corona aurea, Those Crownes of gold, which are communicated to all the Saints from the Crown of Christ, Some Saints have made to themselves, and produced out of their owne extraordinary merits certaine Aureolas, certain lesser Crownes of their own, whereas indeed the word in the original in that place of Exodus is Zer Zehab, which is a Crowne of gold, without any intimation of any such lesser crownes growing out of themselves. —LXXX., Sermons, p. 743, fol. 1640.

AXEY, a provincial word for the ague used in Sussex and in the Eastern States of America (L. J. Jennings, Field Paths and Green Lanes, p. 46), is a corruption of access (perhaps regarded as a plural), Fr. accès, a fit or attack of illness, "aceez de fiebure, a fit of an ague," Cotgrave, Lat. accessus.

Feveres, ares, and the bloody flyx [pre-vailed] in dyverse places of Englonde.—Warkworth's Chronicle, p. 23, ab. 1475 (Camden Soc.).

Wyth love's arcesse now wer they hote, now colde.

Bochas, Fall of Princes (in Wright, Prov. Dict.).

Thou dost miscall

Thy physick; pills that change

Thy sick Accessions into setled health.

H. Vaughan, Silex Scintillans, 1650.

AYMONT, an old English word for a diamond, occurring in Dan Michel's Ayenbite of Inwytt (or Remorse of Conscience), 1340 (E. E. T. S. ed.).

Hi spendeþ follich hare gnodes ine ydeinnesses uor boast of þe wordle ac uor to yeue uor god hy byeth harde ase an aymont. —p. 187.

(i. e. "They spend their goods foolishly in idleness for boast of the world, but for to give for God they be hard as a diamond, or as adamant.")

So the MS., but Mr. Morris, the editor, thinks it necessary, for clearness' sake, to print it "an [di]aymont." There can be little doubt, however, that there is no omission in the MS., and that aymont is the old French aymant or aimant (cf. Sp. iman), which seems to have been a more customary form than diamant. Cotgrave gives "aimant, a lover, a servant, a sweetheart; also, the Adamant, or Loadstone." "Diamant, a Diamond; also, the Loadstone: (instead of Aymant)."

He also has "Guideymant, the needle of a sea-compasse." "Diamond," Fr. diamant, and "adamant," are both (as is well known) derivatives of the Latin adamas, adamantis, Gk. adámas, "the invincible," the diamond, later the magnet. The French form affords an interesting example of a word being corrupted in accordance with a popular acceptance. The adamant, or loadstone, on account of its attractive power in drawing iron to itself, and the steady affection with which it remains true to the pole, was regarded as the loving stone, and transformed into aimant. That this popular conception is not a mere assumption, but one widely traceable even in our own language, the following quotations will make plain—

How cold this clime! and yet my sense
Perceives even here thy influence.

Even here thy strong magnetick charms I feel,
And pant and tremble like the amorous
steel.

John Norris, Miscellanies (1678), The Aspiration.

In Chinese the magnet is called "the affectionate stone" (Kidd, China, p. 371), in Sanskrit "the kisser," čumbaka. "What loadstone first touched the loadstone?" is one of a series of posers that Thomas Fuller puts to the naturalists of his day, "or how first fell it in love with the North, rather affecting that cold climate than the pleasant East, or fruitful South, or West?"

[A wider question is that proposed by Charles Kingsley, "What efficient cause is there that all matter should attract matter? . . . If we come to final causes, there is no better answer than the old mystic one, that God has impressed the Law of Love, which is the Law of His own being, on matter."—Letters and Memories of his Life, vol. ii. p. 67.]

Is there anything more heavy and unapt for motion than iron or steel? yet these do so run to their beloved loadstone as if they had a sense of desire and delight.—Bp. Hall (1634), Works, vol. xi. p. 93 (Oxford ed.).

Sylvester says of the loadstone, that it acts

With unseen hands, with vndiscerned arms,
With hidden Force, with sacred secret charms,

Wherewith he woos his Iron Misteriss,
And never leaves her till he get a kiss;
Nay, till he fold her in his faithfull bosom, Never to part (except we, loue-less, loose-em)

With so firme zeale and fast affection
The stone doth loue the steel, the steel the stone.
Du Bartas, Divine Weekes and Workes,
p. 67 (1621, fol.).

Th' hidden loue that now-adaies doth holde
The Steel and Loadstone, Hydrargirè and Golde; . . . .
Is but a spark or shadow of that Loue
Which at the first in everything did moue.
Ibid. p. 202 (fol.).

The Anglo-Norman poet Philippe de Thaun, in his Bestiary, about 1125, says that the loadstone is a symbol of the Incarnate Lord.

Dés en guise d'uinant fud, puis que en char
fud aparut . . .
Si cum la pere trait le fer, e Jhesu Christ nus traist d'enfer.
Wright, Popular Treatises on Science in Mid. Ages, p. 126.

“God was in guise of loadstone when he appeared in flesh . . .
As the stone draws the iron, so Jesus Christ us drew from hell.”

If it be a mysterious thing
Why Steel should to the Loadstone cling;
If we know not why Jett should draw
And with such kisses hug a straw.
Howell, Familiar Letters, Bk. iv. 44 (1655).

What makes the loadstone to the North advance? . . .
Kind Nature first doth cause all things to loue,
Loue makes them daunce and in iust order
moue.
Sir John Davies, Orchestra, 56 (1596).
What was the loadstone, till the use was found,
But a foul dotard on a fouler mistress?
T. Randolph, The Muses' Looking Glass,
iii. 2 (1638).

On the other hand, it may be remarked as illustrative that the attractive power of love is often compared to that of the magnet.

I find that I love my Creator a thousand degrees more than I fear him; methinks I feel the little needle of my soul touched with a kind of magnetical and attractive virtue, that it always moves towards Him, as being her summum bonum, the true center of her Happiness.—Howell, Bk. ii. 53 (1639).

Milton, speaking of women, says they are—

Skill'd to retire, and, in retiring, draw
Hearts after them tangled in amorous nets. .
Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the manliest, resoluteest breast,
As the magnetick [= magnet] hardest iron draws.

Paradise Regained, Bk. ii. l. 161-169.

On this passage the commentators quote—

But if the fair one once look upon you, what is it that can get you from her? she will draw you after her pleasure, bound hand and foot, just as the loadstone draws iron.—
Lucian, Imagines.

Flagrat anhela silex, et amicum sancia sentit
Materiem, placidisque chalybs cognoscit amores.
Sic Venus, etc.

Claudian, Idyllium.

That a stone so named should be esteemed of sovereign virtue in love-charms is quite in accordance with popular logic. The following hint to jealous husbands is given in a chapbook entitled Les Admirables secrets du Grand Albert.

Si un homme veut savoir si sa femme est chaste et sage, qu'il prenne la pierre que l'on appelle aimant, qui a la couleur du fer, . . .
qu'il la mette sous la tête de sa femme; si elle est chaste et honnête elle embrassera son mari, si non elle se jettera aussitôt hors du lit.—Nisard, Histoire des Livres Populaires, tom. i. p. 161.

B.

BACCALAUREATE, the adjectival form of “bachelor,” pertaining to the degree of bachelor at a university, Fr. baccalauréat, late Latin baccalarius, as if one crowned with a chaplet of laurel berries (baccæ lauri), a corruption of Low Latin baccalarius (see Spelman, Glossarium, s.v.). Cf. It. baccalario and baccalio, a kind of laurel or bay; Fr.
bachelier. The original meaning of baccalarius seems to have been (1) the proprietor of baccalaria (in L. Latin of ninth cent.), a rural domain, properly a cow-farm, from bacca, a mediæval form of Lat. vacca (and so in Italian, Florio); (2), a young knight who takes service under a superior; (3) a young man of inferior dignity; (4) an unmarried youth. Cf. Wallon, bauchelle, a young girl (Sigart).

A sounder man

In mind and body, than a host who win
Your baccalaureate honours.

E. C. Stedman, Lyrics and Idylls, 1879,
The Freshet.

The baccalaureus was perhaps regarded as one who had successfully run the gantelope of all his examiners, with reference to the Latin proverb, "Baculum laureum gesto" (I carry the staff of bays), said of those who having been plotted against, happily escaped the danger (Erasmus, Adagia). Others have imagined that he who had obtained his first degree at the university was said to have gained a berry of the bay, an earnest of the entire chaplet. Dante says:—

Il baccellier s' arma, e non parla,
Fin che 'l maestro la quistion propone.
Paradiso, xxiv. 46.

The bachelor, who arms himself,
And speaks not, till the master have proposed
The question.

Carey.

BACKRAG, and BAGRAG, an old name for the wine produced at Bacharach on the Rhine.

I'm for no tongues but dry'd ones, such as will Give a fine relish to my backrag.

Old Plays, vol. ix. p. 282 (in Wright).

Bacharach is said to be a corruption of Bacchi ara, having been of old a favourite seat of the wine god.—C. Redding, On Wines, p. 215.

BACKSTONE, a north country word for a girdle or griddle, also spelled bakstan, is a corruption of the O. Norse bakstjárn, i.e. "bake-iron."

BADGER, an old word for "one that buys corn or other provisions in one place in order to sell them in another, a Huckster" (Bailey), still used provincially for a dealer, has been confounded with badger, the name of the animal, which is an Anglicized form of Fr. bladier (orig. bladger) a corn-dealer; Low Lat. bladarivus, whence also its Fr. name blaireau (Skeat, Wedgwood). This false analogy has actually led Webster to connect broker with brock, a badger!

To badger was orig. to barter, to haggle with. The word is a disguised form of Old Eng. bager, beger, a buyer (from buggen, A. S. byegan, to buy), with an intrusive d, as in ridge (North. rigg), bridge (brig), ledger, abridge, etc.

De beger bet litil þar-fore = the buyer bid-deth little for it.—Old Eng. Homilies, vol. ii. p. 213.

(See Dr. R. Morris, Address to Philolog. Soc. 1876, p. 17.)

We have fellows among us, the engrossers of corn, the raisers of price, sweeping away whole markets; we call these badgers.—Adams, Sermons, i. 17.

Fuller says "Higglers, as bajulating them [i.e. carrying provisions] to London—Hence Bagers."—Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 381 (ed. 1811).

Holland has "a kinde of bucksters or badgers."—Camden's Britannia, p. 555, fol.

One of the duties of the "Maire of Bristowe" was to assist and counsel the bakers "in theire byeng and barganyng with the Bagers, such as bryngeth whete to towne, as wele in trowys, as otherwyse, by lande and by water."—English Gilds (ed. Toulmin Smith), p. 424 (E. E. T. S.).

Wee will ryde like noe men of warr;
But like poore badgers wee wilbe.

Percy, Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 205, l. 30.

Licences to "badgers" to buy and sell corn are found among the Quarter Sessions records of the time of Queen Elizabeth.—A. H. A. Hamilton, Hist. of Quarter Sessions, p. 26.

In Queen Anne's reign one Richard Tulling is licensed in Devonshire to be "a common Drover of Cattle, Badger, Lader, Kidder, Carrier, and Byer of Corne."—Id. p. 270.

BAD-MONEY, } north country words
BAWD-MONEY, } for the plant Gentian, are corruptions of its name BALD-MONEY, which see.

BAFFLE, so spelt as if a verbal frequentative formation similar to raffle, shuffle, snuffle, stifle, &c. (Haldeman, p. 178), has not been satisfactorily explained.

Dr. Morris rightly remarks that "Baffled, as applied by a Norfolk peasant to standing corn or grass beaten about by the wind, or stray cattle, adds greatly to our knowledge of the modern term" (Address to Philolog. Soc., 1876, p. 16). Older forms of the word are bafful (Hall, Chron.; Spenser, F. Q. VI. vii. 27) and baffoule.

A religion that baffoules all Temporal Princes.—Bp. Hall, Works, fol. 1634, p. 595.

These are from Fr. baffouier (and baffoler, adds Nares), "to baffle, abuse, revile, disgrace, handle basely in terms" (Cotgrave). I hold this baffouier (baffoler) to be contracted from bas-fouler, to trample down, just as baculer, baccoler (Cotgrave) is from bas-culer. The orig. meaning, then, would be to trample upon, afterwards to ill-treat, or put to scorn (a recreant knight, &c.). Prof. Skeat and Wedgwood, with less likelihood, deduce the word from a Scottish verb bauchle, to treat contemptuously.

Baffling winds are perhaps from Old Fr. beffler, to deceive; It. beffare.

BAGGAGE, a contemptuous term for a worthless woman, a wench following a camp, as if a mere encumbrance, like Ger. lumpenpack, Dutch stoute zak, a saucy wench, a naughty pack (Sewel, Dutch Dict. 1708), is a naturalized form of Fr. bagasse, "a baggage, quean, jyll, punke, flirt" (Cotgrave); It. bagascia, Sp. bagasa, Old Fr. baiasse, a woman of light character. These words seem to be connected with Arab. bâgi, a word of the same meaning, bagez shameful. In Sanskrit bhaga is lewdness (vulva), and bhaga-bhakshaka, a harlot.

You baggage, let me in!

Comedy of Errors, iii. 1.

The English word was very probably associated with the old Eng. bagage, meaning scum, dregs, refuse, just as drab is akin to draff.

When brewers put no bagage in their beere.

G. Gascoigne, The Steel Glas, l. 1082, 1576 (ed. Arber).

Scum off the green baggage from it and it will be a water.—Lupton, Thousand Notable Things [in Nares].

Hacket speaks of "a baggage woman" (Life of Williams, ii. 123 [Davies, Supp. Eng. Gloss.]).

BAIRN-WORT, } names for the com-
BAN-WOOD, } mon daisy in the Cleveland district, are corruptions of an older name, but whether this was A Sax. bân-wyrt (bone-wort), or an old Eng. bane-wort, or some other word, is not easy to determine. Perhaps bân, bone, here may be a perversion of bellis, the Latin name, just as bon-fire or bone-fire is for bôl-fyr. [?] In the North of England the daisy is still known as the boneflower (Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 57).

BALANCE, in etymological correctness, ought to be spelt balance, being the same word as It. bilancia, Lat. bilanc-s (bilans), lit. a pair (bis) of scales (lanæ).

The French balance, which we have adopted (Prov. balans, Sp. balanza), seems to have been altered, under the influence of a false analogy, to O. Fr. balant, Mod. Fr. ballant, oscillating, hanging—Fr. baler, Wallach. baler, It. ballare, to dance up and down.

The French, however, have retained the proper form in the book-keeping term bilan, a balance-sheet of debit and credit.

BALD-EYEBROW, a curious North of England name for the plant Anthemis Cotula, is a corruption of Balder Brae, so called from its whiteness resembling the dazzling brow of Baldur, the northern sun-god (Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 23).

Compare Swed. baldersbra, Icel. Baldurs-brá, and old Eng. Baldur herbe (Cockayne, Leechdoms, iii. xxxi.).

BALD-MONEY, } popular names for BAWD-MONEY, } the plant Mew (Meum Athamanticum), are corruptions of its old Latin name valde bona, "very good" (Prior). For the change of b to m, compare mona dies, an old French perversion of bona dies (Cotgrave); It. vermena, Lat. verbena; O. Eng. primet, now privet; Lat. mandibula, Sp. bandibula; A. Sax. hrómn, Eng. raven; termagant, Fr. Tervagant; cormorant and corvorant, &c. Britten and Holland agree with Sir W. J. Hooker that the first part of the word is a corruption of Baldur, the Apollo of the North, to whom this plant (like Balder's Brae) was dedicated (Eng. Plant-Names, p. 23).

BALLED, the old form of bald (ballid, Wychiffe, Levit. xiii. 41), as if to denote round, smooth, and polished, like a billiard-ball (Tyrwhitt, Richardson); "ballyd, oalvus," Prompt. Parv. (cf. "balhew, or playn," Id.; O. Eng. balz, smooth?). Bal-d seems to be the same word as Welsh bal, white-streaked, Lith. balu, Gk. phal-ios, white (cf. Cumberl. boly, a white-marked horse; W. Cornw. ball-eye, a white or wall-eye). Baldr, the white sun-god, is probably near akin.—Thorpe, N. Myth. i., 185. The nominant quality therefore of a hairless head is its gleaming surface.

His head was balled and schon as eny glas.
Chaucer, C. T. Prologue, l. 198.

Robert of Gloucester says that William the Conqueror was Gret-wombede & ballede & bote of euene lengþe.

Morris, Specimens, p. 15, l. 408.

Whanne the pie sawe a balled or a pilled man, or a woman with an highe forbede, the pie saide to hem, "ye spake of the ele."—Knight of La Tour Landry, p. 22 (E. E. T. S.).

Ball=head, occurs in K. Alysander, l. 6481.

BALLIARDS, Spenser's orthography of "billiards," as if from the balls that game is played with (Mother Hubberd's Tale), whereas its name is really derived from the French billard, the cue; billot, bille, a stick.

BALM-BOWL, a Cleveland word for a vase de chambre (matella). Mr. Atkinson compares an Icelandic bambur, a pot or bowl (Haldorsen), and thinks there may be a connexion with the Teutonic barme. But this seems doubtful.

BALSAMYNTE is an old name of the plant (tanacetum) balsamita, of which it seems to be a mere modification (Britten and Holland).

BANDOG, as if a dog banned or cursed for its savageness, was originally a band-dog, i.e. one bound or chained: Fr. chien bandé, Dutch, band-hond. So the "lime-hound" was one held in a leash (liam, O. Fr. liamen, Lat. ligamen). But the Danish bonde-hund seems to be the husbandman's (bonde) dog, a farm-dog. Tie-dog was another name for an animal of unusual fierceness.

As a tie-dog I will muzzle him.

Death of R. Earl of Huntingdon, 1601.

Mastive, Bandog, Molossus.

Baret, Alvearie, 1580.

We han great Bandogs will tear their skins.
Spenser, Shepheard's Calender, Sept.

Make bandog thy scoutwatch, to barke at a theefe.

Tusser, Five Hundred Pointes, 1580 (ed. E. D. Soc. p. 20).

The tie-dog or band-dog, so called because manie of them are tied up in chaines and strong bonds, in the daie time, for dooing hurt abroad.—Harrison, Description of England, pt. ii. p. 44.

See also Caius, Of Englishe Dogges, 1576, p. 43 (repr. 1880).

The fryer set his fist to his mouth

And whuted whues three :

Half a hundreth good band-dogs

Came running over the lee.

[Robin Hood and the Curtall Fryer.

BANDS, a frequent misspelling of banns (i.e. proclamations) of marriage, with evident allusion to the bonds or ties of matrimony. More than once I have received a written request from rustic couples to have their "bands put up." Dan Michel calls the married "y-bounde mid bende," bound with a band.—Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 220 (1340).

Art and industry can never marry those things whose bands nature doth forbid.—Fuller, Truth Maintained, 1643, forb. 10.

The brethrein ordained Mr. Robert Wat-soune to proclaime hir bandis, and to proceed with the marriage.—Presbytery Book of Strath-bogie, p. 1 (1631), (Spalding Club).

BANISTERS, a very common corruption of balusters when placed as a guard to a staircase, perhaps from a supposed connexion with Prov. Eng. ban, to stop, shut in, bannin, that which is used for shutting or stopping (Somerset). Balusters, Fr. balustres, seem to have been originally the same as Low Lat. balistarice, the shot-ports for smaller cross-bows (balistæ) along the gunnels of the mediæval galley (see Yule, Ser Marco Polo, vol. i. p. lxxvii.). Cf. It. balestrieria, a loophole (Florio, 1611); O. Sp. barahustes, balahustes, turned posts like pillars to support galleries (Minsheu, 1623), barahustar to cast weapons (Id.). The It. balauastro seems to have been assimilated to balausto (Gk. balauiston), a pomegranate flower. Somewhat similarly crenelle, Fr. créneau, O. E. carnel, denoted both a battlement and a loophole (see Castel of Love, ed. Weymouth, p. 77).

BANWOOD, and BAIRNWORT (Cleveland dialect), the daisy, seem to be the same as the A. S. bán-wyrt, bonewort (Atkinson).

In battill gyrrs burgionys the banwart wild.

G. Douglas, Eneados, Buk xii. Prolong.

Mr. Cockayne says that in old English banwyrt was the name of the wall-flower, from bana, a man-slayer, in allusion to the bloodstained colour of its petals, just as it is still frequently called "the bloody warrior;" and that afterwards the word was applied to the daisy on account of its red-tipped petals (Leechdoms, &c. vol. iii.).

BARB, to, to shave or trim the beard—a verb that seems to owe its origin to a mistaken idea that a barber is one who barbs. Cf. BUTCH.

Coke and I to Sir G. Smith, it being now night, and there up to his chamber and sat talking, and I barbing against to-morrow.—Pepys, Diary (ed. Bright), vol. iii. p. 316.

BARBED, when applied to horses (as in Shakespeare's "barbed steeds," Rich. III. i. 1, l. 10) = covered with armour, is a corrupted form of the older word barded, Fr. bardé, furnished with barde, or horse-armour (Skeat, Et. Dict.), assimilated seemingly to barb, a Barbary horse.

BARBERRY, the shrub so called, does not derive its name from its berries, but is corrupted from the Latin berberis.

Barybaryn tre (barbery), Barbaris.

Prompt. Parvulorum, c. 1440.

Fr. "berberis, the barbarie-tree" (Cotgrave). Prof. Skeat adds Arab. barbâris, Pers. barbarî (Etym. Dict.).

BARGE, to scold in a loud abusive way, used in most parts of Ireland (e.g. Antrim and Down Glossary, Patterson, E. D. S.), as if to use the strong language of a bargee or barge-man, is the same word as Scot. bairage, to lift up the voice in a strong loud manner (Banff Glossary, Gregor), bargain, to chaffer, Scot. bargane, to fight, O. Fr. barguigner, to wrangle (Cotg.), from baragouin, confused speech, gibberish, whence slang barrikin.

Hee thinks no language worth knowing but his Barragouin.—Overbury, Works, p. 84 (ed. Rimbault).

Baragouin is from Celt. bara gowin bread and wine (W. Stokes, Ir. Glosses, p. 52).

BARGUEST, an apparition in the form of an animal, as if one that arrests a traveller (like the Ancient Mariner), believed in the northern counties (as the Swed. kirke-grim, Dan. kirke-varsel) to be a harbinger of death. It is, no doubt, a corruption of bier-ghost, Ger. bahr geist, Dan. baare geist (Sir W. Scott). See Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, s. v. Henderson, Folklore of the N. Counties, p. 239.

He had been sufficiently afraid of meeting a barguest in his boyish days.—Southey, The Doctor, p. 577 (ed. 1848).

BARLEY-MEN, a Lancashire word for the petty officers of the manorial courts leet or baron. In other places, and in old documents, they are called burley-men, burlimen, or bye-law men, e.g. :

Item there be appointed foure burley-men for to se all paines that are made to be kept.—Records of the Manor of Scotter, anno 1586.

All these words are corruptions of byre-law-men, law of the byre or town; Icel. bær. See BY-LAW.

BARLEY-SUGAR, or sugar-barley, is said to be a corruption of the French sucre brûlé, "burnt sugar;" sucre d'orge being a re-translation of our corrupted term, but this is doubtful.

BARMAN, is probably not correlative to bar-maid (as in Ger. Kellner to Kellnerinn), one who attends at the bar or buffet; but the modern form of old Eng. berman, a kitchen-porter.

þer the berles mete he tok, þat he bouthe at þe brigge;
þe bermen let he alle ligge,
And þar þe mete to þe castel.

Havelok the Dane, ll. 873-877
(ah. 1280).

Weoren in þeos kinges cuchene twa hundred cokes, & ne mæi na man tellen
for alle þa bermannen.

Laʒamon, l. 8101.

This berman is A. Sax. bær-mann, a "bear-man" or porter, from béran. Bar is not found in the earliest English.

BAR-MASTER, a name given in the mining districts of Derbyshire and Yorkshire to the officer or agent who superintends the mines, is a corruption of the older term berghmaster = the German bergmeister. Fuller spells it barge-master.

The Barge-master keeps his two great courts twice a year in Barge-Moot-Hall.—Worthies, Derby-shire, vol. i. p. 251 (ed. 1811).

BARM-BRACK, or barn-brack, an Anglo-Irish term for a currant cake, is a corruption of the Irish bairin breac, "speckled bread," old Ir. bairgen brecc, from bairgen or bairghean, or baran, bread, cake, and breac, speckled (sc. with currants and raisins); so breacog is a little cake. (See Whitley Stokes, Irish Glosses, p. 52; Pietet. Origines Indo-Europ., tom. ii. p. 313.)

On St. Bridget's eve every farmer's wife in Ireland makes a cake called bairin breac.—Vallancey, Antiquity of Irish Language, p. 291.

He was always welcome to a share of our tea and barne-breac of an evening.—Russel, Memoirs of Thomas Moore, vol. i. p. 67.

BARNABY, in "Bishop Barnaby," a Suffolk name for the lady-bird (Wright), as if sacred to S. Barnabas, is no doubt for barney-bee, or burney-bee, its name in East Anglia, which is understood as burnie bee, i.e. fiery beetle (Eng. Dialect Soc., B. 20). See also Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1859, p. 86. This insect is universally associated with fire, and a burning house in which his children are in danger of being consumed (Kelly, Indo-European Tradition, p. 94 seq.).

Burnie bee, burnie bee,
Tell me when your wedding be.

Halliwel, Nursery Rhymes, p. 100.

Cf. Chambers, Pop. Rhymes of Scotland, p. 43; Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, s. v. Cowlady.

BARNACLE, the name of a species of goose (Anser bernicla), or bernacle, is said to be a corruption of Norweg. barn-gagl, a sea-goose (T. Edmonston, Shetland and Orkney Glossary, Philolog. Soc. Ed.). Cf. Icel. bára, a wave. The word was assimilated to barnacle, the name of the shell-fish, from which the bird was then imagined to be produced. See M. Müller, Lectures, 2nd ser. p. 602. The form bernecke occurring in Alex. Neckam (died 1217) would seem to show that the Norweg. word is the corruption (De. Nat. Rerum, lib. I., cap. xlviij.).

Barnakylle, byrde. Barnacus, barnita.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

There are founde in the north parts of Scotland, & the Ilands adiacent, called Orchades, certaine trees, whereon doe growe certaine shell fishes, of a white colour tending to russet; wherein are contained little living creatures: which shels in time of maturitie doe open, and out of them grow those little living things; which falling into the water, doe become foules, whom we call Barnacles, in the north of England Brant Geese, and in Lancashire tree Geese.—Gerard, Of the Goose tree, or Barnakle tree, Herbal, p. 1319 (1597).

BARNACLES, a slang term for spectacles, as old at least as the 16th century, as if a pair of limpet-shells so called (Ir. barneach), these barnacle-shells being sometimes pierced by children, and fitted to the eyes in sport. It is, however, the same word as the following, found in the provincial French dialects, berniques, spectacles (Berri); bornikel, near-sighted (Languedoc); bornicle, a squint eye; bornicler to squint (Geneva, Jura); bornier, to be blear-eyed (Douai); bourgna, to squint (Limousin); borni, blind (Languedoc); Fr. borgne, It bornio.

M. Müller thinks that the word was originally bernicula, berynicula, for beryllicula, from O. Fr. bericle, Provençal berille, from beryllus; as we speak of "pebbles," of Ger. brille, spectacles (2nd ser. p. 534).

Cotgrave says, "Bericles, corruptly for Besycles, a paire of spectacles: Rabelais."

Others, with less probability, see in barnacles a corruption of binocles, binoculi, with r inserted, as in pimpernel, Fr. pimprenelle; beside It. pimpinella, Low Lat. bipinella, bipinnula (two-winged).

Lacke. Your eyes dassell after your washing, these spectacles put on.

Grimme. They be gay barnikals, yet I see never the better.

Damon and Pithias, 1571, Old Plays, i. 240 (ed. 1825).

BARONET, in old Acts of Parliament, e.g. in the statutes of Richard II., is a corruption of Banneret, as if it were connected with Baron (Selden, Titles of Honour, p. 736).

Low Lat. banerettus, he who carries the banner, "homo ad vexillum," would easily be confounded with baronettus, a diminution of baro, the man par ex- cellence, akin to Lat. vir. See, however, Spelman, Glossarium, s. vv.

BARREN, so spelt as if connected with old Eng. "barryn dorys, or oþer shyttynge (pessulo, repagulo)," Prompt. Parv.; and accordingly understood to denote barred up, so that no fruit can issue, sterile (Tooke, Richardson)—e.g. when the Lord "fast closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech" (Gen. xx. 18), He rendered them "barren." The older forms are 'baryne' (Prompt. Parv. 1440), 'bareyn' (Wycliffe, Gen. xxv. 21), derived from Norman-French baraine.

Terre ert idunques veine de tut en tut baraine.—Philip de Thaur, Livre des Creatures (12th cent.) l. 848, ed. Wright).

Old Fr. baraigne. In 1 Samuel, where Hannah, whose womb the Lord had "shut up" (ch. i. v. 5), declares "that the barren hath borne seven" (ch. ii. v. 5), the old Fr. rendering (12th cent.) is "la baraigne plusurs enfantad" (Bartsch, Chrestomathie).

Other forms are old Fr. brehaigne; Wallon, brouhagne, braine; Breton, brehañ (cf. Dut. brueck, barren; Ger. brach, fallow), Bas. Bret. brahen.

He is a gull, who is long in taking roote
In baraine soyle, where can be hnt small fruite.

E. Guilpin, Skialetheia, Epigram 20, 1598.

BARROW-TRAM, a jocular Scotch term for a raw-boned, awkward-looking person (Jamieson). Lieut.-Col. Cunningham thinks that it is a corruption of barathrum, an abyss or devouring gulf—e.g. in Guy Mannering where Meg Merrilies calls Dominie Sampson "you black barrowtram of the kirk," preparatory to the order "gape, sinner, and swallow."

Compare, "Marry, and shall, you barathrum of the shambles."

Massinger, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, iii. 2.

BASE, an old word for a small kind of ordnance (Wright). It would seem to be the same word as berche (also barce), an old French word for "the piece of ordnance called a Base" (Cotgrave), for berce or berse, derived from bercer, berser, meaning to shoot or hit with an arrow, originally to batter with a ram, Lat. berberæ, ververæ. See BASSINETTE.

The names of ancient offensive instruments, it is well known, were commonly transferred to their modern substitutes.

BASE-BORN, illegitimate, seems to have originated in an assumption that bastard meant one of base or low birth, Mid-Eng. bass, Fr. bas; so Welsh basdardd (? a borrowed word), as if from bas, low, and tardd, issue. Fuller has "base child" (Good Thoughts in Bad Times, p. 255, ed. Pickering). So Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, i., 281.

Why bastard? Wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well compact, . .
As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? base, base? King Lear, v. 2.

Bastard, however, old Eng. bast ("bauste, notwedlock," Prompt. Parv., cf. Gael. baos, lust), is either (1) old Fr. filz de bas or bast, son of a pack-saddle, i.e. irregularly begotten, "on the wrong side of the blanket" (Mahn, Scheler), or (2) Icel. bastarðr = bæsingr "one born in a cowhouse," or boose, Icel. báss (Goth. bansts), like hornungr (from horn) a "corner-child," Ger. winkel-kind, one born in some hole or corner (cf. "Ditch-delivered of a drab," Shaks.). See Cleasby and Vigfusson, p. 771.

Out, you base-borne rascall.—Marston, The Malcontent, i. 6 (1604).

Reinold . . . bestowed Antioch on Frederick, base sonne to Frederick the Emperour.—T. Fuller, Holy Warre, p. 168 (1617).

Henry Fitzroy . . confuted their Etymology, who deduced Bastard from the Dutch words boes and art, that is, an abject nature; and verified their deduction, deriving it from besteaerd, that is, the best disposition.—Worthies, vol. i. p. 341.

BASILICOCK, an old corruption of basilisk, Lat. basiliscus, Gk. basiliskos, the kingly or crowned serpent (a translation of uræus, which is from Copt. ouro, a king: Buusen and Rawlinson). It is a fabulous animal, often identified with the cockatrice, which was supposed to kill by a glance of its eye.

"þanne is he [þe enuius] of þe kende of þe baselycoc."—Ayenbite of Inwyt (1340), p. 28 (E. E. T. S. ed.).

The basilicok sleth folk by venime of his sight.—Chaucer, Persones Tale.

It is a basilisk unto mine eye,
Kills me to look on 't.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, act ii. so. 4.

BASSINETTE, a term for an infant's cradle, as if (like the old bassinét, a helmet), a diminutive of Fr. bassin, a basin. It is plainly a corrupted form of berceurette, from berceau, a cradle. This latter word is from bercer, to rock to and fro, to swing like a battering-ram, berbea, another form of Lat. vervea.

BATTER, an old Scottish word for a small cannon, as if that which batters walls (Fr. battre), is also found as bat-tard, from Fr. bâtarde, old Fr. bastarde, a demy cannon (Cotgrave). Cf. BUMPER.

BATTLEDOOR, the light bat with which the shuttlecock is bandied to and fro, is a corrupted form of the Spanish batidor or batador, a striker, or beetle, from batir to beat. Formerly it denoted the beetle used by laundresses in beating and washing linen.

Batyl-doure, or wasshyng betylle.—Prompt. Parv.

Batyl-dore, betyll to bete clothes with.—Palsgrave.

The curious phrase "not to know B from a battledoor," expressive of ignorance or stupidity, meant originally not to know one's letters—the old horn-book resembling a battledoor in shape. The modern card-board which has superseded this is still called a battledoor by some of the Lincolnshire folk, who have the saying, "He does 'nt know his A B C fra a battle-door." (See Peacock, Glossary of Man-ley and Corringham, E. D. S.) Compare Dutch "Abebordtje [i. e. A B-board] a Battledoor, Criscrossrow" (Sewel).

One whose hands are hard as battle doors with clapping at baldness.—Histrion-Mastix (1610), act ii. l. 138.

While he was bliude, the wenche behinde lent him, leyd on the flore,
Many a iole about the nole with a great battil dore.

A Jest How a Sergeaunt wolde lerne to be a Frere, l. 260.

BATTELEMENT, apparently a defence in time of battle, a fortification. Prof. Skeat is no doubt right in regarding it as only another form of Fr. bâtiment, old Fr. bastillement, from old Fr. bastiller, to fortify (whence "bastile"), bastir, to build (Étym. Dict.).

At vch bruggea berfray on basteles wyse (At each bridge a watch-tower on the fortifications appeared).—Alliterative Poems, B. l. 1187 (ed. Morris).

In the same poem we find þe bor3 baytayled alofte (The city fortified aloft), l. 1183, and batelment, l. 1459.

Grape-loaded vines that glow
Beneath the battled tower.

Tennyson, Dream of Fair Women, l. 220.

BEAM, a ray of light, A. Sax. beám, (beámian), has generally been regarded as the same word as beam, A. Sax. beám (Goth. bagms, a tree), (Skeat, Ettmüller), just as "ray" itself (radius) is akin to "rod," Milton's "long-level'd rule of streaming light" (Comus, l. 340).

Benfey identifies it with Sansk. bhâ-ma, light (root bhâ, to shine, to sound), which is probably right. Old Eng. beme, a trumpet (Pricke of Conscience, l. 4677, A. Sax. beám), is nearly related.

BEANS, a slang word for money, has been regarded as a corruption of the French biens, goods, property. However, the analogy of lupini, lupines, used as money on the Latin stage, and ai Lavo, the name given to money by the Fiji Islanders, from its resemblance to the flat round seeds of the Mimosa scandens, shows that the word may well be understood in its natural sense.

Acosta mentions that the Spaniards in the West Indies at one time used cacao-nuts for money.

BEAR COOTE, as if the coot which hawks at bears, is a corruption of Bar-kut, the hunting eagle of Eastern Turkestan, which is trained to fly at wolves, foxes, deer, &c. (Atkinson's Or. and W. Siberia, 493; see Yule, Marco Polo, i. 355). It is spelt "burgoot" in T. E. Gordon's Roof of the World, p. 88.

BEASTIE, a vulgar Anglo-Indian term for a water-carrier, is a corruption of the native Hindustani word bihishtî, "the heavenly man" from bihisht, Paradise.

BEAUFIN, Beefin, Biffin, are various names for a sort of apple peculiar to Norfolk, but which is the original or more correct form is not easily determined. It is said to be called beefin, from its colour resembling that of raw beef! The first spelling would seem to indicate a fruit, beau et fin. But in either case there is a corruption.

BEAVER, the lower part of a helmet, is a corruption of Fr. bavière, due to confusion with "beaver hat" (Skeat, Ety. Dict.).

BECOME, to suit, fit, or set off to advantage, as when a certain dress or colour is said to become one (decere), a distinct word from become, to happen, be-cuman, is the modern form of A. Sax. be-cwēman, from cwēman, to please or profit; compare Ger. bequem, convenient. See COMELY.

Pilatus wolde ȝa ȝam folce ge-cwēman.—S. Mark, xv. 15 (A. Sax. vers.).

BEDRIDDEN: the passive form of this word is puzzling. As it stands it would seem to denote one that was ridden or pressed by his bed, rather than one who lay upon it—the paralytic man as he returned home with his burden, rather than as he came for cure, borne of four. It is the A. Sax. bed-rida, bedrēda, or bedredda, a derivative from ridan, to ride, rest on, or press; and so denotes one who habitually keeps his bed: O. Eng. "bedered-man or woman. Decumbens, clivicus," Prompt. Parv. (cf. bedlawyr, Decumbens, Id.). Similarly, hofrede is one who keeps his house (hof), a sick man. The form bed-rid was probably mistaken for a past partic. and then changed to bed-ridden.

Priest-ridden, may be a modern formation on the same model, as if overmastered by priests, as Sindbad by the old man of the mountain; but really corresponding to an A. Saxon preost-rida, one that rests wholly on his priest. Professor Erle advances the extraordinary notion that bed-rida is for bedrida, past partic. of bedrian! (Philology of the English Tongue, p. 23.)

Seke I was, and bedred lay,
And yhe visite me nouther nyght ne day.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, ab. 1340,
l. 6198 (ed. Morris).

There is an honest man,
That kept an olde woman
Of almes in hyr bed
Liyng dayly beddered.

Doctour Double Ale, l. 338.

Old bedridden palsy.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field, l. 178.

BEEFEATER, a popular designation of the yeomen of the guard on duty at the Tower, has been considered a corruption of Fr. buffetier, one who keeps the buffet. Fr. buffet formerly meant a cupboard of plate, and the collection of plate set forth on a sideboard (Cotgrave); and the chief duty of these yeomen may have been to guard the crown jewels and coronation plate there deposited. There is, however, no such word as buffetier in Cotgrave, and buffeteau, which he does give, means a purloiner of wine.

Though this corruption is quoted by Andresen, M. Müller, Treuch, and others, it is open to grave suspicion, as there is no evidence whatever that these yeomen were ever called buffetiers. Mr. Pegge states, indeed, that the office of carrying up the dishes to the royal table continued to be a branch of their duty up to the time when he wrote, 1791 (Œurialia, p. 31), but he denies that they had anything to do with the buffet.

Sometimes I stand by the beef-eaters, and take the bunz as it passes by me.—The Spectator, No. 625 (1714).

Bathurst is to have the Beef-eaters.—Horace Walpole, Letters, vol. i. p. 176 (1742), ed. Cunningham.

But these gentlemen of the Guard have been noted of old for their predilection for beef.

Hear me you men of strife! you that have bin,
Long time maintain'd by the dull Peoples sin.

At Lyon's, Fnrnifold's, and Clement's Inne!
With huge, o're-comming Mutton, Target-
Cheese,

Beefe, that the queasie stomach'd Guard would please.

Sir William Davenont, Works, fol. 1673, p. 237.

A foreigner, visiting England in 1741, describes the Yeomen of the Guard as follows:—

Une Troupe d'Anglo-Suisses, qu'on nomme Yomen of the Gard, et par derision Roast-beef ou Beef-eaters, c'est à dire Mangeurs de Bœuf, remplissent la Salle des Gardes et en font les fonctions.—Lettres de M. le Baron Biefeld (1763), tom. i. Lett. xxix. (in Scott, British Army, vol. i. p. 530).

Cowley, also, in his poem entitled The Wish, plainly implies that these portly yeomen were notorious for their consumption of beef:—

And chines of beef innumerable send me,
Or from the stomach of the Guard defend me.

Marvell, in his Instructions to a Painter about the Dutch Wars, 1667, has these lines:—

Bold Duncomb next, of the projectors chief,
And old Fitz Harding of the eaters beef.

Those goodly Juments of the guard would fight

(As they eat beef) after six stone a day.

Cartwright, The Ordinary, ii. 1 (1651).

The yeomen are often spoken of as The Guard in ancient documents: Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. i. p. 513. An instance of the early use of the word bee-feater is there quoted from a letter of Prince Rupert's, dated 1645 (pp. 515-516). The large daily allowance of beef which was granted for their table renders the term in its obvious sense quite appropriate (p. 517).

In the old play of Histrion-Mastix (1610), Mavortius dismisses his serving-men with the words—

Begone yee greedy bee-featers; y'are best:
The Callis Cormorants from Dover road
Are not so chargeable as you to feed.

Act iii. l. 99.

BEELD, a N. W. Lincolnshire word for likeness, fac-simile—e.g. "She's the very beeld o' her brother when she's a man's hat on" (Peacock): as it were, build (beeld being "to build") seems to be identical with Dutch beeld = Ger. bild, figure, portrait, likeness.

BEEVES, a Sussex word for bee-hives, whence it is corrupted (Parish, Sussex Glossary).

BEGGER, has generally been regarded from a very early period as being only another form of bagger; the bag which he carried about for the reception of alms or broken victuals being the distinctive mark of the mendicant. So Skinner, Bailey, Richardson, Wedgwood. The Dorset folk say to bag for to beg. Just as pedlar, O. E. pedder, was one that goes about with a ped or panner, and maunder, a begger, one that goes about with a maund, or basket, whence maund, to beg, in Ben Jonson (see Nares, and Sternberg, Northampton Glossary); so begger, it was conceived, came from bag. Compare Ir. pocaire, a begger, from poc, a bag or poke; Gæl. baigeir, a begger, from bag. Wedgwood adduces similar instances of "to beg," being originally to carry a scrip or wallet, from Welsh, Ital., Dan., and Greek. In the Cleveland dialect, "To tak' oop wi' t' begging-pooak," or "begging-poke," is to be reduced to beggary; Fr. être au bissac (Le Roux, Dict. Comique), "solet antiquo bribas portare bisacco" (Rabelais, Pantagruel, iv. 3). Thus the wallet and staff was the standard "round which the Netherland Gueux, glorying in that nickname of Beggars, heroically rallied and prevailed" (Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, iii. 3). Compare also Hit is beggares rihte uorte beren bagge on bac.—Ancren Riwele, p. 168.

Beggars with bagges be whiche brewhouses ben here churches.—Vision of Piers Plowman, x. l. 98, C. (ed. Skeat.)

Bagges and beggyng he bad his folk leuen.—Piers Plowman's Crede, l. 600 (ed. Skeat).

Bidders and beggars faste a-boute eoden, Til heor Bagges and heore Balies weren [bratful] I-crommet.—Vision of P. Plowman, Prol. 41, text A.

That maketh beggares go with bordon and bagges.—Political Songs, p. 150 (Camden Soc.).

I dreame it not the happy life

The needie beggars bug to beare.

Turberville, Sonnettes, 1569.

But what found he in a beggars bag.—Percy's Folio MS. i. 49, note.

An old patch coat the Beggar had one . . . and many a bag about him did wag.—Ibid., p. 14.

Mr. H. Sweet, however, commenting on the word bedecige, to beg, in K. Alfred's version of Gregory's Pastoral care (p. 285, l. 12), thinks that O. Eng. bedecian, bedegian (from biddan, to beg) passed through the stages beggian, beggen, into our modern beg (p. 486, E.E.T.S.). Prof. Skeat adopts this view, remarking that the word was forced out of its true form to suit a popular theory. Diefenbach had already connected it with Goth. bidagva, a begger, bidjan, to ask, Bav. baiggen (Goth. Sprache, i. 294).

BEHIND HAND: this curious idiom, applied to one in arrears with his work or in money matters, seems to be a corruption of Old Eng. behinden, backward (opposed to forward or well towards the front).

He him makeð to ben hinden, of þat he weneð to ben hiforen.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd ser. p. 213 (ed. Morris).

See Oliphant, Old and Mid. Eng. p. 193.

BEHOLDING, a very common perversion of beholden, Old Eng. beholdyn, in old authors.

I came . . . to take my leave of that noble Ladie lane Grey, to whom I was exceeding moch beholdinge.—R. Ascham, Scholemaster, bk. 1. (1570), p. 46 (ed. Arber).

The church of Landaffe was much beholding to him.—Fuller, Worthies, ii. 164 (ed. 1811).

BELFRY, so spelt as if it denoted always the tower where the bells are hung, is the French beffroi, O. Eng. bercfreit, O. Fr. berfroï, beffroit, a watch-tower; M. H. Ger. bercwrît, from bergen (to protect) and frîd (a tower).—Wedgwood, Diez.

At vch brugge a berfray on hasteles wyse.—Alliterative Poems (xiv. cent.), p. 71, l. 1187.

A bewfray that shal have ix fadome of length and two fadome of hrede.—Caxton's Vegecius, sig. 1. 6.

In Lincolnshire a belfry is any shed made of wood and sticks, furze, or straw (Peacock).

The beffroy, in ancient military warfare, was a movable tower of wood, consisting of a succession of stages or storeys, connected by ladders, and diminishing in width gradually from the base. The name was afterwards given to any high tower (Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. ii. p. 170).

Mr. Cosmo Innes holds that the two round towers of Scotland "were used as belfreys, probably before bells were hung in buildings, and when the mode of assembling a congregation was by a hand bell rung from the top of the bell tower."—Scotland in the Mid. Ages, p. 290. It is difficult to suppose that in writing this passage the author did not connect belfreys with bells.

BELLIBONE, an old English word for a lovely woman, is a corruption of the phrase belle et bonne.

Pan may be proud that ever he begot

Such a Bellibone.

Spenser, Shepherds Calender (April).

The fact of woman being sometimes termed man's rib may have favoured the corruption. E. K.'s gloss on the passage is: "A Bellibone, or a bonnibell, homely spoken for a fayre mayde, or Bonilasse."

BELL-KITE, a vulgar name in Scotland for the bald coot, old Scottish beld cytte, of which it is a corruption.

The coot, Welsh cwt-iar, has its name from its short tail, cwt.

BELLYCHEERE, an old word for good living:—

A spender of his patrimony and goods in bellycheere and unthrifite companie.—Nomenclator, 1585.

It is a corruption of an older form, belle-chere, i.e. good cheer.

For God it wote, I wend withouten doute, That he had yeve it me, because of you, To don therwith mine honour and my prow, For cosinage, and eke for belle-chere.

Chaucer, The Shipman's Tale, l. 13336-9 (ed. Tyrwhitt).

Gluttonie mounted on a greedie heare, To belly-cheere and banquetts lends his care.

Sam. Rowlands, The Four Knaves (1611, &c.), p. 117 (Percy Soc. Ed.).

BELLY-BOUND, the name for a certain kind of apple [? in America] is said to be a corruption of belle et bonne (Schele De Vere, Studies in English, p. 205). Cf. Prov. Eng. belliborion, a kind of apple, East (Wright). See BELLIBONE, a fair maiden.

BENJAMIN, "Benjoin, the aromaticall gumme called Benjamin" (Cotgrave), is a corruption of Benzoin, It. belzuino, belquino; Span. benjui, Portg. bejoiin, all from Arabic, libân djâwi ('bân-djâwi') "incense of Java," i.e. of Sumatra, called Java by the Arabs (Dozy, Devic). In the dialect of Wallon de Mons, benjamine is a corruption of balsamine (Sigart, Glossaire Montois).

BENT-WOOD, a north of England word for ivy (hedera helix), is a corruption of Scotch ben-wood, bind-wood; compare BIND-WITH.

BEQUEST, that which is bequeathed, from A. Sax. be-cweðan, to be-quoeth, influenced in form by a false analogy to request, inquest, &c.

BERRY, an old Eng. word for a squall, or sudden storm, is a corruption of perrie (Harrison); "pyry or Storme, Nimbus" (Prompt. Parv.); "pyrry, a storme of wynde, orage," Palsgrave; "Sodain piries," Hall, Chronicle, 17

Hen. VI.; "guscio di vento, a gust or berie or gale of wind," Florio, 1611. "Pirries or great stormes" (Sir T. Elyot, The Governour).

Cròscia d' acqua, a suddaine showre, a storme, a tempest, a blustering, a berry, or flaw of many windes or stormes together.—Florio (1611).

Tourbillon, a gust, flaw, berrie, sudden blast or boisterous tempest of wind.—Cotgrave.

Vent, a gale, flaw, or berrie of wind.—Id. We hoised seall with a lytle pirhe of est wind, and lainsed furthe.—J. Melville, Diary (1586), p. 252 (Wodrow Soc.).

See Pirrie (Nares), Scotch, pirr, a gentle breeze; Icel. byrr, a fair wind; Dan. bör, Swed. bör. Cf. Skeat, Etyim. Dict. s.v. Pirouette.

BERTRAM, the name of a plant, has no connexion with the Christian name of the same sound, but is a corruption of the Lat. pyrethrum, Gk. púrethron, a hot spicy plant, from púr, fire. The same word, by a different process, has been converted into PETER (which see).

BEESEN, used by Chaucer and Spenser in the phrase well-beseen, comely, of good appearance, is a corruption of old Eng. bisen, example, appearance (Dr. R. Morris, Pricke of Conscience, p. 283). See BISON. But query?

Arayd in antique robes downe to the ground,

And sad habiliments right well beseene.

Fairie Queene, I. xii. 5.

Thus lay this pouer in great distresse

A colde and hungry at the gate, . . .

So was he wofully beseene.

Gower, Confessio Amantis, vol. iii. p. 35
(ed. Panli).

Defoe uses beseen for attire, clothes. See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.v.

BEWARE, a cant term used by street showmen for a drink or beverage, is doubtless corrupted from It. bévere (Lat. bibere), many other words of this class having an Italian origin—e.g. nanti, none, It. niente; dinahi, money, It. dinari; casa, house, It. casa; keteva, bad, It. cattivo; vada, look, It. vedere; otter, eight, It. otto; carron, a crown, It. corona. In the "mummers' slang," "all beer, brandy, water, or soup, are beware."—Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, vol. iii. p. 149.

It is the same word as old Eng. "Beuer, drinkinge tyme" (Prompt.

Parv.), Prov. Eng. bever, an afternoon refection (Suffolk). In the argot of Winchester College, beever is an allowance of beer served out in the afternoon, and beever-time the time when it is served out (H. C. Adams, Wykehamica, p. 417).

BEZORS, a Gloucestershire word for the auricula, is a corruption of bear's ears (Lat. ursi auricula), so called from the shape and texture of its leaves.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 40 (E. D. Soc.).

BILBOCATCH, or BIBLER-CATCH, an old name for the game of cup and ball, is a corruption of bilboquet, Fr. billeboquet; boquet seems to be for boquet (the iron of a lance), the projecting point on which the ball (bille) was caught. But cf. Prov. Fr. bilboter, to totter or waver (Sigart, Gloss. Montois).

I am trying to set up the noble game of bilboquet against it [whist].—Horace Walpole, Letters, vol. i. p. 237 (1743).

BILE, the common old Eng. form of boil, an inflamed swelling, and still used by the peasantry both in England (e.g. Lincolnshire, Brogden, Glossary, s.v.) and Ireland, has no connexion with bile (Lat. bilis), as if attributable to derangement of the liver. That there is no real analogy is shown by the cognate words, Icel. bóla, a blain, or blister; also the boss on a shield (a protuberance), Lat. bullā, a bleb or bubble (Ger. beule, a boil; Dutch buile, Swed. bula)—all probably denoting a blister or bubble, the result of ebullition, and so akin to Icel. bullā, Eng. to boil, Lat. (e)bullire. So eczema, a troublesome skin disease, is the Greek ekzēma, a boiling over, a pustule.

Ettmüller gives A. Sax. byle, a blotch or sore.

Buyl, a Bile, boss.

Buyl, a Purse.

Sewel, Dutch Dict. 1708.

Wycliffe has the forms bile, byil, biel, beel (Deut. xxviii. 27, 35; Ex. ix. 9).

His voices passage is with Biles be-layd.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 438 (1621). Byle, Sore, Pustula.—Prompt Parvulorum (c. 1440).

Dyeing houses . . . within are the botches and byles of abomination.—Whetstone, Mirror for Magistrates of Cyties, 1584.

Thou art a byle.

King Lear, ii. 4.

The leaves of Asphodel serue for . . . red and flat biles, gout-rosat, Sauce-fleame, ale-pocks, and such like ulcers in the face.—Holland, Plinies Nat. History, vol. ii. p. 128 (1634) fol.

Bosse, . . . a botch, bile, or plague sore.—Cotgrave.

So A. V. Levit. xiii. 18, 20 (1611).

BILLY, a slang word for stolen metal of any kind (Hotten), is probably a corruption of Fr. billon, bullion.

BILLYARD, an old spelling of billiard, as if it were the yard or rod with which the bille or ball is struck.

Bille, a small bowle, or billyard ball.

Billart, the stick wherewith we touch the ball at billyards.—Cotgrave.

It is from the Fr. billard, originally a curved stick for striking the ball—Low Lat. billardus, from billa = pila, a ball.

BIND-WITH, a popular name for the clematis vitalba. It is difficult to say what connexion, if any, exists between this and the following words, or which, if any, are corrupted words: Scot. bindwood, benwood, ivy; bindweed, benweed, banwede, ragwort; O. Eng. benwytt-tre, benewith tre (Prompt. Parv.), perhaps the wood-bine; Icel. bein-viðir (bone-wood), salix arbuscula; Swed. ben-ved (bone-wood), the wild-cornel; Dan. been-veed (bone-wood), the spindle-tree (euonymus).

BIRDBOLT, the fish gadus lota, is a corruption of barbote (Latham).

So Nares gives turbolt from Witts Recreation, as another form of turbot.

Burbote, or barbote, is Lat. barbata, the bearded fish, like "barbel."

BIRD-CAGE WALK, in St. James's Park, so called as if bird-cages were hung there, is said to be a corruption of bocage walk (Philolog. Soc. Proc. vol. v. p. 139). This is doubtful.

BIRD EAGLES, a Cheshire name for the fruit of the Crategus Oxyantha. Eagles or Agles is the diminutive of hague, the more common name of the haw in Cheshire. [A. Sax. haga.]—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 42.

BISCAKE, a provincial form of "bis-cuit," Fr. bis-cuit (Lat. bis-coct(us), i. e.

dis-coct, literally, twice-cookt; Icel. tví-baka, Ger. zwiebach.

She had biscakes and ale with the Dog's Meat Man.

Ballad of the Dog's Meat Man.

Bis-cates would have supplied a transitional form.

BISHOP'S-LEAVES, a popular name for the plant scrophularia aquatica, arose probably from a misunderstanding of its French appellation, l'herbe du siège, as if siège were used here in its ecclesiastical sense of a bishop's see, instead of its medical—the herb being considered remedial in hæmorrhoidal affections (Prior).

BISHOP'S-WORT, A. Sax. biscop-wyrt, as a name for a plant, seems to have been originally a translation of the Latin hibiscus, which was confounded with Episcopus.

BISON, in the phrase "to be a holy bison"—more correctly spelt in the Cleveland Glossary "a holy bisen," i. e. "a holy show," a gazing-stock, a spectacle—is A. Sax. býsn, býsen, an example; Icel. býsn, a wonder, a strange and portentous thing.

A common menace which the women of Newcastle-upon-Tyne use to each other is, "I'll make a holy byson of you."—Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. i. p. 487 (ed. Bohn).

þe bodys of þe world in þair kynde,
Shewes us for bisens to haf in mynde.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience,
l. 1026 (ab. 1340).

BITTER END, in the modern phrase "To the bitter end" = à outrance, was originally a nautical expression, to the end of the bitter, which is "a turn of a cable about the timbers called bites (or bitts)," Bailey. Probably the same word as bite, or bight, a bend or coil, bought (1 Sam. xxv. 29, marg.), Dut. bogt, Dan. bugt. See Dr. Nicholson in N. and Q., 6th S. III. 26, who quotes from Capt. John Smith, Governor-General of Virginia: "A Bitter is but the turn of a Cable about the Bits, and veere [slacken or pay] it out little by little. And the Bitter's end is that part of the Cable doth stay within board" (Seaman's Grammar, p. 30). But this bitter's end became altered into bitter-end. Adm. Smyth in The Sailor's

Word-Book has "Bitter end. That part of the cable which is abaft the bits, and therefore within board when the ship rides at anchor. . . . And when a chain or rope is paid out to the bitter end no more remains to be let go."

BLACK ART, a literal rendering of the Sp. magia negra, a phrase formed from nigromancia, which is itself a corruption of the Gk. nekromanteia, as if connected with niger, black. Compare It. negromante, nigromante, Span. and Portg. nigromante.

Nygromancy, Nigromancia.—Prompt. Parv. Let's also flee the furious-curious Spell Of those Black-Artists that consult with Hell. J. Sylvester, Works, p. 773 (1621), fol.

See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.v.

BLANCH, an old spelling of blench, to shrink, or flinch, as if to grow pale or white (blanche, Fr. blanc), old Eng. blench, to turn aside (game, &c.), lead astray, deceive; A. Sax. blencan, to make to blink (Skeat, Etym. Dict.). Cf. Icel. blekkja, to impose on.

Latimer has blaunchers for blenchers.

Even now so hath he certayne blaunchers longing to the market, to let and stoppe the light of the Gospel, and to hinder the Kinges proceedings in setting forth the worde and glory of God.—Sermons (1548), p. 23, verso.

Nu a uleih mei eilen þe and maken þe to blenchen [Now a fly may hurt thee and make thee shrink].—Ancren Riwle, p. 276.

Abuten us he is for to blenchen.

Mid alle his mihte he wule us swenchen.

Old Eng. Homilies, 1st ser. p. 55, l. 14.

Saw you not the deare come this way, hee flew downe the wind, and I beleeve you have blancht him.—Lilly, Gallathea, ii. 1.

Here and there wanderers, blanching tales and lies,

Of neither praise nor use.

G. Chapman, Odysseys, xi. 492.

Sylvester has blanch = avoid, omit mentioning.

O! should I blanch the Jewes religious River.

Du Bartas, p. 52.

If my ingratefull Rimes should blanch the story.

Id. p. 54.

BLANCMANGER: the latter part of this word is said to have no connexion with manger, to eat. The old spelling was blanc-mangier, and blanc-mengier, a corruption of ma-en-sire, i.e. "fowl-in-syrup," which is the chief ingredient of the dish in old recipes. Its other names—Blanc Desire (i.e. de sire, "of syrup"), Blanc desorre, Blanc de sorry, Blanc de Surry—are of similar origin.—Kettner, Book of the Table, pp. 211-213. But where is this ma(?)-en-sire to be found?

The Liber Cure Cocorum, 1440 (ed. Morris) gives recipes for Blonke desore (p. 12) and Blanc Maungere of fysshe (p. 19). Minsheu gives (Span. Dict. 1623), Manjar blanco, a white meat made of the breast of a hen, milke, sugar, rice beaten, mixed all together.

BLAZE, a white mark, on the face of an animal, or made on a tree by stripping off a portion of the bark—so spelt as if to denote a bright, flame-like streak—is the same word as Ger. blässe, a white mark (bläss, pale, wan); Swed. bläs, Dan. blis, a face-mark; Prov. Ger. blessen, to mark a tree by removing the bark (Westphalia); Ger. bletzen. Compare Fr. blessier.

They met an old man who led them to a line of trees which had been marked by having a part of the bark cut off; trees so marked are said to be blazed, and the patch thus indicated is called a blaze.—Southey, Life of Wesley, vol. i. p. 74, ed. 1858.

BLAZE, in the phrase "to blaze abroad," to proclaim or make widely known, as if to cause to spread like wild-fire, is properly to blow abroad or trumpet forth, old Eng. blasen, to blare, A. Sax. blësan, Dut. blazen, Icel. blása, Goth. (uf-) blesan, all = to blow (Skeat).

With his blake clarioun

He gan to blasen out a soun.

Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 711.

The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar, ii. 2, l. 31.

That I this man of God his godly armes may blaze.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, I. xi. 7.

He began to publish it much and to blaze abroad the matter.—A. V. S. Mark, i. 45.

Latimer has to blow abroad, and Hall (1550) to blast abroad, = to publish. See Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-book, p. 67.

But when the thing was blazed about the court,

The brute world howling forced them into bonds.

Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

BLAZES, in sundry colloquial comparisons implying vehemently, extremely, in a very high degree, as "drunk as blazes," is said to have been originally blazers, or votaries of S. Blaize or Blasius, in whose honour orgies seem formerly to have been held. "Old Bishop Blaize" is still a public house sign (N. and Q. 6th S. II. 92), and Minshew speaks of "St. Blaze his day [Feb. 3], about Candlemas, when country women goe about and make good cheere, and if they find any of their neighbour women a spinning that day they burne and make a blaze of fire of the distaffe, and thereof called S. Blaze his day (!)." See Brand, Pop. Antiq. i. 51; Chambers, Book of Days, i. 219; N. and Q. 6th S. I. 434. Phrases like a "blazing shame" (= burning) seem to be different. A naval officer turning in after a very wintry watch told his fellows "It was as cold as blazes." De Quincey says of a horse "He went like blazes."

I remember, fifty years since, or more, at one of the Lincoln elections, hearing a man in the crowd say to another, speaking of the preceding night, "We got drunk as Blaizers." I never could make out what he meant. Yesterday I was reading Sir Thomas Wyse's Impressions of Greece, and, speaking of the reverence for St. Blaize in Greece (who is also, as you know, the patron saint of the English woolcombers), and how his feast was observed in the woollen manufactories of the Midland Counties, he says, "Those who took part in the procession were called 'Blaizers,' and the phrase 'as drunk as Blaizers' originated in the convivialities common on those occasions." So good "Bishop and Martyr" Blaize is dishonoured as well as honoured in England, and very probably in Greece.—Life of Richard Waldo Sibthorp, by Rev. J. Fowler, 1880, p. 227.

BLEAR ONE'S EYE, an old phrase for to deceive (Shaks. Taming of Shrew, v. 1, l. 120), is, according to Prof. Skeat = Prov. Swed. blirrä fojr augu, to blur, or dazzle before the eyes (Etym. Dict.).

BLEARY EYE, a cottager's attempt at Blairii, the scientific name for a species of rose first raised by Mr. Blair, of Stamford Hill, near London.—S. R. Hole, Book about Roses, p. 154.

BLESS, an old verb meaning to guard, preserve, must be distinguished from bless, A. Sax. bletsiam, i.e. blið-siam, to make blithe or bliss-ful, with which it has sometimes been confounded. It is old Eng. blessen, blissen, blecen, to preserve, turn aside, lessen; Dut. bleschen, to quench (Morris), for be-leschen, cf. Ger. löschen, to quench, discharge.

From alle ueele he scal blecen us.—Old Eng. Homilies, 1st ser. p. 57, l. 64.

[Aaron] Ran and stod tuen lues and dead, And ðis fier blessede and wið-drog.

Genesis and Exodus, l. 3803 (ah. 1250).

So sorely he her strooke, that thence it glaunst

Adowne her backe, the which it fairly blest From foule mischance.

Spenser, F. Queene, IV. vi. 13.

Their father calls them [Simeon and Levi] "brethren in evil" for it, blesseth his honour from their company, and his soul from their secrecy, Gen. xlix. 6.—T. Adams, The City of Peuce, Works, ii. 322.

Heaven bless us from such landlords.—Country Farmer's Catechism, 1703 [Nares].

Bless, to brandish (Spenser) seems to be akin to Fr. blessor, to wound, slash.

Burning blades about their heades doe blesse.
F. Queene, I. v. 6.

BLINDFOLD seems to have no allusion to the fold (A. Sax. feald) of material that covers or blinds the eyes, but is a corruption of the old Eng. blindfellede, from the verb blindfellen. Ophiant, Old and Mid. Eng., p. 280.

He polede al þuldliche þet me hine blindfellede, hwon his eien weren þus ineschendlac iblinfelled, vor to zïenen þe ancre brihte sihðe of heouene.—Anceren Riwele, p. 106.

He suffered all patiently that men him blindfolded, when his eyes were thus in derision blindfolded to give the anchorite bright sight of heaven.

Buffetes, spotlunge, blindfellunge, þornene crununge.—Id. p. 138.

þe Gywes þat heolde ihesu crist. Muchele schome him dude.

Blyndfellede. and spatten him on. in þen ilke stude.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 45, l. 272.

Blyndefylde, excecatus.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Where the Heber MS. has blyndfellyd. Blyndfellen, or make blynde, excecō.—Id.

Prof. Skeat says blindfellen is for blind-fyllan, to strike blind; Mod. Eng. fell.

BLIND-MAN'S-BUFF seems to be a corruption of blind-man-buck, as "in the Scandinavian Julbock, from which this sport is said to have originated, the principal actor was disguised in the skin of a buck or goat" (Jamieson). The name of the game in German is blinde-Kuh, "blind-cow;" in Scotch, blind-harie, belly-blind, bellie-mantie, Chacke-blynd-man, Jockie-blind-man; in Danish blindebuk. The Promptorium Parvulorum (ab. 1440) gives "Pleyjn, buk hyde, Angulo," which, however, may perhaps be the game of hide and seek. Bough, in Martin Parker's poem entitled Blind Mans Bough, 1641, may be regarded as the transitional form.

The Dorset name is blind-buck-o'-Deävy (Davy's blind buck). In most countries it is an animal, not a person, that is represented as being blind in this game—e.g. in addition to those already mentioned, Portg. cabra ciega, (blind goat), Sp. gallina ciega (blind hen), It. gatta orba (blind cat), mosca cieca (blind fly).—(Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1864, Dorset Glossary, p. 43).

Similarly the game of hide and seek is in the Dorset dialect hidly-buck: cf. hide-fow, Hamlet iv. 2.

He has a natural desire to play at blind-man-buff all his lifetime.—Randolph, Works, p. 394 (1651) ed. Hazlitt.

BLOODY MARS, a popular name for a kind of wheat, is a curious corruption of Fr. Blé de Mars.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 52 (E. D. Soc.)

BLOOMERY, a melting-furnace, a foundry, an Anglicized form of Welsh plymuriæth, lead-work (Garnett, Philolog. Soc. Proc. vol. i. p. 173), from Welsh plwm = Lat. plumbum. But O. Eng. bloma is a lump of metal taken from the ore.

Massa, dað vel bloma.—Wright's Vocabularies (10th cent.), p. 34.

BLOOMING-SALLY, a North of Ireland name for the flowering (Lat.) salix, or willow (Epilobium angustifolium).—Britten and Holland. So Sweet Cicely and Sweet Alison have no connexion with the similar woman's names.

BLOT, in the phrase "to hit a blot," to find out a defect or weak point in anything, is not, as one might suppose, the same word as blotch, a stain or mark on a fair surface, but taken from the game of backgammon, where blot is a man left uncovered, and so liable to be taken—a vulnerable point. Exactly equivalent is Ger. eine blöße treffen: cf. Swed. göra blott, to make a blot, or exposed point. It is the Ger. blöss, Dan. and Swed. blott, Scot. blout, blait, all meaning naked. Vid. Blackley, Word Gossip, p. 84. Cf. Icel. blautr, soft, and so defenceless.

Quarles says that Vengeance

Doth wisely frame

Her backward tables for an after-game:
She gives thee leave to venture many a blot;
And, for her own advantage, hits thee not.
Emblems, Bk. iv. 4 (1635).

BLUE AS A RAZOR, a proverbial expression, which Bailey explains to be for blue as azure (Dictionary, s.v.).

BLUE-BOTTLE: Dr. Adams believes that bottle in this word for a fly is a diminutive of bot, a grub or maggot (Gael. botus;—? from its producing these)—O. Eng. Wor-bottles being found for wor-bots.—Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1859, p. 226.

Now, blue-bottle? what flutter you for, sea-pie!—Webster, Northward Ho, i. 3.

BLUE-MANGE, a vulgar Scotch corruption of blancmange.

No to count Jeelies and coosturd, and blue-mange.—Noctes Ambrosianæ, vol. i. p. 64.

BLUNDERBUS, which seems to be a later name for the old harquebus, which was fired from a rest fixed in the ground, is not probably (as generally stated) a corruption of Dutch donderbus, Ger. donnerbüchse, but another form of the word blanter-bus. Blanter-bus seems originally to have been plantier-bus, a derivative doubtless of Lat. plantare, Fr. planter, It. piantare, denoting the firearm that is planted or fixed on a rest before being discharged. Blunjiærd is a Scotch word for an old gun.

King James, in 1617, granted the gunmakers a charter empowering them to prove all arms—"harquesbuse (plantier-busse, alias blanter-busse), and musquetoon, and every calliver, musquet, carbine," &c.—Original Ordnance Accounts, quoted by Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. i. p. 405.

I do believe the word is corrupted, for I guess it is a German term, and should be Donnerbüchse, and that is thundering guns; Donner signifying thunder, and Büchse a gun.—Sir James Turner, Pallas Armata, p. 173 (1683).

Sir S. D. Scott, strangely enough, adopts this later account, explaining blunder in the old sense of stupefying or confounding.—(British Army, vol. ii. p. 303.)

BLUNT, money (cant), is said to be from the French blond, used in the sense of silver; so “browns” for halfpence, and “wyn,” a very old cant term for a penny = Welsh gwyn (white), a silver coin. “Blank,” an old Eng. word for a kind of base silver money, is from the French blanc, white—“monnoye blanche, white money, coyne of brasse or copper silvered over:” Cotgrave. “3 blanckes is a shilling:” The Post of the World, 1576, p. 86 (in Nares).

BLUSH, in the phrase “at the first blush,” is a distinct word from blush, to be suffused with redness, being the old Eng. blusch, look, view, glance. Thus, when Campion, in his Historie of Ireland, 1571, speaks of “A man of straw that at a blush seemeth to carry some proportion” (Reprint, p. 167), he means at a glance, at first sight. This b-lush is, perhaps, related to A. Sax. lucian, to look; Gk. leusso, to behold; as b-lush, A. Sax. blyscan, to redden, Dut. blosc, are to Dan. blusse, to blaze; Lat. lucere, Icel. lysa—both being traceable to the Sansk. root ruch, to shine (Benfey).

A good instance is this concerning Lot’s wife:—

Bot þe balleful burde, þat neuer bode keped,
Blusched by-hynden her bak, þat bale forto herkken.

Alliterative Poems, p. 65, l. 980 (ed. Morris).

þenne com Ihesu crist: so cler in him seluen,
after þe furste blusch: we ne miȝte him biholden.

Joseph of Arimathie, ab. 1350, l. 656
(E.E.T.S. ed.).

Thou durst not blushe once backe for better or worse,

but drew thee downe full in that deepe hell.

Death and Liffe, Percy Folio MS. vol. iiii.
p. 72, l. 388.

Methinks, at a blush, thou shouldest be one of my occupation.—Lilly, Gallathea, ii. 3 (vol. i. p. 234, ed. Fairholt).

A “Contemporary Review”-er lately (Dec. 1878) singled out for remark the following sentence: “In the garden lay a dead Jackal, which, at the first blush, I took to be a fox,” from a book entitled West and East, and affixed a sic! to the word blush, as if to say, “Utterly incredible as it may appear, it actually stands so!” Evidently he did not know that blush means a look or glance.

BOAR THISTLE, a widely-spread popular name for the carduus lanceolatus, is a corruption of Bur Thistle.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 54 (E. D. Soc.)

Similarly, bores is a Somersetshire word for burs (Id. p. 58).

BOARD, TO, a vessel, so spelt as if the original conception was to go on board and take possession of the deck, whereas it meant at first simply to come alongside, Fr. aborder, “to approach, accoast, abboard; board, or lay aboard; come, or draw near unto; also to arrive, or land at:” Cotgrave. Fr. bord, Icel. borð, a margin or border, esp. the side of a ship (e.g. leggja borð við borð, to lay a ship alongside of another so as to board it); O. Eng. to boord = to approach, address (Spenser, Lillie). “Board,” a plank, is, however, a word nearly akin. Cf. “accost,” Fr. costoyer, “to accoast, side, abboard, to be by the side of:” Cotgrave (ad costam). “Lapland . . . so much as accosts the sea” (Fuller, Worthies, i. 257).

Spenser speaks of the river

Newre whose waters gray

By faire Kilkenny and Rosseponté boord
[i.e. flow by the side of].—Faerie Queene, IV. xi. 43.

They both yfere

Forth passed on their way in fayre accord,
Till him the Prince with gentle court did
bord [= accost].

Id. II. ix. 2.

Affect in things about thee cleanliness
That all may gladly boord thee, as a flowre.
Geo. Herbert, The Church-Porch.

Mrs. Page. Unless he know some strain in me . . . he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. “Boarding,” call you it? I’ll be sure to keep him above deck.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor,
ii. 1, 94.

BODKIN, an old word for a species of rich cloth, a tissue of silk and gold, is a corruption of baudkin (Gascoigne), or baudequin, Fr. baldaquin, Sp. baldaquino, It. baldacchino, from Baldach, Bagdad, where it was manufactured.

The Icelanders corrupted the word into Baldrrsskinn, i.e. "Balder's skin."

The better sort have vestes polymita garments of party-coloured silks; some being Satten, some Gold and Silver Chamlets, and some of Bodkin and rich cloth of gold, figured.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, p. 313 (1665).

At this day [Bagdad] is called Valdac or Baldach.—Id. p. 242.

He hanged all the walls of the gallery . . . with riche clothe of bodkin of divers colours.—Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, Wordsworth, Eccles Biog., vol. i. p. 447.

BOG-BEAN, a popular name for menyanthes trifoliata. Notwithstanding its French synonym, trèfle des marais, Dr. Prior holds it to be a corruption of the older forms buck-bean or buckes-beane.

BOLT-SPRIT, a frequent spelling of bow-sprit (Bailey, Richardson), the sprit or spar projecting from the bow of a ship; Dutch boeg-spriet, Dan. bug-spryd, as if one straight as a bolt or arrow. The French have corrupted the word into beau-spré.

Kennett explains bolt-sprit as the sprit or mast that bolts out (1695): Eng. Dialect Soc., B. 18.

BOND-GRACE, an old name for a hanging border or curtain attached to a bonnet or other head-dress to shade the complexion from the sun, is a corruption of the older word bongrace, Fr. bonne-grace.

You think me a very desperate man . . . for coming near so bright a sun as you are without a parasol, umbrella, or a bondgrace.—Sir Wm. Davenant, The Man's the Master (1669).

Bonne-grace. The uppermost flap of the down-hanging taile of a French-hood; (whence belike our Boongrace).—Cotgrave.

The attire of her head, her carole, her borders, her peruke of hair, her bon-grace and chaplet.—Holland, Trans. of Pliny.

The Nomenclator, 1585, defines umbella to be a bone-grace.

BONE-FIRE, an old spelling of bonfire, from a belief that it was made of bones.

Baldória, a great bonefire or feude ioy.—Florio.

The word is still vulgarly pronounced so in Ireland, and probably elsewhere.

Some deduce it from fires made of bone, relating it to the burning of martyrs, first fashionable in England in the reign of King Henry the Fourth. But others derive the word (more truly in my mind) from Boon, that is good and Fires; whether good be taken for merry and cheerfull, such fires being always made on welcome occasions.—Fuller, Good Thoughts in Bad Times, p. 181 (ed. Pickering).

Drayton's spelling is boon-fire (Polyolbion, 1622, song 27), and so Fuller, Mixt Contemplations, 1660, Part i. xvi. 26.

In worshipp of Saint Iohann, the people wake at home, and make three maner of fyres: oone is clene bones, and noo woode, and that is called a bone-fyre; another is clene woode, and no bones, and that is called a woode fyre, for people to sit and wake thereby; the thirde is made of woode and bones, and it is called Saynt Iohannys fyre. . . . Wyse clerkes knoweth well that dragons hate nothing more than the stench of brennyng bones, and therefore they gaderyd as many as they mighte fynde and brent them; and so with the stanche thereof they drove away the dragons, and so they were brought out of greete dysease.—Old Homily, quoted in Hampson's Med. Kalendarium, vol. i. p. 303.

A slightly different version of this quotation is given in Brand's Popular Antiquities, vol. i. p. 299 (ed. Bohn).

The best bone-fire of all is to have our hearts kindled with love to God.—Richard Sibbes, Works (ed. Nichol), vol. iii. p. 198.

Stowe gives the same account as Fuller:—

These were called bonfires, as well of good amity amongst neighbours, that, being before at controversy, were there by the labour of others reconciled, and made of bitter enemies loving friends; as also for the virtue that a great fire bath to purge the infection of the air.—Survey of London, p. 307, ed. 1754.

Mr. Fleay observes:—

The singular words "everlasting bonfire" [in Macbeth, ii. 3] have been misunderstood by the commentators. A bonfire at that date is invariably given in the Latin Dictionaries as equivalent to pyra or rogus; it was the fire for consuming the human body after death: and the hell-fire differed from the earth-fire only in being everlasting.—Shakespeare Manual, p. 247.

Whether the word be spelt bone-fire, as if from bone, or, as at present, bonfire, as if a fire made on the receipt of good (Fr. bon) news (Skinner, Johnson), it has superseded A. Sax. bæl-fyr [? Scot. bane-fire], from bæl, a burning, a funeral pile: cf. Icel. bál, a flame, a funeral pile; Scot. bale, a beacon-fagot. So Belltaine, the Irish name for the 1st of May, according to Cormac's Glossary, is bil-tene, the goodly fire then made by the Druids (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, p. 193); as if from bil, good, and tene, a fire. Bil here is probably akin to bæl, bál. The A. Sax. bæl-blosse still survives in the Cleveland bally-bleeze, a bon-fire.

Mr. Wedgwood identifies the first part of the word with Dan. baun, a beacon, comparing Welsh bán, high, lofty, whence ban-fjagl, a bonfire.

BONE-SHAVE, a provincial word for the soietica, is a corruption of the old Eng. "bonschawe, sekenesse, Tessedo, Sciasis:" Prompt. Parvulorum. Other forms are boneshawe, boonschaw, baneschawe, perhaps from A. Sax. bán and sceorfa (Way).

BONNY-CLABBER—an Anglo-Irish word for thickened milk or buttermilk, used by Swift, Jonson, and others—is from the Irish baine, bainne, milk; and claba, thick. Ford spells it bonny-clabbore, and Harington (Epigrams, 1633) bonny-clabo.

It is against my freehold, my inheritance, . . .
To drink such balderdash or bonnyclabber.

Jonson, The New Inn, act. i. sc. 1.

O Marafastot shamrocks are no meat,
Nor bonny clabbo, nor green water-cresses.
The Famous History of Captain Thos.
Stukeley, l. 814 (1605).

Boon, in such phrases as "to ask a boon," is derived from Icel. bón (A. Sax. bene, bén), a prayer or petition: with a collateral reference in popular etymology to boon (as in boon companion, = Fr. bon compagnon), Fr. bon, a good thing, a benefit.

Bone or graunte of prayer, Precarium.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

And yif ye shulde at god aske yow a bone.
—The Babees Book, p. 5, l. 117 (E. E. T. S.).

What is good for a bootless bene?

Wordsworth, Works, vol. v.
p. 52, ed. 1837.

Howell, in his Letters, has boon voyage for Fr. bon voyage.

BOOT AND SADDLE, a military term, the signal to cavalry for mounting, is explained by Mr. Wedgwood to be a corruption of Fr. boute-selle, put on saddle, one half the expression being adopted bodily, and the other translated (Philolog. Trans. 1855, p. 70).

Boute-selle, the word for horsemen to prepare themselves to horse.

Bouter selle, to clap a saddle on a horse's back.—Cotgrave.

Stand to your horses! It's time to begin:
Boots and Saddles! the pickets are in!

G. J. Whyte-Melville, Songs and Verses,
p. 154 (5th ed.).

BOOTS, or Bouts, quoted by Dr. Prior as a popular name for the marsh marigold, is a corruption from the French name boutons d'or, "golden buds."

Boots, in the old phrase, "Such a man is got in his boots"—i.e. he is very drunk, or has been at a drinking-bout: Kennett, 1695 (E. Dialect. Soc. B. 18)—seems to be corrupted from bouts, as we still say, "He is in his cups."

BOOZING-KEN, an old slang term for a beer-shop or public-house, as if a drinking-house, from the old verb booze, bouse, to drink deeply; Dut. buyzen, buyzen, to tipple, which Wedgwood deduces from buyse (Scot. boss, old Fr. bous, bout), a jar or flagon. Cf. old Eng. bous, drink.

Wilt thou stoop to their puddle waters
. . . bousing, carding, dicing, whoring, &c.—
Sam. Ward, Life of Faith, ch. viii. (1636).

The word was introduced by the Gypsies, and is identically the Hindustani būze-khāna, i.e. "beer-shop," from būzā, beer (Duncan Forbes).

In Jonson's Masque of The Metamorphosed Gipsies, 1621, a gipsy says: Captain, if ever at the Bowzing Ken
You have in draughts of Darby drill'd your men . . .

Now lend your ear hut to the Patrico.

My doxy stays for me in a bousing ken.

The Roaring Girl (1611), Old Plays, vol. vi. p. 90 (ed. 1825).

As Tom, or Tib, or Jack, or Jill,

When they at bousing ken do swill.

Brome, The Merry Beggars, 1652
(O.P. x. 315).

Bowzing-can, a drinking cup, occurs in dignified poetry (Faerie Queene, I. iv. 22).

To crowne the bousing kan from day to night.—G. Fletcher, Christ's Victorie on Earth, 52.

BOSE-COLE, an old name for a species of cabbage, is perhaps a corruption of broccoli; but compare Dut. boerekool, peasant cabbage (Prior).

BOSH BUTTER—a name given to a spurious imitation of the genuine commodity (sometimes called Butterine), lately introduced into the London market from Holland, as if from bosh! an exclamation of contempt—is an Anglicized form of Dutch Bossche Boter, from Hertogenbosch (Fr. Bois-le-Duc), the place where the stuff was manufactured. So Bosjesman, a man from the Bush (Dut. bosch, boschje).

Boss, used by Bp. John King for an elephant's trunk, as if the same word as boss, a protuberance; Fr. bosse, seems to be merely the accented syllable of proboscis.

Curtius writeth of the elephant that he taketh an armed man with his hand. . . He meaneth the boss of the elephant, which he useth as men their hands.—Lectures on Jonah, 1594, p. 238 (ed. Grosart).

BOTHERY-THREE, a Yorkshire name for the elder (sambucus nigra)—i. e. bottery-tree; bottery being for bor-tree (pronounced bortery) or bore-tree, perhaps with reference to the bored or hollow appearance of the pithless wood. So bottery-tree = bore-tree tree. Compare beem-tree = tree-tree, and ASS-PARSLEY, above.

BOTTLE, in the proverbial saying, "To look for a needle in a bottle of hay," is old Eng. botel, a bundle, from Fr. botte.

Botelle of hey, Fenifascis.—Prompt. Parv. Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay.—Midsummer N. Dream, iv. 1, l. 37. Tailor. What dowry has she [a mare]! Daugh. Some two hundred bottles, And twenty strike of oates.

The Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 2, l. 64.

BOTTOM, in the old phrase, "to be in the same bottom," i. e. to have a community of interests, is the A. Sax. bytme, a ship (Ettmüller, 304, al. bytne), connected with byt, butt, boat. Hence bottomry, the insurance of a ship.

We venture in the same bottom that all good men of all nations have done before us.—Bp. Bull, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 216.

BOTTOM, an old word for a cotton ball, still in provincial use (see Peacock, Lincolnshire Glossary), originally the spool or knob of wood on which it was wound, is another form of button, Old Eng. and O. Fr. boton (Fr. bouton), Welsh botwm, a boss. Hence the name of Bottom the weaver.

Botme of threde (al. botym).

Botwn, Boto, fibula, nodulus.

Prompt Parv.

George Herbert, writing to his mother (1622) says:—

Happy is he whose bottom is wound up, and laid ready for work in the New Jerusalem.—I. Wolton, Lives, p. 304 (ed. 1858).

BOUND, in such expressions as "outward bound," "homeward bound" (generally applied to vessels), "I am bound for London," is a corruption of the old Eng. word boun, bowne, boon, or bone, meaning, prepared, equipped, or ready (for a journey or enterprise), Icel. búinn, past partic. of búa, to make ready, which is akin to Ger. bauen (to till).

Brother, I am readye bowne,

Hye that we were at the towne.

Chester Mysteries (Shaks. Soc.), vol. ii. p. 7.

Sir, we bene heare all and some,

As boulede men, readye bonne

To drive your enemyes all downe.

Id. p. 87.

BOURN, a boundary (Hamlet, iii. 1), is a corruption of old Fr. bonne (Fr. borne), a boun-d-ary, assimilated to bourn, a (limitary) stream.

BOWER, an American term for the highest card in the game of Euchre, is the German bauer or peasant, corresponding to our knave (Tylor).

BOWER, originally meaning a chamber, N. Eng. boor, A. Sax. búr, Icel. búr, Ger. bauer, owes its modern signification of an arbour made by interlacing branches to a supposed connection with bough, A. Sax. boh and bog.

BOWYER'S MUSTARD, as if the Bowmaker's Mustard, an old name for the plant Thlaspi arvense, is a corruption of Bowers-, Bowres-, or Boor's-Mustard, from Dutch Bauren-senfe. Compare its name Churl's Mustard (Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 58).

Box, the front seat of a coach, as if originally the chest or receptacle in which parcels were stowed away, is the same word as Ger. bock, Dan. buk, denoting (1) a buck or he-goat, (2) a trestle or support on which anything rests, (3) a coach-box in particular. Wedgwood compares Polish koziel (1) a buck, (2) a coach-box, kozly, a trestle. For similar transitions of meaning see my Wordhunter's Note-Book, pp. 230 seq.

Box, in the phrase "to box the compass," i.e. to go round the points naming them in their proper order, has not been explained. It has probably nothing to do with box, the old name for the case of the compass. It may have been borrowed from the Spanish mariners, and be the same as the nautical word to box = to sail around, Sp. boxar, boxear (Stevens, 1706); cf. Sp. boxo, roundness, compass, circuit.

BOXAGE, used by Evelyn for shrubbery, wooded land, is apparently a corrupt form of boscage. See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.v.

BRAN-NEW, an incorrect spelling of brand-new, i.e. "fire new," fresh from the forge, just made. Shakespeare has the expression fire-new. Burns spells it brent new, i.e. burnt new.

Naie cotillon brent new frae France.

Tam O'Shanter (Globe ed. p. 93).

Compare flum-new (W. Cornwall Glossary, E.D.S.); span-new (Havelok the Dane), O. Norse spán-nýr, i.e. "chip-new," fresh from the carpenter's bench (A. Sax. spón), and Swed. spillerny, "splinter-new."

BRASS, a vulgar and colloquial term for impudence, effrontery, is generally regarded as a figurative usage derived from the composite metal so called, just as we speak of "a brazen hussy," a "face of brass," i.e. hard, shameless, unblushing. The word occurs in the Cleveland dialect, where Mr. Atkinson identifies it with the old Norse brass of the same meaning (not in Cleasby). Compare Icel. brasta, to bluster, Ger. brasten, Dan. braske, to boast, brag, Ir. bras, a lie, brasa, boasting, brasaire, a liar. North uses it in his Evamen, see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary.

BRAWN, a West of England word for the smut in wheat, is a corruption or contraction of old Eng. brancorn, which has the same meaning (Ustilago segetum), i.e. bren-corn, what burns or blasts the corn.

BREAD-STITCH, in Goldsmith, an incorrect form of braid-stitch. Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary.

BREAK, in the expression "to break in a horse," as if to crush his spirit, has probably no direct connexion with break (= frangere).

Brake is a bit for horses, also a wooden frame to confine their feet. Compare Icel. brák, a tanner's implement for rubbing leather, Dutch braake, a twitch to hold an animal by the nose. A brake to check the motion of a carriage is the same word. The correct form, therefore, would be "to brake."

BREAST-SUMMER, an architectural term for a beam employed like a lintel to support the front of a building, is a corruption of bressumer (Glossary of Architecture, Parker), where bress seems to be for brace, as in Scotch bress is another form of brace, a chimney-piece, and -sumer, is O. Eng. somer, a beam.

Brest Summers, are the pieces in the outward part of any building, and in the middle floors, into which the girders are framed.—Bailey.

Contrefrontail, . . . a hannse or breast summer.—Cotgrave.

BRED, in the expression "a well-bred man," is probably not the past participle of the verb to breed (A. Sax. brédan), as if gentle birth, not manners, maketh man, but akin to Icel. bragr, manners, fashion (= bragr, habit of life, manner), also look, expression, whence old Eng. bread, appearance (Bailey), and Prov. Eng. "to braid of a person," meaning to resemble him, have his appearance or the trick of his favour, Scotch to breed, as "ye breed o' the gowk, ye have ne'er a rime but ane" (= Icel. bregðr). So when Diana protests in All's Well that Ends Well, act iv. sc. 2:—

Since Frenchmen are so braid,

Marry that will, I live and die a maid.

The meaning seems to be that which Mr. Wedgwood assigns to it, "Since Frenchmen are so mannered." Cf. A. Sax. brédian, to adorn, brægd, bregd, a device, &c., Ettmüller, 318. In the same way "a well-bred person" is one, not necessarily well born, but well-mannered. Breeding was formerly used for the education or bringing up of a child, and bred for educated.

My eldest son George was bred at Oxford.—Vicar of Wakefield, ch. i.

Thanks to my friends, who took care of my breeding,
And taught me betimes to love working and reading.

Dr. Watts, The Sluggard.

You wer to be sent to my Ladye Dromond, your Cousine germaine . . . to be brede in the Protestant religion . . . I resolved to go to France, wher your grandmother had retired herself . . . with the intention to work upon her to send for you, and bread you with herself in France.—A breiffe narration of the services done to Three Noble Ladyes by Gilbert Blakhall. See Presbytery Book of Strathbogie,
p. xxi (Spalding Club).

Perhaps the most that should be said is that bred here has been assimilated to, or confounded with, braid (braid-ed), mannered.

BREECH, a verb formerly in use meaning to flog, as if to strike on that portion of the body so named, is, according to Mr. Wedgwood (Etymological Dict. s. v.), the same word as Prov.
Ger. britschen, pritschen, to strike with a flat board (in Low Dutch called a britze); Dutch bridsen, Swiss britschen, to smack.

I view the prince with Aristarchus' eyes,
Whose looks were as a breaching to a boy.

Marlowe, Edward the Second (p. 218,
ed. Dyce).

Had not a courteous serving-man convey'd me away while he went to fetch whips, I think in my conscience . . . he would have breech'd me.—R. Taylor, The Hog hath Last His Pearl (O. Plays, vi. 369, ed. 1825).

BREECHES, so spelt as if denoting clothing for the breech, that part of the body where its continuity is broken (! as if breach). Compare breche, an old word for the hinder part of a deer (Wright).

be water dude vorth hys kunde, & waxe euere vaste . . .
pat yt watte hys bruch al aboute.

Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle,
p. 322 (ed. 1810).

Here's one would be a flea (jest comical!)
Another, his sweet ladies verdingall,
To clip her tender breech.

Marston, Works, vol. iii. p. 290
(ed. Halliwell).

This has actually been regarded as the true etymology of the word by Richardson and others. It is really the same as North Eng. brecks, A. Sax.
bréc, bræc, plural of bróc, Icel. brækkr,
plu. of brók; old Fr. bragues, braies, Span. bragas, Breton bragez, Welsh
brycan, Gaelic brìogis, Lat. braccæ, trowsers; Irish brócc (also brog), a shos, whence Anglo-Irish brogue (Whitley Stokes, Irish Glosses, p. 119). Compare the two meanings of Fr. chausse, and our hose.

Breeches, braccæ, &c., are of Celtic origin, being identical with the Gaelic
bræcan, tartan, from breac, party-coloured, variegated, describing the plaid or striped cloth worn from time immemorial by the Celts (Cleasby, *Icel.
Dict.* s. v. Brók). Cf. "Versicolore sagulo, bracas, tegmen barbarum indutus," Tac. Hist. 2, 20; "bracæ vir-gatæ," Propert. iv. 10, 43.

It may be observed that breeches is really a double plural. For the Celtic broc or brog, having been adopted into old English, was treated as a native word, and had its plural formed by internal vowel change. Just as O. Eng.
fót, bóc, gós become in the plural fēt (feet), béc (books), gés (geese), so bróc became bréc (breek); and accordingly we find braccæ in the Promptorium Patru-lorum (c. 1440) defined in English by "breche or breke;" cf. "breche of hosen, braies," Palsgrave (1530). Wy-cliffe has bregirdle, breeches-band (Jer. xiii. 1, 4, 6), for breke-girdle.

Thou breech of cloth, thou weede of lowlines,
Thou hast not feared to mayntayne thy cause.

Thynne, Debate between Pride & Lowliness,
p. 63 (Shaks. Soc.).

BRIAR-ROOT PIPES are really made from the roots of the white heath, Fr.
bruyère, of which briar is a corruption,
being imported chiefly from Corsica.
Bruyère, Milan brughiera, Low Lat.
bruurium, are akin to Breton brug, heath, Welsh brwg. Briar is A. Sax.
brér.

BRICK, a slang term of approval, as,
"He is a regular brick," a thoroughly good fellow. Some wonderful nonsense about this word is vented in The Slang Dictionary (Hotten), and Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable.

It is, perhaps, a survival of A. Sax.
brýce, useful, profitable, and so good,
which is the philological counterpart of Lat. frugi, worthy, honest. Bryce is from brúcan, to enjoy or profit, whence
O. Eng. brouke, Scot. bruick, to use, enjoy (Mod. Eng. to brook, cf. Ger.
brauchen), corresponding to Lat. frug in fru(g)or, fructus, fruges. Compare also A. Sax. brice, use, old Eng. briche (Old Eng. Miscellany, E.E.T.S. p. 12), Goth. bruks. An amusing coincidence is presented by Heb. tób, good, and Arab. tob, a brick, Coptic and Egyptian tóbi.

BRICK-WALL, a corruption of bricoll or bricole, a term at tennis.

Bricole, a brick-wall: a side stroake at tennis, wherein the ball goes not right forward, but hits one of the wals of the court, and thence bounds towards the adverse party. Bricoler, to toss or strike a ball sidewaies, to give it a brick-wall.—Cotgrave.

What are these ships but tennis balls for the wind to play withal? tost from one wave to another; . . . sometimes brick-wal'd against a rocke.—Marston, Eastward Hoe, ii. 1, 1605 (vol. iii. p. 24, ed. Halliwell).

Heer, th' Enginer begins his Ram to reare, . . . Bends heer his Bricol, there his boysterous Bowe, Brings heer his Fly-bridge, there his batt'ring Crowe.

J. Sylvester, Works, p. 976 (1621).

These words are from the Mid. H. German bröchel, a "breaker." Compare It. bricola, Sp. brigola, Low Lat. bricola, a catapult.

BRIDAL, so spelt as if it were a similar formation to "espousal," "betrayal," "denial," &c., is corrupted from the old form bride-ale, the ale-drinking or carousal in honour of the bride. Bride-ale is still, in the Cleveland dialect, the name of the draught presented to the wedding party on its return from church.

Harrison, in his Description of England in the time of Elizabeth, rejoices that the Reformation had swept away

. . . idle wakes, guilds, fraternities, church-ales, helpe-ales, and soule-ales, called also dirge-ales, and heathenish rioting at bride-ales.

O. Norse brúð-öl, A. Sax. brýð-eala.

Ale was even used as a synonym for a festival or holiday, as in the Prologue to the Play of Pericles, l. 6, "ember eves and holy ales." In addition to those already mentioned, we find Easter ales, Whitsun ales, Leet ales, Clerk ales, Lamb ales, Midsummer ales, &c. Arval, a funeral feast, old Scand. arföl (inheritance ale), Hampson, Medii Aevi Kalend, vol i. p. 283.

None of these martial, and cloudy, and whining marriages can say that godliness was invited to their Bride-ale.—Henry Smith, Sermons, 1657, p. 23.

A man that's bid to a bride-ale, if he have cake

And drink enough, he need not veer his stake.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, ii. 1.

The Presbyterie Buik of Aberdeen, 1606, speaks of the "intollerable abominations that falls out at the penny brydellis, speciallie of drunkennes and murder" (Dalzell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland, p. 293).

BRIDE-GROOM is a corruption of bride-gome, old Eng. bridgome, A. Sax. brýð-guma, i.e. the bride's man, from a confusion of gome, a man (Goth. guma, Lat. homo), with grome, a groom, a servant, O. Fr. gromme.

Ffor it es bryde, and God es brydegome.—Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 8809, ah. 1340.

And þe wyse maydines . . . yeden in mid þe bredgome to þe bredale.—Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 233 (1340).

BRIEF, a provincial word, meaning prevalent, frequent, plentiful, is probably a corruption of rife.

"Wipers are wery brief" (vipers are very plentiful), Pegge, Alphabet of Kenticisms, 1736. I have heard a County Wicklow woman remark: "The small-pox, I hear, sir, is very brief in Dublin." A use of the word in 1730 is quoted in Planché's Corner of Kent, p. 171, and see Sternberg, Northampton Glossary, s. v.

BRIMSTONE, a corrupted form of the old Eng. bren-stone or brym-stone, i.e. "burn-stone," from O. Eng. brenne, A. Sax. bryne, a burning, byrnan, to burn; Icel. brennistein.

The word is also found as brunstan (Northumbrian Psalter, 1250); brinstan in the Cursor Mundi (14th century):—

Our lauerd raiud o þam o-nan,

Dun o lift, fire and brinstan.

l. 2841, Cotton, MS.;

where the other versions have brimstone and brimston; brumston in the Debate between Body and Soul (xiii. century):—

Bothe pich and brumston, men my3te fif mile have the smel.

Mapes, Poems (Camden Soc.), p. 339.

Wycliffe (1389) has brenstoon, brymstoon, brunston, and brymstoon.

BROOK-LIME, a popular name for the plant Veronica Beccabunga, seems to be a corruption of the older names

broklembe, broklempe, broclempe (whatever may be the origin of these), as if it was so called from growing in the lime or mud (Lat. limus) of brooks. Markham (1637) spells the word brockellhempe, as if = "brittle-hemp" (English Housewife's Household Physicke, p. 23).

Mr. Cockayne says broclempe is for broclemke, and lemke = Icel. lemilki, Dan. lemmike [?], old Eng. hleomoc in Leechdoms.

BROOK-TONGUE, an old name for the hemlock (cicuta virosa), is a corruption of old Eng. brocþung.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 66 (E. D. Soc.).

BROTH, in the Anglo-Irish expression, "the broth of a boy," is probably from the Irish bruth, power, strength, heat, adjectivally, pure, unalloyed; which is akin to bruithim, to boil, bruith, broth, boiling, broth. Cf. brigh, essence, power, strength, Eng. "brew;" It. brío, spirit.

BROTHERLINGE, an old word for a nincompoop, as if a younger brother, is a corrupted form of britheling, bretheling, a rascal, or worthless fellow, connected with O. Eng. brothel, a blackguard.

Quod Achab thanne: There is one,
A brothel, which Micheas hight.
Gower, Conf. Amantis, iii. 173
(ed. Pauli).

Aþelyng, bryþeling,/ Lond wip-vten lawe.
Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 185, l. 12.

Ete þi mete by smalle morselles;
Fylle not thy mouth as done brothellis.
The Babees Book, ab. 1480, p. 18
(E.E.T.S.).

Thé said Moyne their young King was but a Brotherlinge, & said if Vortiger King were,
he wold bring them out of care.
Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 426, l. 133.

BROWN BESS, a familiar name for the old-fashioned regulation musket.

Bess is the equivalent of -buss in blunder-buss, arque-buss; Ger. büchse, Flemish buis, Low Ger. büsse, Dut. bus, Fr. buse, tube, barrel; and so is equivalent to "Brown barrel."

You should lay brown Bess ower the garden-dike, and send the hail into their brains for them.—Noctes Ambrosiane, vol. i. p. 171.

This is the biæ of the Americo-German lingo of the Breitmann Ballads, "Shoot at dat eagle mit your biæ" (p. 37, ed. 1871). A picture of the old Brown Bess is given by Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. ii. p. 327.

If we had not the cognate words It. busare, bugiare, to perforate, buso, bugio, perforated; O. Sp. buso, a hole (Diez), we should have been tempted to connect Fr. buse, a gun-barrel (cf. busine, a pipe—Cotgrave), with buse, a falcon or buzzard (Ger. buse, Lat. buteo), the names of firearms being most commonly derived from birds.

BROWN-BREAD, bread made with bran, is not improbably a corrupted form of the old word bran-bread.—Skeat, Etym. Dict.

They drew his brown-bread face on pretty gins.
Bp. Corbet, Poems, 1648, p. 211 (ed. 1807).

BROWNGETUS. A poor Irish woman, suffering from bronchitis, always spoke of her complaint as an attack of brown-getus. The form brown-typhus has also been heard, and in Sussex brown-titus.

The German bräune (brown), as a name for the quinsy or croup, is a curious parallel. This disease is said to have been so named from being attended with blackness (see Kilian, s.v. Bruyne).

BROWN STUDY. This somewhat peculiar expression for deep contemplation, total pre-occupation, and absent-mindedness, is one of considerable antiquity. It is supposed to be a perversion of the old Fr. embronc, (1) bent, with head bowed down; (2) sad, pensive, moody, thoughtful. Compare old Span. brincar, to bend; It. brinciare, to stumble, probably from Lat. pronus, through a form pronicare (Diez). Cotgrave gives an old verb, "embroncher, to bow or hold down the neck and head, as one that is stonied . . ., also to hide the face or eyes with hands, a cloth, &c." The French and Provençal embron, thoughtful, was perhaps confounded with embruni, enbrowned, darkened, obscured. But cf. "Si les pensées n'y sont pas tout-à-fait noires, elles y sont au moins gris-brun."—Madame Sevigné, Lettres, tom. iv. p. 9. Compare gris, dull, fuddled.

Le noir dit la fermeté des cœurs,
Gris le travail, et tanne les langueurs;
Par ainsi c'est languer en travail ferme,
Gris, tanné, noir.

Clement Marot, Rondeaux, xliii.

Compare Ger. biester, Swed. bister = (1) brown, "bistre;" (2) gloomy, grim, dismal. Compare also Gk. kalchaimō, (1) to empurple, (2) to be troubled and anxious; porphyrō, (1) to be dark-coloured, (2) ponder, be thoughtful, perplexed (Il. xxi. 551, Od. iv. 427); plērēnes mēlainai, amphimēlainai, black thoughts, painful ruminations.

Lack of company will soon lead a man into a brown study.—Manifest Detection of Use of Dice, &c., 1532, p. 6 (Percy Soc.).

It seems to me (said she) that you are in some brown study what colours you might best wear.—Lyly, Euphues, 1579, p. 80 (ed. Arber).

Another commeth to muze, so soon as hee is set, hee falleth into a brown study, sometimes his mind runnes on his market, sometime on his journey.—Henry Smith, Sermons, 1657, p. 308.

I must be firme to bring him out of his Browne stodie, on this fashion.—The Mariage of Witt and Wisdome, p. 13 (Shaks. Soc. ed.). Faith, this brown study suits not with your black,
Your habit and your thoughts are of two colours.

Ben Jonson, The Case is Altered.

Donner la muse à, to amuse, or put into dumps; to drive into a brown study.—Cotgrave.

Sange-creux, one that's in his dumps, or in a brown study.—Id.

At last breaking out of a brown study, he cried out, Conclusum est contra Munichacos.—Howell, Familiar Letters, bk. iii. 8 (1646).

They live retir'd, and then they doze away their time in drowsiness and brown studies.—Norris, Miscellanies, 1678, p. 126 (ed 8th).

He often puts me into a brown study how to answer him.—The Spectator, No. 286 (1711-12).

A zeem'd in a brown stiddy.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 4.

Unconnected, perhaps, are Ir. bron, mourning, grief; bronach, sad, sorrowful.

BUBBLE, to cheat, corresponds both in form and meaning to Ital. bubolare, to cheat, derived from bubbola, a hoopoe, a bird which in many languages has been selected as a synonym for a fool or simpleton; e.g. Fr. dupe, duppe (whence our "dupe"), Bret. houperik, Polish dudek, = (1) a hoopoe, (2) a simpleton. Thus to bubble is "to gull," or "pigeon," or "woodcockize," or make a goose or booby of one; cf. It. pippionare, Fr. dindonner. The older form of bubbola is pupola, puppula (Florio) for upupula, dim. of Lat. upupa, the hoopoe, so called apparently from its cry, supposed in Greek to be poû, poû (where, where!). Its Persian name is pupu. However, we find in English "Bubble, a bladder in water, also a silly fellow, a cully" (Bailey); (cf. Manx bleb, an inflated pustule, also a fool; and fool itself, from follis, an inflated ball), and bubble, a cheating scheme of speculation, which would seem to show that the word is of native origin.

And so here I am bubbled and choused out of my money.—Murphy, The Citizen, ii. 1.

Hume, a man who has so much conceit as to tell all mankind that they have been bubbled for ages!—Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides, p. 13.

The dustman, bubbled flat, Thinks 'tis for him, and doffs his fan-tailed hat.

Jas. and Hor. Smith, Rejected Addresses, p. 142.

T. L. O. Davies quotes an instance of bubbleable = cheatable, 1669 (Supp. Eng. Glossary).

BUCK-BEAN. } The plant so called,
BUCKES-BEANE } (menyanthes trifoliata), is the Dutch bocks-boonen, German bocksbohne. The latter words, however, are corruptions, it would seem, of scharbock's -boonen or -bohne, "scurvy-bean," the plant being considered a remedy for the scharbock, or scurvy, Lat. scorbut-us (Prior).

BUCKLES, HORSE, a Kentish name for cowslips (primula veris), is probably a corruption of paigles, the E. Anglian name for that plant.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 70 (E. D. Soc.).

BUCK-MAST, the mast or nuts of the beech, A. Sax. bóc, Ger. buche, Swed. bok, Dut. beuke, boeke.

BUCKRAM. This pleonastically masculine word is a corruption of Fr. bougram or bourgrain, Prov. bocaran, boqueran, It. bucherame (apparently from bucherare, to pierce with holes) a coarse, loosely-woven stuff. "Bourgrain, Buckeram," Cotgrave. It has been suggested that Bokharan was the original form, stuff from Bokhara; but this needs confirmation.

BUCKSOME, an old spelling of buxom (bending, pliant, obedient), as if "spirited, or lively as a buck" (vid. Nares, s.v.); old Eng. buhsum, "bow-some," from A. Sax. būgan, to bow.

Vago, lovely-faire, . . . handsome and bucklesome.—Florio, It. Dict.

Bucksome, brisk and jocund.

Kennett, 1695 (E. Dialect Soc. B. 18).

Shee now begins to grow bucksome as a lightning before death.—Armin, Nest of Ninnies, p. 5 (Shaks. Soc.).

And if he be til God bousom,
Til endeles blis at þe last to com.

Hampole, Ricke of Conscience, l. 85
(ab. 1340).

Lorde, þou make me to be bouxsome enere mare to þi hyddynges.—Religious Pieces in Prose and Verse, p. 19 (E. E. T. Soc.).

BUCK-THORN, Mid. Lat. spina cervina, a popular name for the plant ramnus catharticus, seems to have originated in a blunder, the German bux-dorn (= Gk. puw-alkantha) being mistaken for bocksdorn, i.e. "box-thorn" for "buck's-thorn" (Prior).

BUCK-WHEAT, the name of the polygomon fagopyrum, is a corruption of Dut. boek-weit, Ger. buch-weizen, i.e. "beech-wheat," so called from the resemblance of its three-cornered seeds to beech-nuts. Another corrupted form is the older German bauch-weizen, as if "belly-wheat." The French have transformed it into bouquette. In the Montois dialect of French, boucan-couque (as if "griddle-cake") is for Flem. boekweit-coek (Sigart).

BUDGE, an old adjective, meaning pompous, grave, severe, solemn, has never been satisfactorily explained.

While the great Macedonian youth in nonage grew, . . .

No tutor, but the budge philosophers he knew,
And well enough the grave and useful tools
Might serve to read him lectures.

Oldham, Praise of Homer, stanza 4.

The solemn fop, significant and budge,
A fool with judges, amongst fools a judge.

Cowper, Conversation, p. 123
(ed. Routledge).

O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those budge doctors of the Stoick fur.

Milton, Comus, l. 706.

Poore budge face, bow-case sleeve: but let him
passe,

Once furre and beard shall priviledge an asse.
Marston, Scourge of Villanie (1599), III. x.

From the context in which budge occurs in the two latter passages, a far-fetched connexion has been imagined with budge, an old word for lamb's-wool, or fur, with which university hoods used to be trimmed (Warton, Richardson, Nares), and so the word was conceived to mean grave as a doctor, or wearer of budge, scholastic, pedantic. Bailey actually defines Budge-Bachelors as "a company of men clothed in long gowns, lin'd with Lamb's Fur, who accompany the Lord Mayor of London, etc."

These explanations, I believe, are altogether on the wrong scent. That the word has no such learned origin is proved by the fact that it still lives in the mouths of the peasantry in Sussex, where one may hear a sentence like this: "He looked very budge [i.e. grave, solemn] when I asked him who stole the apples" (Parish, Sussex Glossary). This is the softened form of the old and Prov. Eng. word bug, proud, pompous, conceited, tumid, great. (Cf. brig and bridge, rig and ridge, to egg and edge, dog and dodge, drag and dredge, etc.).

Bug as a lord (Haliwell).

As bug as a lad wiv a leather knife; As bug as a dog wi' two tails (Holderness Dialect, E. Yorks. E. D. S.).

You need-na be so bug, you're non of the quality (Brogden, Lincolns. Glossary).

"To be quite buggy about a thing," i.e. proud; also self-important, churlish (East Anglia, E. Dialect. Soc. B. 20).

These are bugg-words that aw'd the women in former ages, and still fool a great many in this.—Ravenscroft, Careless Lovers, 1673.

Another form of the word is bog:—
The cuckooe, seeing him so bog, waxt also wondrous wrothe.

Warner, Athlons England, 1592 (Wright).

The thought of this should canse . . . thy bog and bold heart to be abashed.—Rogers, Naaman the Syrian, p. 18 (Trench, Deficiencies, &c., p. 17).

East Anglia, "Boggy, self-important, churlish" (E. Dialect. Soc. B. 20).

Still another form is big, which from meaning proud, puffed-up, tumid, now only means great, though we still say "to look big," meaning to look proud. Similarly stout (Ger. stolz) once meant proud, but now fat, corpulent.

The Bischope . . with a grait pontificalitie and big countenance . . braggit he was in his awin citie.—James Melville, Diary, 1586, p. 245 (Wodrow Soc.).

Who ever once discover'd insolvency in him, or that he bore himself with a big carriage to any man?—T. Plume, Life of Hacket, 1673, p. xlvii.

They [the monks] did presently think themselves alicujus momenti, and did begin to look big and scornfully on their brethren.—Farindon, Sermons, vol. iv. p. 417 (ed. Tegg).

Cheval de trompette, one that's not afraid of shadows; one whom no big nor bug words can terrifie.—Cotgrave.

Paroloni, high, big, roving, long or bug words.—Florio.

The primitive meaning underlying all these words, whether budge, or bug, or bog, or big, is awe-inspiring, just as huge was originally awe-full, terrifying, and awful in modern slang means great of its kind. Near akin, therefore, is old Eng. bug or bugge, anything that frightens or scares, a ghost or spectre, boggart, bogle, Welsh bwg, a hobgoblin, Wallon bouga, a monster to terrify infants.

These bogies of the nursery are degraded survivals of a word once full of dignity, its congeners being—Slavonic bog, God, lord; old Pers. baga, a lord; Zend bagha, Sansk. bhaga, a lord, a liberal master, "apportioner of food," from bhaji, to share or distribute. Compare our own lord, A. Sax. hláford, "loaf-provider," and It. Frangipani, as a family name.

BUDGE OF COURT, an old English phrase for a gratuitous allowance of provisions, originally, "Avoir bouche à Court, to eat and drink Scot-free; to have budge-a-court, to be in ordinary at Court."—Cotgrave.

Bouge of courte, whyche was a liverye of meate and dryncke.—Huloet.

Ben Jonson spells it bouge of court (Masque of Augurs); Stowe, bouch of court (Survey of London), Wright.

See also Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. ii. p. 364, who quotes Bouche de Courte from an indenture between the Earl of Salisbury and William Bedyk, his retainer, to whom it is guaranteed.

BUGLE, small glass pipes, sometimes made like little trumpets, used as ornaments on women's dresses, is Low Lat. bugulus, prob. from M. H. Ger. bouc (Icel. baugr), a circular ornament (Skeat); and so the same word as old Eng. buckle, a curl (Yorks. buckle-horns, curved horns); Fr. boucle, Dan. bugle, a boss or bulge, and distinct from bugle, the horn of the buculus or bullock. Cf. Fr. baucaul, a glass violl . . long necked and narrow mouthed (Cotgrave).

BULFIST, a provincial name for the puff-ball fungus, = the Swedish and German bovfist, whence also the Low Latin bovista. ? for ball-foist, i.e. puff-ball. See FUZZ-BALL.

Turma de tierra, a puff, a bull fist.—Minshew, Span. Dict., 1623.

Pissaulict, a furse-ball, puckfusse, puffist, or bulfst.—Cotgrave.

BULL, a blunder, an absurd or self-contradictory statement made with the most unconscious naïveté, supposed incorrectly to be indigenous in Ireland (Bos Hibernicus).

An Irishman may be described as a sort of Minotaur, half man and half bull; "semibovemque virum, semivirumque bovem," as Ovid has it.—Horace Smith, The Tin Trumpet, s.v.

It is doubtless the same word as Mod. Icel. bull, nonsense, bulla, to talk nonsense, literally bubbles, inflated, empty talk, from Fr. bulle, Lat. bullā, a bubble; It. bolla, a bubble, a round glass bottle (cf. fiasco, in Italian a flask of thin glass easily smashed). Nowell says, "Life is as a bull rising on the water" (Davies, Supp. E. Glossary). When the German students flung a Papal bull into the river saying, Bulla est! (It's a bull or bubble,) Let's see if it can swim! (Michelet, Life of Luther,) they meant it was empty verbiage, "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." So Lat. ampulla, a globular flask, in Horace is used for bombast, and ampullari is to talk bombastic nonsense.

Compare Eng. blather, to talk nonsense, Icel. blaðr, nonsense, and blaðra, a bladder. Sir Thomas Overbury writes of "a poet that speaks nothing but bladders."

She was brought to bed upon chairs, if that is not a bull.—Reliquie Heurniane, Feb. 14, 1720-21.

Every in order was to speake some pretty apothegme, or make a jest or bull, or speake some eloquent nonsense to make the company laugh.—Athene Oxonienses, Life of Wood, sub ann. 1647, ed. Bliss, p. 35.

The word is found as early as the fourteenth century in the Cursor Mundi:
 Quilk man, quilk calf, quilk leon, quilk
 fuxul [= fowl]
 I sal you tel, wit-vten bul.

l. 21269 (E. E. T. S. ed.).

I may say (without a Bull) this controversy of yours is so much the more needless, by how much that about which it is (Reformation) is so without all controversy needful.—Chas. Herle, Ahab's Fall, 1644, Dedication.

“Why, Friend,” says he [Baron Trevers], . . . “I myself have knowne a beast winter'd one whole summer for a noble.” “That was a Bull, my Lord, I beleve,” says the fellow.—Thoms, Anecdotes and Traditions, p. 79 (Camden Soc.).

Coleridge (Biographia Literaria, ch. iv. p. 36) has a philosophical disquisition on “the well-known bull,” “I was a fine child, but they changed me.” He says: “The bull consists in the bringing together two incompatible thoughts, with the sensation, but without the sense, of their connection.”

Sydney Smith says: “A bull is an apparent congruity, and real incongruity of ideas, suddenly discovered.” It is “the very reverse of wit; for as wit discovers real relations that are not apparent, bulls admit apparent relations that are not real.”—Works, vol. i. p. 69.

BULL-BEGGAR, a terrifier of children (Bailey), is, according to Wedgwood, a corruption of Welsh bwbach, a scarecrow or goblin, and with this he compares Dut. bulle-bak, a bugbear.

Children be afraid of bear-bugs and bull-beggars.—Sir Thomas Smith.

He also gives Dut. bullemann, Low Dut. bu-mann, = Eng. bo-man.

Kaltschmidt explains the word as “der Bettler mit einer Bulle,” [? with a papal license to beg]! (German Dict., s.v.) Compare Ger. popanz, a bugbear, apparently connected with pope.

Mr. Wirt Sikes says the bwbach is the house-goblin whom the Welsh maids propitiate with a bowl of cream set on the hob the last thing at night (British Goblins).

Sigart compares Montois beubeu, Languedoc babau, a ghost to frighten children, Fr. babeau (Glossaire Montois, p. 85).

BULL-FINCH, is probably not a native compound of bull, significant of largeness, with finch, but the same word as Swedish bo-fink, the bull-finch or chaffinch, apparently the house-finch, the bird that frequents the bo, or home-stead; Icel. ból, Dan. bol. Compare bull-fist = Swed. bofist, a puff-ball. The Cleveland name of the chaffinch is bull-spink; in Danish it is called bog-finke, i.e. the beech- (or mast-) finch, which is perhaps a fresh corruption.

BULL-FINCH, a term well known in the hunting-field for a stiff fence, is a corruption of bull-fence, one strong enough to keep in a bull apparently (see T. L. O. Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v.).

When I see those delicate fragile forms [sc. ladies] crashing through strong bull-fences I am struck with admiration.—G. J. Whyte-Melville, Riding Recollections, p. 122 (7th ed.).

The same writer has a rebus on the word in his Songs and Verses, p. 127.

My first is the point of an Irishman's tale;

My second's a tail of its own to disclose; . . .

The longer you look at my whole in the vale,
 The bigger, and blacker, and bitterer it grows.

BULLIES, a Lincolnshire form of BULLACE, a wild plum, otherwise spelt bullis (Skinner), bulles (Turner), bolas (Prompt. Parv.), bolays (Grete Herball), and bullions, as if to denote the bullet-like shape of the fruit (Sp. bolas, Lat. bulla, a bullet): Prior. It is probably a corruption of the French name bello-cier, “a bullace tree, or wild plum-tree” (Cotgrave). Professor Skeat, in a note to Tusser's Five Hundred Pointes (where it is spelt boollesse), thinks the word is of Celtic origin, akin to Ir. bulos, a prune.—E. D. Soc. ed. Glossary, s.v. Davies quotes “haws and bullies” from Smollett, and bull-plum from Foote. (Supp. Eng. Glossary.)

BULL-TREE, a Cumberland word for the elder (Sambucus nigra), is a corruption of the word bur-tree or bore-tree, which is frequently applied to it.

BULLY-ROOK, an old Eng. word for a noisy, swaggering fellow.

What says my bully-rook? Speak scholarly and wisely.—Merry Wives of Windsor, act i. sc. 3.

The word, as Mr. Atkinson remarks, is doubtless essentially identical with the Cleveland bullyrag, ballyrag, balrag, to scold or abuse soundly (cf. Low Ger. buller-brook). In modern English the word has shrunk into bully.

Dorset, ballywrag, Hereford bellrag—perhaps, says Mr. Barnes, from A. Sax. bealu, evil, and wrégan, to accuse.—(Philolog. Soc. Transactions, 1864).

BULRUSH, the scirpus lacustris, O. Eng. bolerush, i.e. the rush with a bole or stem (Dan. bul, Icel. bulr, bolr); so bulwark, originally an erection of boles or logs.—Skeat. Messrs. Britten and Holland, however, consider it as being merely bull-rush, the large rush.

They are deceived in the name of horse-radish, horse-mint, bull-rush, and many more: conceiving therein some prenominal consideration, whereas, indeed, that expression is but a Grecism, by the prefix of hippos and bous; that is, horse and bull, implying no more than great.—Sir Thomas Browne, Works, vol. i. p. 215 (ed. Bohn).

BUMBAILIFF, a sheriff's officer, a corruption of "bound bailiff" (Blackstone). But see Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v.

BUM-BOAT, a long-shore boat, Dan. bombaad (Ferrall and Repp, pt. 2, p. 58), seems to be from Dut. boom, a harbour-bar (? a harbour), Swed. bom. Cf. another Eng. word=Dut. boóm, another form of bodem, bottom (Sewel).

The prototype of the river beer-seller of the present day is the bumboat-man. Bumboats (or rather Baum-boats, that is to say, the boats of the harbour, from the German Baum, a haven or bar) are known in every port where ships are obliged to anchor at a distance from the shore.—Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, vol. ii. p. 107.

BUMPER, a full glass, as if a brimmer when the liquor bumps or swells above the brim (Lat. vinum coronare), is really a corrupted form of bumbard or bombard, used formerly for a large goblet (Shakes. Tempest, ii. 2), properly a mortar to cast bombs (see Skeat, Etym. Dict.).

Compare Fr. bourraquin, a great carousing glass fashioned like a cannon.—Cotgrave.

Then Rhenish rummers walk the round,
In bumpers every king is crowned.

Dryden, To Sir G. Etherege, l. 46.

The bright-headed bumper shall sparkle as well,

Though Cupid be cruel, and Venus be coy . . . .
Then crown the tall goblet once more with champagne!
G. J. Whyte-Melville, Songs and Verses,
p. 244.

The old word bumpsie, tipsy, may have contributed to this use of bumbard.

Tarlton, being a carousing, drunk so long to the watermen that one of them was bumpsie.—Tarlton's Jests, p. 8 (Shaks. Soc.).

BURDEN, the refrain or recurring part of a song, is a corrupt spelling of the old English bordon, Sp. bordon, It. bordone,

The burdon of a song, or a tenor and keeping of time in musicke. Also a humming noise or sound.—Florio.

Fr. bourdon, "a drone, or dorre-bee, also the humming or buzzing of bees" (Cotgrave); Low Lat. burdo(n), a drone, an organ-pipe.

Yng. But there is a bordon, thou must bere it,
Or ellys it wyll not be.

Hu. Than begyn and care not to . . . .

Downe, downe, downe, &c.

Interlude of the Four Elements, p. 51
(c. 1510), Percy Soc.

The wife of the snoring miller

Bare bim a burdon a ful strong,

Men might hir routing heren a furlong.

Chaucer, The Reves Tale, l. 4162.

O moaning Sea, I know your burden well,
'Tis but the old dull tale, filled full of pain.

Songs of Two Worlds, p. 219.

The word has been further corrupted into burthen. An anonymous poet sang of "Christmas Good Will," in 1879, as follows:—

It sounds from Angels' voices,

It sounds o'er hill and dale,

The echoes take the burthen up,

Repeat the gladsome tale.

BURNET, another name for the herb pimpernel, "so called of Burn, which it is good against" (Bailey), is a slightly disguised form of Fr. brunette, from brun, brown, according to Dr. Prior, with allusion to its dark flowers; whence also one species of it was called prunella, i.e. brunella.

BURNISH, an old word for to prosper, flourish, or grow fat, as if to shine or be sleek, in fine condition (not registered in the dictionaries), is perhaps a violent transposition of the verb burgen (into burnege, burnish), sometimes spelt burgeon, to grow big or prosperous, to swell or bud forth. In Leicestershire and Northampton, barnish is to grow fat (Sternberg). Cf. Northampt. frez for furze, waps for wasps, burnish for brunish.

Her hath a' feathered her nest and burnish'd well a' fine since her com'd here.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 42.

Breake off the toppes of the hoppes . . . because thereby they barnish and stocke exceedingly.—R. Scot, Platforme of a Hop-Garden.

Fuller prophesied of London :

It will be found to burnish round about to every point of the compass with new structures daily added thereunto.—Worthies, ii. 49 (ed. 1811).

The clustering nuts for you
The lover finds amid the secret shade ;
And where they burnish on the topmost bough,
With active vigour crushes down the tree.

Thomson, Seasons, Autumn.

According to Bailey, burnish "is also used of Harts spreading their Horns after they are fray'd or new rubb'd;" and burgeon "to grow big about, or gross, also to bud forth." From Fr. bourgeon, a bud, which appears to be from O. H. Ger. burjan, to lift, push up (Diez).

When first on trees bourgeon the blossoms soft. Fairfax, Tasso, vii. 76.

It may be that barnish was the orig. form, a derivation of barn (bairn), meaning "to child," teem, or be productive.

BURSTER, a Surrey word for a drain under a road to carry off water, is a corruption of old Eng. burstow, a covered-in place, from A. Sax. beorgan and stow.

BURY-PEAR. The first part of the word is corrupted from Fr. beurré, from beurre, butter, which this pear was compared to for softness, just as we speak of vegetable-marrows and marrow-fat peas (vid. ed. Müller, Etymologische Woerterbuch, s.v.).

"Poire de beurée, the butter Peare, a tender and delicate fruit."—Cotgrave.

Another corruption is "Burrel Pear, the Red Butter Pear" (Bailey), as if a russeting, from O. Eng. borel, O. Fr. bu-rel, Prov. bu-rel, reddish-brown, russet.

The Germans have popularly corrupted Fr. beurré blanc, the beurre pear, into beerblang.

BUSKIN, a half-boot, bears a deceptive resemblance to Scot. busking, dress, as if clothing for the legs (O. Eng. bush, to dress oneself). It is really for buskin, Dutch broosken (Sewel, 1708), It. borzacchini, from borsa (Fr. bourse), Lat. and Gk. bursa, a leathern case, also a "purse," and so = pursekin, a small leathern receptacle.

A payre of huskings thay did bringe
Of the cow ladyes currall winge.

Herrick, Poems, p. 475 (ed. Hazlitt).

BUSY, used in W. Cornwall in the sense of needs, requires, e.g. "It es busy all my money to keep house," "It es busy all my time" (Miss Courtney, E. D. S.), seems to have been influenced by Fr. besoin.

BUSY-SACK, a slang term for a carpet bag (Hotten), is no doubt a corrupt form of by-sack, French bissac, bésace, a bag opening into two parts (Lat. bisaccium), It. bisaccia, Sp. bisaza.

BUTCH, To: a verb manufactured by the Lancashire folk out of the word butcher, to denote the act of slaughtering cattle (Glossary of Lancashire Dialect, Nodal and Milner). As "player," "runner," and other words significant of agency, are derivatives from verbs, it was supposed, by a false analogy, that "butcher" (O. Eng. and O. Fr. bocher, a buck-slayer,) implied a verbal form also, and to butch was devised accordingly (see BUTTLE). To butch or butch is in use also in the Cleveland dialect.

I shall be butching thee from nape to rump.
Sir H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde,
II. iii. 1.

Similarly Quarles has inferred a verb to haberdash from haberdasher.

What mean dull souls in this high measure

To haberdash

In Earth's base wares, whose greatest treasure

Is dross and trash.

Emblems, Bk. ii. Emb. 5 (1634).

Cf. to burgle from burglar (Bartlett, Dict. of Americanisms; Daily News, Oct. 28, 1880).

In the northern counties of England, to datle or daitle = to work by the day, to go a datling, are verbal usages evolved out of dataler, a day workman, also daitle-man, which words are for day-

taler, day-tale-man, i.e. one who works by day tale (Icel. dagatal), whose labour is told or reckoned by the day.—Notes and Queries, 5th S. viii. 456.

Step into that bookseller's shop and call me a day-tall critic.—Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. iv. chap. xiii.

BUTTER-BUMP, } The name of this BITTERN. } bird, also called bitour, O. Eng. bittour, botor, Scot. bewter, Fr. butor, It. bittore, is said to be a corruption of its Latin name botaurus, so called from its bull bellowing, boatus tauri. Cf. the names rohr-trummel, O. Eng. nire-drumble [bump = to boom].—John's British Birds in their Haunts, p. 414.

Botaurus quasi botaurus dicitur eo quod mugitum tauri imitari videtur.—Alex. Neckam, De Nat. Rerum, cap. liv. (died 1217).

Botoure, byrde, onocroculus, botorius.—Prompt. Parv.

In Guy Mannering it is called the Bull of the bog.

Then blushed the Byttur in the fenne.

The Parliament of Byrdes, l. 87.

And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
"To thee alone, O lake," she said, "I tell."
Dryden, Wife of Bath, l. 194
(Globe ed. p. 598).

Many a fertile cornfield . . . has resounded far and wide with the deep, booming, bellowing cry of the Bittern.—J. C. Atkinson, Brit. Birds' Eggs, p. 32.

Another corruption is bottle-bump (Wright).

BUTTER-CUP. Dr. Prior thinks that this word is a corruption of button-cop, i.e. button-head, comparing the French bouton d'or, the bachelor's button. The form button-cop, however, seems altogether hypothetical.

BUTTERY is not the place where butter is kept, as larder is the place for lard, and pantry for panis, bread, but a store for butts or bottles, Sp. boteria and botilleria, a "butlery."

Bedwer þe botyler, Kyng of Normandye,
Nom al so in ys half a uayr companye

Of on sywyte, vorto seruy of þe botelerye.
Robt. of Gloucester, p. 191 (ed. 1810),
ab. 1295.

In to the Buttry.

Beare, two tonne hoggesheads a xlviijth the tonne, vith.

The Losely Manuscripts (1556), p. 11.

In the nonage of the world Men and Beasts had but one Buttery, which was the Fountain and River.—Howell, Familiar Letters, Bk. ii. 54 (1639).

To it [the fonda] frequently is attached a café, or botilleria, a bottlery, and a place for the sale of liqueurs.—Ford, Gatherings from Spain, p. 168.

Butt, Fr. botte, is the same word as Sp. bota, a large, pear-shaped leathern bottle (whence Sp. botilla, Fr. bouteille, our "bottle"); and so very nearly akin to boot, a leathern covering for the foot.

Bata, a hoot to weare, a bottle, a buskinne.—Minsheu, Spanish Dict. 1623.

For a description of the Spanish bota, see Ford's Gatherings from Spain, pp. 97-98.

The Welsh bwyty, a pantry or butlery, if the same word, has been assimilated to bwyta, to eat, take food.

BUTTERY, a Yorkshire word for the elder tree (Sambucus nigra), is a corruption of its common name, bortree, or bore-tree. See BOTHERY-THREE.

BUTTLE, To, a Lancashire verb, to act as butler, and developed out of that word, as if butler were one who buttlés. So BUTCH is a feigned verb, to perform the functions of a butcher; and tyinke, to play the tinker, occurs in the curious old play of The World and the Chylde (1522).

Manhode. But herke, felowe, art thou ony craftes man?

Folye. Ye, syr, I can bynde a syue and tynke a pan.

Old Plays, vol. xii. p. 324.

So the Scotch have made a verb to airch or arch, to take aim or shoot, out of archer.

BUTTRESS, apparently a support that butts up, or props, the main building, as if from Fr. bouter, to support (boutant, a buttress)—older forms butrasse, boterace (Wycliffe), boteras, bretasce, is really the same word as old Fr. bretesse—the battlements of a wall (Cotgrave), bretesche, bretesque, also brutesche (Matt. Paris), It. bertesca, a rampart, all seemingly for brettice, a boarding (Ger. brett, a board), like lattice, from Fr. latte, a lath. Brattice, a fence of boards, is therefore the same word (see Skeat and Wedgwood). "Betraw of a walle (al. bretasce, bretays), Propugnaculum."—Prompt. Parv.

Bigge brutage of borde, bulde on þe walles.
Alliterative Poems, p. 71, l. 1190.

To patch the flaws and buttress up the wall.
Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, l. 802.

BY-LAW, the law of a company for the regulation of their traffic, as if, like "by-word," "by-play," something beside, or subordinate to, the State law (Dan. bylov), is only another form of "byrlaw, burlaw, laws established in Scotland with consent of Neighbours chosen unanimously in the courts called Burlaw Courts."—Bailey. Icel. bæjarlög, "byre-law," i.e. the law (lög) of the bær, town (also farm-yard). See Cleasby, p. 92; also Spelman, who quotes Bellagines, a medieval corruption (= bilagen), Glossarium, p. 94.

C.

CABBAGE, for old Eng. caboche (old Fr. cabuce, It. cappuccio, a little head), simulates the common termination -age (Fr. -age, It. -aggio, Lat. -aticus, Halde-man, p. 109) in voyage, savage, &c.

CABBAGE, to pilfer or purloin (slang), especially applied to the pilfering of cloth by tailors, is a corrupted form of Belgian kabassen, to steal; Dutch kabassen, to hide, to steal (Sewel), originally to put in one's basket; Dut. kabas, a basket; Fr. cabas, Portg. cabaz, Sp. cabacho, Arab. qafas, a cage; and so to bag, to pocket; cf. Fr. empocher (perhaps, our "poach"). Cumberland "cabbish, to purloin" (Dickenson, Supplement, E. D. S.).

Not to be confounded with this is the old heraldic and hunting term, to cabbage = to take the head off.

As the hounds are surbated and weary, the head of the stag should be cabbed in order to reward them.—Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. ix.

This is another form of to caboshe, from Fr. caboche, the head.

Caboshed, is when the Beast's Head is cut off close just behind the ears, by a section parallel to the face, or by a perpendicular downright section.—Bailey.

CACHECOPE BELL. I quote this word, not having found it anywhere else, on the very insufficient authority of Dr. Brewer (Dict. of Phrase and Fable, s.v.), who explains it as a bell rung at funerals when the pall was thrown over the coffin, from Fr. cache corps, "cover-corpse" (?).

CALENDER, old Eng. calendre (Leechdoms, Wortcunning and Starcraft, ed. Cockayne, vol. i. p. 218), an old name for the plant coriander, is a corruption of coliaander, coliaundre (Wycliffe, Ex. xvi. 31), another form of "coriander," still named col. by apothecaries. Compare coronel and colonel.

CALF, the fleshy part of the leg behind the tibia, is the Irish calpa, colpa, and colbhtha (while colbhac is a calf or heifer, and colpa, a cow or calf!).

Hæc tibia, colpu.—Medieval Tract on Latin Declension (ed. W. Stokes), p. 7.

Near akin are collop, and Lat. pulpa, flesh (Wedgwood). It is curious to note tarb, the bull (of the thigh, or the loin), glossing evugia in the Lorica of Gildas, which elsewhere is glossed ge-scinco (shank).—Stokes, Irish Glosses, pp. 139, 144 (Irish Archæolog. Soc.). Cf., perhaps, Lat. taurus, interfemineum.

CALM. The l has no more right to be in this word than in could. It was probably assimilated to balm, halm, palm, psalm, &c., in English; though the word in other languages also has the l: e.g. Fr. calme, It., Span., Portg., and Prov. calma, denoting sultry weather, when no breeze is stirring; all from Low Lat. cauma, the heat of the sun; Greek kauma, heat, burning. In Provençal, chaume signifies the time when the flocks repose in the heat of the day, and caumas = heat (J. D. Craig, Handbook to Prov.); cf. "caumas, hot, Gascon" (Cotgrave). In old Eng. the form caume is found.

For a similar intrusion of an l, compare It. aldace, from Lat. audax, aldire from audire, palmento from pauento (pavimentum); so we find in Scottish walk (G. Douglas) for wauw = waw, and wolk for wouw = wow; walken for wauken, to waken, and awalk (Dunbar) for awake. Al is often pronounced as au, e.g. talk, stalk, walk, falcon, carok (Bailey) for calk, O. Eng. faute for falt, caudron (Wycliffe) for caldron, Hawkins for Hal-kins, Maukin for Mal-kin.

Cauma may have become calma, from a supposed connexion with Lat. calor, heat; Span. "Calina, a thick, sweltry air, rising like a fog in hot weather" (Stevens, Sp. Dict. 1706), Langued. calimas.

Swed. qualm, sultry weather, is perhaps the same word assimilated to Dut. and Ger. qualm, steam, exhalation; Dan. qualm, close, oppressive; qualme, to feel sickish; Eng. qualm, Dau. quæle, to stifle, torment, quell. Cf. Mrs. Quickly, "sick of a calm," 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4, 40.

Forto behald, It was a gloire to se
The stablit wyndis and the caumyt see.

G. Douglas, Eneados, Bk. xii. Proloug,
l. 52 (1513).

Calme or softe, wythe-owte wynde, Calmus, tranquillus.—Prompt. Parvulorum, ab. 1440. All these stormes, which now his beauty blend Shall turne to caulmes, and tymely cleare away.

Spenser, Sonnets, lxii. p. 582 (Globe ed.).

A blont hede in a caulme or downe a wind is very good.—R. Ascham, Toxophilus, 1545, p. 137 (ed. Arber).

CAMEL LEOPARD, an occasional misspelling and vulgar pronunciation of camelo-pard, the animal which was regarded as partaking of the nature of the camel and the pard, Lat. camelo-pardalis.

All who remember the old staircase of Montague house have felt that there is limit to the exhibition of a giraffe which had been received at a period so remote that it was described as a "camel leopard."—The Athenæum, Oct. 13, 1877.

CAMELS, a W. Cornish word for camomile flowers (E. D. Soc.).

CAMLET, a stuff made of wool and goats' hair, Fr. camelot, anciently called camellotti, is not named from the camel, out of whose hair it was supposed originally to have been woven, but is derived from Arab. khamlat, which is from khaml, pile or plush.—Yule, Ser Marco Polo, vol. i. p. 248.

In Scotch the word was corrupted into chalmillet.

For chamelot the camel full of hare.—Jas. I. of Scotland, The Kingis Quhair, stanza 157 (ab. 1423).

And then present the mornings-light
Cloath'd in her chamlets of delight.

Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, vol. i.
p. 48 (ed. Hazlitt).

Damaske, chamolets, lined with sables and other costly fures . . . are worne according to their severall qualities.—G. Sandys, Travels, p. 64.

CANARY, a corruption of quandary, which Mrs. Quickly employs, confounding it, probably, with canary, an old name for a quick dance.

The best courtier of them all could never have brought her to such a canary.—Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2, 63.

Quandary itself seems to be a corruption of O. Eng. wandreth, difficulty, perplexity; Icel. vandræði (Wedgwood).

CANDLEGOSTES, a curious old name for a plant, probably the orchis mascula, which Gerarde (Herball) calls gandlegosses (Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 85). On account of its double bulb or tuber, and two-coloured flowers, this plant is often popularly known by names expressive of a pair, or of the two sexes, e.g. Lords and Ladies, Adam and Eve, Cain and Abel. It would seem, then, that the original of gandle-gosses was gander-gosses, i.e. gander and goose.

Kandlegostes is goosegrasse.—Gerarde, Supplement unto the Generall Table.

In Dorset and Gloucester the orchis is called goosey-gander.

CANE-APPLE, an old word for the arbutus unedo, which "hath come to us from Ireland by the name of the Came-apple" (Parkinson). The first part of the word is the Irish Caihne.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 14 (E. D. Soc.). No such word, however, occurs in O'Donovan's edition of O'Reilly's Irish Dict., nor in W. Stokes's Irish Glosses.

CANNIBAL, formerly cambal, Span. canibal, a corrupted form of caribal, a native of the Caribbean islands, as if savages of a canine voracity (see Skeat, Etym. Dict.).

They are people too were never christened;
They know no law nor conscience; they'll devour thee,

. . . they're cannibals!
Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit without Money,
v. 2.

CANNON, as a term at billiards, is said to have denoted originally a stroke on the red ball and a white, and to be a corruption of carrom or carom, a contracted form of Fr. carambole, the red ball; carambolier, to make a double stroke, or ricochet; Sp. carambola.

CANTANKEROUS. This curious popular word, meaning peevish, cross-grained, ill-tempered (Sheridan; see T. L. O. Davies, Sup. Eng. Glossary), would seem to be a compromise between cant, to whine, and rancorous. It is really, I think, for contekorous, or contakerous, quarrelsome, from O. Eng. contekour, a quarrelsome person; contek, contake, a quarrel.

Contek so as the bokes sain
Foolhast hath to his chamberlain,
By whose counseil all unavisid
Is pacience most despised.

Gower, Confessio Amantis, vol. i.
p. 318 (ed. Pauli).

That contek sprong bitnene hom mani volde.
—Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 470 (ed. Hearne).

To pise boze belonge alle ualshedes and þe gyles and þe contackes.—Ayenbite of Inwyt, 1340, p. 63 (ed. Morris).

Wycliffe has contake and contek.

The other helden hisseruauntis, and slowen hem, punished with contek.—Mait. xxii. 6 (1389).

A Coward, and Contocoure, manhod is þe mene.

The Abce of Aristotill, l. 36.

CAPER CORNER WAY, a Cumberland word for diagonally (Dickinson); a corruption of cater corner way (see CATER). So “caper-cousins, great friends (Lanc.)”—Wright, for cater-cousins.

CAP-STERN, sometimes found for capstan, Fr. cabestan, Sp. cabrestante (a standing goat?), a windlass. Horace Walpole spells it capstand.

He invented the drum capstands for weighing heavy anchors.—Anecdotes of Painting, (ed. Murray), p. 267.

Capstring in the following description of a sea-fight seems to be the same word.

I pierced them with my chace-piece through and through. Part of their capstring too I, with a piece abaft, shot overboard.—Heywood and Rowley, Fortune by Land and Sea, act iv. sc. 3 (1655).

Compare Ger. bock, a buck or he-goat, also a trestle or support; the “box” of a coach. So Pol. koziel, a buck; kozly, a trestle (Wedgwood).

Sp. cabra, Fr. chèvre, (1) a goat (Lat. capra), (2) a machine for raising weights, &c., a “crab.”

“Chevron,” Fr. chevron, Sp. cabrio, a rafter, from chèvre, &c., a goat. Compare aries, a battering-ram.

Mahn and Professor Skeat, however, who think the original form is Sp. cabestrante, deduce the word from Sp. cabestrar, Lat. capistrare, to tie with a halter (Lat. capistrum).

CARC-ÆRN, the A. Saxon name for a prison, as if the house (cern) of carlk or care (carc), (cf. O. Eng. cwalm huse, “death-house,” a prison: Ancien Riwele, p. 140), is a manifest corruption of Lat. carcer, which also appears as a borrowed word in Gothic karakara (Matt. xi. 2).

CARE-AWAYES, caraways (Fr. carvi), as if they were good for dispelling cares. Gerarde spells it caruwaie, and says, “it groweth in Caria, as Dioscorides sheweth, from whence it took its name.”—Herball, p. 879.

Haile of care-a-wayes.—Davies, Scourge of Folly, 1611 (Wright).

Cf. “care-away, sorowles.”—Prompt. Parv. Thos. Adams, in his sermon, A Contemplation of the Herbs, under the heading care-away, has: “Sollicitous thoughtfulness can give him no hurt but this herb care-away shall easily cure it” (Works, ii. 467, ed. Nichol). Caraway, itself an altered form of carvy (Prompt. Parv. p. 62), Fr. carvi, cf. Portg. cherivia, (al)-caravia, is from Arab. karawiā, from a Greek karwia (Devic).

CARE-SUNDAY, a provincial name for the fifth Sunday in Lent, like the related words Chare Thursday, the day before Good Friday, Ger. char-freitag, Good Friday, Charwoche, Passion week, all said to be derived from an old Teutonic word cara, preparation [? gara], because the day of the crucifixion was Dies Parasceves, Gk. paraskeuē, the preparation day of the Jews. See Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalendarium, i. p. 178; Grimm, however, connects old Ger. karfreitag with O. H. Ger. chara, grief, suffering, Old Sax. cara, Goth. kara (Wörterbuch, s.v.). So old Eng. care, A. Sax. cearu, mean grief. The proper meaning, therefore, of Care-Sunday and Chare-Thursday is the Sunday and Thursday of mourning (see Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 444). Carling Sunday, as if the day on which carlings, or grey-peas, are eaten, seems a popular corruption (Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, s. v.).

CARNATION, so called now as if it derived its name from its flowers being of a flesh colour (Lat. caro, carnis, flesh), was formerly more correctly spelt coronation, being commonly employed in chaplets, coronæ (Prior).

So in German cornice has become karniesz: cf. CARNELIAN. Gerarde, however (1597), spells it Carnation, and identifies it with "Cloue Gilliflower" (Herball, p. 472), which suggests that coronation may be itself the corruption.

Bring Coronations, and Sops in wine,
Worne of Paramoures.

Spenser, Shepherds Calender, April, l. 139.

CARNELIAN, a mis-spelling of cornelian sometimes found, as if it meant the flesh-coloured stone (carn-, flesh), Ger. karneol, whereas it is Fr. cornaline, It. cornalino, corniola, from cornu, so called on account of its horn-like semi-transparency. Cf. Ger. hornstein, and "onyx," Gk. onyx, the finger-nail; perhaps also Fr. nacre, It. naccaro, mother-of-pearl, connected with Sansk. nakhara, a nail.

CARNIVAL, the festivity preceding Lent, Fr. and Sp. carnaval, It. carnevale, "Shrovetide, shroving time, when flesh is bidden farewell" (Florio), as if from caro (carnis) and vale—"Flesh farewell!"—is really an accommodation of carnelevale, a corrupt form of Low Lat. carne-levamen, a solace of the flesh. The Sunday before the beginning of Lent was called Dominica ad carnes levandas. Compare also the names of Shrovetide, Carnicapium, Carnivora, Mardi-gras, &c.—Hampson, Medii Aevi Kalendarium, i. p. 158.

This feast is named the Carnival, which being Interpreted, implies "farewell to flesh:"

So call'd, because the name and thing agreeing,

Through Lent they live on fish both salt and fresh.

Byron, Beppo, vi.

CAROL, an architectural term for a small closet, or enclosure, to sit in (Parker, Glossary of Architecture, s. v.). It is also spelt carrol, carrel, carole, carola, quarrèl; and is corrupted from Low Lat. quadrellus, a square pew.

Carola, a little Pew or Closet.—Bailey.

Carrel, a Closet or Pew in a Monastery.—Id.

Carola is applied to any place enclosed with skreens or partitions. In Normandy and elsewhere in France the rails themselves are termed caroles. Also this term was applied to the aisles of French churches which have skreened chapels on one side.—Parker, Glossary of Architecture.

In the west walk [of the cloisters] are the places prepared for the carols of the monks, or their studies, to sit and write in; . . . they were so called probably from their being square, carrels, or quarrès.—Id.

So quarrel, a square of glass, and anciently a square-headed arrow, is from quadrellus; and carillon, a chime, is literally a peal of four bells, L. Lat. quadrillio; like quadrille, a dance of four.

CAROUSAL: strange as it may seem, this word has probably no connexion with carouse, a drinking-bout. Prof. Skeat says that in its older form, carousel, it meant a pageant or festival, being derived from Fr. carrousel, It. carosello, a tilting-match or tournament, corrupted (under the influence of carro, a chariot), from garosello, a diminutive form of garoso, quarrelsome (cf. gara, strife, perhaps = Fr. guerre). Carouse, formerly garouse, is from Ger. gar aus (a bumper drained), "right out."

CARP, Mid. Eng. carpen, old Eng. karpe, to speak, to tell (Icel. karpa, to boast), owes its modern sense of speaking with sinister intent, fault-finding or cavilling, to a supposed connexion with Lat. carpere, to pluck, to calumniate.

Other of your insolent retinue

Do hourly carp and quarrel.

King Lear, i. 4, l. 221.

Bi crist, sone, quap þe King, to carpe þe soþe.
William of Palerne, l. 4581.

(See Prof. Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v.)

Carpyn, or talkyn, Fabulor, confabulor, garrulo.—Prompt. Parv.

So gone thei forthe, carpende fast

On this, on that.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vii.

Many was the bird did sweetly carpe,
Among the thornes, the bushes, and the greves.

F. Thynn, Pride and Lowliness, ab. 1570,
p. 8 (Shaks. Soc.).

CARRIAGE, which appears to be a similar formation to voyage, wharfage, parentage, tonnage, marriage, is a more thoroughly naturalized form of caroch (Jonson), Fr. carosse, Sp. carroza, It. carrozza, caroccio. To the latter has been assimilated It. baroccio, biroccio, our "barouche," which originally meant a two-wheeled vehicle, from Lat. bi-rotus. Cf. Fr. brouette, for bi-rouette (Diez). Carriage, the carrying of a parcel, "carriage, vectura, carriageum" (Prompt. Parv.), or the thing carried, baggage (A. V. 1 Sam. xvii. 22), is a distinct word, O. Fr. cariage, It. carriaggio.

Madam . . . must be allow'd
Her footmen, her caroch, her ushers, pages.
Massinger, The Renegado, i. 2 (p. 136, ed. Cunningham).

At this time, 1605, began the ordinary use of caroches.—Stow, Annales, p. 867 (1615).

They harnessed the Grand Signiors Caroach, mounted his Caualery vpon Curtals, and so sent him most pompously . . . into the City.—Dekker, Seven deadly Sinnes of London, 1606, p. 20 (ed. Arber).

He hurries up and down . . . as a gallant in his new caroch, driving as if he were mad.—T. Adams, Mystical Bedlam, Sermons, i. 234.

CARRY-ALL (American), a waggon, corrupted from Cariole.

CARTRIDGE is an Anglicized form of Fr. cartouche, It. cartoccio, a case made of paper (It. carta, Lat. charta), assimilated to such words as partridge, or mistaken for carte (= card) and ridge. G. Markham further corrupts the word to cartalage (The Souldier's Accidence, p. 36).

"Cartridges" seem to be found first in the works of Lord Orrery in 1677. Sir James Turner in 1671 calls them patrons.

CASEMENT—"Make the doors upon a woman's wit and it will out at the casement" (As You Like It, a. iv. sc. 1)—seems to be confounded sometimes with "casemate," a loophole.

At Mochrum . . . a medieval castle long in ruins has been partly rebuilt on the old lines, nothing being altered in the thickness of the walls . . . and very little in the holes or "casements" which admit the light.—Sat. Review, vol. 50, p. 542.

The tumid bladder bounds at every kick, bursts the withstanding casements.—Shaftesbury, Characteristicks, vol. iii. p. 14 (1749).

The Eye, by which as through a cleare cristall Casement wee discern the various works of Art and Nature.—J. Howell, For-rein Travell, 1642, p. 12 (ed. Arber).

Casemate, Fr. casemate, Sp. casamata, It. casa-matta, (1) a house of slaughter (from casa, and Sp. matar, It. mazzare, Lat. mactare, to slaughter)—i. e. a chamber in a fortress from which the enemy may be securely slaughtered, (2) a loophole or opening to fire on the enemy. "Casamatta, a casamat, a canonrie or slaughter-house, so called of Engineers, which is a place built low under the wall or bulwarke not arriving unto the height of the ditch, and serves to annoy or hinder the enemy when he entreteth the ditch to skale the wall"—(Florio, 1611). Compare Fr. meurtrière, Ger. mord-keller, a loophole.

CASH, the name which we give to the Chinese copper coins which are strung together on strings through a hole in the middle, is the same word as the Russian chek or chokh, and a corruption of the Mongol jos, Chinese t'sien, from a false analogy to the English word "cash," Fr. caisse. Vid. Prejevalsky, Mongolia, vol. ii. p. 3.

CASHIER, to dismiss one from his office, is a corruption of the older word casseer, Ger. cassiren, Dut. kasseren, all from French casser, "to cass, casseere, discharge" (Cotgrave); Sp. cassar, to casseer (Minsheu); Lat. casare, to render null (casus): see CASS. The phrase "to break an officer" seems to have originated in a misunderstanding of this word.

Excepting the main point of cashiering the Popes pretended Authority over the whole Church, those two abuses were the first things corrected by Authority in our Realm.—Bp. Hacket, Century of Sermons, p. 124 (1675).

CAST, in the idiom "to cast about," to look for a plan, to contrive, plot, meditate, search—"He cast about how to escape"—as if he turned or cast his eyes every way—looked round, seems to be only a modern usage of old Eng. cost, to contrive (A. Sax. costian, to try, prove, tempt, old Swed. kosta, Dut. koste, try, attempt), which was sometimes written cast (= conceive, consider). See Dr. R. Morris, E. E. Alliterative Poems, p. 137. But query.

Caste for to goōn', or purpose for to dōn' any othyr thyng, Tendo, intendo.

Caste warke or disposyn', Dispono.—Prompt. Purv.

A mare payne couthe na man in hert cast þan þis war, als lang als it suld last.

Pricke of Conscience, l. 1918 (ah. 1340).

Alle mans lyfe casten may be Principally in þis partes thre.

Ibid. l. 432.

Bi a coynt compacement · caste sche sone, Hlow bold 3he mi:st hire here · hire best to excuse.

William of Palerne, l. 1981, ab. 1350
(ed. Skeat).

Than cast I all the worlde about
And think, howe I at home in dout
Have all my time in vein despended.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. i. p. 317
(ed. Panli).

Who ever casts to compasse weightye prise
And thinks to throwe out thondering words of threate,

Let powre in lavish cups and thritifc bitts of meate.

Spenser, Shepherds Calender, Oct. l. 105.

She cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be.—A. V. S. Luke, i. 29 (1611).

And ever in her mind she cast about
For that unnoticed failing in herself,
Which made him look so cloudy and so cold.

Tennyson, Enid, l. 892.

Hence, no doubt, cast = to calculate,
as "to cast a horoscope," or "to cast up a sum in addition."

[He] arsmetrike radde in cours: in Oxenford wel faste

& his figours drou3 aldai: & his nambre
caste.

S. Edmund the Confessor, l. 222 (Pbilolog.
Soc. Trans. 1858).

CAST, applied to old clothes, as if something thrown aside as useless, is probably for cassed, found in old writers
—French, casser, "to casse, casseere [cashier], discharge, turne out of service" (Cotgrave); which is from Lat.
cassare, to render null and void (cassus).
See CASHIER. North and Holland speak of soldiers being cassed; and in Othello (ii. 3) Iago says to the "cashier'd Cassio" (l. 381), "You are but now cast in his mood," l. 273.

We will raise

A noise enough to wake an alderman,
Or a cast captain, when the reck'ning is About to pay.

W. Cartwright, The Ordinary, iii. 4 (1651).

Put now these old cast clouts . . . under thine armholes.—A. V. Jerem. xxxviii. 12.

He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana.
—As You Like It, iii. 4, 16.

CASTLE, the chess piece, It. castello and torre, so called from rocco, its proper name, being confounded with rocca, a rock, fortress, or castle. The Italian rocco, our "rook," is the French roc, Sp. roque, Persian rukh, all variations of the Sanskrit roka, a boat or ship, that being the original form of the piece.—D. Forbes, History of Chess, pp. 161, 211. Devic connects the word with old Pers. rokh, a warrior or knight.

CASTLE, as used in Shakespeare (Tro. and Cres. v. 2, l. 187) and Holinshed (ii. p. 815) for a helmet, must be a representative of the Latin cassida, cassis, a helmet.

Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head.
—Shakespeare, l. c.

CAST-ME-DOWN, a corruption of the word cassidone, cassidonia, a species of lavender, which is itself a corruption of its Latin name, stæchas Sidonia ('chas-Sidonia), the stæchas from Sidon, where it is indigenous.

Stechados, Steckado, or Stickadove, Cassi- donia or Castmedown.—Cotgrave.

Some simple people imitating the said name doe call it cast-me-downe.—Gerarde,
Herball, p. 470.

CASTOR OIL, a corruption of castus- oil, the plant (ricinus communis) from the nuts or seeds of which it is expressed having formerly been called Agnus castus (Mahn, in Webster's Dict.). The word was doubtless confounded with, or assimilated to, cas- toveum, "a medicine made of the liquor contained in the small bags which are next to the beaver's [or castor's] groin, oily, and of a strong scent" (Bailey).

CAT, a nautical term applied to various parts of the gear connected with an anchor, e.g. "Cat, a piece of timber to raise up the anchor from the hawse to the forecandle;" cat-head, "catt-rop, the rope used in hauling up the cat"
(Bailey); to cat, to draw up the anchor (Smith, Nautical Dict.; Falconer, Ma- rine Dict.). Compare Dutch kat, a small anchor; katten, to cast out such; katrol, a pulley. It is beyond doubt the same word as Lith. kátas, Bohem. kotew, Russ. and old Slav. kotva, an anchor, meaning at first probably a large stone; cf. Sansk. kātha, a stone (Pictet, Origines I. Europ. i. 133), and the Homeric eunai, stones used as anchors.

CAT, in the story of Whittington and his Cat, it has been considered with some reason, is a corruption of the old substantive acat or achat, trading (e.g. Le Gland, Fabliaux, tom. i. p. 305), from acheter, to buy (Riley).—Schele de Vere, Studies in English, p. 205; M. Müller.

CAT OR DOG-WOOL, "of which cotto or coarse Blankets were formerly made" (Bailey, s. v. cottum). Cat here is a corruption of the old Eng. cot, a matted lock; Ger. kozze, a shaggy covering; Wal. cote, a fleece. "Cot-gare, refuse wool so clotted together that it cannot be pulled asunder" (Bailey).

Dog-wool is for dag-wool, cf. dag-locks, the tail-wool of sheep (see Wedgwood); and old Eng. dagswain, a bed-covering, "daggysweyne, lodix," Prompt. Parvulorum.

CATCH, a word used by Howell and Pepsy for a small vessel (see T. L. O. Davies, Sup. Eng. Glossary), as if like yacht (Dut. jagt), a vessel for pursuit, is a corruption of ketch, It. caicchio, "a little cocke bote, skiffe or scallop" (Florio); from Turk. qaiq, a skiff or caïque.

CATCH-POLE, } Scotch terms for the CACHE-POLE, } game of tennis, are CATCHPULE, } corrupted forms of Belgian kaetsspel, i.e. "chase-game," the game of ball: cf. kaetsbal, a tennis-ball.

CATEKUMLYNG, an old Eng. corruption of catechumen, a person catechized or under instruction preparatory to baptism, as if compounded with home-lyng (Robt. of Gloucester, p. 18)—i.e. comeling, a stranger, new arrival, a proselyte—occurs in Langland's Vision of Piers Plowman, 1377.

Why 3owre couent coueytath to confesse and to hurye,
Rather þan to baptise barnes þat ben catekumelynges.

Pass. xi. l. 77, text B. (ed. Skeat); where another MS. has cathecumynys.

CATER, to cross diagonally, or caterways, in the Surrey dialect (Notes and Queries, 5th S. i. 361), is evidently a corruption of Fr. quatre, as in cater-cousins and cater-cap. Compare Fr. cartayer (which Littré derives from quatre), corresponding to our verb to quarter, to drive so as to avoid the ruts in the road.

CATER-COUSIN, an intimate friend, a parasite, as if a friend for the sake of the catering, is really a fourth cousin, Fr. quatre.

Es havn't a' be cater cousins since last hay-harvest.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 61.

Sleep! What have we to do with Death's cater-cousin?

Randolph, Aristippus, Works, p. 23 (ed. Hazlitt).

So O. Eng. caterreyns = quadraims, farthings. See CATER.

CATERPILLER—old Eng. "catyrrpel, wyrm amonge frute," Prompt. Parv.—is corrupted from old Fr. chatte peleuse (Palsgrave, 1530), "hairy cat." Cf. Norman carpleuse (? = cater-peleuse), It. gattola, Swiss teufels-katz, "devil's cat" (Adams, Philog. Soc. Trans. 1860, p. 90). The last part of the word was probably assimilated to pillar, a robber or despoiler.

Latimer actually uses it in this sense—

They that be children of this worlde (as couetous persons, extorcioners, oppressours, caterpillers, usurers), thynke you they come to Gods storehouse?—Sermons, p. 158, recto.

Cater, moreover, being an old name for a glutton, the whole compound would be understood as a "gluttonous-robber."

Horace writes of an outrageous cater in his time, Quicquid quæsierat ventri donabat avaro, whatsoever he could rap or rend, be confiscated to his couetous gut.—Nash, Pierce Penilisse, 1592, p. 49 (Shaks. Soc.).

CATGUT, the technical name for the material of which the strings of the guitar, harp, &c. are made. It is really manufactured from sheep-gut (vide Chappell's History of Music, vol. i. p. 26).

That sheep's guts should hale souls out of men's bodies.—Much Ado about Nothing, ii. 3.

So it may be conjectured that the word is a corruption of kit-gut, kit being an old word for a small violin. Compare Ger. kitt, kütt, a lute, and kitze, katze, a cat. Or catlings, small strings for musical instruments (Bailey), may be connected with chitterlings, Ger. kuttelen, "guts."

Hearsay. Do you not hear her guts already squeak

Like kit-strings?

Slicer. They must come to that within

This two or three years: by that time she'll be True perfect cat.

W. Cartwright, The Ordinary, i. 2 (1651).

Unless the fidler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings on.—Troilus and Cress. act iii. sc. 3.

Play, fiddler, or I'll cut your cat's guts into chitterlings.—Marlowe, Jew of Malta, act iv. (1633).

Mr. Timbs (Popular Errors Explained, p. 64) points out that the old reading for cat's-guts in Cymbeline is calves'-guts.

CAT-HANDED, a Devonshire term for awkward, is a corruption of the word which appears in Northamptonshire as heck-handed, left-handed (Sternberg); in the Craven dialect gawk-handed, in Yorkshire gawk, awkward; gawkshaw, a left-handed man, Fr. gauche.

Gingerly, gingerly; how univitty and cat-handed you go about it, you dough-cake.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 33.

CAT IN THE PAN, to turn cat in the pan, or cat in pan, are ancient phrases for becoming a turn-coat or time-server, changing with the times and circumstances. They are evident corruptions, but of what? Not likely of the name Catapann, a title which was assigned to the chief governor of the metropolis of Lombardy in the tenth century, when the "policy of Church and State in that province was modelled in exact subordination to the throne of Constantinople" (Gibbon, Decline and Fall, ch. lvi.); Notes and Queries, 5th S. viii. 148. The original was perhaps "to turn a cate" or cake.

In W. Cornwall "to turn cat-in-the-pan" is literally to turn head over heels while holding on to a bar (E. D. S.).

I am as very a turncote as the wethercoke of Poles [Paul's];
For now I will call my name Due

Disporte, fit for all soules, ye.

So, so, findly I can turne the catt in the panne.

The Marriage of Witt and Wisdoms
(Shaks. Soc. ed.), p. 24.

Damon smatters as well as he of craftie philosophie

And can tourne cat in the panne very pretily.

R. Edwards, Damon and Pithias, 1571

(O. P. i. 206, ed. 1827). *

When George in pudding time came o'er

And moderate men look'd big, Sir,

I turn'd a cat-in-pan once more,

And so became a Whig, Sir.

The Vicar of Bray.

Minsheu, in his Spanish Dict. 1623, gives "Trastrocéadas palábras, words turned, the cat into the pan."

Lord Bacon, in his Essays, uses the phrase in a different sense:—

There is a Cunning, which we in England call, The Turning of the Cat [Latin felem] in the Pan; which is, when that which a man says to another, he laies it, as if another had said it to him.—Of Cunning, 1625 (Arber's ed. p. 441).

"To savour," or "smell, of the pan," seems to have been a common cant phrase in the time of the Reformation for to change one's views—e.g. West, Bishop of Ely, said of Latimer: "I perceive that you smell somewhat of the pan."

I hear of no clerk that hath come out lately of that College, but savoureth of the frying pan, though he speak never so holily.—Bp. Nikke, 1530 (see Eadie, The English Bible, vol. i. p. 183).

CATS AND DOGS, TO RAIN: the origin of this expression has never been satisfactorily explained. A correspondent of Notes and Queries (5th S. viii. p. 183) suggests that it is a perversion of an Italian acqua a catinelle e dogli, rain in basins and casks. The phrase acqua a catinelle is used by Massimo d'Azeglio in his Niccolo de' Lapi, vol. i. p. 97, ed. 1841, Paris; Acqua a bigonice, "rain in tuns," buckets of rain, is also found. But is such a popular expression likely to be of foreign origin? Chien, in the French phrase, une pluie de chien (a heavy shower), has the same depreciatory and intensive force as in bruit de chien, querelle de chien. Probably this is just one of those strong intensive phrases in which the populace delights. In the dialect of the Wallon de Mons, pleuvoi à dik et dak is to rain in torrents (corresponding to a German regnen dick und [? an] dach, "thick on thatch:" cf. risch und rasch, kling und klang, &c.).

CAT'S-CRADLE, the children's game of weaving a cord into various figures from one to the other's hands alternately, is a corruption of cratch-cradle, the word cratch being the usual term formerly for a manger, rack, or crib (Fr. crèche), of interlaced wickerwork. Lat. craticius, crates. If, as Nares affirms, the game was also called scratch-cradle, this account may be received without hesitation, and an allusion may be traced to the manger-cradle of the Sacred History.

These men found a child in a cratch, the poorest and most unlikely birth that ever was to prove a King.—Bp. Hacket, Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 143.

Sche childide her firste horn sone, . . . and puttide him in a cracche.—Wycliffe, Luke, ii. 7 (1389).

This game in the London Schools is called Scratch-scratch, or Scratch-cradle.—Britton, Beauties of Wiltshire, 1825.

CAT-STONES, i.e. battle-stones, erected in various parts of England, and especially in Derbyshire, in commemoration of battles having been fought there. From the Celtic cath, a battle; cf. Ard-cath in the Co. Meath, Lat. cateia, &c.

On the east side of [Stanton] Moor were three tall isolated stones, which in Rooke's time [i.e. 1780] the natives still called Cat Stones, showing clearly that the tradition still remained of a battle fought there.—Ferguson, Rude Stone Monuments, p. 146.

CATSUP, or ketchup, a corruption of kitjap, the oriental name for a similar condiment.

And for our home-bred British cheer,
Botargo, Catsup, and Caveer.
Swift, Panegyrick on the Dean, 1730.

CAULIFLOWER is, properly, not the flower of the (Lat.) caulis, cabbage, but as formerly spelt, collyflory (Cotgrave)—i.e. cole-floris, Fr. chou fleur, the flowering cole (Skeat).

Cole Florie, or after some Colieflorie, hath many large leaves slightly indented about the edges.—Gerarde, Herball, p. 246 (1597).

CAUSED-WAY, Fuller's spelling of causeway—e.g. History of Cambridge, iii. 19 (1656).

Builders of Bridges . . . and makers of Caused-waies or Causways (which are Bridges over dirt) . . . are not least in benefit to the Common-wealth.—Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 32 (ed. 1811).

CAUSEWAY (Isaiah, vii. 3, marg.), also sometimes written causeway-way, caused-way (q. v.), and cawcewey, caucey wey (Prompt. Parv. 1440), was originally causey (1 Chron. xxvi. 16, 18; Prov. xv. 19, marg.; Milton, Par. Lost, x. 415); causeis in Camden's Britain, fol. pp. 515, 750. It is the French chaussée, old Fr. cauchie, Norm. Fr. chaucee, Vie de St. Auban, l. 531; Sp. and Portg. calzada, from a Latin calciata (sc. via), a road laid down with limestone or chalk (cala), Low Lat. calceta. Compare It. selciata, or slab-pavement. In W. Cornwall cawne is a flagged floor, and cawne-way, a paved footpath.

A blazing starr seen by several people in Oxon, and A. W. saw it in few nights after on Botley Causey (1664).—Life of Anthony à Wood (ed. Bliss), p. 140.

Thé rode on then all 3 :

Vpon a faire Causye.

Percy, Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 428, l. 319.

CELERY, a corruption (through a mistaken analogy to other words beginning in cel-) of the older name "sellery, a sallad Herb" (Bailey). Cf. Ger. selleri, It. sellari, plu. of sellaro, from Lat. selinum, Gk. sélinon. The word is comparatively modern, not being found in Gerarde, 1597.

CELERY-LEAVED RANUNCULUS. This expression is said, I know not on what authority, to be a corruption of sceleratus ranunculus (Philolog. Soc. Proc. vol. v. p. 138).

CELLAR, the canopy of a bed, a corruption of It. cielo, Fr. ciel, "Cellar for a bedde, ciel de lit"—Palsgrave; Lesclairissement (Wright); "ceele or seele, a canopy" (Glossary of Architecture; Parker).

CENTINEL, a corrupt spelling of sentinel, Fr. sentinelle (one who keeps his beat or path, O. Fr. sente), as if like centurion, connected with Lat. centum. Sir J. Turner speaks of "the forlorn centinels, whom the French call perdus."—Pallas Armata, p. 218 (1683).

Two men who were centinels ran away.—Horace Walpole, Letters (1752), vol. ii. p. 286.

Coming up to the house where at that time some centinells were placed, and getting out of her coach "she" says, make way there, I am the Duchess of Devonshire.—Life of Bp. Frampton (ed. T. S. Evans), p. 194.

Spenser has centonell (F. Q. I. ix. 41), Marlowe centronel (Dido, II. i.).

CENTO, a poem made up of scraps of different verses, Lat. cento, as if of a hundred pieces (centum), is a corrupted form of the Greek kentrôn, of the same meaning, originally a patch-work, from centron, a prick (or stitch ?).

CENTRE, } an architectural term
CENTERING, } for the wooden mould
CENTRY, } or frame upon which an arch is built, would seem, naturally enough, to be the centre (Lat. centrum) around which the masonry is constructed. It is really an alteration of Fr. cintré, "a centry or mould for an Arch," Cotgrave; cintrer, to mould an arch, from Lat. cincturare, to encircle, cinctura, a girdle, It. cintura.

CENTRY-GARTH, an old name for a burying-ground, is a corruption of centry, cemetery, cemetery (Glossary of Architecture, Parker).

At Durham the unworthy dean . . . destroyed the tombs in the Centerie garth.—M. E. C. Walcott, Traditions and Customs of Cathedrals, p. 26.

CESS, a word used in the southern counties of England and in Ireland to call dogs to their food, or to encourage them to eat. "Cess, boy, cess!" is no doubt another form of the old word osse (Palsgrave, 1530), or sos, dogs' meat, Gæl. sos, a mess.

Sos, how(nd)ysmete. Cantabrum. — Prompt. Parvulorum, ab. 1440.

Cess-pool is of the same origin (see Skeat, Et. Dict. s. v.).

CESS, a tax, a mis-spelling of sess, from assess, under the misleading influence of Lat. census, It. censo, "a sessing," Florio.

CHAFF, badinage, as if light, fruitless talk, conversational husks (like Ger. kaff, (1) chaff, (2) idle words; A. Sax. ceaf), would seem to be the same word as Lincoln's chaff, to chatter (Dut. keffen), old Eng. chefle, cheafle, idle talk; N. Eng. chaff, the jaw; A. Sax. ceaf, O. E. chawl, to chide, "give jaw;" Cleveland chaff, to banter (Icel. káfu). The Ancren Riwle warns against words that "uleoten 3eond to world ase deð muchel cheafle" (p. 72)—i. e. flit over the world as doth much idle-talk, and says that the false anchorers "chefleð of idel" (p. 128)—chattereth idly. The phrase "to chaff a person," i. e. to make fun of him, to ply him with jeering remarks, was probably influenced by chafe, to make hot, to exasperate (Fr. chaffer), as in the following—

A testy man . . . chaffs at every trifle.—Bp. Hall, Contemplations, Bk. vii. 2.

The boys watched the stately barques . . . or chafed the fishermen whose boats heaved on the waves at the foot of the promontory.—F. W. Farrar, Eric, p. 155 (1859).

"Why then," quoth she, "thou drunken ass, Who bid thee here to prate?" . . .

And thus most tauntingly she *chaf*t

Against poor silly Lot.

The Wanton Wife of Bath, l. 40 (Child's Ballads, vol. viii. p. 154).

A thirde, perhaps, was hard chaffing with the bayle of his husbandry for gevinge viiid. a day this deere yeer to day laborers.—Sir J. Harrington, Treatise on Playe, Nugæ Antiquæ, vol. ii. p. 176.

CHAMOIS-LEATHER is considered by Wedgwood to have only an accidental resemblance to the name of the chamois, or wild goat, and to be a corrupted form of the older word shammy. This he compares with Ger. sämisch, Swed. samsk, which some explain as Samogitian [Icel. Sám-land in Russia] leather; but he prefers connecting with Dut. sam, soft and pliable, Prov. Eng. semmit (Ger. sämisch, soft). In most European languages, however, this leather is called by the name of the chamois or shamoy. See chamois and ysard in Cotgrave, Ger. gamsenleder, Swed. stengetsläder; cf. old Eng. cheverel, from Fr. chevreul, the chamois or wild goat. It is perhaps worth noting that in the Gipsy language cham is leather, chamische, leathern (Borrow), tschamm (Pott).

CHAMPAIGN, a flat or plain country (Deut. xi. 30; Ezek. xxxvii. 2, marg.), a corruption of the older and more correct form, champion, or champion, in Shakespeare champaign (Lear, i. 1)—the g (as in Fr. champagne, It. campagna) being inserted from perhaps a supposed connexion with pagus, paganus. Compare Fr. compagne, Ger. kompan, a companion, one who eats bread (Lat. panis) with (cum) another, = commensalis; and see E. Agnel, Influence du Langage Populaire, p. 112.

CHANCE-MEDLEY, an accidental encounter, is said to be a corruption of Fr. chaude meslée, or melée, a mingling, broil, or skirmish, in the heat of the moment, and not in cold blood. See CHAUDMALLET, L. Lat. chaudmella (Spelman).

Joab for obeying the King's letter and putting Uriah but to chance-medley is condemned for it.—Bp. Andrewes, Pattern of Catechistical Doctrine, 1641 (Anglo-Catholic Lib.), p. 184.

CHANGELING, a child changed, also a fool, a silly fellow (Bailey); an oaf or elvish child left in exchange by the fairies for a healthy one they have stolen away. "The word changeling implies one almost an idiot, evincing what was once the popular creed on this subject; for as all the fairy children were a little backward of their tongue, and seemingly idiots, therefore stunted and idiotical children were supposed changelings" (Brand. Pop. Antiq. ii. p. 74). The word is probably not a hybrid, but formed from old Eng. change, a fool, chang, cang, kang, foolish, which occur repeatedly in the Anceren Riwle (ab. 1225); the popular superstition, as in other cases, being invented afterwards to explain the word.

We beoð changes þet weneð mid lihtleapes buggen eche blisse.—Anceren Riwle, p. 362 (MS. C.).

(We be fools that ween to buy eternal bliss with trifles.)

þis is al þes canges blisse.—Id. p. 214.

Compare the following:—

From thence a Faery thee unweeting reft,
There as thou slepst in tender swadling band,

And her base Elfin brood there for thee left:
Such men do Changelinges call, so chaung'd by Faeries theft.

Spenser, F. Queene, I. x. 65 (ed. Morris).

When larks 'gin sing/ Away we fling,
And babes new-born steal as we go

An Elf instead/ We leave in bed,
And wind out laughing, ho, ho, ho!

Pranks of Puck, Illustrations of Fairy Mythology, p. 169 (Shaks. Soc.).

O that it could be proved

That some night-tripping fairy had exchanged

In cradle-clothes our children where they lay.
Shakespeare, 1 Hen. IV. i. 1, l. 86.

Lament, lament, old abbies,
The Faries lost command;
They did but change priests babies,
But some have changd your land:
And all your children sprung from thence
Are now growne Puritanes;
Who live as changelings ever since
For love of your demaines.
Bp. Corbet, Poems, 1648, p. 214
(ed. 1807).

Candlelights Coach is made all of Horn, shauen as thin as Changelinges are.—Dekker, Seven deadly Sinnes of London, 1606, p. 29 (ed. Arber).

As for a Changeling, which is not one child changed for another, but one child on a sudden much changed from it self; and for a Jester . . . I conceive them not to belong to the present subject.—T. Fuller, Holy State, p. 170 (1648).

CHAP, a colloquial and rather vulgar word for a man in a disparaging sense—a fellow, a boy, as if shortened from chap-man (just as merchant is used in old writers for a fellow, e.g. Shakespeare's "saucy merchant:" Rom. and Jul. ii. 4; and customer in modern parlance has much the same meaning). It is really, however, derived from the Gipsy word for a child or boy, which is variously spelt chabo, tshabo, chavo, and chabby. Cuffen in queer-cuffen, an old slang term for a magistrate, and perhaps chuff, "cove," are the same words.

Cofe, a person. Cuffen, a manne.—T. Harman, Caveat for Cursetors, 1566.

An' ane, a chap that's damn'd auld farran,
Dundas his name.

Burns, Works, Globe ed. p. 11.

CHAR-COAL, a corruption of chark-coal, "to chark" being an old word for to burn wood (Bailey).

She burned no lesse through the cinders of too kinde affection, than the logge dooth with the helpe of charke-coales.—Tell-Troth, The Passionate Morrice, 1593, p. 80 (Shaks. Soc.).

Oh if this Coale could be so charcked as to make Iron melt out of the stone.—Fuller, Worthies, ii. 253.

To charke seacole in such manner as to render it usefull for the making of Iron.—Id. ii. 332.

It [peat] is like wood charcked for the smith.—Samuel Johnson, A Journey to the Hebrides.

I saw Sir John Winter's new project of charring sea-coale.—J. Evelyn, Diary, July 11, 1656.

Charck-coal was no doubt the coal that charks (Prov. Eng.), that is, clinks, or gives a metallic sound; W. Cornwall cherk or charc, a half-burnt cinder. Cf. clinker. Wycliffe has charkeith = creeks, Amos, ii. 13. Prof. Skeat is, I think, mistaken in giving char, to turn, as the first part of the word (Etym. Dict.); but char-k (like har-k, tal-k, &c.) may be a frequentative of char. Kaltschmidt, in his English-German Dictionary (Leipsc, 1837), gives "Chark-coals, Charks, Holzkohlen." "Chark, verkohlen (Holz)." Compare CHIN-COUGH.

CHARE THURSDAY, the Thursday in Passion Week, the day before Good Friday, Ger. Char-freytag, from an old word cara, grief, mourning; see CARE SUNDAY. Perhaps a connexion was imagined with the French chair, flesh, because "Upon Chare Thursday Christ brake bread unto his disciples, and bad them eat it, saying it was his flesh and blood."—Shepherd's Kalendar [Nares].

CHARLES' WAIN, a corruption of A. Sax. Carles wæn, Ceorles wæn, the constellation of the churl's (or husbandman's) waggon, Swed. Karl-vagnen, Dan. Karls-vognen, Scot. Charlewan (G. Douglas, Aeneid, p. 239, ed. 1710).

Nares says it was so named in honour of Charlemagne! English writers generally twisted it into a compliment to Charles I. or II.; e.g. a curious volume bears the title: "The most Glorivous Star or Celestial Constellation of the Pleiades or Charles Waine. Appearing and Shining most brightly in a Miraculous manner in the Face of the Sun at Noon day at the Nativity of our Sacred Sovereign King Charles II. . . . Never any Starre having appeared before at the birth of any (the Highest humane Hero) except our Saviour. By Edw. Mathew, 1662."

May Peace once more
Descend from Heav'n upon our tottering
Shore,
And ride in Triumph both in Land and Main,
And with her Milk-white Steeds draw Charles
his Wain.

J. Howell, The Vote or Poem-Royal, 1641.

In England it goes by the name of "King Charles' Wain."—J. F. Blake, Astronomical Myths, p. 59.

Septemtrio, þone hatað læwede menn
carles-wæn. (Septemtrio, which unlearned men call carl's-wain.)—Wright, Popular Treatises on Science in the Middle Ages, p. 16, Cockayne, Leechdoms, iii. 270.

Ursa Major is also known as the Plough, A. Sax. þisl; similarly the Greeks called it Hámawa, the waggon, the Latins plaustrum, septem-triones, temo, the Gauls Arthur's chariot; Icel. vagn and Oðin's vagn; Heb. ás, the bier.

Weever says the "Seuen Babaurers [?] in heaven" in the epitaph of Archbishop Theodore, are the Seuen starres in Charles Waine.

Funerall Monuments, p. 248 (1631).
Brittaine doth vnder those bright starres
remaine,
Which English Shepherds, Charles his waine, doe name;

But more this Ile is Charles, his waine,
Since Charles her royall wagoner became.

Sir John Davies, Poems, vol. ii. p. 237
(ed. Grosart).

Augustus had native notes on his body and belly after the order and number in the stars of Charles' Wain.—Sir Thomas Browne, Works, vol. ii. p. 536.

CHARLOTTE, the name of a confectioner's sweet dish, as a Charlotte Russe, seems to have no connexion with the feminine name, but to be a corruption of old Eng. "Charlet, dyschemete. Pepo."—Prompt. Parv. 1440; Forme of Cary, p. 27; which is perhaps (as Dr. Pegge thought) a derivation of Fr. chair, flesh being one of the chief ingredients of it. Mr. Way supposes it to have been a kind of omelet. But to judge by the following recipe it must have been more like a custard.

Charlet.

Take swetttest mylke, þat þou may have,
Colour hit with safron, so God þe save;
Take fresshe porke and sethe hit wele,
And hew hit smalle every dele;
Swyng eyryn, and do þer to;
Set hit over þe fyre, þenne
Boyle hit and sture lest hit brenne;
Whenne hit welles up, þou schalt hit kele
With a litel ale, so have þou cele;
When hit is inoze, þou sett hit doune,
And kepe hit lest hit be to broune.

Liber Cure Cocorum, 15th cent. p. 11,
ed. Morris.

Hoc omlaccinium, charlyt.—Wright's Vocabularies (15th cent.) p. 241.

CHARM, applied to the song of birds, as if descriptive of their enchanting or seductivestrains (cf. Fr. serin, a canary, lit. a "siren"),

Sweet is the breath of Morn, her rising sweet

With charm of earliest birds.

Milton, Par. Lost, iv. 641, has nothing to do with charm, an enchantment (from Lat. carmen, a song), but is Prov. Eng., charm, chirm, a confused murmuring noise, as, "They are all in a charm" (Wilts. Akerman), "They keep up sitch a chirm" (E. Anglia, Spurdens). A. Sax. cyrn, ceorm, a noise, uproar (cf. ceorian, to murmur, O. E. chirre, to chirp).

Sparuwe is a cheaterinde brid, cheateres euer ant chirmeð.

(Sparrow is a chattering bird, chattereth ever and chirmeth.)

Ancren Riwe, p. 152 (ab. 1225).

How heartsome is't to see the rising plants!
To hear the birds chirm o'er their pleasing rants.

A. Ramsay, The Gentle Shepherd, i. 1.

So Spenser speaks of the shepherd,
Charming his oaten pipe unto his peres.

Colin Clout's Come Home Again, l. 5.

Whilst favourable times did us afford
Tru libertie to chaunt our charmes at will?

The Teares of the Muses, l. 244.

CHARMED-MILK, or Charm-milk, a North Eng. word for sour milk (Wright), is a corruption (not probably of charm (i.e. churn) milk, buttermilk, but) of char-milk, i.e. charred or turned (sour). Cf. Kentish charred drink, drink turned sour, Lincolnshire charked (Skinner, 1671). Here the m of milk has got attached to char-, as by a contrary mistake in char(k)-coal the k has merged into the -coal.

Lait beuré, Butter milke; charme milke.

Nomenclator, 1585.

CHARTER-HOUSE, a corruption of Chartreuse (sc. maison), It. Certosa, a house or monastery of the Carthusian order of monks, so called from the mountain of Chartreuse in Dauphiné, where St. Bruno built his first monastery.

CHASEMATES, in Heywood's Hierarchie, is a corruption of casemates, q. v.

CHAUDMALET, an Aberdeen word for a blow or beating, is evidently, as Jamieson observes, a relic of another Scotch word chaudmellé, a sudden broil or quarrel, Fr. chaude mêlée.

CHAMBERLING, an old Anglicized form of Fr. chamberlain, O. Fr. chambrelene (cf. O. H. Ger. chamerling).

Luue is his chamberling.

Ancren Riwe, p. 410 (ab. 1225).

CHAW, a frequent old spelling of Jaw (A. V. Ezek. xxix. 4; xxxviii. 4), chewe in Surrey's Sonnets, as if that which chaws or chews (Bible Word-Book, s. v.) is not probably a derivation of A. Sax. ceowan, to chew, having no immediate representative word in A. Saxon, but, like jowl, A. Sax. ceole, ceaf, geagl, is in direct relation with O. Dut. karwe, Dan. kjæve, a jaw; cf. Scand. kaf, Prov. Eng. chaffs, "the chaps," Greek gamphai, Sansk. jambha, the jaws (see Skeat, s. v. Champ), jabh, "to gape," (Benfey). The word was probably influenced by Fr. joue, the cheek, O. Fr. joe. Cf. O. E. "joue, or chekebone, Mandibula," Prompt. Parv., and chaul (Wycliffe), charle, iarle, old forms of jowl.

Leuel-ranged teeth be in both chaws alike.
—Holland, Pliny N. Hist. xi. 37.

Here's a Conqueror that's more violent than them both, he takes a dead man out of my chaws, who stinks, and hath been four days in the sepulchre.—Hacket, Century of Sermons, p. 569 (1675).

CHECK-LATON, a kind of gilt leather.
In a jacket, quilted richly rare
Upon checklaton, he was straungely dight.
Spenser, F. Q. VI. vii. 43.

It is a corruption of the O. Eng. "cilatoun," as if it were checkered or chequered, and adorned with the metal called laton. It is the Fr. ciclaton, Sp.
ciclaton and ciclada, from Latin cyclus,
cycladis.

CHEERUPPING CUP, an old phrase for an exhilarating glass, which occurs in the old ballad, The Greenland Voyage :—

To Ben's, there's a cheerupping cup;
Let's comfort our hearts.

(Nares, ed. Halliwell and Wright.)

As if "the cup that cheers" and inebriates, is a corrupt form of chirruping cup, or "chirping cup," in Howell, Fam. Letters, 1650, i.e. which makes one chirp or sing (Bailey).

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin,
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle.
B. Jonson, Rules for the Tavern Academy
(Works, p. 726).

CHEESE, in the slang phrase "That's the cheese," meaning it is all right, comme il faut, is literally "That's the thing." The expression, like many other cant words, comes to us from the Rommany or Gipsy dialect, in which cheese, representing the Hindustani chiz, denotes a thing. In the slang of the London streets this is further metamorphosed into "That's the Stilton," and "That's the Cheshire."

CHEESE-BOWL, an old English name for the poppy (Gerarde, Skinner, &c.). "Cheseballe, Pavaver."—Promptorium Parvulorum. It is a corruption of the word chesbol, chesbowe, or chasboll, so called from the shape of the capsule, Fr. chasse, in which its boll is enclosed.

Oliette, Poppy, Chesbols or Cheesebowles.—Cotgrave.

Drummond spells it chasbow.

The brave carnation speckled pink here shined,

The violet her fainting head declined,
Beneath a drowsy chasbow.

Poems, p. 10 (Lib. Old Authors).

CHEQUER-TREE, an old and provincial name for the service tree, is said to be a corruption of the word choker (or choke-pear), which was also applied to it (Prior).

CHERRYBUM, a provincial word (Devonshire, Holderness, &c.), for a cherub, a corrupted form of cherubim.

CHEST-NUT, O. Eng. chesten, would more properly bear the form of chastnut or castrnut, as we see when we compare its congeners, Dut., Dan., and Ger. kastanie, Fr. chastagne, châtaigne, Lat. castanea, Greek kástanon, i. e. the tree brought from Castana in Pontus.

Chaucer correctly spells it chastein. The word was probably considered to be a compound of chest and nut, with some reference to the case within which it is enclosed. Compare

Like as the Chest-nut (next the meat) within
Is cover'd (last) with a soft slender skin,
That skin inclos'd in a tough tawny shel,
That shel in-cas't in a thick thistly fell.

Sylvester, Du Burtas, p. 299 (1621).

Bosworth gives an Anglo-Saxon form, cisten-beám, which is an evident assimilation to ciste, a chest. The Irish understood the word to be chaste nut, nux casta, calling it geanm-chnu. The following curious form occurs in Libivus Discovivus:—

Sir Lyhins noe longer abode, but after him ffast he rode,
& under a chest of tree.

Percy Folio MS., vol. ii. p. 461,
l. 1261.

CHESTS, "The playe at Chests," was the old name of the game of chess, from a false analogy perhaps to "the game at tables," i. e. backgammon.

They respect not him except it be to play a game at Chests, Primer, Saut, Maw, or such like.—Lingua, sig. E verso, 1632.

The title of a curious old volume is, "The Pleasaunt and wittie Playe of the Cheasts renewed, with instructions how to learne it easely, and to play it well. Lately translated out of Italian and French: and now set forth in English by Iames Rowbotham. Printed at London by Roulande Hall." 1562.

CHICKEN-HEARTED is perhaps identical with the Scot. kicken- or kighen-hearted, faint-hearted, which Jamieson connects with Icel. and Swed. kiken-a, to lose spirit. The Cleveland kecken-hearted means squeamish, and this Mr. Atkinson compares with old Dan. kiekken, squeamish, Cleveland, keck, kecken, to be fastidious.

CHICKIN, a Venetian coin, checkin (Skinner). "An hundred chickins of very good golde."—Passenger of Benvenuto, 1612. (Nares.)

I am sorry to hear of the Trick that Sir John Ayres put upon the Company by the Box of Hail-shot . . . which he made the World believe to be full of Chequins and Turky Gold.—Howell, Letters (1626), Bk. I. iv. 28.

It is a corruption of the Italian coin, sequine, also found in the form chiquinie, and cecchines (Ben Jonson, Volpone, i. 4.). It is the It. cecchino, zecchino, from ceccare, zeccare, to coin, zecca, the mint, Arab. sikkah, a stamp or die (cf. Fr. cichenie in Cotgrave = sequenie, a carter's frock). There is a similar Anglo-Indian term chickeen, chick, and sicca, equivalent to four rupees. Hence perhaps the slang phrases, chicken stakes, chicken hazard.

"And a little chicken hazard at the M—, afterwards," said Mr. Marsden.—Bulwer Lytton, Night and Morning. ch. ix.

CHICK-PEA, a corruption of O. Eng. cich-pease, It. cece, Lat. cicer.

If the soile be light and lean, feed it with such grain or forage seed as require no great nourishment . . . excepting the cich-pease.—Holland, Pliny's Naturall History, tom. i. p. 576, fol. 1634.

CHILD, as used for a knight, is not found in the oldest English, though we read of Child Maurice, Child Waters, and the Child of Ell, in the Percy Folio MS.

Christ thee saue, good child of Ell!
Christ saue thee & thy steede!

Vol. i. p. 133.

It is best remembered by reason of Lord Byron's Child Harold's Pilgrimage. The word is not, as might be supposed, analogous to Span. infante, a prince, from Lat. infans, a child; or to old Eng. valet, varlet, a title of honour, originally a boy. It is in all probability the result of confounding two distinct words, A. Sax. beorn, a chief, hero, or prince (M. E. burn), and A. Sax. bearn (M. E. barn), a child or "bairn."

The latter word is from A. Sax. béran, to bear or bring forth, one who is borne (Lat. fero), while beorn is akin to Gaulish brennos, a king, Ir. barn, a nobleman, Pers. bávi, Sansk. bharatha, a sustainer, from the same root bhar (Lenormant). Bearn, he who is borne (by his mother), and beorn, he who bears up or supports (the state, &c.), are thus radically connected. Compare also A. Sax. bora (bearer), a king. In the following line we have the two words together:

William þat bold barn þat alle burnes praisen.
William of Palerne, l. 617, 1350
(ed. Skeat).

CHILDREN'S DAISY, a Yorkshire name for the "hen and chicken" variety of the common daisy, is no doubt a corruption of the childing daisy, i. e. the daisy producing young ones, just as childing cudweed is a name for filago germanica (Britten and Holland). Shakespeare, it will be remembered, speaks of "the childing autumn," i. e. fruit-bearing.

CHIN-COUGH, the whooping cough, has nothing to do with the chin, but should properly be spelt chink-cough, being the same word as Scot. kinkhosh, Dutch kinkhōst, Ger. keichhusten, a cough that takes one with a kink, i. e. a catch in the breath, a total suspension of it (lit. a hitch or twist in a rope, Icel. kengr). Similarly char-coal should properly be chark-coal, and pea-goose, as we see from the early editions of Beaumont and Fletcher, and Ascham's Scholemaster, was originally peak-goose, peaking or peakish meaning simple. Compare also clog-weed, a corrupt form of the name keyc-logge (i. e. keck-lock), anciently given to the cow-parsnip.

Quinte, the French word for a severe cough that comes in fits (? as if every fifth hour), seems to be for quinque, a modification of the same word, Belg. kincken, Ger. keichen, which gives us our chincough; just as in the Rouchi dialect quintousse is for quincousse = Belg. kinchoest: (compare old Fr. aïnte for ainque, encre, and quintefeuille for quinguefeuille). In the dialect of Bayeux the form is clinke, in the Wallon of Liège caikiole, caicoule, whence perhaps coqueluche, whooping-cough (Scheler). It is also spelt kin-cough (Lincoln), king-cough, or kink-cough, a cough that takes one with a paroxysm called a chink or kink. (Compare Devonshire kick, to have an impediment in one's speech.) "þis erbe y-dronke in olde wyne helpiþ þe kynges hoste," and "skyrewhite" (= skerret) heals "þe chynke and þe olde coghe." (15th cent. MS., Way, Prompt. Parv. p. 97.)

It was well known that he never had but one brother, who died of the chin-cough.—Graves, The Spiritual Quixote, vol. i. p. 36.

Here my lord and lady took such a chink of laughing, that it was some time before they could recover.—Henry Brooke, The Fool of Quality, vol. i. p. 95 [Hall, Modern English, p. 220].

Hobhole Hob!

Ma' bairn's gotten 't kink cough,
Tak't off! tak't off!

Charm in Henderson, Folklore of N. Counties, p. 228.

CHINNER, a word for a grin in use at Winchester College, is an evident corruption of Lat. cachinnus. (H. C. Adams, Wykehamica, p. 418.)

CHISEL, a slang term for to cheat, as if to take a slice off anything (! Slang Dict.), is Scottish chizzel, to cheat, to act deceitful, either a frequent. form of chouse, or from Belg. kwenzelen, to play the hypocrite (Jamieson). [?]

CHITTYFACED, a colloquial expression for a baby-faced or lean-faced person (Wright), as if having the face of a chit—a contemptuous word for a child or little girl. "Chitteface, a meagre starveling young child."—Bailey. Another spelling is chicheface. E. Cornwall chitter-faced, as if from chitter, thin. All these words are corruptions of Chichevache, a mediæval monster who was fabled to devour only patient wives, and being therefore in a chronic state of starvation for want of food was made a byword for leanness. Its name is formed from old Eng. and Fr. chiche, meagre, starving, and vache, a cow. In Lydgate's ballad of Chichevache and Bicornie occurs the following description of this "long horned beste,"

Chichevache this is my name;
Hungry, megre, sklendre, and leene,
To show my body I have grete shame,
For hunger I feele so great teene:
On me no fatnesse will be seene;
By cause that pasture I finde none
Therfor I am but skyn and boon.

Dodsey's Old Plays, vol. xii. p. 303, ed. 1827.

Chaucer warns women not to be like Grisilde,

Lest Chichevache you swalwe in hir entraille!

The Clerkes Tale, l. 9064 (ed. Tyrwhitt), where another reading is Chechiface; and so in Cotgrave, Chiche-face, a chichiface, sneake-bill, etc.

CHOKE, a name popularly given to the inner part of the artichoke cone (Cynara Scolymus), or "flower al of threds" as Gerarde defines it (Herball, p. 991), as if the part that would choke or stick in one's throat if swallowed, has arisen manifestly from a misunderstanding of the word artichoke.

"The choke" of this vegetable was authoritatively defined in The Field (Sept. 21, 1878) to be "the internal or filamentous portion."

CHOKEFUL, completely filled, as if so full that one is likely to choke, is a corrupt form of chock-full, or chuck-full, i. e. full of the chock, chuck, or throat (Prov. Eng.). Cf. O. Scot. chokkeis, the jaws, Icel. kok, the gullet.

I like a pig's chuck.—M. A. Courtney, W. Cornwall Glossary, E. D. S.

CHOPS, the jaws, as if the instruments which chop, mince, or cut up one's food (Dut. Ger. kappen, Gk. kóptein, to cut), is an incorrect form of chaps, N. Eng. chaffs, chafts, jaws, Swed. käft, Icel. kjaptr (Skeat). See CHAW.

CHRYSOBLE, a form of crucible (Low Lat. crucibulum, a little crusc or crock), used by Bishop Jeremy Taylor as if called from the gold, chrysos (Gk. chrysos), which it served to melt. See Trench, English, Past and Present, Lect. V. With crusc compare Dutch kroes, kruyse, Dan. kruus. The word crucible itself, Lat. crucibulum (O. Eng. croselett, croislet, Chaucer), owes its form to a mistaken connexion with Lat. crucis (crux), a cross, the sign sometimes marked upon the vessel as an omen of good.

Peter. What a life doe I lead with my master, nothing but blowing of bellows, beating of spirits, and scraping of croislets!

Lilly, Gallathea, ii. 2 (Works, i. 233, ed. Fairholt.)

CHURN-OWL, a popular name for the nightjar, seems to be a corruption of its other name jar-owl, or churr-owl, so called from "the whirring or jarring noise which it makes when flying" (H. G. Adams), with an oblique reference to its reputed habit of milk-stealing, whence its names caprimulgus and goatsucker. This is supported by the name night-char, another form of night-jar, Cleveland eve-churr. In the latter dialect the bird is said to churr in its nocturnal flight, i. e. make a whirring sound (A. Sax. ceoriam).—Atkinson.

Its loud churring or jarring note, as it wheels round a tree or clump of trees, is often enough heard by many a one to whom its form and size and plumage are nearly or utterly strange.—J. C. Atkinson, Brit. Birds' Eggs, p. 70.

CHYLLE, an old English term for an herb, is defined cilium vel psillium [=Gk. psýllion, flea-wort] in Promptorium Parvulorum, and is evidently corrupted from that word under the influence of "chyllyn for colde, fri-gucio."—Id.

CHYMIST, a mis-spelling of chemist, common among members of the pharmaceutical profession—I have noticed it on two apothecaries' shops within a stone's throw of the Crystal Palace—as if from Gk. chymos (χυμος), the art of distilling juices from simples, &c. Chemistry, as well as alchemy, is derived from chemia, the science of medicine, literally the Egyptian art, from Chemi, Egypt, where the art of medicine was cultivated in the darkest ages of antiquity (Bunsen, Egypt, vol. i. p. 8). Chemî means either "the black soil," or the land of Ham or Khem (the sun-burnt or swarthy), from the Shemitic root ham or cham, to be hot (Rawlinson, Herodotus, vol. ii. p. 19). In the Middle Ages books of alchemy, necromancy, and magic were ascribed to Ham.—B. Gould, Old Test. Legends, vol. i. p. 138; Faber, Prophetical Dissertations, vol. ii. p. 368. Chemia was the native name of Egypt, also Kame, i. e. Black (Plutarch, De Is. et Osir. xxxiii.) = Ham (Psalms, lxxviii. cv.). Eupolemos says that the word Ham was also used for soot.

Ewald thinks that the name refers to the dark, sooty complexion of the Egyptians (History of Israel, vol. i. 281). The Arabs call darkness, "the host of Ham" (jayshi hām).

Homer speaks of the infinity of drugs produced in Egypt, Jeremiah of its "many medicines," and Pliny makes frequent allusion to the medicinal plants produced in that country.—Wilkinson, Ancient Egyptians, ed. Birch, vol. ii. p. 417.

He must be a good Chymist who can extract Martyr out of Malefactor.—Fuller, Worthies, ii. 497.

Honey, and that either distilled by bees those little chymists (and the pasture they fed on was never a whit the barer for their biting) or else rained down from heaven, as that which Jonathan tasted.—Fuller, The Holy Warre, p. 29 (1647).

When we sin, God, the great Chymist, thence Draws out th' elixir of true penitence.

Herrick, Noble Numbers, Works, ii. 413 (ed. Hazlitt).

T. Adams has chyme, to extract chemically.

What antidote against the terror of conscience can be chymed from gold?—God's Bounty, Sermons, i. 153.

CHYMME BELLE, an old English term, is defined in the Promptorium Parvulorum (c. 1440) by cimbalum, a cymbal (old Eng. chymbale), of which word it is probably a corruption, Lat. cymbalum, Gk. kūmbalon.

His chymbe-belle he doth ryng.

K. Alisaunder.

The word being mistaken for a compound, chymbe or chime acquired an independent existence.

CIDERAGE, an old name for the plant waterpepper, Polygonum hydropiper, is the French cidrage, which is a corruption of cul-rage, also spelt courage (Cotgrave).

CEILING, } the former spelling being CEILING, } that of the authorized version (1 Kings, vi. 15; Ezek. xli. 16 marg.), as if connected with Fr. ciel, It. cielo, a canopy or tester, Low Lat. cœlum, the interior of a roof. It seems to be a corrupted form of seeling (Cotgrave, s. v. Lambris), from the old verb to seel, meaning to pannel, or wainscot, e. g. "Plancher, to seele or close with boards."—Cotgrave. This is the verb to ciel in A. V. 2 Chron. iii. 5, Jer. xxii. 14, i. e. to cover with planking. Wedgwood thinks to seel here is the same as seal = to make close. Cf. "ceel, sigillum," "ceelyñ wythe syllure, celo."—Prompt. Parv. "These wallys shal be ceelyd with cyprusse."—Horman. But Prof. Skeat holds ciel, cœlum, to be the true origin: c and s are certainly often confused in early writers, as searcloth for cerecloth.

Loe how my cottage worships Thee aloof,
That vnder ground hath hid his head, in proofe

It doth adore Thee with the seeling lowe.

G. Fletcher, Christ's Victorie on Earth,
19 (1610).

As when we see Aurora, passing gay,
With opals paint the seeling of Cathay.
Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 25 (1621).

The glory of Israel was laid in a Cratch,
. . . and dost thou permit us to live in seeled houses?—Bp. Hackett, Century of Sermons,
1675, p. 9.

CINDER is for O. Eng. sinder, syndyr, A. Sax. sinder, Ger. sinter, Icel. sindr (with which Cleasby compares Lat. scintilla, a spark), but conformed to Fr. cendre, Lat. ciner. In Welsh sinidr, sindw, is scoria, dross, cinders. I find that this also is the view of Prof. Skeat, who identified the word with Sansk. sindhu, "that which flows," slag, dross. (Etym. Dict.)

Scoria, sinder.—Wright's Vocabulary, ii. 120, col. 1.

[The Glossary here printed is from a MS. of the eighth century; almost the oldest English MS. in existence. This takes the word back nearly to A. D. 700.—W. W. S.]

CINGULAR, a wild boar in his fifth year (Wright), as if from Fr. cing, five (Compare cincater, a man in his fiftieth year, Id.), is a corrupt form of the Low Lat. singularis (epur), a wild boar, so called from its solitary habits (cf. Greek μόνος, the lonely animal, the boar). Hence comes Fr. sanglier, It. cinghiale (Diez).

When he is foure yere, a boar shall he be,
From the sounder [= herd] of the swyne thenne departyth he ;

A synguler is he soo, for alone he woll go.
Book of St. Albans, 1496, sig. d. i.

They linc for the most part solitary and alone, and not in heards.—Topsell, Fourfooted Beasts, 1608, p. 696.

CITRON, a musical instrument, a corrupted form of cittern ("most barbers can play on the cittern."—B. Jonson, Vision of Delight), or cither, Lat. cithara, a lyre or "guitar."

Shawms, Sag-buts, Citrons, Viols, Cornets, Flutes.—Syluester, Du Bartas, p. 301 (1621).

CIVET, as a term of cookery, Fr. civet de lièvre, denotes properly the chives, Fr. cive (Lat. cepa), or small onions with which the hare is jugged, to form this dish.—Kettner, Book of the Table, p. 127. Cotgrave gives "civette, a chive, little scallion, or chiboll," and "civé, a kind of black sauce for a hare."

CIVIL, in the Shakespearian comparison, "Civil as an orange" (Much Ado about Nothing, ii. 1), is evidently a jocular play on Seville, a place famous for its oranges.

He never learned his manners in Swill.

Apus and Virginia, 1575 (O. P. xii. 375, ed. 1827).

ix tonne of good Ciaill oyle [i.e. Seville oil].—Arnold's Chron. (1502); repr. 1811, p. 110

Thei had freighted dyuers shippis at Cyuill with diuers merchaundicis.—Id. p. 130.

What Ciuill, Spaine, or Portugale affordeth . . .

The boundlesse Seas to London Walles presenteth.

R. Johnson, Londons Description, 1607.

CLEAR-EYE, } old popular names for SEE-BRIGHT, } the plant salvia sclarea, are corruptions of the word clary, otherwise called Godes-eie or oculus Christi. On the strength of these names it was regarded as a proper ingredient for eye-salves (Prior). Gerard says it is called "in high Dutch scharlach [scarlet!], in low Dutch scharleye, in English Clarie or Clecre etc."—Herbal, p. 627 (1597). See GOODY'S EYE.

CLEFT, a fissure, so spelt as if a direct derivative of cleave, is more properly clift, O. Eng. cluft, clifte, Swed. klyft, a cave (Skeat, Et. Dict.).

be deuyll stode as lyoun raumpant
Many folk he keighte to hell clifte.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 205, l. 258.

I will put thee in a clift of the rock.—4. V. Exodus, xxxiii. 22.

Than I loked betwene me and the lyght,
And I spyed a clufte bothe large and wyde.

J. Heywood, A Mery Play between Iohan Iohan the Husband, Tyb his Wife, &c.

CLEVER. There is little doubt, as I have elsewhere contended (Word-hunter, ch. x.), that this word is a modern corruption of the very common old Eng. adjective deliver, meaning active, nimble, dexterous, Fr. delivrer, free in action. It is probable that deliverly was the form that first underwent contraction in rapid pronunciation—thus, d'liverly, gliverly, cleverly—and that deliver then followed suit (gliver, clever). The word was no doubt influenced by, and assimilated to, old Eng. cliver, quick in seizing or grasping (from cliven, Stratmann), capax. "Te deuel cliuer on sinnes" (O. E. Miscellany, p. 7, l. 221, Morris), Scottish, cleverus, "scho was so cleverus of her cluik" (Dunbar). Cf. O. Eng. cliver, a claw. This is well illustrated in the ballad of The Last Dying Words of Bonny Heck.

Where good stout hares gang fast awa,
So cliverly I did it claw,

With pith and speed.

But if my puppies ance were ready . . .
They'll be baith cliuer, keen, and beddy.

It is certain that clever did not come into use till deliver was already obsolete, and was at first regarded as a somewhat vulgar and colloquial term, like can't, don't, sha'n't, and other contractions. Prof. Skeat could not find an earlier example of the word than cleverly, in Hudibras, 1663. But Thos. Atkin, a correspondent of Fuller's, writing to him in 1657, says that one Machell Vivan, at the age of 110, "made an excellent good sermon, and went cleaverly through, without the help of any notes" (Worthies of England, ii. 195, ed. 1811). Cf. Prov. Eng. clever through, uninterrupted, without difficulty.

If it be soo yt all thyng go clwyer currant.—Paston Letters, 1470 (vol. iv. p. 451, ed. Fenn).

That is, dlyver (clwyer) current, run free and smooth.

His pen went, or pretended to go, as cleverly as ever.—Dickens, David Copperfield, ch. xv.

So Hood, in his valedictory poem to Dickens on his departure for America :

May he shun all rocks whatever !
And each shallow sand that lurks,
And his passage be as clever
As the best among his works.

A deceptive instance of a much earlier date appears in Sir S. D. Scott, Hist. of the Brit. Army, vol. i. p. 287, where a letter of Senleger's, 1543, is quoted describing the kernes as "bothe hardy and clever to serche woddes or maresses." The word in the original, however, is delyver (State Papers, vol. iii. p. 444, 1834). This unconscious substitution of the modern form for the earlier is interesting.

In the Prov. dialects clever still retains the old meaning of active, dexterous, well-shaped, handsome, as "a clever horse," "a clever wench." In the 17th century it was used in the sense of fit, proper, suitable, convenient.

It were not impossible to make an original reduction of many words of no general reception in England, but of common use in Norfolk, or peculiar to the East Angle countries; as . . . clever, matchly, dere, nicked, stingy, &c.—Sir T. Browne, Tracts, 1684 (Works, iii. 233).

I can't but think 'twould sound more clever,
To me and to my Heirs for ever.

Swift, Imit. of Horace, Bk. ii. sat. 6.

If you could write directly it would be clever.—Gray, Letters.

These clever apartments.—Cowper, Works, v. 290.

See Fized. Hall, Modern English, p. 220.

CLIPPER, a fast-sailing vessel, as if so named from its clipping pace through the water, like cutter from its cutting along, is derived by a natural metonymy from Ger. klepper, a racehorse or quick trotter. Compare Dan. klepper, Swed. klippare, Icel. klepphestur. Ger. klepper (formerly klöpfer, kleppher, and klöpfer) gets its name from the pace called klop (compare trot and trab), expressive of the clattering or clapping sound (klap) made by the horse's hooves as they go klipp-klapp or klip-und-klap (Grimm, Deutsches Wörterbuch, s. v.). Similarly the Latin poets use sonipes, "sounding-foot," as a synonym for a horse.

Clipper is still used in English for a fast-paced hunter.

When the country is deepest, I give you my word,

'Tis a pride and a pleasure to put him along,
O'er fallow and pasture he sweeps like a bird,

And there's nothing too high, nor too wide,
nor too strong;

For the ploughs cannot choke, nor the fences
can crop,

This clipper that stands in the stall at the top.

G. J. W. Melville, Songs and Verses, p. 99.

Mr. Blackmore, writing of the time of the Peninsula War, assigns a different origin, but not a correct one :

The British corvette Cleopatra-cum-Antonio was the nimblest little craft of all ever captured from the French; and her name had been reefed into Clipater first, and then into Clipper, which still holds way.—Alice Lorraine, vol. iii. p. 2.

CLOCK, a name for the common black-beetle in Ireland and the North of England, seems to be a compressed form (g'loch) of Scotch goloch, a beetle (Philological Trans., 1858, p. 104; Sternberg, Northampton Glossary). Cf. cloak, a blackbeetle (Dalyell, Darkier Superstitions of Scotland, p. 564).

In Scotland gelloch or gelloch is a contracted form of gavelock, an earwig, so called from its forked tail; gavelock also meaning a crowbar slightly divided at the end, A. Sax. gaflas, forks, gafaloc, a javelin. In the goloch, the allusion is to the fork-like antennæ. Jamieson gives clock-bee as synonymous with fleeing goloch, a species of beetle. See, however, Garnett, Philological Essays, p. 68.

CLOG-WEED, an old name of the cowparsnip, is a shortened form of keyclogge (Turner), i.e. keck-lock (A. Sax. leac), or kec-plant (Prior).

CLOSE SCIENCES, Gerard's name for the plant hesperis matronalis, is a corruption of close sciney, the double variety, as opposed to single sciney—sciney having arisen probably from its specific name Damascena being understood as Dame's scena. Compare its name Dame's violet (Prior).

Fr. "Matrones, Damask, or Dames Violets, Queens Gilloflowers, Rogues Gilloflowers, Close Sciences."—Cotgrave.

CLOUD-BERRIES, a popular name for the plant rubus chamaemorus, so called, according to Gerard, because they grow on the summits of high mountains.

Where the cloudes are lower than the tops of the same all winter long, whereupon the people of the countrie haue called them Cloud berries.—Herball, 1597, p. 1568.

More probably they get their name from old Eng. clúd, a cliff (Cockayne, Leechdoms, &c., vol. iii. Glossary).

CLOUTED CREAM, a corruption of clotted, as if it meant fixed or fastened; "clouted" properly meaning fixed with clouts or nails (Fr. clouette, clou). In a manner curiously similar, the Greek verbs gomphoó (γομφώω), to nail, and pégnunai (πηγνύναι), to fix, were applied to the thickening or curdling of milk.

CLOVER, is not, as it seems at first sight, and as Gay calls it, "the cloven grass," but a mis-spelling of the old Eng. and Scot. claver, A. Sax. clæfre, "clubs," Lat. clava. Cf. Fr. trèfle, "clubs" at cards (Prior). "Ossitriphylone, a kinde of Clauer or Trifolie."—Florio.

And every one her call'd-for dances treads
Along the soft-flow'r of the claver-grass.

G. Chapman, Homer's Hymns, To Earth, l. 26.

Cock, an Anglo-Irish verb meaning to bend down and point the ends of a horse's shoes in order to give him a surer footing in frosty weather, as if another usage of cock, to turn up, erect, or set upright, is corrupted from old Eng. calk or caulk, of the same meaning, which occurs in Kennett's Parochial Antiquities, 1695 (E. Dialect Soc. Ed. p. 9). The origin is Lat. calc-s, the heel, calceus, a shoe, calcare, to shoe; cf. calcare, to tread, whence O. Fr. causquer, O. E. caulk, "calk." Horse-shoes so treated were called calkins.

On this horse is Arcite Trotting the stones of Athens, which the calkins
Did rather tell than trample.

The Two Noble Kinsmen (1634), v. 4, 55 (ed. Littledale, New Shaks.
Soc.).

To cog is, I believe, the form used in modern English.

Ramplón, caukes on a horse-shoe.—Minshew, Span. Dict., 1623.

Calking, or caulking, of horseshoes, i.e. to turn up the two corners that a horse may stand the faster upon ice or smooth stones.—Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. (1695), E. D. S. B. 18.

Brockett has, "Cawker, an iron plate put upon a clog."

Cock, the faucet or stop-cock of a barrel, is perhaps that which caukes, or calks it, or keeps it from flowing, as a tent (O. Fr. cauque) does a wound when thrust into it.

COCK-A-HOOP, exulting, jubilant, has often been understood to mean with crest erect, like a triumphant cock, as if from a potential Fr. coq à hupe. Coles, Lat.-Eng. Dict., explains it by cristas erigere (cf. Fr. acoresté, having a great crest, or combe, as a cocke, cockit, proud, saucy, crest-risen, Cotgrave, and hupé, proud, pluming oneself on something). The older form however is "Cock on hoop," i.e. "the spiggot or cock being laid on the hoop, and the barrel of ale stunn'd, i.e. drunk without intermission, and so—at the height of Mirth and Jollity."—Bailey. In Fifeshire it is used for a bumper, or as an adj. = half seas over (Longmuir).

I have good cause to set the cocke on the hope and make gaudye chere.—Palsgrave, Lesclarissement, 1530.

Nares quotes from The Honest Ghost:

The cock-on-hoop is set,
Hoping to drink their lordships out of debt.

Folks, it seems, were grown cock-on-hoop—but the heegh leaks of the meety were sean brought lae.—W. Hutton, A Bran New Wark, l. 195 (E. D. S.).

However, it is to be noted that the effigy of a cock (the fowl) stuck above a hoop, was a common tavern sign in the olden time. The Cock on the Hoop is mentioned in a Clause Roll, 30 Henry VI., and still existed as a sign in Holborn in 1795.—Larwood and Hotten, Hist. of Signboards, p. 504.

COCKAPPAREL, a provincial word, quoted by Skinner (Etymologicon, s. v.), as of frequent use in Lincolnshire, and meaning "great pomp, great pride in a small matter;" he identifies with the French quelqu' appareil. Compare KICKSHAWs.

COCKATOO, a crested parrot, is not a derivation of cock, but a corruption of the older form cacatoo, which is from the Malayan kakatúa, Hindustani kákítúá, a word imitative of its cry, Fr. cacatoès, Dut. kaketoe (Sewel, 1706).

The Hebrew name tuccim seems to resemble the tutak, and tutyk of the Persians . . . meaning, perhaps, the crested parrot, which we call cacatoo.—Scripture Illustrated, Pt. i. p. 108 (1814).

Sir Thos. Herbert says that in Mauritius are

Cacatoes, a sort of Parrat whose nature may well take their name from κακὸν ᾠόν [evil egg] it is so fierce and so indomitable.—Travels, p. 403 (1665).

The Physick or Anatomie Schole, adorn'd with some rarities of natural things, hut nothing extraordinary save the skin of a Jaccall, a rarely colour'd Jacatoo or prodigious large parrot, &c.—J. Evelyn, Diary, July 11, 1654.

COCKATRICE, old Eng. cokedrill, cocodrille (Wychiffe), a fabulous beast supposed to be hatched by a cock from the eggs of a viper (O. Eng. atter), is a corrupted form of Sp. cocatríz, cocadriz, "a serpent called a Basiliske, or Cockatrice" (Minsheu), and that a corruption of cocodrillo, "a serpent, a Crocodill" (Id.), Fr. cocatriv. The same word as crocodile.

The death-darting eye of cockatrices.

Rom. and Jul. act iii. sc. 2.

Cocotryse, basiliscus, cocodrillus.—Prompt. Parv. (1440).

Idlenis is a cockadill and greate mischefe breeds.—The Mariage of Witt and Wisdome, p. 58 (Shaks. Soc. ed.).

The Welsh word is ceihog-neidr, exactly = cock-atter, or "cock-viper" (Spurrell).

COCK-BRAINED, light-headed, silly, is perhaps from Gaelic caoch, empty, hollow, Welsh coeg, foolish, empty, and so akin to O. Eng. cokes, a fool, "coax," to befool.

Doest thou aske, cock-braind fool?

R. Bernard, Terence in English, 1641, p. 162.

COCK-CHAFFER, probably a corruption of clock-chaffer. See CLOCK.

COCK-EYED, squinting, from Gaelic caog, to wink, shut one eye, squint (Skeat), akin to Lat. cæcus, blind.

COCK-HORSE, in the well-known nursery rhyme

Ride a cock-horse
To Banbury cross, &c.,

would seem to be another form of the Lincolnshire word cop-horse, (1) a child's name for a horse; (2) a child's toy like a horse (Peacock). As cop, cop! in that dialect is a call-word for a horse, cop-horse would be a similar formation to puss-cat, moo-cow, baa-lamb, and other nursery compounds.

And there he spide

The pamper'd Prodigall on cockhorse ride.

Taylor, the Water Poet, Workes, p. 119, ed. 1630.

Sometimes he would ride a cock horse with his children—equitare in arundine longa.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, Pt. ii. sec. 2, 6, iv. (1651).

A knave that for his wealth doth worship get

Is like the divell that's a-cock-horse set.

Taylor, the Water Poet.

Mr. Dennis thinks he has discovered an early representation of the "cock-horse," the hippoelectryon or "horse-cock" of Aristophanes, in a biform chimæra depicted on an ancient Greek vase!—Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. ii. p. 83, ed. 1878.

COCKIE-LEEKIE, } the Scotch name
COCK-A-LEEKIE, } for a soup made apparently of a cock, boiled with leeks, is said by Kettner to be a corruption of cock and malachi, a dish of the 14th century, which he regards as compounded of ma, a fowl (?), and lesché, leached, "licked," or beaten small, Fr. alachi (Book of the Table).

COCKLE, in the curious phrase "the cockles of the heart," has never been explained. It occurs in Eachard's Observations, 1671, "This contrivance of his did inwardly . . . rejoice the cockles of his heart" (Wright). In default of a better I make the following suggestion. As we find corke, a provincial word for the core or heart of fruit (Wright), so cockle may be for corcle, corkle, or corcule, an adaptation of the Latin corculum, a little heart, and the expression would mean the core (Fr. cœur), or "heart of heart," but why the word occurs in the plural I cannot say. Similarly cockle, gith, cockleil, cocklebis, cocklis, Wycliffe, A. Sax. coccel, seems to be from Lat. corchorus, a wild pulse (but see Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v.). Cf. bushkin for burskin, gin, old Eng. grin.

COCKLE-STAIRS, a name sometimes given to winding stairs (Wright). The first part of the word is a distinct formation from Lat. cochlea, Greek kochlias, meaning (1) a snail, (2) a snail-shell, (3) anything spiral like a snail-shell.

Shakespeare correctly describes the "hodmandod," or "house-bearer" (Hesiod) as "cockled snails."—Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3.

COCKLOACH, or cockloche, an old word for a fool or a cockcomb, e.g. "A couple of Cockloches."—Shirley, Witty Fair One, ii. 2 [in Wright], is no doubt from Fr. coqueluche, a (fool's) hood (like coquillon, a fool's hood, or a hooded fool, Cotgrave)—a derivative, not of coq, but of Lat.  cucullus, a hood, It. cocolla, cucula; compare It. coccale, a gull, a noddy (Florio).

Fr. coqueluche, whooping-cough, is probably a variety of coquelicot, the cry of a cock, from its crowing sound.

COCK-LOFT, i.e. the cop- (head-, or top-) loft in a house. Wright (Prov. Dict.) quotes coploft from a MS. Inventory dated 1658. So a "cock" of hay for a cop, A. S. copp, a head, apex, and "cock-web," provincial for "cob-web."

"Cockmate," which occurs in Lily's Euphues, seems to be a corruption of the more common word "copesmate." Cockshot, a shot taken at an object resting on the top of a wall, a rock, &c., is probably for cop-shot, a top-shot.

He left the cockletoft over his brother's chamber in the first quadrangle.—Life of Anthony à Wood (sub anno 1650), p. 45, ed. Bliss.

Such who are built four stories high are observed to have little in their cock-loft.—Fuller, Worthies, vol. ii. p. 104 (ed. 1811).

These are the Tops of their houses indeed, like cotlofts, highest and emptiest.—Fuller, Holy State, p. 40 (1648).

COCKMAN, a Scottish word for a sentinel, is a corrupted form of gockmin or gokman, Gæl. gochdman, a watchman (Jamieson).

COCKQUEAN, an impudent beggar, a cheat, originally feminine, is from Fr. coquine, the fem. form of coquin, a beggar, poor sneak, any base scoundrel or scurvy fellow.

Cot-quean seems to be the same word. Vid. Kennett, Paroch. Antiquities, Glossary, s. v. Cock-boat.

COCKQUEEN is also an old word for a female cuckold, probably the same word as cot-quean (q. v.). B. Jonson spells it cucquean.

Queen Iuno not a little wroth

Against her husband's crime,

By whom she was a cockqueene made.

Warner, Albion's England, iv. [Latham].

COCKROACH. "Without question," says Mr. Fitzedward Hall, "it is from the Portuguese caroucha, 'chafer,' 'beetle,' and was introduced into our language by sailors."—Modern English, p. 128. However, kakkerlak in Dutch is a blackbeetle, "a certain Indian insect" (Sewel, 1706), which Nares would identify with cocoloch, an ambiguous term of abuse employed in Beaumont and Fletcher, Four Plays in One. Cocoloch would readily become cock-roach. Cf. Dan. kakerlak, a cockroach.

COCK-ROSE, a Scotch name for the wild poppy, is probably the same word as Picard. coqriacot, Fr. coquericot, coquelicot, Languedoc cacaraca, all denoting (1) the cry of the cock, "coqueri-co!" (Wallon cotoroco), (2) the cock, (3) from the red colour of its crest, the poppy. (Cf. Fr. coquerelles, red berries of nightshade, &c., coqueret, a red apple, Cotgrave.) For this generalizing of the word "cock" in the sense of red, compare the German cant phrase, "Den rothen Hahn auf's Dach setzen," "To make the red cock crow" = to set fire to a house; just as in French argot rif, riffe (from ruffo), "the red" = fire. Diefenbach, however, thinks that cock meant originally the red bird, comparing Welsh coch, red. It is more likely to have been named from its cry.

COCK'S-BONES, cock's passion, &c., by cock, a corruption of the name of the Deity, slightly disguised, as is common in most languages, to avoid the open profanity of swearing. So Odd's bodikens, German kotz and potz, Potz leichnam! Herr Je [sus], Fr. corbleu, ventrebleu, mortbleu, parbleu (i.e. corps de Dieu, &c.). "Bones a Dod!" (Play of Stucley, 1605, l. 67); nom de garce! (Rabelais) for nom de grâce!

Speake on, Iesus, for cockes bloode,
For Pilate shall not, by my hooode,
Doe Thee non amyse.

Chester Mysteries, The Passion (Shaks. Soc.), vol. ii. p. 41.

Men, for cockes face!
Howe longe shall Pewdreas
Stande naked in that place?

Id. The Crucifixion, p. 57.

A! ffelowe! felowe! for cockes pittia!
Are not thes men of Gallalye?

Id. p. 137.

Yes, by cockes bones that I can.

The Worlde and the Chylde, 1522
(O. P. xii. 324, ed. 1827).

COCK-STOOL, a corrupt form of cuck-ing-stool, a seat of ignominy, old Eng. cockstole, cokestole, cuckestole, in which scolding or immoral women used to be placed formerly as a punishment. It is from old Eng. "caikkyyn, or fyystyn, caco."—Prompt. Parv.; cf. goging-stoole, sedes stercoraria. See Chambers' Book of Days, i. p. 211, and Way's note on Cukstole (Prompt. Parvulorum). An old Scotch law against thieves declares that "for a payr of shone of iiij. peny's he aw to be put on the cuk stull."—C. Innes, Scotland in the Mid. Ages, p. 190.

COCKSURE. This expression, which is now obsolescent and vulgar, was formerly in general use even in the most dignified writings. Whatever be its origin, whether it be compounded with the Irish coc, manifest, or with Welsh cocs, the cogs or indentations on a wheel (and the certainty and exactness with which cog meets and fits into cog strikes every observer of machinery in motion), or whether, and this is only a particular case of a cog, and indeed the most probable theory, the expression be taken from the certainty with which the cock of a gun discharges its function, in any case it can scarcely be anything to do with the farmyard cock. "As sure as a gun" is a colloquial phrase often heard among the lower orders. The cock of a gun is the modern representative of Fr. coche, the nick or notch of an arrow, or "the nut-hole of a crossbow" (Cotgrave), Prov. coca, It. cocca, Bret. coch, Gael. sgoch.

We steal as in a castle, cock-sure.

Shakespeare, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 1.

For looke whome he iudgeth to be good, he is sure, he is safe, he is cocke sure.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 55, verso.

Now did Orandia laugh within her sleeve,
Thinking all was cock-sure.

Thalina and Clearchus, p. 89.

Whiles the red hat doth endure,
He maketh himself cocksure.

Skelton.

I thought myself cocksure of his horse.—
Pope, Letters [Latham].

It occurs also in George Herbert's Country Parson.

COCKWARD, an old corruption of cuck-old, O. Eng. kokewold, kukwald, orig. one cokol-ed, i.e., cuckoo-d, wronged as a hedge-sparrow is by a cuckoo, Lat. cuculus, O. Fr. coucoul.

Her happy lord is cuckol'd by Spadil.—
Young, Satire VI.

King Arthur, that kindly cockward, hath none such in his bower.

Percy Folio M.S. vol. i. p. 65,
l. 94.

Then married men might vild reproaches
scorne, . . .

Then should no olde-Cocks, nor no cocke-
olds crow,

But euerie man might in his owne ground
sow.

Tom Tel-Troths Messoge, 1600, l. 677,
(Shaks. Soc.)

COCK-WEB (North), a corruption of cob-web (A. S. coppa, Dut. kop, a spider), just as a cock of hay is for cop.

COCKY, a colloquial word for pert, brisk, saucy, swaggering (provincial Eng. to cock, to swagger impudently, apparently as a cock does in his own yard), is probably another form of Lancashire cocket, lively, vivacious, also keck, pert, lively, which is nearly related to A. Sax. cuc, cweoc, cwic, quick, alive. Cf. Dan. kiek, hardy, pert, Ger. keck (Philological Transactions, 1855, p. 270). In old English cocken seems to mean to be impudent, and cocker, an insolent fellow, e.g. in The Proverbs of Alfred the little man, it is said, "wole grennen, cocken, and chiden" (l. 688), while the red man "is cocker, þef, and horeling" (l. 704).—Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 138 (Morris).

COCOA. The beverage so called is a mis-spelling of the Mexican word cacao, from a confusion with cocoa, the fruit of the nut-bearing palm.

COD, a vulgar word in Ireland for a silly, contemptible fellow, an ass, and as a verb, to hoax or humbug (Patterson, Antrim and Down Glossary), is a clipped form of codger, an old hunk, a queer old fellow, Prov. Eng. cadger and codger, a tramp, a packman or pedlar, from cadge, to carry, also to beg.

The Cistercian lads called these old gentlemen [pensioners] Codds.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. lxxv.

See Davies, Supp. Glossary.

COD-ZEPPEL, an A. Saxon name for the quince (Somner), is possibly a corruption of its classical name cydonium, Gk. kudonia (mēla), so called from Cydon, a place in Crete. Hence It. and Sp. cotogna, Fr. coing, O. Eng. coine, "quince."

CODLING, } a species of hard apple,
CODLIN, } as if one that requires
codling (coddling) or stewing before it can be eaten, pomum coctile (so Skinner, Bailey, Richardson, Wedgwood, Prior), was formerly spelt quodding, Norfolk quadling.

In Iuly come . . . Ginnitings, Quadlins.—Bacon, Essays (1625), p. 556 (ed. Arber).

Quadlin is evidently shortened from the older querdling, denoting a kind of hard apple, probably (like "warden pear") one fit for keeping, from the old adjective quert, quarte, sound, firm, lasting. For the interchange of qu and c, cf. Prov. Eng. cothy, sickly, A. Sax. côð, akin to Fris. quâd, bad (Etmüller, 391); queasy = A. Sax. cÿse, squeamish.

Querdlynge, appulle. Duracenum.—Promptorium Parvulorum (1440).

Whose linnen-drapery is a thin
Subtile and ductile codlin's skin.

Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, vol. i.
p. 97 (ed. Hazlitt).

COHORT, a division of the Roman army, Lat. cohors, the tenth part of a legion, originally an enclosed yard. Co-hor(t)s, co-hort-is, in its primitive signification was probably understood to be a yard or garden (hort-us) going with (co-, cum) a house, it being a corrupted form of the older word chor(t)s, or cor(t)s. That the prefix co- is no organic part of the word is evident from its congeners in other languages, e. g. Greek chórtos, Lat. hortus, Goth. garda, Scand. gardr, A. Sax. geard, Eng. gard-en, yard; cf. also It. corte, Welsh cwr, Eng. court. See, however, Pictet, Origines Indo-Europ., tom. ii. p. 265; Curtius, Griech. Etymol. i. p. 168.

COLD-PROPHET, a corruption apparently of the older forms "col-prophet" and "cole-prophet," a false prophet. Cole is an old Eng. word meaning falsehood, deceit, or craftiness. It may be recognized probably in the old French word cole, given by Boyer in his French Dict., 1753, as equivalent to "bourde, mensonge, Sham, Bam, Fum." Cold-prophet occurs in Knolles' History of the Turks, 1014 (1603), and Scot's Discovery of Witches (1665). In thieves' cant,

Cole Prophet is he, that when his maister sendeth him on his errand, he wyl tel his answer thereof to his maister or he depart from hym.—The XXV. Orders of Knaves, 1575.

The older form is col-prophet, where the prefix col means false, deceitful, as in col-fox, a crafty fox (Chaucer). Cf. O. Eng. kolsipe (col-ship), deceit, and colwarde, deceitful, "colwarde and croked dede."—Alliterative Poems, p. 42, l. 181 (ed. Morris).

And cast it be colis with her conceill at euene.

Richard the Redeles, iv. 24 (1399),
ed. Skeat.

Nor colour crafte by swearing precious coles.
Gascoigne, Steel Glas, l. 1114, p. 80
(ed. Arber).

COLLEAGUE, for Lat. collega, one chosen with another (con and legere), Fr. collègue, so spelt as if it denoted one leagued with another.

COLONEL, a corrupt spelling of coronel, i. e. the chief or coronal captain of a regiment, as if it meant the commander of a column (It. colonna).

Theyr coronell, named Don Sebastian, came forth to intreate that they might parte with theyr armes like souldiours.—Spenser, State of Ireland, p. 656 (Globe ed.).

We took our spelling seemingly from It. "colonello, a Coronell of a Regiment" (Florio, 1611). Cf. Sp. "coronel, a collo- nell ouer a regiment" (Minsheu, 1623). See CROWNER.

On this word Sir S. D. Scott remarks,

We probably received it from the Spaniards. It was Coronell and Crownell here at first, and Coronello is still the Spanish for that rank.—The British Army, vol. ii. p. 383.

François, Erle of Bothewall, tuk upe bands of men of weare under the conduct of Coronell Hakerston.—James Melville, Diary, 1589, p. 276 (Wodrow Soc.).

Thus Anneus Serenus . . . came by his death, with diuers coronels and centurions, at one dinner.—Holland, Pliny Nat. Hist., ii. 133 (1634).

Coronell, Coronell;

Th' enemie's at hand, kils all the centries.

Sir John Suckling, Brennoralt (1648), p. 2.

COLOURBINE, the columbine (aquilegia vulgaris) is said to be so called in Lincoln (Note to Tusser, Five Hundred Points, &c.—E. D. Soc. Ed. p. 272). A further distortion of this again is the Cheshire curranbine (Britten and Holland).

COLTSTAFF, otherwise called a stang, a provincial word for a long pole on which a husband who had been ill-used by his wife was compelled to ride, amidst the jeers of his neighbours, is a corruption of colestaff or cowlstaff, a staff used for carrying a tub called a cowl. Burton speaks of witches "riding in the air upon a cowlstaff, out of a chimney-top." (Wedgwood, in N. & Q. 5th S. vii. p. 212.) Richardson observes that Holland renders fustes by clubs and cowl-staves.

Cowle tre, or soo tre, Falanga, vectatorium.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Go take up these clothes here quickly. Where's the cowl-staff?—Merry Wives of Windsor, act iii. sc. 3.

Fr. tiné a Colestaff or stang.—Cotgrave.

The Gyants spitt sicklerye was more then a cowle tree that he rosted on the bore.

Lihus Disconius, Percy, Fol. MS. vol. ii.
p. 440, l. 679.

Mounting him upon a cole-staff which . . . he apprehended to be Pegasus.—Sir J. Suckling, The Goblins, iii. 1.

COMB, TO, the modern form of the old English kemb or cemb, A. Sax. cemban, perhaps owes its present spelling to a desire to assimilate it to the Latin comere, to dress the hair. But it may be only a verbalized form of the substantive cemb, A. Sax. camb. "Cemba for kemyng, Pecten."—Prompt. Parv.

Every line, he says, that a proctor writes . . . is a long black hair, kemb'd out of the tail of Antichrist.—B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, i. 1.

My ship shall kemb the Oceans curled backe.
Jacke Drums Entertainment, act iii.,
l. 325 (1616).

He, not able to kembe his own head, became distracted.—Fuller, Worthies, ii. 539.

With silver locks unkemb'd about her face.
—Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 399.

COMB, a West country word meaning to sprout or germinate (Wright). It is the old Eng. come, Ger. keimen, to germinate, Icel. keima, O. H. Ger. archinit (= germinat).—Vocab. of S. Gall. 7th cent.

Comys, of malte, pululata.—Prompt. Parv.
To shoote at the root end, which malsters call commyng.—Harrison, Description of England. (Vid. Way, Prompt. Parv. p. 324.)

Lincolnshire malt-comb, dried sprouts (Peacock).

COMESSATION—a word for revelling found in old writers (e. g. Bp. Hall), Lat. comessatio, so spelt as if from comedo, an eating together—in strict propriety should be comissation, from comissari (= Gk. kómázein), to revel.—Trench, English Past and Present, p. 345 (ed. 10th).

Latimer complains of the old translation of Romans xiii. 13, "Not in eatyng and drinkyng."

I maruell that the English is so translated, in eating and drinkyng; the Latine Exemplar hath, Non comessationibus, that is to say, Not in to much eating and drinkyng.—Sermos (1552), p. 229.

COMFORT is the form that comfit assumes in N. W. Lincolnshire (Peacock).

COMMISSION, an ancient slang term for a shirt, Italian camicia, Low Lat. camisia (whence also Fr. chemise). It occurs in Harman's Caveat or Warening for Common Cursetors, 1573.

Which is a garment shifting in condition, And in the canting tongue is a Commission.

Taylor, the Water Poet, 1630 (in Slang Dict.)

COMMODOŔ, a corrupted form of Span. and Portg. comendador, one put in charge, from Lat. commendare, has acquired a deceptive resemblance to Lat.

commodus, commodare. Mr. George Marsh (Lectures on the English Language, p. 100) holds it to be a corruption of Portg. capitão mor, or "chief-captain." Southey (Letters, vol. ii. p. 70) quotes the form comdor from an old Catalan author who claims it to be a native word of his own country.

COMMON, an Anglo-Irish term for a stick crooked at the end, used for striking the ball in the game of hurling (C. Croker, Ballads of Ireland, p. 155), is a corrupted form of Ir. camán (pronounced comáun), from the wide-spread root cam, crooked, bent.

The game itself is called commony, Ir. camánachd.

Compare Welsh cam, crooked; "clean kam" (Shakes. Cor. iii. 1. Cotgrave s.v. Rebours.); Lat. camurus; "a camber nose, a crooked nose," Kennett, Parochial Antiquities (E. D. Soc. ed.).

COMMON PLACE was anciently a frequent corruption of Common Pleas, the court so called.

Unto the common place I yode thoo,
Where sat one with a sylken hooode.
J. Lydgate, London Lyckpeny, stanza 4
(ah. 1420).

He sayeth they are to seke
In pletynge of theyr case
At the Commune Place,
Or at the Kynges Benche.

J. Skelton, Why come ye nat to Courte,
l. 315 (1522).

COMPANION-LADDER, on board ship, was originally the stairs that led up to the quarter-deck (above the cabin), Dutch kompanje or kampanje (Sewel), the quarter-deck (? the fighting deck, from kampen).

COMPASANT, a sailor's word for the electric flame which hovers around the mast-head, is a corruption of the Spanish name cuervo santo.—Smyth, Sailor's Word-Book.

COMPLAISANCE. Sir Henry Ellis mentions this name as having been given to the electrical light, sometimes called St. Elmo's Fire, or Castor and Pollux, by the captain of a vessel, when he observed it playing around the mast-head.—Brand, Pop. Antiquities, iii. 400. It was a further perversion of corpuseanse, corposants, which is a sailor's corruption of the Spanish name cuervo santo.

While baleful tritons to the shipwreck guide,
And corposunts along the tacklings slide.

Maxwell, Poems, p. 103 (Murray repr.).

COMPOUND, an Anglo-Indian term for the enclosure around a bungalow, is probably of Portuguese origin.

Compare Sp. campaña, a field.

COMPTROLLER, an old and incorrect spelling in Thomas Fuller and others of controller, one who keeps a counter-roll (Fr. controlle, or countre-rolle) of the accounts of others, and so checks and overrules them.

Count rollare, (countrolloure), contrarotulator.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Richardson quotes counterrolment from Bacon, and conteroler from Langland.

Know I have a controul and check upon you.—Sir M. Hale, The Great Audit.

The spelling comptroller assumes a connexion with "compt," Fr. compter, "accomptant," &c. (=accountant, &c.), Lat. computare.

COMROGUE, a conscious corruption by the Elizabethan dramatists of the word comrade, which is itself a warped form of "camrade," Fr. camerade, a chamber-fellow, from camera (cf. Lat. contubernalis). The word was adopted into Irish as comrada, and probably regarded as a derivative of com, with, and radh, speech (whence comhradh, discourse), as if a gossip or talk-mate.

You and the rest of your comrogues shall sit disguised in the stocks.—Ben Jonson, The Masque of Augurs (ed. Moxon, p. 630).

Tho' you and your come-rogues keep him out so late in your wicked college.—Swift, Mary, the cook-maid, to Dr. Sheridan.

CONDOG, an old humorous corruption of concur, as if cur here meant a worthless dog.

Alcumust. So is it, and often doth it happen, that the just proportion of the fire and all things concur.

Ruffe. Concurre? Condogge! I will away.—Lilly, Gallathea, iii. 3 (Works, i. 247, ed. Fairholt).

Nares says that in Cockeram's Dictionary "agree" is defined "concurrere, cohere, condog."

CONNECTION, REFLECTION, a very common mis-spelling of connexion, Fr.

connexion, from Lat. connexio; reflexion, Fr. réflexion, Lat. reflexio; from the mistaken analogy of words like affection, Fr. affection, Lat. affectio; collection, Fr. collection, Lat. collectio.

CONNYNG ERTHE, an old perversion of the word cony garth, an enclosure for rabbits, a rabbit warren, as if compounded of conig, cony, and erthe, earth.

Connyn gere or conynge erthe. Cunicularium.—Prompt. Parvulorum, c. 1440.

Conigare, or cony earth, or clapper for conies. Vivarium.—Huloet.

"The conyngerthe pale," MS. 1493, quoted by Way. Other corruptions are conyger, conynnger, conigree, conigreen.

CONSORT, the usual spelling in old writers of concert, a musical entertainment, as if from Lat. consor(t)s, and denoting an harmonious union, a marriage of sweet sounds, is from It. conserto, an agreement, accord, consertare, more commonly written (borrowing the c from concento, harmony) concertare, "to proportion or accord together, to agree or tune together, to sing or play in consort."—Florino, (Lat. consero, consertus).

The music

Of man's fair composition best accords
When 'tis in consort, not in single strains.

Ford (in Richardson).

There birds sing consorts, garlands grow,
Cool winds do whisper, springs do flow.

Marvell, Poems, p. 65 (Murray repr.).

Compare also the following :—

Jubal first made the wilder notes agree, . . .
He called the echoes from their sullen cell,
And built the Orgsn's city, where they dwell;

Each sought a consort in that lovely place,
And virgin trebles wed the manly base.

Marvell, Poems, p. 73.

If good as single instruments, they will be the better as tuned in a Consort.—Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 2 (ed. 1811).

CONTRIVE, a modern corrupt spelling of old Eng. controve (O. Fr. con-trover = con-trower, to find out, invent), assimilated to arrive, derive, survive, &c.

þis may be said, als þe boke proves

Be þam þat new gyses controues.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience (1340),
l. 1560.

COOK-EEL, a provincial term for a certain kind of bun used in East Anglia, is no doubt (as Forby suggests) a corruption of the French coquille, it being so called from its being shaped like a scallop-shell. Compare "Pain Coquillé. A fashion of an hardcrusted loafe, somewhat like our Stillyard Bunne."—Cotgrave.

In the Wallon dialect coquille is a very small cake (Sigart).

COOKIES, a Scotch word for a certain sort of tea-cakes, is probably, like cookeels, a corruption of Fr. coquille.

Selkirk bannocks, cookies, and peticost-tails,—delicacies little known to the present generation.—Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xxvi.

COOL. In Ireland a cool of butter is a small tub of that commodity, and cool-butter, as opposed to fresh, is butter salted slightly and packed into a tub. Cool here is clearly the same word as the Prov. Eng. cowl, a tub, altered somewhat so as to convey the idea of freshness (Scot. caller); W. Cornwall cool, a large tub to salt meat in. We may perhaps compare A. Sax. cowel, cowel, cawl, a basket. Compare COL-STAFF, O. Eng. cowel-staf, Gen. and Exodus, l. 3710.

Soo, or cowl, vessel. Tina.—Prompt. Parvulorum, sb. 1440.

Cowle, vessel, Tina.—Id.

Cowl or Coul (1) a tub with two ears to be carried between two persons on a coul-staff; (2) any tub (Essex).—Kennett, Parochial Antiquities (E. Dialect Soc. ed.).

Cheese 11d. per pound, and tub butter 15d.—Register of Street, Sussex (Sussex Archaeolog. Coll. vol. xxv. p. 129).

Quaffe up a bowle/ As big as a cowle
To beer drinkers.

Herrick, Hesperides, Works, ii. 343
(ed. Hazlitt).

COPPIN-TANK, or copped tanke, a common term in old authors for a high-crowned or copped hat, is a corruption of the expression "a copatain hat," found in the Taming of the Shrew, act v. sc. 1. The form cop-tank occurs in North (Translation of Plutarch) and copped hat in Henry More.

CORDWAINER. This very English-looking word for a shoemaker is a naturalized form of Fr. cordonnier, O. Fr. cordoannier, literally one that works in Cordwayne (Spenser, F. Q., VI. ii. 6), or Spanish leather, leather of Cordova, Fr. cordouan, Sp. cordoban, It. cordovano.

The Maister of the Crafte of Cordynerez . . . hath diverse tymez sued to the honorable Mayor.—English Gilds, p. 331 (E. E. T. S.).

Of their skins excellent gloves are made, which may be called our English Cordovunt.—Fuller, Worthies, ii. 553.

CORK, a Scotch name for a species of lichen (lecanora tartarea), Norwegian korkje, is said to be a corruption of an Arabic word into one more familiar.—Prior, Names of British Plants (2nd ed.).

CORKING PIN, a term used in Ireland and Scotland for a pin of unusually large size, seems to be corrupted from a calking or caulking pin. Bailey defines calk "to drive oakham and wooden pins into all the seams." In N. W. Lincolnshire a caulker is anything very big, especially a great lie, while corker (as Mr. Peacock suggests, for caulker) is an incredible assertion, "Well, that is a corker!" Compare CORKS.

Caulker, anything abnormally large.—Holderness Dialect, E. Yorks.

The Scotch have corkie and corkin-preen for the largest kind of pin.

When you put a clean pillowcase on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with corking-pins.—Swift, Directions to Servants (Chambermaid).

CORKS, a provincial word for cinders (Lancashire), Wright, as if from their lightness, is, without question, a corrupted form of coaks, of the same meaning, or colkes, standard Eng. coke, which Mr. Wedgwood deduces from Gael. caoch, empty.

So corkie, the core of fruit (Wright), is for colke. Cf. Lincolnshire crawk, a core, Cleveland goke.

A rounde appel of a tre, þat even in myddes has a colke.
Humpole, Pricke of Conscience, ab. 1340,
l. 644.

Cawk, the core of an apple, also crawk and gawk.—Holderness Dialect, E. Yorks.

CORN-ACRE, an Eng. corruption of the Anglo-Irish word con-acre, the name given to a certain tenure, or sub-letting, of land in Ireland—a partnership (expressed by con) in the cultivation of an acre, one supplying the seed and labour, another the land and manure, and the profits being divided.

He had a large farm on a profitable lease; he underlet a good deal of land by con-acre, or corn-acre.—A. Trollope, The Macdermots of Ballycloran, ch. xv.

This eloquent and reverend defender of the cause of the tenant is in the habit, however, of charging as much as eight or ten pounds for a field in con-acre, that is, for one season's crop.—The Standard, Dec. 27, 1880.

CORPORAL, a heteronym for Fr. caporal, It. caporale, as if the petty commander of a corps, instead of head of a squadron (cap, capo, caput). Cf. "Cap d'escadre, a corporal."—Cotgrave, and "captain," i.e. capitaneus, the headman (Ger. haupt-man), "Cabo de esquadra, qui caput et qui cæteris præest."—Minsheu. Holinshed uses corporals, and Stowe corporals of the squadrons, for captains (Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. i. p. 523).

COSMOS. "Their drinke called Cosmos, which is mares milke, is prepared after this maner."—Journal of Frier Wm. de Rubruquis, 1253, in Hakluyt, Voyages, p. 97 (1598).

A corruption of koumis or kumiz, the habitual drink of most of the nomads of Asia.

Their [the Tartars'] drink is mare's milk prepared in such a way that you would take it for white wine, and a right good drink it is, called by them kemiz.—Ser Marco Polo, vol. i. p. 224 (ed. Yule).

COST-MARY, the plant so-called, as if costus Marice, owes its name to a misunderstanding of Fr. coste amere, Lat. costus amarus.

COT-QUEAN (an effeminate man), probably for cock-quean, and that perhaps a corruption of the French coquine, "a cockney, simperdecockit, nice thing."—Cotgrave. Coquin, "a poor sneak, &c."

Who like a cot-quean freezeth at the rock.—Hull, Satires, iv. 6.

Cot, however, in N. W. Lincolnshire is a man or boy who cooks or does other womanly work (Peacock); in Ireland, a molly-cot.

[A husband of an effeminate character] in several places of England goes by the name of a "cot-queen." I have the misfortune to be joined for life with one of this character, who in reality is more a woman than I am. He could preserve apricots, and make jellies, &c.—The Spectator, No. 482 (1712).

COTTON, "to agree, to succeed, to hit" (Bailey), still used in the colloquial phrase, "to cotton to a person," meaning to take kindly to him, to take a liking to him, as if to stick to him as cotton would (Bartlett, Dictionary of Americanisms, 1877, s. v.), or to lie smooth and even, like cotton, e.g.

It cottens well, it cannot choose but beare
A pretty napp.

Family of Love [in Nares].

It will be found, however, that the old meaning of the word is always to agree, harmonize, coincide, fit in well. It is evidently an old British word still surviving, and has nothing to do with cotton, being identical with Welsh cyduno, cytuno, to agree, consent, or coincide, from cydun, cytun, of one accord, unanimous, coincident, literally "at one (un) together" (cyd, cyt). "To cotton to a person" is then to be at one with him. Dr. Skinner, with a wrong affiliation, but true etymological instinct, deduced the word from Lat. co-adunare (Etymologicon, 1671, s. v.).

Doth not this matter cotton as I would?—Lilly, Campaspe, iii. 4 (1584).

A, sirra, in faith this geer cottens.—Marriage of Witt and Wisdom, 1579, p. 29 (Shaks. Soc.).

Styles and I cannot cotten.—History of Capt. Stukeley, B. 2. b.

Our secure lives and your severe laws will never cotton.—T. Adams, The Fatal Banquet, Sermons, i. 181.

COUCH, left-handed, a provincial corruption of Fr. gauche.

COUCH-GRASS, the popular name of triticum repens, a corruption of quitch- or quich-grass, A. Sax. cuwice, quice, i.e. the quick or vivacious plant, Scot. quicken, Ger. quecke, Lincolnshire wicks (from wick, alive), it being very tenacious of life, with some allusion perhaps to its habit of growth lying along the ground; cf. Dorset, cooch, to lie, Fr. coucher. So Dan. qvik-græs, Norweg. quicku, &c. See Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 483.

COULD, a modern corruption of the more correct form coud, from a false analogy to would, should, where the l is an organic part of the word. A similarly intrusive l is seen in moult for mout (moot, Lat. mutare), calm (for caume), balsam (Heb. bāsām), nolt for nout (neat-cattle), &c. Coude or coupe is the perfect of can, to cunne, = (1) to know, and, as knowledge is power, (2) to be able (See Philolog. Soc. Proc. vol. ii. p. 153); A. Sax. cūðe.

Well couth he tune his pipe and frame his stile.

Spenser, Shepherd's Colender, Januarie.

The child could his pedigree so readily [ = conned, knew ].—Campion, Historie of Ireland, 1571 (Reprint, p. 152).

Some of the bolder purists, such as Tyrwhitt, Prof. George Stephens, and (if I remember right) the brothers Hare, have consistently written coud—e.g., the first expresses his wonder that Chaucer "in an advanced age coud begin so vast a work."—Introd. to Canterbury Tales, p. 1. See also Stoddart, Philosophy of Language, p. 286.

The more we go into its history the more we become convinced that the l has no place in it. It occurs in none of the other tenses, and in none of the Participles in any language except our own. The Anglo-Saxon preterite was cupe, and the Scotch is coud.—Latham, Preface to Dictionary, p. cxxx.

His felow taught him homeward prively
Fro day to day til he coude it by rote.

Chaucer, Prioresses Tale, 93.

They couth the moch, he couth the more.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, iii. 50 (ed. Pauli).

A lewed goost bat koupe not knowe þe cause.

Trevisa, Higden's Polychronicon.

Gret wonder is how that he couth or mighte
Be domesman on hir dede beauté.

Chaucer, Monkes Tale.

I dyd hym reverence, for I ought to do so,
And told my case as well as I coode.

Lydgate, London Lyckpeny.

The fyrste was Fauell, full of flattery,
Wyth fables false that well coude fayne a tale.

Skelton, Borge of Courte, l. 134.

Haruy Hafter that well coude picke a male.

Skelton, Works, ed. Dyce, i. 35.

Whiche was right displeasnt to the kyng,
but he coude nat amende it.—Berners, Froissart, fol. 43.

COUNTER, the name of two prisons in Old London, sometimes spelt compter, as if derived from count, Lat. computare.

Old Eng. "Cowntowre, Complicatorium" (Prompt. Parv., where Way seems to mistake the meaning). Perhaps from A. Sax. cweartern, a prison. Cf. O. Fr. carire, chatre, chartre (= carcer), Bartsch [?].

A yonker then began to laugh,
'Gainst whom the Major advanc't white staffe,

And sent him to the Compter safe,
Sans parly.

The Dagonizing of Bartholomew Fair
(c. 1660).

COUNTERPANE, a corruption of the more ancient word "counterpoint," as if to imply that it was formed of panes or squares counter-changed, or disposed alternately, like patch-work. Fr. contre-point, also coute-pointe, coulte-pointe, is from coultre (It. coltre, Lat. culcitra, culcita, a cushion), a duvet, and puncta, stitched, quilted. A French corruption is courte-point, "short-stitch." See QUILT.

In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras counterpoints.

Taming of the Shrew, ii. 1. l. 351.

Synonym in old Eng. is "Pur-poynt, bed hyllynge [= covering]. Pulvinarium, plumea, culcitra punctata."—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Counter-pane, as a correctly formed word, means the duplicate or responding sheet of an indenture (Kennett, Paroch. Antiq., 1695, E. D. S., B. 18).

COUNTRY-DANCE, a corruption of contra dance, i.e. one where the partners are arranged in two lines confronting one another, Fr. contredanse, It. contradanze.

I canti, i balli, . . . che a noi sono pervenuti con vocabulo Inglese di contradanze, Country Dances, quasi invenzione degli Inglesi contadini.—Veauti, Delle Antichi d'Ercolan, p. 114.

The English country-dance was still in estimation at the courts of princes.—T. De Quincey, Works, vol. xiv. p. 201.

In a note he adds—

This word, I am well aware, grew out of the French word contre-danse; indicating the regular contraposition of male and female partners in the first arrangement of the dancers. The word country-dance was therefore originally a corruption; but having once arisen and taken root in the language, it is far better to retain it in its colloquial form.

A country-dance of joy is in your face.—Fielding, Tom Thumb the Great, act ii. sc. 4 (1730).

Each man danced one minuet with his partner, and then began country dances.—

Horace Walpole, Letters (ed. Cunningham), vol. i. p. 82 (1741).

I country-danced till four.—Id. p. 84 (1741).

We learn from the Vicar of Wakefield, ch. ix., that when the two fashionable ladies from town wanted to make up a set at this dance, the rosy daughters of farmer Flamborough, though they "were reckoned the very best dancers in the parish, and understood the jig and roundabout to perfection, yet were totally unacquainted with country dances."

COURT-CARDS, a modern corruption (owing no doubt to the names Kings and Queens) of "coat-cards," so called from the long dresses with which the figures are depicted.

The Kings and Coate cards that we use nowe were in olde times the images of idols and false gods.—Northbrooke's Treatise against Dicing, 1577, p. 142 (Shaks. Soc.).

I have none but coate cards.—Florio, Second Frutes, 1591, p. 69.

And so in Minsheu's Spanish Dialogues, p. 26.

Carra di figura, a cote-card.—Florio. Cf. Jonson, New Ian, i. 1.

"Cwoat cards" is still a form in use in Cumberland (Dickinson, Glossary, Supplement).

Compare the Dutch jas, a coat, and jas-kaart, a trump-card. It. "Carta di punto, a card that hath no coate on it."—Florio, 1611.

Here's a trick of discarded cards of us! we were ranked as coats as long as old master lived.—Massinger, The Old Law, iii. 1 (p. 574, ed. Cunningham).

COVER, when used as a hunting term for the retreat of a fox or hare, as if that which covers it, is an incorrect form of covert, i.e. a place covered [with brushwood, &c.], "an umbrage or shady place" (Bailey), Fr. couvert, "a woody plot, a place full of bushes and trees" (Cotgrave).

A covert for deere or other beastes, Latihum . . . umbraculum.—Buret, Alvearie.

[He] stole into the covert of the wood.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul. i. 1.

Chapman uses closet in the same sense.

From the green closets of his loftiest reeds
He rushes forth.

Homer's Hymns, To Pan, l. 27.

Similarly when it is said that "covers were laid" for so many at a dinner, cover is for Fr. couvert, a knife and fork, a plate and napkin for one person.

I muste go before the breakfastinge covers are placede and stande uncovered as her Highnesse comethe forth.—Sir J. Harington, Nugæ Antiquæ, ii. 213.

COVERING-SEEDS, "A sort of comfit, vulgarly called covering-seeds," is mentioned in the Rich Closet of Rarities, quoted by Nares. It is doubtless a corruption of the old English carvi, M. Lat. carui semina, carraway seeds. Compare carvis-cakes, a provincial name for cakes made with carraway seeds (Wright).

COVER-KEYS, a Kentish name for the oxlip, also covey-keys, a corruption of culverkeys, said to be so called from its key-like flowerets expressing the form of a culver or dove (Britten and Holland), but more probably a perversion of culverkins, little pigeons.

COVER-LID, a corrupt form of coverlet,—coverlet itself, though bearing all the appearance of a diminutival form (cf. chaplet, corselet, ringlet, &c.), being the French couvre-lit or "cover-bed."

Loves couches cover-lid,

Haste, haste, to make her bed.

Lovelace, The Rose, Poems, ed.

Singer, i. p. 8.

Wycliffe has cover-lyte, 4 Kings, viii. 15 (1389). The form coverlyght is also found in old wills dated 1522 (Wright, Homes of Other Days, p. 414).

COW-BERRY, a name for the fruit of the Vitis Idæa, arose probably from a blunder between vaccinium, the whortleberry, and vaccinus, pertaining to a cow (Prior).

COWCUMBER, an old corruption of cucumber, e.g. "concombre, A cow-cucumber."—Nomenclator, 1585. Skinner spells it so in his Etymologicon, 1671.

Pickled cowcumpers I have bought a pecke for three pence.—Taylor, the Water-Poet, 1630.

In their Lents they eate nothing but Cole-worts, Cabbages, salt Cowcumpers, with other rootes, as Radish and such like.—Hakluyt, Voyages, vol. i. p. 242 (1598).

COW-HEART, } corruptions of the COWHERD, } word coward. With but slight difference of form this word is to be found in more than one language of modern Europe, and in each the difference of form seems to have arisen from an attempt to trace a connexion and educe a meaning which did not really belong to it. For instance, the French coward, O. French coard, was regarded as cognate with the O. Spanish and Provençal coa (Fr. queue), a tail, as if the original signification was a tailer, one who flies to the rear or tail of the army. Thus Cotgrave translates the phrase, "faire la queue," "to play the coward, come or drag behind, march in the rere."

The Italian codardo in like manner was brought into connexion with the verbs "codare, to tail, codiare, to follow one at the taile" (codà).—Florio.

The Portuguese form is cobarde, also covarde (= coward), which seems to have resulted from an imagined relationship with cova, It. covo, al-covo, Sp. alcoba, Arab. al-qobbah (the recess of a room, "alcove"). A coward was so called, says Vieyra, "from cova, a cave, because he hides himself." Identically the same account is given of the Spanish cobarde in Stevens' Dictionary, s. v. 1706.

As to our English word, some persons, I would venture to assert, have looked upon the coward as one who has ignominiously covered beneath the onslaught of an enemy, comparing the Italian covone, "a squatting or cowering fellow," "from covare, to squat or cower" (Florio), just as the "craven" was supposed to be one who acknowledged himself beaten, and craved for mercy. Both derivations, however, are equally incorrect. Another origin, more improbable still, was once pretty generally accepted, and the form of the word was twisted so as to correspond. The coward, it was thought, must surely be a cow-heart, one who has no more spirit or courage than the meek and mild-eyed favourite of the dairymaid. "Cowheart," indeed, is still the word used in Dorsetshire, and "cow-hearted" occurs in Ludolph's Ethiopia, p. 88 (1682). Compare also "corto de coracon, cow-hearted" (Stevens' Sp. Dict., 1706); "Coiard, a coward, a dastard, a cow" (Cotgrave); "The veriest cow in a company brags most" (Ibid., s. v. Crier); "Craven, a cow" (Bailey).

It is the cowish terror of his spirit
That dares not undertake.

King Lear, iv. 2.

To cow is nearly allied to Icel. kúga
of the same meaning.

In the Holderness dialect of E. Yorkshire, coffy (calfy) and carif-hearted are similarly used in the sense of timid, cowardly.

Spenser, if we may judge by his spelling of the word, considered cowherd to be the primitive form, as he tells of the shepherd Coridon :

When he saw the fiend,
Through cowherd feare he fled away as fast,
Ne durst abide the daunger to the end.

Faerie Queene, VI. x. 35.

This is also the usual orthography in Chapman's Homer—

Ulysses, in suspense
To strike so home that he should fright from thence

His cowherd soul, his trunk laid prostrate there.

Odysseys, xviii. 128.

The French and Italians, though they erred in their explanations, were certainly right in recognizing queue and coda respectively (Lat. cauda) as the source of coward and codardo. It is not, however, because he tails off to the rear that the dastard was so called, nor yet—for this reason also has been assigned—because he resembles a terror-stricken cur who runs away with his tail between his legs. It is true that “in heraldry a lion borne in an escut-cheon, with his tail doubled or turned in between his legs, is called a lion coward.” Still it was not the heraldic lion, nor the fugacious dog, nor even the peaceful cow, but a much more timid and unwarlike animal, which was selected as the emblem of a person deficient in courage. It was the hare —“the trembler,” as the Greeks used to call her; “timorous of heart,” as Thomson characterizes her in the “Seasons” (Winter); “the heartless hare,” as she is styled in the “Mirror for Magistrates,” ii. p. 74 (ed. Haslewood); the “coward maukin,” Burns.

In mediæval times the familiar name of the hare was coward, cuwaert, coart (= scutty or short-tail), just as bruin is still of the bear, and chanticleer of the cock. (See Grimm, Reinhart Fuchs, pp. ccxxiii.-ccxxvii.) Compare Prov.

volpilh, cowardly, from Lat. vulpecula, a fox (Diez).

For further information the reader may consult my Leaves from a Word-hunter's Note Book, p. 133, seq., from which much of the above has been quoted.

Of the Hare Huntynge . . . If eny fynde of hym, where he hath ben, Rycher or Bemond, ye shall sey, “oiez à Bemond le vayllaunt, que quide trovere le coward, ou le court cow.”
—Le Veneruy de Twety (temp. Ed. II.), Reliqu.
Antiq. vol. i. p. 153.

I shall telle yow what I sawe hym do yesterday to Cuwaert the hare.—*Caxton, Reynard
the Fox*, 1481, p. 7 (ed. Arber).

The foxe sayde to the hare, Kywart ar ye a colde, how tremble ye and quake so, be not a ferd.—Ibid. p. 42.

Compare in old French (14th cent.),

Li amaus hardis

Vaut mieus que li acowardis.

Jehan de Conde, Bartsch Christomathie, p. 372.

Norman Fr. cuard, Vie de St. Auban,
l. 474 (ed. Atkinson).

peonne he kene þet was er cueord. [Then he (becomes) bold that was before a coward.]
—Ancren Riwe, ab. 1225, p. 288 (text C.).

To be of bold word atte mete, & coward in þe velde.

Robt. of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 285
(ed. 1811).

O con ella cazar por les campiñas

Liebres cobardes y conejos viles.

Lope, Hermosura de Angelica.

[I] scarce ever look'd on blood
But that of coward hares, hot goats, and venison.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 4, 37.

COWITCH, an Indian seed producing itching, is said to be from the native name kiwach. (Philolog. Trans., 1855,
p. 69.)

COWKEEP, a Fifeshire word for the plant Heracleum Sphondylium, is a corruption of the synonymous word cowkeeks [cow-keek], i. e. cow-keez, a large kind of keek.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names, p. 122.

COW-LADY-STONE, } a Scotch word
COLLADY-STONE, } for quartz. Jamieson thought it might be corrupted from Fr. cailleteau, “a chack-stone or litle flint-stone.”—Cotgrave. Many French words have been adopted by the Scotch.

COW-SHOT, an old name for the cushat or ring-dove, still used in Lancashire and probably other parts of England.

Coulon ramier, A. Queest, Cowshot, Ring dove, Stock dove, Wood-culver.—Cotgrave.

The A. Sax. word is cúscote, which Bosworth resolves into cús (cow) + sceote. It is doubtless, however, a derivative of A. Sax. cúsc, chaste; cf. Ger. keusch; doves being generally regarded as patterns of conjugal fidelity and true love.

Turtle ne wile hadde no make bute on, and after þat non, and forþi it betocneð þe clenesse.—Old Eng. Homilies (12th cent.), 2nd S. p. 49.

The wedded turtelle, with his herte true.
Chaucer.

Be trewe as turtyll in thy kynde
For lust will part as fethers in wynde.

The Parliament of Byrdes, Fairly Pop.
Poetry, iii. 183 (ed. Hazlitt).

And love is still an emptier sound,
The modern fair-one's jest;
On earth unseen, or only found
To warm the turtle's nest.

Goldsmith, The Hermit.

COWPENDOCH, } a Scottish term for COWPENDOW, } a young cow, to which word it has been partially assimilated, was originally colpindach, from the Gaelic colbhithach, a calf (Jamieson), Ir. colbhthac, a cow or heifer, colpa, a calf. Compare Goth. kalbo, Ger. kalb, A. Sax. calf, all connected with Sansk. garbha, the womb (Benfey), and denoting any young animal.

COWSLIP, Prov. Eng. cowstop, cooslop, old Eng. cowstop, cowslope, cowslippe, A. Sax. cúslippe, has generally been resolved into cow's-lip (A. Sax. cús + lippe); cf. its Provençal name museta. Reasons are adduced in Britten and Holland's Eng. Plant Names, p. 123 (E. D. Soc.), for considering it to be a corruption of keslop or keslip, A. Sax. cêselib, cyselib, i.e. the prepared stomach of a calf (which the plant was supposed to resemble), used as rennet (lib, Swed. löpe, Dan. løbe, Ger. lab, Dut. leh), for the making of cheese (A. Sax. cese, Swed. käse, Lat. caseus) [?].

A view, however, put forward by Rev. E. Gillett is deserving of consideration. He thinks the old Eng. cúslippe is to be analyzed as cú + slippe, the last part of the word being from A. Sax. slupan, to paralyze; the name (in Latin herba paralytica, or herba paralytis) being indicative of the sedative virtue of its flowers, which were used to cause sleep.—Cockayne, Leechdoms, &c., vol. iii. p. xxxii. Compare narcissus, from Gk. narkao, to benumb. But slupan, from slip, means to relax, not to put asleep (W. W. S.).

Cawslope, herbe (al. cowstek, or cowstop), Herba petri, herba paralis, ligustra.—Prompt. Parv. (c. 1440).

Palsiewort was a name formerly given to this plant (vid. Cotgrave, s. v. Cocu). Ben Jonson boldly adopts the popular etymology—

The primrose drop, the spring's own spouse,
Bright day's eyes, and the lips of cows.

Pan's Anniversary, 1625 (ed. Moxon, p. 643).

Prof. Skeat says that cow-slip (M. Eng. cousloppe, Wright's Vocabularies, i. 162) was originally the slip, slop, or dung of a cow, a "cow-plat."

COW'S THUMB, in a curious old phrase, "(right) to a Cow's Thumb," quoted by Skinner (Etymologicon, s. v. Cow, 1671), and meaning "exactly," "according to rule," he explains as a corruption of the French à la coutume, selon la coutume.

You may fit yourself to a cow's thumb among the Spaniards.—T. Brown, Works, iii. 26 [see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary].

COYSTRIL, in old writers used for a cowardly hawk, as if from coy, shy, is a corruption of the word kestrel, which is also spelt castrel and coistrell.

Like a coistrell he strives to fill himself with wind, and flies against it.—Overbury's Characters.

He's a coward and a Coystrill that will not drink to my niece till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, act i. sc. 3.

Better places should bee possessed by Coystrills, and the coblers crowe, for crying but ave Cæsar, be more esteemed than rarer birds.—Nash, Pierce Penitence, His Supplication to the Deuill, p. 22 (Shaks. Soc. ed.).

The Musquet and the Coystril were too weak.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, l. 1119.

COZEN, or cosen, to cheat, has been assimilated in form and meaning to cousin, formerly spelt cosin, cosyn, as if its original import was to beguile or defraud one under the pretence or show of relationship, like Hamlet's uncle, who was "more than kin and less than kind." So Minshew and Abp. Trench, Eng. Past and Present.

Arc. Deere cosin Palamon.

P. l. Cosener Arcite, give me language such
As thou hast shewd me feate!

The Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 1, l. 43 (1634).

Mr. Littledale remarks that the two words were frequently brought together in this connexion, e.g. :—

Cousin, Cozen thyself no more.

Mons. Thomas, i. 3.

Cousins indeed, and by their uncle cozened
Of comfort. Richard III., iv. 4.

Bailler du foin à la mule. To cheat, gull, cousen, over-reach, cony-catch. — Cotgrave,
s. v. Mule.

Cousiner, to claime kindred for advantage or particular ends; as he, who to save charges in travelling, goes from house to house, as Cosin to the honour of every one. — Cotgrave.

The true origin of the word has not hitherto been shown. I have little doubt that it is the same word as It. cozzonare, to play the craftie knave (Florio), originally to play the horse-courser, horse-dealers being notorious for cheating (compare our "to jockey"), from cozzone, a horse-courser, a crafty knave
(O. Fr. cosson), Lat. cocio or coctio, a haggler, dealer. (Cf. Fr. cuisson, from Lat. coctio (n).)

The Scottish verb to cozain, to barter or exchange one thing for another, seems to be another usage of the same word. In mediæval Latin coccio (cogcio, or cotio) was used especially for a class of beggars who used to extort alms by cries, tears, and other impostures. A Frankish law ordered "Mangones vagabundi et cotiones qui imposturis homines ludunt coercentor" (Spelman, Glossarium, 1626, p. 172). The word thus became applicable to any cheat or cozener.

Valentine thempour, by holsome lawes provided that suche as . . . solde themselves to begging, pleded ponerty wyth pretended infirmitie, & cloaked their ydle and slouthfull life with colourable shifts and cloudy cossen-ing, should be a perpetuall slaue and drudge to him by whom their impudent ydlenes was bewrayed. — A. Fleming, Caius of Eng. Dogges, 1576, p. 27 (repr. 1880).

So I may speake of these cousonages now in use, which till now not knowne, I know not how to stile them . . . but onely by the generall names of cousonages. — The severall notorious and lewd Cousonages of John West and Alice West, 1613, chap. 1.

The cooz'ned birds busily take their flight
And wonder at the shortnesse of the night.

G. Fletcher, Christs Victorie in Heaven, 42
(1610).

The devil doth but cozen the wicked with his cates. — S. Adams, Sermons, i. 217.

CRABBED, peevish, irritable, has been generally understood to be "sour as a crab-apple," of a temper like ver-juice; thus Bailey gives "Crabbed (of crab, a sour apple), sour or unripe, as Fruit, rough, surly." "Crabbedness, sourness, surliness."

Of hodie bygge and strong he was,
And somewhat Crabtre faced.

B. Googe, Eglogs, &c., 1563, p. 117
(ed. Arber).

Sickness sours and crabs our nature. —
Glanville [Latham].

It is really from North. Eng. crab,
crabbe, to provoke, crab, to reproach,
Scottish crab, to fret. Cf. Dut. kribben, to quarrel, krib, a cross woman, a shrew, kribbig, peevish, cross (Sewel). It was originally a hawking term, hawks being said to crab, when they stood too near and fought one with another. This is evidently the same word as Dut. krabben, to scratch, Prov. Eng. scrab, and scrabble. It is curious to note the Prompt. Parvulorum translating "crab-byd, awake, or wrawe," by Lat. can-cerinus, as if like a crab (cancer), or cankerous.

The strublyne of fulys crabis the visman.
[The troubling of fools vexes the wise man.]
Ratis Raving, p. 20, l. 652 (E. E. T. S.).

With crabyt men hald na company.
Id. p. 100, l. 3509.

That uther wakned npe the spreits of all gnid brething, and crabet the Court stranglie
[i.e. irritated]. — Jas. Melville, Diary, 1574,
p. 52 (Wodrow Soc.).

Whowbeit he was verie hat in all questiones, yt when it twitched his particular, no man could crab him. — Id. 1578, p. 65.

The saise [= assize] wald nocht fyll
[= convict] him wherat the Court was verie
crabbit. — Id. 1584, p. 218.

A countenance, not werishe and crabbed, but faire and cumlie. — R. Ascham, The Schole-master, 1570, p. 39 (ed. Arber).

What doth Vulcan al day but endeavour to be as crabbed in manners as hee is crooked in body? — Lilly, Sapho and Phao (1584), i. 1.

After crysten-masse com be crabbed lenton.
Sir Gawayne, l. 502.

He regardes not the whips of the moste
crabish Satyrists. — Dekker, Seuen Deadly Sinnes of London, p. 34.

How charming is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose.
Milton, Comus, l. 476.

CRACK REGIMENT, one of great prestige, seems properly to denote a brag regiment, one entitled to boast of its achievements, from crack, O. Eng. crake, to boast. Compare O. Eng. brag, adj. spirited, proud, from brag, to boast (orig. to make a loud noise, "bray," Lat. fragor), akin to Scot. brav, fine, and brave.

Crakynge, or boste, Jactancia, arrogancia.
—Prompt. Parvulorum.

A gray-hair'd knight set up his head,
And crackit richt crossely.
Auld Maitland; Child's Ballads, vol. vi.
p. 222.

CRAVEN, a coward, so spelt as if it meant one who has craven, craved, or begged his life from his antagonist (A. Sax. cravian), and indeed so explained by Skinner and H. Tooke, was originally and properly cravant, meaning overcome, conquered, old Fr. cravante, "oppressed, foiled, or spoiled with excessive toyle, or stripes" (Cotgrave), Span. quebrantado, broken, from quebrantar, Prov. crebantar, from Lat. crepare (crepan(t)s), to break.

In s tryall by bsttel upon a writ of right the ancient law was that the victory should be proclaimed, and the vanquished acknowledge his fault in the audience of the people, or pronounce the horrid word Cravant. . . and sfter this the Recreant should . . . become infamous.—Glossary to Gawin Douglas, 1710, s.v. Crawdoun.

An early instance of creaunt or cravant used as an exclamation in acknowledgment of defeat occurs in The Ancren Riwle (about 1225), where the heart is described as yielding to the devil.

Leið hire sulf adunewsrð, and bubð him ase he bit, and 3eiðð creaunt, creaunt, ase swowinde.—p. 288.

That is, "Lsyt herself downward and boweth to him as he bids, and crieth 'craven, craven!' ss swooning."

His mangled bodie they expose to scorne,
And now each cravin cowsrd dsre defie him.
Fuller,  Davids Hainous Sinne, 47 (1631).

Cryance in Sir Cauline appears to be a corrupt form of creance, cowardice.

He sayes, No cryance comes to my hart,
Nor ifaith l ffeare not thee.

Percy's Folio MS. vol. iii. p. 7, l. 93.

CRAWDOWN, an old Scotch word for a coward, as if crawed down, or cowed down, as one cock is by another. Compare old Eng. overcrow, to insult over, Spenser, F. Queene, l. ix. 50.

Becum thou coward crawdoun recriand,
And by consent cry cok, thy dede is dicht.
Gawin Douglas, Bukes of Eneados,
p. 356, l. 28 (ed. 1710).

It is not perhaps (as Jamieson suggests) from old Fr. creant and donner, to yield one's self vanquished, but another form of Prov. Eng. cradant and cravant, O. Eng. cravaunde, a coward or "craven:" compare Prov. cravantar, O. Fr. cravanter, to oppress or overthrow. (See Wedgwood, s.vv. Craven and Recreant). Cf. O. Eng. crapayn.

He cared for his cortaysye lest crapayn he were.

Sir Gawayne, ab. 1320, l. 1773
(ed. Morris).

CRAWFISH, a corruption of the old English crevis or crevice. See CRAYFISH.

They set my heart more cock-s-hoop,
Than could whole seas of craw-fish soupe.
Gay, Poems, vol. ii. p. 100 (ed. 1771).

I know nothing of the war, but that we cetch little French fish like crayfish.—Horace Walpole, Letters (1755), vol. ii. p. 465.

My physicians have almost poisoned me with what they call bouillons rafraichissants. . . There is to be one craw-fish in it, and I was gravely told it must be a male one, and a female would do me more hurt than good.—Sterne, Letters, xlvii. 1764.

CRAYFISH is a corruption of O. Eng. crevis, crevice ("Ligombreau, A sea crevice or little lobster," Cotgrave), or crevis, from Fr. écrevisse, i.e. O. H. G. krebitz, Ger. krebs, our "crab."

Departe the crevis a-sondire euyñ to youre sight.

The Babees Book, p. 158, l. 603
(E. E. T. S.).

So "cancer the crewyce," p. 231; craves, p. 233.

Sylvester remarks that in the increase of the moon the more doth abound:—The Blood in Veines, the Sap in Plants, the moisture

And lushing meat, in Crevis, crab and oyster. Du Bartas, p. 82 (1621).

This Sir Christopher [Metsel] is also memorable for stocking the river Yower. . . with Crevises.—Fuller, Worthies, ii. 533.

Crustaceous animals, as crevises, crabs, and lobsters.—Sir Thomas Browne, Works, ii. 254.

CRAZY, a provincial word for the buttercup, may perhaps be, as suggested by Dr. Prior (Popular Names of British Plants), a corruption of Christ's eye (craisey), oculus Christi, the mediæval name of the Marigold, with which old writers founded it. In some places, as the result of its name, its smell is believed to make one mad (N. and Q., 5th S. v. 364). Others regard it as a contracted form of crow's eye.

CREAM-WARE, a Scottish word for articles sold in booths at fairs, otherwise creamery, from cream, crame, a market-stall or booth, a pedlar's pack (creamer, a pedlar); and this from Dut. kraam, a booth, kraamer, a pedlar, Dan. kram, petty ware, Ger. kram.

Ane pedder is called ane merchôd or cremar quha beirs an pack or cream upon his bak.—Skene, De Verborum Significatione, 1597.

CREASE-TILES, } corrupt forms of
CRESS-TILES, } crest-tiles, those that are fixed saddle-wise on the ridge of a roof (Glossary of Architecture, Parker). "Faistiere, A Ridge-tyle, Creast-tyle, Roof-tyle" (Cotgrave), from faiste, the ridge or crest.

Thaktile, rofile, ou crestile.—Stat. 17 Ed. IV. c. 4.

CREDENCE TABLE, the small table on which the Communion vessels are placed, has only a remote connexion with the creeds of the church. It is Fr. credence, a cupboard of silver plate (Cotgrave), It. credenza, a buttery or pantry, also a cup-board of plate (Florio), Low. Lat. credentia, a sideboard (Spelman); It. credentiere, a cup-bearer, a prince's sewer or taster, perhaps an accredited or trusty officer. Credenza, then, would be the place where the dishes and cups were arranged and tasted before served up to the great table.

CREEPIE, a three-legged stool in North English and Scottish, has in all probability nothing to do with creep, but is a corruption of old Fr. tripied, a trivet (Cotgrave), Mod. Fr. trépied, from Lat. tripe(d)s, three-footed, tripetia, a three-legged stool. Cf. Ital. trepie and trepiedi, a three-footed stool (Florio). Tr would change into cr, as Fr. craindre, O. Fr. crembre, from Lat. trcmere; Dan. trane = Eng. crane; huckle-berry = hurtle-berry, &c.

The three-legged creepie stools . . . were unoccupied.—Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, ch. ii.

Burns says of the stool of repentance—

When I mount the creepie-chair,
Wha will sit beside me there?

Poems, p. 213 (Globe ed.)

Creepier, a trivet (T. L. O. Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary), seems to be a further corruption.

CREMONA, the name of a certain stop in the organ, as if resembling the tone of the Cremona violin, is a corruption of Fr. cremorne, Ger. lerummhorn, "the crooked horn," an old instrument somewhat similar to a bassoon. See Hawkins, History of Music, vol. ii. p. 245; Hopkins, History of the Organ, p. 124.

In a letter in the State Paper Office (about 1515) occurs the following:—

Ego dimisi unum Manicordium cum pedale in Grintwitz [Greenwich]: et nisi vestram Majestatem dredecim Cromhornes pro talia, non sum recompensatus, sed spero.—Ellis, Original Letters, 3rd Ser. vol. i. p. 203.

CREST-MARINE, an old name for the plant Samphire (Crithmum maritimum), as if from its growing on the crest of land that rises above the sea, is a corruption of Fr. chrisme-marine, the popular name of the same plant (otherwise called salicorne or bacile), which is itself corrupted from Lat. crethmos, Gk. kréthmon (Littré).

Chrisme-Marine, Sampire, rocke Sampire, Crestmarine.—Cotgrave.

The root of Nenuphar . . . assuageth the paine and grieft of the bladder: of the same power is Sampier, [margin] or Crestmarine.—P. Holland, Plinies Naturall History, tom. ii. p. 254 (1634).

CROFT. In Ireland "a croft of water" is the common term, especially among servants, for a water-bottle. It is probably a corrupted form of caraffe (c'raffe, craft, croft). Canon Farrar records an instance of the same word being transformed into cravat in the mouth of an English servant (Origin of Languages, p. 57). It would be but a short step from cravat to croft. Fr. carafe, It. caraffa, Sp. Portg. garrafa, fr. Arab. qiráf, a measure, qarafa, to draw water, otherwise spelt gharaf (Dozy, Devic). Littré thinks it may be from the Persian garābah, a large-bellied glass bottle. In Italian giraffa (a giraffe, also), "a kind of fine drinking glasse or flower glasse" (Florio), seems to be a corruption of caraffa (garaffa).

CROSIER, old Eng. crose, crose, Fr. crose (crosseron), the pastoral staff of a bishop, owes its present form to a confusion with "cross," Fr. croix, Lat. crux, with which words it has no direct connexion. The oldest forms of the word are in English croce, croche, in French croce, denoting a staff, like a shepherd's, with a curved head or crook, Fr. croc, Dan. krog, Welsh crwg. Compare Ger. krummstab.

"Croce of a byshepe. Pedum."—Prompt. Parv. (see Way, in loco). "Croce is a shepherd's crooke in our old English; hence the staffe of a Bishop is called the crocier or crosier."—Minsheu. The fact of a cross-bearer being called a croser, croyser, or crocere, contributed to the confusion.

CROSS, meaning peevish, bad-tempered, irritable, as if one whose disposition is contrary, perverse, or across that of others, not running in the same line but cross-grained, like thwart, perverse (A. Sax. puceor, Ger. quer, "queer"); froward, i.e. fromward; Fr. revêche, It. rivescio, from Lat. reversus; It. ritroso, from Lat. retrosus (retroversus). It, however, seems to be the same word as old Eng. crus, excited, wrathful, nimble; North Eng. crous, crouse, brisk, pert, Prov. Eng. crous, to provoke (East), Swed. krus-hufvud, Dan. krus-hoved ("crowse-head"), ill-tempered, perverse fellow, Scot. crowse, with confidence or some degree of petulance. The original meaning of the word was crisp and curly, from which it came to signify smart, brisk, then pert, saucy, and finally peevish, excitable. (See Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, s. v. Crous.) Compare the popular phrase, "cross as two sticks."—Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary. Havelok, when attacked by thieves, Driue hem ut, þei [= though] he weren crus, So dogges ut of milne-hous.

Havelok the Dane, l. 1966 (ab. 1280).

Cruse, captious, cross; also croose, irritable, pugnacious, conceited.

He's as croose as a hanty cock.—Patterson, Antrim and Down Glossary, E. D. S.

It is noticeable that in Prov. English

crup (? from Fr. crêpe, crisp) has the twofold meaning of (1) crisp, brittle, short, and (2) surly [? short-tempered] (Wright).

CROSS-PUTS, a Scotch term for funeral gifts to the church, is a corrupted form of cors-presands, or corps-presents (Jamieson). So cors, corse, is a Scotch form of cross.

CROW, or CROW-BAR, may perhaps be a corruption of the Provincial English crome, a crook, crome in Tusser (1580), E. D. Soc. p. 38, crombe, Prompt. Parv. In the Paston Letters we read of a riotous mob coming with "long cromes to drawe down howsis."

Compare the Irish crum, crooked, A. Sax. crumb. Compare, however, the Irish cró = (1) strength, (2) an iron bar. Cotgrave spells it croe, "Pince, a croe, great barre, or lever of iron." The cloven end of the implement was mistakenly assimilated to the powerful beak of the crow or raven, cf. Lat. corvus, Gk. kórax. Cotgrave uses croe in a different sense:—

Jahles, the croes of a piece of caske; the furrow, or hollow (at either end of the pipe-staves) whereinto the head-pieces be en-chased.

Get crowe made of iron, deepe hole for to make,

With crose ouerthwart it, as sharpe as a stake.

Tusser, Five Hundred Pointes, 1580 (E. D. Soc.), p. 98.

CROWD, } apparently a popular cor-
CROUD, } ruption of crypt in the following passage descriptive of the ancient church of S. Faith, beneath old S. Paul's.

This being a parish church dedicated to the honour of St. Faith the Virgin, was heretofore called Ecclesia S. Fidis in Cryptis (or in the crowdes, according to the vulgar expression).—Dugdale, Hist. of S. Paul's, p. 117.

Croud = Crypt, Glossary of Architecture, Parker.

Cryptoporticus . . . a secret walke or vault under the ground, as the crowdes or shrowdes of Paules, called S. Faithes church.—Nomenclator.

The Temple of the Holy Sepulchre . . . hath wonder many yles, crowdes, and vautes.—Pylgrimage of Sir R. Guyllforde, 1506, p. 24 (Camden Soc.).

The origin of the word may be traced through O. Fr. crote, Prov. crota, Sp.

Portg. gruta, It. grotta, Fr. grotte (our "grot," "grotto"), from Lat. crypta, Gk. krúptē, a hidden place.

The close walks and rustic grotto; a crypta, of which the laver or basin is of one vast, intire, antiq porphyrie. — Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 29, 1644.

CROWNER, also crownal, "the commander of the troops raised in one county" (Jamieson), a Scotch corruption of colonel (coronel). Cf. crownell for coronet, crowner for coroner.

The crowners lay in canvas lodges, high and wide, their captains about them in lesser ones, the soldiers about all in huts of timber. — Account of the Covenanters' Camp, temp. Chas. I. (in Baillie, Letters and Journals, vol. i. p. 211, ed. 1841).

Crowner (= crownell = coronel or colonel) also occurs in Sir T. Turner, Pallas Armata, 1627, p. 17.

CRUCIBLE, a melting-pot, Low. Lat. crucibulum, so spelt as if it were a derivation of Lat. crux, crucis, because it was often marked with the sign of a cross. So Chaucer calls it a croislet or croselett. It is, however, certainly of the same origin as cruse, Dut. kroes, kruyse, Dan. kruus, Fr. creuset, a cup or pot, Ir. cruisgin, a pitcher, pot, or crock.

CRUELS, } a Scotch word for the CRUELLES, } scrofula, or King's evil, is a corruption of the French écrouelles, which is from Lat. scrofula through a form scrofell. O. Fr. escrovele, whence O. Eng. scroyle, a scrubby or shabby [i.e. scabby] fellow. This word cruels is still in use in Antrim and Down (Patterson).

A MS. account of The Order of K. Charles [L.] entring Edinburghe, p. 23, preserved in the Advocates' Library, says, that on the 24th of June, 1633, he "their solemnlie offred, and after the offering, heallit 100 persons of the cruelles or Kings's eivell, yong and olde." — J. G. Dalryell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland (1835), p. 62.

CRUMB, numb, thumb, = old Eng. crume, A. Sax. cruma, num(-en), púm-a, seem to owe their present spelling with a final b to a false analogy with dumb (A. Sax. dumb), tomb (Greek tumbos). So limb (q.v.) was formerly lim, A. Sax. lim.

CRUSH, a word used in the eastern counties for gristle, cartilage, or soft-bones, perhaps mentally associated with the verb to crush, is a shortened form of crussel (or crustle) of the same meaning used in Suffolk, old Eng. crussell or cruschyl, all = A. Sax. gristel, which indeed itself probably denotes that which must be ground like grist, or crunched, before swallowed.

Cruschylbone, or grystylbone (crussell), cartilago. — Prompt. Parvulorum.

Bailey gives crussel as an old word for gristle.

CRUSTY, in the sense of short-tempered, irritable, testy, is perhaps a corrupt form of the old English curst, which has the same meaning (e.g. Cursor Mundi (14th cent.), p. 1100). Compare Belgian and Dutch korzel, angry, choleric, testy. In Irish croisda is morose, captious, crabbed, and cro-tacht perverseness (O'Reilly). The Yankee cussedness, perversity, wrong-headedness, is of the same origin.

She is thought but a curst mother who beats her child for crying, and will not cease beating until the child leave crying. — John Owen (1680), Works, vol. xiii. p. 341 (ed. 1852).

As curst and shrewd

As Socrates' Xantippe.

Taming of the Shrew, act. i. sc. 2.

They are never curst but when they are hungry.

Winter's Tale, act. iii. sc. 3.

So the old proverb "God gives a curst cow short horns."

Similar transposition of letters is common, e.g. Dut. korst, a crust, korstig, crusty; cursen (Beaumont and Fletcher) for christen, kirsome for chrisom; O. Scot. corsting for crossing; grass, A. Sax. gærs; bird, A. Sax. brid, clapse, and clasp. The French encroûté (crusty), full of prejudices, and s'encroûter, to grow stupid, are founded on the conception of becoming encrusted, indurated, unimpressionable, stolid.

There are some dogs of that nature that they barke rather vpon custome then curstnesse. — Thos. Lodge, Workes of Seneca, p. 915 (1614).

Cursedly she loked on hym tho.

A Mery Geste of Frere and the Boye.

Pray for thy crusty soul? Where's your reward now?

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Bloody Brother, iii. 2.

Compare custard = O. Eng. crustade, O. F. croustade, orig. a crusted tart. Somewhat similarly Prof. Skeat thinks course may be a perverted use of Scand. korsa, to make the sign of the kors, kross, or "cross." Cf. Heb. barak = to curse or to bless, Lat. sacer, sacred or accursed.

CRUTCHES, a Sussex word for broken pieces of crockery (Parish, Glossary), is probably from Fr. cruche, a pitcher, Welsh cruc.

CUCELERE, the Anglo-Saxon word for a spoon, which Bosworth ranges under cóc, a cook, as if a cooking utensil, is evidently the Latin cochleare or cochlear.

CUCKOLD, a Somerset word for the plant Burdock, a corruption of the A. Sax. coccel, darnel, tares, cockle.

CUCKOO-BONE, a name applied to a bone at the lowest extremity of the spine, attached to the os sacrum, Lat. os coccygis, Greek kokkuw, cuckoo.

At the end of the Holy-bone appeareth the Rump-bone called os coccygis, because it is like a cuckoo's beake.—Croke, Description of the Body of Man, p. 981 (1631).

It is in all probability only another form of Lat. coxim (cozzim), the hinder-part, cova, the hip, Greek koçhōne (for koçōne). Curtius, Griechisch, Etymologie, i. 123; ii. 283.

CUCKOO-PINT, } a popular name for CUCKOO-PINTLE, } the arum maculatum, a supposed corruption, is said to have no reference to the bird so named, but to be the A. Saxon cucu, living (Prior); Yorkshire cuckoo-point (Britten and Holland).

But Mr. Cockayne quotes old Eng. coke-pintel, gawk-pyntell, and shows it was so called, because it flowers at the time of the coming of the geac or cuckoo (Leechdoms, &c. vol. iii. Glossary). This is undoubtedly right.

CUDDY, } a North British word for CUDDIE, } an ass, as if identical with cuddy, the pet name for Cuthbert, which has long been a favourite appellation in the North of England out of veneration for the famous saint of that name. The much-enduring disposition of the donkey was, perhaps, suggestive of the saintly character, to say nothing of its wearing the cross, just as the patient camel is nicknamed by the Arabs Abi-Ayub, "Father of Job." It would be curious if Cuthbert, expressive of "noted brightness" (Yonge, Christian Names, ii. 417), came to be applied to an animal notoriously stupid. The word is not a native Scottish term, and was originally slang. It was in all probability borrowed from the Gypsies, the ass being their favourite animal, as Jamieson remarked, and so may be of oriental origin. Cuddy therefore may be identical with Hindústáni gadhá, gadhi, an ass (? Persian gudda), with which Colebrooke would connect Sansk. gardabha. But in the Siahpôsh dialect of Cabul gudâ is an ass, Malay kudha, near akin to Sanskrit ghôta, a horse, originally "the kicker," from ghut, to strike back (see Pictet, Origines Indo-Européenes, tom. i. p. 352). In Modern Greek gádaros is a donkey.

England being a dull country—a Ghud-distan or Cuddyland, as they say in the East—keeps up old fashions.—Andrew Wilson, Edinburgh Essays (1856), p. 160.

James Simson, writing of the Scottish Gypsies, speaks of

The droll appearance of so many cuddies—animals that generally appear singly, but when driven by gypsies come in battalions.—History of the Gypsies, p. 46.

A cuddy's gallop's sune done.—A. Hislop, Proverbs of Scotland, p. 16.

Cuddy, cudden, an old provincial word for "a Nizey, or a silly fellow" (Bailey), is probably a derived usage. In the Cleveland dialect cuddy is a hedge-sparrow (Atkinson), so called, perhaps, from its resemblance in colour to an ass, just as Northampton doney, a sparrow (elsewhere dunnoch), donleey, and Scot. donie, a hare, are all from O. Eng. don, dun.

CUSSHOE, an affected mispronunciation of the interjection "Gadso" (which is itself a corruption of It. cazzo) in the old drama.

CULLENDER, a popular spelling of colander, which is apparently an incorrect form of colader (cf. Span. coladero, a strainer, siue, a colender.—Minshew), like messenger, porringer, passenger, for messenger, porridger, passager. A derivative of Lat. colare, to strain.

I am a witness that in the late war his own ship was pierc'd like a cullendur.—J. Evelyn, Diary, May 31, 1672.

CULLISEN, } an old word for a badge CULLISON, } or distinctive mark, in Ben Jonson and others, is a corruption of cognisance, that by which one is known (Lat. cognoscere), from a desire, perhaps to assimilate it to other words like cully, cullion, &c.

Onion. But what hadge shall we give, what cullison?—B. Jonson, The Case is Altered, iv. 4.

CULVER-KEYS, an old popular name for a meadow plant, probably the orchis morio, is apparently a corruption of culverkins, i.e. little culvers or pigeons
 (A. Sax. culfre), to which its flowers were fancifully resembled. Compare the name of the plant columbine from Lat. columba, a pigeon. With the termination compare mon-key, don-key.

The form covey-keys, may sometimes be heard in Kent, applied to the oxlip.

CUP, as a medical term to draw blood by scarifying under a glass wherein the air is rarefied, derived as it were from the cup-like shape of the glass, is a corruption of Fr. couper, to cut, O. Fr. copper.

I should rather substitute couping glasses, applied on the legs.—Ferrand, Love Melancholy, p. 340.

It [pleurisy] is helped much by cupping; I do not mean drinking.—T. Adams, The Soul's Sickness, Works, i. 487.

They bled, they cupp'd, they purged; in short, they cured.

Pope [Latham].

CURLY-FLOWER, a Lincolnshire word for a cauliflower (Peacock, Glossary of Words used in Manley, &c.).

CURMUDGEON, so spelt, no doubt, to suggest a connexion with cur, used as a term of contempt, is an altered form of corn-mudgin, which Holland in his Livy uses to translate frumentarius, a corn-dealer, especially in the sense of a regrator, one who engrosses and hoards up the corn in time of scarcity, and then "a covetous hunks, a close-fisted fellow" (Bailey), in accordance with the Proverb (xi. 26)
 "He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him." Corn-mudgin is for corn-mudging, i.e. corn-hoarding; mudge being = O. Eng. much or mich, to hide (Skeat). Compare "Pleure-pain, a nigardly wretch; a puling nicher or miser, &c." (Id.). O. Fr. mucer, to hide.
 The popular hatred of the corn-hoarder is exhibited in the Rhenish legend of Bishop Hatto, and in a ballad licensed in 1581,

Declaring the greate covetousness and unmercifull dealing of one Walter Gray, some-tyme Archebissshop of Yorke, whoe having great abundance of corne, suffred the needie, in the tyme of famyne, to die for want of relief, And of the fearfull vengeance of God pronounced against him.—Registers of the Stationers' Company, vol. ii. p. 150 (Shaks.
 Soc.).

Cormorant (formerly corvorant, as if corn-vorant) seems to have been used in the same sense.

His father is such a dogged old curmudgeon,
 he dares not for his ears acquaint him with it.
 —Heywood & Rowley, Fortune by Land & Sea,
 1655, p. 46 (Shaks. Soc.).

When the Cormorants
 And wealthy farmers hoord up all the graine
 He empties all his garners to the poore.

No-Body and Some-body, l. 320
 (ab. 1600).

The covetous cormorants or corn-morants
 [i.e. corn-delayers] of his time.—*W. Smith,
 The Blacksmith*, 1606.

CURRENTS, a corruption of Corinths, or "raisins of Corinth," Fr. raisins de Corinthe, they having been originally brought from that place; Welsh *grawn
 Corinth*, i.e. Corinth berries.

We founde there rype smalle raysons that we calle reysons of Corans, and they growe cheffy in Corynth, called nowe Corona, in Morea, to whome seynt Poule wrote sondry epistolles.—Pylgrimage of Sir R. Gwylforde, 1506, p. 11 (Camden Soc.).

The fruits are hereof called in shops by the name of Passularum de Corinthe; in English
Curruns, or small Raisins.—Gerarde, Herbal,
 p. 727 (1597).

Take raysyns of Corauns perto,
 And wyte wyne þou take also.

Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 16 (1440).

Take . . . Raysonys of Coraunce & myncyd Datys, but not to small.—The Babees Book,
 p. 212 (E. E. T. S.).

The chiefe riches thereof [of Zante] consisteth in currents, which draweth hither much trafficke.—G. Sandys, Travels, p. 5.

CURRY, an Indian dish, originally a native term, Hind. kári (a making), a made dish, a curry, from karná, to make (Sansk. kar, kri, to make), seems to have been assimilated to the existing word curry (Fr. corroyer, It. corredare), to prepare or make ready. Mahn de-duces it from Pers. khûrdí, broth, juicy meats.

CURRY FAVOUR, a phrase which Professor Nichol brands as a "vulgarism" (Primer of English Composition), and the Saturday Review "does not much like" (Jan. 4, 1879), is at all events no parvenu in the language. G. Puttenham, in his Arte of English Poesie, 1589, says—

If moderation of words tend to flattery, or soothing, or excusing, it is by the figure Paradiastole, which therefore nothing improperly we call the Curry-fauell, as when we make the best of a bad thing, or turne a signification to the more plausible sence; as to call an unthrif, a liberrall Gentleman.—(P. 195, ed. Arber).

If thou canst currey fauour thus Thou shalt be counted sage.
Tusser, Works, 1580, p. 148 (E. & S.).

It is a corruption of curry favel, to curry, or smooth down, the chesnut-horse, Fr. étriller fauveau.<sup>1</sup> Cotgrave quotes a proverb, "Tel étrille fauveau qui puis le mord. The ungratefull jade bites him that does him good;" this is found in a fourteenth century Romance, which went by the name of Torche-Fauvel or Estrille-Fauvel. (Le Roux de Lincy, Proverbes Français, tom. ii. p. 36). Compare "curryfauell, a flatterer, estrille."—Palsgrave, 1530.

Sche was a schrewe, as have y hele,
There sche currayed fauell well.
How a Merchant did his Wufe betray,
l. 203.

The phrase assumed its meaning of cajoling from a confusion of favel, the yellow-coloured horse, with favel, an old word for flattery (in Langland, Occleve, Skelton, &c.), i.e. It. favola, a lying tale, Lat. fabula. See Prof. Skeat's Note on Piers the Plowman, Vision of, Pass. iii. l. 5, Text c.

In the ancient cant of thieves the phrase is used for a sluggard.

He that will in court dwell, must needes currie fabel . . . ye shal understand that fabel is an olde Englishe worde, and signified as much as favour doth now a dayes.—Taverner, Proverbes or adagies gathered out of the Chiltades of Erasmus, 1562, fo. 44.

Cory fauell is he, that wyl lie in his bed, and cory the bed bordes in which he lyeth in steede of his horse. This slouthful knaue wyl buskill and scratch when he is called in the morning, for any hast.—The XXV. Orders of Knaues, 1575.

To curry a temporary favour he incurreth everlasting hatred.—Adams, Sermons, i. 284.

To curry was once used independently for to cajole, with reference to the "soft smoothing of flattery" (Fuller).

bey curry kinges & her back clawep.
Pierce the Ploughman's Crede,
1394, l. 365 (ed. Skeat).

CURSE, in the vulgar phrase "not to care a curse for a thing," is a corruption of the old English kars or kers, a cress, A. Sax. cærse; Dutch kerse, Ger. kerse, Fr. cresson, "the herb tearmed kars, or cresses," "cresson alenois, kerse" (Cotgrave); which was made a by-word for anything trivial and worthless.

So kerson is a Lancashire form of christen, "Feather Adam nother did nor cou'd kerson it" (View of the Lancashire Dialect). See also H. Tooke, Diversions, p. 360 (ed. Taylor).

Wyndon and Wit now is nat worth a curse.
Lungland, Vision of Piers Plowman,
Pass xii. l. 14, Text c.

Anger gayne3 the not a cresse.
Alliterative Poems, The Pearl, l. 343,
(ed. Morris).

Of paramours ne raught he not a kers.
Chaucer, The Milleres Tale, l. 3754.

To-morrow morning (if Heaven permit) I begin the fifth volume of Sbandy—I care not a curse for the critics.—Sterne, Letters, xviii. 1761.

That man never breathed, . . . for whose contributions to the Magazine I cared one single curse.—Wilson, Noctes Ambrosiane, vol. i. p. 259.

I care not a curse though from birth he inherit

The tear-bitter bread and the stings of scorn,

If the man be but one of God's nobles in spirit—

Though penniless, richly-soul'd,—heart-some, though worn.

Gerald Massey, The Worker.

A long list of examples in Norman French, such as "not worth an onion, a head of garlic, a nut, a lettuce, a thread of silk," &c., will be found in Atkinson's Vie de Seint Auban, p. 67.

Compare

Thereof set the miller not a tare.
Chaucer, The Reves Tale, 3935.

This Absolon ne raughte not a bene.
Milleres Tale, l. 3770.

<sup>1</sup> So also Douce, Illustrations to Shakespeare, p. 291.

Compare the expressions "I don't care a straw," "not a rush," Fr. il ne vaut pas un zest (i.e. a walnut-skin), Lat. nauci, flocci, nihili (i.e. ne-hili), pendere; Greek kardamizo, to talk idly. lit. chatter about cresses (kárdamon), karòs aisé, at a hair's value, &c.

"Not worth a rush" seems originally to have meant not deemed of sufficient importance to have fresh rushes strewed on the floor for one's reception, at least so it is suggested by the following passage:

"Strange have greene rushes when daily guests are not worth a rush.—Lilly, Sapho and Phao, ii. 4 (1584).

CURTALL, a corruption of the older form to curtall, as if from the French court tailler, to cut short, or as if it meant to shorten or dock the tail [Cf. O. Fr. courtault, It. cortaldo]. Thus, esqueüé, which Cotgrave defines as "curtall, curtalled; untailed, without taile, deprived of a taile," would now be translated "curtailed." An old writer speaking of the knavery of dealers in horses says:—

They can make curtalls when they list, and againe set too large tailes, hanging to the fetlockes at their pleasure.—Martin Marhall's apologie to the belman of London, 1610, Sig. G.

The curtal Friar of the Robin Hood Ballads was evidently of the Franciscan order of monks who were ridiculed for the short habits they wore in obedience to their founder's injunction (Staveley, Romish Horseleech, ch. xxv.), O. Eng. curtal, a short cloke or coat. In the old canting language of beggars,

A curtall is much like to the upright man, but hys authority is not fully so great. He useth commonly to go with a short cloke, like to grey friers, and his woman with him in like livery.—The Fraternitie of Vacubondes, 1575.

Shakespeare has "a curtail dog" for curtal, in Comedy of Errors, iii. 2, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 1, and Howell defines a curtail or curtal as "a dog without a tail, good for any service."—Dict. of Four Languages.

Mr. Fitz-Edward Hall quotes, as authorities for the verb to curtall, Thomas Campion (1602), Ancient Critical Essays, vol. ii. p. 165; Thos. James, Treatise of the Corruption of Scripture, 1612, pt. ii. p. 59; Heylin, Ecclesia

Vindicata (1657), pt. i. p. 132 (Modern English, p. 185).

Curvall dogs, so taught they were
They kept the arrows in their mouth.

Ingledew, Bullads and Songs of Yorkshire, p. 52.

CURT-HOSE, the nickname of the eldest son of the Conqueror, a corruption of Robertus Curtus (M. Müller, Chips, iii. 301). So cat-house, an old species of battering-ram, was originally cattus, so called from its crafty approach to the walls. It. gatto, "a hee-cat, Also an engine of warre to batter walls" (Florio). Gattus, "machina belli" (Spelman, Glossary), "a werrely holde that men call a barbed catte" (Caxton's Vegecius).

CURTILAGE, "a law term for a piece of ground, yard, or garden-platt, belonging to, or lying near a house."—Bailey, from Low Lat. curtis. The word is a derivation not of curtus, but of Lat. chor(t)s, cohor(t)s, a yard, whence also It. corte, Fr. cour, Eng. court, Welsh cwrt. C. Kingsley curiously spells it courtledge (Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary).

CURTLE-AXE, and CURTLAX, a corruption of "cutlass," really Fr. coute-las, It. cortelazo, cortellaccio, from Lat. cultellus (dim. of culter, a knife), but understood as if a curtal or short axe. Skinner spells it curtelass, and explains it as ensis brevior (Etymologicon, 1671). Cf. Dut. kortelas (Sewel).

For with my swor[r]d, this sharp curtle axe,
I'll cut asunder my accursed heart—

Loerine, 1586.

A gallant curtle-axe upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand.

As You Like It, i. 3, l. 119
(Globe ed.).

Dear ware this Hanger and this Curtilar.
The Roaring Girl, i. 1 (1611).

There springs the shrub three foot above
the grass

Which fears the keen edge of the Curtelace.
Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 181 (1621).

A still further corruption was curtaxe.
With curtaxe used Diamond to smite.

Spenser, F. Queene, iv. 2, 42.

CUSTARD WINDS, a Cleveland word for the cold easterly winds prevalent on the N.E. coast in spring, is probably, Mr. Atkinson thinks, a corruption of coast-ward winds.

CUT-HEAL, a popular name for the Valerian, Dr. Prior thinks may be from Dut. kutte, A. Sax. cwið, it being used in uterine affections.

CUTLASH, a corruption of cutlas found in N.W. Lincolnshire, and elsewhere.

He . . . gave him one Blow a-cross his Belly with his cutlash.—Chas. Johnson, Lives of Highwaymen, &c., 269 (1734).

A good hog for an old cutlash.

Id. p. 234.

A villanous Frenchman made at me with a cutlash.—Blackmore, Maid of Sker, vol. i. p. 11.

It is also found as cutlace.

With Monmouth cap and cutlace by my side.

A Satyre on Sea Officers (O. Plays, xii. 375, ed. 1827).

CUTLET, so spelt probably from a notion that it denoted a little cut of meat. It is really the French côtelette, a little rib of mutton or other meat, diminutive of côte, a rib or side, and this again is from the Latin costa. The older French form was costelette.

Costelletes de porc, the sparribs.—Cotgrave.

To join in a costelet and a salad.—North, Life of Lord Gailford, i. 91 [see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary].

Coast is said to be a Sussex word for the ribs of cooked meat, particularly lamb (Parish, Glossary).

Sir Beaumains smot him through the cost of the body.—Malory, King Arthur, 1634, vol. i. p. 253 (ed. Wright).

CUTTLE-FISH, O. Eng. "Codulle, fysche. Sepia." (Prompt. Parv.). A. Sax. cudele. "Loligo, a fysche whiche hath his head betwene his feete and his bealy, and hath also two bones, oone lyke a knife, the other lyke a penne."—Elyot. It is from this bone, which bears a considerable resemblance to a flint knife or celt (Fr. coustel cou-teau), and may often be picked up on the shore, that the fish is supposed to take its name. Cf. the names cousteau de mer, Welsh mor-gylllell, "sea-knife." The German name, however, is kuttel-fisch (? from kuttel, entrails, guts); O. Dut. kuttel-visch. The word in English has been corrupted from cudde, cudle, under the influence of the foreign names.

CWELCA, an Anglo-Saxon name for the plant colocynthis, Gk. kolokunthis, given by Bosworth, is evidently a naturalized form of the foreign word, as if connected with cwelian, to kill or quell, from its powerful action when administered as a drug. See Gerarde, Herball, fol. p. 769.

CYCLE, a pedantic spelling of sickle (Lat. secula, a cutter, from seco), as if so called from its circular shape and derived from Greek cyclus (κύκλος); cf. Fr. cicle = a shekel.—Cotgrave.

The corn . . . wooed the cycles to cut it.

Fuller, Pisgah Sight, fol. 1650, p. 161.

Messena was at the first called Zancle, of the crookedness of the place, which signifieth a cycle.—G. Sandys, Travels, p. 244.

CYDER, for sider or syder, the common form in old writers, Lat. sicera, Greek sikerá, Heb. shekár, has apparently been assimilated in spelling by the learned to cyd-oneum, a beverage made out of the cydonia or quince, a kind of perry. Pepys spells it syder, Diary, vol. ii. p. 113 (ed. Bright).

Shekár (Prov. xxxi. 4) was originally a sweet wine; in later times, when widely spread by means of Phœnician commerce, only a kind of beer.—Ewald, Antiquities of Israel, p. 86.

Sothli he achal be greet bifore the Lord, and he schal not drynke wyn and sydir.—Wycliffe, Luke i. 15 (1389).

He ne drinçþ wín ne béor.—A. Sar. Version (995).

Sikera, says S. Jerome, "in the Hebrew tongue is every drink which can inebriate, whether it is made from grain, or from the juice of apples, or from honey, or the fruit of the palm" (Epist. ad Nepolian). Initial C and S were formerly almost interchangeable, and we still write celery for sellery (It. sellari, Lat. selinon), ceiling for seeling, cess for sess, &c.

CYGNET, formerly cignet (Fr. cigne), a young swan, so spelt as if connected with Lat. cygnus, a swan. Fr. cigne, however, is identical with O. Fr. and Span. cisne, from Low Lat. cecinius, a swan, and quite unconnected with cygnus (Diez).

CYPHER. An organ-pipe is said to cypher when it continues sounding, when the note on the key-board is not struck. It is doubtless the same word as Welsh sibred, to murmur, to whisper, French siffler, Sp. chiflar, Prov. siblar (from siflure = sibilare); Prov. Eng. sife, siff, to sigh (Devonshire, &c).

Compare It. cifolare and ciuffolare, to whistle, cifello, a piper, a whistler, zuffurare, to whistle or whisper, zuffolare, to pipe; Arab. sifr, whistling, siffer, to whistle; Heb. sôfâr, a trumpet.

CYPRESS ROOT, or Sweet Cypress, popularly so called, is an assimilation of its Latin name cyperus (longus) to the well-known tree-name cypress, Lat. cupressus, Greek kuparissos.

CYPRUS, otherwise spelt cypress and cipres, an old name for a species of fine transparent lawn, as if the stuff introduced from Cyprus, has been considered the origin of the word crape (Abp. Trench, Study of Words, Lect. iv.). The direct opposite is, I think, the case. Crape, Fr. crêpe, old Fr. crêpe, which Cotgrave defines "Cipres, also Cobweb Lawne," Scot. crisp, have their origin in Lat. crispus, and are descriptive of the crisp and rivelled (Fr. crêpi) texture of the material. Minshew describes cipres as "a fine curled linen, Lat. bysus crispata." Cipres, therefore, was the same as crape, and probably is only another form of the same word altered by metathesis, thus, crispe, old Eng. crype; crispe (crypse) in Prov. Eng.; cirps in A. Saxon, cyrps; cipr(e)s, cyp(r)e(s); similar transformations being not unusual, e.g. grass for gars, A. S. gærs; cart for crat, A. S. cræt; kirsten, kirsen (Burns), for christen, &c.

Blak with crisp her [= hair], lene, and somdel qued.

Wright, Pop. Treatises on Science, 13th cent., p. 138, l. 283.

Jamieson gives crype (? for cyrps) as an old Scotch word for crape, old Eng. crisp.

Nelle with hir nyfys of crisp and of sylke.
Townley Mysteries, Juditum (15th cent.).

A Cyprus not a hosom
Hides my poor heart.

Twelfth Night, iii. 1.

Lawn, as white as driven snow,
Cyprus, black as e'er was crow.

Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

About her head a cyprus heau'n she wore,
Spread like a veile, vpheld with siluer wire.

G. Fletcher, Christs Victorie in Heauen (1610), 59.

And sable stole of cipres lawn
Over thy decent sholders drawn.

Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 36.

Over all these draw a black cyprus, a veil of penitential sorrow.—J. Taylor, Holy Dying, p. 22 (ed. 1848).

Exactly similar in origin, and nearly related, are Fr. crêpe, a pancake, old Eng. crippes, fritters (Wright), crispels (Forme of Cury), Scot. crisp, a pancake, i.e. something fried till crisp.

*Crypes frye*3.—Book of Precedence, p. 91 (E. E. T. S.).

CYST-BEAM, the Anglo-Saxon name for the chestnut tree, as if connected with cyst, fruitfulness, goodness, cystig, bountiful, liberal, is a corruption of Lat. cast-aneus. See CHESTNUT.

CYTHORN, an old Eng. form of "cittern," the musical instrument, is quoted by Carl Engel, Musical Myths and Facts, i. p. 60.

D.

DAB, in the colloquial phrase "to be a dab at anything," i.e. clever, expert, has probably no connexion with dab, to hit (the mark), or dapper, spruce (Goth. ga-dobs, fitting), but is a corruption of adept (Lat. adeptus, proficient), misunderstood as a dep'. Cf. North Eng. dabster, a proficient.

DAINTY. This word, when used in the sense of fastidiously nice, finicking, delicate, O. Eng. deynté, deinté, is properly a subs. = pleasantness, from O. Fr. daintie, and that from dain, fine, quaint, Lat. dignus, worthy. Cf. dis-dain, to deem unworthy (Skeat).

For deynté þat he hadde of him : he let him sone bringe

Before þe prince of Engeland : Adelstan þe kyng.

Life of S. Dunstan, l. 36, Philolog. Soc. Trans., 1858.

And he resawyt thaim in daynté,
And hyr full gretly thankit he.

Barbour, The Bruce, bk. iv. l. 142 (ed. Jamieson).

When used in the special sense of a delicacy, something nice to eat, the word was probably confounded with Welsh dantaeth, a dainty, something toothsome (from dant, daint, tooth), Scot. daintith, daintess.

Thow waxes pur, þane fortune wil þe wyt,
And haf na danteth of þi sone na delite.

Bernardus, De Cura Rei Familiaris, p. 14, l. 334 (E. E. T. S.).

To tell here metus was tere/ That was served at here soper,
There was no dentethus to dere/ Ne spyces to spare.

Sir Degrevant, ll. 1409-1412, The Thornton Romance, p. 236.

Abof dukes on dece, with dayntys serued.
Alliterative Poems, B. l. 38 (ed.
Morris).

Jacob here made dainty of lentils.
T. Adams, Politic Hunting,
Works, i. 5.

So that for lack of deintie mete,
Of which an herte may be fedde,
I go fastende to my bedde.
Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii.
p. 25 (ed. Pauli).

When we say, therefore, that a person is dainty about his food and fond of dainties, we use two really distinct words—the former akin to dignity, the latter to dentist.

DAMES, an old English name for the game of draughts, Fr. dames, would seem to have been borrowed from Egyptian dameh, if that be the primitive word.

The modern Egyptians have a game of draughts very similar in the appearance of the men to that of their ancestors, which they call dameh, and play much in the same manner as our own.—Wilkinson, Ancient Egyptians, ed. Birch, vol. ii. p. 58.

Another game existing in the Middle Ages, but much more rarely alluded to, was called dames, or ladies, and has still preserved that name in French.—Wright, Homes of other Days, p. 235.

In French and Provençal damier is a chessboard.

DAME'S VIOLET, a popular name for the hesperis matronalis, is a corruption of Fr. violette de Damas, "damask violet" (Lat. viola Damascena), as if it were violette des dames (Prior).

DAMSEL, "the damson (Damascena), a variety of the prunus domestica." (Holderness Glossary, Eng. Dialect. Soc., Yorks., Cheshire, and North of Ireland.)—Britten and Holland.

They are called damascens of the citie of Damascus of Soria.—Passenger of Benvenuto, 1612 (Nares).

Modern Damascus is a beautifull city. The first Damask-rose had its root here, and name hence. So all Damask silk, linen, poulder, and plumbes called Damascens.—T. Fuller, Pisgah Sight, bk. iv. ch. i. p. 9 (1650).

DARBIES, a slang term for handcuffs, is said to be in full Johnny Darbies, a corruption of Fr. gens-d'armes, applied originally as a nickname to policemen [?].

We clinked the darbies on him, took him as quiet as a lamb.
Scott, Guy Mannering, ch. xxxiii.

But the old term was "Father Derby's bands."

To binde such babes in father Darbies bands.
G. Gascoigne, The Steel Glas (1576),
l. 787.

See also T. L. O. Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v.

DARKLE, to gloom or be dark, a fictitious verb, formed from darkling, understood as a present participle. Darkling = in the dark, is really an adverb, like O. Eng. backling, flailing, headling. See GROVEL and SIDLE.

Out went the candle, and we were left darkling.

Shakespeare, K. Lear, i. 4, l. 237.

Darkling they join adverse, and ahock unseen,
Courseers with courseers justling, men with men.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, bk. iii.
l. 590.

Bp. Hall has the phrase "to go darklings to bed."

D'Arcy Magee, in one of his songs, says—

A cypress wreath darkles now, I ween,
Upon the brow of my love in green.

Founder's Tomb . . . darkles and shines with the most wonderful shadows and lights.—Thackeray, Newcomes, ch. lxxv.

See T. L. O. Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v.

Modern poets often use darkling as an adjective.

To-night beneath the lime-trees' darkling arms

The dying sun's farewell is passing sweet.

W. H. Pollock, The Poet and the Muse, 1880.

On darkling man in pure effulgence shine.
Johnson, The Rambler, No. 7.

DASH IT! This expletive does not probably, as we might suppose, represent the typographical euphemism of a dash, as in "d— it," but the Fr. deshait, dehait, dehet, affliction, misfortune (lit. dis-pleasure, from O. Fr. hait, pleasure), as an imprecation equivalent to Cursed! Ill betide! This in old Eng. appears as the interjection datheit, dahet.

Dapeit hwo it hire thau !

Dapeit hwo it hire yeue !

Havelok the Dane (ab. 1280), ll. 296, 300. See Skeat, Glossary, s.v.

Dahet habbe that ilke best

That fuleth his owe nest.

The Owl and the Nightingale, l. 100 (Percy Soc.).

DASIBERDE, an old Eng. word for a simpleton (? as if a dazed beard), affords a curious instance of corruption. It is another form of dozeper, dosseper, originally one of the doseperis, Fr. les douze pairs, the twelve peers of France. See DOSEBERDE.

Al so the dosse pers

Of France were pere echon, þat so noble were and fers.

Robt. of Gloucester, p. 188.

Sir Cayphas, I saye seckerly

We that bene in companie

Must needes this dosebeirde destroye.

The Chester Mysteries (Shaks. Soc.), vol. ii. p. 34.

DATE, the fruit of the palm-tree, Fr. datte, old Fr. dacte, have been formed from dactile, dactyle; cf. Span. and Prov. datil, Flem. dadel, Ger. dattel, Lat. dactylus, Greek dáktulos, (1) a finger or dactyl, (2) a finger-shaped fruit, a date; these latter words from their termination being mistaken for diminutives (like kernel, satchel, &c.). Similarly almond, Fr. amande, has been evolved from amandle, Dut. amandel, Prov. almandola; and Fr. ange from angel.

Date, frute, Dactilus.—Prompt Parvulorum, 1440.

Dactyle, the Date-grape or Finger-grape.—Cotgrave.

A. Sax. fingeræpla [= dates], Ælfric.—Cockayne, Leechdoms, ii. 368.

A man might have been hard put to it to interpret the language of Æsculapius, when to a consumptive person he held forth his fingers; implying thereby that his cure lay in dates, from the homonymy of the Greek, which signifies dates and fingers.—Sir Thos. Browne, Works, vol. iii. p. 344 (ed. Bohn).

DAVY JONES'S LOCKER, in the sailor's phrase "He's gone to Davy Jones's Locker," i.e. gone to the bottom, drowned, or dead, it has been supposed may originally have been Jonah's locker, in allusion to the position of the prophet when swallowed up, and "the earth with her bars was about him for ever" (Jonah, ii. 6). Davy, as being a common prenominal of all the Welsh Joneses, was then, perhaps, arbitrarily prefixed. See T. L. O. Davies, Suppl. Eng. Glossary, s.v. David seems to have been a favourite name, for some reason, among seamen, certain navigation instruments being called David's staff and David's quadrant (Bailey).

So was he descended . . . to the roots and crags of them [the hills], lodged in so low a cabin, that all those heaps and swellings of the earth lay upon him. . . . The meaning of the prophet was, that he was locked and warded within the strength of the earth, never looking to be set at liberty again.—Bp. John King, On Jonah (1594), p. 174, col. 1 (ed. Grosart).

DAWN, a corruption of the old word dawing or daying, A. Sax. dagung, the becoming day, a substantive formed from the O. Eng. verb to daw, A. Sax. dagian, to become day (dæg), Icel. deging, so spelt as if a past participial form, like drawn (from A. S. dragan), sawn, born, &c.

Dawyn', Auroro; Dayyn', or wexyn day (dawyn), Diesco.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

The dayng of day.—Anturs of Arthur, xxxvii. (Camden. Soc.).

To dawe as the day dothe, adjourner, l'aube se crève.—Pulsgrave, 1530.

In his bed ther daweth him no day.

Chaucer, The Knightes Tale, l. 1678.

Hii come to her felawes in dawynge.—Robt. of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 208 (ed. 1810).

Bi nihte ine winter, ine sumer ipe dawunge.—Ancren Riwe (ab. 1225), p. 20.

When þe dawande day dry3tyn con sende.

Alliterative Poems (14th cent.), C. l. 445.

DAY-BERRY, a provincial name for the wild gooseberry (Courtney, W. Cornwall Glossary), is undoubtedly a corruption of its common popular name thape, or theabe, + berry, the p or b being merged in the ensuing b, so that the word became tha'-berry, and then day-berry.

DAY-NETTLE, a north country name of the plant galeopsis tetrahit, is for deye-nettle, i.e. the nettle injurious to labourers, old Eng. deyes, whom it is believed to affect with whitlows.—Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, pp. 140, 150.

DAY-WOMAN occurs in Shakespeare for a servant whom we would now call a dairy-maid, Perthshire dey.

She is allowed for the day-woman.

Love's Labour's Lost, i. 2. l. 137.

Day-wife occurs in Palsgrave (1530), deye in Chaucer and Prompt. Parvulorum (c. 1440), with the same meaning. Compare Swed. deja, a dairy-maid, Icel. deigja. Dairy, the place where she pursues her occupation (O. Eng. deyryc) stands to dey, as fairy (féerie) does to fay, buttery (i.e. butlery) to butler. Day-house for dairy still is found in S. W. counties of England. It is this word day or dey, in the general sense of maid, that occurs in la-dy, A. Sax. hlœf-dige, the "loaf-maid." It is generally understood to be the "kneader," connected with Goth. deigan, to knead. But it is never applied except to a female, and seems to mean specifically a "milk-maid," not a baker. Cf. Hindústání, dái, a milk-nurse, "Lucy and her Day." Cf. Prov. Ger. düern, to fatten a calf with milk (Westphalian); and Dan. die, milk, the breast, give die, to suckle, diebroder, foster-brother.

His daye þe is his whore awlencø hire mid cloðes [The maid that is his whore he adorns with clothes].—Old Eng. Homilies, 12th cent. 2nd ser. p. 168.

The goodnesse of the earth abounding with deries and pasture.—Fuller, Worthies, vol. ii. p. 1.

The dey, or farmwoman, entered with her pichters, to deliver the milk for the family.—Scott, Fair Muir of Perth, ch. xxxii. vol. v. p. 329, ed. 1857. [Deywoman occurs a few lines afterwards.]

DEADMAN'S DAY, an East Anglian name for the 20th of November, St. Edmund's Day (E. D. Soc. reprints, B. 20), of which it is evidently a corruption, 't Edmun's day. Cf. Tantlins for St. Antholins, Tabbs for St. Ebb's, Tanns for St. Ann's, Tooley for St. Olaf.

DEAR ME! a vulgar exclamation of mild surprise, is supposed to be a corruption of It. Dio mio! It is rather from Fr. Dieu me (aide), old Fr. madia! Similar is the exclamation in the Alexander Romance madeus! which stands for m'aide Deus! (O. Fr. Deus, God.—W. W. S.) In Irish fiadha is "good God," "a testimony," and fiadh is a "deer," but this is no more than a coincidence.

Madia, In good sooth; as true as I live; or (instead of Ce m'ait Dieu) So God help me.—Cotgrave.

Deary me! Deary me! forgive me, good sir, hut this yance, I'll steal naa maar.—W. Hut-ton, A Bran New Wark, l. 343 (E. D. S.).

My informant Jack did'nt seem quite so sanguine as the clergyman, for he uttered that truly Northumbrian ejaculation, "Dear kens!" in a highly interrogative manner.—N. and Q. in Dyer, Eng. Folklore, p. 225.

Then did ideas dance (dear safe us!)

As they'd been daft.

A. Ramsay, Epistle to Arbuckle, 1719.

"Dear help you!" "Dear love you!" are in use in N. Ireland (Patterson, E. D. S.).

DEBENTURE, a bond in acknowledgment of moneys owing, is an altered form of debentur (Blount, Bacon), "There are due," the first words of a bond written in Latin. Cf. debet, he owes, credit, he trusts, tenet, he holds.

It has been assimilated to tenure, censure, enclosure, and many other words in -ure, Lat. -ura.

Father John Burges, / Necessity urges
My woeful cry / To Sir Robert Pie:
And that he will venture / To send my deben-ture.

B. Jonson, Underwoods, lxxv.

DECK, in the following passages—

Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have deck'd the sea with drops full salt.

Tempest, act i. sc. 2. l. 155—is most probably a corruption of the provincial word deg, to bedew or sprinkle (so Dyce, Clark, and Wright). Other forms of the word are Cleveland dagg, Icel. döggva, Swed. dugva, to bedew, and Icel. dögg, Dan. and Swed. dug, Prov. Swed. dagg, = "dew."

DECOY, the modern form of the older word duck-coy, from the mistaken analogy of words like devour, decry, delude, depose, dennude, deploy, &c. Duck-coys or coy-ducks (which occurs in Rushworth's Historical Collections, and is the word still in use in N. W. Lincolnshire) are tame ducks trained to entice wild-fowl into a net or coy. "Coy, a duck decoy."—Holderness dialect, E. Yorkshire. See Coy-duck, Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary.

Compare Dutch eende-kooi, "a duck-cage," i.e. for catching ducks, and kooi-eend, a decoy duck; Fr. canardière; "Decoys seu Duck-coys," Willughby, 1676. See Evelyn, Diary, Sept. 19, 1641.

Similarly Fr. enjôler, to wheedle, meant etymologically to encage, from geôle, O. F. jaiole, a cage. Decoy seems generally to have been confounded with O. Eng. to coy or acoie, to make coy or quiet, to tame, to allure (so Richardson, s.v.). See Haldeman, Affaires, p. 56.

St. Basil says that some in his time did sprinkle sweet ointment upon the Wings of tame Pigeons, and sent them abroad, like our coy Ducks, to fetch in the wild Flocks that they might take delight in them, and follow them home.—Bp. Hacket, Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 802 (fol.).

Women, like me, as ducks in a decoy, Swim down a stream, and seem to swim in joy.

Crabbe, The Parish Register, IVorks, p. 137 (ed. Murray).

DEFAME, the modern spelling of old Eng. diffame, Sp. desfamer, Fr. diffamer, It. diffamare, Lat. diffamare, to dis-fame (like disgrace, dishonour, disfigure), from a false analogy to words such as debase, degrade, defend, &c. So defer is for dif-fer.

All pat diffame man or woman wherfor her state and her lose is peyred.—J. Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests, p. 22, l. 708 (E. E. T. S.).

DELICE, "The fayre flowre Delice," Spenser, The Shepheards Calender, April, l. 145, so called as if the flower of delight (delice), flos deliciarum, is a corruption of fleur-de-lis, the iris. E. K.'s comment is, "Flowre delice that which they use to misterme flowre deluce, being in Latin called Flos delitiarum."

Custarde royall, with a lyoparde of golde sytynge therein, and holdynge a flowre deluce.—Fabyan, Chronicles, 1516, p. 600 (Ellis's reprint).

If sin open her shop of delicacies, Solomon shews the trap-door and the vault; . . . if she discovers the green and gay flowers of delice, he cries to the ingredients [=goers in] Latet anguis in herba—The serpent lurks there.—T. Adams, The Futal Banquet, Sermons, i. 159.

Fleur-de-lis itself is said to be a corruption of fleur-de-Louis, from its having been adopted as his badge by Louis VII. of France. Compare the old Eng. name flowre de luce.

Cardeno liria, a Flowre-de-lice, or Flowre-de-luce.—Minsheu, Spanish Dict., 1623.

Bring rich carnations, flower-de-luces, lilies, The chequed and purple-ringed daffodillies. B. Jonson, Pan's Anniversary, Works, p. 613.

There is a legendary belief that the twelve first Louis signed their names as Löys, and that fleur-de-lys is simply a corruption of fleur-de-Löys.—F. Marshall, International Vanities, p. 200.

The vj a flour had fond, Clepit delice.

Booke of Precedence, p. 95, l. 47 (E. E. T. S.).

John Birch . . . beareth azure three Flower deluces. . . This Flower in Latin is called Iris, wch word stands also for a Rainbow whereto it some what resembleth in Colour. Some of the French confound this with the Lilly.—T. Dingley, History from Marble, p. cli. (Camden Soc.).

And as her Fruit sprung from the Rose and Luce, (The best of Stems Earth yet did e'er produce)

Is tied already by a sanguine Race . . . So may they shoot their youthful Branches o'er

The surging Seas, and graff with every shore. J. Howell, The Vote or Poem-Royal, 1641.

Il est certain que, ni en pierre, ni en métal, ni sur les médailles, ni sur les sceaux, on ne trouve aucun vestige véritable de fleurs de lis avant Louis le Jeune; c'est sous son règne, vers 1147, que l'écu de France commença d'en être semé.—Saint Foix, Ess. Hist. Paris, Œuvres, tom. iv. p. 107.

A further corruption seems to have resulted from a misunderstanding of flower-de-luce as "flower of light," flos lucis, with some reference perhaps to its name Iris, in Greek ourania, which denotes also the heavenly bow or rainbow (Gerarde, Herball, p. 50).

The azure fields of beau'n wear 'sembled right, In a large round, set with the flow'rs of light, The flow'rs-de-luce, and the round sparks of deaw,

That hung vpon the azure leaues, did shew, Like twinkling starrs, that sparkle in th' cau'ning blew.

Giles Fletcher, Christ's Victorie on Earth, 42 (1610).

A lily of a day Is fairer far, in May, Although it fall and die that night; It was the plant and flower of light.

B. Jonson, Underwoods, lxxxvii. 3.

DEMAIN, } also formerly demean, an DEMESNE, } estate, lands pertaining to a manor-house, so spelt as if connected with old Eng. demain, demene, to manage, Fr. démener, and meant to denote those lands which a lord of a manor holds in his own hands (Bailey), in his demain, management, or control ;
 just as, according to Chaucer, Alexander

All this world welded in his demaine.

The Monkes Tale, l. 14583 (ed. Tyrwhitt).

and so in another place

His herte was nothing in his own demain.

Similarly old Fr. demaine, It. demanio (Florio).

I find one William Stumps . . . bought of him the demeans of Malmesbury Abbey for fifteen hundred pound two shillings and a halfpenny.—T. Fuller, Worthies, vol. ii.
 p. 452 (ed. 1811).

These are all corruptions of the correct form domain, Fr. domaine, It. dominio, Lat. dominium, a lordship or dominion. Milton speaks of Rome's

Wide domain,

In ample territory, wealth, and power.

Paradise Regained, iv. 81.

Domaine, A demaine, a mans patrimony or inheritance, proper and hereditary possessions, those whereof he is the right or true
 Lord [dominus].—Cotgrave.

Domanium properly signifies the King's land in France, appertaining to him in property. . . The domains of the Crown are held of the King, who is absolute lord, having proper dominion.—Wood, Institutes, p. 139 (In Latham).

Domains . . . are the lord's chief manor-place with the lands thereto belonging, terræ domi-nicales.—Blount (Latham).

The spelling demesne is owing to an idea that these were lands held in mesne, an old law term, by a mesne lord. Spelman says "Dominicum is a forensic word . . . in English the De-maine, which some write wrongly Demeane and Demesne, as if it were sprung from Fr. de mesne, i.e. peculiar to oneself, and not from Lat. dominicum" (Glossary, 1626, p. 224).

A gentleman of noble parentage,
 Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly trained.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5, 181.

DEMEAN, often used in the sense to lower, degrade, or make mean, as "I wouldn't demean myself to speak to him," is a modern and popular perversion of the verb demean, to comport or behave oneself, Fr. se démener, whence demeanour. It has no connexion with mean, low, base, A. Sax.

mæne. "Yours as you demean yourself" was the phrase with which Queen Elizabeth sometimes concluded her letters.

Be you so valiant as ye say, & of so greate
 hownté,
 That so great ioye demeaneth, Of what contré
 he ye?

Debate between Somer and Wynter, l. 8.

See, sir, thus far

We have demeaned fairly, like ourselves.

Heywood and Rowley, Fortune by Land and Sea, p. 19 (Shaks. Soc.)

An Holy Scripture does not demean itself, nor exhaust itself on matters alien to its very highest purpose, when it largely occupies itself herein.—Abp. Trench, S. Augustine as an Interpreter, ch. iv.

DEMI-JOHN, a large wicker-cased bottle (compare "black-Jack"), anciently damagan. It is a corruption of the Arabic damagan, which came from the Persian glass-making town of Dama-ghan (Tylor). It is sometimes called a Jemmy-John (Slang Dict.).

A French corruption of the same is dame-Jeanne, which MM. Littré and Devic deduce from the Arabic (in their transliteration) damdjana, a large glass bottle.

It, damigiana, as if "a young lady"
 (Busk, Folklore of Rome, p. 364).

DENIZE, } an old verb for to natura-

DENNIZE, } lize (Holinshed), evolved out of the word denizen, a naturalized citizen, O. Fr. denzein, or deinz-ein,
 "one within," from O. Fr. deins (= dans, Lat. de intus, within), opp. to for-ein, "one without." Formed on the model of naturalize, civilize, pretty much as if citize were formed out of citizen.

DENT, the mark left by a blow, a less correct spelling of dint, A. Sax. dynt, Icel. dynttr, dyttr, as if an in-dent-ed
 mark, an in-dent-ation, or notch made by a tooth (Lat. den(t)-s). Cf. "Dent (of Dens), a notch about the Edges," "in Heraldry of an outline notched in and out."—Bailey; "Dentyn," or yndentyn," Indento."—Prompt. Parv.

þe lif some he les þat laugt ani dint.

William of Palerne, l. 1234 (1350)
 (ed. Skeat).

Now made a pretty history to herself

Of every dint a sword had beaten in it.

Tennyson, Elaine, l. 19.

DESCRY, to spy out, as if to cry out on discovering something that has been looked for (cf. Fr. descrier, to cry down, decry, and Lat. explorare, to search a wood, &c. with cries), is according to Prof. Skeat merely a shortened spelling of O. Fr. descrire, to describe, Lat. describere. Cf. O. Eng. discryve.

A maundement went out fro Cesar August that al the world schulde be discryued.—Wycliffe, S. Luke, ii. 1 (1389).

þus sal dede visite ilk man,
And yhit na man discryue it can.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1897.

Describe was formerly used in its Latin sense "to mark or trace out" (Wright and Eastwood, Bible Word-book), as we still say "to describe a circle;" whence the meaning to mark or observe. The identity of the words descry and describe was soon forgotten. Thus hath my pen described, and descry'd, Sinne with his seuen heads of seauen deadly vices.

J. Lane, Tom Tel-Troths Message, 1600, l. 704 (Shaks. Soc.).

I described his way

Bent all on speed and mark'd his airy gait.

Milton, Par. Lost, iv. 567.

Ye shall therefore describe the land into seven parts.—A. V. Joshua, xviii. 6.

Who hath descried the number of the foe?
Shakespeare, Rich. III. v. 3.

If thou, my sone, canst descriue

This tale, as Crist him self it tolde,

Thou shalt have cause to beholde.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 38 (ed. Pauli).

Ho coupe kyndeliche with colour discrue,
Yf alle þe worlde were whit oper swan-whit alle þynges?

Langland, Vision of P. Plowman,
C. xxi. l. 215.

In that tyme that Octavianus was Emperoure of Rome . . . he sent oute a commaundement to discrie all the world: . . . and this discroying was made frist [by] Cyrinus that then was bisshop of Cyrie.—Legend of the Three Kings (Chester Plays, p. 271, Shaks. Soc.).

DEUCE, a common expression apparently equivalent to the devil, as in "The deuce!" "The deuce and all!" "It is deuced hard luck;" cf. "Duce take you, i.e. the Devil, or an evil spirit, take you!" (Bailey), as if identical with deuce, the two of dice, taken as a synonym of bad luck. Similarly Ger. daus = (1) deuce at cards, (2) the dicens!

In the mystical doctrine of numbers two has always been considered unlucky as being the first of the series of even numbers. The Pythagoreans regarded the unit as the good principle, the duad as the evil one (Wilkinson. Anct. Egypt, vol. ii. p. 496, ed. Birch),

The Number of Two.

God hates the duall number; being known

The lucklesse number of division:

And when He blest each sev'ral day, whereon

He did His curious operation;

'Tis never read there, as the fathers say,

God blest His work done on the second day.

Herrick, Noble Numbers, Poems, p. 423 (ed. Hazlitt).

Men therefore deem

That equal numbers gods do not esteem,

Being authors of sweet peace and unity,

But pleasing to th' infernal empery,

Under whose ensigns Wars and Discords fight,

Since an even number you may disunite

In two parts equal, naught in middle left

To reunite each part from other rest.

C. Murlowe, Hero and Leander, Works,
p. 303, ed. 1865.

The exclamation Deus! occurs frequently in Havelok the Dane (ab. 1280), as "Deus!" quoth ubbe, "hwat may þis be?" l. 2096. Sir F. Madden and Prof. Skeat think this is merely Lat. Deus! God! naturalized in Norman oaths.

There is no doubt, however, that duce, Low Lat. ducius, dusius, was an old word for some demon, spectre, or bogie, e.g.

Bugge, or buglarde, Maurus, Ducius.—Prompt. Parvulorum, 1440.

Thyrce, wykkyd spyryte, Ducius.—Id.

To this, says Mr. Way, the origin of the vulgar term, the deuce, is evidently to be traced.

Certaine denills whome the Frenchmen call Dasies [quos dusios Galli nuncupant], doe continually practise this vnclennesse and tempt others to it, which is affirmed by such persons, and with such confidence that it were impudence to denie it.—S. Augustine of the City of God (xv. 23) Englished by J. H. 1620, p. 561.

DEVIL, as a term in cookery, "to devil a fowl," "devilled bones," to broil with abundance of pepper, &c., was perhaps originally to diuel, i.e. to dismember, or tear asunder the wings, legs, &c. as preparatory to cooking, Latin di-vellere. But query?

"Devil" (= Satan), it may be observed, in old writers, such as Bishop Andrewes, is commonly spelt diuel.

DEW-BERRY, the rubus cossius, is properly the dove-berry, so called from the colour of its fruit, Ger. tauben-beere, Norw. col-bär; from A. Sax. duna, Dut. duif, a dove (Prior). Cf. Bav. taub-ber, dove-berry (Wedgwood).

DEWLAP. This word has generally been explained as meaning the pendulous part of the neck of a cow, which seems to lap or lick the dew! (see Richardson, s.v.).

It is the same word as Dan. doglæp, where dog, is a distinct word from dug, dew, and læp is a pendulous fleshy part, a lobe. The Swedish is drög-lapp, which seems to be the original form, and to mean the trailing lobe or lappet of flesh, from draga, to drag, trail, or sweep along the ground (cf. drög, a dray or sledge). So Icel. döglíngr, a draggletail, seems to be for dröglíngr. An old Eng. name for the same is fræt-læppa (Vocabulary, 10th cent., Wright, p. 54).

Here thou behold'st thy large sleek neat
Unto the dew-laps up in meat.

Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, i. 247
(ed. Hazlitt).

The vinctious dulapps of a snayle.

Id. ii. 472.

DEWSIERS, a Wiltshire word for "the valves of a pig's heart always cut off and thrown away" (E. D. Soc. Reprinted Glossaries, B. 19), which has been regarded as a corruption of Jew's ears (Grose).—Jew's ears being actually the name of a worthless fungus,—can scarcely be other than a perverted form of old Fr. jusier, Wallon jugié, Mod. Fr. gésier (Lat. gigerium), the entrails of a fowl, especially the gizzard. In old English giserne was synonymous with garbage (Prompt. Parvulorum).

DICKENS! or The Dickins (take it)! This vulgar exclamation must be the same, Dr. Jamieson remarked, as the Scotch daikins! of similar import, and this for deilkin or deelkin, i.e. devilkin, the l, as so often, being silent.

And of every handfull that he met

He lept ouer fotes thre:

"What devilkyns draper," said litell Much,

"Thynkyst thou to be?"

A Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode, l. 292 (Child's Ballads, v. 57).

I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 1. 1. 20.

DIDDLE, to cajole or cheat one out of anything, is an assimilation to fiddle, pidde, to trifle, &c., of didder, old Eng. dyder, A. Sax. dyder-ian, dydrian, to deceive. Ettmüller connects with this Dut. dodderig, and Eng. "dodgs" (Lex. Ang.-Sax. p. 562).

DIER'S CORDIAL, an old name for an apothecary's electuary, is a corruption of Diascordium.—Skinner, Prelogom. Etymologica.

DIET, a deliberative assembly, Low Lat. dieta, as if derived from dies, the day of assembly, like the German words Land-tag, Reichs-tag.

Cf. dieta, a day's work or journey (Spelman, Bailey).

It is, however, as Lord Strangford has pointed out (Letters and Papers, p. 172), the same word as A. Sax. theód, a nation, Goth. thiuda, Ir. tuath, Oscan tuta, Umbrian tota, Lith. tauta, whence A. Sax. theodisc, O.H.G. diutisk, Ger. deutsch, "Dutch." Or the word may not improbably have been assimilated to Lat. dieta, Gk. diaita, way of living, arbitration, whence comes "diet," a prescribed regimen of food.

DIOCESS, a mis-spelling of diocese (Greek dióikésis), from a false analogy to such words as recess, excess, abscess, &c., for which The Times newspaper is generally held responsible, is found repeatedly in the anonymous Life of Bp. Frampton, who was deprived in 1689, e.g. "He came to reside in his own diocess wholly," p. 129 (ed. T. S. Evans). Dr. South also spells it so, and Cotgrave, s. v. Diocese.

That apperteynithe to the ordinaries in whos diocess ther said churchis bee in.—Warham, 1525, Ellis, Orig. Letters, ser. 3rd, vol. ii. p. 35.

DISCHORDE, an old spelling of discord, as if from dis and chorde (chords not in unison), instead of from dis and cors (hearts at variance); cf. O. Fr. descorder, to quarrel.

Oftentimes a dischorde in Musick maketh a comely concordance.—E. K(irk), Ep. to Gabriel Harvey, prefixed to The Shepheards Calender.

In the seventh century the Sevillian guitar was shaped like the human breast, because, as archbishops said, the chords signified the pulsation of the heart, à corde. The instruments of the Andalusian Moors were strung after these significant heartstrings—one string being bright red, to represent blood, another yellow, to indicate bile, &c.—Ford, Gatherings from Spain, p. 333.

Similarly accord, notwithstanding accordion, and concord in music, are not derivatives of chord (Greek chordê, whence Fr. corde, "cord"), but of cor(d)s, the heart.

Heart with heart in concord beats,
And the lover is beloved.

Wordsworth.

DISHLAGO, } North country words
DISHYLAGIE, } for the plaut colt'sfoot, are corruptions of its Latin name
tussilago.

DISTRAUGHT is an incorrect assimilation of distract, e.g. "The fellow is distract" (Com. of Errors, iv. 3 = Lat. dis-tractus, dragged asunder, confused, deranged; O. Eng. destrat), to raught, the old p. partic. of reach (like taught, &c.). Similarly Shakespeare has extrought for extract = extracted: "Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extrought."—3 Hen. VI. ii. 2. 142. The Latin past partic. was frequently adopted into English, e.g. aflycte (= afflicted), Rogers; acquit, expiate (Shakespeare); compact (id.); captivate (Hammond); consecrate, confuse (Chaucer); complicate (Young); exalt (Keats), &c.

As if thou wert distraught and mad with terror.

Shakespeare, Richard III. iii. 5, l. 4.

Fre into his hellish den he raught . . .
She sent an arrow forth with mighty draught,
That in the very dore him overcaught, . . .
His greedy throte, therewith in two distraught.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV. vii. 31.

With present feare and future grieft distraught.

G. Fletcher, Christs Triumph over Death,
44 (1610).

Do when used in sundry idiomatic phrases, in the sense of to avail, profit, thrive, prosper, suffice (Lat. prodesse, valere), is a distinct verb altogether from do (= facere), A. Sax. dón (Dut. doen, Ger. thun), being the modernized form of old Eng. dow, to avail, Prov. Eng. and Scotch dow, to be able, to profit, to thrive, A. Sax. dugan, to profit, help, be good for; and near akin to Dutch deugen, Swed. duga, Dan. due, Ger. taugen, O. H. Ger. tugan, Icel. duga, to help, be strong, suffice.

Such phrases are, "That will do," =

That will suffice (Jam satis est); "This will never do," Jeffrey's rash and time-confuted dictum, meaning, This poetry will never succeed, thrive, or be good for anything; "If he sleep, he will do well" (John xi. 12), i.e. He will thrive, or recover (A. Sax. version, he byþ hál, Greek σωθήσεται). The Cleveland folk say of a patient who lingers long, "He nowther dees nor dows." Other Yorkshire phrases are, "March grows, never dows," meaning early blossoms never thrive, and "He'll never dow, egg nor bird" (Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 150).

Dugan is also found in old Eng. with the meaning to suit or become, e.g. "as Drihtin deah" (Legend of S. Katherine, p. 99), "as it becometh a lord." We still say, "that will do very well for him" (Olyphant).

We find the two verbs, do (= facere) and do (dow = valere), side by side in our familiar greeting, "How do you do (dow)?" (Quomodo valetis?) And in this from Cotgrave: "Atrophe. In a consumption, one with whom his meat doves [= prodest] not, or to whom it does [= facit] no good." Compare also the following:—

And now he gaes daundrin' about the dykes,
And a' he dow do is to hund the tykes [= valet facere].

Lady Baillie, Were na my Heart Licht
I wad Dee.

"Nost dowed bot þe deth in þe depe streme." — Alliterative Poems (ab. 1360), The Deluge, l. 374 (ed. Morris), i.e. nought prevailed but death. So douthe = dowed (availed), in Havelok the Dane, ll. 703, 833.

Some swagger hame, the best they dow, [= are able]

Some wait the afternoon.

Buras, The Holy Fair (Globe ed.), p. 19.

A' the men o' the Mearns downa do mair than they dow.—Scott, The Black Dwarf.

Of the same origin are doughty, old Eng. dohty, A. Sax. dyhtig, Dan. dygtig, Swed. dugtig, Ger. tüchtig, mighty, able; A. Sax. duguð, Ger. tugend, valour, virtue, &c.

As instances of the confusion between the two words, compare such phrases as "It did admirably" (for O. Eng. douthe, availed), "I have done very well" (for O. E. ydought, fared, prospered).

DOG, a provincial word for a small pitcher (Wright), is probably the same word as Ital. doga, "a wooden vessel made of deale or barrell-boards" (Florio), L. Lat. doga, a vessel, derived from Gk. dōché, a receptacle.

DOG CHEAP, which has generally been supposed to be a perversion of the old phrase good-cheap, "god-kepe" in Mandeville, is really, I believe, a corruption of an original dag-cheap, or dagger-cheap, i.e. pin-cheap, a phrase used by Bishop Andrews.

But with us it is nothing so; we esteeme farre more basely of ourselves: wee set our wares at a very easie price, he [the devil] may buy us even dagger-cheape, as we say.—Seven Sermons on the Wonderfull Combate between Christ and Sathan, p. 51 (1642).

"I do not set my life at a pin's fee," says Hamlet (act i. sc. 4). In colloquial phrase, he held it dagger-cheap or dog-cheap.

Honour is sould soe dog-cheap now.
Bullad on the Order for making Knights,
temp. James I.

So dog would be another form of old Eng. dagge, It. and Sp. daga, A. Sax. dalc, dole, Ger. dolch, a dagger, or sharp instrument for piercing, Icel. dálkr, a pin, O. North Runic dalca, and cognate with Scot. dirk or durk, Gael. durc, a poniard, Ir. dealg, a pin, a thorn, a skewer, Dan. dolk. In Prov. English dawk is to prick or stab (compare Dogwood, i.e. dag-wood, so called from skewers being made of it). Dalc or dole, according to Bosworth, denotes a toy or trifle, as well as a brooch or buckle; so that dalc-cheap, pronounced dawk-cheap, would accord well, both in sound and meaning, with dog-cheap.

With the above we may compare pricksworth, a Scotch word for a thing of the slightest value—prick being a pin, or skewer; and "no worth a prein-head," an expression for anything not valued at the head of a prein or preen, a pin.

"Alle þeos þinges somed . . . ne beoð nout wurð a nelde."—All these things together are not worth a needle,—occurs in the Ancien Rivale (ab. 1225), p. 400 (Camden Soc.).

However, Prof. Skeat identifies this affix with Prov. Swed. dog = very, Platt-Deutsch döger, very much.

I have bought seven hundred books at a purchase, dog-cheap—and many good—and I have been a week getting them set up in my best room here.—Sterne, Letters, xvii. 1761.

Daggar, an old term for the dog fish (Smyth, Sailor's Word-book), presents a close parallel to dagger- and dog-cheap. Dog-stone, a name of the plant orchis mascula, is spelt dag-stone in Holme's Academy of Armory, vol. ii. p. 56.

It is, notwithstanding, quite possible there may have been some such phrase as "As cheap as a dog." Shakespeare has "As dank as a dog" (1 Hen. IV. ii. 1), on which Dyce (Remarks, &c., p. 105) appropriately quotes from the Water Poet:—

Many pretty ridiculous aspersions are cast vpon Dogges, so that it would make a Dogge laugh to heare and vnderstand them: As I haue heard a Man say, I am as hot as a Dogge, or, as cold as a Dogge; I sweat like a Dogge (when indeed a Dog never sweates), as drunke as a Dogge, hee swore like a Dogge; and one told a Man once, That his Wife was not to be beleev'd, for shee would lye like a Dogge.—Workes, The World runnes on Wheelles, p. 232 (1630).

Thou dogged Cineas, hated like a dogge,
For still thou grumblest like a masty dogge,
Compar'st thyself to nothing but a dogge;
Thou saith thou art as weary as a dogge,
As angry, sicke, and hungry as a dogge,
As dull and melancholly as a dogge,
As lazy, sleepey, idle as a dogge.

Sir John Davies, Epigrammes, 19.

An other certain man complaining that he was euen doggue wearie, and cleane tiered with goyng a long iourney, Socrates asked, &c.—N. Udall, Apothegmes of Erasmus (1542), p. 8, ed. 1877.

There is a Scotch expression dog-thick, meaning as intimate, or thick, as two dogs.

DOG-FISH was originally the dag-fish, or daggar-fish; at least, Cotgrave gives aguillat, a kind of dog-fish "that hath two sharp and strong prickles on her back, and thereof may be termed (as she is by the Germans) a Thorn-hound" [? Dornbutte]. It may be from these prickles, or dags, Fr. aguilles, that the fish got its name. Compare aguille, a needle, also a long small fish, called a Hornback (Cotgrave).

DOGGED, sullen, morose, obstinate, can scarcely be a derivative of dog, as we never say that a person resembling a sheep, or pig, or swine in disposition is sheeped, or pigged, or swined, but sheepish, piggish, swinish. The older signification was somewhat different.

Doggyde, malicyowse. Malicious, per-versus, bilosus.—Prompt. Parvulorum (ab. 1440).

It is probably the same word, radically, as Scotch doggie, irritable, bad-tempered, dudgeon, ill-temper, sullenness, formerly spelt dogion (Nares), Welsh dygen, grudge, malice, dueg, melancholy, spleen (Spurrell). Cf. Fr. doguin, brutal, quarrelsome (Roquefort), Wallon doguer, to butt or beat.

The fals wolf stode behind;
He was doggid and ek felle.

Political Songs (temp. Edward I.), p. 199 (Camden Soc.).

Wiltshire folk use the word as = very, exceedingly, e.g. "dogged cute" (Akerman).

DOGGEREL, } "pitiful poetry, paltry DOGGEREL, } verses" (Bailey), as if rime de chien (Tyrwhitt), has been connected with Ger. dichter, a poet (Haldeman, Affixes, p. 209); cf. dichterling, a poetaster, Flemish dichtregel, verse (Olinger). This is quite conjectural. Compare Icel. grey-ligr, paltry, from grey, a dog.

Here is a gallimaufrie of all sorts . . . and Clowes plaine Dunstable dogrell to make them laugh.—The Cobler of Canterburie, Ep. to Readers, 1608.

DOGS, an Essex word for the dew, is a corruption of dag. See DECK.

DOG-SLEEP, an expression used in Ireland for a light slumber easily broken, might be conjecturally identified with the Icelandic phrase "að sitja upp við dogg," to recline upon a high pillow, to lie half erect in bed, where dogg seems to be a pillow (Cleasby, p. 101).

DOGWOOD, the cornus sanguinea, has been supposed to derive its name from its unfitnes for a dog to eat! (Parkinson), or from its astringent bark being medicinal in the case of dogs (F. G. Heath, Our Woodland Trees, p. 487), especially mangy dogs (Sat. Review, vol. xlv. p. 605).

The word was, without doubt, originally dag-wood, the wood that skewers were made of, old Eng. dagge, A. Sax. dalc (see DOG-CHEAP). Compare its other names—Prick-wood (prick being an old word for a butcher's skewer), Skewer-wood, and Gad-rise (i.e. A. S. gad, a goad, and hris, a rod).—Prior. So dog-wool, coarse wool (Bailey, s. v. Cottum) is for dag-wool.

Cornus. Κρᾶνσία. Cormier, cornier, corneil-lier. The wilde cherrie tree: the dog-tree: the tree of the wood whereof butchers make their pricks.—Nomenclator.

Compare such names as Spindle-tree, Ger. Spindelbaum, pinnholtz, It. fusaggine, Ger. nadelholtz, pfriemkraut.

The dog-rose is a translation of Lat. rosa canina, so called apparently because the root of a wild rose was a "sure and Soueraigne remedy for them that are bitten with a mad dog."—Holland, Phyns Nat. Hist., vol. i. p. 220 (1634).

DOLL would seem to be a shortened form of Scotch dally, a girl's puppet, O. Eng. daly, a plaything, a die (= Lat. tabus), Eng. dally, to trifle, or play. Thus Morison speaks of a vain woman, "Wha's like a dally drawn on delf or china-ware" (Jamieson). Prof. Skeat further compares O. Dut. dol, a whipping-top, Dut. dollen, to sport, dol, mad (Etym. Dict., s.v.). The probability is, however, that doll is just Doll, the shortened and familiar form of Dorothy, a typical female name (as Moll (Mal) of Mary, Hal of Har-ry). In Scottish doroty is a doll, and a very small woman. Compare Fr. marionette, a puppet, orig. little Marion, Mary, or Molly (Cotgrave, Diez), and Jack-in-the-box.

Richardson notes that in Cooper's Lat. Dict. 1573, "O little pretie Doll polle" [i.e. Dorothy Mary] is the rendering of O capitulum lepidissimum. The old name for these playthings was babies or poppets. For similar applications of proper names to familiar objects or utensils, cf. Prov. Eng. dolly, a washing beetle or churn dash; betty, a clothes drainer (Northampt.); maukin (i.e. Mal-kin, little Molly), a baker's mop; peggy, a night light (Lincoln.); thomassin, or tamsin, a frame for airing linen (Kent); spinning-Jenny, Jenny-quick, an Italian iron (Devon.), roasting-Jack, &c.

Mr. Henry Morley, in his Memoirs of Bartholomew Fair, says:—

Dolls, now so dear to all young daughters of England were not known by that name before the reign of William and Mary. . . . Fewer dolls certainly were nursed; and of these the Bartholomew Babies, elegantly dressed and carefully packed in boxes, seem to have been regarded as the best. In Nabbes' comedy of "Tottenham Court" (1638) this phrase occurs, "I have packed her up in't, like a Bartholomew Baby in a box. I warrant you for hurting her." Poor Robin's Almanac for 1695 says, "It also tells farmers what manner of wife they shall choose: not one trickt up with ribbens and knots like a Bartolomew baby." . . . When some popular toyman, who might have called his babies pretty Snes or Molls or Polls, cried diligently to the ladies who sought fairings for their children, "Buy a pretty Doll" (it was at a time too when the toy babies were coming more and more into demand), the conquest of a clumsiness was recognized. Mothers applied for dolls to the men at the stalls, and, ere long, by all the stalls and toybooths the new cry of "Pretty Doll" was taken up. We have good reason to be tolerably certain that Bartholomew Fair gave its familiar name to a plaything now cherished in every English nursery.—pp. 259, 260, ch. xvii.

Doll has often been regarded as a mutilated form of idol (e.g. Todhunter, Account of Dr. Wm. Whewell, i. 63), like dropsy, from O. E. ydropsy; and it is observable that when Spenser says—

All as a poore pedler he did wend,
Bearing a trusse of tryfes, at hys backe,
As bells, and babes, and glasses, in hys packe.
Shepherds Calender, Maye—

E. K.'s gloss is, "By such trifles are noted, the reliques and ragges of popish superstition, which put no smal religion in Belles, and Babies, s[icil.] Idoles . . . and such lyke trumperies" (Spenser, Works, p. 463, Globe ed.).

DOLLY OIL, the same as eel-dolly, a Scotch term for oil, is a corruption of Fr. huile d'olive (Jamieson).

DOLLY-SHOP, a slang word for a shop where stolen property, or goods, are received in pawn, and charged at so much per day, is probably a corruption of tally-shop, one where a tally—that is, a score or account of moneys lent—is kept. Cf. "talley-man, one who sells clothes, &c., to be paid by the week" (Bailey).

The dolly-shops are essentially pawn-shops, and pawn-shops for the very poorest. There are many articles which the regular pawn-brokers decline to accept as pledges. . . . A poor person driven to the necessity of raising a few pence, and unwilling to part finally with his lumber, goes to the dolly-man, and for the merest trifle advanced, deposits one or other of the articles I have mentioned.—Mayhew, London Labour and Landon Poor, vol. ii. p. 122.

The true origin of the name being forgotten, a large black wooden figure, or doll, is frequently hung up, as a sign over the door of these shops, and from this they are supposed by Mayhew to have been called.

Near akin to these caterpillars [pawn-brokers] is the unconscionable tally-man.—Four for a Penny, 1678 (Harl. Misc. iv. 148).

DONJON, } If these be not two dis-
DUNGEON, { tinct words, it is not easy to say which is the original form from which the other has taken its rise.

1. Donjon, a large tower or redoubt of a fortress (Bailey), Fr. donjon, don-geon, Prov. donjo, is from Low Lat. domnio (dominio), a commanding tower that dominates all the rest of the building (Diez, Wedgwood, Skeat).

2. Dungeon, a dark, strong-fenced place, old Fr. doignon, dognon, dangeon, Low Lat. dangio, is from Irish daingean, strong, secure, also a strong-hold or fort, daingnigim, a fortification (so Zeuss, Pictet, Origines, ii. 194, Whitley Stokes). In Stokes's Irish Glosses, dainingen explains durus and firmus (p. 87). Dangan (a fortress or castle), frequently used as a place-name in Ireland, is the same word (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, i. 295). In the "Wars of the Gaedhil," ed. Todd, it is said, "They built duns and daingeans" (p. 41).

Dungeon, a dark prison cell, may perhaps be a result of a popular confusion of the two words.

I seigh a towre on a toft· trielich ymaked;
A depe dale binether a dongeon pere-Inne,
With depe dyches & derke and dredful of sight.

Langland, Vision of P. Plowman (1377),
Prol. l. 16, text B. ed. Skeat.

"Anon the donge it was for-dit" (the dungeon it was shut up).—Debate between Body and Soul, 13th cent. l. 236 (Camden Soc. p. 339), where a later version has "the dungoun was for-dit" (p. 345).

Vigfusson connects "dungeon" with Icel. dýngja, a lady's bower, the common sense being that of a secluded chamber in the inner part of a house or castle (Cleasby, Icel. Dict. p. 111).

DOSEBERDE, } a simpleton, as if a DASIBERDE, } dozing, dazed, person,
 "a dazed beard," is really a degraded use of the word dozeper, a nobleman, one of the Douze-Pairs, or twelve peers, of France (see Le Grand, Fabliaux, vol. ii. p. 420). A connexion was imagined, apparently, with old Eng. dusi, foolish, A. Sax. dýsig, Mod. Eng. "dizzy," Scot. dosen, to stupify.

Lygger of Colonye, and al so the dosse pers Of France were þere echon, þat so noble were and fers.

Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle, p. 188 (ed. 1810).

Ihereþ nv one lutele tale. þat ich eu wille telle . . .

Nis hit nouht of Karlemeyne ne of þe Duzeper.

Old Eng. Miscellany (Morris), p. 37, l. 3.

Als he to Carlele was commene, that conquerure kyde,

Withe dukes and with ducheperes.

The Awntyrs of Arthure.

There is a dossiberde I would dere

That walkes abrode wild were Whoe is his father I wotte nere.

The Chester Plays, vol. i. p. 264 (Shakspeare Soc.).

Duribuccus, þat neuer openeþ his mouþ, a dasiberde.—Medulla.

Big looking like a doughty Doucepere

At last he thus.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, III. x. 31.

DOUBLE X, the name given to porter or beer of more than ordinary strength, as in "Guinness's XX," or "Double X," is probably a survival, in a somewhat disguised form, of the Lat. word duplex (misunderstood as double-x), which formerly was commonly applied to such.

Thus the Fellows and Postmasters of Merton College were forbidden by the Statutes to drink cerevisium duplex, or strong ale. In Martini Schookii Liber de Cerevisia, 1661, he says there are three kinds of English ale, "Simplex cerevisia," which produces the same effect as a watery wine; "Potens cerevisia," commonly called duplex, which warms powerfully, and has the strength of potent wine; and a medium ale, commonly called Trihapennina [? three ha'penny], which warms but mode-ately. Cap. xxxvii. (Notes and Queries, 6th S. ii. 523). There is a curious old poem, entitled Doctour doobble ale (see Early Pop. Poetry, vol. iii. p. 297, ed. Hazlitt). Gascoigne mentions "dooble dooble beere."

Had he been master of good double beer,
 My life for his, John Dawson had been ere.
Ep. Corbet, on J. Dawson, Butler of Christ-Church (1648). Poems, p. 208, ed. 1807.

DOWN-DINNER, in the Cleveland dialect an afternoon meal, is without doubt a corruption of the old word aandorn, orndorn, orndoorns, undern, a mid-day meal, still current in N. W. England (Atkinson). See ORN-DINNER.

So "down-dinner, a mid-day meal in the field."—Holderness, Glossary (Eng. Dialect Soc.).

DOWNER, a slang word for sixpence, apparently another form of "tanner," which, like "tanny" (little), is derived from the Gipsy tawno, little.

DRAGONWORT. Dragon here is a corruption of Tarragona in Spain, whence it comes, says Mr. I. Taylor, Words and Places, p. 408, 2nd ed.

This, however, is quite a mistake. It is rather the Eng. name tarragon, that is a corruption of dragon, its French name, It. dragontea, Lat. dracontium and dracunculus (see Gerarde, Herball, p. 193). Pliny calls it dragon (dracunculus), and says its root "is somewhat red, and the same wrythed and folded round in manner of a Dragon, wherupon it took that name" (Holland's translation, 1634, vol. ii. p. 200).

DRAKE, a popular name for darnel or cockle, is a corruption of drawk or dravick, Dut. dravig, Welsh drewig, Bret. draok (Prior).

DRAUGHT (A. V. Matt. xv. 17; Mark vii. 19) and Draught-house (2 Kings x. 27), old words for a latrine, or house of office. Draught here is a corruption of draf, draffe, = fæces, dregs, refuse; dirt, which Wychiffe spells draft (Ps. xxxix. 3), Icel. draf, A. Sax. drefe, drof. See Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-Book, s. v.

And wiþ þe 3erde þe wolf he werde,
 Wiþ dundes drof him al to draf.
Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 141, l.
 (ed. Morris).

Hang them, or stab them, drown them in a draught.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, v. 1.

There was . . . a goddess of the draught or jakes.

Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, Pt. 2, Sec. 1, Mem. 3.

The worst of the three is a thick, cloudy, misty, foggy air, or such as comes from fens, moorish grounds, lakes, muckhills, draughts, sinks, where any carcases or carrion lies.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, l. 2, ii. 5.

DRAWING-ROOM, a meaningless contraction of withdrawing-room, a room for retiring to after dinner.

After dinner into a withdrawing-room; and there we talked, among other things, of the Lord Mayor's sword.—Pepys, Diary, Sept. 2, 1663.

DRESS, in colloquial usage to drub, chastise, or beat soundly, as in the phrase "to give one a good dressing," is the same word as Prov. Eng. dresh, "to thresh," A. Sax. þerscan, Icel. þreskja, Goth. þriskjan, O. H. Ger. drescan, Ger. dreschen, Dan. tørska, but assimilated by false analogy to Fr. dresser (Lat. directiare), to set right. So, in the Cleveland dialect, dress (pronounced derse) is not only to set in order, but to beat, chastise, thrash (Atkinson). Compare the phrase, "I'll dress [sometimes trim] his jacket for him," Scotch "to dress one's doublet," i.e. to give him a sound thrashing, German einen dreschen.

The Devonshire form is drash, to drub with a stick.

Chell baste tha, chell stram tha, chell drash tha.

Exmoor Scolding, l. 94 (E. D. S.).

Now you calves-skin impudence, I'll thresh your jacket [Beats him out].—T. Randolph, Aristippus, 1630, Works, p. 10.

DRILLING, a coarse cloth used for trousers, is a corruption of Ger. drillich, ticking, which is itself corrupted from Lat. trilic-s, trilix, three-threaded stuff (Skeat).

DROP, in the phrase "to drop a curtsey," seems to be a corruption of the older word dop, to make a bow or curtsey, orig. to dip, or duck, or bob (cf. "The learned pate ducks to the golden fool."—Shaks.), Swed. doppa, to dip, Dan. døbe, Dut. doopen, Goth. daupjan.

Cf. O. Eng. doppar, a diver or dobchick.

The Venetian dop, this.

B. Jonson, Cynthias Revels.

We act by fits and starts, like drowning men, But just peep up, and then dop down again. Dryden, 1682, Works, p. 452 (Globe ed.).

Compare the intrusive r in shrill for shill, Fr. affrodille for affodille, hoarse, groom, pursy, vagrant, treasure, &c.

DROP, in the provincial Eng. "wrist drop," a disease of painters, and "dropped hands" = paralyzed, according to Mr. Cockayne is the same word as old Eng. dropa, the palsy of a limb (Leechdoms, vol. iii. p. 8), from droppen, the p. partic. of drapan (A. Sax. drepan, to strike, drepe, a blow). Cognate words would then be Icel. drepa, Dan. drebe, Ger. treffen, to strike. Icel. drep is used for a disease (cf. "plague," Gk. plagē, a blow), and we still speak of a paralytic stroke.

DROPSY, old Eng. ydropsie, a naturalized form of Fr. hydropisie, Lat. hydrops, Gk. húdrōps, the watery disease (from húdōr, water), and confounded possibly with drop. Compare gout, Fr. goute, supposed to come from a humour or drop (Lat. gutta) settling in the joints.

And loo! sum man syk in ydropsie was bifore him.—Wycliffe, S. Luke, xiv. 2 (1389). [A. Sax. version, "sum water-seoc man."]

DROUGHT, an incorrect form (assimilated to thought, &c.) of drowth, O. Eng. drougth, drouthie (in Ireland pronounced drooth), A. Sax. drugade, dryness, from drugian, to dry. Cf. you(g)th, dearth, growth, &c. So height is incorrect for highth (Milton). The Sussex folk use drythe, "Drythe never yet bred dēarth" (Parish, Glossary, p. 38).

"Drowte, siccitas."—Prompt. Parvulorum, 1440. "Dyere time, rayn, drugpe."—Ayenbite of Inwyt, 1340, p. 68.

Wip cold ne wip heete, wip weete ne wip drythe.

Trevisa, Polychronicon, 1387, lib. i. cap. 41.

Now for drieth the fields wear all yndone.

G. Flecher, Christs Victorie in Heaven, 81 (1610).

Drought is the ordinary word in the A. Version, but drowth in Milton, Coleridge, and Tennyson.

He is tax'd for drouth
Of wit, that with the cry spends not his mouth. Curew, Poems, 1642.

As one, whose drouth
Yet scarce allay'd, still eyes the current stream.

Milton, Par. Lost, vii. 66.

Summer drouth, or singed air
Never scorch thy tresses fair.

Comus, i. 923.

The traveller . . . is liable to mistake . . .
the mirage of drouth for an expanse of refreshing waters.—Coleridge, The Friend, vol. i. p. 99.

I look'd athwart the burning drouth
Of that long desert to the south.

Tennyson, Fatima, l. 13.

My one oasis in the dust and drouth
Of city life!

Id., Edwin Morris, l. 3.

Ask any [Irish] proprietor, more especially if a farmer, and he would tell you "We're ruined, ruined entirely, with the drought"— perhaps he'd have called it "druth."—Chus. Lever, One of Them, ch. vi.

DRUGGERMAN, an old form of dragoman, an interpreter, O. Eng. truchman (? as if a barter-man), It. dragomanno and turcimanno, Fr. drogman and trucheman, from Arab. targomân, which is a derivative of targama, to explain.
Compare Heb. meturgeman, an interpreter (Edersheim, The Jews, p. 119), from targêm, to translate (whence targum and meturgâm, "interpreted," Ezra, iv. 7), which is itself from râgam, to bring together, construe, translate.

The form dragman occurs in Kyng Alexander,
p. 141 (ed. Weber).

In Mid. High German dragoman assumed the form of tragemunt (or trouge-munt), as if denoting the mouth-bearer of the party.

Thus with ryght lyghte and joyous hertes, by warnynge of our drogemè and guydes, we come all to Mounte Syon.—Pylgrimage of Syr R. Gylforde (1506), p. 56 (Camden Soc.).

Here the Vizier Bassas of the Port . . .
consult of matters of State, and that pub-likly, not excepting against Embassadors
Drogermen, lightly always present.—Sandys, Travels, p. 62.

The day of audience being come they were introduced with the usual solemnity, and then by the Druggerman or Interpreter he stated his case.—Life of Bp. Frampton (ed. T. S. Evans), p. 72.

Their druggerman did desire them to fall down, for otherwise he should suffer for their contempt of the King.—Peprys, Diary, Aug. 17, 1666.

DRY, in the sense of tedious, wearisome, devoid of interest, as "a dry book," "a dry sermon," is the same word as the Northern dree, tedious, Prov. Eng. dreigh, Scot. drieigh, Icel. drjúgr, substantial, slow and sure.
Cf. Swed. dryg-mil, a long mile, en
dryg bok, a heavy book, Dan. dröi.

"I am very weary, Mrs. —, and wet through; could you find me a glass of wine?" She did not reply, like the old Scotchwoman, "Get up into pulpit with you; you'll be dry enough there."—T. Jackson, Curiosities of the Pulpit, p. 344.

The moor was drieigh, an' Meg was skiegh.
Burns, There was a Lass.

In N. Ireland the people say, "It's a dreegh jab (a wearisome job), a dreegh road (a tedious road)."—Patterson, (E. D. S.).

A dreegh drink is better than a dry sermon.
—A. Hislop, Proverbs of Scotland, p. 17.

These two words, though spelt differently, are really the same. They are no doubt akin to the old verb drye, to endure, undergo (Scot. dree), A. Sax. dreogan, to suffer;
cf. Goth. driugan, to serve as a soldier (Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 641).

Also in contemplacion there ben many other
That drawn hem to disert and drye muche peyne.

Political Poems, ii. 64 (ed. Wright).

Full grayþely got3 þis god man & dos gode3
hestes,

In dry3 dred & daunger.

Alliterative Poems, 1360, Cleanness, l. 342.

DRY-ROT, the name of the plant
merulius lacrimans, is, according to Dr. Prior, a corruption of tree-rot, from
A. S. treow and rotian.

DUCK, } a familiar caressing term

DUCKY, } for a child or other object of affection, notwithstanding the analogy of the Latin anicula, "little duck!"
used as a word of endearment in Plautus, is not a metaphorical employment of the name of the bird (like "pigeon," "dove," &c.), but identical with Danish dukke, a baby or puppet (Wolff), Ger. docke, a doll or puppet, Shetland duckie, a doll or little girl; with which we may compare Scotch tokie, a fondling term for a child (Ger. tocke), Swed. tokig, silly, Icel. tóki, a simpleton. This is more likely than that it should be connected with North.

Eng. ducky, a woman's breast, and mean a "suckling" (cf. dug, daughter, Greek thug-ater).

Mrs. Sanders, in Bardwell v. Pickwick, thought that Mr. Sanders had called her a "duck" in his love-letters, because "he was particularly fond of ducks" for dinner, which was only a particular form of the common philological error.

DUCK, } a Dorset word for the DUCKISH, } twilight, as "In the duck of the evening," is certainly a corruption. Mr. Barnes thinks, of A. Sax. peorc-ung, which has the same meaning (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1864, Glossary, p. 54).

It is more probably, I think, from dusk, O. Eng. dosc, deosc, changed by metathesis into ducs, docs, as in A. Sax. tux for tusc, a tusk; dis for disc, a dish; dirt, O. Eng. drit. Cf. Icel. dökk-, dökkler, dark (Cleasby, 113).

DUCK-EGGS, is a comical corruption of ducats, in the old play of Patient Grissell, by Dekker, Chettle, and Houghton (Shakspeare Society Ed. 1841, p. 88).

Cousin, you promised to help her to her duck-eggs, for all her paper and ponds are torn.

If the Lyon had been eating a ducke, it had been a rare device worth a duckat or a ducke-egge.—Camden, Remaines Concerning Britaine, 1637, p. 166.

The ducat was an Italian coin, so named from the word ducatus, duchy (It. ducato), occurring in its legend.

DUCKING-STOOL, an incorrect way of writing cucking-stool, an ancient and well-known machine for punishing scolding wives. Cucking-stool, originally = cathedra stercoris, is akin to Icel. kuka (cacare), Manx cugh (stercus), another name for it being goging-stool, A. Sax. gong-stole, a close-stool, in the form of which it was sometimes made (Wedgwood). Another old corruption of the word is cockstule, cockstoll, for cuck-stool.

Prof. Skeat maintains that the two stools of punishment were always distinct (Piers Plowman, Notes, p. 61); but at all events the terms were sometimes used interchangeably.—Chambers, Book of Days, i. 211.

The oldest word is certainly cucking-stool.

The pilory and the cucking-stol beth i-mad for noht.

Poem on the Reign of Edward II. Polit. Songs, p. 345 (Camden Soc.).

Stocks for the men, a ducking-stool for women, and a pound for beasts.—Boswell, Life of Johnson, vol. iii. ch. x. p. 193 (ed. 1856).

In a quarter sessions record of the time of James I., the constables are directed to cucke one Agnes Pringe as a skolster or scold (A. H. A. Hamilton, Quarter Sessions, p. 85), viz. to duck her

In a chair curule
Which moderns call a cucking-stool.
Hudibras.

DULCIMELL, the old name for the dulcimer, Italian "dolcemelle, a musical instrument called a Dulcimell or Dulcimer, also hony sweet" (Florio), as if the sweet-toned. So Sylvester says a siren "Powres-forth a Torrent of mel-Melodics."—Du Bartas, p. 434. The latter part of the word is more likely to be from Greek melos, tune, than meli, mel, honey.

Dulcimer is a corrupted form of dulcimet (cf. marmalade, Portg. marmelo, a quince, from Greek melimelon, "honey-apple").

DURANCE, in the sense of imprisonment, painful restraint, as in the phrase "durance vile," is a corrupt form of the old word duress, hardship, severity, imprisonment, Fr. duresse, from Lat. duritia. A connexion was imagined with endurance, suffering.

Do you by duresse him compell thereto,
And in this prison put him here with me.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV. xii. 10.

So þat dwele was to deme' þe duresse þat he wrou3t.

William of Palerne, l. 1074 (ed. Skeat).

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison.
Shakspeare, 2 Hen. IV. v. 5, l. 33.

Being so infeeble with long durance and hard usage, that he could not stand, he had a chair allowed him, and had the painfull ease to sit therein.—T. Falter, Worthies, vol. i. p. 343 (ed. 1811).

DUTCH COUSINS, an expression meaning intimate friends, used along the coast of Sussex.

Yes, he and I were reg'lar Dutch Cousins ; I feels quite lost without him.—W. D. Parish, Sussex Glossary.

This is, doubtless, a whimsical corruption or perversion of german-cousins, or cousins-german, from the old Eng. word germane, near akin, Lat. germanus, sprung from the same stock or germ. Compare the following:—

And to him said; "Goe now, proud Miscreant,

Thyselfe thy message do to german deare.

Spenser, Fierie Queene, Bk. 1. cant. v. 13.

Those that are germoue to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the hangman.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 4, l. 802.

The greatest good the Land got by this match was a general leave to marry Cousin-germans.—Fuller, Worthies, vol. ii. p. 62.

The phrase "A Dutch uncle" is no doubt of similar origin.

Milvertou . . . began reasoning with the boys, talking to them like a Dutch uncle (I wonder what that expression means) about their cruelty.—Sir A. Helps, Animals and their Masters, p. 131.

DYE-HOUSE, a Gloucestershire word for a dairy, or day-house. See DAY-WOMAN.

E.

EAGER, a peculiar violence of the tide in some rivers causing them to rise with great suddenness, so spelt as if derived from Prov. Eng. eager, angry, furious, = Lat. acer (Wright), is the A. Sax. égor, ocean, connected with ege, awe, terror (Ettmüller); cf. ægir, the stormy ocean (Thorpe, North. Myth. vol. i.). Other forms are higre and aker.

Akyr of the see flowynge, Impetus maris.
Prompt. Parvulorum.

Its more than common transport could not hide,

But like an eagre rode in triumph o'er the tide.

Dryden, Threnodia Augustalis, l. 134.

EAGLE-WOOD, the aloe. The native Indian name of this tree is aghil, Sansk. agaru, whence Heb. ahâlim or ahâlôth (Low Lat. agallochum), Septuagint. alôth, Gk. âloë. The first Europeans who visited India, on account of the similarity of sound, called the aghil, "lignum aquilæ," "aquilaria," "eagle- wood," Fr. bois d'aigle, Ger. adler-holz (Smith, Bible Dict., vol. i. p. 52). See also Delitzsch on Song of Songs, iv. 14.

It seems that the Sanskrit name is itself a corrupted word.

The "agallochum" is called aguru or oguru in Sanskrit; it is mentioned as material for incense in the Râmâyana; aguru means "not heavy," and as the incense is made out of the decayed roots of the tree ("aquilaria agallocha"), the Sanskrit name might seem applicable. Another name, however, of the Agallochum, in Sanskrit, is "anârÿa-ja" produced among non-Aryans, i.e. barbarians, and, I believe, the wood is chiefly brought from Cochin China and Siam. In that case, aguru may be only an approximation to some foreign word, and an attempt to give to that foreign word a meaning in Sanskrit. Aghil is only a modern pronunciation of aguru.—M. Müller, in Pusey, Lectures on Daniel, p. 647.

EAR, the name for a spike of corn, bears a deceptive resemblance to that for the organ of hearing. It is A. Sax. ear, a contracted form of æchir, O. H. Ger. ahir (hahir, spicas.—Vocab. of S. Gall, 7th cent.), Goth. ahs, Ger. ähre, Scot. icker, the radical idea being that of sharpness, root ac, as in the cognate A. Sax. egl, egle, an ear of corn.

A daimen-icker [occasional ear] in a thrave,
'S a sma' request.

Burns, Works, p. 54 (Globe ed.).

But Thou with corne canst make this Stone to eare,

What needen we the angrie heau'ns to fear?
Let them enuie vs still, so we enjoy Thee
here?

G. Fletcher, Christ's Victorie on Earth,
20 (1610).

EAR, an obsolete word for to plough, A. Sax. erian (cf. Icel. erja, Goth. arjan, Lat. arare), occurring in the authorized version of the Bible (Gen. xlv. 6, Is. xxx. 24, &c.), and Shakespeare, has sometimes been mistakenly used as if it meant to form into ears (of corn), to ripen.

Pegge quotes from the Earl of Monmouth's translation of Boccacini (p. 11), "The plowers of poetry . . . had good reason to expect a rich harvest, but when, in the beginning of July, the season of earing began, they saw their sweat and labours dissolve all into leaves and flowers."—Gentleman's Magazine, May, 1755.

EARDH-WICGE, A Saxon eorðe-wicga, an old corruption of ear-wicga, the earwig, as if it meant the "earth-wig:" wicga being the word for an insect, a beetle.

EARL'S MONEY, } Provincial Eng.
AIRLES MONEY, } words for money
ARLES MONEY, } advanced to confirm a bargain, Scot. airle-penny, earnest-money, are corruptions of O. Eng. ernes, Gael. earlas, Fr. arrhes, Lat. arrha, arrhabo, Gk. arrabôn, a deposit, a word introduced by the Phœnicians, Heb. êrâbhôn, a pledge.

EARNING, a North of England word for cheese-rennet (Halliwell, Wright), is the modern form of A. Sax. œrning, a running, then a running together, coagulation, from œrnan, yrnan, a transposed form of rinnan, to run, Dut. rennan, Ger. rennen; so we find Prov. Eng. earn, to curdle milk, and earn, to run. Compare rennet, formerly runnet, of the same origin; and Ger. lab, Dan. løbe, Swed. løpe, O. Norm. hlaup, rennet, from Dan. løbe, Swed. løpa, O. Norn. hlaupa, to run together, coagulate; Cleveland dialect loppered, curdled (Atkinson). See also Yrning, rennet, Old Country and Farming Words, E. D. S. p. 164.

EASEL, Ger. esel, Dut. ezel (= Lat. asellus, a little ass). The orthography apparently influenced by "ease." Cf. Ease (to), to take away trouble, pain, or difficulty.

Easel, an instrument that painters set their pictures on, for the better and more ready performance of their work.—Dyche, Eng. Dictionary, 1740.

Compare our "clothes' horse," Fr. chevalet; It. cavaletto, a nag and a tressel (Florio); It. asinone, an ass, the mounting of a cannon (Id.); Greek killibas, an easel, from killos, an ass; gauntree, from cantherius, a packhorse; O. E. somer, a packhorse, a bedstead; Scot. mare, a scaffold support, Lat. equuleus, &c.

EASING-SPARROW, a Shropshire word for the house-sparrow, is for easen,—i. e. eavesen, or eaves,—the eaves-sparrow, A. Sax. efese, Goth. ubizva, a porch, O. H. Ger. opasa, which glosses atrius (atrium) in the Vocabulary of S. Gall (7th cent.). Cf. O. Eng. evesunge.

He efede hire to niht fuel þet is under evesunge.

[He compared her to a night fowl that is under the eaves.] Ancren Riwe, p. 142.

EAT-ALL, an old word for a glutton or ravener, by which the Nomenclator glosses Pamphagus, Omnivorous, is no doubt really an altered form of A. Sax. etol, gluttonous, given to eating (A. Sax. etan, to eat). Compare WIT-ALL.

Mannes sunu com eteude and dryncende, and hi cwæðap, Hér ys ettul-man.—A. Sax. Gospels, S. Matt. xi. 19.

EATON, an old North country word for a giant, which Camden took to be a corrupt form of heathen, is A. Sax. eton, eoton, a giant (Beowulf), a voracious monster (= Lat. edo-n) from etan; O. Eng. eatande; in later English ettin (e.g. Cotton, Burlesques, p. 266); Icel. jötunn (Thorpe, North. Mythology, vol. i., p. 148), Dan. jette.

He wes swa kene and so strong
Als he were an eatande.

Laiamon, p. 58.

The common sort of people doe plainly say these Roman workes were made by Giants, whom in the North parts they use to call in their vulgar tongue Eatons, for heathens (if I be not deceived) or Ethnicks.—Camden, trans. by P. Holland, fol. p. 63.

EDGE, a N. Irish word for an adze (Patterson), as if significant of its sharpness; Scottish etch; both corruptions of adze, old Eng. adse, adese, A. Sax. adesa.

EEL-DOLLY, } a Scotch word for oil,
OYL-DOLLY, } is a corruption of the French huile d'olive (Jamieson).

EGG-BERRY, a Cumberland word for the bird cherry (prunus padus), in which dialect it is also called ekberry and heckberry (Dickinson, Glossary, p. xxi.). Other forms are hag-berry, hackberry, and hedg-berry. All except the last are corruptions, as is shown by the Swedish name hugg applied to the same plant. Cf. A. Sax. hege, a hedge, N. Eng. hag, a wood.

ELDER, a Lincolnshire word for the uïder, of which no doubt it is a corruption, being in some places pronounced edder.

EM, a colloquial form of them, printed 'em in books, as "Take 'em to you" (Rowe), as if a contracted form of them, really stands for old Eng. hem, acc. plu. of he. Cf. it for O. E. hit.

The other belden his sernauntis and slowen hem.—Wycliffe, S. Matt. xxii. 6.

He sende hem bider fol son

To helpen hem wip hoc.

Morris and Skeat, Specimens, ii. 46, l. 8.

EMBATTLED, furnished with battlements or fortifications, as if put in battle array (en bataille), is for O. Fr. embastillé, fortified. See BATTLEMENT.

His combe was redder than the fin corall,
Embattelled, as it were a castel wall.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 14866.

Spurr'd at heart with fieriest energy
To embattail and to wall about thy cause
With iron-worded proof.

Tennyson, Sonnet to J. M. K., l. 8.

EMBER DAYS, } "So called," says
EMBER WEEK, } Bailey, "from a custom anciently of putting Ashes on their heads on those Days, in Token of Humiliation." This custom, however, is quite imaginary, being invented to account for the name.

The Latin name is Jejunia quatuor temporum, "The Ember-Days at the Four Seasons" (Prayer Book), or more concisely quatuor tempora. Derived from this are the Dutch quatertemper, Danish kvatember, German quatember, Spanish temporas, Fr. quatre-temps. Other forms are Icelandic imbru-dagar, Dan. tamper-dage, Swed. tamper-dagar. (The Icelandic word has been traced to the Latin imber, and by others to an old woman named Imbra!) Hampson (Medii Aevi Kalendarium, vol. ii. p. 326) quotes from an old MS., "The Quater Temper shall be this weke, callede the Ymber Dayes."

Temper or Tember (perhaps understood as Thember or Th'ember Days) might seem to be the origin of our "Ember Days."

Compare the French "Les quatre temps. Th'Ember daies; four weeks in the yeare appointed for publike fasts."—Cotgrave.

But the true origin is seen in the A. Sax. form ymbren-wuce for Ember week, i.e. ymb-rene, or ymbe-ryne, a running-round, or recurring period. Hence embring weeks in Tusser and others.

In the Ancren Riwle, about 1225, the word appears as Umbridawes, a word compounded with old Eng. umbe (= Greek amphì), as if the days that come round periodically.

Ye schulen eten . . . eueriche deie twie, bte uridawes and umbridawes.—p. 412 (Camden Soc.).

Ye shall eat . . . every day twice, except Fridays and Emberdays.

Perhaps the true account is that ember is a sort of a compromise between temper and ymbren, and assimilated by false derivation to embers, ashes.

After þe opnyon of men, and diverse cuntreyes speche, those quatuor tempora be called ymber dayes, cause whi, olde fadirs on tho dayes whan they shuld fast, þei wolde ete cakes þt were bake vndir þe asshes in þe ymbers and þt was callid panis subcinereus, þt is to say, brede vndir ashes; so þt in etyng brede vndir asshes in þe ymhres þei remembreed þt þei were bot asshes, and they shulde to asshes torne ageyn.—Homily of the 15th century (quoted in Hampson, Medii Aevi Kalendarium, vol. ii. p. 415).

A similar misunderstanding must have got footing in Ireland, where Ember week is called Seachdmhain-na-luathre, "week of ashes."

I take from hym baptym, with the other sacramentes

And Sufferages of the church, both amber dayes and lentes.

Bule, Kyng Johan, p. 41 (Camden Soc.).

He used often to punish his body with discipline, especiallie every Fridaie, great Sainctes eves, and at the four tymes of Ember weeke.—Wordsworth, Eccles. Biography, vol. ii. p. 82 (ed. 1810).

Next him sat Hildebrand, and he held a hering in his hand, because he made Lent: and one pope sat with a smock sleeve about his necke, and that was he that made the imbering weekes, in honor of his faire and beautifull curtizan Imbra.—Turlton, Newes out of Purgatorie, p. 64 (Shaks. Soc.).

EMPERIAL is used in Hopton's Concordancie of Yeares, 1612, pp. 34, 35, for the empyrean or empyrean, a mediæval name for the æther or fiery heaven (Greek, empyros, fiery), which seems to have been confounded with imperial. Bailey defines "Empyrocœum cœlum, the highest heaven in which is the throne of God."

Of the first Heaven—the Philosophers had no knowledge of this Emperiall Heauen: onely the scriptures teach us to believe the same; and is called the Emperiall Heauen, by reason of the clearnesse and resplendency: It is immoueable, made by God the first day he began his creation of the world . . . where (as it is thought) remaineth the humanity of Jesus Christ, and hath therein three Hierarchias, holy orders, or principalities.—Hopton, loc. cit.

If these inferior Orbs were rowled vp,
And the Imperiall heauen bar'd to my view,
'Twere not so gracious, nor so much desir'd,
As my deare Katherine is to Pasquils sight.

Jacke Drums Entertainment, act iii.
l. 295 (1616).

Whoso hath from the Empyreall Pole,
Within the centre of his happy Soule,
Receiv'd som splendor of the beams divine,
Must to his Neighbour make the same to shine.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 151 (1621).

The Emperiall Heaven is one thing, the materiall or visible Heaven another.—William Street, The Dividing of the Hoof, p. 5, 1654.

Dante curiously enough calls the ninth heaven "regal."

Lo real manto di tutti i volumi
Del mondo, che più ferve e più s'avviva
Nell' alito di Dio.

Paradiso, xxiii. 112-114.

The robe, that with its regal folds unwraps
The world, and with the nearer breath of God
Doth burn and quiver. Carey.

EMROD, } the old Eng. word for an EMERAUD, } emerald, when applied to the disease known as piles, A. V.
emerods (1 Sam. v. 6), is a corrupted form of hæmrods, hemroids (Burton,
Anatomy of Melancholy), It. emorroidi,
Fr. hémorroïdes, "hæmorrhoids," Gk. haimorrhoides, "flowing with blood."

The Spaniards corrupted the word into moróydes (Minsheu).

An emerod [= emerald] esteemed at 50,000 crowns.—North's Plutarch, Life of Augustus.

Emerawntys, or emerowdya, Emorvois.—
Prompt. Parvulorum.

ENCEINTE, old Fr. enceinte, great with child, It. incinta, ungirt, also with child (Florio), Low Lat. incincta, pregnant, that is, without a cincture, or girdle (Isidore of Seville), or, as the French say, "femme sans corset" (Scheler). All these words seem to have been corrupted by false etymology from Lat. incien(t)s, pregnant, breeding, childing, which is near akin to Greek éghuos (i.e. énkhuos), pregnant, Sansk. çvi, to swell (Curtius, Griech.
Etym. i. 126). Enciente, an encircling wall or boundary, is therefore a distinct word.

ENCHESOUN, a common old Eng. corruption of occasion (e.g. Wycliffe, Gen.

xxxvii. 5), as if compounded with the preposition en (in) (so ensample for ex- ample), the intermediate forms being achesoun, achaison.

For it aemes þat þe Kyng had grete enchesoun.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 5790.

ENDS ERRAND, a Scottish expression meaning "a special design," is no doubt, as pointed out by Jamieson, a corruption of anes errand, a single errand, for the nonce, or one special occasion; anes being the genitive of an, one.

ENDUE, from the Lat. induo, to clothe, has been confounded with end- dow (Fr. en and douer, L. Lat. indotare), to furnish with a dowry (Fr. douaire, L. Lat. dotarium), then to supply with any gift. This is evidently the case in Genesis xxx. 20, "God hath endued me with a good dowry."—Dotavit Meus
dote bona.—Vulgate; "And with Sans-foyes dead dowry you endew."—Spenser,
F. Queene, I. iv. 51. In Luke xxiv.
49, however, the word is used in its proper meaning, "Until ye be endued with power from on high," where the Greek has énduó, Vulgate induo, to clothe. Another instance is presented in the Versicles at Morning Prayer,

Priest. Endue thy ministers with righteous- ness.

Answer. And make thy chosen people joy- ful.

These words are taken from Ps.
cxxxii. 9, "Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness, and let thy Saints sing with Joyfulness" (P. B. version), where the Vulgate has "Sacerdotes tui
induantur justitiam, et sancti tui exsultent."

Clothe the in clennes, with vertu be indute,
And God with his grace he wyl the sone inspyre.

The Coventry Mysteries, p. 204
(Shaks. Soc.).

Infinite shapes of creatures there are bred . . .
Some fit for reasonable sowles t' indew,
Some made for beasts, some made for birds to weare.

Spenser, F. Queene, III. vi. 35.

END-IRONS, } corrupted forms of HAND-IRONS, } andirons, iron bars to support the ends of the logs burning on the hearth, the former occurring in the margin of A. Version of Ezek. xl. 43, the latter in Quarles' Judgment and

Mercy (Repr. 1807), "Let heavy cynics . . . be handirons for the injurious world to work a heat upon," p. 147.

Older forms are awndryryn, andyrons. "Iron" is no part of the original word, cf. O. Eng. awnderne (Prompt. Parv.), andyar, O. Fr. andier, Fr. landier, Low Lat. andena. Andedos occurs in Charlemagne's capitular, De Villis Imperialibus, c. 42 (A.D. 812).

ENEMY, a Lincolnshire name for the anemone, of which word it is a corruption, through the common mispronunciation anernome, or anenemy, being misunderstood as an enemy. "The common people call them emones."—Coles, Adam in Eden, 1657.

Doon i' the world enemies.

Tennyson, Northern Farmer, Old Style.

(Britten and Holland, p. 169.)

ENEMY, a Scotch word for an ant (Fife), is a corruption of A. Sax. cemete, an emmet, which in other parts is called emmock, emantin, enanteen. Similar, perhaps, is the meaning of the following from Wright's Provincial Dictionary, "Enemis, an insect, Shropshire."

ENGLAND. So far back as the time of Procopius England was popularly regarded by the people on the opposite shore of the continent as the land of souls or departed spirits. It is still believed in Brittany that a weird boat laden with souls is ferried across the English Channel every night, and the point of departure is either Boé ann anavo, "the Bay of Souls," near Raz, or La Baie des Trépassés, "the Bay of the Departed," at Carnôet (see Tylor, Prim. Culture, ii. 59; Keary, Dawn of History, 175; Lewis, Astronomy of Ancients, 494; Macquoid, Pictures and Legends from Normandy and Brittany).

It has been conjectured that this superstition arose from a misunderstanding of England, formerly Engel-land, as engle-land, "the Angel land," engel being an angel in German, A. Saxon, &c.

So Ger. englisch, angelic, and English. The historic pun of Pope Gregory the Great will occur as illustrative.

þu ueir bimong wummen, auh bimong engles, þu meiht don þerto [Thou fair among women, nay, among angels, thou mightest add thereto].—Ancren Riwle, p. 102.

In German folk-lore we still hear of a Realm of the Dead, which is said to be situated in "Engel-land." Engel-land in German literally means both the land of the Angels and of the English. In the former sense Engel-land is a later semi-Christian transfiguration of the former Teutonic Home of the angel-like Light Elves—good fays who were said to be more beautiful than the sun. In Anglo-Saxon we find the Home of the Light Elves mentioned as Engla eard.—K. Blind, The Nineteenth Century, No. xxviii. p. 1110.

ENHANCE, old Eng. enhauunce, enhauunse, seems to be a natural compound of en and old Eng. hauunce, to raise or lift up, a nasalized form of Prov. Eng. hause, to heave up (Ang. Ir. hoosh), hauzen (Peele), from Fr. hausser, to heighten, lift (= It. alzare, Lat. (?) altiare, to make high, altus). Cf. "Hawncyn", or heynyn' (al. hawten, or heithyn vp), exalto, elevo."—Prompt. Parv. So a city wall is said to be enhauunsed (MS. in Way). "Enhance, exaltare."—Levins, Manipulus, 22.

It is, however, identical with Prov. enansar, to advance or put forwards, from enans (= in ante), forward (Skeat, Wedgwood).

He puttide down my3ty men fro seete, and enhauunside meke.—Wycliffe, S. Luke, i. 52 (1389).

ENTAIL, in its modern and popular acceptation to produce a necessary result, as when a measure is said to "entail serious consequences," is probably generally supposed to mean "draw in its wake, or tail, or sequele" (cf. "a matter of consequence," i.e. having a following, sc. of results).

As a law term it means to limit an estate to a certain line of descent (to settle unchangeably), orig. to abridge or cut it off, from O. Fr. entailler, to cut, It. intagliare, whence intaglio, a cut gem.

ENTICE, so spelt as if compounded with en (in), from the idea of drawing in or inveigling a person, is a corrupt form of attyce (Barclay, Shyp of Fooles, 1509), to excite, inflame, or kindle, from Fr. attiser, to kindle, lay one brand near another (Cotgrave), It. attizzare, to stir up the fire, provoke to anger (Florio); and these from Fr. tison, It. tizzo, Lat. titio, a firebrand.

To thefte shall they you soone attyze.
Ancient Poetical Tracts, p. 11
[Wright].

It is his owne lust . . . that entises him to sin.—Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, p. 752.

EOTUL-VARE, the word for Italians in Bêda (Hist. Eccles., 2, 4), as if “the gluttonous men” (A. Sax. eotol, eatol, ctol, voracious, from etan, to eat; cf. eoton, eton, a devouring giant), is a naturalized form of Italici, literally “Italy-men.”

EPHESIAN, a name given in Galloway to the pheasant (Jamieson), is an evident corruption of old Eng. fesan, fesaun, old Fr. faisan, Lat. phasiana, i.e. the Phasian bird, from the Phasis in Colchis.

He com him-self y-charged · wi conyng & haers,
Wip fesuns & feldfares · and oþer foules grete.

William of Palerne, l. 183 (ed. Skeat).

Take goode brothe, þerin þou pyt þy fesauntes and þy prertyks, þat men may wyt.

Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 23 (ed. Morris).

Goe silly soules that doe so much admire
Court curious intertainment and fine fare
May you for mee obtaine what you desire
I for your fowles of Phasis do not care.

T. Fuller, David's Hainous Sinne, &c., 1631, p. 72 (ed. Grosart).

EPISODE, so spelt and pronounced as if denoting something sung in addition, like epode, ode, should in strictness be episod (like method, period, synod), being the Greek episodes, an additional entry (into a story), something adventitious.

EQUERRY, an officer who has the care of the horses of a prince, so spelt as if derived from equus, a horse (so Bailey), is properly the stable man, from Fr. écurie, Low Lat. scuria.

EQUIPAGE was once mistakenly regarded as a compound of Lat. æquus, equal, like equipoise, equinox, &c. Thus “æquipage, order,” is E. K.'s gloss on Spenser's line—

With quaint Bellona in her equipage.

The Shepheard's Calender, Oct., l. 114.

But let these translations be beheld by unpartial eyes, and they will be allowed to go in equipage with the best Poems in that age.—T. Fuller, Worthies, vol. i. p. 411 (ed. 1811).

Equip, formerly eskip, esquip, from Fr. équiper, esquiper, Sp. esquifar, was originally to fit out a ship (It. schifo, O. H. G. skif, Goth. skip), M. Müller, Diez.

To equippe or founrish ships with all abilements.—Cooper, Thesaurus, 1573.

See Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, p. 205.

ERD-LING, eordling, or aerðling, the A. Saxon name for the bittern or heron, as if from eord, eorð, the earth, is a corruption of Lat. ardea, Gk. erōdiās, a heron.

ERRANT, “In Law, is applied to Justices who go the circuit” (Bailey), as if wandering judges (Lat. errantes, from errare, to wander); it is really derived from Fr. erre, a way or course (Cotgrave), O. Fr. eire, a journey, Fr. errer, O. Fr. edrar (L. Lat. iterare), to journey, all from Lat. iter, but confounded with errare. Scheler even thinks that the Juif errant is of similar origin. So “Justices in eyre,” are justices on a journey; explained by Spelman as “Justiciarii itinerantes, or errantes, for iter is also called error” (Glossarium, p. 240, 1626).

Tuelf hundred as in 3er of grace & nintence,
ich vnderstonde,
The eire of Justize wende aboute in the londe.

Rabt. of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 517
(ed. 1810).

Errant, in the sense of notorious, rank, is a corruption of ARRANT, which see.

Take heede of those, for they are errant theeues.—Thos. Lever, Sermons, 1550, p. 66 (ed. Arber).

ERSCEN, an old Eng. word for the hedgehog (? fide Somneri), as if from ersc, a park or warren, is a corruption of an original seen in O. Eng. irchen, urchone, O. Fr. ericon, Sp. erizo, Fr. hérisson, Lat. ericius.

EUTOPIAN, Milton's spelling, “Atlantic and Eutopian politics, which never can be drawne into use, will not mend our condition” (Areopagica, 1644, p. 51, ed. Arber), as if from Greek eu, well, and topos, a place, is a mistaken form of Utopian, from ou, not, and topos, a non-existent place, “Kennahair,” or No man's land.

EVER, } Provincial names EVER-GRASS, } for the darnel, lo- EVERY, } lium perenne, are corruptions of its French appellation ivraie; so called from its power to ine- briate or make drunk (ivre). Cf. Ger.
rauschkorn, Flem. dronckaert, Lat. lo- lium temulentum. See RAY-GRASS.

EVERHILLS, a Northamptonshire word, sometimes contracted into errills, for a field or enclosure, originally an allotment of common land to a particular proprietor, is a corruption of several, a portion severed or set apart, “a divided enclosure” (Kennett, Pa- roch. Antiq., 1695).

Of late he's broke into a several
Which doth belong to me, and there he spoils
Both corn and pasture.

Sir John Oldcastle, iii. 1.

Sternberg, Northampton. Glossary.

It is easy to see how constantly recurring phrases like “John's several,”
“His several,” would degenerate into “John's everal,” “His everal.” So in compounded words the initial s of the latter part is often swallowed up in the final s of the prefix, especially in the case of ex (= eks), e.g. execrate for ex- secrate (cf. con-secrate); exert for ex- sert (cf. in-sert); exist for ex-sist (cf.
in-sist); expect for ex-spect (cf. in-spect);
aspire for ex-spire (cf. in-spire); extant for ex-stant (cf. in-stant); extinct for ex-stinct (cf. in-stinct); extirpate for ex- stirpate; exude for ex-sude; exult for ex-sult (cf. in-sult); exuperate (Brown) for ex-superate.

Why should my heart think that a several plot

Which my heart knows the wide world's common place?

Shakespeare, Sonnet cxxxvii.

Truth lies open to all; it is no man's se- veral. (Patet omnibus veritas; nondum est occupata.)—B. Jonson, Discoveries, Works, p.
742.

Some are so boysterous, no severalls will hold them, but lay all Offices common to their power.—T. Fuller, Holy and Profane State,
p. 234 (1648).

EVERY WHERE, old Eng. eaverihwer
(Legend of S. Katherine, p. 37), is no compound of every, everich, but a corruption of ever-gehwær, ever ywhere;
ever being the usual 12th century prefix (Oliphant). So handy-work is for hand- geweorc, hand-ywork.

EXCISE, apparently a portion cut off or excised (Lat. excisus) from a commodity in the way of duty, a tax, like talliage from Fr. tailleur, to cut. Prof.
Skeat, however, shows that this is a mere mis-spelling of accise, Dut. aksys, aksiis, Ger. accise, and these corruptions of O. Fr. assis, assise, an assessment (Lat. assensus).—Etym. Dict., s. v. Ac- cise occurs in Howell, Letters, Bk. i., vii. (1619).

All the townes of the Lowe-Countreyes doe cutt upon themselves an excise of all things towarde the mayntenance of the warre.—Spenser, State of Ireland, p. 669
(Globe ed.).

EXCREMENT, frequently used in old writers for the hair or nails, is literally an “out-growth” from the body, an exorescence (Lat. excrementum, from ex- crescere, to grow out), and has no connexion with excrement, the excreta, or parts separated by digestion (from Lat.
excerno, to sift out), with which it has sometimes been confounded, e.g. by Richardson. Thus Fuller says that Elisha was mocked by the children “For lacking the comely excrement of haire on his head.”—Pisgah-Sight of Palestine, p. 249 (1650).

If that ornamentall excrement which groweth beneath the chin be the standard of wisdom, they [goats] carry it from Aristotle himself.
—Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 533 (ed.
1811).

Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being,
as it is, so plentiful an excrement?—Shakespeare,
Comedy of Errors, ii. 2, l. 79.

Above all things wear no beard: long beards
Are signs the brains are full, because the excrements

Come out so plentifully.

Randolph, Amyntas, i. 3, Works, p. 282
(ed. Hazlitt).

Pliny saith that the thorn is more soft than a tree, and more hard than an herb; as if it were some unkindly thing, and but an un-perfect excrement of the earth.—T. Adams,
Forest of Thorns, Works, ii. 478.

The following passages show how the two words were confounded.

Expulsion is a power of nutrition, by which it expells all superfluous excrements and reliques of meat and drink, by the guts, bladders, pores; as by purging, vomiting, spitting, sweating, urine, hairs, nails, &c.—Bur- ton, Anatomy of Melancholy, I. 1, ii. 5.

Haires are bodyes engendred out of a superfluous excrement of the third concoction, torrified by the naturall heat. . . One vapor continually solliciting & vrging another, they are wrought together into one body; euen as in Chimneya we see by the continuall ascent of Soot, long strings of it are gathered as it were into a chaine. The difference is, that the straightnesse of the passages of the Skin, where through the matter of the Haires is auoided, formeth them into a small roundnesse, euen as a wire receiveth that proportion whereof the hole is, where through it is drawne.—H. Croke, Description of the Body of Man, p. 67 (1631).

EXHALE, sometimes used by Shakespeare as meaning to draw out (Clark and Wright), seems to be a confusion of Lat. exhalare, to breathe out, with Eng. hale, to draw or drag, Dan. hale, Dut. halen, to pull or draw. Thus when Pistol defies Nym to mortal combat, and bids him draw his sword, he says—

The grave doth gape, and doting death is near;
Therefore exhale.

Henry V. ii. 1, l. 66.

And when King Henry's corpse begins to bleed in the presence of Gloucester, Lady Anne says—

'Tis thy presence that exhales this blood.
Richard III. i. 2, l. 58.

EXTASY, a mis-spelling of ecstasy, sometimes found, like the French extase, as if from the Greek ex and tasis, the state of being over strained, instead of from ek and stasis, being beside oneself.

There is nothing left for her but to fly to the other world for a metaphor, and swear qu'elle etoit tout extasiée—which mode of speaking is, by the bye, here creeping into use, and there is scarce a woman who understands the bon ton but is seven times a day in downright extasy.—Sterne, Letters, xxiii. 1752.

In the same authour [Florilegus] is recorded Carolus Magna vision an. 885, or extasis, wherein he saw heaven and hell after much fasting and meditation.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, III. 4, i. 2.

Eftsoones she thus resolv'd; that whilst the Gods . . .

Were troubled, and amongst themselves at ods,

To set upon them in that extasie.

Spenser, F. Queene, VII. 6, xxiii.

Joel breaks into an extasy as he sees the spirit of God poured out "on all flesh."—Saml. Cox, Expository Essays, p. 119.

This carried the heart of olde Simeon into such a holy extasie of religions delight, that earth could hold him no longer, but he must needs, as it were, breake prison, and leape out of his olde body into heauen.—G. Fletcher, Reward of the Faithfull, 1623, Poems, p. 27 (ed. Grosart).

EXTEME, an old Eng. perversion of esteem (Lat. æstimare), as if compounded with the preposition ex. Hall reports how "certain Scottes of the isle of Britayne eate the fleshe of men . . . extemyng this meate to be the greatest deinties."—Henry V. fol. 8 a.

EXTERICS, a common corruption in Scotland of the word hysterics (Jamieson). See ASTERISKS, HIGH STRIKES, and STERACLES.

EYE, as an article of millinery, the correlative term to a hook, which it serves to catch, being indeed its counterpart and inseparable concomitant, as in the expression "hooks and eyes," seems to be a metaphorical use of the name of the organ of sight. It is probably a corruption of the German oes, which has the same meaning.

Öse is given in Rumpf, Technologisches Wörterbuch, as meaning a ring, loop, link, hoop, or eye of a rope, hook, &c. Auge, however, is used in a similar way. Cf. O. Eng. oes = eyes, 15th cent. (Wright), and eyelet-hole, Fr. oeillet.

It is perhaps the same word that in old writers appears as o or oe, in the sense of a spangle or circlet.

Yon fiery oes and eyes of light.

Midsum. N. Dream, iii. 2.

Oes or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so are they of most glory.—Bacon, Of Masques and Triumphs.

EYE, used, as formerly, in the sense of a tint or shade of colour, is probably from A. Sax. hiv, hue, colour, appearance (cf. æavian, to show or manifest), Swed. hy, Goth. hiwi, appearance, colour (Diefenbach, ii. 556).

The ground indeed is tawny,

With an eye of green in it.

Tempest, ii. 1.

Red, with an eye of blue, makes a purple.—Boyle, Experiments touching Colours.

The Shakespearian verb eye, to appear, is perhaps the same word.

My becomings kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you.

Antony and Cleop. i. 3, l. 97.

EYE, a prov. word for a brood or nest, as "an eye of pheasants" (Old Country and Farming Words, E. D. S., p. 80), seems to be a corruption of Fr. nid, a nest (Skeat).

F.

FAG. A person is said to be fagged when wearied or tired out. This has been regarded as a corruption of flagged, become limp (It. fiacco, Lat. fiaccus), or as a contraction of fatigué (S. De Vere, Studies in English). The original meaning, I think, is beaten (cf. "dead beat," Sussex flogged, tired out), fag being a slightly disguised form of the old verb feag or feague, to beat. "To Feag, to beat with rods, to whip, whence fagging signifieth any manner of beating."—Bailey.

"Fag, to beat or thrash."—Wright. Hence probably the fag of public schools. Diefenbach connects it with A. Sax. fêge, about to die, Swed. fêg, Icel. feigr, Scot. fey (Goth. Sprache, i. 380).

But flagged was certainly used in the same sense as fagged.

Flagg'd veins sweete [?swell, Lowell] plump with fresh-infused joves!

Marston.

Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, gives instances of fag, sb. = fatigue (Miss Austen), and fag, to toil or drudge (M. D'Arblay, Dickens).

FAIRFOLKS, } Scottish names for FAREFOLKS, } the fairies, of which word they are no doubt corruptions.
Fairy for faëry (Fr. féerie, an assembly of fées), probably owes its present form to an imagined connexion with fair, as in the title of a modern novel, "Fairer than a Fairy." In Wales they are called Tylwith teg, "the Fair family." In Iceland the elves of light were "fair of face," in distinction from their dark subterranean brethren (Dasent, Oxford Essays, 1858). Other names for them are white nymphs, white ladies, witte wyven (Douce), albatæ mulieris (More-sin), blanquettes in the Pyrenees.

In the Glossary to G. Douglas (1710) it is explained that the drudging elves get their name of Brownies from their swarthy colour, "as these who move in a higher sphere are called Fairies from their fairness." The true origin is fay, Fr. fée, Portg. fada, from L. Lat. fata, a goddess of fate.

With Nymphis and Faunis apown euery syde

Qubilk farefolkis or than elfis clepin we.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 252, l. 45.

FAIRLY, when used as an intensive adverb, meaning downright, wholly, altogether (Lat. omnino), as in "I am fairly puzzled," "fairly exhausted," &c., is an evident corruption of O. Eng. ferly, wondrous, wonderfully, i.e. fear-like, A. Sax. fêr-lic. So Scottish fairly few, surprisingly or wondrous few, ferly few (Jamieson). Wedgwood (s.v. Fear) quotes from R. Brunne, "He felt him hevy and ferly sick."

Lo, a ueortlich god word þet te holi Job seide.—Ancren Riwle, p. 148.

þe pore man hente hyt vp helyue,
And was þerof ful ferly blyþe.

Robt. Manning, Handlyng Sinne,
l. 5620.

So in the Alliterative Poems (ab. 1360), the Cities of the Plain when set on fire fairly frightened the folk that dwelt in them.

Ferly flayed þat folk · þat in þose fees lenged.
p. 64, l. 960.

When a' the hills are covered wi' snaw,
I'm sure it's winter fairly.

Burns, Poems, p. 211 (Globe ed.).

FAIRMAIDS, or fermades, i.e. fumadoes, smoked pilchards.

"Eating fair maids and drinking mahogany" (gin and treacle), is a proverbial expression in the west of England. Hunt, Drolls, &c., of W. Eng., ii. 245.

And then (by the name of Fumadoes) with oyle and a lemon, they [pilchards] are meat for the mightiest Don in Spain.—Fuller, Worthies, vol. i. p. 206.

Dried, sowced, indurate fish, as ling, fumados, red-herrings, sprats, stock-fish, haberdine, poor-John.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, l. 2, ii. 1.

FAIR-WAY, a sea term used in charts, denoting the best course for a vessel through shoals or other difficulties, is without doubt the German Fahrweg, a thoroughfare or highway, a "fare-way." (Compare Fahrwasser, navigable water. A "fair wind" also may be for fare-wind, Ger. Fahrwind.) The Scotch word is fareway, Swed. farväg, a high road, Icel. farveg.

FAIRY, a provincial name for the weasel, also called a fare or vare or vary (Somerset, Cornwall and Devon), is the old Fr. vair, from Lat. varius, parti-coloured. The word in the mouth of a Sussex man underwent a further corruption and became a pharisee (Parish, Sussex Glossary). "Vare wiggeon" is a name for the smew in N. Devonshire (in Norfolk, "the weasel duck") from the resemblance of its head to that of a weasel (Johns, Brit. Birds in their Haunts, p. 526).

FAITH, O. Eng. feyth, feith, an Anglicized form of O. Fr. fei, feid (= Lat. fidem), which has been assimilated to other abstract words like truth, ruth, health (Skeat, Etym. Dict.).

FALL, in the exclamation "A fall! A fall!" used by the whale fishers on the sight of their prey, is a corruption of the Dutch Val! Val! i.e. "A whale! A whale!"

A whaler empties its crew—clothed and half-naked—into the boats when at any moment of the day or night the glad cry is raised of "A fall! A fall!"—The Standard, Nov. 7, 1879, p. 2.

FALSE-SWEAR. The Leicestershire folk say that a person who has committed perjury is "false-sworn." It is doubtless a popular corruption of forswear, forsworn (Evans, Leicestershire Words, p. 145, E. D. S.).

FANCY, an attempted explanation of pansy (Prior), not altogether beside the mark, as pansy itself is from the French pensée, thought.

FANGLE, used for something trivial or fantastic, "as new fangles, new whimsies."—Bailey. Nares quotes an instance from Gayton, and this from Wood's Athens, "A hatred to fangles and the French fooleries of his time." Shakespeare has fangled.

Be not, as is our fangled world, a garment Nobler than that it covers.

Cymbeline, v. 4, l. 134.

These words originated in a mistake about the composition of the words newfangled (Palsgrave, 1530), newfangledness (Pref. to P. Book), less correct forms of newfangel (Chaucer, Gower), newfanglones (Pref. to A. V.). Prof. Skeat shows that new-fangel is compounded of fangel (fangol) and new, ready to fang or seize on new things (Etym. Dict.).

FARMER, one who cleanses, in the old words jakes-farmer (Beaumont and Fletcher), gong-farmer (Stowe), a latrine-cleaner, is a distinct word from farmer, the food (A. Sax. farme) supplier, and farmer of revenue who manages it for a fixed sum (firma, cf. "Fermyn, or take a jinge to ferme, ad firmam accipio."—Prompt. Parv.), being a derivative of old Eng. ferme, Prov. Eng. farm, to cleanse, A. Sax. farmian, and akin to Prov. and old Eng. fey, feigh, or fow, to cleanse, Ger. fegen, Dan. fejæ, Icel. faga; also Icel. fagr, A. Sax. fæger, "fair."

I ferme a siege or priuy, i'escure.—Palsgrave, Lesclaircissement, 1530.

Firmarius, given in other MSS. fimarius and fumarius, in the Prompt. Parvulorum (c. 1440), as equivalent to "racare of a pytte," is due to a false etymology.

FARTHER, is a mongrel form,—a corruption of farrer, Mid. Eng. ferrer, ferre, old Eng. fyrre, the comparative of far, Mid. Eng. fer, old Eng. feor, from false analogy to further. So farthest for farrest.

Now sen a rygbtwis man salle schyne als bright

Als þe son dose, þan mon be gyf lyght

Als fer als þe son dose and ferrer.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 9154 (ab. 1340).

Further (Mid. Eng. forther, ferther, old Eng. furthor) is the comparative of forth. Stoddart, Philosophy of Language, p. 286; Morris, Historical Eng. Grammar, p. 94.

FARTHINGALE, a corruption of the older form vardingale, Fr. vertugaille, vertugadin, Sp. verdugado, a hooped petticoat, from Sp. and Portg. verdugo, a rod, a plait, and that from verde, viridis, a green twig.

We shall not for the future submit ourselves to the learning of etymology, which might persuade the age to come that the farthingale was worn for cheapness, or the furbelow for warmth.—Spectator, No. 478 (1712).

The history of the French vertugadin being forgotten, it was explained to be a vertu gardien, a safe-guard, from its rendering it impossible to approach the wearer except at arm's length! Jamieson gives us a Scotch word vardingard, and Ital. guardinfante, which must be a further corruption.

With these Verdingales the Gowns of Women beneath their wastes were pent-housed out far beyond their bodies, so that posterity will wonder to what purpose those bucklers of paste-board were employed. Some deduce the name from the Belgick Verd-gard (derived, they say, from Virg, a Virgin, and Garder, to keep and preserve); as used to secure modesty, and keep wantons at a distance. Others more truly fetch it from Vertu and Gulle; because the scab and bane thereof, the first inventress thereof being known for a light House-wife, who, under the pretence of modesty, sought to cover her shame, and the fruits of her wantonness. . . . But these Verdingales have been disused this forty years.—Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 221.

Fashion brought in the farthingale, and carried out the farthingale, and hath again revived the farthingale from death, & placed it behind, like a rudder & stern to the body, in some so big that the vessel is scarce able to bear it.—Bp. John King, Lectures on Jonah, 1594, p. 227 (Nichol's ed.).

I warrant you they had bracelets, and verdingales, and suche fine geare.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 280, verso.

What compass will you wear your farthingale?

Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 7, l. 51.

The Queene ariv'd with a traine of Portuguese ladies in their monstrous farthingals or guard-infantas, their complexions olivader and sufficiently unagreeable.—J. Evelyn, Diary, May 30, 1662 (p. 284, A. Murray ed.).

Tir'd with pinn'd ruffs, and fans, and partlet strips,

And busks, and verdingales about their hips.

Bp. Hall, Satires, IV. 6, l. 10.

FASHIONS, a disease of horses, the farcy, a corruption of Fr. farçons, farçain (Lat. farçimum, orig. a stuffing). See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.v.

Infected with the fashions.

Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2.

No, sirra, my horse is not diseased of the fashions.—Copley, Wits, Fits, and Fancies, 1615.

They are like to die of the fazion.—Greene, Farewell to Folly, Introd.

It. farçina, "the farçain, farçies, fashions or creeping ulcer in a horse."

—Florio. Cf. Ger. fasch.

"Fashion!" says a Wiltshire farmer to his new-fangled granddaughters, "Ha! many a good horse has died o' the fashion!"—Akerman.

Davies quotes from Sterne "a farçical house," one fit for the reception of farçied patients (Supp. Eng. Glossary).

FAVOUR, TO CURRY, is a corruption of the old phrase to curry favel, which meant originally to curry the yellow-coloured horse, favel; but the punning allusion to favel, favelle, signifying flattery (from Lat. fabula) eventually predominated, and gave the phrase the meaning of to flatter or cajole. See CURRY.

Men of worschepp that wyll not glose nor cory favel.—Gregory's Chronicle of London (1461), p. 214 (Camden Soc.).

Sche was a schrewe, as have y hele,
There she currayed favel well.

How a Merchant did his Wyfe betray, l. 203.

Curryfauell, a flatterer, estriple.—Palsgrave. (Skeat, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 43.)

FAUNT, an old Eng. word for a child (Wycliffe, Exod. ii. 3, &c.), so spelt as if a mutilated form of infaunt, an infant (Lat. in-fan(t)s, one who cannot speak), is no doubt the same word as old Fr. fan, faon, feon, a young animal, offspring (our "fawn"), through fedon, faeton, from Lat. faetus. Hence also Walach. fêt, a child, Sard. fedu, progeny (Wedgwood). The excrescent t (as in tyran-t) is common.

At þe fote þer-of þer sete a faunt,
A mayden of menske, ful debonere.

Alliterative Poems, A. 1. 162 (ed. Morris).

In Legends of the Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), Christ is called—

Godes sone and maydenes faunt.

P. 145, l. 424.

"Faunch (deer)" is perhaps the same word.

The white faunch deer of the hawthorn glen Makes light of my woodcraft and me.

G. J. Whyte-Melville, Songs and Verses.

FEASESTRAW, an old corruption of the word festu, the name given formerly to a straw or small stick used in pointing out to children their letters. Later forms are feskue and fescue, all from Lat. festuca, a straw. See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.v. Festrawe.

Festuca, a feskue or feasestraw that children use to point their letters.—Florio (1611).

But what seest thou a festu in the eize of thi brother, and thou seest not a beme in thin owne eize?—Wycliffe, S. Matt. vii. 3.

This cloyster . . . arched with stone bath in y<sup>e</sup> work our blessed Lady shewing her son to read wth a jescue & hooks.—T. Dingley, History from Marble, clxx. (Camden Soc.).

A Festure, penna, festuca.—Levins, Maniplus, 1570, p. 192, 21.

FEATHERFEW, } provincial names of FEATHERFOLD, } the plant feverfew,
FEATHERFOWL, } the Pyrethrum parthenium, so called from its being a febrifuge (Lat. febris fuga, what puts fever to flight).

To these I may adde roses, violets, capers, fetherfew.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, 16th ed. p. 436.

Other old corruptions are fedyrfoy (Prompt. Parv.) and fetherfewell; while provincial forms are featherfull, featherfooly, fetherbow, fetherfoe, featherwheebie, feverfoax, feverfoullie. (See Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 176.)

FEATHER-STONE. Dr. Brewer (Dict. of Phrase and Fable), giving no authority, more suo, quotes this word as meaning "a federal stone, or stone table at which the ancient courts baron were held in the open air, and at which covenants [fœdera] were made" [?]. Wycliffe has federed, bound by covenant (Prov. xvii. 9).

FELL, a Scotch word for very (valde), sometimes spelt feil and fele, as in the expression "He's a fell clever lad" (Lady Nairne), is from the old Eng. fael, pure, true (Oliphant, Old and Mid. Eng. p. 76). But compare A. Sax. fela, much, O. Eng. fele (Ger. viel), which was perhaps confounded with O. Eng. fel, cruelly.

Ych haue boled for þy loue woundes fele sore.—Böddeker, Alteng. Dichtungen, p. 173, l. 30.

FELTRYKE, an old Eng. name for the plant Erythraea centaurium, as if fell trick, is evidently a corruption of its Latin name fel terræ (Dutch eerdegall, Eng. earth-gall, Cotgrave s.v. Sacotin), so called from its very bitter taste.

Feltryke, herbe, Fistra, fel terre, centaurea.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

It may have been regarded as that with which women trick their "fell of hair," it being commonly used as a hair-dye formerly. See Way (note in loc. cit.).

FEMALE, so spelt from a false analogy to male, with which it has no connexion. It is the French femelle, Lat. femella, for feminula, a diminutive of femina.

And in euenynges also zede males fro femeles.—Vision of P. Plowman, B. xi. 331.

Dr. Donne spells the word femall.
Liv'd Mantuan now againe,
That femall Mastix, to limme with his penne
Thia she Chymera, that hath eyes of fire.
Poems, 1635, p. 97.

Sylvester speaks of palms
Whose lusty Femals willing Their marrow-boying loues to be fulfilling . . .
Bow their stiff backs, and serue for passingplanka.

Du Bartus, p. 180 (1621).
Male, best or fowle, no femel. Masculus.—Prompt. Parv. (1440).

I will conclude that neither Vipers ingender with Lampreys, nor yet the femall vipers kill the male.—Topsell, Historie of Serpents, p. 296 (1608).

In The Two Noble Kinsmen (v. 1, 140), Emilia addresses Diana as one

Who to thy femall knights Allow'st no more blood than will make a blush.

The form femmale occurs early in Alliterative Poems (14th cent.), p. 57, l. 696.

FENNY, an old country word for mouldy, as "fenny cheese" (Worldige, Dict. Rusticum, 1681), as if the same word as fenny, boggy (cf. Goth. fani, mud), is only another form of vinney, vinnowy, or vinnewed, mouldy, A. Sax. fýnig.

FERRET, which would more regularly be spelt furet (like the cognate word "furtive"), owes its present form probably to a mistaken idea that the original was ferette, a dim. of fere, Lat. fera, as if the "little wild animal." Compare Fr. furet and furon, It. furetto, from Lat. fur, a thief, Languedoc furé, a mouse, just as "mouse" (Ger. maus, Lat. Gk. mus) is from Sansk. mush, to steal (vid. Pictet, Orig. Indo-Eur. ii. 441).

Forette, or ferette, lytyll heste. [Mid. Lat.] Furo, furetus, vel furunculus.—Prompt. Parv. c. 1440.

The Latines call this beast Vinerra, and Furo, and Furetus, and Furectus, because . . . it preyeth vpon Conies in their holes and liueth vpon stealth.—E. Topsell, Fourefooted Beasts, p. 216 (1608).

FERRET, an old name for some species of woven silk fabric, is a corrupted form of It. fioretto, Fr. fleurét, Ger. florett, from Lat. flos, a flower. It perhaps originally bore a flowered pattern. "It. fioretti, course ferret silkes."—Florio. Another name for it was firt, flurt, or floret, silk.

When parchmenters put in no ferret-silke.
G. Gascoigne, The Steel Glas, l. 1095 (1576).

FERRULE is the French virole, "an iron ring put about the end of a staff, &c., to strengthen it, and keep it from riving" (Cotgrave), Sp. virola, connected with It. viera, a ring, viver, to turn around. Corrupted from a false analogy to ferrum, iron. The older form is verrel, verril (Bailey).

FESTRAW, a corruption of festue or fescue, Lat. festuca, a straw or wand used to point out the letters to a child learning to read. In E. Cornwall it appears as vester (T. Q. Couch).

All that man can do towards the meriting of heaven is no more than the lifting up of a festraw towards the meriting of a kingdom.—Thos. Brooks, Apples of Gold (1660), Warks (ed. Nichol), vol. i. p. 213.

We have only scapt the ferular to come under the fescu of an Imprimatur.—Milton, Areopagitica, 1644, p. 56 (ed. Arber).

FETCH, the apparition of one who is still alive, is probably a corruption of the Scandinavian vætt, a supernatural being (Icel. vætt = wight, Cleasby, 720). So vætte-lys, the vætt's candle, would be the origin of the fetch-candle (Wedgwood). But in Manx faaish is a ghost or apparition.

FETLOCK appears to be another form of feet-lock, and has so been understood, either as the joint of a horse's leg whereby the foot is inter-locked with the tibia (Skinner, Richardson), or as the lock of hair which grows behind the foot. Mr. Wedgwood, however, thinks that the word is the same as Swiss feslock, fislock, Dut. vitslok, vitlok (?), the pastern, from Low Ger. fiss, Swiss fisel, a lock of hair, Dut. vezel. In Cornwall it is called the fetterlock (Couch).

FETTERFOE, in Promptorium Parvulorum feder-foy, a corruption of feverfew. See FEATHERFEW.

FEUD, an inveterate grudge, enmity, a private war, is A. Sax. fehð, hatred, Low Lat. faida (Charlemagne, Capitulary), Ger. fehde, Goth. fiathwa (akin to fiend, foe, root pi, to hate), mistakenly assimilated to feud, a fief, Low Lat. feudum. This latter feud has been evolved out of Low Lat. feudalis, a vassal (= Icel. fé-óðal), mistaken for an adjective (Skeat).

Coward Death behind him jumpit

Wi' deadly feide.

Burns, Poems, p. 43 (Globe ed.).

FEVEREFox, a corruption of feverfew. See FEATHERFEW.

FEWTERER, an old term for a dog-keeper, or he who lets them loose in a chase (Bailey), so spelt as if connected with O. Eng. feute, the scent or trace of a beast of chase, "Fewte, vestigium" (Prompt. Parv.), "He fond þe feute al fresh."—William of Palerne, l. 90. It is really derived from O. Fr. vautre, viantre (Fr. vautre), a hunting dog, It. veltro, L. Lat. veltrum, from Lat. vertragus, properly a Gaulish word from ver (intensive particle) + trag (Celtic = Gk. τρέχω, to run), "the very swift" (W. Stokes, Irish Glosses, p. 44).

Amongst serving-men, worse, worse than the man's man to the under-yeoman-fewterer. Webster, Appius and Virginie, iii. 4.

If you will be

An honest yeoman-fewterer, feed us first
And walk us after.

Massinger, The Picture, v. 1.

FIDDLE-DE-DEE! As the exclamation Bosh! (compare Ger. Possen! meaning Nonsense!) has in all probability no connexion with the Gipsy bosh, a fiddle, though George Borrow asserts the contrary, it seems likely that the interjection fiddle-de-dee! instead of being derived from the popular name of the violin, is a naturalized form of the Italian expletive Fediddio! (fede and Iddio) "God's faith!" 'Sfaith! just as Dear me! O dear! are apparently from Dio mio! O dio! Fiddlestick! would then be a further corruption.

"Fediddio!" exclaimed Francesco Cei, "that is a well-tanned San Giovanni."—G. Eliot, Romola, ch. viii.

Similarly Crimini! an interjection of surprise, Mr. Wedgwood thinks is It. crimine; cf. crymanias! Gracious! (Devonshire Courtship, p. 12).

FIELDFARE, the name of a bird supposed to have been so called from its characteristic habit of faring or moving across the fields (so Isaac Taylor, Words and Places, p. 160, n. 2nd ed.), Old Eng. feldfare and feldfare in the Promptorium Parvulorum (ab. 1440), is a corruption of A. Sax. fealefor, fealafor (Ettmüller), from fealo, fealav, tawny, yellowish, Lat. flavus. In Cumberland it is called the fell-faw, or "mountain gipsy," as if from fell, a mountain (Ferguson, Glossary, s.v.). Compare Fr. fauvette, a small bird, a warbler, from Fr. fawve, Lat. flavus (falvus).

Glucium, . . . A feldfare, or (as some thinke) a coote.—Nomenclator.

Feldfare also, however, is found in old English (Skeat).

Wip fesauns & feldfares and oþer foules grete.

William of Palerne, l. 183 (ab. 1350).

FIGARDE, an old Eng. word for a roebuck used in Wycliffe's Bible, Deut. xiv. 5, is a corrupted form of Lat. pygargus, Gk. púgargos, "white-rump." The word was perhaps influenced by A. Sax. firgen-gát, a mountain-goat, firgen-bucca.

FILE, a slang term for an artful person, formerly a thief or pickpocket, from Prov. Eng. feal, to hide, O. Eng. felen, Icel. fela, Goth. filhan, to conceal. Near akin is fil-ch, fil-k, and perhaps Fr. filou. "To Feale, velare, abscondere."—Levins, Manipulus (1570), p. 207.

The greatest character among them was that of a pickpocket, or, in truer language, a file.—H. Fielding, Jonathan Wild, Bk. iv. chap. xii. (Works, p. 590).

FILLET, an Anglicized form of Fr. fillet, a little thread, from fil, Lat. filum. An old form is felet (Paston Letters), Low Lat. feleta (1394, in Way), and the orig. meaning a band worn across the forehead consisting of linen embroidered with gold (Ortus). It is worth considering whether it is not a corruption of phylacterium (filaterium), to which it closely corresponds, and by which indeed it is glossed in the Promptorium Parvulorum, "Fylette, victa, philacterium." Compare It. filaterio, a precious stone worn as an amulet (Florici), the same word, with its close resemblance to filaterie, filatera, a web, a woof. Low Lat. filaterium is used for a girdle (cordelière), while fletum is a net (Du Cange).

Forsothe thei aluigen her filateries.—Wycliffe, S. Matt. xxiii. 5.

FILL-HORSE, or Fillar, "that horse of a team which goes in the rods."—Kennett, Parochial Antiquities, 1695 (E. Dialect Soc. ed.), is a corruption of thill-horse, one that goes in the thills or shafts (A. Sax. þil, Icel. þli), Northampt. filler and thiller (Sternberg).

Come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills.—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iii. 2, l. 48.

F is very frequently substituted for th, e.g. Wiltshire fusty for thirsty (E. D. Soc. Reprint B. 19), O. Eng. afurst for athirst (P. Plowman, C. x. 85), and th for f, e.g. thetches for fiches, thorough for farrow (W. Ellis, 1750); Leicester throff for froth (Evans).

The traces of the hindmost or phill-horse are put on an iron book.—W. Ellis, Mod. Husbandman, l. 39 (1750).

Thou hast got more hair on thy chin than Dobbin my fill-horse has on his tail.—Merchant of Venice, ii. 2, l. 100.

FILLY-BAG, an English pronunciation of Gaelic feile beag, i.e. feile, a kilt or covering, and beag, little (Campbell, Tales of W. Highlands, vol. iv. p. 377).

FILM FERN, } owes its name, perhaps,
FILMY FERN, } to the latter part of Hymeno-phyllosum, its Latin denomination, just as fillyfendillan is an Irish adaptation of the (Spiræa) filipendula.

FIND, in the sense of to support, provide, or supply with provisions, as when servants are hired at a certain wage "all found," or otherwise "to find themselves," and as when a ship is described as "well found," is a peculiar use of the word find, to discover; A. Sax. findan. It is old Eng. fynde, "Fyndin, helpyn', and susteinyn' hem þat be nedy. Sustento. Fyndynge, or helpynge iu bodily goodys at nede. Exhibicio, subvencio."—Promptorium Parvulorum (ab. 1440); influenced apparently by Prov. Eng. and Scottish fend, to support, provide for, or shift (for oneself), whence fendy, managing, thrifty, Cleveland fendable, industrious, contriving.

He must fend for himself as well as he can.—Wright.

Ray gives "To Fend, to shift for, from defend" (North Country Words), Fr. defendre, to preserve, maintenir, sustaine (Cotgrave). Compare

Helme and hawberke both he hent

A long fauchion verament.

to fend them in his neede.

Percy's Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 61, l. 76.

I assayed him, & he ffended weele.

Id. vol. i. p. 365, l. 346.

But gie them guid cow-milk their fill,

Till they be fit to fend themsel.

Burns, Poems, p. 33 (Globe ed.).

Some saith that in paying this demaund they should not be able to fynde thair wives and childre, but should be dreven to send thyme a begging, and so to geve up their fermes.—Ellis, Original Letters (date 1525), 3rd Ser. vol. i. p. 363.

Finding was used for the exhibition or support of a student at the University.

I have a fetherbeed with a boullster for Master Wyllam Wellyfyed sone that ys at Cambreg at yowre mastershype fyndeng.—Ellis, Original Letters (1533), 3rd Ser. vol. ii. p. 238.

Compare old Eng. and Scot. findy, full, substantial, supporting (A. Sax. findig), as in the proverb—

A cold May and a windy

Makes barus fat and findy.

By husbondry of swiche as God hire sente,
She found hireself and eke her doughtren two.

Chaucer, The Nonnes Preestes Tale,
l. 14834.

My fader and my frendes founden me to scole.

Langland, Vision of P. Plowman, vi.
36 (text C.).

Fiat voluntas tua fynt ous alle bynges.

Ibid. 88.

If a labouring man should see all that hee gathereth and spendeth in a yeare in a chest it would not fynde him halfe a yeare, yet it fyndeth him.—Lutimer, Sermons, p. 304, verso.

As for the wicked, indeede God of his exceeding mercy and liberality fyndeth them.—Id. p. 157, verso.

FIRMAN, a decree of the Turkish government, so spelt as if derived from O. Eng. firm, Portg. firmar, to sign, seal and confirm a writing (formerly phirman), is properly the Persian farmān, a mandate, order, Hindustani farmān, and farmānā, to command, Sansk. pramāna, decision. A firm is properly the confirmatory signature (Sp. firma) peculiar to a trading company, under which it does business, from Sp. and Portg. firmar, to sign or subscribe.

Long attendance we danced ere we could procure a Phirman for our safe travel.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, p. 224 (1665).

FISH, a counter used at cards to mark the state of the game, owes its shape and name to a mistaken etymology, being really the Anglicized form of Fr. fiche, used in the same sense. It is a derivative of ficher, to fix (as a peg at cribbage), then to mark, a by-form springing from the Latin figere, to fix. Curiously enough Fr. poisson (a fish) seems formerly to have been used for a peg fixed in the ground. In the metrical account of the siege of Carlaverock in the time of Edward II., we read of tents being erected "with many a pin driven into the ground,"—meint poisson en terre fichie (Nichols's translation, p. 65).

It is, however, the last quoted word which is identical with our fish. Compare O. Eng. fische, to fix, ficching, fixing, "No but I schal se in his hondis the ficching of naylis. . . . I schal not bileue."—Wycliffe, St. John, xx. 25.

He was not long in discovering that staking shillings and half-crowns, instead of counters and "fish" . . . was a very different thing to playing vingt-et-un at home with his sisters for love.—Adventures of Mr. Verdunt Green, Pt. I. ch. xi.

FIST-BALL, } popular names for the FURZE-BALL, } fungus lycoperdon, or puff-ball. The first part of the word represents Ger. feist, Dut. veest (crepitus), alluding to the pop or offensive explosion of dust it makes when broken.

In Suffolk it is called a foist. Dryden calls it a fuzz-ball, Bacon a fuzzy-ball. See BULFIST.

There is a bag, or fuzzy-ball, growing common in the fields . . . full of light dust upon the breaking.—Sylva Sylvarum, Works, vol. ix. p. 264 (ed. 1803).

FIVES, also spelt vives, a disease in horses, a swelling of the glands, is from the French avives, Ger. feifel, Sp. abivas, It. vivole, L. Lat. vivole, the glands of a horse. M. Littré holds that Fr. avives is from vive, because horses were supposed to contract the disease from drinking caux vies or vavivées!

FLASH, a Suffolk word for to trim a hedge by cutting off the overhanging brush (Old Country and Farming Words, E. D. S. p. 143), is no doubt a corrupted use of plash, to cut and lay a hedge, orig. to interweave its spreading branches into a fence, to pleach or plait it (Fr. plesser, Lat. plicare). See SPLASH.

FLAT, a set of rooms comprised in one storey of a house, as if all upon the one level, is the Icelandic flet, A. S. flett, Dan. fled, O. H. G. flazi, Prov. Ger. fletz, a dwelling, chamber, room, house. O. Eng. vlette, a floor (Lazamon's Brut, ab. 1205).

I schal stonde hym a strok, stif on bis flet.

Sir Gawayne, l. 294 (ab. 1320).

But fayre on kneus þey schule hem sette,
Knelynge down vp on the flette.

J. Myrc, Instruction for Parish Priests,
l. 273 (E. E. T. S.)

An hep of girles sittende aboute the flet.

Political Songs, p. 337, l. 309 (temp.
Ed. II.).

I felle vpon þat floury flazt.

Alliterative Poems, p. 2, l. 57.

Flet, a floor, a story of a house, commonly a flat.—Jamieson, Scottish Dict.

Scot. flet, a saucer, Banff flat (Gregor), = plate, platter.

FLATER DOCK, a Cheshire word for pondweed. Flatter is for floter = floating; compare "floter-grasse," gramen fluviatile (Gerarde, Herball, p. 13); old Eng. fleathe, the water-lily, fleot wyrt, float wort (Cockayne, Leechdoms).

FLAVOUR is probably identical, as Wedgwood notes, with Scottish fleware, fleure, a smell, scent (Gawin Douglas), French fleurer, to yield an odour, which is merely another form (? influenced by fleur) of flairer (Scheler), Prov. flairar, Lat. fragrare, to yield a scent. Flaur (Jamieson), flavare, no doubt became flavour from the analogy of savour. Old Eng. flayre, flaure.

And alle swete savours þat men may fele,
Of alkyn thing þat here savours wele,
War nocht bot als stynk to regard of þat
fluyre

þat es in þe ceté of heven swa fayre.

Pricke of Conscience, l. 9015-9018.

So frech *flaure*3 of fryte3 were.

Alliterative Poems (14th cent.), p. 3,
l. 87.

FLEEGARIE, a Scotch word for a whim (Jamieson), is a corrupt form of feegary,

i.e. a vagary, a wandering thought (from Lat. vagari, to wander), with a mistaken reference to flee.

Fegary, q.d. Vagary, à vagando, a roving or roaming about.—Bailey.

In the Holderness dialect of E. Yorkshire it takes the form of frigary; in W. Cornwall flay-gerry (M. A. Courtney).

FLIGHT OF STAIRS. Flight in this curious expression is perhaps the same word as the Icelandic flet, a set of rooms, O. H. Ger. flazi, Prov. German fletz, A. Sax. flett, and so would mean the series of stairs joining one flat or storey with another. See FLAT.

FLINTY-MOUSE, said to be a name for the bat in some parts of England (T. F. T. Dyer, Eng. Folklore, p. 115), is a corruption of the word fittermouse, old Eng. flyndermouse, flickermouse (B. Janson), Ger. fledermaus. Cf. O. Eng. vlindre, a moth (Ayenbite, 206).

Thenne cam . . . the flyndermous and the wezel.—Caxton, Reynold the Fox, 1481, p. 112 (ed. Arber).

Giddy fitter-mice with leather wings.

B. Jonson, The Sad Shepherd, ii. 2
(p. 500).

FLIRT, according to Prof. Skeat, is the same word as Scottish flird, to flirt, flirdie, giddy, A. Sax. fleardian, to trifle, fleard, a foolish thing, a piece of folly (Etym. Dict.). Cf. Banff. flird, to trifle, with the notion of going from place to place, "He's a flirdin' about bodie, he'll niver come to gueede" (W. Gregor, Banff. Glossary, p. 48). The old form of the word is flurt.

Hath light of love held you so softe in her lap?

Sing all of greene willow;

Hath fancy provokte you? did love you in-trap?

Sing willow, willow, willow;

That now you be flurting. and will not abide.

The Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant Inventions,
1578, p. 133 (ed. 1814).

Skars and hare weedes

The gaine o' th' martialist . . .

. . . now flurted

By peace for whom he fought.

The Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2, l. 19, 1634
(ed. Littledale).

It is probable that in the sense of amorous trifling the word has been influenced both in form and meaning by Fr. "fleureter, lightly to pass over;

only to touch a thing in going by it (metaphorically from the little Bees nimble skipping from flower to flower as she feeds),”—Cotgrave; just as the cognate word in Spanish, florear, means “to dally with, to trifle” (Stevens, 1706). Anyone who has observed a butterfly skimming over a gay parterre on a hot summer’s day will admit that its “airy dance” is no unapt comparison for the course of that frivolous and ephemeral creature, whether male or female, which is known as “a flirt.”

(1) With regard to the form, compare the term “flurt-silk,” i.e. “floret silke, cowrse silke” (Cotgrave, s.v. filoselle), from the French fleur (Ger. floret-seide), and so = “flowered” silk; likewise the heraldic term “crosse flurt” (Fuller, Church History, ii. 227-228, ed. Tegg), q.d. croix fleuretée, a flowered cross, “croix florencée” (Cotgrave).

A py3t coroune 3et wer þat gyrl, . . .
Wyth flurted flowre3 perfet ypon.
Alliterative Poems, p. 7, l. 208
(14th cent.).

(2) With regard to the meaning, in many languages an inconstant lover is compared to a bee or butterfly which flits lightly from flower to flower. See The Word-Hunter’s Note-Book, p. 35, seq.

The rose of old, they say, was white,
Till Love one day in wanton flight,
Flirting away from flower to flower,
A rose-tree brushed in evil hour.

Temple Bar Mag. No. cxxvi.
p. 285.

A gay insect in his summer-shine,
The fop, light-fluttering, spreads his mealy wings.

Thomson, Seasons, Winter.

The light Coquettes in Sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the fields of Air,
Pope, Rape of the Lock, l. 66.

And as for the bee
And his industry,
I distrust his toilsome hours;
For he roves up and down
Like a “man upon town,”
With a natural taste for flowers.

C. Lever, One of Them, ch. vii.

From a different point of view, a compliment or pretty love-speech is called in French une fleur, “Cidalise est jolie et souffire la fleur” (Le Roux, Dict. Comique, p. 270). Hence fleur, babiller, dire des riens (Littre).

FLORAMOR or Florimer, Fr. fleur d’amour, owes its name to its Latin appellation amaranthus being misunderstood as if compounded of amor, love, and anthus, flower (Prior).

FLOTILLA, a small fleet, is a Spanish word, dimin. form of flota, a fleet, akin to Fr. flotte (O. Fr. flote), flotter, to float, from Lat. fluctuare, to swim, fluctus, a wave. It was no doubt influenced by the really distinct words A. Sax. flota, a ship, Icel. floti, a raft, Dut. vloot (Skeat).

FLOWER, a Sussex word for floor, of which it is a corruption. Cf. Flower-bank and Floor-bank, an embankment at the foot of a hedge. Similarly in the French phrase à fleur de, on the same level, fleur seems to be corrupted from Ger. flur, Dut. vloer, our “floor” (Scheler).

Phylerno gettes Phylotus faste by the graie bearde, and by plaine force pulles hym doune on the flower.—Riche His Farewell (1581), p. 208 (Shaks. Soc.).

FLOWER ARMOUR, in Tusser, Five Hundred Pointes of Good Husbandrie, 1577, Flower armor in ed. 1580 (E. D. Soc. p. 95), a name for the plant amaranthus, is a corruption of FLORAMOR, which see.

FLUSH, in the sense of level, a carpenter’s term, has not been explained. It is perhaps only a softened form of Ger. flach, level, flat (= Greek plaw, a plain surface).

FLUSH, a Wiltshire word for fledged (E. D. Soc. Reprints, B. 19), is a perverted form of old Eng. flygge (Norfolk fligged), able to fly, from A. Sax. fliogan, to fly. They “arn ryght flygge and mery.”—Paston Letters, iv. 412.

Flygge, as bryddys. Maturus, volatilis.—Prompt. Parvulorum (c. 1440).

Prov. Eng. fliggurs, birds that can fly. Hence the slang term “fly,” knowing, wideawake, able to shift for oneself. Of the same origin, no doubt, is “a flush of ducks,” i.e. a flight; “to flush a covey,” to make it take wing (Sussex, to flight); and Shakespeare’s “as flush as May” (Hamlet, iii. 3) = full-blown, mature; Wilts fitch, pert, lively.

Fledge was used formerly where we would now use "fledged." George Herbert calls skeletons—

The shells of fledge souls left behinde.
The Temple, Death.

And says that pigeons—

Feed their tender offspring, crying,
When they are callow; but withdraw their food
When they are fledge, that need may teach them flying.

Providence.

To see the crisimore, by peep o' day, in his leet scrimp jerkin, like a bard that isn't flush.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship,
p. 26.

The birds have flushed and fled.—M. A.
Courtney, W. Cornwall Glossary, E. D. S.

Flee, astutus, calidus.—Levins, Munipulus, 46, 32.

FLUSHED, in such phrases as "flushed with success," "flushed with victory," as if heated, excited, so that the face is suffused by a flush of blood from the accelerated action of the heart, is really a corruption of the older expression fleshed, the metaphor being taken from the chase—dogs becoming more eager and excited when once they have tasted
the flesh of their prey. "The Hounds are flesh'd and few are sadd."—Old Ballad in Nares. Bailey gives "Flushed, Fleshed, encouraged, put in heart, elated with good success."
Similarly flusher, a provincial name for the shrike or butcher bird (Atki-son, Brit. Birds' Eggs, p. 31), must originally have been flesher, an old word for a butcher; cf. its names, Lat.
lanius (butcher), "murdering pie," Ger. neuntödter, it being a slaughterer of small birds.

Attiné, provoked, incensed, also fleshed or fastened on.—Cotgrave.

His whole troops
Exceed not twenty thousand, but old soldiers
Flesh'd in the spoils of Germany and France,
Inured to his command, and only know
To fight and overcome.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The False One,
i. 1.

The tyrant Ottoman . . . is fleshed in triumphs.—Glanville, Sermons [Latham].

So fleshment in Shakespeare for the elation or pride of victory.

[He] in the fleshment of this dread exploit
Drew on me here again.

King Lear, ii. 2, l. 130.

Although they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs.

Richard III. iv. 3, l. 6.

Full bravely hast thou flesh'd
Thy maiden sword.

1 Hen. IV. v. 4, l. 132.

He that is most fleshed in sin commits it not without some remorse.—Hales, Rem. p. 165 [Todd].

A prosperous people flushed with great victories.—Bp. Atterbury, Sermons [Latham].

Such things as can only feed his pride and flush his ambition.—South, ii. 104 [Todd].

Lo! I, myself, when flush'd with fight, or hot, . . .

Before I well have drunken, scarce can eat.
Tennyson, Idylls, Enid, l. 1508.

FODDER, food for cattle, is an altered form of food, A. Sax. fóða, confused perhaps with the cognate words, Icel.
fóðr, Ger. futter, which denote (1) a lining, (2) a quantity of hay, fodder.
Cf. Goth. fodr, a sheath, It. fodero, lining, a sheath, Dut. voeren, to line,
O. Fr. forre, (1) a sheath, case (Eng.
fur), (2) fodder (Eng. forage). Could the food of cattle possibly have been regarded as the lining of their stomachs, as the justice had his fair round paunch with good capon lined?

Theca, fodder. Coriti, hoge-fodder.—
Wright, Vocabularies (10th cent.), p. 41.

FOGLE, a slang word for a handkerchief—perhaps of University origin—seems to be merely an Anglicized form of Lat. focale, a neck-cloth (for faucale, from fauces, the jaws), on the model of slang ogle, an eye, = Lat. oculus, juggle = Lat. joculus.

The bird's-eye fogle round their necks has vanished from the costume of inn-keepers.—
A. Trollope, Can You Forgive Her, vol. i.
p. 96.

"If you don't take fogles and tickers— . . .
If you don't take pocket handkerchers and watches," said the Dodger, reducing his conversation to the level of Oliver's capacity,
"some other cove will."—C. Dickens, Oliver
Twist, ch. xviii.

FOLKSAL (Norfolk), the forward part of the vessel, where the sailors live; as if the sall or hall of the folk, for fore- castle (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1855, p.
32).

FOOL, in "gooseberry fool," it has often been said, is corrupted from the French fouler, to crush (Graham, Book about Words; Kettner, Book of the Table, p. 221; Sat. Review, Feb. 24, 1877, p. 243).

Fowler, however, It. follore, seems only to have been used for trampling or crushing with the feet, to throng, and not in the general sense of mashing or reducing to pulp. A parallel is nevertheless afforded in Fr. marc, the residuum of pressed fruits, which Scheler derives from marcher, and macaroni from maccare, to bruise or crush. So jam was probably at first fruit jammed or crushed, and then preserved.

Fall to your cheese-cakes, curds, and clouted cream,

Your fools, your flaws.

Ben Jonson, The Sad Shepherd, act i. sc. 2.

It. rauioli, a kinde of clouted creame or fofo.—Florio.

In the old cookery book, Liber Cure Cocorum, ab. 1440, fole (the old spelling of fool) occurs in the sense of a thin paste made of flour and water, e.g. in compounding a Crustate of flesshe the direction is given—

Fyrst make a fole trap [= dish] þou mun (p. 40, ed. Morris).

And for Tartlotes—

Make a fole of doghe, and close þis fast (p. 41).

It is probable that fool, like Fr. fou, fol, being applicable to anything light, frothy, or unsubstantial, was used specifically for a dish consisting of cream, &c., whipped into a froth,—food the reverse of solid and satisfying. We may compare with this vol-au-vent, originally vole et vaine, an idle empty thing; volé, light puff paste; soufflé, a dish made with eggs beaten into froth, &c., from souffler, to puff or blow; and our own trifle, moon-shine, and perhaps sillabub (Prov. Eng. sillybawk), as names for light sweet dishes. The primitive meaning of fool (Lat. folius) seems to be something puffed up or inflated like a foot-ball (The Word-Hunter's Note-Book, p. 209). Otherwise we might have supposed the word to have denoted a dish so delicious that it ensnared, or befooled one, into over-indulgence, like the Italian "Caccia sapiente ['wise-catcher'], a kinde of Custard or Deonshire white-pot or Lancashire foole."—Florio, 1611.

Footy, paltry, mean, contemptible, until recently only in provincial use, has no connexion with foot, as a would-be etymologist once imagined, comparing Lat. pe(d)ior and pe(d)s, as if low, base (A. R. Fausset, Hom. Iliad), is N. Eng. footy, poor, mean, East footry (Wright), Scot. footy, mean, also obscene, indecent; compare Scot. foutre, fouttour, a term of the greatest contempt, French foutu, a scoundrel, a fellow of small account, from foutre, to leacher (Cotgrave), Lat. futurere.

A foutre for thine office!

Shakespeare, 2 Hen. IV. v. 4, l. 120.

Mr. Atkinson, however, compares Swed. futtig, paltry (Cleveland Glossary, p. 197).

FORCED MEAT, stuffing, i.e. farced meat, from farce or force, to stuff or cram, Fr. farcer, Lat. farciare, to cram.

*Farcy*d, as metys. Farcitus.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Better, I wys, then Amadis de Gaule,
Or els the Pallas forced with Pleasure.

F. Thynne, Debate between Pride and Lowliness,
(ab. 1568), p. 67 (Shaks. Soc.).

Wit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 1, l. 63.

Force him with praises.

Ibid. ii. 3.

If this be the fruit of our life . . . to fill and farce our bodies, to make them shrines of pride . . . I know not well what to say to it.—Bp. Andrewes, XC Sermons, fol. p.
491.

Fors hit with powder of canel or gode
gynger.—Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 31 (1440).

Farse þo skyn and perboyle hit wele.—Id.
p. 26.

Furce thy lean ribs with hope, and thou wilt grow to Another kind of creature.

Massinger, Believe As You List, iii. 2.

FORCE, in the phrase "to force a lock," it has been supposed is a corruption of Fr. faulser, to pierce or break through (Wedgwood). Compare "Faulser les gonds, To force, or breake asunder, the hindges" (Cotgrave). At all events, Shakespeare uses forced as meaning "falsely imputed," = faulsé, forged, feigned. When Leonato disowns his child with the words, "Take up the bastard," Paulina rejoins,

For ever
Unvenerable be thy hands, if thou Takest up the princess by that forced base-
ness
Which he has put upon 't!
The Winter's Tale, ii. 3, l. 78.

FORGETFUL is by a mistaken analogy compounded with -ful, the original form being old Eng. forgitol; similarly swicful in Lazamon's Brut (ab. 1205) is for swicol, deceitful (Oliphant, Old and Mid. Eng. p. 247). Compares O. Eng. gifol, = Prov. Eng. givish, openhanded, the opposite of the old word griipple (Hall, Satires), griping, stingy, which must be from a form gripol; witol, knowing, sometimes corrupted to wit-all; etol, a glutton, &c.

Forget, O. Eng. forgitan, meant originally "to throw away," then to dismiss from memory, root gha(n)d, Lat. (pre-ghendo) (Sweet, Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 482).

Ten þing ben þe letten men of here scrifte
. . . . forgetelnesse, nutelnesse, recheles, shamfestnesse, &c.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 71 (12th cent.).

FORE-GO, to give up, a mistaken orthography of for-go, A. Sax. for-gan, from the false analogy of fore-run, fore-see, fore-know, fore-bode, &c., where fore is A. Sax. fore (= Ger. vor), before.

For-go, however, like for-bid, forbear, for-get, for-sake, contains the particle (A. S., Dan., Icel.) for, = Ger. ver. "Fleisch forgon oper visch (To forgo flesh or fish)." — Ancren Riwele, p. 8.

FOREIGN, spelt with g from a false analogy with words like reign, arraign, &c. The more proper form would have been forain or foran. Cf. Spanish forano, Fr. forain, Lat. foraneus, from foris, abroad. See SOVEREIGN. The brothers Hars used the form forein (Guesses at Truth), Chaucer foreyne. An intrusive g was formerly found in many other words, e.g. Gower writes atteigne, ordeigne, restreigne.

To be safe from the forreine enemy, from the wolfe abroad, is a very great benefit.—Bp. Andrewes, Of the Giving Casar his Due.

Forreiners may take aim of the ancient English Customs; the Gentry more floting after forrein fashions.—T. Fuller, The Holy and Profane State, p. 106 (1648).

Our modern word is perhaps, to some extent, a representative of old Eng. feorrene, distant, A. Sax. feorran, far away (from feorr, far), merged into the French word.

A king þet huuede one lefdi of feorrene londe.—Ancren Riwele, p. 388.

Ðær wæron manega wif feorran (There were many women afar off).—S. Matt. xxvii. 55 (A. Sax. Vers.).

So moche folc of furrene londe: þæt þu clipest herto.—Lives of Saints, S. Katherine, l. 20 (Philolog. Soc. 1858), ab. 1310.

FORE-SHORE. The first part of the word seems to be the Icelandic fjara, the ebb-tide, the beach, as in fjörü-borð, the sea-board (see Cleasby and Vigfusson, s.v.), Shetland florin, the sbh shore, Norweg. fjora (Edmonston, Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1866).

FOREYN, } a cess-pool or drain (Glos.

FOREINE, } sary of Architecture, Parker, is probably a derivative from Lat. forica (cf. Lat. foria, diarrhoea, Fr. foire), and assimilated to the old word foreine, as if a place without (foraneus). From forica comes also forakers, a cant term for the latrines at Winchester School.

In to a chambre forene þe gadelyng gaa wende, þæt kyng Edmond com ofte to, & in þe dunge þar
Hudde hym þere longe, þæt none man nas y war.

Robt. of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 310.

FOREMOST, so spelt as if denoting most (i.e. mo-est, superl. of mo), fore or forward, is a corrupt form of O. Eng. formest, foremeste (Maundeville), i.e. O. Eng. forme (A. S. forma), a superlative of fore, + -est, and so a pleonastic form (as if firstest, prmissimus). See Morris, Accidence, p. 109.

þere þe pres was perelouste he priked in formest.

William of Palerne, l. 1191, ab. 1340 (ed. Skeat).

FORM (pronounced förm, with the o as in no), (1) a long seat or bench, (2) a class of pupils (originally) occupying the same bench, has generally been recognized as identical with form (rhyming with storm), Lat. forma, a shape, figure, or model. They are kept separate, however, in the Promptorium Parvulorum (ab. 1440).

Forme, Forma.

Foorme, longe stole. Sponda.

And so in Bailey form and foorm. As Lat. forma, a model or rule (cf.

formula), corresponds to Sansk. dharma, an established rule, law, from the root dhar, to stand firm, so förm, old Fr. forme, Low Lat. forma, a choir stall or bench, in all probability corresponds to Greek thronus (for thor-nus), thrānos, thrēnos, a seat, bench, or stool, Lat. fōrus, a row of seats in the circus, all from the same root dhar, whence also Lat. firmus. Compare old Lat. formus, warm, = Gk. thermos; Lat. foris, = Gk. thúra, Sansk. dvār.

How drink gaed round, in cogs an' caups,
Among the furns and benches.

Burns, Poems, p. 18 (Globe ed.).

It would not as well become the state of the chamber to haue easye quilted and lyned forms and stools for the Lords and Ladies to sit on (which fashyon is now taken up in every marchawnts hall) as great plank forms that two yeomen can skant remove out of their places.—Sir J. Harington, Nugæ Antiquæ, vol. ii. p. 173.

FORSAKE, a compound of Eng. sake, A. Sax. sacan, to strive, for-sacan, to contend against, seems to have been assimilated in meaning to A. Sax. for-seccan, to for-say, deny (Ger. ver-sagen), refuse, and then in a secondary sense to renounce, give up, abandon.

S. Peter . . . departed leavyng behinde him myselfe,

Velvet Breeches, and this bricklayer who for-sooke to goe into Heaven because his wife was there.

Greene, Newes both from Heaven and Hell, 1593.

If a man me it axe,
Six sithes or seven,
I forsake it with othes.

Piers Plowman.

And who-so be chosen in offyce of Alderman, and he for-sake [i.e. refuse] ye offyce, he shal paie, to amendement of ye list, j. li. wax.—English Gilds, p. 103 (ed. Toulmin Smith).

Thou maist nat forsaken (= negare non possis).—Chaucer [in Richardson].

Spenser has the form to forsay as well as to forsake.

Her dalliance he despis'd, and follies did forsake.

Faerie Queene, Bk. II. vi. 21.

But shepheard must walke another way,
Sike worldly sovenance [= remembrance] he must forsay.

Shepheards Calender, Maye (Globe ed. p. 458).

Shepherdess bene forsoyd
From places of delight.

Id. Iulye (p. 467, l. 69).

FOUNDER, a N. Ireland word for a cold or catarrh, as "The boy has got a founder" (Patterson), is a corruption of Fr. morfondre, to catch cold, from morve, mucus, and fondre, to melt, cause to run. From the first part of the same word comes O. Eng. mur, a cold. So to founder (of a horse), to collapse, is Fr. se fondre, "to melt, waste, consume away, to sinke down on a sudden" (Cotgrave); Lat. fundere.

Fox, a term for a sword frequent in the Elizabethan dramatists, may perhaps be the French faux, faulx, Lat. falu, a "falchion."

Thou dy'st on point of fox.

Shakespeare, Hen. V. iv. 4.

William Sharp for bilboes, foxes, and Toledo blades.

The Famous History of Captain Thos. Stukely, l. 574 (1605).

O, what blade is't?

A Toledo, or an English Fox.

Webster, The White Devil, sub fin. (1612).

Fox, a cant term for to make, or become, drunk, perhaps akin to Fr. fausser, as if to disguise (?). Cf. also the French fausser, or faulser, to pierce or broach a cask, whence fauisset, a faucet for a hogshhead. Fuller uses fauxety for fauisseté (falsity) (Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary), with allusion to Guy Faux.

Dr. Thomas Pepys dined at my house . . . whom I did almost fox with Margate ale.—Oct. 26, 1660, Pepys' Diary (Bright's ed. vol. i. p. 205).

Malligo glasses fox thee.

Middleton, Span. Gipsy, iii. 1.

But as the humble tenant that does bring
A chick or eggs for 's offering,
Is ta'en into the butt'ry, and does fox
Equal with him that gave a stalled ox.

J. Jephson, Commendatory Verses to Lovelace's Poems.

Then fox me, & Ile fox thee;
then lets agree, & end this fray.

Percy Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 54, l. 43.

The sole contention who can drink most, and fox his fellow soonest.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, I. 2, ii. 2.

It is worth noting, however, that in Icelandic fox is a fraud or deception (Cleasby, 167), and perhaps to fox is to beguile or fuddle one. Fuzzed (= fuddled) is perhaps related.

FOXED. A print or book is said to be foxed, when the paper has become spotted or discoloured by damp. In Warwickshire the same term is applied to timber when discoloured by incipient decay. It is, no doubt, the same word as the West country foust, soiled, mouldy, and fast, to become mouldy, Scot. foze, the same. Compare fouse, a Craven form of foe. Fust is from O. Fr. justé, "fusty," originally smelling of the cask (just, from Lat. justis). "They stanke like justie barrells."—Nash, Pierce Penilesse, p. 33.

FOX-GLOVE. It might be argued with some plausibility that this is a corruption of folk's-glove, just as Fox-hull in Pepys' Diary (May 29, 1662), now Vauxhall, is a corruption of Fulke's Hall. The Digitalis, with its fingerlike flowers suggesting a glove, is considered sacred to the "good people" or fairy folks in most parts of the British Isles and Ireland; witness the names, Cheshire, Fairies' Petticoat; East Anglia, Fairy-thimble; N. Eng. Witches'-thimble; Irish, Fairy-cap, Fairy-bell, Fairy-weed, Fairy-glove. In Welch it is called menyg ellyllon, "fairy's gloves," bysedd y ellyllon, "fairy's-fingers," bysedd y cŵn, "dogs'-fingers." In Irish sidheann, from sidhe, a fairy, where sidheann, pronounced sheeann, the folks' plant, has a confusing resemblance to sinneach, or sionnach, pronounced shinnagh, the fox. Other Irish names are siothan-sleibhe (connected perhaps with siothachan, fairy), and nearacán, "thimble plant." Cf. also "Lady's-fingers," Ger. fingerhut, French gantès de notre dame; "gantée, the herb called Fox-gloves, our Ladies gloves" (Cotgrave), old Eng. wantelee, Cumberland and Yorks. Fairy-fingers, Whitby Fox-fingers; Low Lat. cirotecaria, from Gk. cheirothéké, a glove.

See The Gardener's Chronicle, July 15, 1876, p. 67; Lady Wilkinson, Weeds and Wild Flowers; Joyce, Irish Names of Places, 2nd Ser. p. 311; Hunt, Romances and Drolls of the West of England, vol. i. p. 127; Crofton Croker, Legends of Killarney, p. 14; Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names, E. D. Soc., p. 173; Cockayne, Leechdoms, Wortcunning and Starcraft, vol. iii. Glossary.

The old English form Fowes glofa (Cockayne, Leechdoms, &c., vol. i. p. 266) shows that the obvious meaning is, after all, the correct one.

Buglosse, foxes glofa.—Wright, Vocabularies (11th cent.), p. 67.

The Norwegian name is rev-bielle, "fox-bell." Fox's glove is not a more whimsical name for the digitalis than cuckoo's breeches in French for the cowslip (brayes de cocu), and cuckoo's boots in Welsh for the wild hyacinth (bwtias y gog).

FOX'S PAW, TO MAKE A, is quoted by Mr. Schele de Vere (Studies in English, p. 205), as a provincial phrase, and explained to be a corruption of Fr. faire un faux pas. I cannot find it mentioned elsewhere, and his other inaccuracies and mistakes, even on the same page, would render his authority for this assertion very desirable.

FRACTIOUS, peevish, unmanageable, bears a deceptive resemblance to Lat. fractus, broken, weak, Shakespeare's fracted, fracture, &c. It is, no doubt, the same word as Prov. Eng. fratched, restive (Wright), Cleveland fratch, to quarrel, or squabble angrily (Atkinson), old Eng. "fracchyñ [to creak] as newe cartys, al. frashin."—Prompt. Parv. (so Skeat, Etym. Dict.). Cf. perhaps Scot. frate, to chafe by friction, O. Eng. freat, to scold.

FRAME, in the following passage of the Authorized Version is probably generally understood as meaning "He could not shape his lips so as to pronounce it rightly," as if an unusual use of frame, A. Sax. fremman, to make, do, effect.

He said Sibboleth; for he could not frame to pronounce it right.—Judges, xii. 6.

The real meaning is "He could not succeed, was not able, to pronounce it right," O. Eng. and Scot. frame, to succeed, A. Sax. fremian, to profit, "Hwæt fremað énegum menn" [What profiteth it any man].—S. Matt. xvi. 26. Cf. Icel. frenja, to further. Both fremian and fremman are from fram, strong, good, freme, useful (Ettmüller, p. 370), hit, to further or put forward (fram).

In the Leicestershire dialect frame, to contrive or manage to do a thing, is still in use; e.g., "A cain't freem to dew noothink as a'd ought."—Evans, Glossary, p. 154 (E. D. S.).

Framynge, or afframynge, or wynnyng. Lucrum, Emolumentum.—Promptorium Parvulorum.

When they came to the Shaw burn,

Said he, "Sae weel we frame,

I think it is convenient

That we should sing a psalm.

Battle of Philiphaugh, ll. 13-16 (Child's Ballads, vol. vii. p. 133).

"Well, how's that colt o' yours likely to turn out? Wheea! 't frames weel." The new servant "frames well," when appearing likely to fill her place well.—Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 199.

In the following the word is different:

He could well his glozing speaches frame.

Spenser, F. Queene, III. viii. 14.

His wary speech

Thus to the empyreal minister he framed.

Milton, Par. Lost, v. 460.

FRATERY, } an old word for the re-
FRATRY } factory of a monastery
(see Tyndal, Works, ii. 98, Grindal, Works, 272, Parker Soc. Edd.), as if the common-room of the brotherhood (fratres), is a corruption of freitour, or "freytoure" (Prompt. Parv.), O. Fr. refretoir, Low Lat. refectorium. Cf. fermary for infermary. "Frater-house, or Fratour, the refectory or hall in a monastery" (Wright).

See Skeat, Notes to Piers the Plowman, p. 97.

Similarly Fr. frairie, an old word for a feast or repast (e.g. "Un loup étant de frairie."—La Fontaine) has been misunderstood as another usage of frairie, a confraternity met together for purposes of festivity (Chéruef, Dictionnaire Historique des Institutions, tom. i. p. 452).

A frayter or place to eate meate in, refectorium.—Withal, Dictionary, ed. 1603, p. 250.

Freres in here freitour shulle fynde þat tyme Bred with-oute heggynge.

Langland, Vision of Piers the Plowman, Pass. VI. l. 17+, text C.

Where so ever sum eate, a serten kepe the froyter.—Bale, Kynge Iohan, p. 27 (Camden Soc.).

Fermery and fraitur with fele mo houses.

Pierce Ploughmans Crede, l. 212 (ed. Skeat).

Concernynge the fare of their froyter,

I did tell the a fore partly.

But then they have gest chambers,
Which are ordained for strangers.

Rede me and be nott wrothe, 1523, p. 85 (ed. Arber).

The words "Refectory" and "Fratry" or "Frater House"—"domus in qua fratres una comedunt in signum mutui amoris"—are practically synonymous. Indeed "Fratry" was at one time the more popular designation in England, though Carlisle is probably the only place where it has survived the crash of the Dissolution. So obsolete, in fact, has the term become, that it's very meaning has been forgotten.—Saturday Review, vol. 51, p. 267.

FRECKLE, so spelt as if a dimiu. form of freak, a streak, like speckle, spangle, &c., is an altered form of O. Eng. frecken (Palsgrave, 1530), frakne (Chaucer), frakine (Prompt. Parv.); and so in the cognate languages, Swed. fräkne, Icel. fræknur. We may perhaps cf. A. Sax. fräcnness, turpitude, a disfigurement (Ettmüller, p. 365). "A Fræken, neutus."—Levins, Manipulus, 1570, 60, 46.

FREE, frequently in old Eng. used of ladies in the sense of lovely, amiable, noble, esp. in the combination "fair and free," "feyr and fre," and often applied to the Virgin Mary, as in the carol "When Christ was born of Mary free," is perhaps a distinct word from free, at liberty (= Goth. freis). Its congeners seem to be A. Sax. freeo, a fair woman, O. Sax. frī, Lombard. freea, a lady, Frigg, the Northern Venus, Freyia (cf. Ger. frau, Thorpe, N. Mythology, i. 33); also A. Sax. freá, lord, Goth. fraujja (Ettmüller, p. 371, Dieffenbach, Goth. Sprache, p. 398). Confirmatory are Scot. freea, a lady, fre, beautiful, frely, a beautiful woman, Icel. frī, a lover, Dan. frier, a wooer, Icel. frjá, to pet, Goth. frijon, to love, Sansk. pri, to love or please.

She is fayr and she is fre.

Havelok the Dane, l. 2876.

The maid fre, that bere the [Jesus]

So swetlich under wede.

Reliquiæ Antiquæ, vol. ii. p. 193.

Ysonde men calleth that fre,

With the white hand.

Sir Tristrem, p. 179 (ed. Scott), ab. 1250.

þis maiden is suete ant fre [= noble] of blod, briht & feyr, of milde mod.

Böddeker, Alteng. Dichtungen, p. 218, l. 7.

Menskul maiden of myght,

feir ant fre to fonde.

Id. p. 168, l. 8.

For first whan þe fre was in þe forest fownde
in his denne,
In comely cloþes was he clad for any kinges sone.

William of Palerne, l. 505 (ed. Skeat).

FREEBOOTER, Ger. freiweiber, Dan. fribytter, Dutch vrijwiter, are supposed to be corruptions of the It. fibustiero, American fibuster, from the Spanish fibóte, Icelandic fley (fley-bátr ?), a swift ship, a "fly-boat." Vid. Cleasby, Icelandic Dict. s. v. Fley, p. 160. Compare O. Fr. fribustier (Scheler), Fr. fibustier, O. Eng. fibustier, a pirate or buccaneer, fibuster.

De Quincey using the word fibustier remarks that in the United States Journals it is always written fillibusters. He adds incorrectly, Written in whatsoever way, it is understood to be a Franco-Spanish corruption of the English word freebooter.—Works, vol. i. p. 6.

FREED-STOOL, a seat near the altar in churches to which offenders fled for sanctuary (Bailey, Wright), so spelt perhaps from the idea that they were there freed from punishment, is a corrupted form of A. Sax. frið-stól, "seat of peace," an asylum (Chron. Saxon, 1006).

Fuller says that on the church of St. John of Beverley, Athelstan "bestowed a freed-stool with large privileges belonging thereunto."—Church Hist. II. v. 9. (see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v.). Spelman says that the inscription on this seat was, "Haec sedes lapidea Freedstol dicitur. i. Pacis cathedra."—Glossarium, p. 298 (1626).

Similarly free-board, a strip of land outside the fence of an estate only partially belonging to the proprietor, sometimes spelt frith-bord, must originally have been "a border of peace," frið, a neutral territory.

FREE-MARTIN, the name given in many parts of England to a female calf of twins, when the other is a male; such an animal being regarded as barren, and I believe with good reason. Free here seems to be a contracted form of ferry seen in Scotch ferry-cow, one not in calf. Compare Scotch ferow, not carrying a calf (cf. A. Sax. feor, Icel. farri, a bullock). Martin is the same word as Scotch mart, a cow or ox, so called from being usually slaughtered at Martinnas for winter provision, Ir. mart; cf. Mod. Gk. martí, a fatted sheep for the festival of San Martino.

FREE-MASON, a word first found, it is said, in a document dated 1896, "Lathomos vocatos fremaceons," i. e. "stonecutters called freemasons," is regarded by some (G. F. Fort, Early Hist. and Antiquities of Freemasonry, pp. 189, seqq.; Schele de Vere, Studies in English) as a contracted form of frere-maçon, a brother-mason, a term constantly used in the Order. Fr. franc-maçon, Ger. frei-maurer, &c., are late formations, prob. borrowed from the English; but an early instance of frere-maçon is a desideratum. In the Journal de l'avocat Barbier, Mars, 1737, it is said "Nos seigneurs de la cour ont inventé tout nouvellement, un ordre appelé des frimassons, à l'exemple de l'Angleterre" (Chéruel, Dict. Historique des Institutions, s. v. Sociétés Secrètes).

The Company of Masons, otherwise call'd Free Masons, were us'd to be a loving Brotherhood for many ages; yet were they not regulated to a society, till Hen. 4. Their arms sable, on a cheuron between 3 castles argent, a pair of compasses of the first.—J. Howell, Londinopolis, p. 44 (1654).

FRENCH, a Scotch corruption of finch, a small bird, as bull-french, green-french, gowd-french.

FRENCH DISEASE, probably a mis-translation of galle (a skin disease), gal-leux, &c., as if identical with Gallus. Cf. French crown, Nares.

FRENCSICKE, in Levins, Manipulus Vocabulorum, 1570, 121, l. 23 (glossed phreneticus), as if compounded with sick, is a corrupt form of frenzie, fransical = mad (see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v. v.), O. Eng. "Frenesy, sekenesse, Frenesis, mania."—Prompt. Parv. Lat. Greek, phrenēsis, disorder of the phrēn, or senses.

FRESHER, a small frog (Norfolk): From O. Eng. frosche, frosshe (Wycliffe), Ger. frosch, Dan. frosk (a frog). "Froke, or frosche, Rana" (Pr. Parv.).

I thought by this a lyknesse whiche hier a fore tyme byfille to the frosshis.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox, p. 37 (ed. Arber).

FRESH-WOLD, } the Cleveland form of FRESH-WOOD, } threshold, i. e. thresh- wold, A. Sax. þers-wald, þersc-wold

(Atkinson). Wycliffe has freafoold (Zeph. i. 9). Compare O. Eng. fursti = thirsty.

FRET, a stop on the handle of a stringed instrument, orig. a thin metal band, is no doubt the same word as O. Fr. frete, for ferette, dimin. of fer, an iron. So fret, to corrode or eat away, is a contracted form of for-eat (see Skeat, Etym. Dict., s. v. v.), and Ger. frett of ferret.

FRIEZE, in architecture, the part of the entablature between the architrave and cornice, has often been confounded with frieze, coarse cloth (so Cotgrave, Diez). There can be little doubt that the orig. meaning was an ornamental band (of sculptured work, &c.), and that the word is identical with Fr. freze, a ruff, O. Span. freso, "a kind of fringe or silke lace, or such like to set on a garment" (Minsheu), Ital. friso, fregio, a fringe, lace, border, an embroyderie or any ornament and garnishing about clothes; also a wreath, crowne or chaplet (Florio), a variety of frigio, a kind of worke in Architecture, also a kind of tune or melodie (Id.). There is little doubt that these Italian words are from Lat. phrygius, meaning embroidered, also applied to certain stirring strains of music. The Phrygians appear to have been celebrated for their skill in embroidery, as Plautus uses phrygio = embroiderer (It. frigione). Moreover in Low Lat. phrygium and phrysum were used for an embroidered border.

As for Embroyderie it selfe and needle-work, it was the Phrygians inuention: and hereupon embroyderers he called in Latine Phrygiones.—Holland, Plinies Nat. History, vol. i. p. 228 (1634).

FRINGES. "Riding the fringes," a phrase once used in Dublin, is a corruption of "Riding the franchises," a custom formerly observed by the Corporation (Irish Pop. Superstitions, p. 34).

FRISKET, "an unrecorded word" (Grosart) in Sir John Davies' Entertainment of Q. Elizabeth at Harefield (Works, vol. ii. p. 246), is most probably a frog, a diminutive of old Eng. frosk, A. Sax. frosk, frox (Icel. froskr, O. H. Ger. frosk, Ger. frosch). See FRESHER.

Yesternight the chatting of the pyes and the ohirkinge of the frisketts did foretell as much [viz., the coming of strangers].—Op. cit.

The word was apparently conformed to frisk, to leap.

So can þor up swilc froskes here.

[Then came there up such host of frogs.]

Genesis and Exodus, l. 2969 (ab. 1250).

FRISKY, in Meadow Frisky, a Suffolk name for the plant festuca pratensis, is a corruption of fescue. (Britten and Holland.)

FRIZZLE, a Scotch word for a steel to strike fire from a flint, and for the hammer of a gun or pistol, as if to burn up quickly as hair does in the fire, seems to be a corruption of the synonymous Fr. fusil (Jamieson).

FROG, a part of a horse's foot, "a Frush on a Horse's foot" (Bailey), "Frush, the tender Part of a Horse's Heel, next the hoof" (Id.). Frog here is a corruption of old Eng. frush (for fursh, forg), the forked part, Fr. fourche, fourchette, from Lat. furca, a fork, It. forchetta, "a disease in a horse called the running frush" (Florio). Compare for the form of the word, frogon, a prov. word for a poker (Wright), Lincolnshire fruggin, = Fr. fourgon, an Oven-fork, (Cotgrave), It. forcone, a great fork. For the meaning compare Ger. gabel, (1) a fork, (2) a horse's frog. And yet, curious to observe, the Greek word, bátrachos, a frog, denotes (1) the reptile, (2) a part of a horse's foot.

Sfettonare is by Grisoni taken for the opening or cutting of the frush of a horse away.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

Frog (of a horse): frush :: frog (the reptile): Ger. frosch (cf. Prov. Eng. fresher, a young frog).

The Frush is the tenderest part of the hooe towards the heele, called of the Italians Fettone, and because it is fashioned like a forked head, the French men cal it Furchette, which word our Ferrers, either for not knowing rightly how to pronounce it, or else perhaps for easinesse sake of pronunciation, do make it a monasillable, & pronounce it the Frush.—Topsell, History of Foure-footed Beasts, p. 416, 1608.

FROG, an embroidered ornament on a coat or frock, seems to have been originally a frock- or frog-ornament. Compare

Froge, or froke, munkys abyte, Flocus.—Prompt. Parvulorum (1440).

Low Lat. frocus and flocus, a long garment.

He is none of your second-rate riding-masters in nankeen dressing-gowns, with brown frogs, but the regular gentleman attendant on the principal riders.—C. Dickens, Sketches by Boz, p. 72 (ed. 1877).

FRONTER, a Scottish term for a ewe in her fourth year, is contracted from four-winter (A. Sax. feower-wintera, quadriennis). Similarly frundel, a North country word for a measure of two pecks (Bailey), also spelt frundele, furundel, is for fourthen-deal or furthindele (A. Sax. feorðan dæl), the fourth part (? of a bushel), like halfendeal and eytendele.

Compare Scot. gimmer, a one year old lamb, Icel. gymbr, Welsh gafr, a one-year old goat, from gam (ghiam), O. Welsh gaem, winter (= hiems, Greek cheimōn), (Rhys, Welsh Philology, p. 432); Gk. chimaïra, orig. a winterling goat; Prov. Eng. quinter (for twinter, i.e. two-winter), Lincoln's. twinty, a sheep of two winters; Frisian, enter, and twinter, a colt of one, and two, winters old; Lat. bimus, trimus, for bihimus, tri-himus, two and three winters old (hiems).

FRONTISPIECE, so spelt as if to denote the piece that fronts a book, is a corrupt form of Old Eng. frontispice, Fr. frontispice, Lat. frontispicium, from frons and aspicio, the front of a building.

The Windows also and the Balcone's must be thought on, there are shrewd books, with dangerous Frontispices set to sale.—Milton, Arcopagitica, 1644 (ed. Arber, p. 50).

What can be expected from so lying a frontispice, but suitable falshoods?—Fuller, Mixt Contemplations.

Such, both for Stuff, and for rare artifice,
As might heseem som royall Frontispice.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 464 (1621).

The word in German is sometimes popularly corrupted into frontenspitze, as if from spitze, a head or point.

Similarly the preface is not, as might be imagined, the fore-face to the book, but the fore-speech, A.-Sax. fore-spéc, Lat. præ-fatium, what is said beforehand to the reader.

FROWN, always used now with the specific meaning "to knit the brows or wrinkle the forehead" (Bailey), as if akin to frounce, Fr. frons le front, to frown or knit the brows (Cotgrave), Le francis du sourcil, the knitting of the eyebrows (Id.), Sp. fruncir las cejas, to frown, corresponding to a Lat. frontiare, to contract the forehead (frons). Wright (Prov. Dict.) gives frounce, a frown or wrinkle; "With that sche *frounce*th up the brow" (Gower); "Frownynge, Fruncacio, rugacio" (Prompt. Parvulorum). Etymologists, however, are unanimous in identifying the word with Fr. (re-)frogner, (re-)frongner, to look stullen, frown, It. (in-)frigno, frowning, Lombard. frignare, make a wry face, whine, Prov. Swed. fryna, Norway. fröyna, the same (Diez, Scheler, Skeat).

He seeth her front is large and pleine
Withoute frounce of any greine.

Gower, Confessio Amantis, vol. iii.
p. 27 (ed. Pauli).

Some frounce their curled heare in courtly guise.

Spenser, F. Queene, I. iv. 14.

FULMERDE, an old name for the polecat, O. Eng. fulmarde, so spelt as if compounded of O. Eng. ful, foul, and Fr. merde, dung, filth (Lat. merda), with allusion to its offensive smell, and so actually understood sometimes (e.g. Smiles, Life of a Scotch Naturalist, p. 116), is an incorrect form of foumart, fulmart, which "are contractions of foul martin, a name applied to it in contradistinction to the sweet martin on account of its disgusting odour" (Bell, History of British Quadrupeds).

For þe fox and þe foulmert þai ar botht fals.
Bernardus, De Cura Rei Familiaris,
p. 20, l. 74.

In the churchwardens' accounts of the parish of Kendal for the year 1666, among the various sums paid for the heads of vermin are twopence for that of a "foulmart," and fourpence for that of a "cleanmart" (Transactions of the Cumberland and Westmoreland Antiq. and Archaeolog. Society, 1877).

Foumart therefore is not compounded with Fr. fovine, the foine or beechmartin (Cotgrave), Lat. fagina (Wedgwood, Morris).

þe fox & þe fulmarde to þe fryth wyndeš.
Alliterative Poems, p. 52, l. 534.

On the nighte tyme . . . nyghtecrowes and poulcattes, foxes and foumerdes, with all other vermine and noysome beastes, vse mooste styringe.—R. Ascham, Toxophilus, 1545, p. 52 (ed. Arber).

Have you any rats or mice, polecats or weasels?

Or is there any old sowes sick of the measles? I can destroy fulners and catch moles.

The Marriage of Witt and Wisdome, p. 39 (Shaks. Soc.).

A Fulmare, martes.—Levins, Manipulus, 1570, 28, 47.

FULSOME, a word generally used now only of flattery or praise, in the sense of gross, extravagantly overdone, is given by almost every dictionary as another form of foul-some, from A. Sax. fúl, foul, impure. It is probably, however, the same word as Old Eng. folthsumm, which appears in Orminn (about 1200) in the sense of compliant, and this I take to be a derivative of A. Sax. folgian, to follow, folzhenn in Orminn; the original meaning then would be follow-some, fawning, imitative, apish like a parasite. Compare

*Folwyng*e of manerys or condycyons, Imitacio.
Prompt Parv.

Similar words are humoursome and bowom (= bow-some), apt to humour or bow to the wishes of another.

When Shylock describes Jacob's fraud upon Laban, he says the skilful shepherd peeled certain wands and Stuck them up before the fulsome ewes.

The word here makes best sense when understood as meaning "sequacious," apt to follow where led, ready to imitate or copy [sc. in their offspring] what is set before them [viz. the parti-coloured rods]. Merchant of Venice, i. 3, l. 88.

There is no doubt, however, that at an early period the word was understood as a compound of full, e.g. the Promptorium Parvulorum has "Fulsomesse of mete, sacietas," and Golding in his Ovid renders pleno ubere by "fulsome dug[s]." This tart is swate and fulsome [= cloying].

M. A. Courtney, W. Cornwall Glossary, E. D. S.

And so in old English—

Ʒe vii fulsum geres fareu [the seven abundant years pass].—Genesis und Exodus (ab. 1250), l. 2153.

We ben as fulsom i-founde · as þouȝ we fed were.

Alexander and Dindimus, l. 497 (ab. 1340).

In hals

Carthusian fasts and fulsome Bacchanals
Equally I hate. Meane's blest.

Dr. Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 130
(Satire II.).

His lean, pale, hoar, and withered corpse grew fulsome, fair, and fresh.—Golding-Trench, Select Glossary].

Later writers seem generally to have connected the word with foul (A. Sax. fúl). Thus Bp. Hackett says, some "to prove that everything without Faith is fulsom and odious," reported the unbelieving Jews to be "nasty smelling" (Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 805; and so Bp. Hall, who in his Occasional Meditation, cxxviii., "On a flower-de-luce," says, "This flower is but unpleasingly fulsome for scent" (1634, Works, xi. 172, Oxford ed.).

Fulsome, foedus.—Levins, Manipulus, 1570, 162, l. 9.

The worst [air] is . . . where any carcases or carrion lyes, or from whence any stinking fulsom smell comes.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, l. 2, ii. v. (p. 157, ed. 16th).

But one poor walk . . .

So fulsome with perfumes that I am fear'd,
My brain doth sweat so, I have caught the plague!

B. Jonson, Every Man out of His Humour, ii. 2 (p. 43).

They [the Jews] have a kind of fulsome scent, no better than a stink.—Howell, Letters, Bk. I. 6, xiv. (1633).

Scot. fowsum is used with both meanings, (1) rather too large, luscious (full), (2) filthy, nauseous (foul).

FUMITORY, the name of the fumaria officinalis, so spelt as if having the same termination as pellitory, territory, factory, promontory, refectory, oratory, dormitory, is corrupted from Fr. fumitorre, "earth-smoke," Lat. fumus terre, it being an old belief that this plant was generated without seed from the fumes or vapours rising from the earth (see Prior, s.v.). Compare godhūma, a Sanskrit word for wheat, literally the smoke or incense of the earth.

Another corruption is It. fummo-sterno.

FUND, a sum of money set apart for a certain purpose, a store or supply of anything, The Funds, Government Stock paying interest, the same word as Fr. fond, "A Merchants Stock, whether it be money, or money worth." The word, both in French and English, has been generally regarded as a derivative of Lat. fundus, an estate, land as a permanent source of income, the foundation of wealth.

Fond, a merchant's stock, however, is plainly a contraction of old French fondegue, a merchant's ware-house or storehouse (Cotgrave), also spelt fondique, fondic, = It. fondaco, Span. fundago, a storehouse, Portg. alfandega, a custom-house, all which are from the Arabic fondûq, a house to receive strange merchants, a depôt or hostelry. The Arabic word itself comes from the Greek pandocheion ("the all-receiver"), an inn (Devic), or pandokeion, adopted in the later Hebrew as pûndaq (Mishna). Thus fund, stock, Fr. fond, has only an accidental resemblance to fond, land, Lat. fundus, to which it has been assimilated.

FURBELOW, a corruption of Fr. falbala ("un volant"), Ger. falbel, Sp. farfala, a founce, and akin to Fr. fariboles, flim-flams, nonsense, Eng. fallal, It. farfalla, a butterfly, &c.

See the quotation from The Spectator, under FARTHINGALE. The word is said to have been invented in the 17th century by M. de Langlée, marshal of the King's armies (Chéruel, Dictionnaire des Institutions, s. v. Falbala).

Compare "Flounces, feathers, fallals, and finery."—Thackeray (see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, p. 231).

FURLOUGH, a soldier's leave of absence, is (as Bailey noted) a corruption of Dutch ver-lof (= for-leave); cf. Dan. forlov, Ger. verlaub. When first introduced the word was probably pronounced "furlof," and spelt furlough, from analogy to cough, trough, &c. The written word then being more common came to be mistakenly pronounced furlow as at present. Words like cough have undergone great changes of pronunciation, e. g. "Hic tussis, the cove."—Wright, Vocabularies (15th cent.), p. 267; "Rowghe, al. row, Hispidus."—Prompt. Parv.

Cf. W. Cornwall, broft = brought, boften = bought; Prov. Eng. dafter = daughter, &c. "Whoso him bethoft! Inwardly and oft."—Old Epitaph in J. Taylor's Holy Dying, ch. iii. 9, 6.

FUSS-BALL, } the name of a well-FUZZ-BALL, } known fungus (Lycoperdon), is not so called from the fine dust or fuzzy matter which it contains, but is a corruption of O. Eng. fis, a blowing, fizz, feist, foist, = Fr. vesse. Cf. vesse de loup, "The dusty, or smoakie Toad-stoole, called a Fusse-ball, Puckfusse, Bull-fyste, Puffyste, Wolves-fyste."—Cotgrave. See BULFIST.

The latter part of puck-fusse is identical with the first part of fuzz-ball.

Puffes Fistes are commonly called in Latine Lupi Crepitus, or Woolfes Fistes; in Italian Vescie de Lupo; in English Puffes Fistes, & Fusseballs in the north.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1386 (1597).

A little just-ball pudding standes
By; yett not blessed with his handes.
Herrick, Poems, p. 471 (ed. Hazliit).

G.

GABRIEL HOUNDS, the name given in the Northern counties of England to a yelping sound heard in the air at night, resembling somewhat the cry of hounds, and believed to portend death or calamity. In Leeds this phenomenon is called gabble-retchet, and is held to be the souls of unbaptized children flitting restlessly around their parents' abode (Henderson, Folklore of the N. Counties, p. 99.). The Devonshire word is Wish-hounds (or Odin's Hounds), Cornish Dandy-dogs (Kelly, Indo-European Tradition, p. 281; Hunt, Drolls, &c., of W. England, p. 150), Welsh Cwm Anwm, Hell Hounds; cf. Dan. Helrakker, of the same meaning. The noise in question is undoubtedly the cry of a flock of wild geese passing overhead.

The old English word for the weird sound was Gabrielle rache, or Gabriel ratches, rache or ratche being a hound (A. Sax. ræcce), and Gabriel being a corrupted form for an old word gabaren, a corpse, the whole, therefore, signifying a corpse-hound (= Dan. liighund, cf. O. Eng. lich fowle). "Lyche, dede body, Funus, gabares . . . in Gabriel dicit [?] dicitur] gabaren, vel gabbaren."—Prompt. Parvulorum. See an excellent note in Mr. Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary, p. 203, where he quotes Gabbaræ vel Gabbares, dried corpses or mummies, from Facciolati. S. Augustine says that the Egyptians call their mummies Gabbaras (Serm. c. 12), and Wilkinson observes that the word still used for a tomb in Egypt is gabr, or gobber (Ancient Egyptians, iii. p. 462).

However, Gabriel is, according to the Rabbins, the angel of death for the people of Israel whose souls are entrusted to his care. The Talmud describes him as the spirit that presides over Thunder. (Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction, p. 143.)

He the seven hirds hath seen, that never part,
Seen the Seven Whistlers in their nightly rounds,

And counted them: and oftentimes will start—
For overhead are sweeping GABRIEL'S

HOUNDS

Doomed with their impious Lord, the flying Hart

To chase for ever, on aerial grounds!

Wordsworth, Poems of the Imagination,
Pt. II. xxix.

In an old list of Colliers' "Signes and Warnings" was one:

If Gabriel's hounds ben aboute doe no worke that daye.

Dr. Plott mentions a noise he heard in the air which he judged to be a flight of wild geese; but the miners at that time (1650) judged it to be caused by the hounds of the angel Gabriel.—Cassell's Magazine, vol. ii. p. 126 (New Series).

This wild cry is in some parts of Yorkshire regarded as a warning of approaching death.

Oft have I heard my honoured mother say:
How she hath listened to the Gabriel Hounds—
Those strange, unearthly, and mysterious sounds

Which on the ear through murkiest darkness fell;

And how, entranced by superstition's spell,
The trembling villager not seldom heard
In the quaint notes of the nocturnal bird,
Of death premonished, some sick neighbour's knell.

John Holland.

See Monthly Packet, vol. xxiv. p. 126.

GAD-FLY has generally been considered another form of goad-fly, from A. Sax. gād, a goad. However, that compound is not found in the oldest English; it may very probably be the same word as gand-fluga, the Icelandic name of the insect, the loss of n in a word being of frequent occurrence, as in goose for gans, tooth for tonth. Gand-fluga itself is synonymous with Icel. galdra-fluga, i. e. the witch-fly or fly-fiend, such as the æstrus that persecuted the bovineform Io in the Prometheus Vincetus.

GADLING, an idle person (Bailey), as if a vagrant or vagabond, one who goes gadding about (cf. goadabout, Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary), is old Eng. gadeling, a companion or comrade, A. Sax. gæd-eling, from gæd, society, company.

A luper gadeling was ys sone, bope at one rede.

Robt. of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 310
(ed. 1810).

þou shalt hauen a gadeling,
Ne shalt þou hauen non oþer king.

Havelok the Dane, l. 1122.

GAD so! I think I have met this form of trivial oath in some of the older dramatists, as if a disguised form of "So help me God!"

It is probably a corrupted form of O. Eng. catso, a low term of reproach, It. cazzo, a petty oath (Florio), and so a remnant of the phallic abjuration of the evil eye, like the vulgar Spanish carajo!

Mal. Lightning and thunder!

Pietro. Vengeance and torture!

Mal. Catso!

Webster, The Malcontent, i. 1 (1604).

An Hebrew born, and would become a Christian:

Cazzo, diavolo!

Marlowe, The Jew of Malta, iv. 1 (1633).

GAINAGE, all plough tackle and implements in husbandry (Bailey), GAINERY, tillage or husbandry, the profits thence arising (Id.), is the French gagnage, pasturage, pasture-land, from O. Fr. gaigner, It. guadagnare, and these from O. H. Ger. weidenon, to pasture. These words bear no connexion with gain, profit, Icel. gagn. (See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v. Gain.)

GAINLY, graceful, elegant, suitable, O. Eng. gain, now only used in the negative word ungainly, so spelt as if connected with gain, as we say that anything attractive gains upon one, or is winning. It is identical with Icel. gegn (Swed. gen, Dan. gen), serviceable, ready, kindly, (of a road) short (as in N. Eng.). Cf. Prov. Eng. gain, handy, convenient; gainsome (Massinger).

þat art so gaynly a god & of goste mylde.

Alliterative Poems, p. 57, l. 728
(ed. Morris).

To whom god hade geuen alle þat gayn were.
Id. p. 44, l. 259.

GAIT, a person's manner of walking, formerly always spelt gate, generally understood as the way he gaeth or goeth (Richardson), Scot. "gae your own gait," has no connexion with the verb to go. Gate, a manner or way, orig. a path, street, or entrance (Icel. gata, Goth. gatwo), is that by which one gets, or arrives, at a house or place, from A. Sax. gitan, to get or arrive at (Skeat). Cf. old Eng. "Get, or maner of custome, Modus, consuetudo."—Prompt. Parv.; "Get, or gyn' (or gyle), Machina." (Id.)

Him thought he rode al of the newe get.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, Prologue, l. 684.

Good gentlemen, go your guit, and let poor volk pass.

King Lear, iv. 6, l. 242.

All the griesly Monsters of the See Stood gaping at their gate, and wondered them to see.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, III. iv. 32.

She hadna ridden a mile o' gate,
Never a mile but ane.

Sir Roland, l. 30 (Child's Ballads, vol. i. p. 225).

They beare their bodies vpright, of a stately gate, and elated countenance.—G. Sandys,
Travels, p. 64.

A man's attire, and excessive laughter, and gait, shew what he is.—A. V. Eccclus. xix. 30.

An' may they never learn the gaets
Of ither vile wanrestfu' pets!

Burns, Poor Maillie, p. 33
(Globe ed.).

GALDRAGON, a Scotch word for a sibyl or prophetess, has nothing to do with a dragon—as had the ancient sorceress Medea—but is a corrupted form of Icelandic galdra-kona, a witch (lit. a sorcery-woman), from galdr, A. Sax. gealdor, song, charm, witchcraft (Cleasby).

GALE, a well-known word in Ireland for rent due, or the payment of rent, is a contracted form of O. Eng. gavel, which is also spelt gabel, A. Sax. gafol, Fr. gabelle, It. gabella, all apparently from the Celtic. Cf. Ir. gabhaíl, a taking, Gaelic gabhaíl, a lease, tenure, or taking, from gabh, to take or hold;
Welsh gafael.

He seyh þat he is godes sune, and is a ded-lich mon,

And he vor-head cesares gaul [= tribute].
Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 46, l. 329.

GALE, in the Scotch phrase "a gale of geese," i. e. a flock of geese, is a contracted word from Icel. gagl, a wild goose (Cleasby), which is evidently formed from the verb to gaggle, to make a confused noise, especially used of geese.

A faire white goose bears feathers on her backe,

That gaggles still, much like a chattering pye.
T. Churchyard, Pleasant Conceit
penned in Verse, 1593.

Gagelyñ', or cryñ' as gees. Clingo.
Prompt. Parvulorum.

They gaglide forth on the grene, ffor they grewed were.

Deposition of Richard II. p. 18
(Camden Soc.).

30selinge, chattering, occurs in The Owl and Nightingale, l. 40.

GALLIC DISEASE, morbus gallicus, owes its name, perhaps, to a confusion of gallus, gallicus, with Fr. galle (gale), a galling or itching of the skin, a scab or scurf, galleux, scabby, "galoise, a scurvy trull, scabby quean, mangy punk."—Cotgrave.

My Doll is dead i' the spital
Of malady of France.

Hen. V. act v. sc. 1.

GALLIGASKINS, "a sort of wide slops or breeches used by the inhabitants of Gascoign [or Gascony] in France."— Bailey. This definition seems to have been invented to account for the name.
The word is probably for garigascans or garguesquans, from O. Fr. garguesques (Cotgrave), a corrupt form of gregues-ques (otherwise gregues, O. Eng. gregs, wide slops) = Ital. Grechesco, "Greekish trowsers" (Skeat, Wedgwood).

Others [make] straight trusses and diuells breeches, some gally gascynes, or a shipmans hose.—T. Nash, Pierce Penilesse, 1592, p. 20
(Shaks. Soc.).

Sir Rowland Russet-Coat, their dad, goes sagging euerie day in his round gascynes of white cotton.—Id. p. 8.

GALLO-SHOES, a corrupt spelling of galloches, as if Gallic shoes.

Gallôches, or galloshoes, are the wooden sabots worn by the French peasants, and the name has been transferred to the overshoes of caoutchouc which have been recently introduced.—I. Taylor, Words and Places, p.
425 (2nd ed.).

Similarly Diez thinks Fr. galoche, Sp.
galocha, It. galoscia, are from Lat. gallica, a Gallic shoe. These words are really derived from Low Lat. calopedia (calop'dia), a wooden shoe, and that from Greek kalo-pódion, a "wood-foot" or last (Scheler, Brachet).

Galloche, Callopedium.

Galache, or guloche, vndyr solynge of mannys fote (al. galegge), Crepitum, Crepita.—Prompt. Parvulorum (1440).

Ne coude man by twenty thousand part Contrefete the sophimes of his art;

Ne were worthy to unbocke his galache,
Chaucer, Squieres Tale, l. 10869.

The Gild of Cordwainers were bound to make search for all

Botez, hotvez, schoez, pyncouz, galegez, and all other ware perteyning to the saide crafte, which is deseceytously wrought.—Eng. Gids, p. 332 (ed. Toulmin Smith).

As is þe kinde of a knyght þat comeþ to be doubed

To geten hus gilte spores and galoches
y-co[u]ped.

W. Langland, Vision of Piers Plowman,
C. xxi. 12.

It is curious to find galoshes, now suggestive of a valetudinarian curate, thus an essential part of a mediæval knight's equipment. Compare Gallozza, "a kind of gallages, star-tops, or wooden pattins" (Florio, New World of Words, 1611), as if connected with gallozzare, galleggiare, to cocker or pamper.

My hart-blood is wel nigh frogne, I feele,
And my galage growne fast to my heele.

Spenser, Shepherds Cal., Feb., l. 244.

Pepys mentions that Lady Batten on Nov. 15, 1665, dropped "one of her goloshes" (Diary, vol. iii. p. 304, ed. M. Bright).

GALLOW-GLASS. This English-looking word for a native Irish soldier (cf. O. Eng. gallow, to frighten), spelt gallin-glass in Hist. of Captain Stukeley (see Nares), is Irish galloglach, a fighting gillie, from giolla, a servant, and gleac, a fight (O'Reilly).

Spenser says an armed footman the Irish "call a galloglass, the which name doth discover him to be also auncient English, for gallogla signifies an English servitour or yeoman" (State of Ireland, p. 640, Globe ed.), erroneously regarding it as compounded of gall, a foreigner, an Englishman, and oglach, a servant or soldier.

A mighty power

Of gallow-glasses and stout kernes

Is marching hitherward in proud array.

2 Hen. VI. iv. 9.

GALLY-POT, } originally gleye-pot, Dut.
GALLIPOT, } gley-pot, glazed pottery.

Similarly glazed tiles were called gallery-tiles (Wedgwood).

You may be sure he is but a gollipot, full of honey, that these wasps hover about.—Adams, The Soul's Sickness (Works, i. 503).

GAMBOL, an incorrect form of the older word gambold (Phaer), or gambauld (Udal), for gambaud (Skelton), which stands for O. Fr. gambade, a gambol, It. gambata, a kicking about of the legs (gamba), Skeat. Here the l, which was originally an intruder, has, cuckoo-like, supplanted the rightful letter d.

GAME, in the slang phrases "a game leg," "a game finger," i.e. crooked, disabled, is in all probability derived from the Welsh and Irish cam, crooked, Corn. gam, Indo-European verbal root kam, to bend (vid. Pictet, Origines Indo-Europ. tom. ii. p. 213). So the word, though unconnected with game, to sport or play, would be akin to gambol. For "gambols, games or tumbling tricks played with the legs," as Bailey defines, is from the French gambiller, gambier, to wag the legs, leap (cf. gambader, to show tumbling tricks), and these words from gambe, jambe, a leg. Cf. Somersetshire gamble, a leg, Eng. slang gamb, a leg, It. and Sp. gamba (viol di gamba, "a leg-violin"), O. Sp. camba, cama; also Eng. gammon, It. gambone, Fr. jambon, Ir. gambun, a leg. But gambe, the leg, as in most beasts, is a limb remarkable for bends and crooks, and so is allied to O. Fr. gambi, bent, crooked, Gk. kampē ("as crooked as a dog's hind-leg" is a Lincolnshire proverb), from the root cam, crooked, seen in O. Eng. kam, wrong, slang gammy, bad, worthless, &c. Cf. gambrel, a crooked stick, and camrel, Welsh cam-bren; Devon. gammerel, the small of the leg; Davy Gam, crooked David; Greek kámmaros, Lat. cammarus, a lobster, from its twisted claws (cf. "tortoise," from Lat. tortus, twisted), O. Fr. gammare, gambre, Swed. hummer, whence Fr. homard. Eng. ham (the bent or curved part) probably stands to gam(b), cam, as Swed. hummer does to cammarus.

Those [calves] are allowed for good and sufficient whose tale reacheth to the joint of the haugh or gambrill.—Holland's Pliny, fol. 1634, tom. i. p. 225.

Scott speaks of "the devil's game leg" (St. Ronan's Well). See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v.

GAMBONE, an occasional mis-spelling, from a notion that it had something to do with bone, of gammon, part of the leg of a pig, Fr. jambon, O. Fr. gambon, from gambe, a leg, radically the same word as ham. See GAME.

Gammon of bacon, formerly written Gambone.—Reliquiæ Hearnianæ, Oct. 16, 1710 (Lib. Old Authors, i. 207).

The custom of the gambone of bacon is still kept up at Dunmowe.—Ibid. iii. 73.

GAMMON, a slang word for to delude or cheat one, and as an interjection gammon! humbug! nonsense! is a corrupted form of the old Eng. gamene, to mock, Icel. gaman, fun. Hence Ascham's spelling gamn, gamning.

Gunninge hath ioyned with it a vayne present pleasure.—Toxophilus, 1545, p. 51 (ed. Arber).

Hwæt seal ic ðonne buton . . . habban me ðæt to gamene.

[What can I do but hold it in mockery.]

King Alfred, Gregory's Pastoral, p. 249, Part 1.

Nowe by [my] soverante I sweare,
And principallitie that I beare
In hell pyne, when I am their,
A gamon I will assaie.

The Chester Plays, vol. i. p. 201
(Shaks. Soc.)

And adam is to eue cumen,
More for erneste dan for gamen.

Genesis and Erodus, l. 411 (ab. 1250).

They gammons him about his driving.—Dickens, Pickwick, ch. xiii.

See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary.

GAMMOUTHE, the gamut, Palsgrave, 1530, a corrupt spelling. Gamut is made up of gamme (= Greek gamma, G.), the old name of the last note of the musical scale, and ut the first note formerly of the singing scale.

His knavery is beyond Ela, and yet he sayes hee knows not Gam ut.—J. Lilly, Mother Bombe, ii. 1.

New physic may be better than old, so may new philosophy; our studies, observation, and experience perfecting theirs; beginning not at the Gamoth, as they did, but, as it were, at the Ela.—T. Adams, Sermons, vol. i. p. 472.

GANDERGLASS, an old popular plant-name, is, no doubt, another form of gandlegoss, or gandergoose, tho orchis. See CANDLEGOSTES.

Among the daisies and the violets blue,
Red hyacinth, and yellow daffadil,
Purple narcissus, like the morning rayes,
Pale ganderglass and azure culverkayes.

I. Walton, Compleat Angler (1653),
p. 22 (Murray repr.).

GARGANET, so spelt by Stanyhurst (Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v.), as if it meant a collar or chain encircling the gargate or throat, as gorget, a piece of armour, does the gorge (cf. gargoyle, gargel, orig. a throat, gargle, &c.), is a corrupt form of carcanet, a jewelled collar.

GARN, an incorrect modern coinage, meaning to store grain, formed from garner, a granary (O. Fr. gernier, for grenier, Lat. granaria), i.e. a "grainery," as if that which garns.

Ye symbols of a mightier world
That Faith alone can see—

Where angels garn the golden grain.
Harvest Hymn, The Guardian, 1880.

GARNET, a provincial name for the fish trigla hirundo (Satchell, E. D. S.), is a corruption of gurnet, old Eng. gurnard, from Fr. grognard, grongnard, as if "the grunter," in allusion to the grunting noise (Fr. grogner) it makes when taken out of the water. Compare crooner, another popular name for the same fish.

GATTERIDGE, the name of a species of cornel tree to which Dr. Prior assigns a (hypothetical?) French form gaitre rouge, is a variant of gatter, O. Eng. gaitre, the cornus sanguinea, and a derivative of A. Sax. gadr, Icel. gaddr, a goad or pin. It is also called Prick timber (Gerard, p. 1283).

A day or two ye shul han digestives
Of wormes, or ye take your laxatives, . . .
Of catapuce, or of gaitre-beries.
Chaucer, The Nonnes Preestes Tale.

GAUNTLET, in the phrase "running the gauntlet," is corrupted from the older expression "to run the gantlope," i.e. to run through a company of soldiers, standing on each side, making a lane, with each a Switch in his hand to scourge the Criminal" (Bailey), Scot. goadloup (a distinct corruption), Swed. gat-lopp—gata meaning a lane or path (= Ger. gasse), and lopp, a course, or the act of running, akin to leap. The word was probably introduced into England, as Dr. Dasent remarks, in the time of the Thirty Years' War. (Jest and Earnest, vol. ii. p. 25.) The German phrase is gassen laufen.

Some said, he ought to be tied neck and heels; others that he deserved to run the gantlope.—H. Fielding, Hist. of a Foundling, bk. vii. ch. 11.

Having rode the gauntlet here . . . a tremendous battery of stones, sticks, apples, turnips, potatoes, and other such variety of mob ammunition was opened upon him.—Southey, Life of Wesley, vol. ii. p. 21 (ed. 1858).

Synonymous is the Scotch word loup-garthe, running through the hedge, or enclosure, made by the soldiers.

GAUNTREE, a frame to set casks on, a corruption of gauntre or gauntry, Fr. chantier, "a Gauntrey, or Stilling, for Hogs-heads, &c., to stand on" (Cotgrave), from Lat. cantherius, (1) a horse, (2) a prop, a trestle. Hence also It. cantiere, Portg. cantiero, Bavar. gander.

Cantherius is the same word as Gk. kantheilos, kantlios, a pack-ass, akin to Zend kathva, an ass.

Meanwhile the frothing bickers, soon as filled,
Are drained, and to the gauntrees off return.

Grahame, British Georgics.

So a mare in Scotch, and a horse in Prov. English, are used for a frame or cross-beam upon which something is supported.

A hogshead ready horsed for the purpose of broaching.

T. Hurdy, Under the Greenwood Tree, vol. i. p. 13.

See PULLEY.

GAVELKIND, an equal division of a father's lands at his death among all his sons (Bailey), takes its present form from a supposed derivation from old Eng. gavel (A. Sax. gafol), tribute, and kind, as in man-kind. Verstegan supposed it was give-all-kind, i.e. "Give all children" [sc. a share]! It is merely an adaptation of Irish gabhaircine, a family (cine) tenure (gabhair), Skeat. See GALE.

GAWKY, awkward, ungainly. It is difficult to suppose that this word has not been influenced by Fr. gauche, left-handed, awkward, which indeed seems to be connected. Scheler compares gaulick hand, left hand, which Bailey gives as a N. Eng. word. Cf. also Yorks. gawkshaw, a left-handed man (Wright). The immediate origin, however, is gawk, a cuckoo, metaphor. a simpleton, geck (Shakespeare), A. Sax. geac, Icel. gauler, Ger. gauch, a cuckoo, a fool. (See Skeat, Etym. Dict.) Gawish, foolish (Adams, i. 502), gavy, gawvy, gawcum, a simpleton (Prov. Eng.), are perhaps connected.

Conceited gawk! puff'd up wi' windy pride.

Burns, Brigs of Ayr (Globe ed. p. 26).

Now gawkies, tawpies, gowks, and fools . . .
May sprout like simmer puddock-stools.

Id. Verses at Selkirk (p. 122).

GAZE-HOUND, } a dog that hunts by GAST-HOUND, } night, Lat. agasæus
(Bailey). The first part of the word is probably a corruption of the Low Latin name, notwithstanding this statement of Toppell:

The gasehound, called in latine Agasæus, hath his name of the sharpenes and stedfastnes of his eie-sight . . . For to gaze is earnestly to view and behold, from whence floweth the deriuation of this Dogs name.—Historie of Four-Footed Beasts, 1607, p. 179.

Du Cange gives no such word, however, as agasæus.

GAZELS, a Sussex word for black currants (Parish, Glossary), is probably from Fr. groseilles, corrupted to gosels, just as goose-berry of the same origin is for groos-berry.

GEMINI! an exclamation of surprise, as if a heathenish adjuration of the constellation of the Twins, Lat. Gemini, is identical with Ger. O Jemine! Dut. Jemy, Jemini! (Sewel), which are shortened forms of Lat. O Jesu domine (Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 129), or perhaps merely from Jesu meus (It. Giesu mio). Similar disguised oaths are Ger. O Je! Herrje! Jerum! Potz! (for Gotts); Eng. La! Law! for Lord!

GENEVA, a name for gin, as if it came from the place so called, is a corruption of the French genièvre, Dut. jenever, It. ginepro, all from Lat. juniperus, the juniper (Prov. Eng. jenepere, old Eng. jenefer), the berries of that tree being employed as an ingredient in its manufacture.

Theriaque des Alemans, the juice of Gineper berries extracted according unto Art.—Cotgrave.

In Spanish formerly there was the one word ginebra for the town of Geneva and the tree called juniper (Minsheu).

The junipers are of immense size and flavour [in the Himálaya]; but most people prefer to have their junipers by way of Holland or Geneva.—Andrew Wilson, The Abode of Snow, p. 83 (2nd ed.).

As if gin came from Geneva as Hollands do from Holland.

The poor muse, for less than half-a-crown,
A prostitute on every bulk in town, . . .
Clubs credit for Geneva in the mint.

Young, Satire IV.

'Tis a sign he has ta'en his liquor; and if you meet

An officer preaching of sobriety,
Unless he read it in Geneva print,
Lay him by the heels.

Massinger, The Duke of Milan, i. 1.

GENII, a name given to certain powerful beings in the Arabian mythology, as in Tales of the Genii, is corrupted from Arab. jinn, under the influence of the Lat. genius, a tutelary spirit. See Keightley, Fairy Mythology, p. 25. Pers. jinn from jan, spirit, life, Turkish jinn, a spirit, jan, a soul. Mr. I. Taylor compares Chinese shin or jin, spirit, Etruscan hin, a ghost (Etruscan Researches, p. 108, seq.).

The Arabians and Persians had an equal advantage in writing their tales from the genii and fairies, which they believe in as an article of their faith.—H. Fielding, Hist. of a Foundling, bk. xvii. ch. 1.

And when we came to the Lapland lone

The fairies war all in array,

For all the genii of the north

War keeping their holiday.

Hogg, The Queen's Wake.

What need, then, that Thou shouldst come to my house; only commission one of these genii of healing, who will execute speedily the errand of grace on which Thou shalt send him.—Abp. Trench, Miracles, p. 228 (8th ed.).

GENTRY, gentility, nobleness, gentleness, is a corruption of the older form gentrise (perhaps mistaken for a plural), O. Fr. gentrise, for gentilise (? Lat. gentilitia), Skeat. Gentrise in Ancren Riwle.

Vor case þat myȝte come, vor hyre gentryse.

Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 434.

þis iesus of hus gentryse shal louste in peers Armes.

Vision of Piers the Plowman, C. xxi.

21 (Skeat).

To have pride of gentrye is right great foly.

Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Superbia.

þe gentryse of luise & Ierusalem þe ryche Watȝ disstryed wyth distres, & drawn to þe erþe.

Alliterative Poems, p. 70, l. 1160

(ed. Morris).

If it will please you

To show us so much gentry and good will.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 2, l. 21.

But, think you, though we wink at base revenge,

A brother's death can be so soon forgot?

Our gentry baffled, and our name disgrac'd?

Heywood and Rowley, Fortune by Land and Sea, p. 19 (Shaks. Soc.).

Gentry and baseness in all ages jar;

And poverty and wealth are still at war.

Id. p. 42.

The modern meaning of "gentle-folks," a collective noun, opposed to the commonalty, as if the aggregate of the gent or gentle, arose probably from a false analogy to words like infantry, yeomanry, soldiery, &c.

GERFALCON, } I think it may be GYRFALCON, } shown that all these GIERFALCON, } words are false derivations from an assumed connexion with Lat. gyrare, to move in circles, or with Ger. geier, a vulture.

The old Eng. form is gerfalcon (Prompt. Parv.), Low Lat. gero-falco, and this is, I think, for hierofalcon, the sacred falcon (Greek hieròs). "Ger-falcon sacre."—Palsgrave. For the meaning compare Greek hierax, a hawk or falcon, from hieros, sacred (= Etruscan aracus); O. Eng. saker, Fr. sacre, It. sagro, a hawk, from Lat. sacer, sacred; Ger. weihe, O. H. Ger. wiho, a kite, from weihen, to make sacred.

The Mod. Greek word geráki, a falcon, from hierax, shows that hierofalco would readily pass into gero-falco and ger-falcon.

The transition from hier- to ger- or jer- is of frequent occurrence, e.g., Gera-pigra, an old Eng. name for a drug, in Booke of Quinte Essence, p. 3 (E.E.T. Soc., otherwise spelt ierapigra, p. 29), Span. geripliega, "a drug called Hiera Piera" (Minsheu), from Greek hierapikra. Old Eng. gerarchie (Gower, C. A. iii. 145), It. and Sp. gerarchia, for hierarchia, and so Dunbar speaks of "the blisfull sounne of cherarchy" (The Thyrissill and the Rois, cant. ix. 1503). Low Lat. gerobotana for hierobotana. Old Eng. geribulbum (Leechdoms, &c., Cockayne), for hieribulbum. So It. geroglyphico, a Hieroglyphic; gerachide, another form of hieracite, "falcon-stone" (Florio), Lat. hieracitis; compare also Jerome, Fr. Gerome, Sp. Geronimo, Low Lat. Geronomus, from Hieronymus; Jarmuk, a tributary of the Jordan, from Gk. Hieromax; Jerusalem and Hierosalem, Hierosoluma; jacynth = hyacinth; Fr. jusquiam from hyoscyamus, henbane, &c.

If this view be correct, then the forms gier-falcon, gyr-falcon, L. Lat. gyrofalco, have been corrupted by false derivation. Geierfalke, a ger-falcon in German, is according to Karl Andresen an assimilation of the Lat. gyrofalco, the falcon of circling flight, to Ger. geier, a vulture. (Compare Greek kirkos, the circling flier, a falcon.)

'Tis well if among them you can clearly make out a lanner, a sparrow-hawk, and a kestrel, but must not hope to find your gier falcon there, which is the noble hawk.—Sir Thos. Browne, Of Hawks and Falconry, Works (ed. Bohn), vol. iii. p. 218.

If I beare downe thee,

The Jerfaucon shall goe with mee
Maugre thy head indeed.

Percy Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 451, l. 976.

Professor Pictet points out that sacre, L. Lat. sacer, a falcon, has really only an indirect connexion with sacer, sacred, the former being the Arab. sakr, Pers. shakrah, a falcon (cf. Sk. çakuna, a vulture), traceable to Sansk. çakra, strong, powerful, whence also comes Lat. sacer, sacred (cf. Eng. hale, whole, and holy). In exactly the same relation Gk. hiëra stands to hiëros, which = Sansk. ishira, strong, sound, lively. On the sacredness of the falcon, see Gubernatis, Zoological Mythology, vol. ii. ch. 2.

GERMANDER, Fr. gamandrée, a heteronym from Gk. chamæcedrys, a low oak-leaved plant, çamai, on the earth, and δρῶς, oak (Haldeman), assimilated to "oleander."

GHOSTPEL, a strange spelling of gospel, from a confusion with ghost, ghostly (= spiritual), used by Giles Fletcher, who speaks of Nonnius translating all Saint Iohn's Ghostpel into Greek verse.—Christ's Victorie in Heaven, To the Reader, 1610, p. 115 (ed. Grosart).

Prof. Skeat has shown that gospel is not originally the "good spell" or story (A. Sax. gód), as has been generally assumed from the time of Orminn, who says "Godspell onn Ennglissch nemnedd iss god word and god tîpennde," but A. Sax. godspell (A. Sax. God), i.e. "God's story," viz. the life of Christ.

Camden took a correct view of the word:

The gladsome tidings of our salvation which the Greeks called Evangelion, and other Nations in the same word, they [the old English] called Godspel, that is, Gods speech.—Remaines concerning Britaine, p. 25 (ed. 1637). And we ben proned þe prijs' of popes at Rome, And of grettest degre' as godspelles telleþ.

Pierce the Ploughman's Crede, l. 257
(ed. Skeat).

GIBBERISH, generally understood, in accordance with its present spelling, to be derived from gibber, to chatter or talk inarticulately (Wedgwood), is probably a corruption of the old English Geberish or Gebrish, that is, the unintelligible jargon of alchemy, so called from Gebir (Gibere in Gower, C. A. iii. 46), the founder of the Arabian school of chemistry and a prolific writer on alchemy, who flourished about the beginning of the 9th century. Geber-ish modelled on Scottish, Irish, Swedish, &c.

All you that faine Philosophers would be,
And night and day in Geber's Kitchen broyle,
Wasting the chipps of Ancient Hermes Tree,
Weening to turne them to a pretious Oyle,
The more you worke the more you loose and spoile.

Sir Edward Kelle, Ashmole's Theatrum Chemicum, p. 324.

Thus I rostyd and boylyd as one of Gebers Cooks,

And oft tymes my wynnyng in the Asks I sought.

George Ripley (1471), op. cit. p. 191.

This extraordinary work, with its ever-recurring enigmas about the Green Lion, Hermes Bird, &c., and cabalistical language, is, as Ashmole truly remarks, "difficult to be thoroughly and perfectly understood." It is, in fact, gibberish to the uninitiated. Such outlandish words as we find here and in Chaucer's Chanones Yemannes Tale, with its Descensories,

Viols, croslettes, and sublimatories,
Cucuribes, and alembikes eke, would naturally make the art which employed them a byword for unintelligible speech. Compare Fr. grimoire, unintelligible talk, originally exorcisms, from grammaire, literature, Latin.

<sup>1</sup> Similarly Norton in his Ordinall (ch. vii. sub init.) uses Gebers Cookes for Alchemists.

Fuller, for instance, commenting on the words of Sir Edward Kelley, quoted above, makes the remark,

As for the high conceit he had of his own skill in Chemistry it appeareth sufficiently in the beginning of his own works, though I confess myself not to understand the Geberish of his language.—Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 473 (ed. 1811).

If we could set it down in the ancient Saxon, I meane in the tongue which the English used at their first arrivall here, about 440 yeares after Christs birth, it would seeme most strange and harsh Dutch or Gebrish, as women call it.—Camden, Remaines concerninge Brituine, p. 22, 1637.

The Lyon Greene,
He ys the meane the Sun and Moone betweene;

Of joyning Tynctures wyth perfytnes,
As Geber thereto beryth wytnes.

Geo. Ripley, Compound of Alchymie
(Ashmole, p. 125).

The best approved Authors agree that they [guns] were invented in Germanie by Berthold Swarte, a Monke skilfull in Gebers Cookery or Alchimy.—Camden, Remaines, p. 19 (1637).

Ben Jonson in The Alchemist puts into the mouth of Subtle such phrases as "imbibition," "reverberating in Athanor," "to the Aludels," &c., on which Surly observes

What a brave language here is! next to canting.

And a little afterwards,

What else are all your terms,
Whereon no one of your writers 'grees with other?

Of your elixir, your luc virginis,
Your stone, your medicine, and your chrysoperme, . . .

Your oil of height, your tree of life, your
blood,

Your marcheate, your tutie, your magnesia,
Your toad, your crow, your dragon, and your panther;

Your sun, your moon, your firmament, your adrop,

Your lato, azoch, zernich, chibrit, heutarit, . . .

And worlds of other strange ingredients,
Would burst a man to name?

Act ii. sc. 1.

In the same scene Subtle asks,

Is Ars sacra

Or chrysopœia, or spagyrica,
Or the pamphysic, or panarchic knowledge,
A heathen language?

To which Ananias replies,
Heathen Greek, I take it.

Act ii. sc. 1 (Works, pp. 248, 250).

Peter. It is a very secret science, for none almost can understand the language of it. Sublimation, almsgation, calcination, rubification, encorporation, circination, sementation, albification, and fermentation; with as many termes impossible to be uttered, as the arte to bee compassed.

Raffe. Let mee crosse myselfe, I never heard so many great devils in a little monkies mouth. . . . What language is this? doe they speak so?—J. Lilly, Gallathea, ii. 3 (1592).

On the studied obscurity of writers on alchemy, the "Vicar of Malden" remarks in his Hunting of the Greens Lyon, that their

Noble practise doth bem teach
To vaile their secrets wyth mistie speach,
He had sworn to his master
That all the secrets I schould never undoe
To no one man, but even spread a Cloude
Over my words and writes, and so it shroud.

The occurrence of gibbryshe, however, in The Interlude of Youth, 1557, renders it possible that geberish may itself be the corruption, though the hard g of gibberish, dissociating it from gibber (jabber), seems to point the other way. He plag'd them all with sundry tongues' confusion.

Such gibrish, gibble-gabble, all did fangle,
Some laugh, some fret, all prate, all different wrangle;

One calls in Hebrew to his working mate,
And he in Welch, Glough whee corrage doth prate.

John Taylor, The Severall Seiges, &c., of the Citty of Jerusalem (1630).

Strike, strike our saile (the Master cries)
amain,

Vaile misne and Sprit-sail: but he cries in vain;

For, in his face the blasts so bluster ay,
That his Sea-gibberish is straight horn away.

I. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 491 (1621).

[The builders at Babel]

Som howl, som halloo, sum do stut and strain,
Each hath his gibberish, and all strue in vain
To finde again their know'n beloved tongue.

Id. p. 255.

Another alchemist, who, if he did not originate a word expressive of unmeaning language, at least had it sometimes fathered on him, was Paracelsus, formerly often called Bombast.

"Bombast swelling blustering nonsense, also fustian" (Florio), is perhaps the same word as bombase, bombasin (see Fuller, Worthies, ii. 239), cotton stuff formerly used for padding, but influenced by a reference to him who assumed the high-sounding name Aureolus Philippus Theophrastus Paracelsus Bombastus, and was notorious for his "loud boasting" and "braggadocio" (Friswell, Varia, p. 166). Hence the name of the burlesque hero Bombastes Furioso, designed to out-Herod the inflated nonsense of modern tragedies.

Dr. Donne speaks of "the vain and empty fulness in Paracelsus' name."—Essays in Divinity (1651), p. 119, ed. Jessop. According to Ignatius his Conclave (p. 123), when Lucifer asked him who he was, and he answered, "Philipus Aureolus Theophrastus Paracelsus Bombast of Hohenheim," Satan trembled at this as if it were some new kind of exorcism. Ben Jonson says alchemists "pretend, under the specious names of Geber, Arnold, Sully, Bombast of Hohenheim, to commit miracles in art" (Mercury Vindicated From the Alchemists).

Bumbastus kept a devil's bird
Shut in the pommel of his sword.
Butler, Hudibras, Pt. II. canto iii.

GILLY-FLOWER, a corruption of gillofer, gilofer, or gilly-vor (which occurs in the Winter's Tale, iv. 4), Fr. giroflée, It. garofalo, Mod. Gk. garóphalo, Lat. caryophyllum, Gk. karuóphallon.

Barberies, Pinks, or Shops [sops] of wine, feathered Gillovers, small Honesties.—Cotgrave.

Gelofre, Ancren Riivle, p. 370; gilofer, Kyng Alisaunder, p. 280; ielofer, Skelton, Phyllyp Sparrow, l. 1053; gerraflour, G. Douglas, Eneados Prolog. Buk XII.

With cloves of gelofer hit broch þou shalle.
Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 26.

All maner of flowers of the feld and gardennes, as roses, geleuors.—H. Machyn, Diary, 1559, p. 203 (Camden Soc.).

GIN, a snare, trap, a cunning device, O. Eng. gynne, seems to bear some relation to O. E. engym, Fr. engin, a fraud or mechanical instrument, an engine. It has also been derived from Icel. ginna, to dupe (Skeat). It seems to me to be a native English word, representing A. Sax. girn, gyrn, transposed forms of grin, gryn, a snare or trap (compare Prov. Eng. girn, to grin with the mouth; urn for run; urd for red (rud); grass, A. S. gærs, &c.): r being omitted as in speak, for A. Sax. sprecan. The two words, however, are found co-existent and distinct at an early date.

Swá swá grin he becymþ on ealle [as a snare it cometh on all].—A. Sax. Vers. S. Luke xxi. 35 (995).

And panteris preuyliche' pight vppon þe grounde,
With grennes of good heere' þat god him-self made.

Richard the Redeles, Pass ii. l. 188 (1399), ed. Skeat.

I fand the woman mar bitter na the ded, quhilk is

The gyrne of the hunter to tak the wild bestis.
Ratis Raving, p. 21, l. 695 (ed. Lumby).

Satan . . . setteth his snares and grinnes.
Udal, Erasmus, p. 37 verso.

"The gren shal take him by the heele," Genevan Version, Job xviii. 10; "The proude . . . set grennes for me," Id. Ps. cxl. 5, and so Ps. cxli. 9. The A. V., 1611, in these passages has grin, which the printers have now changed to gin.

Even as a bird/out of the foulers grin.
Sternhold and Hopkins, Ps. cxxiv. 7 (1599).

Laqs, a snare, ginne, or grinne.—Cotgrave.
But vnder that same baite a fearful grin
Was readie to intangle Him in sinne.
G. Fletcher, Christs Victorie on Earth,
29 (1610).

So þat we mai nocht negh it nere
Bot-if we may with any gyn
Mak þam to do dedly syn.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 96, l. 318 (E. E. T. S.)

Ihesus as a gyaunt' with a gyn comeþ þonde,
To breken and to bete a-doun' alle þat ben a-gayns hym.

Vision of Piers the Plowman,
C: xxi. 264.

Uele ginnes heþ þe dyeuel vor to nime þet volk be þe prote.—Ayenbite of Inwyrt, p. 54 (1340).

þet ne is a gryn of þe dyeule.—Id. p. 47.
No Ermines, or black Sables, no such skins,
As the grim Tartar hunts or takes in Gins.

J. Howell, The Vote or Poem-Royall,
l. 17 (1641).

GINGERLY, in the phrase "to walk gingerly," is perhaps from an old English word gingralic, like a (A. Sax.) gingra, or young person, from A. Sax.

ging, young, tender. So the meaning would be to walk mincingly, trippingly, or delicately, as Agag came to Saul (1 Sam. xv. 32) = Greek, ἀβρῶς βαβρῶν (Euripides). In provincial English ginger means delicate, brittle.

Prithee, gentle officer,
Handle me gingerly, or I fall to pieces.

Massinger, The Parliament of Love, v. 1.

After this was written I found that gingerly is actually the word used by Bp. Patrick to describe Agag's gait.

He came to him with a soft pace, treading gingerly (as we speak) after a nice and delicate manner.—Commentary, in loco.

Mist'ris Minx . . . that looks as simperingly as if she were besmeared, and lets it as gingerly as if she were dancing the canaries.—T. Nash, Pierce Penilesse, 1592, p. 21 (Shaks. Soc.).

Measter . . . was slinking down, tiptoe, so gingerly, shrumping his shoulders, that he mist his voting.—Mrs. Putmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 25.

Walk circumspectly, tread gingerly, step warily, lift not up one foot till ye have found sure footing for the other.—John Trapp, Commentary, 1647 (1 Peter iii. 17).

Aller à pas menu, to go nicely, tread gingerly, mince it like a maid.—Cotgrave.

Archbishop Trench quotes gingerness from Stub's Anatomy of Abuses, 1585, "Their gingerness in tripping on toes like young goats" (On some Deficiencies in our English Dictionaries, p. 22).

Ginger is found in Kemble's Charters, and gingra in the Anglo-Saxon version of the Gospels, with the meaning of younger. "Ac gewurðe he swá swá gingra, se ðe yldra ys betwux eow (Luke xxii. 26, A.D. 995)," But he that is the elder among you becometh even as the younger.

Dus art tu ging and newe,
Forðward be ðu trewe.

Morris, Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 7, l. 214.

ðe ginge wimmen of ðin lond, faiger on sigt: aud softe on hound.

Genesis und Eadodus, l. 4050.

GINGERLINE, an old word for "a yellowish colour" (Wright, Dict. of Prov. and Obsolete English), does not mean ginger-coloured, as it would seem at first sight, but is a corruption of It. giallolino, a diminutive of giallo, yellow.

Giallolino, a kind of colour called now adaies a Gingirline.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

From this perhaps come ginger, a pale red colour, and ginger-pated, red-haired (Wright).

GINGLES, an incorrect form in Fuller, "The gingles or St. Anthony his fire" (Church Hist. IX. i. 60), of shingles, so called because it sometimes encircles the patient like a girdle, Lat. cingula.

GIN SLINGS, a slang name for a beverage composed of gin, soda water, lemon, and sugar, is said to be a corruption of John Collins, the name formerly given to it, and still in use in America. The transitions must have been John-C'Ullings, John-slings, Gin-slings. John Collins, its inventor, was a well-known waiter at Limmer's Hotel, Conduit Street. (Notes and Queries, 6th S. ii. 444).

GIST, an old orthography of guest, a receiver of hospitality, O. Eng. gest, A. Sax. gæst, gest, perhaps from some confusion with giste, a lodging (cf. gisten, to lodge, gistninge, hospitality), all which words occur in the Ancient Rime (ab. 1225).

ʒif eni haueð deore gist (= guest, p. 68) ; "þe gode pilgrim . . . hieð toward his giste" (= lodging, p. 350).

þai toke þair gesting [= lodging] in þe tun.

Cursor Mundi, Morris Spec. p. 71, l. 71.

The contrary change is found in GUEST-TAKEE, which see.

GITHORN, an old corruption of githorn, O. Eng. giterne, gyterne (Prompt. Parv.), O. Fr. guiterne, another form of guiterre, guitare, a "guitar," all from Lat. cithara, Greek kithára, a lyre; cf. Chaldic kathros, a harp (Dan. iii. 5). See CITHORN.

Twa or thrie of our condisciples played fellow weill on the virginals, and another on the lut and githorn.—J. Melville, Diary, 1574, p. 29 (Wodrow Soc.).

Herrick has the strangely corrupt form gotire.

Touch but thy lire, my Harrie, and I heare
From thee some raptures of the rare gotire.

Hesperides, p. 296 (ed. Hazlitt).

GLACIS, an easy slope in fortification, Fr. glacis, apparently a place as smooth as ice (glace), from glacer, to cover with ice (Littré). It is perhaps only Low Lat. glatia, smoothness, from Ger. glatt, smooth, even; glätte, smoothness (Mahn). The old Fr. form is glassis (Cotgrave). Compare Fr. glis-

ser, to glide, from Ger. glit-scn, glit-schen.

GLANCE, to strike and turn aside, as an arrow from a tree, or a lance from a breastplate, apparently to be reflected like a gleam of light, or touched as by a hasty look which is instantly averted, is, according to Dr. R. Morris, a nasalized form of O. Eng. glace, to glance, to polish, from Fr. glacer, glacier, to slip or slide [as on ice, glacies]. Compare—

Glacynge, or wronge glydyngge of boltys or arrowys (al. glansyng), Devolatus.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Suche gladande glory con to me glace.

Alliterative Poems, p. 6, l. 171 (see note, p. 152).

This seems slightly doubtful. Prof. Skeat compares Prov. Swed. glinta, glinta, to slide or glance aside (Etym. Dict. s. v.). Cf. Scot. and O. Eng. glent, to slide or slip.

The damned arrow glanced aside.

Tennyson, Oriana, l. 41.

GLASS-SLIPPER, Fr. pantoufle de verre, the material of Cinderella's famous slipper in our version of the story, according to Mr. Ralston is altogether a mistake. In the oldest French version the word employed with reference to it is veir, the heraldic term for pearl, and this in the course of transcription must have been altered to verre, glass. The slipper probably was merely embroidered with pearl. Others have supposed that Perrault's pantoufle de verre is a corruption of pantoufle de vair, i. e. a slipper of squirrel fur.

From a similar play on words vair, the heraldic fur, is represented by pieces in shape of little glass pots, verres, argent and azure.—Chambers, Cyclopædia, s. v. Fur. In old Eng. verres are glasses.

She . . . lepte upon the borde, and threw downe mete, and drinke, and brake the verres, and spilt alle that there was on the borde.—Book of the Knight of La Tour-Landry, p. 27 (E. E. T. S.).

GLASS-WORM, } old and provincial GLAZE-WORM, } words for the glow-worm, the former used by Moutet, the latter by Lily. The first part of the word is identical with Scot. gloss, a glowing fire, glose, a blaze, Icel. glossi, a blaze, Prov. Swed. glossa, to glow, glåsa, a glowing, M. H. Ger. glosen, to glow. Cf. Mid. Eng. glisien, to shine, Ger. gleissen. Another old name for the insect is globerde or glawbird.

GLORY-HOLE. It was long a puzzle to me why a cupboard at the head of a staircase for keeping brooms, &c. (Wright), or a person's "den" or retreat, which is kept in chronic litter and untidiness, or in general any retired and uncared nook, should be popularly called a glory-hole. I have little doubt now that the first part of the word has nothing whatever to do with glory, renown (Lat. gloria), but is the same word as old Eng. "gloryyn", or wythe onclene bynge defoylyn", Maculo, deturpo.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Compare Prov. Eng. glory, and glorry, greasy, fat; Cleveland, glor, mere fat, glor-fat, excessively fat (Atkinson). Fletcher has "not all glory-fat" (Halliwell), and Fuller says that the flesh of Hantsshire hogs—

Though not all glorre (where no bancks of lean can be seen for the deluge of fat) is no less delicious to the taste and more wholesome for the stomach.—Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 401 (ed. 1811).

Cf. also O. Eng. glare, mire, and Scot. glorg, to bemire. Thus glory-hole is no more than a dirty hole, an untidy nook. The parallelism of Fr. gloriette (Sp. glorieta), a bower, formerly a little room in the top of a tower, is curious.

GLOZE, to flatter, O. Eng. glosen, has often been regarded as only another form of to glaze, to throw a gloss, or bright lustrous appearance, over one's language, to speak in a polished specious style: cf. "Glacyñ or make a bynge to shine, Glasinge in scornynge, Intulacio" (Prompt. Parv.); "I glaze a knyfe to make it bright, je fourbis" (Palsgrave); O. Eng. glisien, to glisten, Ger. gleissen, to shine, also to dissemble or play the hypocrite; Icel. glys, finery, and glossi, a blaze, Scot. glose, gloze, to blaze. For the meaning, cf. "Smooth not thy tongue with filed [= polished] talk."—The Passionate Pilgrim, l. 306 (Globe Shaks. p. 1056); and compare the following:—

These . . . are vanitas vanitatum; that file, and glaze, and whet their Tongues to Lies, the properest kind of Vanitie; which call Euill, Good, and Good, Euill (good Devills) for a Reward.—S. Purchas, Microcosmus or The Historie of Man, p. 621 (1619).

Every smooth tale is not to be beleaved; and every glosing tongue is not to be trusted.—H. Smith, Sermons, 1609.

Glose meant originally to interpret or explain, to make a comment or gloss, Fr. glose, Lat. glossa, a word requiring to be explained, Greek glōssa, a tongue, a foreign word (needing explanation); hence glossary. The connotation of deception, flattery, is perhaps due to the confusion above.

Glose textys, or bookys, Gloso.

Glosyn, or flattery<sup>n</sup>, Adulor, blandior.

Prompt. Parvulorum.

Loke in þe sauter glosed

On ecce enim veritatem dilexisti.

Langland, Vision of P. Plowman,
vii. 303, text C.

Wher-on was write two wordes in þis wise
glosede.

Ibid. xx. 12.

Ac tho hii come, hii nadde of him, bote is olde wone,

Glosinde wordes & false.

Robert of Gloucester, p. 497 (ed. 1810).

For he could well his glosing speaches frame
To such vaine uses that him best became.

Spenser, F. Queene, III. viii. 14.

And as the substance of men of worschyppe that wylle not glose nor cory fayl for no parcyallyte, they cowthe not undyrstond that alle thys ordenaunce dyd any goode or harme.

—Gregory's Chronicle of London (1461),
p. 214 (Camden Soc.).

Well, to be brefe with outen glose,

And not to swarve from our purpose,

Take good hede what I shall saye.

Rede me und be nott wrothe, 1528,
p. 39 (ed. Arber).

GOADLOUP, a Scotch word for the military punishment called the gantelope in modern English, both which words are corruptions of Swed. gatlopp, a "lane-course." See GAUNTLET.

GOAT, a Lincolnshire word for a sluice or drain.

"A goat, or as you more commonly call it a sluice."—Instruction for a Committee of Sewers, 1664 (Peacock).

O. Eng. "gote, or water schetelys, Aquagium" (Prompt. Parv. ab. 1440) Northampton. gout (Sternberg).

As water of dyche,

Oper gotez of golf þat neuer charde.

Alliterative Poems, p. 18, l. 608.

As gotes out of guttars.

K. Alexander, p. 163.

The Three Goats, a tavern sign at Lincoln, was originally the Three Gowts, gutters, or drains (Ger. gosse), which are known to have existed there (M. Müller, Chips, vol. ii. p. 530). Ray gives as a Northumberland word Gote, a flood-gate, from A. Sax. geotan, to pour [cf. geotere, a pourer, Orosius], Dut. gote.

Other forms of the word are gout, gut, gutter, goyt, got, a drain or water-course (cf. Fr. égout). An old church in Lincoln still bears the name of S. Peter at Gowts. We ought, perhaps, to connect these words with gutter, O. Eng. gotere; but cf. O. Fr. goutiere, a channel for drippings (Lat. guttia).

GOAT-WEED, a pop. name of the plant Ægopodium podagraria, seems to be a corruption of its other name, gout-weed and gout-wort.

GOD-ÆPPEL, i.e. "good-apple," a quasi-Anglo-Saxon name for the quince (Somner), is apparently a corruption of GOD-ÆPPEL, which see.

GOGGLE, in goggle-eyed, having full rolling eyes, Ir. gogshuil each, from gog, to move slightly, and suil, the eye, is used by Wycliffe as equivalent to Lat. coeles, with which it has probably no connexion (Skeat). Coeles, one-eyed, is a Latin corruption of Gk. kyllops (Mommsen), or from ca (= one) + oculus (Bopp).

It is good to thee for to entre gogil yzed in to rewme of God, than havynge twey yzen for to be sent in to helle of fier.—S. Mark ix. 47.

GOLD, a Somerset name for the sweet willow, formerly called ganle (Myrica gale).

GOOD, in the Scottish expression "to good, or guid, a field" (Jamieson), meaning to manure it, as if to do it good, or ameliorate its condition (cf. W. Cornwall goody, to fatten), like the Latin phrase lectare agrum, to make a field joyful, to manure it (whence lectamen, It. letame), is the same word as Dan. gilde, to dung or manure, Swed. göda, to manure, or make fat, Shetland gud-den, manure (? compare Hind. khāt, dung, manure). But Gæl. mathaich, to manure, is from maith, good. The verb good, to make good, was once in use.

Greatness not gooded with grace is like a beacon upon a high hill.—T. Adams, God's Bounty, Sermons, i. 151.

GOODIES, a colloquial name for sugar sweetmeats given to children, as if "good things," like Fr. bonbons, has been identified by Mr. Atkinson with Prov. Swed. guttar, sweetmeats, Swiss guteli. It is perhaps the Gipsy goodly, gudlo, sugar, sweet.

GOOD-BYE, a corruption of God be wi' ye, just as "good speed" is sometimes incorrectly used for "God speed (you)." "God speed, fair Helena!" (Mid. N. Dream, i. 1).

God B' w' y'! with all my heart.

Sir J. Sackling, Fragmenta Aurea, 1648, p. 40.

Allan Ramsay ends his poetical Epistle to James Arbuckle (1719) with—Health, wit, and joy, sauls large and free,

Be a' your fates—sae God be wi' ye.

You are a treacherous villaine, God buy yee.
Marston, The Malcontent, i. 5, Warks, ii. 216 (ed. Halliwell).

Time. Godden, my little pretie priuat Place.
Place. Farewell, godby Time.

Sir J. Davies, Poems, ii. 249 (ed. Grosart).

Shaking me by the hand to bid me God-by'e, [he] said he thought he should see me no more.—J. Evelyn, Diary, May 31, 1672.

God buy you, good Sir Topas.

Twelfth Night, iv. 2, l. 108 (1st folio).

So spelt, perhaps, from a confusion with "God save you," buy = redeem.

It has often been supposed that the words good and God are etymologically identical.

If that opinion were not, who would acknowledge any God? the verie Etimologie of the name with vs of the North partes of the world declaring plainly the nature of the attribute, which is all one as if we sayd good [bonus] or a giuer of good things.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 44 (ed. Arber).

God is that which sometime Good we nam'd,
Before our English tongue was shorter fram'd.

Nath. Baxter, Sir Philip Sydney's Ourania (1606).

An indifferent man may judge that our name of the most divine power, God, is . . . derived from Good, the chiefe attribute of God.—Camden, Remaines, 1637, p. 33.

They have long been proved to be fundamentally distinct: good (A. Sax. gód, Goth. gods) either = (1) fit, suitable (Fick), or (2) = Sansk. khayâta, famous, known (Benfey); whereas God (A. Sax. God, Goth. guth) prob. = Pers. khoda, khuda, God, i.e. khuvud (self) + ây (coming), (Johnson, Pers. and Arab. Dict.), Zend khadhâta, self-existent (Diefenbach, Goth. Spr. ii. 416). On the Runic monuments Thur is God (G. Stephens, Thor the Thunderer, p. 32). Burns uses Gude (= good) for God: "Gude keep thee frae a tether string!" (Works, p. 33, Globe ed.).

GOODMAN. Messrs. Eastman and W. A. Wright in their excellent Bible Word-Book, make a suggestion that goodman, an old Eng. word for the master of the house (e.g. Prov. vii. 19, Matt. xx. 11) or a yeoman, is a corruption of A. Sax. gummann or guma, a man (whence brydguma, a bride-groom), and that good-wife [or goody, cf. house-wife and hussy] was formed in imitation of the corrupted word.

Gummann, which occurs in Beowulf, would seem to be a pleonastic compound of guma (which has been referred by Grimm to A. Sax. geóman (gyman), to care, guard, keep, or rule) and man. However, goodman is found in old Eng. for the master of a house, so there are no grounds for this suggested corruption (see Skeat). Moreover guma = O. H. Ger. gomo, Goth. guman, Lat. homo (Fick).

The said day [Nov. 25, 1646] compeired William Seifright . . . being accused of sorcerie, in allotting and giuing over some land to the old goodman (as they call it) [= devil].—Presbytery Book of Strathbogie, p. 71 (Spalding Club).

GOOD YEARS, in Shakespeare, is a corruption of the word "goujeres," a loathsome disease, from Fr. gouge, a punk or camp-wench. "The good yeeres shall devoure them flesh and fell."—Lear, v. 3 (fol.).

"What the god-ger!" is Dame Quickly's expletive in The Merry Wives of Windsor, act i. sc. 4, l. 127.

Goodger, a provincial word for the devil, may be the word intended. (Vid. Notes and Queries, 5th S. v. p. 202.)

A'cat the things about as thof the goodger was in en.—Devonshire Courtship, p. 8.

Seeke not, I pray you, that that pertaineth not to you. What a goodyere have you to doe to meddle in his matters?—T. North, Morall Philosophie of the Ancient Sages, 1601, p. 22 verso.

Who at her first coming, like a simple, ignorant Wooman, after her homely manner, thus bluntly saluted him: "What a good yeare, Master More, I mervaille what you mean."—Wordsworth, Eccles. Biogrophy, vol. ii. p. 139 (ed. 1810).

The corruption was made perhaps with a reminiscence of the Italian phrase—

Mal' anno, an ill yeere, continuall trouble, vsed in Italie for a Curse to ones enemie, as Il mal' anno che Dio ti dij, an ill yeere God giue thee.—Florio.

So in Chaucer—

God give the monke a thousand last quad yere.

Prologue to The Prioresses Tale.

Which seems to mean "God give the monk a thousand (fold) burden of bad years."

GOODY'S EYE, a Somerset name for the plant salvia sclarea, is a corruption of another popular name God's eye (Britten and Holland). Godes-eye, Christ's eye, and Clear-eye, seem free renderings of its Low Lat. name sclarea (? ex-clarus). See CLEAR-EYE.

Oculus Christi is also a kinde of Clarie, but lesser.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 627 (1597).

GOOL-FRENCH, Somerset word for the goldfinch. In Antrim it is called the gold-flinch and gold-spring (Patterson).

GOOSE, a certain symptom of the lues venerea, a bubo, frequently alluded to in the old dramatists, is perhaps a corruption of gougeres, vid. GOOD-YEARS.

GOOSE, a tailor's iron for pressing seams.

Come in, taylor; here you may roast your goose.—Mucheth, ii. 3.

The word probably meant originally any large mass of iron, compare Swed. gös, a pig of iron, Ger. gans, a great lump of melted iron, Fr. gueuse, "a great lump of melted iron, rude, and unfashioned, even as it comes from the furnace" (Cotgrave, in Rabelais gueuse), all no doubt near akin to Ger. guss, metal, founding, guss-eisen, cast iron, giessen, to pour, to found, gosse, a drain.

The term goose would readily be applied to a mass of melted metal from the analogous usage of sow, pig, Gk. dolphis, a dolphin, &c. T. Row, in the Gentleman's Magazine, June, 1774, remarks that smoothing-irons "were made at first of hammered iron, but now are generally made of sow-metal, but are still called irons." Related words are, O. H. Ger. guzan, Swed. giuta, Dan. gyde, A. Sax. geótan, Goth. gutan, Icel. gjóta, to cast metal.

I beg on my knees to have Atropus the tailor to the Destinies . . . to heat the iron goove of mortality, and so press me to death.—Massinger, The Virgin Martyr, iii. 3 (p. 19, ed. Cunningham).

GOOSE, used as a synonym for a simpleton or fool, is, as Bishop Stanley has observed, a "proverbial libel" on a bird remarkable for its intelligence.

It has qualities, we might almost say of the mind, of a very singular character. . . . There are no animals, biped or quadruped, so difficult to deceive or approach, their sense of bearing, seeing, and smelling being so extremely acute; independently of which they appear to act in so organized and cautious a manner, when feeding or roosting, as to defy all danger.—History of Birds, p. 352 (7th ed.).

Among the ancient Egyptians the filial affection of the goose was considered so exemplary to men that it was made the ideograph of "a son."

It may credibly be thought also, that this creature hath some sparks (as it were) of reason, understanding, and learning.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 280, 1634.

Accordingly, a band of crusaders in the time of our Henry II., saw nothing ridiculous in having a goose carried as a standard at their head. Indeed, it is only in modern times, and that as we shall see through a verbal misconception, that the name of this wise bird has become the very antithesis of its true character. Its carefulness has been warmly eulogized by Scaliger, who declares it the very emblem of prudence.

When Frederick Nausea, Bishop of Vienne, desired in his panegyric on St. Quintin to convey a fitting idea of the sobriety, chastity, and vigilance of that eminent personage, he could not express himself more forcibly than by asserting the holy and virtuous man closely resembled a goose. Had folly been esteemed a prominent characteristic of the bird, the saint would hardly have been likened to it; but it is only ignorance of the darkest hue that ventures to portray the goose as deficient in sagacity or intelligence.—Cornhill Magazine, vol. viii. p. 203.

I would suggest, therefore, that goose, in the sense of simpleton, is a survival of the Scandinavian gusi, a fool, found in Swedish, derived from old Swed. gusa, to blow (cf. "gust").—G. Stephens, Old Northern Runic Monuments, p. 925; just as O. Norse gáli, a fool (Dan. gal, mad), is near akin to a gale of wind (Wedgwood). Windy inflation is the root idea of "fool," and many other words of the same signification.

Here lies Benjamin Johnson dead,
And hath no more wit than [a] goose in his head.

B. Johnson's Conversations, &c., p. 36 (Shaks. Soc.).

GOOSEBERRY. Whatever be the origin of this word, whether it be akin to the German krausbeere, the rough hairy berry, from kraus, rough (compare Dan. stikkelsbær, Swed. stickelbär, "the prickly berry," and perhaps Dutch kruysbeezi, from kroes, frizzled, bristly, Sp. crispina, Lat. uva crispa), which seems most probable, or, as Dr. Prior thinks, from Fr. groseille (which is itself a corrupted form from Ger. kräusel), it certainly has no connexion with "goose."

The Dutch kruysbeezi has been assimilated to kruys, a cross. Carberry, the North country name for this fruit, is according to Mr. Atkinson akin to A. Sax. and Norse gar, a point or prickle, and gorse, the prickly plant (Cleveland Glossary, s.v.), which in N. W. Lincolnshire is called goss (Peacock), whence perhaps goss-berry ("Prickly goss and thorns."—Tempest, iv. 1); but this is unlikely. Mr. Timbs says that roasted geese used in the olden time to be stuffed with gooseberries, and thence came their name (Nooks and Corners of Eng. Life, p. 163), but this is more than doubtful. Gooseberry may be for grooseberry, as speak for spreak, speckle for spreckle, gin for grin; compare Welsh grwyys. Prof. Skeat says the orig. form must have been groise-berry, where groise = M. H. Ger. krús, curling, crisped, i.e. hairy, and so "goose-berry" is the hairy-berry. A Scotch form is groser.

George Gordoune being cited befor the session of Rynie for prophaneing the Sabbath, by gathering groser in tyme of sermon . . . appealed to the presbyterie.—Presbytery Book of Strathbogie (1636), p. 9.

GORDIAN, used absurdly by Keats as a verb meaning to knot, from some confused reminiscence of the fabled "Gordian knot," so called because tied by Gordius, King of Phrygia, with the oracular prediction that whoever should undo it would reign over the entire of Asia.

She had
Indeed, locks bright enough to make me mad;
And they were simply gordian'd up and braided.

Endymion, Bk. I. Poems, p. 19 (ed. 1869).

GOOSE-DANCING, a kind of masquerade, indulged in at Christmas and other festivals in Cornwall, Scilly islands, &c., originally geese dancing, i.e. guise dancing (dance-déguisé), a species of mummung performed by the guizards or masquers.—Hunt, Drolls, &c. of West of England, i. 37 and 307.

The young people exercise a sort of gallantry, called Goose Dancing, when the maidens are dressed up for young men, and the young men for maidens; thus disguised they visit their neighbours in companies, where they dance and make jokes upon what has happened on the island.—Heath, Islands of Scilly, p. 125 (1750).

Compare Scot. gyser, a nummer, and gyse, to masquerade.

The loons are awa through the toon gysin'.—Gregor, Banff Glossary, p. 72.

Disguise was the old English word for a masque.—Ben Jonson, The Masque of Augurs.

See also M. A. Courtney, W. Cornwall Glossary, s.v. Giz' Dance, and F. Q. Couch, E. Cornwall Glossary, s.v. Goosey Dance.

GOOSE-HORN, Scottish guse-horn, as the ingredient of a recipe, sounds as apocryphal as "pigeon's milk," or as the "goat's wool" and "ass's fleece" of the ancient classics. It is a curious corruption of Scot. guissern, Lincoln. ghizzern (Bailey, 1753), old Eng. gyserne (Prompt. Parv.) and giser, the gizzard of a fowl, Fr. gésier, from Lat. gigerium. Compare GIT-HORN for gittern, CITHORNE for cittern. Goshorne in the Reliquæ Antiq. vol. ii. p. 176, is probably the same word.

A Powder for the winde in the body. Take Aniseed, Caraway-seed, Jet, Amber-greese, red Coral, dried Lemon or Orange peels, new laid Egg shels dried, Dates Stones, pillings of Goose-horns of Capons & Pigeons, dried Horse-radish-roots, of each half a Scruple in fine powder well mixed, and take half a Scruple thereof every morning in a Spoonful of Beer or white Wine.—The Queens Closet Opened, p. 77 (1658).

GOOSE-SHARE (Turner, Herball), or Goose-shareth, a name for the plant galium aparine, is a corruption of its old name goose-heiriffe (W. Coles, Adam in Eden), A. Sax. gos-hegerife, "goose-hedge-reeve," the reeve that guards the hedge and arrests the geese passing through (Prior). See HAIROUGH.

Grateron, the small bur called Goose-share, Goose-grass, Love-man, Cleaver, and Claver.—Cotgrave.

GOUKSTULE, a Scotch word for an instrument of punishment, as if a "fool's stool," from gouk, a fool, is a corruption of cuch-stool. See COCK-STOOL.

On the 24th Feb. 1564. James Gardiner "for iniuriog of the provest publicklie," was "sett on the goukstulis four hours on the merkat day."—Linlithgow Burgh Records (Dalyell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland, p. 684).

GRAFT, a modern and corrupt form of graff, O. Eng. graffen, to insert a scion, where the final t is perhaps due to the p. participial form graft=grafted; graff, a scion, Fr. greffe, is properly a slip pointed like a pen or pencil, Lat. graphium, Gk. graphion, a writing instrument (Skeat). On the other hand lift is sometimes used as a p. part. as if = lived, "The ark was lift up" (Gen. vii. 17, xiv. 22, &c.), and ballast as if ballas'd, "Their weak ballac't souls" (Ford, Honor Triumphant, 1606).

They also . . . shall be grafted in; for God is able to graff them in again.—A. V. Rom. xi. 23.

Gruffyn, or graffyn, Insero.—Prompt. Parvularum.

Grafte, or gruffe of a tree, ente.—Palsgrave, 1530.

GRAIN, in the phrase "Against the grain," i.e. running counter to one's natural inclination or disposition, as the saw or plane does against the direction of the fibres in wood, called its grain, is possibly a popular corruption of "Against the gré," which was also in use with the same signification, Fr. gré, wish, liking, humour (e.g., à gré, mal gré). The phrase "to take in gré, or gree," i.e. in good part, kindly, is common in old writers; Pepsys says, "He is against the gré and content of the old Doctors made Judge" (Diary, March 27, 1667).

Similarly the Scottish threat, "I'll gie him his gray," i.e. a drubbing (as if payment, full satisfaction, his heart's desire), is no doubt a ludicrous use of Fr. gré, desire (cf. faire gré), Jamieson. In vulgar English this sometimes appears as "I'll give him his grains."

Our judgments must needs give assent to God; but because his precepts go against the grain of our affections . . . we settle upon the Grecian resolution, though more seriously, not to be so troubled for our souls as to lose a moment of our carnal delights.—T. Adams, Sermons, vol. i. p. 198.

GRAINS, a Prov. word for the prongs of a fork (Old Country Words, E. D. S. p. 145). Grain, used also for the junction of a branch with the tree, and for the bifurcation of the body, the groin (cf. Ir. gabhal), is Icel. grein, a branch, a fork.

A Grain-staff, a Quarter-staff, with a short pair of Tines at the End, which they call Grains.—Ray, South and East Country Words.

GRAMERCY, also spelt Grammercy (as if grand merci, great thanks, "grandem mercedem dat tibi Deus," i.e. God give you a great reward), "I thank you" (Bailey, Skeat), and so Chaucer: Grand mercy, quod the preest, and was full glad.

The Chanones Yemannes Tale.

is a corruption of Grant mercy!

We see the beginning of what was to become a well-known English oath, says Mrs. Oliphant, in Ye, he seyde, graunte mercy.

Robt. Manning, Handlyng Synne, p. 323 (1303).

She saith: Grault mercy, leve sir, God quite it you, there I ne may.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 317 (ed. Pauli).

Scottish folk corrupted it into Gray mercies! as an exclamation of surprise (Jamieson).

GRAMPUS, "a fish like a whale, but less" (Bailey), formerly spelt grand-pisce, as if the great fish. But as no such form is found in French, the word is probably a corruption of A. Sax. hránfisc, a whale-fish (Mahn).

Give me leave to name what fish we took ; they were Dolphins, Bouetaes, Albicores, Cavalloes, Porpice, Grampasse (the Susmarinus), &c.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, p. 404 (1665).

GRANGE, an old Scotch corruption of grains, the branches of a burn towards the head. See GRAINS.

At Threeburn Grange, in an after day,
There shall be a lang and bloody fray.

Thomas of Erceuldoune.

GRANT, from O. Fr. graunter, graanter, originally creanter, creanter (from Low Lat. creantare, credentare, to assure, accredit), influenced perhaps in spelling by confusion with O. Fr. garantir, of the same meaning (Skeat, Etym. Dict.). But cf. grate beside Lat. crates.

GRAPE-SHOT, a quantity of broken pieces of iron and miscellaneous missiles discharged from a gun, is evidently another form of Icel. gráp, sleet, used poetically of arrows, the form in prose being kráp, krapi. The curious parallelism, however, of Swed. druf-hagel, grape-shot, from drufva, a grape, must be taken into consideration.

Compare Gray's "Iron sleet of arrowy shower," Virgil's "ferreus ingruit imber" (Æn. xii. 284), and "Hastati spargunt hastas, fit ferreus imber" (Ennius, Ann. viii. 46).

Gray's line seems modelled on Milton's

Sharp sleet of arrowy showers.

Par. Regained, iii. 323, and this on Spenser's "sharp showre of arrowes" (F. Queene, V. iv. 38).

In old English shower is a storm of arrows, a battle, A. Sax. scúr.

Thé shall haue many a sharpe shower,
both the King & Tryamore,

They shall neave haue peace.

Percy Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 112, l. 929.

Compare A. Sax. isern-scúr (iron-shower), a battle, scúr-beorg, a battlement.

Oft gebåd isern scúr, þonne stræla storm . . .

Scoc ofer scyld-weall.

Beowulf, l. 3116 (8th cent.).

Oft he abode the iron-shower; the storm of arrows flew over the shield-wall.

GRASS-MAN, a Scottish term for a tenant who has no land, but is only a "cottar," seems a paradoxical formation. However, the word has nothing to do with grass. Another form of it is gerss-man, or gers-man, for gersom-man, i. e. one who pays gersom, gressom, or grassom, which is a sum paid to a landlord by a tenant on entering a farm, old Eng. gersom, payment or reward, A. Sax. gærsuma, a fine or premium, gersume, a treasure. Holland says Norwich paid "an hundred shillings for a gersume [a fine] to the queene" (Cumden, p. 474).

He ne bereð no garsum.—Ancren Riwe, p. 350.

GRASS-WIDOW, a provincial term for a woman who is a mother and not married, also for a wife in the absence of her husband. It might seem that grass here is for grace, pronounced in the French fashion, old Eng. gras, as if a widow by grace or courtesy; indeed the Suffolk form is grace-widow (Moor). A grass hand is a term used among printers, and means (I believe, for I cannot find it in any glossary) a temporary or supernumerary workman, a hand by grace or sufferance, as it were, in contrast to the regular and permanent staff of employees.

The word, however, is not peculiar to English. In Low German it appears as gras-wedewe, in Swedish as gräs-enka, lit. "grass-widow" (Tauchnitz Dict.), Prov. Dan. græsenska. Compare the nearly synonymous Ger. stroh-wittwe, "straw-widow." It has been conjectured that the Scandinavian words, which are doubtless the originals of our own, are colloquial forms of grædesenka, from gradig, longing (our "greedy"), meaning one who yearns or longs for her husband in his absence, like the Belgian hœck-wedewe, from hœcken, to feel strong desire. Cf. old Eng. grees, greece, a step, from gradus. (See Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 231.) Gradig, Dan. graadig, is cognate with Gothic gredus, Ir. gradh, love (agra), Sansk. grīdh, to desire or long for.

GRASS, HEART OF, TO TAKE, a corruption in old authors of the once familiar phrase "to take heart of grace," i. e. to be of good courage.

Persuaded thereunto by her husbandes Ieloyse, [she] tooke harte at grasse, and would needes trie a newe conclusion.—Tell-Trothes New-Yeaes Gift, 1593, p. 23 (New Shaks. Soc.).

Taking hart at grasse, drawing more neere him, I praised him to tell me what Purgatory is.—Tarlton's Jestes, p. 57 (Shaks. Soc.).

GRAVING-DOCK is probably considered by most persons to be derived from grave, to dig out or excavate (“gravyngge, or delvyngge, Fossio.”—Prompt. Parv.). It was originally a dry dock where the bottom of a ship could be pitched or graved, i.e. smeared with graves or greaves, grease or refuse tallow, Prov. Swed. grevar.

To grave a ship [sea-term] to preserve the calking by dawbing it over with tallow, train-oil, &c., mix'd.—Bailey, Dict.

GRAVY, a corrupt spelling apparently of old Eng. grovy, “Hec promulada, grovy.”—Wright, Vocabularies (15th cent.), p. 266. The original meaning seems to have been pot-liquor, potage, from old Eng. grecva = olla (A. Sax. Vocabulary, 10th or 11th cent., Wright, p. 288). The word perhaps was confounded with grawe, graves, greaves, tallow refuse, from which indeed Prof. Skeat derives it. But gravy does not seem to have meant fat, but the juice of the meat. Chapman spells it greavy, and distinguishes it from fat, “Their fat and greavie” (Odys. xviii. 63).

GRAY-MILE, } a name for the plant
GRAY-MYLE, } lithospermum officinale
 (“gray millet”) in Turner, Herbal, ii. 40, Graymill in Cotgrave, O. Eng. forms gromel, grumelle, gremil, and gromwell, Fr. gremil. The Latin name of the plant having been gramen (or granum) solis, and milium, these words may have coalesced into the above popular names (Prior).

Böddeker says the origin is Lat. granum milii.

Ase gromyl in grene grene is be grone.—John, l. 37 (Alteng. Dichtungen, p. 146).

In milium solis, the epithet of the sun hath enlarged its opinion; which hath, indeed, no reference thereunto, it being no more than lithospermon, or grummel, or rather milium soler; which as Serapion from Aben Juliel hath taught us, because it grew plentifully in the mountains of Soler, received that appellation.—Sir Thomas Browne, Pseudodoxia Epidemica, Works, vol. i. p. 214 (ed. Bohn).

Gilofre, gyngure, & gromlyoun.

Alliterative Poems, p. 2, l. 43.

GRAZE, to scrape slightly and superficially, formerly spelt grase, seems to be merely an assimilation of rase (Fr.

raser, to touch or grate on a thing in passing by it.—Cotgrave), to graze, to crop the surface of the sward as cattle do (lit. to grass), or perhaps to grate (Skeat). So Fr. grat is not only a scratching or scraping, but pasture or grazing for cattle (Cotgrave).

GREAT, a colloquial expression for intimate, familiar, favourite, fast friends, as “They are very great with the Browns,” was formerly in general use; also for favourite, much affected, as “That is a great word of yours.” The Dorset folk have “to be gret” (= very friendly), Barnes; the Scottish grit; “They two be very gret.”—Sternberg, Northampton Glossary.

A little National School girl in Ireland once explained that the Catechism phrase, “to be in charity with all men,” meant “to be great with them.” Bp. Hall remarked that “Moses was gret with God” (Contemplations, Bk. vii. 1).

Lady Castlemaine is still as great with the King.—Pepys's Diary, vol. ii. p. 5 (ed. M. Bright).

“No snail” ’s a great word with him.—R. Brome, A Jovial Crew, v. 1 (1652).

The Lord Boid was grait with the Regent, and had a cusing in our College.—J. Melville, Diary, 1578, p. 69 (Wodrow Soc.).

As to the origin of this word it is difficult to speak with confidence. Putting aside A. Sax. grīð, peace (notwithstanding the analogy of sib, related from A. S. sib, peace); A. Sax. græda, the bosom; Ir. gradh, dear, beloved (Sansk. grādh, to desire), we may probably see in this “great” a derivative of A. Sax. grētan, to know familiarly (orig. to welcome or “greet”), Ger. grüssen. It is possible, however, that it is identical with “great,” large,—to be thick being a phrase quite analogous,—and may mean “of much account,” “of high value.” In the provincial dialects the two words are kept distinct, e.g. “Thai bee turble grait” (= very close friends), but gurt (= magnus) (F. T. Elworthy, Grammus of W. Somerset); while in N. England gryth is intimate, and grait, gert, is great.

“He does not Top his part”—A gret word with Mr. Edward Howard.—Buckingham, The Rehearsal, Key 1704, p. 70 (ed. Arber).

As great as the Devil and the Earl of Kent.—Swift, Polite Conversations.

GRECIAN STAIRS, at Lincoln, originally the Greesen, i.e. the steps, plural of the old Eng. greese, grize, or gree, a step.—M. Müller, Chips, ii. p. 531.

GREECE, in the phrase a hart of Greece, a fat hart, in old ballads, is for "hart of grease," O. Fr. graisse, fatness (gras, fat, Lat. crassus).

Which of you can kill a hucke,
Or who can kill a doe;
Or who can kill a hart of Greece,
Five hundredth foot him fro.

Ingledeu, Ballads and Songs of Yorkshire, p. 53.

GREY, when used specifically for a horse or steed, bears a curious resemblance to, and may possibly be the same word as, the Gipsy grey (Pott), grye (Smart), gra (foreign Gipsy, Borrow, Grellman), a horse. Cf. Hind. ghorá, a horse, ghori, a mare. However, it must be remembered that horses frequently got names from their colour, e.g. Bayard, Liard, Blanchard (Scot. blonk), Favel, Ball, Sorrell, Dun, Grizzle, and cf. "Scots' Greys."

Woe worth the chase, woe worth the day,
That cost thy life, my gallant grey!

Scott, Lady of the Lake, I. ix.

He look'd—he knew the raven's prey,
His own brave steed:—"Ah! gallant grey!"
Id. IV. xx.

"Gae saddle to me the black," he cried,
"Gae saddle to me the gray;
Gae saddle to me the swiftest steed,
To hie me on my way."
Lord Barnaby, l. 48 (Child's Ballads, vol. ii. p. 309).

He spurr'd the gray into the path,
Till baith his sides they bled.

Auld Maitland (Ibid. vol. vi. p. 225).

GREY BIRD, a name for the thrush in W. Cornwall (M. A. Courtney), and Sussex (Parish), recalls its Fr. name grive, which is perhaps akin to griveler, to pilfer (gripper, "gripe," &c.—Scheler), as if the plunderer, sc. of the vines. Cf. the names, Ger. weindrossel, weingart vogel; mavis, Fr. mauvis (? understood as malum vitis); and the proverb "Souël comme une grive."

GREY-HOUND, so spelt as if called from its grey colour, A. Sax. græghund, græghund (from græg, græg, grey), is properly the Graian or Grecian (A. Sax. Græc, Gric) dog, canis graivus. Scot. gray dog.—So I. Taylor, Words and Places, p. 415 (2nd ed.).

Among the diuers kinds of hunting Dogs the Grey-hound or Græcian Dog, called The-reuticos or Elatica (by reason of his swift-ness) . . . deserueth the first place.—Topsell, Historie of Four-footed Beasts, 1608, p. 144.

Grehownde (al. greshownde), Leporarius.—Prompt. Parvularium.

It was also known in Scotch as the grey, grew (cf. old Eng. grew = greek), grewhund, and grewan (Jamieson), old Eng. grewnd.

The counterpart of this conversion of graian into grey occurs in an old epigram on Lady Jane Grey, who "for her excellency in the Greek tongue was called for Greia, Graia, and this made to her honour in that respect.

Miraris Ianam Graio sermone valere?

Quo nata est primùm tempore, Graia fuit.
Camden, Remaines, 1637, p. 163.

Similarly in Spanish galgo, a greyhound, is from gallicus canis (Diez).

Compare spaniel, the Spanish dog, Lat. molossus, a mastiff (i.e. the Molossian, from Epirus), turkey, Fr. dinde (poulet d'Inde), Ger. kalekuter, canary, and many other birds and animals named after the countries from which they were introduced or were supposed to come.

Otherwise we might identify the first part of the word with Icel. grey, Gaelic gregh, Ir. grech, a hound. Spelman says: "A Greyhound, Ovidio canis Gallicus, sed propriè magis Britannicus" (Glossarium, 1626, s.v. Canis). A distinct corruption is old Eng. grif-hound (King Alysaunder, l. 5284), with which agrees old Dutch griep-hund (Kilian), as if the dog that grips its prey.

In the Constitutions of King Canute concerning Forests occur the words:—

Nullus mediocris habeat nec custodiet Canes, quos Angli Greihounds appellant.—Spelman, Glossarium (1626), p. 290.

Tristre is þer me sit mid þe greahundes forte kepen þe hearde. [A tristre is where men wait with the greyhounds for to meet the herd].—Ancren Riwe, p. 332.

þe hare yernþ, þe gryhond hym uo3-þ [The hare runneth, the greyhound him followeth].—Ayenbite of Inwyrt, p. 75 (1340).

As sonne as I can renne to the laye,
Anon the greyhondys wyl me have.

E. Eng. Miscellanies, p. 46 (Warton Club).

The Greyhounde called Leporarius, hath his name of this word Gre, which word soundeth gradus in latine, in Englishe degree.

Because among all dogges these are the most principall, occupying the chiefest place, and being simply and absolutely the best of all the gentle kinde of houndes.—A. Fleming, Caius of Eng. Dogges, 1576 (p. 40, repr. 1880).

Yet another false etymology is this of Fuller's:—

I have no more to observe of these Grey-hounds, save that they are so called (being otherwise of all colours), because originally employed in the hunting of Groys; that is, Brocks and Badgers.—Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 4 (ed. 1811).

GRID-IRON, formerly spelt gyrdiron (Levins), gredyrne, Wycliffe (Ex. xxvii. 4), is a corruption of old Eng. gredire, a griddle, another form of Welsh greidell, gradell, a griddle, also a grate (Spurrell), Ir. greidell (hæc cretella). These words, as well as old Welsh gratell, are from L. Lat. graticula, for craticula, a dim. of cratis, a hurdle, a barred grate (Zeuss; Whitley Stokes, Irish Glosses, p. 48; Ebel, Celtic Studies, p. 101). A griddle is thus a grate or little grate. From the same source come It. gradella, Fr. greille, Eng. grill (Diez). Prof. Skeat less probably holds to a Celtic origin, and so Haldemann (Affixes, p. 178).

Nes Seinte Peter . . . istreihit o rode, and Seint Lorenzo ðe gredil. [Was not S. Peter stretched on the cross, and S. Lawrence on the gridiron].—Ancien Riule, p. 362.

Vp a gredire hi leide him seþþe; ouer a gret fur and strong

To rosti as me deþ verst flesc.

Life of St. Quiriac, Legends of Holy Rood, p. 58, l. 504 (E. E. T. S.).

þe King het þat me scholde anon: vpe a gredire him do

And roste him wip fur & pich.

Life of S. Christopher, l. 203 (Philolog. Soc. 1858, p. 65).

Grydyrnyne, Craticula, craticulum.

Rost yryn, or grodrym, craticula, crates.

Prompt. Parvulorum (1440).

þe gredirne & þe goblotes garnyst of syluer.
Alliterative Poems, p. 73, l. 1277 (14th cent.).

Their Boucan is a grediron of fowre cratches, set in the ground, a yard high, and as much asunder, with billets laid thereon, and other stickes on them grate-wise. On this they rost the flesh.—Purchas, Pilgrimages, America, Bk. viii. ch. 5, § i. p. 1037.

The Scotch have altered griddle to girdle.

Wi' jumping and thumping

The verra girdle rang.

Burns, Works, p. 48 (Globe ed.).

GRIFFIN, a term applied in India to a novice or green-horn. Can this be from Fr. griffon, griffonneur, one who writes badly, and so a backward pupil, a novice or béjaune?

GRIG. The proverbial expression "Merry as a grig" is probably a corruption of the older "Merry as a Greek." The word has been generally understood to mean a small, wriggling eel, so called perhaps from its colour, A. Sax. græg, gray, just as another fish has been named a "grayling." As "grig," however, is a provincial term also for the cricket, as it were the gray insect, in Icelandic grá-magi, "gray-maw" (compare the "gray-fly" of Milton's "Lycidas"), it is more natural to suppose that the phrase is synonymous with another equally common, "as merry as a cricket;" the cheerful note of the cricket, even more than its lively movements, causing it to be adopted as an exemplification of merriment. Holland has "grig hens" (Pliny, i. 298), cf. W. Cornwall grig-gan, a grasshopper (M. A. Courtney, E. D. S.).

The high-shoulder'd grig,
Whose great heart is too big

For his body this blue May morn.

Lord Lytton, Poems (Owen Meredith).

But grig is probably a popular substitute for Greek. Cotgrave, for example, explains gouinfre, "a madcap, merry grig, pleasant knave," gringalet, "a merry grig, pleasant rogue, sportfull knave." Grec, gregeois, griesche, gregue, are various French spellings of the word Greek (compare "gregues, foreign hoss [i.e. Greek], wide slops, grags" (Cotgrave); and the word gringalet, a merry grig, may be only another form of grigalet or grogale, a diminutive of grec, i.e. a greeking, græculus, n being inserted as in the old French term for holy water, gringoriane, a corrupted form of gregoriane, "so termed," says Cotgrave, "because first invented by a Pope Gregory."

From the effeminacy and luxurious living into which the later Greeks degenerated after their conquest by the Romans, their name became a byword for bon-vivants, good fellows, or convivial companions.

She [Maria Cæsariſſa] abruptly vented herself in these expressions, "Greece is grown barbarous and quite bereft of its former worth; not so much as the ruins of valour left in you, to reach forth unto posterity any signes that you were extracted from brave ancestors . . . The merry Greek hath now drowned the proverb of the valiant Greek."—T. Fuller, The Profane State, p. 465 (1648).

The boonest Companions for drinking are the Greeks and Germans; but the Greek is the merrier of the two, for he will sing, and dance, and kiss his next companion; but the other will drink as deep as he.—Howell, Fam. Letters (1634). Bk. ii. 54.

"No people in the world," it has been said, "are so jovial and merry, so given to singing and dancing, as the Greeks" (P. Gordon). So Bishop Hall, in his "Triumphs of Rome," having spoken of the wakes, May games, Christmas triumphs, and other convivial festivities kept up by those under the Roman dition, adds these words—"In all which put together, you may well say no Greek can be merrier than they." In Latin, græcari, to play the Greek, meant to wanton, to eat, drink, and be merry.

[They drank cups] sometimes as many together as there were letters contained in the names of their mistresses. Inſomuch that those were proverbially ſaid to Greeke it, that quaft in that faſhion.—Sandys, Truvels, p. 79.

Shakespeare ſays of Helen, "Then ſhe's a merry Greek indeed" (Troilus and Cressida, i. 2), and the phrase occurs repeatedly in other writers of the ſame period. Cotgrave defines averlan to be "a good fellow, a mad companion, merry Greek, ſound drunkard;" while Miegé gives "a merry grig, un plaisant compagnon," and "They drank till they all were as merry as grigs" occurs in "Poor Robin's Almanac," 1764. We can eaſily perceive that the latter phrase, both in ſound and ſignification, aroſe out of, or was at leaſt fuſed with, the older one "as merry as a Greek." That the connexion between the two was remembered and recognized ſo late as 1820 is proved by the following quotation, which I take from Nares—

A true Trojan and a mad merry grig, though no Greek.—Barn. Journ. vol. i. p. 54.

Matthew Merygreeke, the "needy Humorist" in Udall's Ralph Roister Doister (1566), ſays:—

Indeede men ſo call me, for, by him that us thought,
Whatever chance hetide, I can take no thought.

Act i. ſc. 1 (Shaks. Soc. ed. p. 2).

I'll cut as clean a caper from the ladder,
As ever merry Greek did.

Massinger, The Bondman, v. 3 (ſub fin.).

In Sussex grig by itſelf means gay, merry. "He's always ſo grig" (Parish, Glossary, p. 50).

I left the merry griggs . . . in ſuch a hoigh yonder! ſuch a frolic! you'll hear anon.—R. Brome, A Jovial Crew, i. 1 (1652).

Let us hear and ſee ſomething of your merry grigs, that can ſing, play gambols, and do feats.—Id. ii. 1.

GRIMASK, in the old play of The Women's Conquest, 1671 (Nares). "No more of your grimasks," ſeems to be a corruption of grimaces, under the influence of mask.

GRINNING SWALLOW, a Scottiſh name for groundſel, alſo grundieswallow, grundieswally, are corruptions of A. Sax. grundswelge (Britten and Holland).

GRIZZLE, a name for the gooſeberry in ſome parts of Scotland, is a corrupted form of grosel, Fr. groseille, Lat. grossularia.

GROOM, formerly any kind of manſervant, ſeems to be a corrupted form of old Eng. gome, A. Sax. guma (= O. H. Ger. gomo, Lat. homo, ſtem gamon, the "earth-born," akin to Lat. humus, the ground, Gk. chamai, Fick), the r being due to a confuſion with Icel. gromr, a boy, O. Dut. grom, O. Fr. gromme, whence gromet, a valet, and gourme de chambre (See Scheler, s.v. Gourme).

And gomes of gowrlande ſall get vp þar baneris.—Bernardus de cura rei familiaris, p. 26, l. 117 (E. E. T. S.).

Hire meiden mei techen ſum lutel meiden [et were dute of forto leornen among gromes [= boys].—Anceren Riule, p. 422.

Ich am nou no grom,

Ich am wel waxen.

Havelok the Dane, l. 790.

GROUNDS, the dregs or ſediment of coffee or other liquids, ſo ſpelt as if it signified the ground or bottom precipitated by a liquor (A. Sax. grund), is really the same word as grouts, the lees or grains left after brewing, with n inserted, as is common, A. Sax. grūt (Lœce Boc. iii. lix. Cockayne), Dutch gruyte, Low Dutch gruus, Gal. gruid, dregs, Norm. grut, connected with grit, groats, A. Sax. grœt, Ger. grütze. Cf. W. Cornwall grudglings, dregs, Ang. Ir. gradians, "Groundes, lyse of any lycoure, lie" (Palsgrave, 1530). "Grown-desope of any lycoure, Flex, sedimen" (Prompt. Parv. c. 1440). Orminn, about 1200, says "þiss winn iss drunnkenn to þe grund" (vol. ii. p. 133); he means, no doubt, to the lees, and not as Mr. Oliphant curiously interprets it, "down to the ground" = omnino Old and Mid. English, p. 219).

A' com'd in heal'd with . . . grute [covered with mud].—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 6.

Grute, Greet, coffee grounds, finely pulverized soil Growder, soft granite used for scouring.—M. A. Courtney, W. Cornwall Glossary, E. D. S.

The nasalized form is also found in Celtic grunndas, dregs.

GROUNDSEL, the name of the plant Senecio, assimilated to groundsel or groundsil, the threshold of a door (Bailey), was originally ground-swallow, A. Sax. grund-swelge, from swelgan to swallow or devour. It is still called in Scotch and Prov. Eng. grundy-swallow (Prior). Compare, however, Ir. grunnasg. An old form of the word is groundswell, as if that where-with the earth teems.

This groundswell is an hearbe much like in shape vnto Germander.—P. Holland, Plinie's Nat. Hist. (1634), vol. ii. p. 238.

Senecio, grund-swylyge.—Wright's Vocabularies, p. 68.

Levins has the corrupt form grene-swel (Manipulus, 56, 1570), but not grounsoyle, p. 215 (as Skeat), which is a distinct word.

GROVEL. This verb seems to have originated in the mistaken notion that groveling, in such phrases as "to lie groveling," was a present participle. The word, however, is really an adverb and to be analyzed, not into grovel + ing, but into grove + ling, i.e. groof-long, along the groof or groufe, an old English word for the belly. Similar forms are headling and headlong, flatling and flatlong, darkling and darklong. Prof. Skeat, I find, has come to the same conclusion, comparing Icel. byggja á grúfu, to lie on one's belly (Cleasby, 218). "They fallen groff, and crien pitously."—Chaucer, O. Tales, l. 951.

The Lord steirit upe an extraordinar motion in my hart, quhilk maid me atteans, being alean, to fall on gruiff to the ground.—J. Melville, Diary, 1571, p. 24.

Layin mysel down a' my length on my grufe and elbow.—Wilson, Noctes Ambrosianæ, vol. i. p. 293.

Gravelynge, or grovelynngys, Suppine.—Prompt. Parv.

To make grufelynge, supinare.—Cath. Anglicum.

It is natures check to us, to have our head beare upward, and our heart grovell below.—Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, p. 753 (fol.).

Grouelyng to his fete pay felle.

Alliterative Poems, p. 33, l. 1120 (14th cent.).

Flat on the ground himself he groveling throwes.

Syloester, Du Bartas, Div. Weekes & Workes, p. 338 (1621).

Holland (1609) has the spelling grovelong, and wombelyng in Kyng Alisaunder (l. 5647) occurs in a like signification. Somewhat similarly, to bant, a piece of modern slang for putting one's self on regimen as Mr. Banting did, was the audacious coinage of some laconic wit who resolved that gentleman's name into a present participle. The verb TO SIDLE owes its existence to a like mistake (see infra); and to darkle has been evolved out of the adverb darkling. Compare edging (Cotgrave, s.v. Az).

People . . . rush upon death and chop into hell blindling.—Ward, Sermons, p. 57 (ed. Nichol), 1636.

GROW-GRAIN, an old corruption of rogram, formerly spelt rogram, from Fr. gros grain, stuff of a coarse grain.

Wither in his Satires speaks of Turkey Grow-graines, Chamblets, Silken Rash,

And such like new devised foreign trash.

Banffshire grow-grey, understood as cloth made of the natural grey wool as it grows, is doubtless the same word.

She keeps hir man weel bappit wee grow-grey.—Gregor, Banff Glossary.

GROWLER, a slang term for a four-wheeled cab, refers to its slow pace compared with the two-wheeled hansom, and is only another form of "crawler," compare old Eng. growl, to crawl; growing, the premonitory shivering of ague; apparently akin to Fr. grouiller, grouiller, to move, stir, give signs of life, . . . to swarme, abound, or break out in great numbers (Cotgrave), grosler, crosler, crouler, to shake, tremble. These latter forms seem to be from O. Fr. crodler (crotlar), Prov. crotlar, from Lat. corotulare, to roll together (Diez). "He died of lice continually growing out of his fleshe, as Scylla and Herode did."—Udal, Erasmus's Apophthegmes, 1564. On the other hand crawl was sometimes used for growl. See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. vv.

GUARD-FISH, a provincial name for the Beloné vulgaris (i.e. needle-fish), is a corruption of its ordinary name gar or gar-fish, from A. Sax. gár, a spear, Icel. geirr, so called from its sharp-pointed snout. Compare its other names, gore-bill, long-nose, sea-needle, sea-pike, whaup-fish, i. e. curlew-fish (Satchell, E. D. S.).

GUERDON. If the rights of every word were strictly regarded, instead of guerdon we should use some such form as withloan, or witherloan. Our Anglo-Saxon forefathers had the word wiðerleán for a recompense, literally, leán, a loan, wage, or reward, wiðer in return (or as a set-off, &c., for work done), O. H. Ger. widarlôn. This word being adopted into the Romance languages, in which Lat. donum, a gift, was familiar, but leán, lôn, strange, was changed into guiderdone in Italian (Low Lat. widerdonum), guerredon (as if "war-gift") and guerdon in old French, galardon (for gadardon) in Spanish. From the French we received back our mutilated loan-word, as guerdon. (Diez.)

It is good to serue suche a lorde that gar-donethe his seruauant in suche wise.—Book of the Knight of La Tour-Landry, p. 4 (E. E. T. S.). [They] doen their service to that soveraigne Dame,
That glory does to them for guerdon graunt.
Spenser, F. Queene, I. x. 59.

GUEST, an old form of ghast or ghost, Scot. ghaist, as if the soul were regarded as an inmate of the bodily house.

Breathlesse thé lyen,
Gaping against the moon; their guests were away.
Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 232, l. 401 (ghosts, Lyme MS.).

GUEST-TAKER, another form of gist taker (otherwise agister), quoted by Mr. Wedgwood from Bailey, meaning one who takes in cattle to pasture (Fr. giste, gîte), as if one who plays the host to his neighbour's cattle. (Philolog. Trans. 1855, p. 69.)

Giste is from gésir, to lie (Lat. jacēre), and means properly a resting-place; cf. Fr. ci git, here lies, common in epitaphs. The gist of a matter is how it lies. Holland uses gist for a halting-place or night's lodging. "The guides . . . cast their gists and journeys" (Livy, p. 1193.)

Kennett says that "to gise or juice ground, is when the lord or tenant feeds it not with his own stock, but takes in other cattle to agist or feed it."—Parochial Antiquities (1695), E. D. Soc. Ed. p. 13.

GUINEA-PIG, is supposed to be a corruption of Guiana-pig, as it came from S. America, and chiefly from Brazil (Skeat, Etym. Dict.).

GUM, when used in the sense of an exudation or secretion from a sore, the eyes, &c., is a corruption of old Eng. gownd (pus, sanies), A. Sax. gund, matter (Læce Boc, I. iv. 2, Cockayne). Compare Hind. gond, gum.

Gownde of þe eye. Ridda alhugo.—Prompt. Parv.

The adjectival form of the word, generally applied to the eyes, is gunded, gowndy, gunny (Yorks.), gowndye (Skelton).

In the following from Shakespeare gowne seems to be the same word, in the sense of secretion:—

Our poesy is as a gowne which uses [oozes]
From whence 'tis nourisht.

Timon of Athens, i. 1 (1st Fol. 1623).

When the same writer, with reference to horses, speaks of

The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,

the word is possibly the same.

So the red-gum, an eruptive humour mentioned in Langham's Garden of Health, 1579, is "reed gownde," in Palsgrave, 1530, "Redgound, sekeness of yonge chyldryne, Scrophulus," in the Promptorium Parvulorum, ab. 1440.

Radegownde, Vision of Piers Plowman, c. xxiii. 83 (on which See Prof. Skeat's note).

In Gawain Douglas's Bokes of Eneados, gum is used for an exhalation or mist, see Glossary, s. v.

Devonshire Barn-gum, some inflammatory skin disease, is perhaps Bairn, or child's gum (Exmoor Courtship, l. 557, E. D. S.).

As soon as ever he saw the child he said just as we did, that it was nothing in the world but the red gum.—Jane Austen, Sense and Sensibility, vol. iii. ch. 1.

GUM-DRAGON, O. Eng. dragant, Fr. dragant, altered from tragacantha, Greek tragakántha, the "goat-thorn," Spanish dragante, "a kinde of gumme that burneth" (Minsheu). In Latin the form dragantum is found as well as tragacanthum.

GUTTA PERCHA, so called as if from Lat. gutta, a drop, denoting the exudation from the tree, is an Anglicized form of the Malayan name, getah pertjah, i.e. "gum of Sumatra" (Scheler), sometimes spelt gatak pertcha (Devic). Percha (or as the French spell it, Pertjah) is the native name for Sumatra, whence the gum was originally brought, being obtained there in abundance. (F. M'Nair, Perak and the Malays.)

GYR-FALCON, apparently so called from its gyrating flight, like old Eng. "wheel-hawk," "Fulco, hweal-hafoc."—Wright's Vocabularies, p. 77; but see GERFALCON.

Girofalcones a giro dicti sunt eo quod in girum et circuitus multos tempus expendunt.—Alex. Neckam, De Nat. Rerum, chap. xxvi.

H.

HACK-BERRY, a North-country name for the fruit of Prunus Padus, is a corruption of Heg-berry, i.e. Hedge-berry, A. Sax. hege, hedge. Cumberland children say "we caw them hegberries because they heg our teeth," i.e. set them on edge.—Britten and Holland, Plant-Names, p. 253. Another corruption is Hag-berry.

HACKBUSH, an obsolete name for a heavy hand-gun (Wright), is an evident corruption of haquebut, i.e. a "hook-but," according to Sir S. D. Scott, from its stock being hooked or bent. (The British Army, vol. i. p. 258), but see ARQUEBUSS, supra.

Wright also gives the form shagebush. Harquebush occurs in Elizabeth's instructions to the Erle of Bedford (Scott, op. cit., p. 351).

HACKBUT, } old names for the arque-
HAGBUT, } bus (O. Fr. haquebute, as if connected with buter, to thrust), are corruptions of Dut. haakbus, the gun, bus, with a hook, haak, or support from which it was fired.

HAD RATHER, an idiomatic use, as in the sentence "I had rather starve than be dishonest," meaning I prefer, wish sooner (Lat. malò, i.e. mage-volo), seems to have been evolved out of the clipt and colloquial idiom I'd rather, I'ud rather, for I would rather, i.e. I should will or wish rather, misunderstood as I'ad rather, I had rather. The phrase in other moods and tenses consequently does not exist. Cf. "I had as lief," and see Craik, English of Shakespeare, p. 102.

Than such faire words I'de rather the fowle,
Vntuned schreeching of the dolefull owle
Or heare the direfull mountaine-wolfe to howle.

T. Fuller, Dauids Heavie Punishment, 26 (1631).

I had rather be a kitten and cry mew.

Shakespeare, 1 Hen. IV. iii. 1.

I had rather be a dog and bay the moon.

Id., Julius Cæsar, iv. 3.

HAGGARD, thin, worn-looking, so spelt as if the original meaning was farouche, wild-looking, like a haggard or untamed hawk; cf. "hagard, that has a fierce or wild look."—Bailey. It is really, says Prof. Skeat, a corruption of hagged (Lestrange, Gray), i.e. thin and scraggy like a hag or witch (Etym. Dict. s. v.).

Bailey, however, gives "hagger, lean, thin," which surely must be equated with Ger. hager, thin, hagern, to grow lean (cf. Cornish hager, ugly, Welsh hagr). Scheler notes that in German hager-falk (lean-falcon) is a popular corruption of hagart-falk, a haggard-falcon.

O. Fr. heingre, lank, Norm. haingre, sickly, which might seem to be allied, are from Lat. eger, sick, with an intrusive n. A haggard hawk is one used to live in the hedges or hags (A. Sax. hege), as a ramage was one that lived in the branches (rames), cf. savage (salvage), living in the woods (silvæ).

No colt is so unbroken,
Or hawk yet half so haggard or unmann'd!
B. Jonson, The Sad Shepherd, act iii. sc. 1
(Works, p. 501).

Fancy, that wild and haggard faculty,
Untamed in most, and let at random fly,
Was wisely govern'd, and reclaimed by thee.
J. Oldham, Upon the Works of B. Jonson, 3 (1678).

The first yeere of her trade she is an eyesse, scratches and cries to draw on more affection:
the second a soare: the third a ramage whoore; the fourth and fift, she's an intermewer, preies for herselfe, and ruffles all she reaches; . . . now shee growes weary and diseas'd together . . . the next remove is haggard, still more cunning; and if my art deceive me not, more crazy.—Sir Thos. Over-bury, Characters, Works, p. 83 (ed. Rimbault).

Dryden has the curious spelling hag-gared.

Some haggared Hawk, who had her eery nigh,
Well pounced to fasten, and well winged to fly.

The Hind and Panther, Part III. l. 1116.
His wild disordered walk, his haggared eyes.
Id. Part I. l. 166.

HAG-ROPES, a Somerset name for the wild clematis or traveller's joy, from A.
Sax. hege, hage, a hedge, Dut. haag.

HAIR-GRASS, an imitation of its Latin name aira (Prior).

HAIRUP, } North country names
HAIROUGH, } for the plant galium aparine, or goose-grass, also hay-rough, are corrupt forms of harif, its name in other places [not from an imagined Fr. heriffe, rough, bristling, as Britten and Holland,
p. 242, which is merely a misreading of herissé, with long s's, in Cotgrave; but]
O. Eng. hayryf, A. Sax. hegerife (Somner), apparently for hege-reafer or "hedgereaver," hedge-robber, so called from its habit of catching or laying hold of anything that touches it. For the same reason it was called "of som Philanthropos, as though he should say, a mans friend, because it taketh hold of mens garments."—Gerard, Herbal, p.
964. Compare its names cleavers and catch-weed; and country-lawyers, a Leicestershire word for brambles, as fleecing what they seize on.

Hayryf, herbe, Rubea.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

The whole plant is rough, and his ruggednes taketh holde of mens vestures and woollen garments as they pass by.—Gerard, Herbal
(1597), p. 964.

HAIRY-MOUSE, and AIRY-MOUSE, names for the bat in W. Cornwall (Courtney), are perhaps corrupted forms of A. Sax. hréremūs, a bat (the rearing or flying mouse, from hréran, to agitate), Prov. Eng. rere-mouse.

HALF AN EYE, in the phrase "one may see it with half an eye," i.e. at a glance, easily, seems to have meant originally with half one's ordinary sight (acie dimidiatâ), old Eng. halfen-eye (like halfen-deal), a term which Spenser applies to the one-eyed Malbecco.

And our curate is called no doubt
A papiste London throughout;
And truth is it, they do not lye:
It may be sene wyth half an eye.

Doctour Double Ale, l. 210 (Early Pop. Poetry, vol. iii. p. 313).

So perfect in that art was Paridell,
That he Malbeccos halfen eye did wyle;
His halfen eye he wiled wondrous well,
And Hellenors both eyes did eke beguyle.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, III. x. 5.

What craft, deceite and robbery can there bee in dice playing? Are not the little dice cast downe vpon the table, that euery man may see them that hath but half an eye, and may easily tell euery pricke and poynt vpon them?—J. Northbrook, Treatise against Dic-ing, Dancing, &c., 1577, p. 117 (Shaks. Soc.).

HALF-PACE, a technical word for a raised floor, platform, or daïs, is a corrupt form of the old word hal-pace or hal-pas, which apparently stands for haut-pace, Fr. haut pas, "high step," old Eng. hautepace (Hall's Chronicle).
See Glossary of Architecture, s.v.

Each stair also in the half way having a pause or half-pace which is very large and square, flagg'd with Porphyre, and lined at the sides with a brighter coloured Marble than the rock, which divides the double stair, and above the half-pace winds the contrary way to what it is below.—*Sir Thos. Herbert,
Travels*, 1665, p. 147.

HALF SEAS OVER, a popular phrase for partially drunk, tipsy, is perhaps a modification of the old expression upsee, understood as over sea, frequently used by old writers in the phrases to drink upsee Dutch (Jonson), and upsee-freeeze (Dekker), said to be for op zyn fries, "in the Frisian fashion" (Nares). Thus the meaning would be half way to total inebriety. Wright gives overseen = tipsy (Prov. Dict.) which may be connected.

To title a drunkard by we (loath to give him such a name so gross and harsh) strive to character him in a more mincing and modest phrase, as thus . . . . One that drinks upsee-freeeze.—T. Heywood, Philocothonista.

HALLI-WORT, i.e. Holy Wort, an old Eng. name for the plant Fumaria bulbosa, is a corrupt form of Hole-wort or Hollow-root, Radix cava (Cockayne, Leechdoms, &c. vol. iii. Glossary: Gerard, Herball, p. 930).

HALLOWEEN, according to Mr. Oliphant, is not, as generally understood, a contraction of [All] Hallow's een, All Saints' Eye(n), but the modernized form of old Eng. halehenes (or halezene) in the Ancren Riwle, p. 94, A. Sax. halgana (sanctorum), a genitive plural. He observes that some churches dedicated to All Saints or All Hallows were formerly called All Hollands.—Oliphant, Old and Mid. Eng. p. 272. The Ancren Riwle has also the form Alre hallowene dei (p. 412). So Hallowmass (Shakespeare) is for All Hallows' Mass, from Mid. Eng. halowe, a saint, A. Sax. hálga (See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.).

þe Tapeners . . . fram alle halowenetyd for here work shullen take for þe cloth xvij.d. : ffram þe annunciation of oure lady, and of þat tyme for to an-øper tyme of al-halowene, ij.s.—English Gilds, p. 351 (Ed. Toulmin Smith).

Uor alle his halowene lue [For the love of all his saints].—Ancren Riwle, p. 330.

About all-hallantide (and so till frost comes) when you see men ploughing up beath ground, or sandy-ground, or green-swards, then follow the plough.—I. Walton, Compleat Angler (1653), chap. xii.

Frydaye, that was the xxx. day of Octobre, we made sayle, but the wynde arose eftsones so cōtrariouly ayenst vs, that we were fayne to fayle to an acre by the coste of the sayd yle of Alango, . . . and there we lay Saterdaye, Athulowe Ewyn, all daye.—Pylgrimage of Syr R. Guylyforde, 1506, p. 59 (Camden Soc.).

HAMMER-BLEAT, a name for the snipe in the Cumberland dialect. From the resemblance of the summer note of the bird to the bleat of a goat, it has been called in French chèvre volant, in Scotch the heather-bleat (Johns, British Birds in their Haunts, p. 447). Hammer-bleat is probably a corruption of O. Norse hafr, A. Sax. hæfer, a goat, and bleat (Ferguson, Glossary, s. v.). The snipe is also called in Scotch the earn. (=eagle) bleater, heron-bluter, and yarn-bliter. In Ælfric's vocabulary (10th cent.) occurs "Bicoca, hæfer-bleate vel pen" (Wright, Vocabularies, p. 21, and again s. v. Bugium, p. 28); A. Sax. hæfer-bleat, bleating of a goat.

When you say that in breeding-time the cock-snipes make a bleating noise, and I a drumming (perhaps I should rather have said a humming) I suspect we mean the same thing.—G. White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, Letter 39.

The laverock and the lark,
The haukie and the bat,
The heather-bleat the mire-snipe,
How many birds be that? [Ans. Three.]
Chambers, Pop. Rhymes of Scotland, p. 42 (1842).

HAMMER-CLOTH, the covering of a coach-box, is said to have been originally hamper-cloth, the box in early times having been nothing more than a large pannier, hamper, or hanaper. The hanaper, old Eng. hany-pere (Prompt. Parv.) was a receptacle, sometimes made of wood, for cups, Fr. hanap, A. Sax. hncap. T. L. O. Davies quotes an instance of hamer-cloth from a document of the time of Queen Mary (Supp. Eng. Glossary).

I have not been able to verify this derivation, but it seems more probable than that hammer denotes a (bear-skin) covering, Icel. hamr (A. Sax. hama), a covering, as asserted in Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1855, p. 32. So, however, Prof. Skeat, who regards it as an adaptation of Dut. hemel, an arched roof, "the testern of a couch [not "coach"]."—Sewel.

HAMMERGRATE is the disguise that the verb to emigrate assumes in N. W. Lincolnshire (Peacock, Glossary).

HANDCUFFS. This word for manacles, as if euphemistically cuffs for the hands, is a corruption of A. Sax. hand-cops (which was perhaps mistaken for a plural), cops or cosp denoting a fetter (cf. cispan, to fetter). In provincial English cops is still used for the connecting crook of a harrow, and cosp for the fastening of a door. Welsh cuyffion, stocks [? Eng. gyves], cosp, punishment, Gael. ceap, stocks, also to catch or hold, Lat. capere, are probably related. Manica, handcops.—Wright's Vocabularies, p. 95.

HANDICRAFT, a corruption of hand-craft, A. Sax. hand-craeft, a trade, from a false analogy to handiwork, i. e. handiwork, O. Eng. hond-iwerk, A. Sax. hand-geweorc, geweorc being another form of weorc (see Skeat, Etym. Dict., s. v.)

Hence risen learned men in eche estate, Cooning in handy craft and facultie.
F. Thynn, Debate between Pride and Lowliness (ab. 1568), p. 22 (Shaks. Soc.).

HAND-OF-GLORY, the hand of a person who had been hanged prepared with certain superstitious rites, and used by housebreakers "to stupify those to whom it was presented, and to render them motionless, insomuch that they could not stir any more than if they were dead." See an account of the charm by Grose, translated from Les Secrets du Petit Albert (1751), in Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. iii. p. 278 (ed. Bohn).

The whole formula probably arose from a misunderstanding of the French term main-de-gloire, a name for the mandragora, a plant of notoriously magical properties, and a corruption of mandragore, which Cotgrave gives with the alternative forms mandegloire and mandregloire. "Main de gloire, the name of a pretended charm made with the root of mandragoras prepared in a certain manner, to which impostors attribute the power of doubling the money to which it is applied. It is an alteration of mandegloire, which in its turn is an alteration of mandragore. Resulting from this disfigurement of the word is main-de-gloire, the name of another pretended charm, which is made with the haud of one who has been hanged, enveloped in a grave cloth" (Littré).

Here is the description of it given by Mr. Dousterswivel:—

De hand of glory is vary well known in de countries where your worthy progenitors did live—and it is hand cut off from a dead man, as has been hanged for murther, and dried very nice in de shmoke of juniper wood; and if you put a little of what you call yew wid your juniper, it will not be any better—that is it will not be no worse—then you do take something of the fatsh of de bear, and of de badger, and of de great eber, as you call de grand boar, and of de little sucking child as has not been christened (for dat is very essentials), and you do make a candle, and put it into de hand of glory at de proper hour and minute, with de proper ceremonish, and he who seeksh for treasursh shall never find none at all.—Scott, The Antiquary, chap. xvii.

For the remarkable "Stainmore story" about the Hand of Glory, see Monthly Packet, vol. xxiv. p. 253.

From the earliest times the mandrake has been used for charms and love philtres (Gen. xxx. 14), whence its name Cirœa, and "Devil's apple" an Arabic name for its fruit. It really possesses a soporific and intoxicating power, and was formerly used as an anæsthetic, like chloroform at present. "It is an ordinary thing to drink it . . . before the cutting or cauterizing, pricking or launcing of any member, to take away the sence and feeling of such extreme cures. And sufficient it is in some bodies to cast them into a sleep with the smel of Mandrage against the time of such Chirurgery."—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist., vol. ii. p. 235. See also Bochart, Opera, vol. iii. p. 865. Compare MANDRAGON. Hence, no doubt, the supposed stupifying power of the main-de-gloire. The belief that it was produced under the corpse of one hanged may have contributed to the ghastly form assumed by the charm.

There have been many ridiculous tales brought vp of this plant, whether of olde wices or some runnagate surgeons or phisick-mongers. . . . They adde further, that it is neuer or verie seldome to be founde growing naturally but vnder a gallows, where the matter that hath fallen from the dead bodie, hath giuen it the shape of a man.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 281.

HANDIRONS, a corrupt form of andirons (Glossary of Architecture, Parker). See s. v. ENDIRONS, the quotation from Quarles.

HANDSENYIE, a word used in old Scotch writers for a standard, token, or standard-bearer (Jamieson), is a corruption of the Scotch amsenye, or ensenyie, old Eng. ancien, ancient, Fr. enseigne, "ensign," Lat. insignia.

HANDSAW, in the proverbial expression "to know a hawk from a handsaw" (Hamlet, ii. 2, 396), was no doubt originally a hernshaw, which is a corruption of the older form heronsewe, apparently altered from Fr. héronneau, a young heron, under the influence of hernshaw, a heronry, a shaw or wood frequented by herons (Skeat).

Minerva's hernshaw and her owl
Do both proclaim, thou shalt control
The course of things.

B. Jonson, The Masque of Augurs (1622).

HANDWHYLE, an old Eng. word for a short space of time, A. S. hand-hwyl, as if the turning of a hand (hand-hwyrft). Thus Langland says the Latin fathers. Harowede in an hand-whyle a holy Scripture.

Vision of Piers Plowman, C. xxii. 272
(ed. Skeat).

Herkings now a hondwile of a high cas.

Alliterative Troy-book, l. 7346 (E. E. T. S.).

Handwhile, in consequence of the instability of the aspirate, may very well be for and-while, a breathing-time, which gives a much better sense, from the old Eng. ande, aande, breath, other forms being onde, oonde (Prompt. Parv.), ende, Scot. aynd, Icel. anda, to breathe, Swed. ände (cf. Lat. an-imus, Gk. án-emos). The Scotch have hand-while, hanlawhile. Old Eng. and, breath, was sometimes written hand, e. g.—

His nose ofte droppes, his hand stynkes.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 775.

While itself (Goth. hweila) seems originally to have meant a rest, a cessation of labour, a period of repose, being immediately akin to Runic hwiler, he reposes, or sleeps (G. Stephens), Goth. (g.) hweilan, Icel. and Scand. hvila, hvile, O. H. G. wilon, to rest.

Gray correctly describes a handwhile in his Ode on the Spring—

Still is the toiling hand of care,
The panting herds repose, &c.

HANDY, a word used in the North of Ireland and elsewhere for convenient, near, as if "close at hand," e.g., "The church is quite handy," is a corruption (and indeed a reversion to the radical meaning) of the old English hende, near, later hendi, A. Sax. gehende.

Ge witon ðæt sumor ys gehende [Ye know that summer is near].—A. S. Version, S. Luke, xxi. 30.

An oðer stret he makede swiðe hendi.

Layamon, Brut (ab. 1205), vol. i. p. 206.

I nas neuer 3et so hardi to neðh him sohende.
William of Palerne, l. 278 (ab. 1350)
ed. Skeat.

Nothing can lie so handy together as our two estates.—H. Fielding, Hist. of a Foundling, book vi. ch. 2.

Handy seems also to be used in Wiltshire as a preposition = near, as Prof. Skeat quotes from the Monthly Magazine, 1812, "handy ten o'clock" (E. D. Soc. Reprint, B. 19).

HANGER, a broad, short, crooked sword (Bailey), so spelt as if named from its hanging by the side, just as the straps by which the weapon was suspended from the belt were also formerly called hangers. Similarly hanger, its name in Dutch, seems to be from hangen (Sewel, 1708).

Zagaglia, . . . a ianefin. Also a Turkish sword or Persian Cimitary. Also a short bending sword called a hanger.—Florio, Ital. Dict. 1611.

Malcus, a faulchion, hangar, wood-knife.—Cotgrave.

In the one hand he had a pair of saddlebags, and in the other a hunger of mighty size.—H. Fielding, Works, p. 693 (ed. 1841).

The word is really a corruption of the Arabic khandjar, a sabre, whence also Fr. cangiar, khanjar, and alfange (= al-khandjar), Devic.

Yataghan, kandjar, things that rend and rip,
Gash rough, slash smooth, help hate so many ways.

Browning, A Forgiveness.

Rawlinson would identify the Persian khandjar with the sagaris of the Masagetæ, comparing the Armenian sac, Lat. securis (Herodotus, vol. i. p. 351). Further corruptions seem to be whingar, whiniard, and WHINYARD, which see.

HANGNAIL, a piece of abraded skin beside the finger-nail, so called as if to denote that which hangs beside the nail, Prov. Eng. angnail, A. Sax. angnægl, apparently that which angvishes the nail (from ange, pain, trouble), the same word as old Eng. agnel.

Laser fetcheth out by the roots the agnels or corns in the feet.—Holland's Pliny, fol. 1634, tom. ii. p. 134.

HARDSHREW, "a kind of wild mouse" (Bailey), a corrupted form of erd-shrew, or earth-shrew, the shrew-mouse.

HARDYMOUSE, a Northampton name for the shrew-mouse, is a similar corruption.

Toporagno, a Night-bat. Also the hardie-shrew.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

HARE'S BEARD, a popular name for the plant mullein (also formerly called Bear's beard, Florio, s. v. Verbasco), is perhaps a mistaken translation, says Dr. Prior, of its Italian name tasso barbasso (as if bearded badger), which is itself a manifest corruption of the Latin Thapsus Verbascum.

HARPERS-CORD, a corruption of harpsicord in old writers, Fr. harpechorde (Cotgrave).

Arpicordo, an instrument like Clarigols called a harpers cord.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

HARPING IRON, a corrupt form of harpon-iron, a harpoon, formerly spelt harpon, Fr. harpon, Dut. harpoen, It. arpagone, from Lat. harpago(n).

Captain Andrew Evans striking one at the Moritius with his harping iron, and leaping into the sea to make short work with his Stelletto, was so crushed by the Mannatee who circled him, that he died shortly after.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 27.

After a long conflict it [a whale] was kill'd with a harping iron, struck in the head, out of which spouted blood and water by two tunnells, and after a horrid grone it ran quite on shore and died.—J. Evelyn, Diary, June 3, 1658.

HARPING JOHNNY, a Norfolk name for the plant Sedum Telephium, is clearly a corruption of Orpine (Johnny). See ORPHAN JOHN.

HARRIDAN, a contemptuous term for an old woman, a withered old beldame, which has been regarded as a derivative of harried, worried, exhausted, worn out (Richardson), is most probable an Anglicized form of Fr. aridelle, or haridelle, "a lean or carrion tit; an ill-favoured fleshless jade; also, an Anatomy, or body whereon there is nought left but skin and bone" (Cotgrave), and that a derivative of aride, dry, withered, without sap (Lat. aridus). In Mod. French haridelle is also applied to a thin scraggy woman. In the Wallon dialect arotte is an ill-conditioned horse, cow, or ass (Sigart), Liège harotte. Compare crone, originally a toothless old ewe, jade, a broken-winded horse, rampike, a decayed old tree.

What Lapland witch, what cunning man,
Can free you from this haridan!

Parson, Imitations of Horace, lib. i. ode 34.

But just endured the winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd Harridan.
And nothing left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk.

Pope, Poems, p. 472, l. 25 (Globe ed.).

C'est le propre d'un cheval puissant, et à l'eschine forte, quand il part promptement, et est ferme en son arrest. Une haridelle qui court la poste, ira plusieurs pas apres qu'on luy a tiré la bride. Qui est cause de cela ?
C'est sa foiblesse.—L'Esprit de François de Sales, tom. i. p. 146 (ed. 1840).

HARRIER, a modern orthography of harier, as if (like harrier, a kind of buzzard) named from its harrying its prey (so Bailey), disguises its true meaning, har(e)-ier, or hare-hound (Skeat).

HARRY SOPH. OR HENRY SOPHISTER, a name at Cambridge for one who has kept all his terms but has not taken his degree, was probably originally Harisoph, i. e. ἱρισσοφ, valde eruditus (Wordsworth, University Life in Eighteenth Cent. p. 644).

HARVEST-ROW, a Wiltshire word for a shrew-mouse, probably corrupted from harvest-shrow or -shrew (E. Dialect Soc. Reprints, B. 19).

HASKWORT, an old name for the plant campanula trachelium, as if good for the hask or hoarseness, appears to have been adapted by Lyte from the German halscruyt (neck-plant). He says they are "soveraigne to cure the payne and inflammation of the necke, and inside of the throte."—Britten and Holland, p. 244. Cf. Cleveland hause, the neck, = Scand. hals.

HASTENER, a tin screen used to reflect the heat of the fire on meat when roasting, so called as if it derived its name from hastening the operation, is really a corruption of the old and provincial Eng. hasteler or hastlere, "pæt rostythete mete (or roostare), assator, assarius."—Prompt. Parvulorum; "Hastener, a screen for the purpose of hastening the cooking of meat (!)."—Stern- berg, Northampton Glossary. Similar words are haistry, the place for roasting meat; hastery and hasteletes, a kind of "rostyd mete;" Prov. Eng. haste, to roast; O. Fr. hastur, Lat. hastator, he who roasts; all from Fr. haste (hâte), a spit or broach, hastelle, a skewer, as it were the spear (Lat. hasta) on which the meat is transfixed and suspended before the fire.

In the Wallon dialect of N. France hate-levée, a piece of roasted bacon, seemingly une pièce levée à la hâte, or dressed in haste, is of similar origin, being from Flemish hasten, to roast. Dr. Sigart thinks that levée here is a corruption of Flem. lever, a liver, and that the dish originally (like Fr. hâte-reau, Flem. snede lever) consisted of pig's liver grilled (Dictionnaire du Wallon de Mons, p. 208).

HATCH-HORN, a Lancashire word for an acorn or acharne, Cheshire atchern. See ACORN.

HATCHMENT, an escutcheon erected over the door where a person has died, is a corruption of achievement, an old spelling of achievement, i.e. a coat-of-arms commemorative of some exploit achieved by himself or his ancestors. The word has been assimilated to hatchment, the ornament of a sword-hilt, hatch, to engrave with lines heraldically, to inlay with silver, to adorn; Fr. hacher. H is often found prefixed to a word where it has no right to be, e.g. old Fr. hache (Cotgrave) = ache, parsley; hermit for eremite; hostage for ostage; howlet for owlet; huisher, hemeravulds (Holland) for usher, emeralds; halder (Ascham) for alder; in the inscriptions of the catacombs hossa, hordine, hobitum, &c., are found for ossa, ordine, obitum, &c. Compare HOSTAGE.

Similarly, it ought to be hit, as it once was. Usher was formerly huscher (Tristrem, p. 40), Fr. huissier; able, hable (Lat. habilis); artichoke, hartichoke; ugly, hugly (Levins); ostler, hostler; ortolan, hortolan; arbour, harbour.

On the other hand, harmony used once to be spelt armony; hymn, ymn; hellebore, eldebore (Holland); hypocrite, ipocrite; heresy, formerly erisie; host, O. Eng. oste; hermit, formerly and properly, eremite. In old texts harm, hend, herl, helder, howle, hoæ, &c., are frequent forms of arm, end, earl, elder, owl, æ, &c.

As a remarkable instance of the perversity of Cockney pronunciation may be mentioned Holborn, originally Old Bourne, which has lately been changed back again into 'Olborn. A song beginning "As I was going up 'Olborn 'ill," was some years ago popular in the music halls of London.

HATTER, in the phrase, "As mad as a hatter," a proverbial libel on a quiet class of tradesmen—stereotyped for the present generation in the excellent fooling of Alice in Wonderland—is perhaps a popular survival of the old English word hetter, meaning furious, violent, inflamed with anger. It still survives in various senses in the Provincial dialects, e.g. hetter, ill-natured, bitter, keen (North), spiteful, malicious (Northampton. Sternberg); Scot. hettle, fiery, irritable; Cheshire hattle, wild; A. Sax. hætol, hot, furious, from A. Sax. hât, hot; Icel. heitr, Swed. het. Compare also O. Eng. hethete, a hot iron; hotter, to boil (North); hotterin, boiling with passion (Craven). Thus the phrase would mean, As mad as a person hot with passion—Ira brevis furor. Cf. "But for her I should ha' gone hothering mad."—Dickens, Hard Times, chap. xi. Compare also Goth. hatis, wrath, hatan, to hate, connected with Sansk. k'anda, hot, flaming, passionate (Bopp).

Hatterliche, hetterly in old English = violently, angrily, fiercely.

He het hatterliche stripen hire steortmaket. —Liflode of S. Juliana (1230), p. 16 (E. E. T. S.). [He bade savagely to strip her stark-naked.]

He braydes to þe quene,
& hent hire so hetterly to hane hire a-strangeled.

William of Palerne, l. 150.

The Alliterative Poems say of Jonah:
þen hef [= heaved] vp þe hete & heterly
brenned . . .

With hatel anger & hot, heterly he call<sup>3</sup>.
P. 102, l. 481.

Hatture is an old spelling of hotter.

On heom is mony yrene beond, þat is hatture þene þe brond.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 151, l. 254.

An absurd comparison has been instituted with the French "Il raisonne comme une huitre." An oyster may be stupid, but scarcely mad.

HAUF-ROCK'T, a word applied to a simple, half-witted person in the Holderness dialect (E. Yorkshire), pronounced auf-raokt, as if to denote one not sufficiently rocked in the cradle. It is really a corruption of auf-, alf-, or elf-rocked, rocked by the fairies, a changeling. Half-rocked in Wright.

So Cumberland hofo-thick, foolish, is no doubt for auf-thick, i.e. thick or intimate with the fairies (A. Sax. wlfr, Icel. alfr), "not all there," but partly in another world; Lonsdale hoofjen, a half-witted person; Cleveland hoaving, hoavish, havvish, awvish, wvfish, silly, for elvish, old Eng. elvisch (Chaucer), Ger. elbisch.

A meer changeling, a very mouster, an aufe imperfect, her whole complexion savours.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, III. ii. 4, 1.

HAUGHTY, a corrupt modern spelling of haudy, haut, havult, Fr. hault, Lat. altus, lofty, from a false analogy to such words as naughty, doughty, taught, caught, where the g is organic.

The h initial is probably owing to the reflex influence of Ger. hoch. Diefenbach suggests a comparison with Prov. Eng. highy, pleasant, cheerful, A. Sax. hyht, hope, joy, &c.—Goth. Sprache, ii. 576.

His corage also hault and fearce, which fayld him not in the very death.—Polydore Vergil, English History (temp. Hen. VIII. Camden Soc.), p. 227.

After that Mens strife-hatching haut Ambition

Had (as by lot) made this lowe World's partition.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 287 (1621).

Then stept forthe the duke of Suffolke . . . and spake with an hault countenance.—Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, Wordsworth, Eccles. Biog. vol. i. p. 435.

Milton speaks of the "jealous hautinesse of Prelates and Cabin Counsellours" (Areopagitica, 1644, p. 33, ed. Arber).

But as ciuilitie and withall wealth encreased, so did the minde of man growe dayly more hauttie and superfluous in all his deuises.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 52 (ed. Arber).

There are some . . . like unto vessels blowne up with winde, filled with a hautie spirit.—Wm. Couper, Heaven Opened (1611), p. 76.

Who ever thinkes through confidence of might,

Or through support of count'uaunce proud and hautt

To wrong the weaker, oft falles in his own assault.

Spenser, F. Queene, VI. ii. 23.

HAVERDRIL, a Cheshire name for the Narcissus, is a corrupted form of old Eng. affadyll, Lat. and Greek asphodelus, the "daffodil," O. Fr. affrodille (Cotgrave).

HAWBOY, more commonly written hautboy, a corruption of the Fr. haut bois. See HOBXY.

Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes.

Dryden, Alexander's Feast, l. 53.

They skip and dauce, and marrying all their voices

To Timbrels, Hawboys, and loud Cornets noises,

Make all the shoars resound, and all the coasts,

With the shrill Praises of the Lord of Hoasts.
J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 364 (1621).

HAWKER has been supposed to have something to do with hawks, and to have had its origin in days of falconry, when the man who bore the "cadger" or cage on which the hawks were perched was known as the cadger. Hawker, an ordinary English term for a travelling merchant or "colporteur," has a similar origin (!).—Sat. Review, Jan. 31, 1880, p. 144. "Hawker" has no more connexion with "hawks" than "cadger" with "cage." It is a disguised form of hucker (fem. huckster), from old Eng. huck, to peddle, Prov. Eng. huker (Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary), Ger. höcker, höker (prob. one who runs up the price, akin to auctioneer).

If we will stand hucking with him, we might get a great deale more.—Bp. Andrewes, Temptation of Christ, p. 51 (1612).

Related words, then, are old Eng. oker, increase, usury, Ger. wucher, Dut. woeker, and Lat. augere, to increase.

Hukstare (al. hukstere), Auxionator, auxionatrix.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Auccionarius, a hukstere: Auccio, ekyngge: Auccionor, to merchant and huk.—Medulla [Way].

I hucke, as one dothe that wolde bye a thing good cheape, Ie harcelle, and Ie marchande.—Palsgrave.

Prof. Skeat thinks that the hucker (Dut. heuker, Dan. hökre) meant originally "a croucher," one who hucks, i.e. bows or stoops, under a burden (sc. a pedlar's pack), comparing Dut. hucken, to stoop, Icel. hokra, to crouch.

I hear thee not at all, or hoarse
As when a hawk hawks his wares.
Tennyson, The Blackbird, Poems, p. 68.

HAWK-NUT, a corruption of hog-nut (bunium flexuosum), sometimes found.—Britten and Holland, p. 245.

HAWS. This name for the fruit of the haw-thorn arose from the supposition that haw-thorn was the plant that bears haws, whereas its name really implies the thorn which grows in the haw, hay, or hedge, A. Sax. haga, hege, Ger. hage (Prior). They are provincially known as hagues or haigs.

HAY, in the old military term "to draw up in Hay" (it occurs in Capt. I. Cruso's Military Discipline, 1689), i.e. in single line, in a row like a hedge (A. Sax. hege), = Fr. en haie, L. Lat. haia.—Scott, The British Army, vol. ii. p. 15.

HAY-SUCK, } Provincial names for the HAY-SAG, } hedge-sparrow, the former in Gloucestershire, the latter in Leicestershire, are corruptions of the old English heisugge, A. Sax. hege-sugge.

Other corrupted forms probably are the Leicestershire hedge-jug, a kind of titmouse, and, in the Eastern counties, hay-jack, the white-throat. See ISAAC.

3æt thu singst worse than the hei-sugge, 3æt flizth bi grunde among the stubbe.
The Owl and Nightingale, l. 506
(Percy Soc.).

HAZEL, as a colour name, applied generally to eyes of a greyish brown, has been regarded as an abbreviation of "hazel-nut-coloured," like chestnut. This seems doubtful when we compare A. Sax. hasu, dark grey, tawny (applied to a wolf or eagle), Icel. höss, grey, dusky (Cleasby), corresponding to Lat. cæsius, grey (usually of the eyes, probably hazel), and perhaps connected with Sansk. çjâna-s, smoke, and çjâma-s, dark-coloured (Curtius, ii. 123). If this be the origin, the word is near akin to haze, originally a grey mist (Skeat). In Northampton hazel is applied to mould or loam; in Cleveland a roan-coloured beast is described as hazled (Atkinson).

All the spirit deeply dawning in the dark of hazel eyes.

Tennyson, Locksley Hall, l. 28.

HAZERD. In the North of Ireland linen is said to be hazerded when partially dried. "Them clothes are not dry at all; they're only hazerded" (Patterson, Antrim and Down Glossary, E.D.S.). This is the same word as Prov. Eng. haze, to dry linen, O. Eng. hazle, to dry, O. Fr. hasler, to expose to the sun, bleach, haslé, sun-burnt, Northamp. hazzled, dry and rough (of the skin), A. Sax. haso, dry, has, husky, hoarse; cf. Sansk. çush, to dry.

Thou who by that happie wind of thine didst hazle and drie up the forlorne dregges and slime of Noahs deluge.—Rogers, Naaman the Syrian, p. 886 (1641).

HEAD-GROW, or head-grove, a Shropshire word for after-grass (Hartshorne, Salopia Antiqua), is a corruption of old Eng. edgrow, Prov. Eng. edgrew (Cheshire), which, according to Bp. Kennet, is from A. Sax. ed, again (= Lat. re-), and growan.

Edgrow (al. ete growe), gresse. Bigermen, regermen.—Pramp. Parv.

The first part of the word is, however, evidently the same as Prov. Eng. eddish (variously corrupted into etch, ersh, esh), A. Sax. edisc, after-math, which may be equated with the O. H. Ger. word azuwisc, which glosses cultura in the Vocabulary of S. Gall (7th cent.), Goth. atisks, a cornfield (Mark ii. 23).

HEARSE, "among Hunters is a Hind in the 2nd Year of his (!) Age" (Bailey, Dict. s. v.), evidently a corruption of the Ger. hirsch, a stag, a hart, originally, no doubt, the "horned" animal, akin to Greek kerat-s, horn, like Esthon. hiru, a stag, Welsh caru, Lat. cervus, and Eng. hart, A. Sax. heart. See Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 539.

HEART, in the somewhat peculiar idiom "to learn by heart," may just possibly be a corruption of rote, Scotch ratt (e.g., ratt rime, a poem repeated by rote), i.e. rut, routine, or a beaten way. "Root, of vse and custome (rot, or vse in custom). Habitus, consuetudo."—Prompt. Parv.

For the metathesis of rote, ratt (? hrat) into hart, heart, compare Dan. orne, a wild boar, with provincial Norse rone, Icel. runi; Shetland runnie; "horse," A. Sax. hors, with hros; "hard," Goth. hardu-s, Gk. kártos, and krátos; "run," with A. Sax. yrnan, O. E. urn, as urd for red (rud). "Heart," though used for the intellectual faculty in other languages (e.g. Lat. re-cord-ari, to remember), does not seem to have been so used in English.

A good memory to learn and get the Parts by heart or wrote [rote].—Address to the Readers, Duchess of Newcastle's Plays, 1662.

Heart, O. Eng. hurte (Life of Beket) is in Sanskrit hrid, and Greek kardia is in Doric kradia.

HEART AT GRASS, i.e. heart of grace, Lyly, Euphues (ed. Arber), pp. 65, 274. Compare Thou takest hart of grasse, wyfe, not hart of grace.

Cum grasse, cum grace, syr, we grasse both in one place.

Heywood (Spenser Soc. ed.), p. 140.

[N. & Q. 4th S. III. No. 56, p. 76.]

I could not but smile at the madde merye doctrine of my freend Richard, and therefore taking hart at grasse, drawing more neere him, I praid him to tell me what Purgatory is, and what they be that are resident there.—Tarltons Neues out of Purgatorie, 1590, p. 57 (Shaks. Soc.).

These foolish puling sighs,
Are good for nothing, but to endanger buttons.

Take heart of grace, man.

W. Cartwright, The Ordinary, act i. sc. 2 (1651).

HEART LIVER, a name for the plant medicago maculata, is a corruption of the more common term Heart-clover.—Britten and Holland.

HEART-SEED, a Buckinghamshire corruption of Heart's-ease (viola tricolor).

HEATHER-BILL, a Banff name for the dragon-fly (Gregor), elsewhere in Scotland called the ather-bill, i.e. adder-bill, in allusion no doubt to its long shape.

HEATHER-BLEAT, a Scottish name for the snipe, is a corruption of old

Eng. hæfer-blæte, goat-bleat. See HAMMER-BLEAT.

HEATHNICALL is Phillip Stubbes' spelling of the word ethnical (Greek ethnicos, pertaining to the Gentiles), which he also gives as hethnicall (Anatomie of Abuses, 1585, pp. 211, 222, ed. 1836), evidently misled by the false analogy of heathen, the heath-dweller. "Bentley would hardly have discommended Stubbes' word; for he gravely tells us: 'The word heathen comes from εἰθνη.—Works, vol. iii. p. 129.'"—Fitzedward Hall, Modern English, p. 155.

The Consul of Rome and his wife were both Ethnicks.—A. V. Translators to the Reader.

HEAVEL, } provincial names for EVIL-EEL, } the conger (Satchell), Scot. heawe-eel, all from Swed. haf-säl, sea-eel, conger, from Swed. and Icel. haf, the sea, Dan. hav. Compare Shetland haaf-fishing, deep-sea fishing, haaf-fish, the great seal.

HEAVER (Kentish), a crab, from A. Sax. hæfern (Læce Boc. I. iv. 2, Cockayne), and that from hæfer, a fork (hæfer-bite, a pair of pincers).—Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1858, p. 101.

Hæfer, meaning fork, is, however, hypothetical; and A. Sax. hæfern (hæbern) is, perhaps, identical with Gk. karabos, Lat. carabus, crabro, s-carabæus, Egypt. krb, chrp, chpr, a beetle. Cf. Cornish gaver, a crayfish (Polwhele). Or more probably, perhaps, like hafuc, hawk, it is akin to A. Sax. habban (Lat. capere), and means "the seizer."

HEEL, to lean over, as a ship does in a heavy wind, is a corrupt form of held or hild, O. Eng. helden, hilden, A. Sax. hyldan, heldan, to incline, tilt, or bend; cf. Dan. helde, to slant (Skeat), Dut. hellen, to incline, bend, heel as a ship (Sewel).

Heldyn', or bowyñ', Inclino, flecto, deflecto.
Prompt. Parvulorum.

Ye bote begynneth to hydle.

Palsgrave, 1530.

To heald, as when you pour out of a Pot.
Ray, North Country Words.

Me schal helden eoli and win beoðe ine wunden [They shall pour oil and wine both into the wounds].—Ancren Riwele, p. 428.

HEIFER, O. Eng. heafre, A. Sax. heafor, would seem originally to have meant the bounding animal (cf. Lat. vitulus, a calf, and vitulari, to skip), from the Sanskrit root cap, camp, to go (? or bound); whence also comes in Greek kápros, the bounding boar, in Latin caper, the bounding goat, Scand. hafr, and A. Sax. haefer, a he-goat (near akin to heifer); and probably also Lat. caballus, a horse, Ir. capall (cf. Sansk. capala, swift.—Pictet, Origines Indo-Européennes, tom. i. pp. 347, 368).

Haefor seems to have been regarded as a compound word in old English, and is frequently written heahfōre, i.e. "high-stepper," with allusion to its rearing and frisky movements, as if from heah, high, and faran, to go (Ettmüller, and Morris, who compares heah-deor, a roe-buck, Accidence, p. 87). Other old forms are hekfere (Prompt. Parv.), hecforde, Prov. Eng. heckfor, as if from heck, an enclosure, like Dutch hokkeling, a heifer, from hok, a pen.

Prof. Skeat thinks the last part of the word is A. Sax. feor, an ox, and that the original meaning of heah-fore was "a high (i.e. full-grown) ox." But the word seems always to have meant specifically a young cow.

You are cruel in compelling your children (for wealth) to goe into loathed beds, for thereby you make them bond-slaves: what ploughman is so foolish to yoke young hefjars and old bullocks together? yet such is your husbandry.—T. Decker, Seven deadly Sinnes of London (1606), p. 44 (ed. Arber).

HEIGHT, a corruption of the older form heighth (Holland's Camden's Britain, p. 537), highth, heighth, A. Sax. heahþu.

And all strong ston wall · sterne opon heibe.
Langland, Pierce the Ploughman's Crede,
l. 213.

Heithe, Altitudo, Culmen.—Prompt. Parvularum.

The ascending pile
Stood fix'd her stately highth.

Milton, Par. Lost, i. 723.

In the middle part of the Quire there stood two Cherubins, made of Olive wood, covered all over with fine gold, whose faces and formes were like unto young children, the heighth of them was ten ells.—Itinerarium, Trauels of the Holy Patriarchs, &c., 1619, p. 12.

HELL-RAKES, spring-teeth rakes, so called "on account of the great quantity of work they dispatch in a short time" (Old Country and Farming Words, E. D. S., p. 121), is a corruption of the older form heel-rakes, or perhaps of ell-rakes, which is also found.

HELPMEET, a very common corruption of the word help-mate, under the influence of Genesis ii. 18, "I will make him an help meet for him," i.e. suitable for him. Helpmeet, therefore, is merely help-fit.

Woman . . . (is) a helpmeet to the Teuton.—Cor. Mythology of Aryan Nations, vol. i. p. 67.

It is so spelt also in Miss Yonge, Womankind (passim); Dasent, Oxford Essays, 1858, p. 212; Faber, On Regeneration, p. 107; Roberts, Oriental Illustrations, p. 3; Contemporary Review, April, 1876; Guardian, Sept. 22, 1875; Clement of Alexandria, Trans. in Ante-Nicene Library, vol. i. p. 128; Charles Kingsley, Life, vol. i. p. 467; Hawkstone, vol. i. p. 85 (2nd ed.).

The man whom we have recommended as a stimulating helpmeet proves unsatisfactory.—The Saturday Review, July 24, 1880, p. 108.

The word translated help-meet (ezer) is masculine.—M. D. Conway, Demonology and Devil-Lore, vol. ii. p. 80.

Help-mate seems a correct formation, like the old word copestmate.

Mr. Fitzedward Hall, who strangely enough holds help-mate to be a corruption of help-meet, quotes the compound meet-help from Bp. Sprat (1692), and "meet helper" from William Strode (1636).

He adduces instances of the classical word helpmate from Macaulay, Foote, Centlivre, Colman, Wordsworth, Lamb, Southey, Kingsley, and Ruskin.—Modern English, p. 156.

HENBANE, A. Sax. henne-belle, "a hen-bell." Perhaps the original form was henge-belle, hanging bell, especially since, in mediæval Latin, the plant was called symphoniaca, a ring of bells.

With the experience of its poisonous quality, and the natural tendency to explain an unaccountable name into something intelligible, Henbell has become Henbane.—Prior.

Henne-belle, the hyoscyamus, occurs in Leechdoms, Wortcunning, &c., ed. Cockayne, vol. i. p. 94.

HENCHMAN, formerly spelt heinsman (Bailey), henseman (Udal), henshman

(Flower and the Leaf, l. 252), and henchman, is probably for heng'st-man, a "horse-man" or groom, from old Eng. hengest, a horse (cf. Dut. and Ger. hengst, a horse); so Spelman, Blount, 1691, and Skeat, Etyim. Dict.

Henxmen, vj enfautes, or more as it shall please the kinge.—Household Book of Edward IV. p. 44 (Antiq. Soc.).

Phrases as neatly deckt as my Lord Majors hensmen.

Jack Drams Entertainement, act i. l. 337 (1616).

Heyncemann (al. henchemanne), Gerolocista.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Those Proctors of Beelzebub, Lucifer's hench-bous.

Randolph, The Muses Looking-Glass, act i. sc. 4.

The very next dish was the mayor of a town,
With a pudding of maintenance thrust in his belly;

Like a goose in the feathers, drest in his gown,
And his couple of hinch-boys hoild to a jelly.

B. Jonson, The Gipsies Metamorphosed
(Works, p. 626).

"Malise, what ho!"—his henchman came;
"Give our safe-conduct to the Græme."

Scott, Lady of the Lake, canto II. xxxv.

At an early period the word came to be regarded as haunch-man, as if one who stands by the haunch or side of his chief to support or defend him (Lat. tegere latus.—Horace), like flunkey, a "flauker," from Fr. flankier, "to be at one's elbow for a help at need" (Cotgrave); sidesman, formerly sideman, an assistant; Scot. backman (= It. colli-tore), a follower in war, a henchman. For the vowel change, compare Cumberland hench, to jerk a stone from the haunch.

Item my Lordis Hansman iij Yonge Gentyllmen in Houshold at their Frendis fyndunge ij = v.—Northumberland Household-Book, p. 10.

Haunsmen or Hanshmen (more frequently written Henchmen or Henxmen) was the old English Name for the Pages, so called from their standing at their Lords Haunch or side.—Ibid., Bp. Percy's note, p. 434.

This officer [the henchman] is a sort of secretary, and is to be ready, upon all occasions, to venture his life in defence of his master; and at drinking-bouts he stands behind his seat, at his haunch, from whence his title is derived, and watches the conversation, to see if any one offends his patron.—Letters from Scotland, ii. 108 (1754).

In a memorandum of certain dresses delivered from the office of the Revels to the City of London, for the coronation of Edward VI. occur,

Two cotts of hanchemen, of tynsyll and crymsyn vellvett, panyd together.

The Losely Manuscripts, p. 68.

HERALD, O. H. Ger. Hari-old (whence the name Harold), i. e. Hari-wold, "army-strength," a warrior, has acquired the specific sense of an officer who makes proclamations from being confused with O. H. Ger. foraharo, a herald, from forharén, to proclaim (Skeat, Etyim. Dict. s.v.).

HERB OF REPENTANCE, a popular name for the plant rue, Lat. ruta, from a confusion with rue (A. Sax. hreo-w-an; cf. Ger. reue), to be sorry. Otherwise Herb of grace.

He must avoid the crimes he lived in;
His Physicque must be Rue (ev'n Rue for sinne)

Of Herb of Grace, a cordiall he must make;
The bitter Cup of true Repentance take.

G. Wither, Britains Remembrancer,
p. 39 recto, 1628.

I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace.

Shakespeare, Richard II. iii. 4.

The spirit. . . prescribes him three herbs: first, rue, or herb of grace, which is repentance: this teacheth him to sorrow for his strife and emulation, and purgeth away the bruised blood.—T. Adams, A Contemplation of the Herbs, Works, vol. ii. p. 465.

HERB PARIS. Paris is here generally assumed to be a proper name, as in its Latin designation Paris quadrifolia. It is properly the genitive of par, a pair, herba paris being the herb of a pair or betrothed couple, so called in reference to its four leaves being set on the stalk like a truelove-knot, whence its other name Herb Truelove (Prior).

HERBY-GRASS, a provincial corruption of Shakespeare's "herb o' grace" (Hamlet, iv. 5), a popular name of rue (Cornhill Mag., July, 1865). Herbe-grass in N. W. Lincolnshire (Peacock). See HERB OF REPENTANCE.

HERE, an old spelling of ear, A. Sax. éare, from a not unnatural assumption that it was akin to hear, A. Sax. hëran. The two words, though of distinct origin, bear a deceptive resemblance in the cognate languages, e.g. Icel. eyra, ear, heyra, to hear; Dan. øre and høre;

Dut. oor and hooren; Goth. auso and hausjan.

He rowned in one of his felawes heres, and saide, "after dyner y wille assaie my wiff, and bidde her lepe into the basin.—Book of the Knight of La Tour-Landry, p. 27 (E. E. T. S.).

Herynge of here, Auditus.—Prompt. Parvulorum (King's Coll. MS.).

HERRING-SUE, a mistaken spelling of the name of the common heron, Eng. heronsew, heronshaw (see HANDSAW), from a mistaken notion that the bird "pursues (O. Eng. sues) the herrings" (Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 258). Cf. herrin-seu (Holderness dialect), heronsewe (Chaucer), hernshaw (Spenser).

HESSIANS, } boots coming up
HESSIAN-BOOTS, } high on the legs
 (a word overlooked in, I think, all the dictionaries), as if boots resembling those worn by Hessian troopers, seems to be only the modern and polite form of the old word "huseans, a sort of Boots or Spatterdashes" (Bailey), Scottish hushions, stockings without feet, gaiters. Hessians, then, are boots and gaiters in one, huseans; and this the more likely, as Hussian is found as a popular pronunciation of Hessian. I have heard an Irishwoman say, "Let her catch a Hussian for herself," meaning, "Let her get a husband of her own" (and not flirt with mine). Scot. hushions is also found as hocshins, hoshens (Jamieson), which is for hoskins, a diminutive of hose, old Eng. hokshynes (for hoskynes, Skeat).

But Willie's wife is nae sae trig,
 She dights her grunzie wi' a hushion.

Burns, Works, p. 207 (Globe ed.).

"She wipes her mouth with a stocking" (not a "cushion", as the Globe editor imagined).

His hosen ouerhongen his hokschynes on eneriche a side,

Al beslombred in fen 'as he þe plow folwede.
Pierce the Ploughmans Crede (ab. 1394),
 l. 426 (ed. Skeat).

Similar in meaning was Fr. houseau, "a course drawer worn over a Stocking in stead of a Boot."—Cotgrave.

The "Hessian boot" was introduced in the reign of George III. (J. R. Planché, Cyclopædia of Costume, i. 48.) In Gillray's caricature, "Monstrosities of 1799," a beau wears "large Hessian boots," projecting above the knee in front, with pendent tassels (see Wright's Caricature History of the Georges, p. 543).

Beneath are ranged in rows all varieties of boots and shoes, from the vamped up Hessians and Wellingtons down to the faded white satin slipper.—Saturday Review, Aug. 7, 1880, p. 170.

HEYDAY! an interjection, assimilated like well-a-day, to alack-a-day, seems to be identical with Ger. heyda! heysa! hoity in hoity-toity! and, perhaps, connected with O. Fr. hait, pleasure, joy. It is spelt highday! in Shakespeare, Tempest, ii. 2, 190 (1623). The heyday (of youth, &c.) is really for high day (Mid. Eng. hey day).—Skeat. Smollett speaks of "the high-day of youth and exultation." See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.v. High Day.

HIC-COUGH, a frequent spelling of hiccup (formerly hickock, Howell), a word meant to imitate the sound produced by the convulsion of the diaphragm.

Senglot the hickock, a yexing.—Cotgrave.

Compare Holstein hückup, Fr. hoquet (O. Eng. hicket), Swed. hicka, the hiccup.

HEW-HOLE, a provincial name for the green woodpecker (Picus viridis).—Johns, British Birds in their Haunts, p. 295. A corruption of heighaw.

Oriot, a Heighaw, or Witwall.—Cotgrave.

Picard huyau, O. Eng. hewel.

It. sgaio, a birde called a Huhole.—Florio.

But most the hewel's wonders are,
 Who here has the holtsteler's care;
 He walks still upright from the root,
 Measuring the timber with his foot.

Marvell, Poems, p. 33 (Murray repr.).

The name heighaw is imitative of its laughing cry (like ha-ha! hee-haw! guffaw), akin to Sansk. kakh, to laugh (Lat. cachinnus); cf. its other names yaffle and yappingale, a barker.

The undulating flight and laugh-like cry of the Green Woodpecker used to be more common than they seem to be now.—J. C. Atkinson, Brit. Birds' Eggs, p. 63.

See HICKWAY.

HICKWAY, } old names for the wood-
HICKWALL, } pecker, still in provincial use. Hickwell, Bailey.

Pic, a woodpecker, Hickway, Greenpeak.—Cotgrave.

Picchiouérde, a greene pecker or hiche way.—Florio.

Other forms are heyhoe, heighaw, hygh-whele, hickle, hickol, and hecco.

The laughing hecco, then the countersetting jay. Drayton, Polyolbion, Song 13.

See HEW-HOLE.

Another popular name for this bird is Equal, Equaal.

I observe Mr. Morris spells the name I have written Equaal in the form Ecle. I have no idea of the origin or etymology of either form.—J. C. Atkinson, British Birds' Eggs, p. 62.

These are evidently but different pronunciations of hickle, hickol, or hickwall.

Hecco, in all probability, properly means the hacker, and was so called from its characteristic habit of pecking old timber in search of insects; Picard. héquer, to hew wood. Compare It. picchio, "a knocke, a peeke, a clap, a iob, a snap, a thumpe or great stroke. Also, a bird called a wood hacker, a wood wall, a wood pecker, a tree iobber, a hickway, a iobber, a spight, a snapper" (Florio). So Lat. picus was probably the pecker, Ger. baumhacker, Dan. træ-pikker, W. cnocell y coed (knocker of the wood), Gk. druokoláptés (wood-striker), Swed. vedknar; and so another bird is called the nut-hatch.

HIDDLE, To, to conceal or keep secret, a Scotch verb developed out of the word hidlins, secretly, an adverbial form, as if it were hidling, a present participle. For similar mistakes, compare GROVEL and SIDLE. Vid. Jamieson, s.vv., Notes and Queries, 5th S. VI. 210.

HIGH JINKS, now sometimes used in the sense of a mad frolic, or great fun, was originally a Scotch game, somewhat like forfeits, the penalties going to pay the reckoning for drink. This was sometimes written hy jinks, and is probably derived from hy, haste (A. Sax. hige), and jink, to dodge, cheat, or move nimbly, the game, as explained in a note to the following passage, requiring both dodging and quickness.

Aften in Maggy's at hy-jinks,

We guzzl'd scuds,

Till we could scarce, wi' hale out-drinks,

Cast off our dnds.

Ramsay, Elegy on Maggy Johnston (1711).

The frolicsome company had begun to practise the ancient and now forgotten pastime of High Jinks.—Scott, Guy Mannering, ch. xxxvi.

And you wha laughing scud brown ale,
Leave jinks a wee, and hear a tale.

Ramsay, The Monk and the Miller's Wife.

Our Batt can dance, play at high jinks with dice,

At any primitive orthodoxal vice.

Batt upon Batt, &c., 1694, p. 5.

Miss Famine, who is the girl for our money, raises the question, whether any of them can tell the name of the leader and prompter to these high jinks of hell.—De Quincey, Works, vol. xi. p. 85.

HIGH-STRIKES, slang for Hysterics.

HIGHT, the perfect tense ("was called") of the old Eng. verb hâtan, to call or be called, = O. Eng. hêt, hêht, corresponding to the reduplicated perfect in Gothic haihait from haitan.

The g seems to have crept in from a mistaken analogy with pight = pitched, tight = tied.

Johan hight that oon, and Alayn hight that other.

Chaucer, The Reeve's Tale.

HIGH-TAPER, } popular names for the HAG-TAPER, } plant verbascum Thapsus, probably from A. S. hege or hega, a hedge, and taper, its stalks when dipped in grease being formerly used for burning (Prior).

Verbasco. Taper-wort, Ling-wort, High-taper, Bigtaper.—Florio.

Mouline, Mulleine, Wooll-blade, Long-wort, Hares-beard, High-taper, Torches.—Cotgrave.

Other names for it are herba luminaria, Candlewick (N. Somerset), old Eng. Candlewyrt (Leechdoms, Wort-cunning, &c., ed. Cockayne, vol. iii. Glossary).

HIGH-YEAR-OLD, a Teviotdale word for a heifer or beast of a year and a half old, is a corrupted form of heiyearald, which is for hellier-, or half-year-, auld (Jamieson).

HILL-TROT, a name for the plant daucus carota in the New Forest, is a corruption of the more frequent eltrot (Britten and Holland).

HINDRANCE is a heteronym of the Belgian hindernis, i.e. hinder-ness, assimilated to entrance, semblance, &c.—Haldeman, Affixes, p. 115.

HIPPODAME, a corrupt form of the name of "the sea-horse called in Greeke Hippotomos" (Topsell, Historie of Four-footed Beasts, p. 328), more correctly hippo-potamos, "river-horse."

They trembling stood, and made a long broad dyke

That his swift charet might have passage wyde

Which four great Hippodames did draw in temewise tyde.

Spenser, F. Queene, III. xi. 40.

HIS, as the sign of the possessive case, in such phrases as "for Jesus Christ his sake" (Prayer for all sorts and conditions of men), "The King his crown," "God his wrath," commonly used in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries for what we would now write "Christ's sake," "The King's crown," "God's wrath," is a mistaken orthography of the old English genetical form -is in "Christis sake," "Kingis crown," "Goddess wrath." The possessive pronoun his being anciently written in many instances is or ys, King-is crown readily resolved itself into King his crown. Compare—

That enduryd fro Neue yere ys day tylle the Annuncyacyon of oure Lady nexte scwyng. —W. Gregory, Chronicle of London, p. 59 (Camden Soc.).

And on Mary Magdelene ys day the kyng hydde hys counselle at Cauntyrbury whythe a grete party of hys lordys. —Id. p. 178.

The whiche is man and hus make and mailere-is issue.

Vision of Piers Plowman, xix. 236, text C.

"Man and his mate and wife's issue" (= mulieris proles); another MS. has actually improved this into "moillere her issue." See Skeat, Notes, p. 282 in loco.

Now mot ich soutere his sone setten to schole. Pierce the Ploughman's Crede, l. 744.

I presented vnto your liking Robin Good-fellow his newes.

The Passionate Morrice, 1593, p. 49 (Shaks. Soc.).

Hence when Chaucer tells us that "hevenes lorde" (or, as it might have been printed, "heaven his lord") "hath wonne Venus his love;" when Secretary William Knichte (1527) writes of "the Quene his affaires and secretes," and the Duke of Norfolk (1524) speaks of "the Quene is good favour," we can see at once that these are manifest resolutions of the older

English Venus-is love, the Quen-es affaires. We even find "other men his lippes" in Ascham, and "women his hornys" in Lydgate, formed out of men-es lippes, and women-es hornys. Such later forms as "Queen Elizabeth her reign" are intensifications of the old error. See a full and interesting note in Mr. Fitzedward Hall's Modern English, p. 855, to which I am indebted for much of the above.

The time-honoured formula of appropriation, "John Nokes his book," has scarcely yet ceased among country folks to be inscribed on the fly-leaf of their bibles. When the old error assumes a learned garb it looks more grotesquely amusing. In a copy of Stephen's Name of the Beast, 1656, I have seen a book-plate with the inscription, "Richard Baker, ejus Liber, Nov. 25, 1721," and in Cooper's Heaven Opened, 1611, the writing, "John Lea ejus Liber, 1752."

HIVES, a term (apparently modern, and overlooked in most dictionaries) for small risings in the skin attended with great itching, is a naturalized and corrupted form of Spanish havirus, denoting (1) beans, (2) "also great [bean-like] pimples caus'd by too much Blood, or Heat of Blood."—Stevens, Span. Dict., 1706, which is from Lat. faba, a bean. Compare It. "lentigini, pimples or freckles in the face red and wan like lentils."—Florio.

HOAR-HOUND, } the name of the plant
HORE-HOUND, } marrubium, as if from
A. Sax. hár, hoary, and hund, a hound, is a corruption of the A. Saxon name hara-hune, or harhune (Cockayne, Leechdoms, vol. iii. Glossary), where hune corresponds to Lat. cun-ila, Greek kon-ile, a strong-scented plant (Skeat). The curious form given by Bosworth, hara-hunig, "hare's-honey" (if authorized), is a fresh corruption.

HOARST, a Lincolnshire word for a cold on the chest, as if that which makes one hoarse (Lincolns. hoarst), is a corrupt form of O. Eng. host, a cough, Dan. hoste, Dut. hocste, A. Sax. hwcost, a wheeziness; cf. O. Eng. hoose, to cough (Pr. Parv.), Cleveland hoose, to wheeze. See Hoast, in Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary.

HOBBOY, in North's Plutarch (Life of Augustus) howboy, a naturalized form of Fr. hautbois, Mod. Eng. oboe, a high toned instrument of wood. See HAWBOY.

The Case of a Treble Hoe-boy was a Mansion for him.—Shakespeare, 2 Henry IV. iii. 2 (1623).

HOBTHRUSH, } provincial names for
HOBTHRUST, } a spirit famous for whimsical pranks. The last part of the word seems to be identical with A. Sax. þyrs, O. Norse þurs; a giant, or spectre.

Hob is perhaps the same as aub, auf, alb, O. N. alfr, an elf, seen in Oberon (Alberon), the dream goblin; cf. Hobgoblin. It seems to be the same as the "lubber-fiend" of Milton's L'Allegro.

HOGMANY, } an old name given to HOGMENAY, } New Year's Eve, or a New Year's gift, in Scotland and the North of England, is said to be a corruption of Au qui menez (On to the mistletoe!), the cry used by mummers at that season, and a survival of the Druidical cultus. Certainly a practice almost identical did prevail in France. Cotgrave gives an old word, "Aguillanneuf, and Au-guy-l'an-neuf, the voice of Country people begging small presents, or new-years gifts, in Christmas; (an ancient tearme of rejoycing, derived from the Druides; who were wont the first of January, to go unto the woods, where having sacrificed, and banqueted together, they gathered Missetow, esteeming it excellent to make heasts fruitfull, and most soveraigne against all poyson." Menage states that in Touraine they say Aguillanneu, that the Spaniards call presents made at Christmas Aguinaldo, and that in Normandy poor people when asking alms on the last day of the year, call it Hoguinanno.

Hogmyne night was one of the festivals renounced by the Puritans (Law's Memorials, p. 191).

The cotter weanies, glad an' gay . . .
Sing at their doors for Hogmanay.

Nicol.

See Hampson, Medii Ævi Kalendarium, vol. i. pp. 122-124; Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. i. p. 458; Chéruef, Dict. des Institutions, s.v. Gui.

Hogo, formerly "Hogoo, a high savour or relish" (Bailey), a popular corruption of Fr. haut goût. Compare fogo, an old slang word for a stench.

It was hogo, I surmise, that suggested the vulgar fogo. At first, probably, fogo was added to hogo, for the sake of jingle; and then, as the word, from resemblance to faugh, foh, intrinsically conveyed the idea of disgust, hogo fogo was shortened to fogo. Again, in holy :ogo, the holy may be a corruption of hogo.—F. Hall, Modern English, p. 127.

To give the sawce a hogoe, let the dish (into which you let the Pike fall) be rubed with it [garlick].—I. Walton, Compleat Angler, chap. vii. 165.

Sure I am, our Palate-people are much pleased therewith, [garlick] as giving a delicious haut-gust to most meats they eat, as tasted and smelt in their sauce, though not seen therein.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 206.

HOGSHEAD, supposed to be borrowed from old Dutch ox-hoofd, an "ox-head" (so Dan. ox-hoved, Ger. ox-hoft), a hogs-head. But compare the Irish tocsaid, the Gael. tocsaid, or togsaid (perhaps from Gaelic tog, to brew.—Philolog. Soc. Trans., 1857, p. 69), a hogshead.

He ate and drank, and when he had enough he went under a togsaid (hogshead).—Campbell, Pop. Tales of the W. Highlands, vol. ii. p. 294.

Hogshide is another mistaken orthography in Sir Thos. Urquhart's Translation of Rabelais, bk. iii. ch. xv.

The mysrewle of the kyngys galentys at Ludlowe, wenn they hadde drokyn i-nowe of wyne that was in tavernys and in othyr placys, they fulle ungoddeyly smote owte the heddys of the pypys and hoggys hedys of wyne, that men wente wete-schode in wyne.—Gregory's Chronicle of London, 1460, p. 207 (Camden Soc.).

There was geyvn commandement to the Lord Mayor, that there should be a great bonfyre at Powles Church door, and there to be set a hoggys head of rede and another of claret for the people to drink that wolde.—Grey Friars' Chronicle, March 9, 1525.

The other was by trade a Vintener,

That had full many a hoggeshed looked in.

F. Thynn, Debate between Pride and Lowliness (ab. 1568), p. 30 (Shaks. Soc.).

HOG-TONE, an old Scotch corruption of the word acton, which is also spelt aketon, huketon (Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas), haqueton (Spenser, Faerie Queene, II. 8, xxxviii.), Fr. hoqueton, auqueton, Prov. alcoto, a cotton stuffed or wadded coat, Sp. algodon, cotton. The acton was a loose quilted frock worn under armour to prevent it bruising the body, and was identical with the gambeson (Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. i. p. 201).

HOIDEN, } formerly a clownish ill-
HOYDEN, } bred person of either sex (see Trench, Select Glossary, s.v.), is a naturalized form of Dutch heyden, (1) a dweller on the heath, a wild man, (2) a heathen, (3) a boor. The spelling was altered perhaps to accommodate it to the old verb hoit, or hoyte, to romp. "Let none condemn them for Rigs because thus hoiting with boys."—T. Fuller, Pisgah Sight, Pt. II. p. 110 (1650).

Vastibousier, A lusk, lubber, loggar-head, lozell, hoiden, lochcock.—Cotgruue.

HOLD, "of a ship, that part between the Keelson and the lower deck where the Goods, Stores, &c are laid up" (Bailey), as if that which holds or contains the cargo, is really an altered form of O. Eng. hole, the hollow part of a ship, A. Sax. hol, a hollow or hole, Dut. hol, a cavity, also the ship's hold (Sewel). Hull is probably the same word, just as the hull of pease was also formerly spelt hoole (Prompt. Parv.).

Hoole of a schyppe (al. holle) Carina.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Other instances of excrement d are the following:—Boun-d (homeward, &c., O. Eng. boun), gizzar-d (O. Eng. giser), hazar-d (Sp. azar), hind (a servant, O. Eng. hine), moul-d, roun-d (to whisper), soun-d, stran-d (of rope), woun-d; cf. hes-t, peasant-t (Fr. paysan), pheasant-t, parchmen-t, tyran-t, O. Eng. ancien-t (= ensign), graf-t, O. Eng. alien-t; vulgar Eng. swoun-d, goun-d, to drown-d, scholar-d, salmon-d, orphan-t; old Eng. vil-d, arvel-d, gammon-d, lubbar-d.

HOLD, } as used of a player at the HELD, } game of billiards, who is said to have held a ball when he has driven it into one of the holes or pockets, is, according to Mr. Blackley, a grammatical perversion of "He held it," misunderstood as hold (Word Gossip, p. 74). The same writer maintains that the verb to toll arose from told, in such phrases as "the knell was told," i.e. counted, the number of concluding strokes being significant of the sex of the deceased, which was misunderstood as tolled. This seems very doubtful.

HOLDER, a Wiltshire man's corruption of halter, as if that which holds in a horse, &c. Halter itself is an altered form of A. Sax. healfter, a noose or halter; cf. O. Dut. and G. halfter (Skeat).

HOLDS. The phrase to pick holes, meaning to find fault, as if to detect a weak spot (a chink in one's armour), as in Burns' lines—

If there's a hole in a' your coats,
I rede you tent it,

A chield's amang you taking notes.

arose, not improbably, from a misunderstanding of the Prov. Eng. to hole, meaning to calumniate, from A. Sax. hol, detraction.

Oll vor . . . hoaling and halzening, or cuffing a Tale.

Exmoor Scolding, l. 297 (E. D. S., see note p. 135).

HOLIDAME, an occasional corruption in old books of holidom or halidom, A. Sax. haligdom, i.e. holiness, the Christian faith, -dom being the same termination as in Christendom, kingdom, Ger. heiligthum, Icel. helgidómr; so spelt as if to denote the holy Virgin, e.g. "So help me God and holidame."—Bullein, Book of the Use of Sick Men, 1579, fol. 2 b.

By my holy dam, tho I say it, that shuld not say it, I thinke I am as perfect in my pipe, as Officers in poling.—Jucke Drums Entertainment, act i. l. 4 (1616).

In Icelandic helgir dómar denotes sacred relics.

So helpe me god, and hollydam,
Of this I wolde not geve a dram.

Heywood, The Four Ps (Dodsley, i. 82, ed. 1825).

I shalbe redy at scott and lotte, and all my duties truly pay and doo . . . so helpe me god and holydome, and by this boke.—English Gilds, p. 189 (E. E. T. S.).

HOLIOKE, i.e. holy oak (Holy Hoke, Huloet), an old form of the word hollyhock (Lat. Alcea), which seems to be from A. Sax. hoc, Welsh hocys, a malow. The first part of the word is holy not holly. See HOLLYHOCK.

Holiokes, red, white, and carnations.

Tusser, Five Hundred Pointes (E. D. Soc. p. 96).

The word is spelt holly-oak in White and Markwick's Naturalists Calendar, holly-okes in Bacon, Of Gardens (1625) (Essays, p. 557, ed. Arber).

Bright crown imperial, kingspear, hollyhocks, Sweet Venus-navel, and soft lady-smocks.

B. Jonson, Pan's Anniversary, 1625, Works, p. 643.

HOLLIGLAS, a 16th cent. Scotch word for a character in old romances, is another form of Howleglas, Owlglass, or Eulenspiegel.

HOLLY-HOCK. Holly- here has nothing to do with the tree so called. Dr. Prior thinks that the original form may have been cauli- or coley-hock, but this seems altogether doubtful. Hock is evidently O. Eng. hocce, A. Sax. hoc, the mallow, which is also called the Hock-herb. The incorrect form holly-oak is found in G. White's Selborne, pp. 326, 330 (Nat. Illust. Lib. ed.), and holli-oak in Skinner's Etymologicon, s.v. (1671). See HOLLOKE. The old form of the word was Holy hocke, apparently so called because it was introduced from the Holy Land (cf. its Welsh name hocys bendigaid, i.e. "blessed mallow," Skeat), whence corruptly holly-hock.

Holy Hokke, or wylde malowe, Altea, malviscus.—Prompt. Parvulorum (1440).

Rose d'outre mer, the garden Mallow, called Hocks, and Hollyhocks.—Cotgrave.

HOLM-OAK, the ilex or evergreen oak, as if connected with holm, a water-side flat, is from O. Eng. holme, the holly (Prompt. Parv.), which is a corrupt form of holin, A. Sax. holen, holly.

Ilex is named of some in English Holme, which signifieth Holly or Huluer.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1159.

HOLY-STONE, the name given by sailors to the stone with which they scrub the decks, has not been explained. It is perhaps the same word as A. Sax. health-stán (apparently a "covering-stone," from hēlan, to cover), cited by Ettmüller (p. 458) from Ælfric's Glossary, with the meaning of crust. The first part of health-stán (hal-stán) would easily be confounded with hálig, holy, though rather akin to hell. Perhaps, however, health- is really akin to healoc, a hollow, holh, hollow, with allusion to the light porous nature of pumice-stone—and so the true form of the word would be holey-stone, the stone full of holes or hollows. For the same reason, perhaps, a perforated stone used as a charm is called in Cleveland a holy-stone. From a humorous misunderstanding, seemingly, of the first part of the compound, holy-stones of small size are known to sailors as "prayer-books" (Dana). Compare HALIWORT.

HOME-LY, an old corruption of homily (Greek homilia), as if a plain familiar discourse in the language of the common people.

But howe shall hee read thys hooke, as the Homilies are read? Some call them homelies, and in deed so they may be wel called, for they are homely handled. For though the Priest read them neuer so well, yet if the parish like them not, there is such talking and babling in the church that nothing can be heard: And if the Parishes be good and the priest naught, he will so hacke and choppe it, that it were as good for them to be without it, for any word yt shall be understand.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 37, verso.

A more curious corruption is humbles in Lever's Sermons, 1550:—

But the rude lobbes of the cuntry, whiche be to symple to paynte a lye, speake foule and truly as they fynde it, and saye: He minisheth Gods sacraments, he slubbers vp his service, and he can not reade the humbles.—P. 65 (ed. Arber).

HONEY-MOON, as if mellis luna, "The first sweet month of matrimony," is no doubt the same word as Icel. hjón, a wedded pair, man and wife, hjóna-band, matrimony, hjóna-sceng, marriage bed. Another related word is Icel. hýnóttar-mánuður, "wedding-night month." Hynott, the term applied to the wedding-night, is near akin to hjú, family, man and wife, whence hju-skapr, matrimony, and to hi-byli, home, Ger. heirath, A. Sax. híwa, "hive," Helianth híwa, wife (vid. Cleasby and Vigfusson). Thus the real congener of honey-moon is not honey, A. Sax. hunig, but the hive in which it is made, A. Sax. hív, a house, Goth. heiva, akin to A. Sax. hina, one of the household, a domestic, or hind; home, Goth. haims; Lat. civis, Greek keimai, Sansk. śi, to lie. Cf. Ger. heuwath, marriage.

Marriage, like the useful bee, builds a house and gathers sweetness from every flower, and labours, and unites into societies and republics.—J. Taylor, The Marriage Ring.

On the model of honey-moon, once translated melilune in the pages of Punch, seems to have been formed Ir-mie-na-mallah, as if from mis, month, and meala, genitive of mil, honey (but cf. mallah, shamefaced, modest).

The Mie-nu-mallah now is past
O Wirra-sthru! O Wirra-sthru!

Gerald Griffin, The Coiner, ch. vii.

So Strength and Beauty, hand in hand,
Go forth into the honey'd land,
Lit by the love-moon golden grand.

Gerald Mussey, The Bridal, Poems, p. 39.

Other names for the honeymoon are Dut. witbroodsweek (white-bread-week), Swed. smekmånad (caress month), Welsh mis yr cfaeth, month of blandishment.

Hook, in such cant phrases as, "I will,—with a hook," i.e. you may imagine it if you like, but I won't; I am only joking; is the same word as hoar, hocus, hooky, Gipsy hokka, to lie (Borrow), hooker, hokkeny, a lie or deception; Roumanian Gipsy kokao, a lie (Leland, Eng. Gipsies, p. 81). Hence hokey-pokey, hocus-pocus, hanky-panky, Gipsy huckeny pokee, a swindle, Hind. hoggu-bazee (Id. p. 141).

A Hocus-pocus [= juggler] . . . performed rare tricks of activity.—Sir T. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 133.

HOOKER, a kind of fishing vessel of heavy build (Croker, Ballads of Ireland, p. 151), is no doubt the same word as O. Fr. heurque, by which Palsgrave (1530) explains "Hulke, a shyppe;" and "Hurque, a hulk" (Cotgrave); "Orque [for Horque] a Hulk or huge ship" (Id.); Low Lat. hulka, hulcus; all from Greek holkás, a ship that is towed, a ship of burden (ὄγκας, from ἔλκειν, to drag). "Hulke, shyppe, Hulcus" (Prompt. Parvulorum), is only a variant. See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v. Hulk. Scot. houk, a large ship.

Their galleons, galleasses, gallies, urcas, and zabras were miserably shattered.—Oldys, Life of Raleigh.

Houker, a vessel built like a Pink, but masted and rigged like a hoy.—Bailey.

The meikle houk hym bare, was Triton callit.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 321, l. 55.

Hourque, a Hulke or huge flie-boat.—Cotgrave.

HOOP, a provincial Eng. name of the bullfinch in Wiltshire, Cornwall, Somerset, &c., is a corruption apparently of ope [cf. O. Eng. a nope for an ope], alp (Systema Agriculturae, 1687), a hullfinch, alpe (Prompt. Parvulorum), also spelt olf, olph, aupe, and awbe.

Be als just to awppis and owlis
As unto pacokkis, papingais, or crennis.

W. Dunbar, The Thrissill and the Rois, 18 (1503).

The tatling Awbe doth please some fancie
wel.

G. Gascoigne, Complaynt of Philomene, 1576,
p. 88 (ed. Arber).

HOOTER, an American word for a whit, as "I don't care a hooter for him," seems to be a corruption of iota.—Bartlett, Dict. of Americanisms, p. 295 (4th ed.).

HOPE, in the military phrase a Forlorn Hope (Fr. enfans perdus), as if a body of desperate men who have abandoned all hope of surviving, is the same word as Dut. hoop, a troop (verloren hoop, a lost, i.e. death-doomed, band), Swed. hop. Compare Ger. haufe, a crowd, O. Norse hopr, A. Sax. heap, a troop, hóp, a circle or band of men (like Lat. globus). These words seem to correspond to Polish kupa, Lat. cop-ia, just as hope (= sperare), Dut. hoopen, Ger. hoffen, do to Latin cup-ia. With hóp, a hoop or a company, compare ring (A. Sax. hring, Icel. hringr) in ring-leader, whence also harangue, to address a ring or crowd. (So Lat. turba is connected with turbo.) Cf. old Eng. heep, a crowd, "The bere sprange vp . . . emonge an heep of wyuis."—Caxton, Reynard the Fox (1481), p. 16 (ed. Arber).

Engla heapas, "troops of angels."—Ælfric (see Cockayne, Spoon and Sparrow, p. 78).

Among this princely heap, if any here . . .
Hold me a foe.

Shakespeare, Rich. III. ii. 1, 53.

Machanidas with his strangers gae such a lusty charge vpon certaine slingers and archers, being the forlorne hope whom Philopæmen had put before the battell of the Achaïans to begin the Skirmish, that he overthrew them, and made them flie withall.—Sir Thos. North, Plutarchs Lives, p. 372, 1612.

HOPHARLOT, an old name for a coarse kind of coverlet, is a corrupt form of hap-harlot, from the old verb hap, to wrap or cover up, exactly corresponding to the jocular term wrap-rascal, for an overcoat, current in the last century, e.g. "A Joseph, wrap-rascal," &c., is Gay's annotation on the sur-tout, "By various names in various countries known."—Trivia, bk. i. l. 57. Hap-harlot, a coarse covering, is found also in provincial English (Forby).

"Our fathers . . . have lien full oft upon straw pallets, on rough mats, covered ouelie with a sheet, under coverlets made of dags-waiv or hopharlots (I use their own termes).—Harrison, Description of England, in Holinshed's Chronicles, i. 188.

A well-known antiquarian explains the word as follows:—

Harlot was a term applied to a low class of vagabonds, the ribalds, who wandered from place to place in search of a living; and the name appears to have been given to this rug as being only fit to be the lot or hap of such people (!).—Wright, Homes of Other Days, p. 415.

The word is given by Bailey in the form of happerlet and happarlet, which seems to be an assimilation to "coverlet."

Happyn or 'whappyn' yn cloþys.—Prompt. Parv.

These weders ar cold and I am ylle happyd.—Townley Mysteries, p. 98.

HORNDON, a Cumberland word for a lunch about ten in the morning (Dickinson), a corruption of old Eng. undern, nine o'clock, a meal at that hour, properly "between-times," something taken between breakfast and dinner, old Eng. under, Ger. unter, Goth. undar, Lat. inter, between.

HORN-MAD, } raving mad, literally
HORN-WOOD, } brain mad, from A. Sax. haernes, the brains (Philolog. Soc. Proceedings, vol. iii. p. 94). Compare harn-pan, herne-pan, the brain-pan or skull.

I shall helpe thee witterlye,
To take hym downe devoutlye
Though Cayphas goe horne-wood therby,
And all his meanye.
Chester Mysteries (Shaks. Soc.), vol. ii. p. 68.

[The editor, Mr. Wright, quite misunderstood the origin of the word when he here suggested, "perhaps mad with jealousy," referring to a cuckold's "horns."]

If I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go with me,
I'll be horn mad.

Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 5.

Unless you are of a most settled temper,
Quite without passion, I shall make you
Horn-mad with jealousy.

S. Marmion, The Antiquary, act ii. sc. 1 (1641).

Horne-wood he was, he was about to strike
All those he met, and his own flesh to teare.
Sir John Harrington, Ariosto, xxviii. 44.

It will set him on a fire & make him horn-mad.—Holland's Pliny, fol. 1634, tom. ii. p. 135.

Yet I'm not mad,
Nor horn-mad, see you?

Jonson, The Fox, act iii. sc. 5.

Did I tell you about Mr. Garrick, that the town are horn-mad after.—Thos. Gray, Letters.

Compare Scot. harns, brains, Ger. hirn, Swed. hjernna, Dan. hjerne, Icel. hvorn or hvörn, bones of the head, Goth. hwairnei, Lat. cranium, = κpaviov. "Hernys or brayne (or harnneys). Cerebrum."—Prompt. Parvulorum.

With fi, fi, fo, and fum!

I smell the blood of a Christian man!

Be he dead, be he living, wi' my brand

I'll clash his harns frae his harn-pan!

Child Rowland and Burd Ellen, l. 40 (Child's Ballads, i. 251).

HORNS, when given to Moses as a distinctive mark, e.g. in Michael Angelo's well-known statue, in an older figure in Roslin chapel, and in most mediæval representations of the law-giver, afford a curious instance of a misunderstanding being stereotyped in stone. In Exodus xxxiv. 29, seqq. it is said that when Moses came down from the mount his face shone. The verb for this in the Hebrew is qâran, to emit rays, originally to put forth horns, from qeren, a horn. "This meaning has developed itself from a comparison of the first rays of the rising sun, which shoot out above the horizon, to the horns of the gazelle, a comparison which is met with in the Arabian poets."—Keil. So the correct translation of Habakkuk iii. 4:—"He had horns coming out of his hand," would be, as in the margin, "bright beams." St. Jerome made unfortunately a similar mistake in rendering "his face shone" in the passage in Exodus, according to its primitive meaning, faciem esse cornutam, "his face was horned." From this misrendering sprang the horned Moses of the sculptors and painters, with some reference perhaps to horns as a symbol of power, which in this sense are assigned to Alexander and others on coins. See Ep. Wordsworth on Ex. xxxiv. 29; Smith, Bible Dict. s. v. Horn; Gale, Court of Gentiles, bk. ii. p. 13; Sir T. Browne, Works, vol. ii. p. 29 (ed. Bohn); Notes and Queries, 5th S. ix. 453.

Compare the use of Lat. coruscare, (1) of animals, to butt with the horns, (2) of fire, to flash or gleam; and jubar, a beam of light, from juba, a crest or tuft of hair.

Bishop Jeremy Taylor seems to have had a correct understanding of the matter, as he says the sun "peeps over the Eastern hills, thrusting out his golden horns, like those which decked the brows of Moses when he was forced to wear a veil, because himself had seen the face of God."—Holy Dying, p. 16, Oxford ed.

Coleridge strangely enough, though bearing this passage in mind, stands up for the literal and material representation of the horns.

When I was at Rome, among many other visits to the tomb of Julius II., I went thither once with a Prussian artist, a man of genius and great vivacity of feeling. As we were gazing on Michael Angelo's Moses our conversation turned on the horns and beard of that stupendous statue; of the necessity of each to support the other; of the superhuman effect of the former, and the necessity of the existence of both to give a harmony and integrity both to the image and the feeling excited by it. Conceive them removed, and the statue would become un-natural without being super-natural. We called to mind the horns of the rising sun, and I repeated the noble passage from Taylor's Holy Dying. That horns were the emblem of power and sovereignty among the Eastern nations, and are still retained as such in Abyssinia; the Achelous of the ancient Greeks; and the probable ideas and feelings that originally suggested the mixture of the human and the brute form in the figure by which they realized the idea of their mysterious Pan, as representing intelligence blended with a darker power, deeper, mightier, and more universal than the conscious intellect of man, than intelligence;—all these thoughts and recollections passed in procession before our minds.—Biographia Literaria, ch. xxi. p. 208 (ed. Bell and Daldy).

Cotgrave (s. v. Moyse) remarks that his—

Ordinary counterfeit having on either side of the head an eminence, or lustre arising somewhat in the form of a horne, hath emboldened a profane author to stile cuckolds, Parents de Moyse.

Pharaoh Miamun Nut is described on the monuments (B.C. 700) as "the lord of the two horns."—Brugsch, Egypt under the Pharaohs, vol. ii. p. 250. In Arabic al-gazâlâ, "the gazelle rises" (= "The Hind of the Dawn," Ayyeeth hash-shachar, of Psalm xxii. 1), is a way of saying "the sun rises," his spreading rays suggesting the horns of the animal (Goldziher, Mythology among the Hebrews, p. 178).

HORRID-HORN, a term of reproach amongst the street Irish, meaning a fool, or half-witted fellow, from the Anglo-Irish omadhawn, Irish and Gaelic amadan, from amad, an idiot, corresponding to Sansk. amati, mindlessness, folly (= Lat. a-mentia).

What d'you mane, you horrid horn, by selling such stuff as that?—Mayhew, London Labour and the London Poor, i. p. 207.

You omadhawn . . . I was only puttin' up a dozen o' bottles into the tatch of the house, when you thought I was listenin'.—W. Carleton, Traits and Stories of Irish Peasantry, vol. i. p. 287 (1843).

HORSE, To, an old verb meaning to raise, elevate, especially one boy on the back of another for a flogging, seems to be a corruption of Fr. hausser, or perhaps of hoise, Dut. hyssen (Sewel). Hausser (Prov. ausar, alsar, It. alzare) is from Low Lat. altiare, to make high (Lat. altus). Compare RE-HORSE. Of the same origin perhaps is the provincial word horse, a plank or cross-beam upon which anything is supported.

A hogshead ready horsed for the process of broaching.—T. Hardy, Under the Greenwood Tree, vol. i. p. 13.

Andrew was ordered to horse and Frank to flog the criminal.—H. Brooke, Fool of Quality, i. 232 [Davies].

Mr. Green remembered to have heard that the great Newton was horsed during the time that he was a Cambridge undergraduate.—Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green, Pt. I. ch. ii.

HORSE, a marine term for a rope made fast to one of the fore-mast shrouds (Bailey), as "the horse of the yard-arm," "horse of the mizzen sheet," is a corruption apparently of the older form hawse, originally halse, from Icel. háls, Dan. and Swed. hals, (1) a neck, (2) the tack of a sail, end of a rope; Icel. hálsa, to clew up a sail. The same word as hawser (see Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.).

Horse, a thick rope used for hoisting some yard or extending a sail.—Falconer, Marine Dictionary.

The French haussière, which has been partially assimilated to hausser, to lift, is the same word, having formerly been written aussière and haussière (Scheler).

HORSE-BEECH, a name of the horn-beam tree, is a corruption of the more correct word hurst-beech, the beech of the hurst, A. Sax. hyrst, or shrubbery (Prior).

HORSE-COCK, a Scotch name for a species of snipe, seems to be for horse-gouk, of a similar meaning, and both corruptions of Swed. horsgök.

HORSE-COURSER, a horse-dealer. Courser, here, old Eng. "Corsoure of horse, mango" (Prompt. Parv.), is a corruption of Fr. courtier, courratier, a broker, horsescourser (Cotgrave), It. curatiere, a broker or factor who has the care (Lat. cura) or management of a business (Diez).

He can horse you as well as all the corsers in the towne, courtiers de chevaux.—Palsgrave, 1530.

HORS-HEAL, } A. Sax. hors-helene.
HORS-HEEL, } This plant owes its name to a double blunder about its Latin title inula Helenium; hinnula, a colt, being evolved out of inula, and heal or heel out of Hel-enium. It was on the strength of its name employed by apothecaries to heal horses of scabs and sore heels (Prior).

HORSE MINT, name of the mentha sylvestris, has no connexion with horse, but is a corrupt form of Swed. hors-mynta. Häst is a horse in Swedish.

HORSE-STRONG, } names for the HARSTRONG, } plant peucedanum, HORESTRONG, } have no connexion with strong nor horse, but are derivatives of Dut. har-strang, Ger. harn-strang, strangury, for which complaint it was considered a specific (Prior). Florio (s.v. Peucedano) spells it hare-strang, Cotgrave (s.v. Peucedane), horse-strong and hore-strange!

HORTYARD, a frequent old spelling (e.g. in Holland, Plinies Naturall Historie, vol. ii. p. 236) of orchard, old Eng. orcerd and ortgeard, Scotch worchard, wortchat, A. Sax. wyrt-geard, i.e. "wort yard" (of wyrt-tun, A. Sax. Luke xiii. 19), as if a mongrel compound of Latin hortus, a garden, and Eng. yard. King Alfred uses the word ortgeard.

To plantianne & to ymbhweorfanne swæ se ceorl deð his ortgeard.—Gregory's Pastoral, p. 292 (ed. Sweet).

[To plant and tend as the churl doth his orchard.]

Hyra feldas mid weortum blowende, & hyra orcerdus mid æpplum afyllede.

Thos. Wright, Popular Treatises on Science (10th cent.), p. 10.

[Their fields with plants blowing, and their orchards with apples filled.]

For the loss of the initial w compare ooze, O. Eng. woze; old Eng. oof for woof, and oother for wood, mad, Ger. wuth (Prompt. Parv.); Scot. oo for wool, &c.

Giardino, a Garden, an Hort-yard.—Florio. Cerasaro, a cherry man or hortyard.—Id.

Built by sweete Siren; said to be built by Sterne Phaleris: his Empires happy glory. Call'd, the rare hortyard of faire Cyprades.

G. Sandys, Travels, p. 253.

Luther called Paradise in his discourse of Germanie, a pleasant Garden, Eccl. 2. Munster an Orchyeard, and in the Bible it is called Eden.—Itinerarium, Trauels of the Holy Patriarch, &c., 1619, p. 73.

HOSTAGE, O. Fr. hostage, has no right to the initial h (which has been prefixed from a false analogy to host, hospitable, &c.), as we see by comparing It. ostaggio, Prov. ostatge, which are from Low Lat. obsidaticum, from Lat. obsidatus, surety-ship, obse(d)-s, a hostage (Diez). In old French the word seems to have been brought into connexion with hoste, an inn-keeper, and hostel, an inn; compare Cotgrave's definition, "Hostage, An Hostage, Pawne, Surety, Pledg (A term of payment being expir'd, the Debtor must deliver Hostages; to wit, three or four, who goe to an Inne, and there continue . . . untill he have taken order."

HOT COCKLES, an old English game, a description of which will be found in Brand's Popular Antiquities, vol. ii, p. 421 (ed. Bohn), is said in Bailey's Dictionary, s.v., to be the French Hautes Coquilles, but I cannot find that this expression was ever in use as asserted. Skinner says "Hautes Coquilles, i.e. verbatim Altæ Cochleæ, quia nates, quæ aliquo modo rotunditate suâ Cochleas referunt, in hoc Insu, incurvato corpore, sustolluntur."—Etymologicon, s.v. 1671.

Aubrey says, "I have some reason to believe that the word cockle is an old antiquated Norman word which signifies nates."—Thom's Anecdotes and Traditions (Camden Soc.), p. 96.

Cockles here, however, may be only another form of cockals, an old Eng. word for the hips, which in the game became hot from striking; compare hot-hands, a children's game where the hands of the two players are struck together in a regular alternation.

As at hot-cockles once I lay me down,
I felt the weighty hand of many a clown.
Gay.

Cockal seems to be identical with the old Eng. hokyl, huckle, the hip (the hough or hock?), Prov. Eng. huggan, hug-bone, the hip, Lat. coxa, coxendiv, hip, coxim, the hinder part, Greek kochōne, kokkua. "Koot, a Cockal or huckle-bone," "kooten, to play at Cockals."—Sewel, Dutch Dict. 1708.

Cockal, a game that boyes used with foure huckle-bones, commonly called cockall.—Nomenclator.

Carnicol, a game with huckle bones called Cock-al.—Minsheu, Span. Dict. 1623.

Machyn, in his Diary (1554), relates how a "grett blynd bere broke losse" and caught a servingman "by the hokyll-bone" (p. 78, Camden Soc.). We may compare Gipsy cockkoolos, kokalos, coçal, a bone, Mod. Greek, kokalolon.

Nor made of glasse, or wood or stone,
But of a little transverce bone;
Which boyes, and bruckel'd children call,
(Playing for points and pins) cockall.
Herrick, Hesperides, p. 96 (ed. Hazlitt).

Cockle-bread, in "the wanton sport which," Aubrey tells us, "young wenches have," and which "they call moulding of cockle-bread," is no doubt of the same origin, as it appears to have been an exercise performed by the players while squatting down on their houghs or "hunkers" (see Brand, vol. ii. p. 414).

HOUND'S TREE, a mistaken synonym of DOG-WOOD, which see.

HOURLY, in the phrases good hour = "good luck," and in a good hour = "with a good omen," luckily, happily (like Lat. felix faustumque sit, absit omen), is an adoption of Fr. à la bonne heure, happily, fortunately, as if "in a good hour," where la bonne heure is perhaps a perverted form of le bon heur, good fortune, good luck. This word heur (old Eng. ure) has no connexion with heure, hour (Lat. hora), but is identical with old Fr. heür, eür, air, Wall. aweure, Prov. agur, augur, Sp. agüero, from Lat. augurium. Hence bonheur, malheur, and heureux (not from horosus, as if timely, seasonable, but = L. Lat. auguriosus), Diez, Scheller. Compare the proverb, "Le bon heur tost se passe qui n'en a soing. Good fortune quickly slips from such as heed it not."—Cotgrave. Thus the proper signification of this expression, "In a good hour be it spoken," would be "with a good omen or augury (O. Fr. en bon air). It must be admitted, at the same time, that "hour" is used similarly in other Romance languages, e.g. Sp. en buena hora, norabuena, good luck. In the first of the following quotations good hour is unquestionably bon heur (= bonum augurium).

Who, on the other side, did seem so farre,
From malicing, or grudging his good hour,
That all be could he graced him with her,
Ne ever shewed signe of ranour or of jarre.
Spenser, F. Queene, VI. x. 39.

Yet myself (in a good hour be it spoken and a better heard) was never sick, neither in the camp nor the castle, at sea or on land.—Sir J. Harrington, Nugæ Antiquæ, vol. ii. p. 14.

Yea, in a good howre be it spoken, I have tyl'd in London.—Copley, Wits, Fits, and Fancies, 1614.

HOUSE-LIKE, a fanciful spelling of house-leek in Holmes and Lyte, as if named from its attachment to houses.

HOUSINGS, the covering or trappings of a horse, so spelt no doubt from a confusion with house, housing, just as cote is really akin to cote, hood to hut, cassock to Lat. casa, a house (cf. Gk. kásas, housings). Compare "The women wove hangings for the grove."—A. V. 2 Kings, xxiii. 7, Heb. "houses."

The Satyres were first vttered in their halloved places within the woods, . . . because they had no other housing fit for great assemblies.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 51 (ed. Arber).

The more correct form would be houssings, or houss (Dryden), from Fr. housse, Low Lat. housia, husia (perhaps for hulsia, akin to Dut. hulse, and hust, Skeat). Compare Welsh hws, a covering, hwsan, a hood.

Saw the superb funerall of the Protector. He was carried from Somerset House in a velvet bed of state drawn by six horses, houss'd with the same.—J. Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 22, 1658.

HOWBALL, an old word for a simpleton, another form of North Eng. hobbil, hobhald, O. Eng. hoberd, of the same meaning. Cf. hob, a country clown, Hobbinal, "a fained country name" (Shepherd's Calendar, Jan.). It is no doubt the same word as Hob, a tricky spirit, Hob-thrush (? for Hob-thurse), which Mr. Atkinson regards as = Ob, = aub, = ALB, = ELF, just as Oberon = Auberon = Alberon (Cleveland Glossary, p. 263). Compare Cleveland hawvish, simple-witted, for awvish, O. Eng. elvisch; awf, a fool ("oaf"), also a fairy = O. Norse alfr, an elf.

Oper hobbis 3e hadden of hurlewaynis kynne.
Richard the Redeles, i. 90 (1399).

Then to the Master of the daunsing schoole,
And eke the Master of the dysing house,
The worst of them no houball, ne no foole.

F. Thynn, Debate between Pride and Lowliness (ab. 1568) p. 48
(Shaks. Soc.).

Ye shall not (she sayth) by hir will, marry
hir cat.

Ye are such a calfe, such an ass, such a blocke,

Such a hiltburne, such a hoball, such a lobcocke.

N. Udall, Ralph Roister Doister (1566), iii. 3, p. 40 (Shaks. Soc.).

On lofte, sere hoberd, now ye be sett.
The Coventry Mysteries, p. 325
(Shaks. Soc.).

HOWDIE, a name for a midwife in the northern counties, which Mr. Atkinson holds to be corrupted from O. Norse jöd, parturition (Cleveland Glossary, s.v.), has apparently been popularly assimilated to How-dee, How d'ye? the customary salutation of the sage femme on approaching her patient. In any case that popular etymology would seem to have influenced the form of the word. The Scotch verb howd, to play the howdie, would then come from the substantive. Compare also Houdee, and Hou-do-ye, a sycophant or flatterer [who speaks one fair with polite greetings], as "She's an auld houdee."—Jamieson. Cf. Ger. ja-herr, and our "Hail-fellow-well-met," intimate as a boon companion.

Nae Howdie gets a social night,
Or plack frae them.

Burns, Scotch Drink, Poems, p. 8
(Globe ed.).

Such was thy sudden how-dee [= greeting]
and farewell,

Such thy return the angels scarce could tell Thy miss.

Fletcher [Nares].

In Ireland "a pretty how d'ye-do" is a popular expression for an embroglio, contretemps, or disordered state of affairs; otherwise a "mess" or "kettle-of-fish." Similar instances of colloquial phrases or interrogations originating new words or names for things are the following:—in vulgar French Castu, an hospital, from Qu'as-tu? the doctor's first question, as if a "What's-it-wi'-you?": Un Qu'as-tu-la (a What'-ave-ye-there?), a custom-house officer (Dict. de l'Argot Parisien, p. 82). Un Vasitas, a little window to spy what is passing, a casement, from Ger. Was ist das? a "What-is-that" (Scheler). Un décroche-moi-ça, an old clothes (or Hand-me-down) shop. So Gargantua, the name of Rabelais' gigantic hero, is a corruption of Que grand tu as! his father's first exclamation on seeing him; and Kanevas was a nickname of Schubert from his habit of asking about every new acquaintance, "Kann er was?" "What can he do?" Compare manna, originally man hu, "What is it?" the inquiry made by the Hebrews when they first saw the substance upon the ground (Ex. xvi. 15).

HOWLER, } the Lincolnshire name
OWLER, } of the alder tree, is a corruption of A. Sax. alr, Prov. Eng. aller, Ger. eller.

HUCKLE-BERRIES, } popular names
 HURTS, } for bilberries
 WHORTLE-BERRIES, } ( Vaccinium ) in WHORTS, } various parts of England, are variants of hurtle-
berries, itself a corruption of the old English heorot-beriges, "hart-berries," from heorot, a hart.

HUDDER-MOTHER, an old corruption of hugger-mugger, clandestinely, in secret, which seems to be compounded of hugger, an old verb meaning to lie hid (cf. O. Eng. hugge, to crouch huddled up, Icel. húlka, to crouch, Ger.
hocken), and mugger = Swed. i mjugg, clandestinely (cf. mug, much, to hide,
 O. Fr. muchier, mucer, cur-mudgeon (Skeat); muggard, sullen (Exmoor).
 Thus the primitive signification would be "crouching in hiding," as a person does when concealing himself in a corner. Cf. Scot. mokere, to hoard; O.
 Eng. mokerer, a miser (Old Eng. Mis- cellany, p. 214).

If shotinge faulte at any tyme, it hydes it not, it lurkes not in corners and hudder- mother, but openly accuseth and bewrayeth it selfe.—R. Ascham, Toxophilus, 1545, p. 36
 (ed. Arber).

And zet I pray þe, leue broþer,
 Rede þys ofte, and so lete oper,
 Huyde hyt not in hodymoke,
 Lete other mo rede þys boke.

J. Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests
 (ab. 1420), p. 62, l. 2032.

We have done but greenly
 In hugger-mugger to inter him.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, iv. 5.

In Banffshire hudge-mudge is to whisper or talk in a suppressed manner.

The twa began to hudge-mudge wee ane anither in a corner.—Gregor, Banff Glossary,
 p. 83.

HUM, } old words for malt
 HUMMING, } liquor, especially strong ale. Humming seems to be a corrupted form of Low Lat. hummulina, beer, derived from Low Lat. humulus, humble, the hop, Icel. humall, Dan. and Swed.
humle, Belg. hommel, the hop, A. Sax.
hymele [?]. Hum would be an abbreviated form of this, as hock for hoch- heimer, rum for rumbooze, &c.

Fat ale, brisk stout, and humming clamber-crown.

Epilogue to Adelphi, 1709, Lusus Alteri
Westmonasteriensis, p. 8.

A glass of wine or humming beer
 The heart and spirit for to cheer.
Poor Robin, 1735.

What a cold I have over my stomach;
 would I'd some hum.—Beaumont and Fletcher,
Wildgoose Chase, ii. 3.

Compare the following:—

Bere, a drynke, Hummulina, vel hummuli
potus, aut cervisia hummulina.—Prompt.
Parv. c. 1440.

HUMBLE, in the sense of hornless, applied to a cow, ewe, deer, &c. (e.g.
 in the definition of kolla, kollotr, in Cleasby's Icelandic Dictionary), is a corrupt form of Scotch and Northern Eng. hummel, hummle, homyll, without horns; "Humbled, hornless, as 'a humbled coo,' a cow without horns."
 —Holderness Glossary (Eng. Dialect Soc.). So hummeld in the Cleveland dialect (Atkinson). Compare Scotch humlie, humlock, a hornless cow; N.
 Eng. humble, Scot. hummel, to break off the beards of barley with a flail.
 All these words are akin to Prov. Eng.
hamel, to lame, Ger. hommel, a wether,
 A. Sax. hamelian, Icel. hamla, to maim or mutilate.

Humble-cow, a cow without horns.—
Parish, Sussex Glossary.

That was Grizzle chasing the humble-cow out of the floc.—Scott, Guy Mannering,
 ch. ix.

It will come out yet, like hommel corn.—
A. Hislop, Scottish Proverbs, p. 192.

The A. Sax. homela, homola, a person who has his head shaved for the pillory, a fool (Bosworth), is obviously the same word (compare Irish maol).
 The base is Goth. hamfs, maimed; and hamper, to impede, is substantially the same word (see Skeat, Etym. Dict., s.v.).

In the following citation from Holland's Pliny (1634), humbled seems to bear the sense of broken, chapped, abraded.

If one lay them [Rapes or Turnips] very hot to kided or humbled heeles, they will cure them.—Nat. History, tom. ii. p. 38.

HUMBLE-BEE, a name for the wild bee (Copley, 1596, Whiting, 1638) sometimes imagined to denote its inferiority to the hive bee, O. Eng. humbyl-bee, is merely another form of hummel-bee or humming-bee, from the old verb hummel, to hum; compare Ger. hummel, a humble-bee, from hummeln, to hum. Another name given to the insect for the same reason is bumble-bee, Scot. bumbee, bombell, bummil, Greek bómbos, Hind. bhawnra, Bengal. bhómra, Sansk. bambhara, the bee that bums or bumbles—"facit bombum" (Varro). Compare drone, A. Sax. dran, and Sansk. drūna, a bee. "Bombare, to hum or buzze as bees doe."—Florío, New World of Words, 1611.

Some authors [e.g. Dr. Johnson] inconversant in natural history have most erroneously imagined them in consequence of the above name to be destitute of a sting.—Shaw, Naturalist's Miscellany.

Mekle Latyne he did mummill
I hard na thing but hummill bummill,
He schew me nocht of Goddis word.
Sir D. Lyndesay, Kittis Confessioun,
l. 45 (Works, p. 581).

So an old Lincolnshire woman once compared a drowsy preacher to a "bum'el-bee upon a thistle-top," which recalls a similar remark of Tennyson's Northern Farmer—

I 'eerd 'um a bummin' awaÿ loike a buzzard-clock ower my 'eäd.
Poems, p. 267 (1878).

The loudest bummer's no the best bee.—A. Hislop, Scottish Proverbs, p. 283.

Here is a box ful of humble bees,
That stonge Eve as she sat on her knees,
Tastynge the frute to her forbydden.
Heywood, The Four P's (Dodsley, i.
81, ed. 1825).

Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida,
v. 10, 42.

Lyke the humbling/ After the clappe of a thundering.

Chaucer, House of Fame, lib. ii. l. 531.

A rich mantle he did wear,
Made of tinsell jossamere,
Dyde crimson in a maiden's blush;
Linde with a bumble bee's soft plush.
Herrick, Poems, p. 481 (ed. Hazlitt).

2 humming birds not much bigger than our humble bee.—Evelyn, Diary, July 11, 1652.

HUMBLE-PIE, in the phrase "to make one eat humble-pie," meaning to humiliate him or bring down his pride, is a corrupted form and perverted use of the name of a dish once popular, viz., umble-pie, a pie made of the umbles or internal parts of a deer.

The hombuls of the dow.

Carol (15th cent.) bryngyng in the Bores Head.

Mrs. Turner . . . did bring us an umble pie hot.—Pepys, Diary, vol. ii. p. 266 (ed. Bright).

Lacy. What have you fit for breakfast? . . .
Mar. Butter and cheese, and umbles of a deer,
Such as poor keepers have within their lodge.
Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay
(1594), sub fin.

Skinner writes the word "humbles," and considers it, probably correctly, as derived from umbilicus, "the parts about the navel." It is, perhaps, from A. Sax. pumles, the bowels or thumbles, understood as th'umbles. An old spelling was numbles, e.g.

Pracordia, the numbles, as the hart, the splene, the lunges, and lyuer.—Elyot.

Numbles of a dere, or beest, entrailles.—Palsgrave.

Nowmelys of a beest. Burbalia.—Prompt. Parv. (vid. Way's note).

Take the numbles of calf, swyne, or of shepe.—Forme of Cury, p. 6.

Then dress the numbles first, that Y recke Downe the auancers kerue that cleueth to the necke.

Book of St. Albans, How ye shall breke an Hart.

The Sussex folk have devised on the same model the phrase "to eat carppie" for submitting to another person carping at one's actions.

HUNGARIAN, an old name for a species of horse, is borrowed from Fr. hongre, a gelding (also an Eunuch, a Hungarian).—Cotgrave. The French name is said to have originated in a mistake as to the meaning of the German word Wallach, a gelding, Cantherius [compare Swed. vallack, a gelding, vallacka, to castrate, perhaps akin to Swed. gälla, to geld, Greek gallos, a eunuch], which was popularly supposed to mean brought from Wallachia or Hungary, and therefore synonymous with Hongre or Hungarian (Wachter). But see the quotation from Topsell.

Our English Horses have a mediocrity of all necessary good properties in them; as neither so slight as the Barbe, nor so slovenly as the Flemish, nor so fiery as the Hungarian.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 491.

The Hunnes bring vp their Horses hardly . . . These Hunnian Horses, else where he calleth them Hunnicau Horses, and the same in times past Hunnes: but they are called a daies Vngarian Horsses.—Topsell, History of Four-footed Beasts, p. 288 (1608).

HUON CRY, an absurd orthography of Hue and cry, as if it had something to do with Sir Huon, famed in the romances of chivalry.

Scarce findes the doore, with faultring foot he flies,
And still lookes back for fear of Hu-on cries.
Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 193 (1621).

Hue, a shout, is O. Fr. huer, akin to hoot. Compare Fr. huyer, "to hoot at, shout after, exclaim on, cry out upon, follow with hue and cry."—Cotgrave.

How shall I answer Hue and Cry,
For a Roan-Gelding twelve Hands high?
Butler, Hudibras, Pt. II. cant. i. l. 693.

HURRICANE. This word was once supposed in accordance with its spelling to be a storm or tornado that hurries the canes away in the plantations, and a support for this derivation was sought in the Lat. word calamitas, a calamity, an injury to the canes, calami (cf. hurleblast, a whirlwind.—Wright). But hurricane, Fr. ouragan, Sp. huracan, Ger. orkan, is a corrupted form of a native American word, Hurakan, the Tempest-god.

When the ships were ready to depart, a terrible storm swept the island. It was one of those awful whirlwinds which occasionally rage within the tropics, and were called by the Indians "furicanes," or "uricans," a name they still retain with trifling variation.—W. Irving, Columbus, bk. viii. ch. 9.

The Elements grew dreadful, the wind roring, and the sea so sublime and wrathful, and for three days space raging with such fury that we verily believed a Herocane was begun, which is a vast or unwonted tumor in the Ayre, called Euroclydon in the Acts, a Tempest so terrible, that houses and trees are hut like dust before it; many ships by its violence having been blown a shoar and shattered.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 41.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Constringed in mass by the Almighty sun,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida,
v. 2, 174.

When the winds are not only wild in a storm, but even stark mad in a herricano, who is it that restores them again to their wits, and brings them asleep in a calm?—T. Fuller, Holy State, p. 122 (1648).

Nor will any wonder at this wild Hericano blowing at once from all points of the Compass, when he remembers that Satan is styled the Prince of the power of the air.—T. Fuller, Pisgah Sight, pt. ii. p. 35 (1650).

In the year of our Lord 1639, in November, here happened an Hirecano, or wild wind, which, entering in at the great East-window blew that down, and carried some part thereof, with the picture of Lord Coventry, . . . all the length of the gallery.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 338 (ed. 1811).

Nash speaks of "furicanos of tempests," as if a mad raging wind.

HURTS, a contracted form of Hurtleberries or Whortleberries (Lat. vaccinium), which is to all appearance a corruption of the A. Saxon heorotberige, the "hart-berry" from heorot or heort, a hart. Similarly hindberry was an old name for the raspberry.

Nothing more have I to observe of these Berries, save that the antient and martial family of the Baskervills in Herefordshire give a Cheveron betwixt three Hurts proper for their Arms.—Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 271 (ed. Nichols).

Hurtberries—In Latine Vaccinia, most wholesome to the stomach, hut of a very astringent nature; so plentiful in this Shire, that it is a kind of Harvest to poor people.—T. Fuller, Worthies, Devonshire, vol. ii. 271 (ed. 1811).

Sr Humphrey Baskerville . . . beareth Argent, a Cheveron Gules, between three Heurts proper. These are a small round berry of a colour between black and blew, growing upon a manifold stalk about a foot high on Mountains in Wales Forrests and Woodland grounds. Some call them Windberries, others Heurtle berries. They are in season with strawberries. They are called also Bill berries.—T. Dingley, History from Marble (temp. Chas. II), p. ccix (Camden Soc.).

HUSBAND does not etymologically denote, as was long supposed, the band that holds the house together. It is the English equivalent of Swed. husbonde, Icel. húsbóndi, which is properly a participle contracted from húsbóandi or húsbúandi (bóndi being a tiller or owner, from búa, to till, to occupy, Goth. gabauan), and so the primitive meaning of the word is the master or good-man of the house (Cleasby). Tusser, therefore, was mistaken when he wrote

The name of a husband, what is it to saie?
Of wife and the household the band and the staie.

Tusser, 1580, E. D. Soc., p. 16.

See my guardian, her husband. Unfashionable as the word is, it is a pretty word: the house-band that ties all together: is not that the meaning?—Richardson, Sir C. Garrison, vi. 375. [Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary.] Camden pointed out the true origin:—

Bond, that is Paterfamilias, as it is in the booke of olde terms belonging sometimes to Saint Augustines in Canterburie, and wee retaine it in the compound Husband.—Remaines Concerning Britaine, 1637, p. 126.

The following moralizing of a Scripture subject is therefore baseless:—

The ties that bound her to the land of Moab had been snapped by the hand of death. In the death of her husband there was the disruption of the house-band. In the deaths of her two sons who had become husbands, the only other bands or bonds that could keep together for Naomi a home in Moab were burst.—The Pulpit Commentary, Ruth (i. 6), p. 13 (1880).

The latine verbe colere . . . is to till or to houshande, as grounde or any other sembable thyng is housebanded.—Udall, Apophthegmes of Erasmus, 1542, p. 265 (ed. 1877).

You husband, you harte, you joy & you pleasure,
You King & you Keyser, to ber only treasure.

Apus and Virginia, 1575 (O. P. xii. 346, ed. 1827).

God defende thei should be so foolishhe to give their maidens to their housebandes; I would wish them rather themselves to take their menne.—Riche his Fareuell to Militarie Profession, 1581, p. 129 (Shaks. Soc.).

Mr. Furnivall has an exhaustive excursus on "bondman," which has no connexion with bonds or binding (cf. Dan. bonde, a peasant), in Bp. Percy's Folio MS., vol. ii. p. xxxiii. seq. He there quotes hūs-bonda (a householder) from A. Sax. Gospels (8th cent.), hus-bunda from Saxon Chronicle, 1048.

Husky, somewhat hoarse and dry in the throat, has no connexion with husks, the dry coverings of seeds (nor yet with the Zend husko, dry!), but is probably another form of Prov. Eng. haskey, dry, rough, unpleasant feeling (e.g. Sternberg, Northampt. Glossary). Compare Lincoln. husk, dry, parched (Wright), N. Eng. and Scot. hask, dry, rough, parched (akin to Dan. harsk, "harsh," O. Eng. "harske, or haske, as sundry frutys, Stipticus."—Prompt. Parv.). "He hath a great haskness (=asthma)."—Horman. Cf. perhaps O. Eng. hoos, A. Sax. hūs, hoarse. Richardson and Skeat regard husky as a corruption of husty or hausty, inclined to cough.

HUSSIF, } a widely diffused word for HUZZIE, } a pocket-case for needles and thread, as if for huswife, housewife, which is sometimes the spelling used, Scot. hussey. According to Professor Skeat this is a corruption of Icelandic húsi, a case for needles. (Dictionary, Cumberland Glossary, s. v.)

Mrs. Anne, I have dropt my hussy.—Richardson, Pamela, i. 162. [Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary.]

I.

ICE-BONE, a provincial name for the aitch-bone or edge-bone of beef (Wright). See also Parish, Sussex Glossary, s. v.

I remember a pleasant passage of the cook applying to him [Jackson] for instructions how to write down edge bone of beef in his bill of commons. He decided the orthography to be—as I have given it—fortifying his authority with such anatomical reasons as dismissed the maniple learned and happy. Some do spell it yet, perversely, aitch bone, from a fanciful resemblance between its shape and that of the aspirate so denominated.—C. Lamb, Old Benchers of the Inner Temple, Elia, p. 58 (ed. 1840).

ICE-SHACKLE, an old corruption of icicle, and still used provincially. The Dorset word is an ice-candle, the Cleveland ice-shoggle. The word icicle is compounded of ice and ickle (Prov. Eng.), a stalactite, Prov. Swed. ikkel (a pointed object), A. Sax. gicel, "Stiria, ises gicel."—Wright, Vocabularies, p. 21; Prov. Dan. egel. So the corresponding forms are Fris. is-jökkel, Prov. Swed. ais-ikkel, A. Sax. ises-gicel, Dut. ijs-kegel. Cf. Prov. Swed. is-stikkell.

The daggers of the sharpened eaves.

In Memorium, cvi.

Ysekeles [al. iseyokels] in euseses þorw hete of þe sonne,
Melteth in a mynwt while to myst & to watre.

Langland, Vision of Piers Plowman, B. xx. 228.

The latter part of the word, -ickle, Scand. jökull (an icicle or ice-berg), is itself cognate with ice, A. Sax. is, Icel. iss, Zend ici (M. Müller, Ohips, iv. 248), which have been connected with Pers. yach, old Pers. yah, and Sansk. yacas, brightness, as if ice were originally named from its sparkling brilliancy (Pictet, Origines Indo-Europ. i. 96, and so Grimm). Thus we would have Yaç- (bright)

A. Sax. is ————— Scand. jaki, jökull
 Eng. ice ————— ickle.
Ikyl, stiria.—Prompt. Parvulorum.
Esclarçyl, en ychele (Gloss in Way).
Iggle, and aigle, an icicle.—Enans, Leices- tershire Glossary, E. D. S.

Otherwise ice (is, Ger. eis) might be identified with is, isa, the base of A. Sax. isen, iron, Goth. eis-arn, Ger. eisen, as if "the iron-hard." Prof. Skeat, with less probability, I think, regards iron (isen), as having got its name from ice (as if ice-en). Compare the following:—

When the cold north wind bloweth, and the water is congealed into ice . . it clotheth the water as with a breastplate.—Ecclesiasticus, xliii. 20.

So Greek pagos, pégos, "the fixed," = ice, with which Prof. Blackie would equate Gaelic eigh, with the usual loss of initial p. Cf. "Rivers . . murmur hoarser at the fixing frost."—Thomson, Winter.

ICE-SICKLE, a corrupt form of icicle, the s of the first part of the old compound is-ickle having coalesced with the latter part. Compare SCOURSE.

The longe yse cycles at the hewsya [=eaveses] longe.

Cyt. and Upl. (Percy Soc. xxii. 3).

Scoladúra, any downe-hanging and dropping ise-sickles.—Florio.

Ghiaccioli, ice-sickles.—Id.

For it had snowen, and frozen very strong,

With great ysesycles on the eues long,

The sharp north wynd hurled bytterly,

And with black cloudes darked was the sky.

The Hie Way To The Spyttel Hous, l. 102

(Early Pop. Poetry, vol. iv. p. 27).

When Phæhus had melted the "sickles" of ice,

With a hey down, &c.,

And likewise the mountains of snow,

Bold Robin Hood he would ramble away,

To frolick abroad with his bow.

Ritson, Robin Hood and the Ranger,

xx. ll. 1-5.

IDLE-HEADED, the original expression of which addle-headed is a corruption, as if having a head full only of corrupt matter, like an addled egg,—"The mouldy chambers of the dull idiot's brain,"—and so addle-pate, a simpleton.

Addle means, not disease (Skeat), but corruption, and is from Welsh hathl, rotten, corrupt, hadlyd, corrupted, hadlu, to decay (perhaps originally to run to seed, hadu, from had, seedy; cf. "seedy"). In Sussex addle-pool is a dunghill puddle. On the other hand idle-headed (= Dut. idel van hoofde; empty-headed, mad.—Kilian), is from A. Sax. idel, empty, vain, Dut. idel, Ger. eitel, vain, conceited (corresponding to Greek itharós, pure, clear, as if sheer, downright.—Skeat).

Đá awungon big ðone, and idelne hine forleton [They swunged him and sent him away empty].—A. Sax. Gospels, St. Luke, xx. 10.

Hee [John Segar, a rescued seaman] became idle-headed and for eight days apace, neither night nor day, took any naturall rest, and so at length died for lack of sleep.—Hakluyt, Voyages, vol. ii. pt. 2, p. 108.

IDOL-GILD, an A. Saxon word for idolatry, from idel, vain, idle, and gild, worship, has perhaps a conscious reference to idol-worship, Lat. idololatria. This word recalls the paronomasia of Habakkuk ii. 18, Heb. 'elil 'illēm, "idle idols" (A. V. "dumb idols"). Compare—

For 3our ydil idolus · don 3ou ille wirche.

Alexander and Dindimus (ab. 1350),

l. 754 (ed. Skeat).

IDOLATRY, Fr. idolatrie, popular corruptions of idololatry, idololatrie, from Lat. idololatria, Greek eidolo-latreia, "idol-worship."

So hippotamus (Topsell) is a popular pronunciation of hippopotamus; and ignomy occurs in Shakespeare for ignominy, physnomy in Topsell for physiognomy.

First Idolotros, whose monstrous head

Was like an ugly fiend, his flaming sight

Like blazing atars, the rest all different:

For to his shape some part each creature lent;

But to the great Creator all adversely bent.

P. Fletcher, The Purple Island, vii. 28

(1633) ed. 1783.

ILL-CONVENIENT, a widely diffused popular corruption of in-convenient, e.g. W. D. Parish, Sussex Glossary.

ILLUSTRIOUS, an irregular formation, from a mistaken analogy to words like famous, glorious, industrious (= Lat. fam-osus, glori-osus, industri-osus), of Fr. illustre, Lat. illustris (Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.). "Just like illustrious is our forefathers' enormious [Warburton]—from enormis or enorme—which we are not to account singularly monstruous, as the same forefathers wrote very allowably.—F. Hall, Modern English, p. 289.

ILL-THING, a Devonshire word for erysipelas or St. Anthony's fire, has all the appearance of being a corruption. It is perhaps from some O. Eng. word like ælding (yliding), from æld, æled, fire, like A. Sax. æledneys, a burning or inflammation (?). Cf. Devon. al-lernbatch, a burning boil, prob. from A. S. ælan, to burn, and botch (Ear Moor Scolding, l. 24).

IMBECIL, formerly pronounced im-bec-il, an old verb, used by Bp. Jeremy Taylor for embezzle, of which word it may be the original, and so the primitive meaning would be to enfeeble or impair a property or anything entrusted to one, to waste, squander, or misappropriate it. To imbecil is from Lat. imbecillus, feeble (cognate probably with baceolus, Greek bakēlos,<sup>1</sup> weak, effeminate), but conformed to the verb to bezzle, to guzzle, drink hard, consume in riot. Thus Thos. Fuller speaks of some "that sit drinking and bezzling wine abroad, whilst 'their' family are glad of water at home" (Commentary on Ruth, i. 1), and Bp. Hall speaks of a drunkard as "the swoln bezzle at an alehouse fire" (Satires, v. 2).

They swear, bezzel, covet, and laugh at him that tells them they sin.—T. Adams, Sermons, vol. i. p. 452.

Time will come

When wonder of thy error will strike dumb
Thy bezzled sense.

Marston and Webster, The Malcontent, 1604, act ii. sc. 2.

However, this bezzle may itself be from baceolus, an impotent, lewd person, and beazled is still used in Sussex for wearied out, exhausted (Parish, Glossary). Cf. "I embesell, Je cele"—Palsgrave, Lesclaircissement, 1530.

They that by negligence imbecil other men's estates, spoiling or letting anything perish which is entrusted to them.—Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. iv. sect. viii. p. 168 (Oxford ed.).

Compare with this—

It is a sad calamity that the fear of Death shall so imbecil man's courage and understanding.—Id. p. 99.

Imbecility was formerly used for weakness generally, e.g. Hooker speaks of obedience of wives as "a duty whereunto the very imbecility of their nature and sex doth bind them" (Eccles. Polity, vol. ii. p. 66, ed. Tegg).

God by his mighty works convinceth Job of ignorance and of imbecility [= impotence].—A. V. Heading to Job, chap. xxxviii.

It should teach us . . . that we do not any way abuse and imbecill that substance that God means to grace.—M. Day, Doomes-Day, 1636, p. 240.

Mr. Haclnit died, leaving a fair estate to an unthrift son, who embezzled it.—Fuller, Worthies of England.

Henry More says that the Church "would not so much as embesell the various readings" of Scripture (Mystery of Godliness, b. vii. c. 11), and Howe, that time is "too precious to be embezzled and trifled away," see Archbishop Trench, Select Glossary, s.v. Embezzle.

By these Comets he would embezzle the excellencie of his worke.—Thos. Lodge, Works of Seneca, p. 900 (1614).

By which Dealing he so imbezzled his Estate, that when his Brother and he came to an Account, there remained little or nothing for him to receive.—Anatomy of the English Nunnery at Lisbon, 1622.

It would be a breach of my Trust to consume or imbecil that Wealth in Excessive Superfluities of Meat, Drink, or Apparel.—Sir M. Hale, Contemplations, pt. i. p. 312 (ed. 1685).

It is their [sluggards'] nature to waste and embezzle an estate.—Barrow, Sermons, Of Industry in general.

The same view as I have here taken has been adopted by Professor Skeat (Notes and Queries, 5th S. x. 461), who quotes from a 15th century poem, The Lament of Mary Magdalen :—

Not content my dere love thus to quell
But yet they must embesile his presence.

<sup>1</sup> The old derivation of imbecillus was in baculo, one that supports himself on a stick, just as in David's curse on Joab, "One that leaneth on a staff," is used to denote a weak, infirm person (2 Sam. iii. 29). In Icelandic certainly staf-karl, a "staff-carle," denotes an old and infirm person, one, according to the Sphinx's riddle, who in the evening goes upon three legs. The radical character in Chinese for ni, sickness, infirmity, is the picture of a man leaning against a support.—Edkins, Chinese Characters, p. 26.

He also adduces the following from Palsgrave (circa 1530).

I embesyll a thyng, or put it out of the way, Je substrays. He that embesylleth a thyng intendeth to steale it if he can convoye it clealy.

"They" so imbécill all theyr strengthe that they are naught to me.

Drant, Horace, Sat. i. 5.

This is imbesylynge and diminyshe of their power and dominion.—Udal, Revelation, c. 16.

Finally, Archbishop Sharp observes in his Sermons (vol. i.), that religion "will not allow us to embezzle our money in drinking or gaming." Bp. Andrewes uses the word in the modern sense, "The son must not falsely purloin or embezzle from his parents" (Pattern of Catechistical Doctrine, 1641, p. 187, Ang. Cath. Lib.).

IMBREW, an occasional spelling, as if connected with brew, of imbrue, to drench or soak, from Fr. s'embruier, "to imbrue or bedabble himself with."—Cotgrave; "Embreuver, to moisten, bedew, soak in."—Id. (cf. descrie and describe), from embevrer, It. imbevvere, Lat. imbibere, to drink in (Wedgwood).

IMPLEMENT, so spelt as if from a Lat. implementum, from implere, that which fills up or supplies one's need, a serviceable tool, is really the same word as employment, that which is employed in a handicraft or trade, from Fr. employer, employer, Sp. emplear, to employ (Minsheu), which is only another form of imply, both being from Lat. implicare. The original meaning of employ would seem to be "to bring or turn into use," to introduce as a factor or means to an end.

Compare the following:—

Lysander solus, with a crow of iron, and a halter, which he lays down, and puts on his disguise again. . . .

See, sweet, here are the engines that must do't,

Which, with much fear of my discovery, I have at last procur'd.

. . . . . My stay hath been prolong'd,
With hunting obscure nooks for these employments.

The Widows Tears (1612), act v. sc. 1 (Old Plays, vi. 192, ed. 1825).

Of such dogges as keep not their kinde, . . . it is not necessarye that I write any more of them, but to banishe them as unprofitable implements, out of the boundes of my Booke.—A. Fleming, Caius of Eng. Dogges, 1576, p. 34 (repr. 1880).

IMPOSTHUME, an abscess, as if an "on-come," imposition, something laid on one as an infliction, is a corruption of the older form apostume, apostem, Greek apostéma, an abscess.

[He] wringing gently with his hand the wound

Made th' hot impostume run upon the ground.
Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 123 (1621).

The inner flesh or pulp [of a gourd] is passing good for to be laid vnto those impostumes or swellings, that grow to an head or supuration (which the Greeks call Apostemata).—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. ii. 38 (1654).

Bladders full of imposthume, sciaticas, lime-kilns i' the palm, incurable bone-ache, and the rivelled fee-simple of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries!—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iv. 1, 28.

IMPOVERISH, a corrupt form of appoverish, Fr. appovrir, to beggar, appovrisse-ment, impoverishment, Lat. ad-pauperare, as if compounded with im- (Skeat). For a similar corruption of the prefix, compare im-posthumus, en-sample, and in-sure for as-sure, Fr. asseurer, Lat. ad-securare. See ADVANCE, ENTICE, INVOICE, and INVEIGLE.

IMPRESS, to constrain men to serve in the navy, as it were to press them into the service, is a corrupt form of imprest, and has no connexion with impress the derivative of Lat. impressus, imprimere, to press in. See PRESS.

If proper colonels were once appointed . . . our regiments would soon be filled without the reproach or cruelty of an impress.—Sam. Johnson, The Idler, No. 5.

INCENTIVE, that which provokes or instigates, is commonly supposed to be connected with incendiary, incendive (Richardson), as if that which inflames, kindles, or set's one on fire (Lat. incendere). The Latin incentivus, however, from which it is derived, is used of that which gives the note, or strikes up the tune, and sets the other instruments going, akin to incentor ("the same as incendiary."—Bailey!), a precentor, incentio, a tuning up, all from in-cinere, to play on an instrument. Incentive, therefore, is cognate, not with to incense, but with incantation and enchantment. The stirring music of the band is an incentive to soldiers going into action.

Milton, with apparently the false analogy in his mind, says of the fallen angels when preparing their infernal artillery,

Part incentive reed

Provide, pernicious with one touch to fire.

Par. Lost, bk. vi. l. 520.

INCARNACYON, in Turner, an old corruption of CARNATION, which see.

INCH-PIN, a curious old word for the lower gut of a deer (Bailey), and especially its sweet-bread (Nares), has all the appearance of being a corruption. It is, perhaps, another form of linch-pin, used for a part of the stag attached to the doucets, and linch may be a softened form of old Eng. link, a sausage (Bailey), "lynke or sawcistre, hilla."—Prompt. Parvulorum; originally a pudding or gut, e.g. "Andouille, a linke or chitterling, a big hogs-gut . . . seasoned with pepper and salt."—Cotgrave. So inkle, tape, is from O. Eng. lingel, O. Fr. ligneul.

Mar.

I gave them

All the sweet morsels call'd tongue, ears, and dowcets!

Rob. What and the inch-pin?

Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, i. 2 (Works, p. 494).

And with the fatt,

And well broyl'd inch-pin of a batt,

A bloted eare-wigg, with the pythe

Of sugred rush, hee gladdis hym with.

Herrick, Poems (ed. Hazlitt), p. 472.

INCOME, a boil (Peacock, Glossary of Manley and Corringham, Lincolnshire. Ferguson, Cumberland Glossary).

The same word as old and prov. Eng. ancome, uncome, an ulcerous swelling rising unexpectedly (Wright), properly an "on-come," identical with Icel. ákoma, á-kváma, an on-come or visitation, a wound, an eruption (Cleasby, p. 41). Compare Scottish income and oncome, an access or attack of disease, otherwise an on-fall (and perhaps Devon impingang, an ulcer, Somerset nimpingang, a whitlow), Fr. mal d'aventure.

Adventitious morbus, syckenes that cometh without our default, and of some men is called an vncome.—Elyot.

A fellow, vncomme, or catte's haire [=whitlow], furunculus.—Baret.

What makes you lame? A tuk' it first wi' an income in ma knee.—Patterson, Antrim and Down Glossary, p. 55, E. D. S.

Pterigio, a whitflaw, an incom or fellow at the fingers ends.—Florio.

The same [Persicaria] brused and bound vpon an impostume in the ioints of the fingers (called among the vulgare sort a fellow or vncome) . . . taketh away the paine.—Gerarde, Herbal, 1597, p. 362.

INDELIBILE, an incorrect spelling of indeleble (Bacon), the old form, Fr. indeleble, Lat. indelebilis, from false analogy to words like horr-ible, terr-ible, Lat. horribilis, terribilis (Skeat).

INNERMOST, a double corruption of old Eng. innemest, A. Sax. innemest, i.e. innem (a superlative form = innest, Lat. imus) + est (superlative suffix), from a false analogy to inner (A. Sax. innera) and most. Inmost itself should rather have been innest. Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v. In.

Bote þe inemaste hayle, I wot,

Bi-tokeneþ hire holy maidenhod.

Castel Off Loue (1320), l. 809.

INQUIRE, a frequent spelling of enquire, as if we took the word directly from Lat. inquiro, instead of mediately through Fr. enquerir. So intend for old Eng. entende, Fr. entendre; inter, for old Eng. enter, Fr. enterrer; intreat for entreat; intrench for entrench, and interview for old Eng. enter-view, old Fr. entreveu.

At the enter-view and voice of the blessed Virgin Mary, he (then a babe) gave a spring in the womb of Elizabeth his Mother.—Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, p. 66, fol.

INSTEP. "It is clear that instep is a corruption of an older instop or instup; and it is probable that the etymology is from in and stoop, i.e. the 'in-bend' of the foot; and not from in and step which makes no sense."—Prof. Skeat, Etym. Dict.

Le montant du pied, the instup.—Cotgrave.

Poulaine, . . . shooes held on the feet by single latches running overthwart the instup.—Id.

The forepart of this pedium is called the instep.—H. Crooke, Description of the Body of Man, 1631, p. 735.

INTEREST, verb, to concern or engage the attention of a person, is an altered modern form of old Eng. interest, Fr. interessé, "interested or touched in" (Cotgrave), It. interessare, from Lat. interesse, to concern. From a confusion with interest, profit.

Not the worth of any living wight

May challenge ought in Heavens interesse.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, VII. vi. 38.

If this proportion "whosoever will be saved" he restrained only to those to whom it was intended, and for whom it was composed, I mean the Christians, then the anathema reaches not the heathens, who had never heard of Christ and were nothing interested in that dispute.—Dryden, Religio Laici, Preface (Globe ed.), p. 187.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here
When general, old, disinterested, clear.

Id. Religio Laici, l. 335.

INTIMATE, in the sense of familiar, close (friends), an incorrect form of the older word intime (Digby), Fr. intime, inward, hearty, dear, intirely affected (Cotgrave), Lat. intimus, innermost, intimate, due to a confusion with intimate, to bring in (news), announce (Skeat).

INTRUST MONEY, a corruption of interest money (Peacock, Glossary of Manley and Corringham).

INVOICE has nothing to do with either in or voice, but, like many other book-keeping terms, comes from the Italian, and is a corrupted form of avviso, a notice or "advice" (Lat. advisus), a bill of particulars as to goods despatched, &c. See INVEIGLE. The word was perhaps influenced by Fr. envoi, a sending or consignment.

INVEIGLE is not, as it appears, compounded with in (as if from It. invogliare, to bring one to his will), but a corrupt form of Fr. aveugler, "to blinde, hudwinke, deprive of eyes, or sight" (Cotgrave), and so to entice or entrap, from aveugle, blind, It. avoculare, all from Low Lat. aboculus, eyeless, like amens, mindless. Wedgwood quotes from Froude, Hist., vol. v. p. 132, a document dated 1547, wherein the Marquis of Dorset is said to have been "seduced and aveugled by the Lord Admiral." The in was perhaps due to the idea that the word meant to draw in or ensnare.

This word "significative" . . . doth so well serve the turn, as it could not now be spared : and many more like vsurped Latine and French words, as "methode," "methodicall" . . . "inveigle."—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 159 (ed. Arber).

Most false Duessa, royall richly dight,
That easy was t' inveigle weaker sight.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, l. xii. 32.

For a similar foisting in of the preposition in-, en-, compare invoice = It.

avviso, an advice; entice = Fr. attiser; ensample = example; enlarge = alarge (Wycliffe), Fr. estlargir; engrieve (Chaucer, Spenser) = aggrieve; encumber = O. Eng. acombre and acombre (Townley Mysteries), &c.

Perhaps a connexion was imagined with inveigh (invehicle ?), Lat. invehere, to take or carry in (whence invectitious, feigned).

IRON-HARD, Yronhard (Gerarde), old Eng. Isenhearde, further changed provincially to Hiselhorn (Cockayne), popular names for the plant Centaurea nigra (Leechdoms, Wortcunning, &c., vol. iii. Glossary), are corruptions of Iron-head, another popular name for the same (Prior). Gerarde gives yronhard as a name of the knapweed (i.e. knobweed), the same plant, which has "a scaly head or knop beset with most sharpe prickes" (Herball, 1597, p. 588).

IRON-MOLD. The latter part of this word is the same as mole, a spot on the skin, Scotch mail, A. Sax. māl, Gsr. mahl, a spot or stain, Swed. mål, Goth. mail, Sansk. mala, dirt, Greek mélas, black:

One yron Mole defaceth the whole peece of Lawne.

Lyly, Euphues, 1579, p. 39 (Arber ed.).

Mole is an old Eng. word for a soil or smirch.

þi best cote, hankyn,
Hath many moles and spottes · it moste ben ywasse.

Langland, Vision of P. Plowman, xiii. 315, text B.

It was *mole*d in many places · with many sondri plottes.

Ibid. 275.

ISAAC, a provincial name for the hedge-sparrow, is a corruption of heisugge, which is found in Chaucer:—

Thou murder of the heysugge on the braunch.
The Assembly of Foules, l. 612, and in Owl and Nightingale, l. 505.

Heissagge, an Hedge sparrow.—Bailey.

A. Sax. hege-sugge, where hege is hedge, and sugge (or sucge) apparently the fig-pecker, beccafico, or titlark (Greek sukalis, = Lat. ficedula, from ficus). "Cicada, vicetula [= ficedula], heges-sugge."—Wright's Vocabularies (Ælfric, 10th cent.), p. 29. See HAX-SUCK.

It is worth noticing how our peasants have recognized in birds "the sweet sense of kindred." The hedge-sparrow is still in some parts Isaac. The red-breast as long as the English language lasts, will have no other name than Robin, the Jean le rouge-gorge of Normandy.—The Cornhill Magazine, July, 1865.

ISINGLASS, a kind of gelatine used in confectionery, formerly sometimes spelt icing-glass, as if a glassy substance for icing viandes or making jelly (Fr. gelée, from Lat. gelu, frost), is a corruption of Dut. huyzenblas, ising-glass (Sewel, 1706), Ger. hausenblase, Dan. hus-blas, the bladder (blas, blase) of the sturgeon (huyzen, hausen, L. Lat. huso), out of which it is manufactured on the Danube and elsewhere.

ISLAND, more commonly and correctly written iland until far on in the 18th century, is the A. Sax. caland, "water-land" (Ettmüller, p. 57), also igland (Id. p. 35), from ig, an isle; cf. Ger. eiland. A. Sax. ea, water, is the same word as Icel. á, O. H. Ger. aha, Goth. ahva, Lat. aqua. Compare ey-at (ait), a little island.

The present orthography arose from a supposed connexion with isle, O. Fr. isle, from Lat. insula (perhaps originally a detached portion of the mainland which has taken a bound into the sea, in-sul-, Mommsen). We even find the spelling iseland, which would seem to imply that the s was sometimes pronounced.

The Dogges of this kinde doth Callimachus call Melitæos, of the Iseland Melita, in the sea of Sicily.—A. Fleming, Caius of Eng. Dogges (1576), p. 20 (repr. 1880).

The Persian wisdom took beginning from the old Philosophy of this iland.—Milton, Areopagitica, 1644, p. 68 (ed. Arber).

Ev'n those which in the circuit of this yeare, The prey of Death within our iland were.

G. Wither, Britain's Remembrancer, 1628, p. 111.

The German eiland, which seems to mean "egg-land," from ei, an egg, being fancifully regarded as swimming in the sea as the yolk does in the white of an egg, is of the same origin; compare Dut. eyland (Sewel), Icel. eyland.

Another corruption is presented in Mid. High Ger. einlant, as if a land lying alone (ein). Perversely enough isle (as Professor Skeat notes) was frequently written ile or yle. Thus Robert of Gloucester says of England, þe see goþ hym al a bouthe, he stont as an yle.

Chronicle, p. 1, l. 3 (ed. 1810).

Base Neutrals, who have scandalized much
And much endanger'd those who doe contend
This ile from desolation to defend.

G. Wither, Britains Remembrancer, 1628, p. 115.

ISLE, "in architecture are the sides or wings of a building" (Bailey), an old spelling of aisle, which seems to be from Lat. avilla, a wing (cf. Fr. aile), as if it denoted the parts isolated or detached from the nave. Isle, aisle, as applied to the passage between the pews, seems to be a confusion of Fr. aile, with allée, an alley or passage. Alley is the common word for it in Leicestershire (Evans).

The isle had been spoiled of its lead, and was near roofless.—H. Harington, Nugæ Antiquæ, vol. i. p. vi. (1779).

I started up in the Church isle withe my Poetrie.—Id. p. xii.

Nature in vain us in one land compiles
If the cathedral still shall have its isles.

Marvell, Poems, p. 91 (Murray repr.).

The Cross Isle of this Church is the most beautifull and lightsome of any I have yet beheld.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 436.

For indeed, Solutum est templum hoc, this temple of his body . . . The rooffe of it (His head) loosed with thornes; the foundation (His feet) with nailes. The side Isles (as it were) his hands both likewise.—Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, p. 487, fol.

In one ile lies the famous Dr. Collins, so celebrated for his fluency in the Latin tongue.—J. Evelyn, Diary, Aug. 31, 1654.

I WIS, } quasi-archaic forms some-
I WISSE, } times used in pseudo-antique writings, as if the first pers. sing. of a verb to wis, meaning to know, is a mere misunderstanding of old Eng. iwis, ywis, certainly.

Vor siker þou be, Engeland is nou þin, iwis.
Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle,
(Morris, Spec. II. p. 4).

I wis your grandam had a worsor match.
Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 3, 102.

An you play away your buttons thus, you will want them ere night, for any store I see about you; you might keep them, and save pins, I wuss.—Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, act iv. sc. 1.

In the Percy Folio MS. i-wis (with a hyphen) occurs frequently for A. Sax. gewis, certainly.

The Sheriffe he hath Made a cry heele have my head I-wis.

Vol. i. p. 19, l. 9.

And what for Weeping much & warle,
 A-sleepe I-wis this knight fell.

Id. p. 146, l. 59.

But once at least it is mistaken for the pronoun and verb.

3 pottles of wine in a dishe
 They supped itt all off, as I wis,
 All there att their partinge.

Id. vol. ii. p. 583, l. 626.

J.

JACK-A-LEGS, a North Eng. word for a clasp knife, Scottish jockleteg. This curious word is, according to Jamieson, a corruption of Jacques de Liege, the name of a celebrated cutler, by whom this kind of knife was originally made.

An' gif the custocks sweet or sour,

Wi' jockletegs they taste them.

Burns, Halloween (Works, Globe
ed. p. 45).

Similarly, to stick a knife into anything "up to the lamprey" was an expression formerly in use in Ireland, meaning up to the end of the blade,
 near the haft, where the name of a well-known cutler named Lamprey was commonly inscribed.

JACK-CALL, } is a corrupt form of JACKAL, } Fr. chacal, Ger. scha- kal, Pers. shakal, Sansk. çrīgāla, Heb.
shuāl. Compare Gipsy yaccal and jukel, a dog.

The next being the noble Jack call, the Lion's Provider, which hunts in the Forest for the Lion's Prey.—A collection of strange and wonderful creatures from most parts of the world, all alive [to be seen in Queen Anne's time at Charing Cross].—Memoirs of Bartho- lomew Fair, ch. xvi.

Jack-call is also the spelling in the Spectator, 1711, and in Dryden (Plays, vol. iv. p. 296).

A rabble of Arabians and Persians boarding her and like jackalls with hunger-starved fury and avarice tearing her asunder.—Sir
T. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 115.

Heb. shuāl (or shughal), a fox or jackal, Song of Songs, ii. 15, is said to be from shāal, to go down, to burrow. Dr. Delitzsch (in loc. cit.) says this is quite a distinct word from the Persian-Turkish shaghal, our "jackal," which comes from the Sanskrit çrīgāla,

 the howler.

JACKEMAN, an old word for a cream cheese (Wright).

Cheese made upon russhes, called a fresshe cheese, or jackeman. Junculi.—Elyot.

The synonymous Fr. jonchée, It. giun- cata (from Lat. juncus, a rush), would lead us to suppose that jack-man was a corrupted form of some word like Fr.
jonchement, and that jonc was transformed into Jock or Jack.

Fr. "Jonchée, a green cheese, or fresh cheese made of milk, thats curdled without any runnet, and served in a fraile of green rushes."—Cotgrave.

It. "Giuncata, any junket, but properly fresh cheese and creame, so called because it is sold upon fresh rushes."
 —Florio.

Junket is still a Devonshire word for curds and clouted cream, and to junket is to feast on similarly delicious viands.

Cf. Fr. fromage, from It. formaggio, a cheese, so called from the forma or frame on which it is shaped. It is curious to note that junket, a delicacy, is etymologically near akin to the sailor's junk, notoriously coarse and unpalatable fare, so called from being as tough as an old cable, originally a rope made of rushes, Portug. junco (Skeat).

JACK-OF-THE-BUTTERY, a trivial name for the plant sedum acre. Dr. Prior ingeniously conjectures that it is a corruption of Bot-theriacque (it being used as a treacle or anthelmintic) into but- tery-Jack. But where is this Bot-theri- acque to be found?

JACK-STONES, the name which children in Ireland (and probably elsewhere) give to the pebbles with which they play a game like the English dibs or dibstone, throwing them up and catching them alternately on the front and back of the hand. It is a corruption of chack-stones, Scot. chuckie- stones, from chuck, to toss or throw smartly out of the hand.

Cailleatan, a chack-stone or little flint stone.
 —Cotgrave.

Every time their taes caught a hit crunkle on the ice, or an imbedded chucky-stane.—
Wilson, Noctes Ambrosiæ, i. 102.

The chucky-stones are oftener dry than wet at the side of the burn.—S. R. Whitehead, Daft Davie, p. 116.

The Purim of Scripture . . . is conjectured the origin of jacks or chucks in Scotland, as played with stones—perhaps derived from the barbarous Latinity jotticos.—Dalzell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland, p. 523.

JACK ROBINSON. "Before one could say Jack Robinson," is a way of saying in an instant or jiffy. Halliwell quotes "from an old play," without further specification.

A warke it ys as easie to be doone,
As tys to saye, Jacke! robys on.

So the original phrase would mean, Jack, on with your clothes! This needs confirmation.

JANDERS, an old English name for the jaundice (Fr. jaunisse, yellowness) still popularly in use in Ireland and some of the western counties of England, the words being assimilated to the names of other diseases, glanders, malanders, sallenders, and regarded as a plural.

Thence came the blacke Janders, the discoloured face, and the consumption of such as rotted inwardly.—Thos. Lodge, Translation of Seneca, 1614, p. 403.

Jaunisse, the jaundies, also the yellows.—Cotgrave.

Jaunders, jaundice.—N. W. Lincolnshire (Peacock).

Holland in his translation of Pliny, fol. 1634, speaks of "an old jaunise or overflowing of the gall" (vol. ii. p. 134). The Holderness folk, E. Yorkshire, will inquire "Is it yellow jonas, or black, she's gotten?"—Glossary, Eng. Dialect Soc.

JANET-FLOWER, apparently the same as jonette, a Scottish name for the marsh marigold, which stands for Fr. jaunette (Jamieson). A little tawny dog of my acquaintance so named in a similar manner came afterwards to be familiarly known as Johnette, Johnny, and John.

JAUNTY, dashing, showy, fine, elegant, dandified. This word, which has evidently been assimilated to the verb to jaunt, is derived through the forms jenty, genty, from Fr. gentil, pretty, fine, well-fashioned.

Sae jimply lac'd her genty waist
That sweetly ye might span.

Burns, Bonnie Ann (Globe ed. p. 211).

Jamieson defines genty as neat, elegantly formed, and of dress, giving the idea of gentility. Others forms are jauntie (Durfey), an evident imitation of the French pronunciation, janty (Wycherley, 1677), jauinty (Spectator, vol. v. p. 236, 1711-12). Compare jentlie (Ascham, Schoolmaster, ed. Mayor, p. 3), jantyl (= gentle), gentleman, gentiles, &c. So in French jante and gente are names for the fellow of a wheel (Cotgrave). Cf. Dut. jent [a borrowed word], neat, handsom.—Sewel, 1708. The word came in apparently in the 18th century with French fashions, and meant originally modish, stylish, elegant—not buffoonlike, as Prof. Skeat says, mistaking the origin of the word. There seems to be no evidence of the existence of an Eng. word jaunt, to play the fool.

Is it reasonable that such a creature as this shall come from a janty part of the town, and give herself such violent airs.—The Spectator (1712), No. 503.

Your janty air and easy motion.—Id. Dedication to vol. viii.

Sober and grave was still the garb thy muse put on,
No tawdry careless slattern dress,

But neat, agreeable, and jounty 'twas,
Well fitted, it sate close in every place,
And all became, with an uncommon air and grace.

J. Oldham, Upon the Works of Ben Jonson, 5,
Poems, p. 66 (ed. Bell).

Compare the spelling in the following:—

Truely, you speake wisely, and like a jauntlewoman of foureteene years of age.—Mars-ton, Antonio and Melida, Pt. I. act. v (vol. i. p. 63, ed. Halliwell).

JAW BOX, } Prov. words for a scullery
JAW TUB, } sink (Patterson, Antrim and Down Glossary, E. D. S.), Scot. jaw-hole (Guy Mannering). Jaw is perhaps the same word as Fr. gâchis, puddle, slop, from gâcher, to rinse, old Fr. waschier, to soil, O. H. Ger. waskan, to wash. In Scottish jaw is to pour.

Then up they gat the maskin-pat,
And in the sea did jaw, man.

Burns, Poems, p. 221 (Globe ed.).

JEMMIES, an old provincial word for hinges (Gentleman's Magazine, Dec. 1793), is the same word which is sometimes pronounced jimmers, jimmels, O.

Eng. gimmel, gimmow, from Fr. jumelle, a twin, a pair (of hinges, rings, &c.), Lat. gemellus, from geminus. Herrick speaks of "a ring of jimmals," i.e. a double ring.

Anamnestes, his Page, in a graue Satten suite purple, Buskins, a Garland of Bayes and Rosemary, a gimmel ring with one linke hanging.—Lingva, ii. 4 (1632), sig. D.

I think, by some odd gimmors or device Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on.

Shakespeare, 1 Hen. VI. i. 2, l. 42.

From the latter use of gimmer, as a contrivance or piece of machinery (so Bp. Hall), no doubt arose the slang term jemmy for a crow-bar.

They call for crow-bars—jemmies is the modern name they bear.

Barham, The Ingoldsby Legends.

JEMMY, an old slang term defined in the following quotation:—

A cute man, is an abbreviation of acute, . . and signifies a person that is sharp, clever, neat, or to use a more modern term, jemmy.—Gentleman's Magazine, Sept. 1767.

Todd gives it in the meaning of spruce as a low word. It is evidently the same as Scotch jimmy, meaning handy, dexterous, neat, dressy, jimp, to leap, and jimp, neat, gym, neat, spruce (Douglas).

JEMMY-JOHN, a large wicker-cased bottle, a corruption of demi-john, itself a corrupted form of the Arabic damagan, and that from the Persian glass-making town of Damaghan.

Lord Strangford, however, derives demi-john, Fr. dame-jaune, from the Lat. dimidiana (Letters and Papers, p. 127).

JEOPARDY, old Eng. juperdy, so spelt instead of jeopardy, old Eng. jupartie (juberte, Siege of Rhodes, 1419, pp. 150, 155, Murray repr.; jeobertie, Harington), from an idea that the original was Fr. jeu perdu, a lost game. (Compare the old Fr. proverb, A vray dire perd on le ieu, = By speaking truth one jeopards all.) The correct old form was jupartie or jupertie, which occurs (for the first time, says Mr. Oliphant) in Dame Siriz, a translation from the French, about 1280; and this is from Fr. jeu parti, a state of the game equally divided, an even chance whether a player will win or lose, a hazardous or uncertain position. Tyrwhitt quotes from Froissart, "Ils n'estoient pas à jeu parti contre les François" (Chaucer, p. 206, ed. 1860), and the mediæval Latin phrase jocus partitus. A mediæval game consisting of enigmatical questions and answers was called le jeu-parti.—Chéruel, Dictionnaire des Institutions, tom. ii. p. 622. The primitive meaning is apparent in the following from a "Mery Ballett" (Cotton MS.), contributed by Mr. Furnivall to N. & Q. 5th S. xii. 445.

Now lesten a whyle & let hus singe to this Desposed companye,
how maryage ys a mervelous thinge,
A holly disposed Juperdie.

It schuld be a grettere juperdy to Kynge Edwarde thenne was Barnet feld.—Warkworth's Chronicle (ab. 1475), p. 20, Camden Soc.

Men mycht have sen one every sid hegwn
Many a fair and knyghtly Iuperty
Of lusty men, and of 3oug chevahy.

Lancelot of the Laik, l. 2548 (E. E. T. S.).

Whan he thurgh his madnesse and folie
Hath lost his owen good thurgh jupartie,
Than he exciteth other folk therto.

Chaucer, Canterbury Tales, l. 16210-12.

He set the herte in jeopartie
With wishing and with fantasie.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. i. p. 319
(ed. Pauli).

So lang as fatis sufferit hym in ficht
To exerce pratikkis, iupertye and slicht.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, 1553,
p. 389, l. 45 (ed. 1710).

JERKED BEEF, dried beef, is a corruption of the Peruvian charqui, prepared meat (Latham). Prof. Skeat quotes:—

Flesh cut into thiin slices was distributed among the people, who converted it into charqui, the dried meat of the country.—Prescott, Conquest of Peru, c. v.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE, a corruption of It. girasole, "turn-sun," the sun that turns about, the sunflower. By a quibble on Jerusalem the soup made from it is called "Palestine" (Prior). It. girasole, "the turne-sole or sunflower" (Florio), is from girare, to turn, and sole, the sun.

JESSE'S FLOWER, a corruption of jessamine (from Persian jāsmīn, "fragrant"), used by Quarles (C. S. Jerram, Lycidas, p. 78), from a false analogy, perhaps, to Aaron's Beard, Solomon's Seal, and similar plant-names.

The lowly pink, the lofty eglantine ;
The blushing rose, the queen of flowers and best

Of Flora's beauty ; but above the rest
Let Jesse's sov'reign flower perfume my qualming breast. Quarles, Emblems, v. 2.

JEW'S-BEARD, a local name for the plant house-leek (R. I. King, Sketches and Studies), is a corruption of Fr. jou-barbe, "Jove's-beard," Low Lat. Jovis barba, It. barba di Giove, Prov. barbagol, Ger. donnerbaert, "Thor's beard." Being sacred to the Thunder-god, and deemed a protection against lightning, it was frequently planted on the roof of the house.

One of the enactments of Charlemagne's Capitular De Villis Imperialibus (c. 70, A.D. 812) is "Hortulanus habeat super domum suam Jovis barbam." Hence its old Eng. name ham-wyrt, "home-wort," as well as punor-wyrt, "thunder-wort" (Cockayne, Leechdoms, &c.).

Howsleke, herbe, or seugrene, Barba Jovis, semper viva, jubarbium. — Prompt. Parvulorum.

JEW'S EAR, a popular name for a certain fungus resembling the human ear, is a corruption of Judas' ear, Ger. Judas-schwamm, Lat. auricula Judæ. It grows usually on the trunk of the elder, the tree upon which Judas is traditionally reported to have hanged himself. Richard Flecknoe, Diarium, 1658, p. 65, speaks of a certain virtue of alder-wood which

From Judas came

Who hang'd himself upon the same.

Vid. Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. iii. p. 283.

For the coughe take Judas eare,

With the parynge of a peare.

Bale, Three Laws of Nature, 1562.

O. Eng. oryelle is the alder-tree.—Prompt. Parv. Vid. oreille de Judas.—Cotgrave. Cf. Chinese muh urh (Kidd's China, p. 47).

In Jews' ears something is conceived extraordinary from the name, which is in propriety but fungus sambucinus, or an excrescence about the roots of elder, and concerneth not the nation of the Jews, but Judas Iscariot, upon a conceit he hanged on this tree; and is become a famous medicine in quinsies, sore throats, and strangulations, ever since.—Sir Thos. Browne, Works, vol. i. p. 214 (ed. Bohn).

There is an excrescence called Jew's-ear, that grows upon the roots and lower parts of trees, especially of alder and sometimes upon ash.—Bacon, Sylva Sylvarum, Works (1803), vol. ix. p. 264.

The Mushrooms or Toadstooles which grow upon the trunks or bodies of old trees, verie much resembling Auricula Judæ, that is lewes eare, do in continuance of time growe unto the substance of wood, which the Fowlers do call Touchwood.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1385.

The hat he wears, Judas left under the elder when he hanged himself.

Marlowe, The Jew of Malta, act iv. sub fin. (1633).

JEW'S-HARP, a small instrument of iron played between the teeth, Lincolnshire Jew-trump. The first part of the word is probably the same that is seen in the synonymous Cleveland word gew-gow (Holderness gew-gaw), which Mr. Atkinson identifies with O. Norse giga, Swed. giga, a Jew's-harp, Dan. gige, Ger. geige, a musical instrument. It was probably a Scandinavian invention. Compare the following—

They [the urns] contained . . . knives, pieces of iron, brass, and wood, and one of Norway a brass gilded Jew's harp.—Sir Thos. Browne, Hydriotaphia, 1658, vol. iii. p. 21 (ed. Bohn).

Gewgaw seems originally to have been used in the special sense of a rustic musical instrument, e.g. "Pastor sub caulâ bene cantat cum calamaulâ. The sheperd vndyr þe folde syngythe well wythe hys gugawe þe pype."—Promptorium Parv. s. v. Flowte (about 1440). The modern meaning of a trivial toy, a showy bauble, must then be a secondary one.

Gugaw, idem quod Flowte, pype, giga.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

On this Mr. Way remarks that Fr. gigue, It. giga (a fiddle), may be from Gk. gigras [? giggras], a kind of flute. J. Pollux mentions the giglarus as a small sort of pipe used by the Egyptians.—Wilkinson, Ancient Egyptians, vol. i. p. 487 (ed. Birch). If this should be connected, it would trace up our Jew's harp to a curious antiquity.

O let me hear some silent Song,

Tun'd by the Jew's-trump of thy tongue.

Randolph, The Conceited Peddler, Works, p. 48.

Is Clio dumb, or has Apollo's Jew's-trump By sad disaster lost her melodious tongue?

Id., The Jealous Lovers, p. 114.

JEWS' TIN, a name given in Cornwall to lumps of smelted tin found inside the so-called Jews' houses, which is perhaps for dshyi-houses, tshey or dzhyyi (old Cornish ty), a house, being used especially for smelting-houses (M. Müller, Chips, vol. iii.).

Probably this is merely house tin, or the tin found in the houses.—Chas. Kingsley, Life, vol. ii. p. 238.

The title of Jews' House is given by the country people to an old smelting house—a narrow shallow pit with a small quantity of charcoal ashes at the bottom, and frequently pieces of smelted tin, the last being called Jews' Bowls.—J. O. Halliwell, Rambles in Western Cornwall, p. 51.

JIGGER, a popular name for the West Indian flea, as if so called from its jigging or quick movement, is a naturalized form of chigoe, its native name.

Yet, how much is owing to themselves is plain from this circumstance, that numbers are crippled by the jiggers, which scarcely ever in our colonies affect any but the negroes.—Southey, Letters, vol. ii. p. 201.

JILT, to throw one over as a flirt does, is a contracted form of jillet, a diminutive form of jyll, a flirt, a light woman, originally a common feminine name, derived from Juha. Thus Jillet = Juhiet, Fr. Juliette, It. Giulietta. The expressions gill-flirt, flirt-gill, flirt-gillian, are of frequent occurrence in old writers. This use of jill was probably determined by the similar word giglet, a giddy, wanton woman, old Fr. gigues, a jigging, flighty girl (Skeat). Sojockey, to cheat, was originally only the Scottish form of Jack.

A jillet brak his heart at last,

Ill may she be!

Burns, Poems, p. 71 (Globe ed.).

Jo, } in Scotch an endearing ex-
 JOE, } pression of familiarity, as in
 "John Anderson, my jo," is said to be a corruption of Fr. joie, as if mon joie, my darling (Jamieson). Joy is also given as a Scottish word for darling. A large number of Scottish words, it is well known, are borrowed from the French. Burns says of Poesie:—

And och! o'er aft thy joes hae starv'd

'Mid a' thy favours!

On Pastoral Poetry, Poems, p. 114
 (Globe ed.).

JOHN DORY, } the name of this
JOHNNY DORY, } fish is said to be a barbarous dismemberment and corruption of "junitore, a name by which this fish is familiarly known at Venice and elsewhere; the origin of the term junitore, as applied to the dory, seems to be the following: St. Peter, represented with the triple keys 'of hell, of hades, and of heaven' in his hand, is called, in his quasi-official capacity, il janitore (The Gate-keeper), and this fish, sharing with the haddock the apocryphal honour of having received the apostle's thumb-mark, is called in consequence St. Peter's fish, and by metonymy, il janitore." The ancient Greek name for the dory having been Zeus, i.e. Jupiter, it is not improbable the great saint of the Roman church was chosen (as in other instances) to take the place of the dethroned Thunderer. (So Badham, Prose Hæliotics, p. 229.) We may compare with this, imperatore, a popular name at Genoa for the sword-fish, so called because the Italian imperators were commonly represented sword in hand. Pliny gives in a list of fishes, "the Emperour with a Sword, called Xiphias" (Holland's Trans., vol. ii. p. 452, 1634). The Arabs call a certain fish found on their coasts Sultan el-Bahr, Sultan of the Sea. St. Peter having been ever regarded as the patron saint of fishermen and fishmongers, certain boats plying on the Thames were called Peter-boats; the armorial bearings of the Fishmongers' Company, London, are his cross-keys; watermen and fishermen were sometimes called familiarly Peter, Peter-men (Wright). Similarly a plant that grows on the seashore is called Saint Pierre or sapphire, and a little bird that seems to walk the water, like the saint, is named the petrel. That the dory was familiarly known as St. Peter's fish the following will show:—

It. Pésce Son Piétro, a Dory or Gold-fish.—Florio, 1611.

German, Petermann, Petersfish, the dory.
 French, St. Pierre, the John Dory; see Cotgrave, s. v. Poisson.

DREE, St. Peter's fish.—Bp. Wilkins, Essay towards a Philosophical Language, 1668.

The faber marinus, . . . we often meet with it in these seas, commonly called a peter-fish, having one black spot on either side the body; conceived the perpetual signature, from the impression of St. Peter's fingers, or to resemble the two pieces of money which St. Peter took out of this fish.—Sir Thos.

Browne (Fishes of Norfolk, 1668), Works, vol. iii. p. 328 (ed. Bohn).

We may perhaps compare Mod. Greek christó-psaron, the trout, and halibut, the holy fish.

Holland seems to have derived the dory, or doree as he spells it, from Fr. dorée, gilded (It. dorata), and so Mr. Wedgwood, Philolog. Transactions, 1855, p. 63, and Prof. Skeat.

The Doree or Goldfish, called Zeus and Faber.—Pliny, Natural History, tom. i. p. 247 (1634).

Mahn (in Webster) thinks it is from jaune dorée, the golden yellow fish, an unlikely combination. John or Johnny is no doubt only a popular prenomem as in jack-pike, jack-daw, &c. The following from Alexander Neckam, who died in 1217, seems conclusive, and the janitore theory therefore falls to the ground.

Gustum doreæ quæ nomen sumpsit ab auro.
—De Laudibus Divina Sapientia, l. 561.

Southey seems to have thought that the fish has its name from a human prototype.

Would not John Dory's name have died with him, and so been long ago dead as a door-nail, if a grotesque likeness for him had not been found in the fish, which being called after him, has immortalized him and his ugliness (vid. The Doctor, p. 310)

Compare the old ballad of John Dory in Child's Ballads, vol. viii. p. 194.

Gayton in his Pleasant Notes upon Don Quixot, 1654, mentions as popular heroes, quite as illustrious as Palmerin of England, "Bevis of Southampton, Sir Eglamore, John Dory, the Pindar of Wakefield, Robin Hood, or Clem of the Cluff" (fol. p. 21). The name of the fish was no doubt assimilated to that of the well-known pirate.

JOHNNY-DARBIES, a nickname for policemen, is said to be a corruption of the French gens-d'armes (Slang Dict. s.v.). Schandarm is a popular corruption in German of the same word, as if from schand (shame) and arm (poor). Other forms are standarm in Aachen, and standár, schandár in Bavaria (Andresen, Volksetymologie).

JOKE-FELLOW, a Scotch word for an equal or intimate acquaintance (Jamieson), is an obvious corruption of (joug-fellow) yoke-fellow.

JOLLY-BOAT, an Anglicized form of Dan. jolle, a yawl, Dut. jol, Swed. julle. Yawl is the same word disguised by a different spelling.

JORDAN, an old name for certain household utensils of common use, occurring in Chaucer (Prologue to the Pardoner's Tale) and in Hollinshed, who speaks of "two jorden pots," is doubtless the Danish jord (jorden), earth, as if an earthen pot. Cf. jurnut, a provincial word for the pig-nut, Dan. jord-nødd. So turreen, i. e. a terrene vessel.

Ich shal Jangly to þys Jordan with hus Juste wombe.

Langland, Vision of Piers Plowman, Pass. xvi. l. 92 (text C.).

Iurdone . . . Jurdanus, madella.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

JOY-BIRDS, a name commonly given by the country-folk about Tedworth, on the borders of Wiltshire and Hampshire (and probably elsewhere), to the jay-birds or jays, which abound in the forest of Savername, not far distant. This corruption is a curious instance of a reversion to the original meaning of a word, Fr. geai, formerly gai, Prov. gai, jai, Sp. gayo, the jay, denoting properly the blithe and gay bird (with reference perhaps to its vari-coloured plumage), being derived from Fr. gai, Prov. gai, Sp. gayo, lively, gay.

The jay was formerly used as a proverbial comparison for one exceedingly "jolly."

Heo [= she] is dereworthe in day,
Gracious, stout, and gay,

Gentil, jolyf so the jay.

Lyric Poetry (ab. 1320), p. 52 (Percy Soc.), and Böddeker, Altenglische Dichtungen, p. 169.

JOYLY, an old spelling of jolly, as if another form of joyous, joyful. Jolly, Fr. joli, old Eng. jolif, old Fr. jolif, Ital. giulivo, "iolly, glad, full of ioy" (Florio), are said to be derived from Icel. Jól, Yule, the season of rejoicing (Diez). Compare, however, It. giulio, blithe, merry, giuliare, to glad or be iolly (Florio), and giullaro, a jester (giullare, to play the jester), shortened from giocolaro, Lat. jocularis, jocularis, a jester. The spelling joyly is of frequent occurrence in the Apophthegms of Erasmus, 1542:—

Xenocrates the philosopher was of a more soure nature, a ioylie feloe in some other respects.—P. xxvi. (Reprint 1877).

That yemaie bee an habile manne, to enioie the possession of that ioily fruitfull Seignourie.—Id. p. xxviii.

I am that ioily feloe Diogenes the doggue.—Id. p. 153.

When I of any ioyllie ioy
or pleasure do assaye.

Drant, Horace, 1567, F. vi. verso.

See Notes and Queries, 6th S. ii. 522.

If ye be suche ioily felowes that ye feare not the wrathe or dyspleasure of officers, whan as ye do euyll, yet grope youre owne conscience.—Thos. Lever, Sermons, 1550, p. 45 (ed. Arber).

Besides all that, my foote is worth thy yard, So am I jolif fayre and precious.

H. Thynn, Debate between Pride and Lowliness (ab. 1568), p. 12 (Shaks. Soc.).

JUBILEE, a season of rejoicing (Lat. jubilæus), no doubt popularly connected with jubilant and jubilation, from Lat. jubilare, to shout for joy, to rejoice, is a distinct word derived from Heb. yôbél, the sound of a trumpet, especially on the year of remission (Smith, Dict. of Bible, i. 1151). However yâbal, the root of yôbél, and Lat. jubil-, are both probably imitative of a resounding cry or note.

After which he proclaims a Jubile, which was celebrated with all manner of sports and pleasures imaginable.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 104.

JUDAS TREE, a kind of carob tree, said to be so called because Judas Iscariot hanged himself thereon, Lat. arbor Judæ [= Cercis siliquastrum], is apparently a mistaken rendering of Sp. arbol Judia, i. e. the bean tree, which gets its name from its bean-like pods; judia being the Spanish word for French beans (Minshew). Gerarde says that "This shrub is founde in diuers prouinces of Spaine," that it bears "long flat cods," i. e. pods, with seeds like lentils, and that "it may be called in English Iudas-tree, whereon Iudas did hang himselfe, and not vpon the Elder tree, as it is saide."—Herbal, p. 1240. It may however be noted against the above conjecture that Pulci mentions un carrubbio, a carob-tree, as that from which the traitor suspended himself (Morgante Maggiore, xxv. 77).

JUDY-COW, a name for the lady-bird insect in the dialect of Cleveland, may possibly be, as Mr. Atkinson suggests, a corruption of the French name vache à Dieu (vache de Dieu), partly translated and the rest corrupted (cow-de-Dieu), and then inverted (as cow-lady for lady-cow in the same dialect, Frauen-Kühlein, Bête de la Vierge), and so would result Dieu-de cow, judy-cow. All this, however, is only conjecture.

JUG, a small pitcher, apparently a familiar name of endearment at first for that which supplies drink to the company, Jug (Jugge, and Judge) being a woman's pet name, equivalent to Jenny or Jannet (see Cotgrave, s. v. Jehannette), but originally from Juditha (Yonge, Christian Names, vol. i. p. 63). It was formerly used as a canting term for a light woman, see Davies, Suppl. Eng. Glossary, s. v. In Leicestershire jugg is still the name of sundry small birds, as bank-jugg, the willow-wren, hedge-jugg and juggywren for jenny-wren (Evans, E. D. S.). The earlier form of the word appears to have been jack, a name long given to a kind of leathern jug, and this is no doubt identical with A. Sax. ceac, a pitcher, which would become chack or jack (see Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v. Jack (1). Old Eng. jubbe, a jug (Chaucer), probably contributed to the corruption.

JUG, in the old slang expression, "The stone jug," for a prison, notwithstanding the curious parallelism of the Greek kéramos, denoting both a jug and a prison, is evidently a corruption of the Scotch word jugg, generally used in the plural in the forms juggs, joughs, jogges, a kind of pillory in which the criminal used to be confined by an iron collar which surrounded his neck. It is the same word as Fr. joug, Dut. juk, Lat. jugum, a "yoke." A person confined in this instrument was said to be jogged; the iron jug, with its partial and temporary confinement, readily suggested the name of stone jug for the more complete and protracted incarceration of the prison cell. The parish juggs were still to be seen a few years ago at the little country church of Duddingston, under Arthur's Seat, not far from Edinburgh (Notes and Queries, 5th S. x. 214). A representation of one is given in Chambers' Cyclopædia, s. v.

Some vent to jug for dirty tays.

C. G. Leland, The Breitmann Ballads,
p. 15 (1871).

The brethrein ordained thaim both, for thair drinking in tym of divin service, and for thair suspect behaviour, to pay, ilke one of thame, four merkis of penalte, and to sitty on the stoole of repentance tuo Soondays, or then to redeem thameselfs be standing in joggis and brankis.—The Presbytery Book of Strathbogie, 1631 (Spalding Club), p. 6.

Quhen the minister said he sould cause put him in joggis, that thei hard him say that neither he nor the best minister vithin seven myles durst doe so much.—Id. 1644,
p. 46.

You had betther neither make nor meddle wid him;—jist put him out o' that—but don't rise yer hand to him, or he'll sarve you as he did Jem Flanagan; put ye three or four months in the Stone Jug. [Note, "A short periphrasis for Gaol."]—W. Carleton, Traits and Stories of Irish Peasantry, vol. i. p. 286 (1843).

"Six weeks and labour," replied the elder girl, with a flaunting laugh; "and that's better than the stone jug, anyhow; the mill's a deal better than the Sessions."—C. Dickens, Sketches by Boz, p. 187 (ed. 1877).

JULIENNE. This soup owes its name to a curious series of corruptions, if the account given in Kettner's Book of the Table be correct. One distinctive ingredient in its composition, it seems, is (or was) wood-sorrel, which in Italian, as in other languages, is popularly known as Alleluia, probably because its ternate leaf was considered an emblem of the Trinity. Alleluia became corrupted into luggiala (Florio), lujula, and juliola, and this name, on being introduced into France by Catherine of Medici's Italian cooks, was finally Frenchified into Julienne. Cf. L. Lat.
Luzula (campestris), called in some parts of Cheshire God's grace.

JULY-FLOWER, a mis-spelling of gillyflower sometimes found, itself a corruption of O. Eng. gilofer, Fr. giroflée, It.
garofalo, Mod. Greek garophalo, Greek karúphallon ("nut-leaf"), Low Lat.
gariofilum. [Compare JUNE-EATING.]

Thou caught'st som fragrant Rose,
Som July-flower, or som sweet Sops-in-wine,
To make a Chaplet, thy chaste brows to binde.
Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 304 (1621).

The spelling has been influenced by the fact that, as Bacon observes,

In Iuly, come Gilly-flowers of all varieties.
—Essays, 1625, p. 556 (ed. Arber).

It is observed, that July-flowers, sweet-williams, and violets, that are coloured, if they be neglected . . . will turn white.—

Bacon, Sylva Sylvarum, Works (ed. 1803), vol.
ix. p. 246.

Both stock-July-flowers and rose campion, stamped, have been successfully applied to the wrists in tertian or quartan agnes.—Id.
vol. ix. p. 268.

Yonn Iulyflow'rs, or the Damaske Rose,
Or sweet-breath'd Violet, that hidden growes.

G. Wither, Britains Remembrancer,
p. 137 verso, 1628.

You are a lovely July-flower,
Yet one rude wind, or ruffling shower,
Will force you hence, and in an houre.

Herrick, Hesperides (Works, ed.
Hazlitt), p. 92.

The July-flower that hereto thriv'd,
Knowing herself no longer liv'd.

Lovelace, Aramantha, Poems, ed.
Singer, p. 93.

The July-flower declares his gentleness;
Thyme, truth; the pansie, hearts-ease maidens
call.

Drayton, Ninth Eclogue, p. 436 (ed. 1748).

Of flowers Jessamins, Roses, Melons, Tulips, July-flowers, &c.—Sir T. Herbert, Travels,
1665, p. 128.

JUMP, as applied sometimes to a species of dance music, is a corrupt form of dump, a slow and solemn dance (Stainer and Barrett, Musical Dictionary). So jumpish is found for dumpish (Nares).

JUNETIN [q. d. Apple of June], a small apple, which ripens first (Bailey), sometimes spelled "June-eating" (compare Sp. mayota, May-fruit, the strawberry), seems to be corrupted from geniting, also given by Bailey, "a sort of apple." Kettner, Book of the Table, spells it joanneting (p. 34).

Another form of the same word is jonette, an old Eng. name for an early ripe pear.

As pees-coddes and pere-Jonettes · plomes and chiries.

Vision of Piers Plowman, Pass. xiii.
l. 221, text C.

Professor Skeat is of opinion that this word, as well as genniting, an early apple, is ultimately derived from Jean, through probably O. Fr. Jeannet, Jeanneton, a diminutive, the reference being to St. John's day, June 24, when perhaps it became ripe. In his note, in loco, he quotes:—

In July come . . . early peares, and plummes in fruit, ginnittings.—Bacon, Essay 46 (1625, Arber ed. p. 556).

Pomme de S. Jean, S. John's apple, a kind of soon-ripe sweeting. Hastivel, a soon-ripe apple, called the St. John's apple.—Cotgrave.

This early apple or pear is still called St. Jean.—P. Lacroix, Manners, &c., of Middle Ages, p. 116.

The Joanneting or St. John Apple, like the Margaret, the Maudlin, and the Lukewards apple, reminds us of the old custom of naming fruits and flowers from the festivals of the church nearest to which they respectively ripened or bloomed. Compare Lent lily, Lent rose, Michaelmas daisy, Christmas rose, May (= Hawthorn), Thistle Barnaby, Gang-flower or Rogation-flower (Skinner), St. Barbara's cress, St. James wort, St. John's wort, St. Peter's wort, Pasque-flower (= Easter flower), Fr. pasquerette (Cotgrave), Dan. pask-bljæ, Ger. pfingst-rosen, Low Ger. pinksten, the Whitsuntide gilliflower. Especially we may notice here the German Johannis-apfel, -beere, -blume (= daisy), -kafer, -kraut, -ritte (= meadow sweet), -wurmchen, all of which make their appearance about the feast of St. John Baptist, or Midsummer's Day. (See Yonge, History of Christian Names, vol. i. p. 110.) Finally we have the assertion of Messrs. Britten and Holland that the John-apple or Apple-John, well known in Cheshire, is so called because it is ripe about St. John's Day (Eng. Plant-Names, p. 14). Gerarde gives a representation of a "Jenmetting Peare, Pyra Præcocia."—Herbal, p. 1267.

Pomgranat trees, Fig trees, and Apple trees, live a very short time: & of these the hastie kind or lenitings continue nothing so large as those that bear and ripen later.—P. Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist., vol. i. p. 495 (1634).

If you loue frute, forsooth, wee haue jenitings, paremayns, russet coates, pippines, able-johns, and perhaps a pareplum, a damsons, I or an apricocke too.—Sir John Davies, Works, vol. ii. p. 248 (ed. Grosart).

Yet, tho' I spared thee all the spring,

Thy sole delight is, sitting still,

With that gold dagger of thy bill

To fret the summer jenneting.

Tennyson, The Blackbird, Poems,
p. 68.

JUNK, a Chinese vessel, Sp. junco, so spelt, perhaps, from some imagined connexion with the naval term junk (so Bailey), is a naturalized form of Chinese chuw'an, a ship (Skeat).

Into India these Persees came . . . in five Juncks from Jasquez.—Sir T. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 55.

JURY-MAST, "a yard set up instead of a mast, which has been broken down by a storm or shot" (Bailey), is probably for an injury mast. With less likelihood it has been considered to be a joury mast, i. e. a mast for the day (Fr. jour), temporary. Prof. Skeat holds the first part of the word to be a corruption of Dan. kiöre, driving, as if "a driving-mast," which does not seem very likely either.

JUST, when used adverbially in such sentences as "It is just ten o'clock," "The water was just to the knee," "He was just late," is a derivative, not of French juste, Lat. justus, but of French "jouste, near to, nigh adjoining, hard by, towards, beside," also old Fr. (16th cent.) jouste, It. giusta, Prov. josta, from Lat. juata, near. Hence also to joust or just, to come near, jostle, or tilt against each other, Fr. jouter, O. Fr. jouster, It. giustare, Span. justar, Prov. jostar. The primitive meaning of juata was adjoining, from jug-, the root of jun-gere.

Mr. Oliphant remarks that the earliest use of just is in the sense of even, right [i. e. of position], e. g.,

His hode was juste to his chynne [Juxta mentum].—Percival and Isumbras, p. 11.

"It is curious," he adds, "that just should be found in this sense before its meaning of equity appeared in England."—Old and Middle English, p. 568.

He evidently confounds here two distinct words.

JUSTACOAT, a Scotch word for a waistcoat with sleeves, is said by Mr. Wedgwood (Philological Transactions, 1855, p. 66) to be from Fr. just au corps. The Scotch forms in Jamieson are justicoat, justiecor, and jeistiecor, derived as above.

JUST-BEAST, a Sussex word for a beast taken in to graze, also called a joist-beast, a corruption of agist-beast, i. e. one taken for agistment or pasturage (Parish).

Compare Cumberland jyste, to agist, to put cattle out to grass upon another's farm (Dickinson), Westm. "joisted fields," i.e. agisted (Old Country Words, E. D. S. p. 122).

K.

KANGAROO, a name popularly given in some places to a certain class of fungi. An enthusiastic mycologist, writing in the Saturday Review (Sept. 1876), cites—

The remark of a sharpish lad who guided us not long ago through the beautiful woods of Piercefield, and interrupted our triumph over a rare find of curious fungi with the caution, "You munna eat them kangaroos." We presently learned that this was the generic name which his careful mother had taught him to attach to mycologic growths. Two days later, a middle-aged bailiff pronounced upon a fungus on which we had stumbled that it was not a mushroom, but a cunker.

It is of this latter word, no doubt, that kangaroo is a corruption.

KEELSON, a piece of timber in a ship next to the keel, keelsine (Chapman). Prof. Skeat observes that in the cognate languages the word bears the apparent meaning of "keel-swine," e.g. Swed. köl-svin, Dan. kjøl-sviin, Ger. kiel-schwein; but that those words were no doubt at first "keel-sill," as we see by comparing the Norwegian form kjöl-svill. The suffix svill (= Ger. schwelle, a sill), not being understood, was corrupted (1) to swine, and (2) to son.

KENEBOWE, a curious old corruption of kimbo in the phrase "arms a-kimbo," as if in a keen (or sharp) bow (or curve).

The host . . . set his hond in kenebowe.

Tale of Beryn, l. 1838 (ed. Furnivall).

The proper meaning of a-kimbo is on kam bow, "in a crooked bend" (Skeat, Etyim. Dict. s. v.). For kam, see GAME.

KENNING, a Cornish word for a white speck forming on the cornea of the eye, as if a defect in the ken (= the sight).—Polwhele, Traditions and Recollections, ii. 607. It is a corruption of kerning also used, i.e. the growth of a kern or horny opacity.

KENSPECKLE, a Scottish word meaning easily recognizable from a distance, conspicuous, remarkable, is perhaps for conspicuable, Lat. conspicabilis (= conspicuous), conspicuous; just as ken is identical with Eng. con, to know, and kent, a long pole, with Lat. contus; cf. kunsence, = consent.—Ancren Riwele, p. 288. It is also in use in Lincolnshire (Peacock). In the Holderness dialect (E. Yorkshire) it appears as kensback; in Antrim and Down, kenspeckled (Patterson); in Bailey's Dict. kenspeckled.

For the last six or seven years, these showers of falling stars, recurrent at known intervals, make those parts of the road kenspeckle (to use an old Scottish word)—i.e. liable to recognition and distinguishable from the rest.—De Quincey, Works, vol. iii. p. 195.

She thought it more prudent to stay where she was [on the top of the coach], though it might make her look kenspeckle.—Daft Davie, &c., S. R. Whitehead, p. 213.

KERNEL, an old word for a battlement, is a corrupt form of crenelle, old Fr. carnel, crenel (Mod. Fr. créneau), from cren, cran, a notch or indentation, Lat. crena. Hence "crenellated," furnished with battlements. In Low Lat. the word is spelt quarnellus (O. Fr. mur quernelé), as if "foramen quadratum," a square aperture.

Wallis & kirnels stoute þe stones doun bette.

Langtoft, Chronicle, p. 326.

On hym there fyl a gret kernel of ston.

St. Graal, vol. ii. p. 388, l. 432.

And þe carnels so stondeþ vp-riht,

Wel i-planed and feir i-diht.

Castel of Loue, l. 695, ab. 1320.

þe komli kerneles were to-clatered wiþ en-gines.

William of Palerne, l. 2858.

KERB-STONE, an incorrect spelling of curb-stone, that which curbs or confines a pathway, and marks it off from the road, so written perhaps from an imagined connexion with Ger. kerbe, a notch, groove, or indentation.

By the West side of the aforesaid Prison, then called the Tunne, was a fair Well of Spring water, curbed round with hard stone, but in the year 1401 the said Prison house . . . was made a Cestern for sweet water.—J. Howell, Londinopolis, p. 77.

KERSEYMERE, a fine stuff, is a corruption of cassimere, the old form of cashmere, a material originally brought from Cashmere in N. India. It was assimilated to kersey, the name of a coarse cloth originally, perhaps, manufactured at Kersey, in Suffolk (Skeat).

KETTLE OF FISH, a colloquial phrase for an embroglio, "mess," or contre-temps, a perplexing state of affairs, perhaps originally denoted a net full of fish, which, when drawn up with its plunging contents, is eminently suggestive of confusion, flurry, and disorder. Compare kiddle (kidellus), a fishing weir, and keddle or kettle-net, a large stake-net. Compare perhaps Scot. kittle, to puzzle or perplex. See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v., who quotes, Fine doings at my house! a pretty kettle of fish I have discovered at last.—Fielding, T. Jones, bk. xviii. ch. 8.

KEY, formerly a common spelling of quay, from an idea that it meant that which shuts in vessels from the high sea, just as lock is an enclosure in a canal. Thus Bailey defines "Key of a River or Haven, a Wharf, also a Station for ships to ride, where they are, as it were, locked in with the land," and so Richardson. But quay, Fr. quai, a distinct word, is from Welsh cae, cai, an enclosure. Compare W. caeth, bound, confined, which Ebel (through a form cacht) deduces from Lat. captus (Celtic Studies, p. 100).

Keyage, or hotys stondynge, Ripatum.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Quai, the key of a river, or haven.—Cotgrave.

Item, that the slippe and the keye, and the payment ther, be oerseyn and repared.—Ordinances of Worcester, Eng. Gilds, p. 374 (E. E. T. S.).

I do not look on the structure of the Exchange to be comparable to that of Sir Tho. Gresham in our City of London, yet in one respect it exceeds, that ships of considerable burthen ride at the very key contiguous to it.—J. Evelyn, Diary, Aug. 19, 1641.

It has twelve faire churches, many noble houses, especialy the Lord Devereux's, a brave kay and commodious harbour, being about 7 miles from the maine.—Id. July 8, 1656.

The crew with merry shouts their anchors weigh,

Then ply their oars, and brush the buxom sea,
While troops of gathered Rhodians crowd the key.

Dryden, Cimon and Iphigenia, l. 614.

KEY-COLD, a frequently occurring expression in old writers, as if to denote "as cold as an iron key." I would suggest, merely tentatively, that the original was kele-cold, i. e. "chill-cold," from A. Sax. célan, to chill, Prov. Eng. keel, or kele, to cool; the word, as to its formation, being a kind of intensive reduplication, like tip-top, tee-total. Cf. keale, a cold, Lincolnshire.—Ray, N. Country Words.

Either they marry their children in their infancy, when they are not able to know what loue is, or else matche them with inequality, ioyning burning sommer with keu-cold winter, their daughters of twenty yeares olde or vnder, to rich cormorants of three-score or vpwards.—J. Lane, Tell-Trothes New-yeares Gijt, 1593, p. 5 (Shaks. Soc.).

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king.

Shakespeare, Richard III. act i. sc. 2.

A fire to kindle in us some luke-warme, or some key-cold affection in us to good.—Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, fol. p. 607.

But compare the following:—

For certes there was never keie,

Ne frosen is upon the walle

More inly cold, than I am alle.

Gower, Confessio Amantis, vol. iii. p. 9.

KEYS, the Anglicized name of the local parliament of the Isle of Man, is evidently a corruption of the first syllable of the vernacular name, Kiave-as-feed, "The Four-and-twenty," so called from the number of representatives.

The power of making and repealing laws rested with the Keys.—The Manx Society Publications, vol. xiii. p. 113.

Camden gives the fanciful explanation—

The Keys of the Island are so called because they are to lay open and discover the true ancient laws and customs of the island.—Britannia, Isle of Man (ed. 1695).

KICK, a slang word for fashion, vogue, is not, as it might seem, a corruption of Fr. chic, but the same word as Prov. Eng. kick, a novelty, a dash, kicky, showy (Norfolk), old Eng. "Kygge, or ioly (al. kydge), Jocundus, hilaris."—Prompt. Parvulorum.

'Tis the kick, I say, old un, I brought it down.
Dibdin.

I cocked my hat, and twirled my stick,
And the girls they called me quite the kick.

George Colman.

"He's in high kick" is a proverb in the Craven dialect. Compare Prov. Eng. kedge, brisk, lively (Suffolk), Scotch kicky, showy, gaudy, kidgie, cheerful; Swed. käckt, brave, brisk, Ger. keck, akin, no doubt, to quick; Icel. kykr, another form of kvikr, quick, lively; O. H. Ger. keck, Dan. kiäk. See Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 482.

In Banffshire they say, "He tried on 's kicks wee me," i. e. tricks; and "She geed kickin' up the street," i. e. walking with a silly haughty air (Gregar).

KICK-SHAW'S, French ragoûts or sauces (Bailey), or generally any light made-dishes of an unsatisfying nature, is an Anglicized form of Fr. quelque chose, "something," anything trivial, the termination -shaw being perhaps mentally associated with psaw! a term of contempt. The Germans have twisted the same word into geckschoserie, foolery, as if compounded with geck, a simpleton (Andresen, Deutsche Volksetymologie, p. 40). Cf. our "gooseberry fool" and "silli-bnb."

Gervase Markham, in his English Housewife, alleges as instances of her skill "quelquechoses, fricassees, devised pastes," &c., and Whitlock, in his Zootomia, considers "quelques choses, made dishes of no nourishing."

Paper Quell-chose never smelt in Scholes. — Davies, Muse's Sacrifice, p. 5.

Only let mee love none, no not the sport
From countrey grasse, to comfitures of Court,
Or cities quelque choses, let not report
My minde transport.

Dr. Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 8.

Bishop Hall has the word still unnaturalized, "Fine quelqueschoses of new and artificial composition;" Cotgrave defines Fricandeaux as "quelk-choses made of good flesh and herbs chopped together," and Dryden shows the word in a state of transition.

Limberham. Some foolish French quelque-chose I warrant you.

Bruinsick. Quellechose! O ignorance in supreme perfection! He means a kekshose.

The Kind Keeper [in Wedgwood].

This latter form seems eventually to have been mistaken for a plural, as kickshoe is used by Lord Somerville (Memorie of the Somervilles), and keksho in an old MS. cookery book (Wright s. v. Eyse). But kickshawses (Shaks. Twelfth Night, i. 3, 122) and kickeshoses (Feailey) were formerly in use.

She can feed on hung beef and a barley pudding without the help of French kickshaws. — The Country Farmer's Catechism, 1703.

Ye shall haue a Capon, a Tansie, and some kick-shoves of my wits. — Jacke Drums Entertainement, act ii. l. 424 (1616).

Picking here and there upon kickshaws and puff paste, that have little or no substance in them. — Thos. Brooks, Works (Nichol's ed.), vol. iv. p. 134 (1662).

Milton spells it kickshoes.

Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws. — Shakespeare, 2 Hen. IV. v. 1, l. 29.

KIDNAP, to steal a child, i. e. to nab a kid; the latter slang term for a child being perhaps the same as Dutch and German kind, just as kip, another slang word, is the same as Dutch knip. See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. v. Kid.

KIDNEY, an assimilation to other words ending in -ey (such as attorney, chimney, money) of old Eng. kidnere, which is a compound word meaning literally "belly-reins." Kid (Prov. Eng. kite, the stomach) is A. Sax. cwið, the womb or stomach, Scand. leviðr, Goth, quipus, and "neere of a beest, Ren" (Prompt. Parv.) is a kidney, "the reins," Dan. nyre.

"Reynoun, kydeneyre." — Old MS. See Prompt. Parvulorum, p. 353. I find that this is also identically the view of Prof. Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v.

þei schul offre twey kideneiren. — Wycliffe, Levit. iii. 33.

Take þo hert and þo mydrud and þe kydnere,
And hew hom smalle, as I þe lere.

Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 10.

KILDERKIN, a small cask, a corruption of Dut. kindeken, the same, originally a "child-kin," and then a barrel of infantine dimensions, from kind, a child.

KILLESSE, } old words for a groove or

CULLIDGE, } channel (Parker, Glossary of Architecture), are corruptions of Fr. coulisse, something that slides, a port-cullis, or the groove it slides in, from couler, to slide, to trickle, Lat. colare, to per-colate.

KILL-RIDGE, an ancient corruption of the name of the plant culrage (Polygonum hydropiper), "Water-pepper, or arsenicke, some call it kill-ridge, or culerage." — Nomenclator, 1585.

Curage, The herb Waterpepper . . Killbridge, or culerage. — Cotgrave.

Ciderage, another name for the same plant, is a corruption of Fr. cidrage. Cowitch, according to Mr. Cockayne, is only another form of cubrage [?].—Leechdoms, vol. iii. Glossary, s. v. Earsmerte.

KINDNESS, a name given to a disease which prevailed in Scotland A.D. 1580, was probably, as Jamieson suggests, a vulgar corruption of (quinance) squinance, squinancy, the old forms of quinsy, from Fr. squinance, Lat. cynanche, Greek kūnanche, a dog-throttling.

KING, a contracted form of old Eng. kining, A. Sax. cyning. From a misunderstanding of the cognate words, O. H. Ger. and old Sax. kuning, O. Low Ger. cuning, Dut. koning, Swed. konung, Icel. konungr, as if derived from Goth. kunman, Icel. kunna, Dut. kunnen, A. Sax. cunnan, to know and to be able (so Helfenstein, Comp. Grammar, p. 33), originated the idea that the king is properly he who can, or possesses power, because he kens or has cunning; since knowledge is power, and might is right, according to Carlyle's favourite doctrine. (So Verstegan, Smith, Bailey, Richardson; also Jenkin on Jude, p. 181.)

This etymology is of considerable antiquity. In a homily of the 12th century it is said, Elch man þe ledeð is lif rihtliche . . . is cleped king, for þat he kenneð eure to rihte.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 45 (ed. Morris).

King from Conning, for so our Great-grand-fathers called them, which one word implyeth two most important matters in a Governour, Power and Skill.—Camden, Remaines Concerning Britaine, p. 34, 1637.

The Commander over Men; he to whose will our wills are to be subordinated, and loyally surrender themselves, and find their welfare in doing so, may be reckoned the most important of Great Men. . . . He is called Rex, Regulator, Roi: our own name is still better; King, Könning, which means Can-ning, Able-man.—T. Carlyle, On Heroes, Lect. VI.

King is Kön-ning, Kun-ning, Man that knows or cons.—Id. Lect. I.

The only Title wherein I, with confidence, trace eternity, is that of King. König (King) anciently Könning, means Ken-ning (Cunning), or which is the same thing Can-ning. Ever must the Sovereign of Mankind be fitly entitled King.—Sartor Resartus, bk. iii. ch. 7.

O. Eng. kin-ing (old Frisian kining) meant originally "son of the kin," i. e. a chief chosen by the tribe (Ger. kurfürst); kin- being the same word as A.

Sax. cyn, a tribe or kin, Icel. kyn, O. H. Ger. kunni, Goth. kuni, race; and -ing, a patronymic termination, meaning "son of," as in Athel-ing, Woden-ing (Rask, A. Sax. Grammar, p. 78). So Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 464; Stratmann, Skeat. Compare "The king is near of kin to us."—2 Sam. xix. 42; A. Sax. þeoden, a king, from þeod, the people; þeod-cyning (Beowulf, l. 2, and 3008), a king belonging to the people; and A. Sax. drihten, a lord (Icel. dróttinn), from driht (drótt), the people.

The king is the representative of the race, the embodiment of its national being, the child of his people, and not their father. A king, in the old Teutonic sense, is not the king of a country, but the king of a nation. The Teutonic king is not the lord of the soil, but the leader of the people.—Freeman, The Norman Conquest, vol. i. p. 77.

The king, says Cardinal Pole, is the head and husband of the people, the child, the creature, and the minister of the two—populus enim Regem procreat.—Id. p. 584.

Dans l'origine, le peuple souverain créa des rois pour son utilité.—De Cherrier, Histoire de Charles VIII. i. 76.

Nú! ðin cyning ðé cymb to.—A. Sax. Vers. S. Matt. xxi. 5.

& þe wule he was out of Engeland · Edgar Aþeling þat riht eir was of Engeland · & kunde to be king.

Robt. of Gloucester, Chron., Morris Spec. p. 15, l. 422.

He thought therefore without delay to rid them, as though the killing of his kinsmen could amend his cause, and make him a kindly king.—Sir T. More, History of King Richard III.

King, Ger. könig, has also been identified with Sansk. ġanaka, a father, which is rather a word closely related, root ġan, to beget, whence genus, kin.

KING-COUGH, given by Bailey as a North country word for the chin-cough, or hooping-cough, is a corruption of link-cough. (See CHIN-COUGH.) It is found also in N. W. Lincolnshire (Peacock), in the Holderness district, E. Yorkshire, and in Cumberland (Dickinson). An old MS. of the 15th cent. says "þis erbe y-dronke in olde wyne helpiþ þe Kynges hoste" (= king-cough), while another heals "þe chynke and þe olde cogh" (Way). Skinner quotes kin-cough as a Lincolnshire word, and the verb kinchen, to breathe with difficulty. Compare Swed. kik-hosta, chin-cough, Dut. kink-hoest.

KINGDOM is properly no compound of king with the suffix -dom, as if the state or condition of a king, though it has long been regarded as such. The Old Eng. form of the word is kinedom, A. Sax. cynedóm, where the first part of the compound is cyne (adj.), royal.—Skeat, Etym. Dict.

Ich chulle scheawen . . . to alle kinedomes pine scheomeful sunnen, to þe kinedome of eorðe, & to þe kinedome of heouene.—Ancren Riwe, p. 322.

[He] cowþe vche kyndam tokerue & keuer when hym lyked.

Alliterative Poems, p. 85, l. 1700.

KIT, a small violin, contracted (perhaps under the influence of catling, and cat-gut, kitling and kitten) from A. Sax. cythere, a cittern, a word borrowed from Lat. cithara, a lyre, whence also guitar and Ger. zither.

KITTY, a provincial word for a wren (e.g. Parish, Sussex Glossary), is a corruption of cutty, a name also given to it, descriptive of the shortness of its tail; compare Welsh cwta, short, bob-tailed, cwt, a tail, or s-cut, cuttiar, a coat, cwtyn, a plover. "The little kitty-wren must once have been St. Catherine's bird," writes Miss Yonge, History of Christian Names, vol. i. p. 270.

KITTY-WITCH, a Norfolk word for a cockchafer, from the A. Sax. wicga, seen also in ear-wig.—Philolog. Soc. Trans., 1858, p. 103.

KNOT, the name of a snipe-like bird, Tringa Canutus, is said to have its name from King Canute, with whom it was a favourite article of food (Camden). Cf. knot, nodus, and Swed. knut, Icel. knútr.

The knot that called was Canutus' bird of old Of that great king of Danes his name that still doth hold.

Dryton.

Now as the Eagle is called Jovis Ales, so here [Lincolnshire] they have a Bird which is called the Kings' Bird, namely Knut's, sent for hither out of Denmark at the charge, and for the use, of Knut, or Kanutus, King of England.—T. Fuller, Worthies, vol. ii. p. 2.

L.

LABORINTH, an incorrect spelling, as if connected with labor (Cotgrave), Low

Lat. laborintus, of labyrinth, Lat. labyrinthus, from Greek labúrinthos. The Greek word has been regarded as another form of lavurinthos, from lavra (λάρα) or laúra (λαύρα), a lane, as if a place full of lanes or alleys. It is properly a corruption of an Egyptian word.

LADDER TO HEAVEN, a trivial name for the plant Solomon's seal. Dr. Prior conjectures that it may have originated in a confusion of seel de Salamon, or de Notre Dame, with echelle de S. or de N. D.

LADY'S SMOCK, an old popular name for the cardamine or cress, in Northampton applied to the great bind weed. It was perhaps indefinitely used at first for any common plant with a white flower, and may possibly be the same word as old Eng. lustmoce (Lucce Boc, I. xxxviii. 3), A. Sax. lustmoca, lust wort, sundew (drosera) [?].

LAMB, in certain cant phrases, as "to give one lamb and salad," i. e. a sound thrashing, lamb-pie, a flogging, is doubtless the same word as Prov. and old Eng. lam, to beat or drub, lamming, a thrashing (Lincolns.), originally to strike with the hand, Ir. lamh, O. Norse lamr.

Dauber, to beat, swindle, lamme, canvass thoroughly.—Cotgrave.

De vellers ash lam de Romans dill dey roon mit noses plue.

Leland, The Breitmann Ballads, p. 104.

I once saw the late Duke of Grafton at fisticuffs, in the open street, with such a fellow, whom he lamb'd most horribly.—Misson, Travels over England, p. 305 (ed. 1719).

Compare smack, to slap, to give a sounding blow to one, and Irish smac, the palm of the hand. However, the true cognation may be Icel. lama, to bruise, lame, A. Sax. lama; cf. Scot. lamp, to beat.

LAMB-MASS, an old misunderstanding of Lammas (Day), the first of August, "because the Priests used to get in their Tithes-Lambs on that Day" (Bailey); "Lammesse, Festum agnorum" (Prompt. Parvulorum, ab. 1440). Lam is the ancient form of lamb. A mass said on that day was accordingly esteemed very beneficial to lambs (Southey, Common Place Book, vol. iv. p. 122). But Lammas is A. Sax. hlálf mæsse, loaf-mass (in Saxon Chronicle, an. 913), the day when an offering of new wheaten bread was made, as a thanksgiving for the fruits of corn.

By þis lyfode we mote lyue · tyl lammasse tyme ;
And by þat, ich hope to haue · heruest in my crofte.

Langland, Vision of P. Plowman, C. ix. 315 (ed. Skeat).

That the Sheriff and Bailly hunt the Wolf thrice in the Year betwixt St. Mark's day and Lambmass; and that the Country rise with them to that end.—Acts of Scot. Parl., Jac. VI., Par. 14, cap. 87.

LAMB-SKIN-IT, "a certain game at cards" (Bailey, Dictionary), as if to imply the game at which an innocent tyro would be fleeced, or as the phrase goes, a pigeon would be plucked (Chaucer's "to pull a finch"), is a corruption of Fr. lansquenet, "a Lance-knight, or German footman"; also, the name of a game at cards."—Cotgrave. See LANCE-KNIGHT.

LAMB'S QUARTERS, a popular name for the plant atriplex patula, is perhaps only Lanmas quarter, called so from its blossoming about the 1st of August, the season when the clergy used to get in their tithes (Prior), A. Sax. hláf-mæsse.

LAMB'S-WOOL, the name of an old English beverage, of which the chief ingredients were ale and roasted apples, is said to be a corruption of lumasool, from the "ancient British" la maes abhal, "the day of apples," i.e. the autumnal feast of apple gathering, when it used to be drunk (Chambers' Cyclopædia). In Irish indeed la is day, mas is collected, and abhal is an apple, and formerly this drink, as well as apples, was partaken of at the autumnal feast of All Halloween (Brand, Pop. Antiq., i. 396, ed. Bohn), but this Celtic name needs confirmation. It is first mentioned, I think, by General Valancey, while lambs-wool is found in the 16th century. The Scotch word is lamoo.

Next crowne the bowle full,
With gentle lambs-wooll,
Adde sugar, nutmeg, and ginger.
Herrick, Poems, p. 340 (ed. Hazlitt).

With Mahomet wine he dammeth with intent
To erect his paschal lamb's wool Sacrament.
Abston's Nine Worthies (see Dryden's Poems, p. 107, Globe ed.).

Gerarde, writing in 1597, says:—

The pulpe of the rosted Apples . . mixed in a wine quart of faire water, laboured together vntill it come to be as Apples and Ale, which we call Lambes Wooll . . doth in one night cure . . the strangurie.—Herball, p. 1276, fol.

Peele in his Old Wives Tale, 1595, has:

Lay a crab in the fire to roast for lamb's-wool.—p. 446, ed. Dyce.

The Lamb's-wool, even in the opinion of my wife, who was a Connoisseur, was excellent.—Goldsmith, The Vicar of Wakefield, ch. xi.

LAMPER EEL, a Scotch corruption of lamprey (Jamieson), found also in provincial English (Wright).

The Lamprey, or, as it is called here [in Banffshire], the Lamprey eel, is often met with.—Smiles, Life of Edward, the Scotch Naturalist, p. 426.

In W. Cornwall it is called the lumping eel (M. A. Courtney, Glossary, E. D.S.).

Some odde palace lampreel's that ingender with snakes, and are full of eyes on both sides, with a kinde of insinuated humbleness, fixe all their delights upon his brow.—J. Marston, The Malcontent, i. 5 (Works, ii. 216, ed. Halliwell).

LAMPREY, Fr. lamproie, Sp. lamprea, It. lampreda, has generally been understood to be from a Low Lat. lam-petra, i.e. lambens petram, "lick-stone," from its attaching itself to rocks by its mouth. The Breton name lamprez, from lampr, slippery, and Welsh lleiprog, from lleipr, "limber," probably point to the true origin, and in that case the aboveforms would be instances of corruption due to false derivation. For the inserted m compare limpet from Greek lepa(d)s; and limp beside Welsh llipa, flaccid. Compare also limber, Swiss lampig, Bav. lampecht, flaccid.

Mylke of almondes þerto þou cast, þo tenche or lampray do to on last.
Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 10.

Lampreys—In Latine Lampetrae, à lambendo petras, "from licking the rocks," are plentiful in this and the neighbouring Counties in the River of Severn. A deformed Fish, which, for the many holes therein, one would conceive Nature intended it rather for an Instrument of Musick then for man's food.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 465.

LANCEGAY, the name of an old weapon, apparently a spear or javelin, prohibited by the statute 7 Rich. III.

He worth upon his stede gray,
And in his hound a launcegay,
A long swerd by his side.

Chaucer, The Rime of Sir Thopas, l. 13682.

"Launcegay, Lancea."—Prompt. Parv. Mr. Way thinks that lance-gaye (mentioned by Guillaume de St. Andre in the 14th cent.) or lance-guaye may be the same as the archegaye of the Franks, and derived from the name of the Eastern or Moorish weapon, called assagay, arzegaye, or zagaye. L'assagay would readily pass into lancegay. Sp. "Azagaya, a iavelin, a Moores weapon."—Minsheu, is for al-zagaya. Prof. Skeat thinks the word is contracted from lance-zagaye. De Comines mentions that the Albanian Stradiots [ $\equiv$   $\sigma\rho\alpha\rho\upsilon\omega\rho\alpha\iota$ ] were armed with a short pike called an arzegaye pointed with iron at both ends.—Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. ii. p. 14. The assegai of savage warfare, a word with which we became painfully familiar in our conflict with the Zulus, is not a native term, but borrowed from the the Europeans. Cotgrave has zagaye and azagaye, "a fashion of slender, long and long-headed pike used by the Moorish horsemen." It is the Berber zagaya (Devic).

The male sort from their infancy practise the rude postures of Mars, covering their naked bodies with massie Targets, their right hand brandishing a long but small Azagay or lance of Ebony, barbed with iron, kept bright, which by exercise, they know how to jaculate as well as any people in the Universe.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 23.

That no man go armed, to here launcegayes, Gleyves, Speres, and other wepyn, in distorhyng of the Kynges pease and people.—English Gilds, p. 388 (E. E. T. S.).

To speake of lesser weapons, both defensive and offensive, of our Nation, as their Paud, Baselard, Launcegay, &c., would be endlesse and needlesse, when wee can doe nothing but name them.—Camden, Remaines Concerning Britaine, 1637, p. 204.

LANCIE-KNIGHT, a foot soldier, French lansquenet, "a Lance knight, or German footman" (Cotgrave), is not, as Skinner thought, derived from lance, but a corruption of Ger. lands-knecht, a country man, lit. a land's-knight.

His garmentes were nowe so sumptuose, all to pounced with gardens and jagges lyke a rutter [i.e. Ger. ritter, knight] of the lunce knyghtes.—Sir W. Barlowe, Dialogue describing the originall Ground of these Lu- theran Fuccions.—Southey, Life of Wesley, vol. i. p. 358.

The lansquenets were mercenaries that Charles VIII. took into his pay; they composed a large part of the French infantry in the 16th century (Chéruel). Compare "Lanceman, a compatriote or countreyman [Landsmann]; a word which the Frenchinan borrows of the Dutch to mock him withall."—Cotgrave.

Well, now must I practise to get the true garb of one of these lance-knights.—B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 2 (Works, p. 9).

LAND IRON, a corruption of andiron, Fr. landier, O. Eng. andyar, awnderne (Prompt. Parv.), Low Lat. andena, anderia. The word has certainly no connexion with either land or iron. See ANDIRON, ENDIRON.

One iyron potte and one lond iyron.—Inventory, 1685 (in Peacock's Glossary of Manley, &c.).

LANGLEY-BEEF, in W. Ellis's Practical Farmer, 55, a corruption of languede-bœuf, a name of the Helminthia Echioides.

LANTERN, given in Wright's Dictionary of Obsolete and Provincial English as a word for a reading desk, is a corruption of letteron, a lectern, Fr. lutrin.

Lectern was also spelt lettern, lettrone, and leterone. See Prompt. Parvulorum, under the latter word. See LECTERN.

LANT-HORN, so spelt with reference, probably, to the material with which it was commonly glazed, is a corrupt form of lantern, Fr. lanterne, from Lat. lanterna, laterna, itself a corruption (for lampterna) of Greek lampter, a light, a lamp.

Our soules now-sin-obscured Light
Shines through the Lanthorn of our Flesh so bright.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 136 (1621).

The Moon pull'd off her veil of Light
That hides her Face by Day from Sight . . .
And in the Lanthorn of the Night
With Shining Horns hung out her Light.

Butler, Hudibras, II. ii. l. 905.

To thy judgement [she] looks like a mard in a lanthorn, whom thou couldst not fancy for a world, but hatest, loathest and wouldst have spit in her face.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, III. ii. 4, 1.

With the form lant-horn may be compared Swed. horn-lykta, a lantern with horn sides.

Asser claims for King Alfred the honour of being the original inventor of horn lanterns, which by a skilful device he caused to be made of wood and cow's horns; "Consilio artificioso atque sapienter invento, lanternam ex lignis et bovinis cornibus pulcherrime construere imperavit."—Wright, Essays on Archeology, vol. i. p. 179.

LANTHORN LILIES, a Warwickshire name for the Narcissus, in the Isle of Wight lantern lilies, are corruptions of Lenten lilies, so called from the season of their flowering.—Britten and Holland.

So the Scotch have lentrin kail and lanten kail, for "Lenten kail."

LANTORN, a northern provincial word (Wright), meaning "at a distance," is a corruption of the French lointain. Similarly It. lanternare, "to goe loitering about" (also "to make lanthornes"), lanternaro, an "idle loyterer" (Florio), are near akin to Dut. lenteren, Bret. landor (cf. Diez, s. v. Lendore), our "loiter," (cf. Wedgwood, s. v.), Lat. lateo. So lanterner, in Cotgrave, to dally, play the fool, or loiter.

LANYARD, a nautical term for a rope, is a corruption of French lanière, a long strap, O. Eng. lanere (= ligula).—Prompt. Parv., ab. 1440), lanyer (Palsgrave, 1530), layner (Wycliffe, Gen. xiv. 23), a thong, lanier (Chaucer); Norfolk lanyer, the lash of a whip. Fr. lanière was perhaps originally a woollen band, Lat. lanarius, from lana, wool (Scheler). Laner.—Holland, Camden's Britannia, p. 542.

LAPLOVE, a Scottish name for the corn convolvulus, is apparently that which laps or enfolds the leaves. Scand. löf, of the plant, as in Prov. Swedish it is called löf-binde, the leaf-binder (Jamieson).

LAP-STONE, is not, as might naturally be supposed, the stone which the shoemaker places in his lap to hammer leather upon it, but the cobble-stone, from Dutch lappen, to cobble or patch, lapper, a cobbler, lapwerk, cobblery.

LAPWING, the peewit, derives its name not from the lapping or flapping of its wings, nor yet from their lifting, as if the old Eng. form were leaf-winge (Leo), from A. Sax. hlifian, to rise, soar, be lifted up (Bosworth). Cf. its French name vanneau, the winnower, Lat. vanellus. The old forms lapwinke, lhapwynche, A. Sax. hleápewinche, show that the word has nothing to do with lap or wing. The first part of the compound is connected with A. Sax. hleápan, to run or leap, says Prof. Skeat, the latter part with wink, O. H. Ger. winchen, M. H. Ger. winken, to vacillate, waver; so that the whole ("leap-winker") means the bird "that turns in running."

Hy byþe ase þe lhapwynche þet ine uelþe [filth] of man makeþ his nest.—Ayenbite of Inwyt (1340), p. 61.

Lapwynke, or wype, byrde, Upipa.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Cucurata, hleape-wince.—Wright's Vocabularies, p. 62. Leepwynke.—Wycliffe.

They begynne al rely to do wel, that one catcheth wel a chyken, and that other a pullet, they conne wel also duke in the water after lapwynches and dokys.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 60 (ed. Arber).

They will do it, and become at last insensati, void of sense; degenerate into dogs, hogs, asses, brutes; as Jupiter into a bull, Apuleius an ass, Lyacon a wolf, Terens a lap-wing.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, III. ii. 4, 1.

LARK, a colloquial and vulgar term for a frolic, playing, sporting, or indulging in practical jokes (sometimes more emphatically called sky-larking), as if to gambol and disport oneself like the merry bird of dawn, "The jolly bird of light" (Lovelace), "La festiva lodoletta" (Aleardi).

Earley, cheerfull, mounting Larke,
Light's gentle vsher, Morning's clark,
In merry notes delighting.

Sir John Davies, Hymnes to Astræa, v.

"We should be as gay as larks," says Mr. Brass in the Old Curiosity Shop, ch. lvi. "The kitchen boys were all as gay as larks."—T. L. Phipson, Biographical Sketches of Violinists, p. 9.

It is really a corruption of the old Eng. lāk, A. Sax. lác, play, sport, O. Eng. laik, to play, Gothic laiks, sport, laikan, to skip or leap for joy.

In the Gothic version of the parable of the Prodigal Son, when the elder brother returned, he heard laikins, "larking," going on in the house (Luke xv. 25).

And the answer of the ladies makes us aware that they are fresh from larking in Ireland and France.—De Quincey, Works, vol. xi. p. 85.

LATE-WAKE, a corruption of lake-wake or lyke-wake, i. e. body-watch, or waking of the dead, O. Eng. liche-wake, from A. S. lic (a corpse) and wæcce (a watch); "Lyche, dede body."—Pr. Parv. Cf. Dut. lijk, a corpse, Jeel. lik, Goth. leik.

Ne how Arcite is brent to ashen cold;

Ne how the liche-wake was yhold

All thilke night, ne how the Grekes play

The wake-plaies ne kepe I not to say.

Chaucer, The Knightes Tale, l. 2960.

"In gude troth it will be a puir lyke-wake, unless your honour sends us something to keep us cracking."

"You shall have some whiskey," answered Oldbuck, "the rather that you have preserved the proper word for that ancient custom of watching the dead.—You observe, Hector, this is genuine Teutonic, from the Gothic Leichnam, a corpse. It is quite erroneously called Late-wake, though Brand favours that modern corruption and derivation."—Scott, The Antiquary, chap. xl.

LATCHET, an old word for the thong of a shoe, as if that which latches or fastens it (cf. latch of a door), from the old verb latch, to catch or fasten, old Eng. lacche, A. Sax. læccan. It is really a little lace, Fr. lacet (It. lacciutto), from old Fr. laqs, Lat. laqueus, a noose. See The Bible Word-Book, p. 287; Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v. Latchet of a schoo, Tenea.—Prompt. Parvulorum. A latchet wherwith they fastened their legge harneys, Fasciola.—Baret, Alvearie, s. v. Bande.

A stronger then I commeth after me, whos shue latchett I am not worthy to stoupe downe and vnlose.—Tyndale, S. Marke, i. 7 (1526).

[Peahens] are wont to lay by night, . . . and that from an high place where they perch: and then, vnlesse there be good heed taken that the eggs be latched in some soft bed vnderneath, they are soone broken.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 301 (1634).

LATRINE, a house of office, Lat. latrina, which would seem to be a derivative of lateo, to be hid, as if it meant a house or place retired, concealed, or kept out of view, is really a contracted form of lavatrina (from lavare, to wash), denoting (1) a bath, (2) a place that can be flushed or washed out, lieu d'aisance. Cf. Fr. lavement. In Nash's Lenten Stuffe, "lanterneman or groome of Hecate's close-stoole" (Davies, Supp.

Eng. Glossary) looks like a corruption of latrine-man.

LAUDANUM. "A medicine extracted out of the purer Part of Opium, so called from its laudable Qualities" (Bailey)—as if from Lat. laus, laudis, praise—is a corrupted spelling of Lat. ladanum, Gk. lédanon, the juice obtained from the plant lada or lédon, the cistus Creticus, Arab ladan; cf. Heb. lôt (translated "myrrh," A. V. Gen. xxxvii. 25). Somewhat similarly the lark, Lat. alauda, was once supposed to take its name a laude diei, from its singing lauds (Neokam, De Nat. Rerum, cap. lxxviii.).

For the infirmities proper to the guts, & namely the worms there breeding Ladanum of Cypresse is souveraigne to be taken in drinke.—Hollands, Pliny's Nat. History, vol. ii. p. 253 (1634).

LAYSTALL, a dust-hole or ash-pit, seems to denote a stall where dust and rubbish may be laid, but is really a corruption of laye-stowe (Fabyan), an empty or unoccupied place, where any filth or rubbish may be thrown. Lay here is the old Eng. ley, leye, Scot. lea, untilled, vacant, unoccupied, corresponding to Prov. Dan. leid, Ger. leede, Dut. ledig, of the same meaning (see Wedgwood, s. v.). Compare "Lay, londe not telyd."—Prompt. Parvulorum. Lea, a meadow, A. Sax. leah, and Prov. Ger. loh, a morass, are allied (Skeat).

This place of Smythfeelde was at y<sup>e</sup> daye a laye stowe of all order of fylth, & the place where felons, & other trāsgressours of y<sup>e</sup> Kynges lawis, were put to execucio.—Fabyan, Chronicles, p. 254 (ed. 1811).

Scarse could he footing find in that fowle way,

For many corses, like a great Lay-stall,

Of mured men, which therein strowed lay

Without remorse, or decent funerall.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, I. v. 53.

LAVENDER-WATER, French eau-de-lavande, the original signification, according to M. Scheler, being perfumed water for toilet purposes, esp. used in washing, It. lavanda = lavage, from Lat. lavare. But the lavender water of commerce is distilled from lavender.

LAW, in the compound words mother-in-law, father-in-law, &c., is not the same word as law = lex, as if a legal-mother, or a father in the eyes of the law (which those connexions are not), but the modern form of old Eng. lage, marriage, Gothic liuga, marriage, liugan, to marry, Frisian logja, to give in marriage.

To wife in lage he hire nam.

Genesis and Exodus, 1. 2764 (ed. Morris).

Thus parents-in-law properly means parents in (or by) marriage. The above words are probably near akin to A. Sax. licgan, to lie down, Prov. Eng. to lig, whence leger, a bed, a "lair," leger-team, matrimony; ligbie, "concubinage, which northward they call a ligbie" (Nicholson, on Catechism, 1661); compare Greek léchos, léktron, bed, marriage, álochos, a wife, &c.; also A. Sax. loggan, to place or lay down. Stanyhurst uses lawdaughter and lawfather for daughter-in-law and father-in-law.

Soon to King Priamus by law; thus he lawfather helping.

Aeneid, ii. 354 [Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary].

LAW, in the phrase "to give one so much law," i.e. in running a race to allow one's competitor a start of so many yards or feet in advance, seems properly to mean a concession, and to be a corrupted form of A. Sax. leáf, leave, permission. (This law has with less probability been connected with A. Sax. láf, old Friesic lava, what is left.—Philog. Soc. Trans., 1855, p. 278.) So the O. Eng. "lefulle, or lawfulle, Licitus" (Prompt. Parv.), = A. Sax. leáf-ful, permissible, leveful (Wycliffe), was confounded with "lawfulle, legitimus" (P. P.), from A. Sax. lagu, law. These words were formerly kept distinct, as in the old phrase "in lefulle things and lawful" (vid. Way, Prompt. Parv. p. 366). Cf. "fur-lough," from Dutch ver-lóf, leave; Dan. lov, leave (and lov, law), Swed. lof. See LEAVE.

This winged Pegasus posts and speeds after men, easily gives them law, fetches them up again, gallops and swallows the ground he goes.—Samuel Ward, Life of Faith in Death (d. 1653).

LAW! } a feminine expletive, is pro-
LA! } bably not a corruption of Mr. Pepys' Lord! but a survival of old Eng. lá, calá, wála, an interjection of surprise. In the Anglo-Saxon version of John ii. 4, Christ addresses his mother, "Lá wif, hwæt is me and ðe?" (Oliphant, Old and Mid. Eng., p. 72).

LAWFUL, when used in the sense of allowable, permissible, as in "All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient."—A. V. 1 Cor. vi. 12, is no compound of Law and full. It is the old Eng. leful, or leeue-ful, i.e. leave-ful.

Leful, written Leveful by Wiclif and derived from the Anglo-Saxon leaf, English leave, signifies what is allowable, permissible, while lawful is what is legal, according to law. But we find in Old English authors constant mistakes in the use of the two terms. Leful trespassed upon lawful, and in fact is so rendered in most of the glossaries. . . . This confusion of terms, at first perfectly distinct with respect to meaning and etymology, seems to have arisen from an endeavour to give significance to a word, or to some part of a word that had lost the power of explaining itself.—Morris, Philolog. Soc. Transactions, 1862-3, p. 86.

It is nat leful to thee for to haue hir.—Wycliffe, S. Mutt. xiv. 4.

Hit ys nat lawfull for the to haue her.—Tyndale, ibid.

What don ðe this, that is not leefful in sabotys?—Wycliffe, S. Luke, vi. 2.

LAY FIGURE, as if the figure on which artists lay the drapery as a study for a picture, was formerly called a "lay man," i.e. "a statue of wood whose joints are so made that they may be put into any posture" (Bailey, 1736). It is the Dutch lee-man, for lede-man, from led or lid, a joint, Ger. glied, and so means a jointed figure like a Dutch doll.—Wedgwood, Notes and Queries, 5th Ser. V. p. 436.

The German word is gliedermann. Compare A. Sax. lið, Prov. Eng. lið, a limb or joint (also the clove of an orange), O. H. Ger. lid, Goth. lithus, and perhaps Eng. lithe, flexible, active limbed (Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, vol. ii. p. 142).

The Spectator speaks of milliners furnishing ladies with new fashions "by means of a jointed baby [i.e. doll], that came regularly over once a month, habited after the manner of the most eminent toasts in Paris" (No. 277).

With lay, a joint, Dut. lid, Ger. glied, and lay, a song, Ger. lied, compare Greek mélōs, (1) a limb, (2) a song.

LAY-LOCK, a North country corruption of lilac (Holderness Glossary, Eng. Dialect Soc.), Sp. lilac, of Persian origin.

"Sweet laylocks bloomed" occurs in the Scotch ballad, 'Twas within a mile of Edinboro' toon.

Bacon in his Essays (1625) calls it "the Lelacke Tree" (p. 556, ed. Arber). In some parts of Scotland the word is corrupted into lily-oak.

A fontaine of white marble . . . set round with six trees called lelack trees.—Survey, 1650 [Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary].

LEACHEWHITE, an old word for a fine to punish fornication (Lease of Manor of Scotter, 1537), is a corruption of lecher-wite, from A. Sax. wite, a fine.

LEAD, an old word for a cauldron or kettle, as if one made of lead (like "copper" commonly used for a cauldron), for which that metal would be a particularly unsuitable material. It is probably a corrupted form of Gaelic luchd, a pot or kettle, Irish luchd.

Mowe hawme . . .

To burne vnder lead.

Tusser, 1580, E. D. Soc. p. 125.

And y shal yeue þe ful fair bred,

And make þe broys in þe led.

Havelok the Dane, l. 924 (ed. Skeat).

Also heoð his e3e-puttes ase a bruþen led.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 182, l. 242.

Then he led him into steddie werhas was a boyling leade,

& welling vpon lie.

Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 99, l. 238.

His eyen steep, and rolling in his heed,

That stemed as a forneys of a lead.

Chaucer, Prol. Cant. Tales, vol. ii. p. 7

(ed. Morris).

The xiiij day of Marche Fryday, was a mayde boyld in Smythfeld in a grete led, for poysonyng of many y<sup>t</sup> she had doon.—Chronicle (1540), Camden Miscellany, vol. iv. p. 16.

LEAGUER, an old word for the camp of an assailing army, is an assimilation to league of Dut. leger, an army or camp (also a bed or lair, which is the same word), literally that which lies (in position before a town), from Dut. leggen, to lie. Hence to be-leaguer. Cf. Ger. lager.

He shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents.

Shakespeare, All's Well that Ends Well,

iii. 6, l. 28.

LEAGUER, a false spelling of the old word leiger, or ledger (Dut. legger), an ambassador, one who lies (A. Sax. lic- gan) or resides in a foreign country to guard the interests of his own sovereign, as if it denoted one empowered to make a league or terms of peace.

Rural shades are the sweet sense

Of piety and innocense;

They are the meek's calm region, where

Angels descend and rule the sphere;

When Heaven lies leaguer, and the Dove

Duely as dew comes from above.

H. Vaughan, Sacred Poems, 1650, p. 225

(Repr. 1858).

Sir Henry Wotton's jest is explanatory, "An Ambassador is an honest man sent to lye abroad for the Commonwealth" (Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, 1672). So a ledger (book) is one that lies ready at hand on the desk (cf. O. Eng. a coucher), and ledger-bait is one that lies at rest or fixed (Iz. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 68, Repr. Murray).

Newes of my morning Worke . . . That sleepe is deaths leiger-ambassadour.—Sir T. Overbury, Newes, p. 189 (ed. Rimbault).

LEASON, a term of cookery denoting a thickening for sauces, is a corruption of Fr. liaison, what serves to bind them together (Kettner, Book of the Table).

LEATHER, used in Scotland, Ireland, and Prov. English, for to flog or beat soundly, as if to lash with leather thongs (A. Sax. leðer). It is the old Eng. liðere, used in the same sense, Scot. leather, to belabour or work energetically (Gregor, Banff Glossary); cf. A. Sax. (tô-) liðian, to tear (to limb, from liðu, a limb), liðere, a sling; Prov. Eng. lither, supple, pliant, lithe, to make supple, Cleveland leathe.

Hot him ut hetterliche—þe fule kur dogge —& liðere to him luðerliche mid te holie rode steue [Order him out sternly, the foul cur dog, and leather him severely with the staff of the holy rood].—Ancren Riwle, p. 291.

LEAVE. When a person leaves, or departs from, a place or company (discedit), he is said "to take his leave," and the word in either case is no doubt popularly supposed to be the same (as if discessionem capere). The true meaning of the phrase is "to take permission" (licentiam capere), i.e. to withdraw; leave being old Eng. leue, A. Sax. leáf, permission (from lyfan, to permit), and identical with the -lough of fur-lough (= Dut. ver-lof, permission to be absent, leave, Ger. ur-laub), Icel. leyfi.

Cf. "By your leave," with your permission, "to ask leave," "to give leave" (See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v.).

Therat alle the kynges loghe,
What wondur was thowe ther were no
swoghe?

They take ther leve that tyde;
With trumpys and with mery songe,
Eche oon went to hys own londe,
With yoye and grete pryde.

The Emperor Octavian (14th cent.), ll. 1720-1725 (Percy Soc.).

But taketh his leve, and homeward he him
spedde;

Let him beware, his nekke lieth to wedde.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 1219.

And so it were to me lever,
Than such a sighte for to leve,
If that she wolde give me leve
To have so mochel of my will.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 8
(ed. Pauli).

Luf loke3 to luf & his leve take3.

Alliterative Poems, p. 48, l. 401 (ed. Morris).

These graces though they shall leave the soule in Heaven, because she should not need them, yet they shall not forsake her while she abides in the porch, but shut heaven doore upon her ere they take their leave.—D. Rogers, Naaman the Syrian, 1641, Ep. Dedicatory, p. i.

He that described his manner of departure from his mistresse, said thus not much to be misliked,

I kist her cherry lip, and took my leave:
For I took my leave and kist her; And yet I cannot well say whether a man use to kisse before hee take his leave, or take his leave before he kisse, or that it be all one busines. It seemes the taking leave is by using some speach, intreating licence of departure: the kisse a knitting vp of the farewell, and as it were a testimoniall of the licence without which here in England one may not presume of courtesie to depart, let yong Courtiers decide this controuersie.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 181 (ed. Arber).

In the following, lycence is used in the sense of leave of absence.

Than for a space he taketh Lycence,

God wot as yet he [he] payd for none
exspence;

And so departeth.

The Hye Way to the Spyttel Hous, l. 495.

LECTERN, a reading-desk in a church, apparently that from which the lections (or lessons) of Scripture are read out of the lectionary (Lat. lectio, a reading), and so given by Richardson. It is really the Low Latin lectrinum, from Low Lat. lectrum, a pulpit or reading-desk, properly that on which a book rests, from Greek léktron, a couch (akin to Lat. lectus, a couch, litter, lie, lair, &c.).—Skeat. Compare coucher, the register-book of a corporation; and ledger, an entry-book that lies (ready at hand), Ger. lager-buch.

LEEDGING, used in the sense of healing or cure in the Percy Folio MS., is from Fr. alleger, to allay, assuage, or mitigate one's hurt, but confounded with leechinge, which is a various reading in loc.

Sir Cawlines sicke, & like to be dead
Without and a good leedginge.
fleitch yee down my daughter deere,
Shee is a Leeche ffull fine.

vol. iii. p. 5, ll. 37-40.

LEESE, a technical term used in the manufacture of playing cards, meaning to burnish or polish the cardboard by rubbing with a smooth flint, is corrupted from the French lisser, to smooth or polish (Transactions of Philolog. Soc. 1867, p. 65).

LEFT. The left hand is not, as has been often asserted, that which is left or unused, as is proved by the Belgic and Lower Saxon luste, lucht, luchter. It may be akin to Lat. laevus, left, Greek laios, Church Slavonic levú.

Pictet thinks that Greek laios for lavios corresponds to a Sanskrit form lavya (lavandus, sinister).—Origines Indo-Europ. tom. ii. p. 491; Curtius, Grisch. Etymologie, p. 328; Garnet, Philolog. Essays, p. 66.

Lyft in old English seems to have meant weak, powerless, disabled (Skeat), and the left hand is in other languages often regarded as the useless hand, e.g. It. manca (the maimed), Prov. man seneco (the aged or weak hand). See Diez, s. v. Gauche.

LEG POWSTER, an old Scotch expression for a state of health in contradistinction to death bed, e.g. a will made in leg powster, is a ludicrous corruption of the forensic phrase liege powstie.

LEISURE, an assimilation to other words ending in -ure, such as censure, figure, measure, structure (Lat.  censura, figura, &c.), of leiser, old Eng. leyser, old Fr. leisir, (1) to be permitted, (2) leisure, from Lat. licere, to be allowed. Similarly pleasure from Fr. plaisir.

Whan þou sees leysere þat he ne perceyue pi witte.—Langtoft's Chronicle, p. 229 (ed. 1810).

LEMON DAB, a certain species of dab or flounder, "is commonly called so at fish-stalls" (Badham, Prose Halieutics, p. 358). The name is a corruption of Fr. limande ("limand dab"), platessa limanda, so called because its rough skin resembles, and is used for, a file, lima. A somewhat similar fish is called a lemon-sole, the scientific name of which is Solea Auriantica, i.e. "Orange sole," apparently a fresh corruption.

LENT, a Scotch term for the game at cards more commonly called Loo, as if (which Jamieson actually supposed) because it was played more especially during Lent, is a corruption of the word Lant, which is also found.

Lant is merely the head, just as loo is the tail, of the word Lanterloo (which was perhaps understood as Lant or loo), formerly spelt lang-trilloo (Shadwell, A True Widow, 1679, act iv.) and lantraton (which Mr. C. Wordsworth thinks is from Fr. l'entretien, conversation.—University Life in Eighteenth Century, p. 517). The origin is probably Fr. lanturlu, nonsense! (Skeat). Lant is still used for the game of loo in N. W. Lincolnshire (Peacock), and lanter in Cumberland (Ferguson).

At lanter the caird lakers sat i' the loft.—Dickinson, Cumberland Glossary, E. D. S.

LETTERMAREDAY, an old Scotch term for the day of the birth of the Virgin (Jamieson), is evidently a corruption of (our) Lady Mary's Day.

LETTERON, a Scotch term for a desk, is a corruption of lettrin, old Eng. lettorne, O. Fr. letrin, Fr. lutrin, a lectern, or reading stand.

In silke þat comely clerk was clad,
And ouer a lettorne leoned he.
Early Eng. Poems (Philolog. Soc. 1858),
p. 124, l. 18.

LETTUCE is frequently found as the sign of an alehouse; e.g. The Green Lettuce is (or was) the designation of one in Brownlow Street, Holborn (Brand).

Lettuce here, and in the sign of The Red Lettuce, or as anciently spelt, "a red lettuce" (Chapman, All Fools, sign. H 4), is a corruption of lattice, which, when painted red, was once the common mark of an alehouse. Hence Shakespeare's "red-lattice phrases."

—Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

As well knownen by my wit as an ale-house by a red lattice.

The known trade of the ivy hush or red lettuce.—Braithwait, Law of Drinking, 1617 (Preface).

First, you must swear to defend the honour of Aristippus, to the disgrace of brewers, alewives, and tapsters, and profess yourself a foe, nominalis, to maltmen, tapsters, and red lattes.—Randolph, Aristippus, 1630, Works, p. 13 (ed. Hazlitt).

All the vacation hee lies imhoag'de behinde the lattice of some blinde, drunken, bawdy ale-house.—Sir T. Overbury, Characters, p. 162 (ed. Rimbault).

I take a corner house, and sell nut-brown,
Fat ale, brisk stout, and humming clamber-crown.

I'll front my window with a frothy hoar,
And plant a new red lettuce o'er my door.

Epilogue to the Adelphi, 1709, Lusus Alteri Westmonasteriensis, p. 8.

I am not as well knowne by my wit as an alehouse by a red lettuce.—J. Marston, Antonio and Mellida, Pt. I. act v.

The alehouses are their nests and cages, where they exhaust and lavish out their goods, and lay plots and devices how to get more. Hence they fall either to robbing or cheating, open courses of violence or secret mischief, till at last the jail prepares them for the gibbet. For lightly they sing through a red lattice, before they cry through an iron grate.—T. Adams, The Forest of Thorns, Works, ii. 480.

Where Red Lettuce doth shine,
'Tis an outward sign

Good ale is a traffic within.

The Christmas Ordinary, 1682.

He called me even now, my lord, through a red lattice.—Shakespeare, Hen. IV. Pt. II.

See Hotten, Hist. of Signboards, p. 375; Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. ii. pp. 351-355; Way, in Prompt. Parv. s.v. Ceny; Soane, New Curiosities of Literature, vol. i. p. 89.

This lattice is said to have been originally the chequers, which were the arms of the Warrens, Earls of Surrey (chequy or and azure), and were affixed to public houses in order to facilitate the gathering of dues for those noblemen who had the grant of licensing them.—C. N. Elvin, Anecdotes of Heraldry, p. 157.

Similarly Lettice-cap, a coil of network, occurs in the plays of Beaumont and Fletcher, and is a corruption of lattice-cap. Minsheu, in his Spanish Dictionary, gives "A Lettise bonnet or cap for gentlewomen, Albanega;" "A

Lettsie window, v. Lattise," and "Let-tise an herbe, Lechuga."

LEVANT. A defaulter who runs away from his creditors is said to levant, as if to go on a cruise to the furthest extremity of the Mediterranean, a phrase of considerable antiquity; cf. in French "Faire voile en Levant, to sail Eastward; to be stolne, filched, or purloyned, away" (Cotgrave).

The Levant, as a word for the East, is from lever, to rise, It. levare, meaning the rising, or (as Gray calls it) "the levée of the Sun;" and the phrase in question is a sort of calembour on the verb lever, to lift or carry away, = Eng. "to convey;" Sp. levantar, to lift up, raise, weigh anchor (Minsheu), de-camp. Our slang verb to lift, meaning to steal (also to clift), as in shop-lifting, is of a different origin, being near akin to Goth. hlifan, to steal, hliftus, a thief, Gk. hléptō, hléptēs. To Levant, or sail for the Levant, is one of a numerous class of jocular phrases framed on the same model, with a quibbling allusion to local names; e.g. the sleepy are said to be off to Bedfordshire or the Land of Nod; the gullible are sent to the Scilly Isles or Greenland; the dinnerless to Peckham; the bankrupt to Beggar's Bush. In France, to be upset is aller à Versailles; a dunce is recommended a course à Asnières (as we might recommend an impudent fellow to Brasenose); a person is sent about his business by being despatched to the Abbey of Vatan (va-t-en).—Tylor, Macmillan's Mag. vol. xxix. p. 505.

We in England bid him go to Jericho, an old phrase:—

Let them goe to Jericho,
And n'ere be seen againe.

Mercurius Aulicus, March 23-30, 1648.

He who snores in Leicestershire is one who comes from Hog's Norton (hogs' snorting!); the eccentric are said to live in Queer Street, or in Bohemia; the fanciful are said to have castles in Ayrshire; a ne'er-do-weel who may one day be hanged is in Scotch a Hempshire gentleman. So in Elizabethan English, one who deserved to be whipt was sent to Birching Lane, and if penitent bidden to come home by Weeping Cross; those in want of food were Hungarians. The narrow-minded cit, or lover of good cheer, is a denizen of Cocagne, It. Cocagna. Compare also the French phrase "voyager en Cornouaille [to sail to Cornwall], To wear the horn" (Cotgrave), i.e. to be cornutus, or to be made a cuckold, which is also found in Italian, "Donna che manda il marito in Cornouaglia senza barca, a woman that sendeth her husband into the land of Cornewale without a boat, that is cuckoldeth him" (Florio). The nearest parallel, however, to levant is It. Picardia, the country of Picardie, but used for a place where men are hanged; andar' in picardia, to goe to the gallows, or to be hanged" (Florio), with allusion to picare, to rogue or cheat.

Never mind that, man; e'en boldly run a levant.—Fielding, History of a Foundling, bk. viii. ch. 12.

The following are in Fuller's Worthies of England:—

"He was born at Little Wittham" [Lincolnshire]. . . It is applied to such people as are not overstock'd with acutenesse.—Vol. ii. p. 7.

"He must take him a house in Turn-again Lane" [London] . . . is applied to those, who, sensible that they embrace destructive courses, must seasonably alter their manners.—Id. p. 59.

He that fetcheth a Wife from Shrewsbury must carry her into Staff-ordshire, or else shall live in Cumber-land.—Id. p. 254.

"You are in the high way to Needham" [Suffolk]—said to them who do hasten to poverty.—Id. p. 326.

"He doth sail into Cornwall without a Bark" . . . this is an Italian Proverb, where it passeth for a description (or derision rather) of such a man who is wronged by his wife's disloyalty.—Id. vol. i. p. 210.

Then married men might vild reproaches scorne,
And shunne the Harts crest to their hearts content,

With cornucopia, Cornewall, and the home,
Which their bad wiuens bid from their bed be sent.

Lane, Tom Tel-Troths Message, l. 676 (1600), (Shaks. Soc.).

I repaired to Delphos to ask counsel of Apollo, because I saw myself almost arrived at Gravesend, to know if I should bring up my sou suitable to the thriving trades of this age we live in.—Randolph, Hey for Honesty, i. 1, Works, p. 388 (ed. Hazlitt).

We may compare with the above:—in French, aller à Cachan (a village near Paris), to hide one's self (se cacher) from one's creditors.—Le Roux de Lincy, Proverbes Français, tom. i. p. 329; aller à Patras, to be gathered to one's fathers (ad patres); être de Lunel, to be a lunatic; aller à Rouen, to go to ruin: in German, nach Bethlehem gehen (go to Bed-lam), and nach Bettingen gehen (to go to Bettingen, a village near Basle), for zu Bette gehen (to go to bed); Er ist aus Anhalt (He is from Anhalt, as if håltan, he holds fast), meaning he is a miser; Er ist ein Anklamier (cf. anklammern, to cling to one), he is importunate.—See Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 36.

LEVEL-COIL, an old word used by Jonson and others for a riot or disturbance (vid. Marvell's Poems, p. 117, Murray's reprint), is from the French levé cul, and originally signified a romping game. "To play at levell coil, jouer à cul levé, i.e. to play and lift up your tail when you have lost the game, and let another sit down in your place" (Minshew); Provençal leva-coua. Compare French bascule, see-saw, from bas and cul; basculer (Cotgrave); old Eng. Uptails-all, a riotous game.

As my little pot doth boyle;
We will keep this levell-coyle;
That a wave, and I will bring
To my God, a heave-offering.

Herrick, Noble Numbers, Poems,
p. 425 (ed. Hazlitt).

So they did, & entered the parlour, found all this levell coyle, and his pate broken, his face scratcht, & leg out of joynt.—R. Armin, Nest of Ninnies (1608), p. 28 (Shaks. Soc.).

Tav. How now! What coil is here?

Bluck. Level-coil, you see, every man's pot.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Faithful Friends, 1. 2.
Whose soul (perhaps) in quenchlesse fire
doth broile,

Whilst on the earth his sonne keepes levell coile.

Taylor the Water-Poet, Workes, 1630, p. 260.

A daily deluge over them does boil,
The earth and water play at level coil.

Andrew Marvell, The Character of Holland.

LICKSTONE, a literal rendering of the name of the lamprey, which was supposed to be lambens-petram.

LIEGE, often used as if meaning faithful, trusty, loyal, yielding true service, as a "liege man," a "liege vassal." It is easy to see, says Prof. Skeat, that this sense is due to a false etymology which connected the word with Lat. ligatus (from ligare, to bind), as if bound to his lord by feudal tenure, owing allegiance. (So Spelman, Bailey, Way.) In exact contradiction to the popular notion, the original meaning was free, and the word was applied to the lord, as "oure lyge lord" (Robert of Gloucester). It is old Eng. lege, lige, Fr. lige, old Fr. liege, Low Lat. ligius, O. H. Ger. lidic, free to go one's way, from lidan, to go. A liege lord seems to have been a lord of a free band, and his lieges or men owed their name to their freedom, not to their service. See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.

Lordinges, 3e ben my lege men þat gode ben & trewe.

William of Palerne, l. 2663.

Lyche, lady or lorde, Ligius.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

The Baron has been with King Robert his liege,

These three long years in battle and siege.

Scott, Waverley, ch. xiii.

. . . . Sterne fortunes siege,
Makes not his reason sluke, the soules faire liege,

Whose well paid's action ever rests upon,
Not giddie humours, but discretion.

Marston, Antonio and Mellida, Pt. II.
act i. sc. 5.

LIFE-BELT probably means etymologically a body-belt, from Dut. lijf, Swed. lijf, Ger. leib, the body.

Compare Ger. leib-binde, a girdle, leib-gurtel, a body-belt; Dutch lijf-band, a sash or girdle; Swed. lijf-rock, a close-fitting coat.

LIFE-GUARD, i.e. body-guard, the first part of the word corresponding to Swedish "lijf" (= Ger. leib, body), said to have been introduced in the Thirty Years' War (vide Dasent, Jest and Earnest, ii. p. 25), but it is certainly older. Similar formations in Swedish are lif-vakt, body-guard; lif-page, lif-kirurg, page and surgeon in ordinary; lif-dragon, dragoon of the body-guard. Compare Dutch lijf, the body, whence lijf-garde, lijf-schutbende, a life-guard; Ger. leibgarde, a body-guard. So Dut. lijf-knecht (body-servant), a footman.

The Swiss have leibgärtner (body-gardener), a blundering form of leibgarde. See LIFE-BELT.

"The King's Body guard of yeomen of the guard" was instituted by Henry

VII. in 1485, probably on the model of "La Petite Garde de son corps" organized by Louis XI. in 1475. But the "King's Life Guards" are first mentioned in the reign of Charles I. See Ellis, Orig. Letters, 2nd S. vol. iii. p. 310.

Know also that the Cherethites were a kind of lifeguard to King David. . . What unlikelyhood was it that David might entertain Prose-lyte Philistines, converts to the Jewish religion, if there were such, to be attendants about his body? Not to instance in the French Kings double guard of Scots and Switzars, as improper to this purpose.—T. Fuller, Pisgah Sight, 1650, p. 217.

Then three young men, that were of the guard that kept the King's body, spake one to another.—A. V. 1 Esdras, iii. 4.

LIFT, an old verb meaning to steal, still used in shop-lifter, one who pilfers from shops, and cattle-lifting, cattle-stealing, has sometimes been understood as to raise, take up, and carry off (Richardson), like It. levare, to take or set away, to remove, levante, an up-taker, a bold pilferer (Florio). It has nothing to do with lift, to raise, but is (like graf-t for graff) an incorrect form of lift, cognate with Goth. hlifan, Lat. clepere, Greek kléptein, to steal (Diefenbach, ii. 569). Klepto-mania is a mania for lifting.

And so when a man wold bryng them to thryft,
They wyll hym rob, and fro his good hym lyft.

The Hye Way to the Spytel Hous, l. 298.

Is he so young a man and so old a lifter?
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida,
i. 2, 129.

He that steals a cow from a poor widow or a stirk from a cottar is a thief; he that lifts a drove from a Sassenach laird, is a gentleman-drover.—Scott, Waverley, chap. xviii.

LIKE. To like has often been understood to signify the attraction which we feel towards those who are like ourselves in tastes and dispositions; nolle et velle eadem being one chief bond of love.

Every beast loveth his like, . . . all flesh consorteth according to kind, and a man will cleave to his like.—Eccles. xiii. 16, 17.

For ech þing loueþ his iliche, so saip þe boc iwys.

Early Eng. Poems, Judas Iscariot, l. 66
(ed. Furnivall).

An hypocrite liketh an hypocrite because he is like unto him.—Bp. J. King, On Jonah (1594), Lect. ii.

Compare also the following :

For wel loues euery lud þat liche is him
tille.

Alexander and Dindimus (ab. 1350), l. 1041.

"Every man loves well what is like to himself," or as the old proverb has it, "Like will to like."—Heywood.

Ἵς αἰεὶ τὸν ὁμοῖον ἀγαπᾷ θεὸς ὡς τὸν ὁμοῖον.

Homer, Odys. xvii. 218.

Good [God] evermore doth train
With like his like.

Chapman, Odys. xvii. 283.

The Greeks also had a saying, "Likeness is the mother of love" (see Ray, Proverbs, sub "Birds of a feather").

Like will to like, each creature loves his kind, Chaste words proceed still from a hashful minde.

Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, p. 342
(ed. Hazlitt).

Hence is it that the virgin neuer loues,
Because her like she finds not anywhere;
For likenesse euermore affection moues.

Sir J. Davies, Poems, vol. ii. p. 82
(ed. Grosart).

Custom and company doth, for the most part, sympathize together, according to the proverbe, Simile Simili gaudet, like will to like, quoth the Deuill to the Collier.—B. Rich, Honestie of this Age (1614), p. 48 (Percy Soc.).

For all thinge loueth that is lyke it selfe.
The Parliament of Byrdes, Eng. Pop. Poetry,
iii. 180.

The same idea occurs in Sterne, Sermons, iv. 49, 50; cf. Whitney, Language, p. 108. Archbishop Trench thinks that to like a thing was originally "to compare it with some other thing which we have already before our natural, or our mind's, eye," this process of comparison giving rise to pleasurable emotion.

That we like what is like, is the explanation of the pleasure which rhyme gives us.—Notes on the Parables, p. 24 (9th ed.).

But "like" (= similis), old Eng. liche, likeness, is a distinct word, being akin to A. Sax. lic, form, body, Dut. lijk, Ger. leiche, Goth. (ga-)leiks.

The oldest usage, moreover, of the verb seems to have been impersonal, "It likes me," i.e. pleases me, is to my taste, Norse lika, Dutch lijken, Goth. leikan, to please. Mr. Wedgwood thinks the original meaning was "it relishes, or tastes pleasant" (comparing Ger. schmecken), and correlates Fr. lecher, Eng. lickerish, lickerous, &c., Lat. ligurio. Compare likeful, pleasant, dainty, in old English.

Of fleis, of fisse, and rich met, þe likfullist þat man mai et.

Early Eng. Poems, Land of Cockayne,
ll. 55, 56.

From the same root seemingly is likely used in the sense of proper, fit, comely, well-conditioned, i.e. pleasing-like (placenti-similis), not probable (to succeed), like to one that will suit (as if simili-similis; since -ly is for like).

"Who is that pretty girl with dark eyes?" "That is Hetty Sorrel," said Miss Lydia Donnithorne, "Martin Poyser's niece—a very likely young person, and well-looking too."—G. Eliot, Adam Bede, ch. xxv. (p. 237).

When Herodias' daughter danced before the company, the A. Saxon version says "hit licode Herode" (Matt. xiv. 6).

Conan, þe kynges newew, ne likede not þis game.—Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 92 (ed. 1810).

Cornewale hym likede best.—Id. p. 21.

That it may lyke you to cause hym have in reward one hundred pownde.—Sir Thos. More (1529), Ellis, Orig. Letters, Ser. 3, vol. i. p. 270.

Before man is life and death; and whether him liketh shall be given him.—A. V. Ecclesiasticus, xv. 17.

LIKE-OWL, "A shrichowle, a like-owle" (Nomenclator), a corruption of lich-owl, a provincial word for a screech-owl, from liche, lich, a corpse, as in lich-gate.

Drayton speaks of

The shrieking lich-owl that doth never cry
But boding death, and quick herself inters
In darksome graves, and hollow sepulchres.

LILY OAK, a popular name in some parts of Scotland for the lilac (Jamieson), of which word it is a corruption.

LILLY ROYAL, a South country name for the plant mentha pulegium, is a corruption of pubiall royall (Britten and Holland).

Lillie riall is Penniroyall.—Gerarde, Supplement to the General Table.

LIMB, formerly lim, A. Sax. lim, so spelt probably from a false analogy to limb, an astronomical term for the edge or border of the sun or moon, which is from Lat. limbus, It. lembo, a skirt or border.

When any of the members or lims were broken with the fall, a man that saw them would say they were broad holes and huge caues in the ground.—Holland, Plinies Natural Histories, vol. ii. p. 494 (1634).

LIMB, as an astronomical term for the utmost edge or border of the disk of the sun or moon, when it is being eclipsed, &c., has nothing to do with limb, a member, but is a borrowed word from It. lembo, Lat. limbus, a border.

LIMB, a provincial term for a mischievous or wicked person, as "He's a perfect limb," "a devil's limb," seems to be the same word as Scot. limm, a profligate female, limmer, a scoundrel, a worthless woman.

LIME, as the name of a tree, is a corruption of the older form lime (its name still in Lincolnshire), which is itself corrupted from A. Sax. and Swed. lind, Ger. linde, a linden; perhaps, originally, the smooth wood, akin to Ger. gelind, smooth, Icel. linr (Skeat).

Willow, elm, plane, ash, box, chestain, lind, laurere.

Chaucer, The Knightes Tale, l. 2924.

Leif is lyht on lynde.

Böddeker, Alteng. Dichtungen, p. 166, l. 3.

The female lime or linden tree waxeth very great and thicke, spreading foorth his branches wide and far abroad, being a tree which yeeldeth a most pleasant shadow, vnder and within whose boughes may be made braue sommer houses and banketting arbors, bicause the more that it is surcharged with waight of timber aod such like, the better it doth flouri-sh. The harke is brownish, very smooth and plaine on the outside. . . . The timber is whitish . . . yea very soft and gentle in the cutting or handling.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1298.

LIMN has been generally understood, in accordance with the spelling, to be a contracted form of Fr. enluminer, to illuminate, illustrate, or paint in bright colours (Skeat, Richardson, Trench, Wedgwood). An old spelling, however, is lim, to paint, from A. Sax. lim, a limb, properly "to limb out," to figure, to delineate the parts of a body. Spenser has limming for painting, which is the A. Sax. liming. J. Mayne in his Translation of Lucian has limbe, to paint; and so Sir Thos. Browne,

Let a painter carefully limbe out a million of faces, and you shall find them all different. — Religio Medici, 1642.

Cf. A. Sax. lim-geleage, form or lineament.

He who would draw a faire amiable Lady limbes with an erring pencil.—Jaspar Mayne, Lucian (Epistle Dedicatory), 1663.

Liv'd Mantuan now againe
That fæmall Mastix to limme with his penne.

Donne, Poems, p. 97, 1635.

Where statues and Joves acts were vively
limb [read limb'd], Boyes with black coales draw the vail'd parts of nature.

Marston, Sophonisba, iv. 1, Works, i. p. 197
(ed. Halliwell).

The b in limb is no organic part of the word. Even lime (A. Sax. līm, = calx) was formerly spelt limbe.

Wormes . . . are wont to doe much hurt to Fornaces and Limbekills where they make Limbe.—Topsell, Historie of Serpents, p. 314 (1608).

Lim, gluten, is given among words appropriate to painting in Wright's Vocabularies (11th cent.), p. 89.

The form lymn is of great antiquity, as in the Promptorium Parvulorum, about 1440, we find, "Lymnyd, as bookys (Cambridge MS. lwmynid), Elucidatus."

"Lymnore (Camb. MS. luminour)
Elucidator . . . alluminator, illuminator."

Johannes Dancastre, lumenor. — English Gilds (1389), p. 9 (E. E. T. S.).

Limn was probably a compromise between lim and lumin, two words originally distinct.

He became the best Illuminer or Limner of our age, employed generally to make the initial letters in the Patents of Peers, and Commissions of Embassadors, having left few heirs to the kind, none to the degree of his art therein.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 167 (ed. 1811).

Lymne them? a good word, lymne them: whose picture is this?—J. Marston, Works, vol. i. p. 55 (ed. Halliwell).

As in the two days stay there it was impossible I could take the full of what I am assured an expert Limner may very well spend twice two moneths in ere he can make a perfect draught.—Sir T. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 153.

Similarly, liminous is sometimes found for luminous :—

So is th' eye [ill affected] if the colour be sad or not liminous and recreatiue, or the shape of a memberd body without his due measures and simmetry. — G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 268 (ed. Arber).

LINCH-PIN. Linch here is a corrupted form, from confusion with link (A. Sax. hlence), of old Eng. lins, A. Sax. lymis, an axle-tree, Dut. luns (Skeat, Etym. Dict.).

LINE-HOUND, quoted from Clitius's Whimzies by Nares, as if called from this line in which he was led, is a corrupt form of lime-hound, a sporting dog held by a lyme or thong, Fr. limier.

LINK, a torch, a corruption of lint, seen in old Eng. lint-stock, a stick to hold a gunner's match; while lint again owes its form to a confusion with lint, scraped linen, being properly lumt, the Scottish word for a torch or match, Dan. lunte, Swed. lunta, Dut. lont (Skeat, Etym. Dict.).

LINT-WHITE, Scot. lint-quhit, an old name for the linnet, is a corruption of A. Sax. linet-wige (Ettmüller, p. 187), where linet is from lin, flax, Lat. linum (cf. its scientific name linota cannabina, Fr. linotte), and wige is perhaps the same word as A. Sax. wiga, a soldier or warrior, with allusion to the handsome appearance of the male bird, with its red poll and rose breast.

LIQUORICE, the name of a well-known sweet root, Low Lat. liquiricia, so spelt as if connected with Lat. liquor, liquorio, lingo, Gk. leicho, to lick (Ger. lukritze), is a corrupted form of Lat. and Greek glycyrrhiza, = "sweet-root." In Prov. German it is sometimes called lecker-zweig, "licker-twig" or dainty-stick. Other corruptions are Fr. réglisse, old Fr. reculisse (for legrisse, lecurisse); It. regolizia for legorizia; Wallon dialect erculisse (Sigart).

The excellent Liquorice [Lat. glycyrrhiza] is that which groweth in Cilicia, . . . and hath a sweet root which only is used in Physick.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. History, vol. ii. p. 120 (1634).

When that the firste cock hath crowe, anon
Up rist this joly louer Absolon,
And him arayeth gay, at point devise,
But first he cheweth grein and licorise,
To smellen sote, or he had spoke with here.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 3692.

Glycyrrize, or Liquoris. . . . England affordeth hereof the best in the world for some uses; this County the first and best in England. . . . But Liquoris, formerly dear and scarce, is now grown cheap and common, because growing in all Counties. Thus plenty will make the most precious thing a drug, as Silver was nothing respected in Jerusalem in the days of Solomon.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 205.

Take Liquorish cut small, Anniseed comfits with one skin of Sugar, of each two ounces.—The Queens Closet Opened, 1658, p. 178.

LIQUOROUS, a corrupt spelling of lecherous, from Fr. lecher, to lick up, whence "lescheur, often licking, licorous" (Cotgrave). Cf. Dan. lækker, dainty, nice. Thus lecherous meant (1) gluttonous, (2) lewd.

"Liquorous lust" occurs in Turberville's Tragicall Tales, 1587 (Wright). The forms liquorish, lickorous, and likeorous are also found.

A proud, peevish, firt, a liquorish, prodigal queen.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, 10th ed. p. 66.

Lo! loth [= Lot] in hus lyue · þorw leche-rouse drynke Wikkydlich wroghte · and wratthede god al-myghty.

Langland, Vision of Piers Plowman, C. ii. 25.

And after I hegan to taste of the flesch therof I was lycouraus, so that after that I wente to the gheet, in to the wode.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox, p. 34 (ed. Arber).

Why dost thou prie,
And turn, and leer, and with a licorous eye
Look high and low?

G. Herbert, Temple, The Discharge.

No woman shulde ete no lycorous morselles in the abseus and withoute weting of her husband.—Book of the Knight of La Tour Landry, p. 22 (E. E. T. S.).

She there ete a soupe or somme lycorous thyng.—Caxton. French, "Elle là mengoit la soupe au matin ou aucune lescherie."—Id. p. 207.

—Mothers shall run and fetch,
Their daughters (ere they yet be ripe) to satisfy

Our liquorish lusts.

Randolph, The Jealous Lovers, ii. 2, p. 92
(ed. Hazlitt).

Ah, Tom, Tom, thou art a liquorish dog.—Fielding, History of a Foundling, bk. v. ch. xii.

LIRICUMPHANCY, LIRICON-FANCY, "The honey-suckle, rosemary, Liricumphancy, rose-parsley" (Poor Robin, 1746), is evidently a corruption of lily convallis, lily of the valley.

LISTS, ground enclosed for a tournament, a corruption of lisses, O. Fr. lisse, lice, It. liccia, a barrier or palisade, Low Lat. liceis, barriers, perhaps akin to licium, a thread, or girdle, and so an enclosure (Skeat). The word was perhaps confused with list, A. Sax. list, a stripe or border.

LITMUS, a kind of blue dye, formerly spelt litmose (Bailey), is a corruption of lakmose, Dut. lakmoes, from lak, lac, and moes, pulp; Ger. lackmuss, litmus (Skeat). The word has evidently been assimilated to Shetland litt, indigo, to litt, to dye indigo blue (Edmonston); Scot. lit, to dye; old Eng. "lytyñ' clothys, Tingo" (Prompt. Parvulorum); Icel. lita, to dye. Hence litster, a dyer, and the proper name Lister.

LITTER, the brood or progeny of an animal brought forth at a birth, so spelt as if identical with litter, a bed (Fr. litière, Lat. lectaria), as parturient women are still said to be "brought to bed," or "in the straw." It is really identical with Icel. látr, látrr, a place where animals produce their young (from leggja, to lay; cf. Prov. Eng. lafter, the laying of a hen).—Skeat, Etym. Dict.

Lytere or forthe brynggyngae of heestys, Fetus, fetura.

Lytere of a bed, Stratus.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

LIVE, when used as an adjective in the sense of living, as in "live stock," "a live ox" (Ex. xxi. 35), has originated in a misunderstanding of the idiom "the ox is alive," where alive is properly an adverbial usage, old Eng. on-live, A. Sax. on life, "in life." It would be a similar error if we spoke of "a sleep child," instead of a "sleeping," because we say "the child is a-sleep," i.e. old Eng. on sleep, "in sleep." Cf. "David fell on sleep."—Acts xiii. 36. Indeed Chaucer actually does use sleep for sleeping, when speaking of the vision which he saw,

Not all waking, ne fulle on sleep,

he describes it as

In plaine English evill witten,
For sleep writer, well ye witten,
Excused is, though he do mis,
More than one that waking is.

Chaucer's Dream, 1597.

Both a-fire and on fire are still in use.

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me having a live coal in his hand.—A. V. Is. vi. 6.

The juice of it on sleeping eye-lids laid
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that it sees.

Shakespeare, Mids. Night's Dream, ii. 1, 172.

Similarly, lone (lonely, lonesome), solitary, "A poor lone woman" (Shaks. 2 Hen. IV. ii. 1, 35), is a corruption of alone, i.e. all-one, altogether single.

LIVELIHOOD, so spelt as if it were a similar formation to likelihood, falsehood, &c., is a corruption of the O. Eng. liflode, lyvelode, A. Sax. lif-láde, life's support, maintenance, from lif, life, and lád, way, "way of life," or "food for a voyage," ládu (viaticum). Cf. lode, the course of the ore in a mine. "Hieron has a sermon, the dedication to which is dated in 1616, entitled The Christians Live-lode. Philemon Holland has livelode in his Cyropædia (1632), p. 123."—Fitzedward Hall. The real old word livelihood, lyvelyhede, meant liveliness, quickness, with which liflode was confounded.

Thus the change of livelode to livelihood is what was to be expected; livelihood being the more intelligible form would naturally survive, existing for some time with two meanings and eventually retaining the one proper to livelode, the other being supplied by "liveliness."—Morris, Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1862-3, p. 88.

All nis not good to þe gost · þat þe bodi lykeþ,
Ne lyflode to þe licam · þat leof is to þe soule.
Vision of Piers Plowman, Text A.
Pass. I. 35.

Folc sechen to his wunienge for to sen his holi lyflode.—Old Eng. Homilies of 12th Cent. 2nd S. p. 127 (ed. Morris).

He must . . . get truly his lyflode wyth swynke and traneyle of his bodye.—The Festial, Caxton, 1483, a. ii.

Sir Thomas Wiat says:—

[The feldishe mouse]

Forbicause her lyvelod was but thinne,
Would nedes go se her townish sisters house.

Satires, I. l. 3 (ab. 1540).

Christ . . . wold not curse hem þat denoied to him harborow and lyfelod, but reprovid his disciplis askyng veniawns.—ApoLOGY for the Lollards, p. 21 (Camden Soc.).

He hath full suffisaunce

Of livelade and of sustenance.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 28
(ed. Pauli).

LOACH. The phrase "to swallow

Cupids like loaches" occurs in The Trip to the Jubilee, and has been understood by some, in accordance with the spelling, to signify the fish of that name. Nares, indeed (s. v.), quotes an instance of one being swallowed in wine.

Compare, however, "Loock, or Lohoc, loch, or lohoch, a thick medicament, that is not to be swallowed at once, but to be licked, or suffered to melt in the mouth, that it may have more effect upon the parts affected."—Vieyra, Portuguese Dictionary.

Great use there is of it in those medicines which be held vnder the tongue, so to resolve & melt leasurly—[margin] such as be our Ecligmata or Lochs.—Holland, Phny's Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 120.

They are good in a loche or licking medicine for shortnes of breath.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 47.

Loch, Lohoc, A Loche or Lohoch; a liquid confection or soft medicine, that's not to be swallowed, but held in the mouth until it have melted.—Cotgrave.

A Stick hereof [of Licorice] is commonly the Spoon prescribed to Patients, to use in any Lingences or Loaches.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 205.

Oh, what an ebb of drink have we,
Bring, bring a deluge, fill us up the sea,
Let the vast ocean be our mighty cup,
We'll drink it, and all it's fishes too, like loaches, up.

J. Oldham, A Dithyrambic, 7; Poems, p. 53
(ed. Bell).

LOAD-STAR, } mis-spellings, from LOAD-STONE, } false analogy, of lode-star and lode-stone, i.e. the star or stone that leads or guides one on his way, A. Sax. lád, a way. We still speak of a lode in a mine. Cf. Icel. leiðar-stjarna, a way-star, leiðar-stein, a way-stone.

An old word for a leader or guide was lodesman (Chaucer, Gower), lodysmanne (Prompt. Parv.), A. Sax. ládman. Cf. O. Fr. laman, a pilot. Lád is near akin to lædan, to guide or lead.

Treuly y folowye euermore my duke and lodisman sent Nicholas.—Revelation to the Monk of Evesham (1486), p. 106 (ed. Arber).

The Dutch word is loodsman, which has been assimilated to lood (lead), a sounding-lead, looden, to sound, loodt-sen, to pilot; pilot itself being Dut. peyl-lood, another form of peyl-lood, a sounding-lead, from peylcn, to sound (Sewel).

There saw I how woful Calistope, . . .
Was turned from a woman til a here,
And after was she made the lodesterre.

Chaucer, Knights Tale, l. 2061.

To that cleere maiestie which in the North
Doth like another Sunne in glory rise;
Which standeth fixt, yet spreads her heavenly worth;

Loadstone to hearts, and loadstarre to all
eyes.

Sir John Davies, Poems, 1599, vol. i. p. 9
(ed. Grosart).

What makes the loadstone to the North ad-
uance,

His subtle point, as if from thence he found
His chiefe attractive vertue to redound.

Sir John Davies, Orchestra, 56 (1622).

Bp. Andrewes says of the star in the east:—

It is not a star only, but a Load-star: And whither should . . . it lead us, but to Him, whose the star is? to the Stars Master.—
Sermons, fol. p. 143.

Prior uses the curious expression,
“loaded needles” of the compass (Alma, 747, Davies, p. 381). It has been conjectured that lode-stone, apparently a true English word, may be an adaptation of Lydian-stone, Lat. lapis Lydius, the touchstone, just as Magnet takes its name from Magnesia, a Lydian city.—I. Taylor, Words & Places, p.
417 (2nd ed).

LOAF ABOUT (TO), a verb formed from the substantive “loafer,” as if it meant one who “loafs,” or loiters about for the sake of a loaf, like old Eng. bribour, a vagabond, from bribe, a piece of bread.
“Loafer,” however, is the German läufer, landläufer, Prov. Ger. lofer, a vagabond, an unsettled roamer about the country; Whitby land-louper; old English a land-leaper or land-loper. “I was a landloper as the Dutchman saith,
a wanderer.”—Howell, Fam. Letters, 1650. Icel. hlaupingi, vagabonds, from hlaupa, löpa, to run away, our “leap;”
Dut. loopster, a gadding gossip (Sewel).

A land-loper, as Professor Skeat observes, was once a common name for a pilgrim; “Villotier, a vagabond, landloper, earth-planet, continuall gadder from towne to towne” (Cotgrave). The phrase to lepe ouer lond = be a pilgrim, occurs in Vision of Piers Plowman, Text A. Pass. v. l. 258, and so landleperes hermytes = vagabond hermits, Id. Text C. Pass. xvii. 337; Cleveland landlouper, one who runs away from his creditors; Dan. landlöber, a vagrant.

Compare lope in Davies, *Supp. Eng.
Glossary*.

But such Travellers as these may be termed Land-lopers, as the Dutchman saith, rather than Travellers.—J. Howell, Instructions for Ferraine Travell, 1642, p. 67 (ed.
Arber).

Shoeblocks are compelled to a great deal of unavoidable loafing; but certainly this one loafed rather energetically.—H. Kingsley,
Ravenshoe, ch. xli.

See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.v.

LOBSTER, for lop-ster, A. Sax.
loppestre, lopystre (Ettmüller, p. 169),
so spelt as if an independent formation in English from old Eng. lope, to leap
(A. Sax. hleapan, Ger. laufen, Icel.
hlaupa), with the termination -ster, and so meaning the “leap-ster,” or bouncer, like old Eng. loppe, a flea;
cf. old Eng. hleapestre, a dancer, hoppe-stere, a hopster, dawnstere, “songster,” &c. Lopystre, however, is from lopust-a,
the same word as Lat. locusta, denoting
a leaping animal—(1) on land, a locust;
(2) in the water, a lobster; from Sansk.
root lañgh, to jump (whence also
A. Sax. leax, the leaping salmon). Cf.
Lat. equus = Gk. hippos. Sylvester uses lobstarize for to leap or run back. See LOCK-CHEST.

From locusta comes also Fr. lan-gouste, “a locust or grasshopper, also a kind of lobster” (Cotgrave). See *LONGOYSTER.

LOBSTER, a name for the stoat in the eastern shires (Wright), is a corrupted form of lop-start, hanging tail, a lumpy tail; compare clubster, its name in the Cleveland dialect, i.e. club-start, “club-tail,” from A. Sax. steort, Dan. stiert, Swed. stjert, the tail.

In Lincolnshire the animal is called club-tail, from its short stiff tail.

In Caius, Of Englishe Dogges, 1576, he observes that some are good for chasing “The Polcat, the Lobster, the Weasel, the Conny, &c.” (p. 4, repr.
1880).

LOCUSTS, a popular name for the mawkishly sweet bean-pods of the Kharúb tree (Ceratonia siliqua).—
Thomson, Land and the Book, p. 21.
It is also called “St. John’s bread-tree” (Ger. Johannis Brodtbaum), from an idea that it furnished the Baptist with food in the wilderness. The name locusts perhaps originated in some confusion of κεραρια, "little horns," the Greek name of the pods, Luke xv. 16 (whence Ger. Bockshornbaum, as a name of the tree), with κεράμβυξ, cerambyx, κέραβος, Lat. carabus (= locusta), horned insects. Cf. "Hornet," Ger. holzbock, "stag-beetle," cerf-volant.

A somewhat similar mistake is the rendering of ἀκέραιος (guileless, lit. "unmixed"), "Harmless as doves" (A. V. St. Matt. x. 16), as if from ἀ and κέρας, un-horned (sine cornu, Bengel), without means of offence.—Trench, on A. Version, p. 125. Increase Mather, making a like blunder, says:—

The thunderbolt was by the antients termed Ceraunia because of the smell like that of an horn [κέρας] when put into the fire, which does attend it.—Remarkable Providences, p. 81 (ed. Ofor).

LOCKCHEST, a provincial name for the wood-louse (Wright), also called lockchester in Oxfordshire (lockchester, Prompt. Parv.), is perhaps formed on the analogy of the ancient and synonymous name lok-dore ("wyrme, multipes.")—Prompt. Parv., misunderstood as lock-door. But lok-dore, also spelt lugdorre, is compounded of lug (? a worm) and dor, A. Sax. dora, a chafer or drone. Dr. Adams thinks that lockchester is from lok-estre, i.e. log- or lug- (= slow) + estre (an A. Sax. termination), "the sluggish insect" (Transactions of Philolog. Soc. 1860-1, p. 9). It is simpler, however, to suppose that lock-chester, lokestre, is merely an Anglicized form of locusta, the Latin word for a lobster as well as for a locust. In Prov. Eng. cockchafer are commonly called locusts. The wood-louse is actually called a lobstrous-louse in the North country dialects, with reference, no doubt, to its flexible and armour-plated back, which closely resembles a lobster's tail, whence it is also named an armadillo. See LOBSTER.

My friend, Mr. Halliwell, walking in a garden in Oxfordshire, accidentally overheard the gardener talking about lockchesters, and immediately asking him what these were, received for answer that they were woodlice. On a further inquiry he ascertained that lock-chest, or lockchester, was not an uncommon word in some parts of Oxfordshire for a woodlouse, although it was rapidly going out of use.—T. Wright, Archæological Essays, vol. ii. p. 47.

LONGOYSTER, the crayfish (W. Cornwall Glossary, M. A. Courtney), so called as if one of the bivalve species (and the word is actually explained in the publications of a learned society to be "a sort of oyster."—Camden Soc. Miscellany, vol. iv. p. 8), is a corruption of the French langouste, "a kind of Lobster that hath undivided cleyes, or long beake (or bearde) and prickles on her back," also "a Locust, or Grasshopper."—Cotgrave. Langouste is from the Latin locusta. (Compare Welsh *llege*st, a lobster.) See also Skinner, Etymologicon, s. v. Longoister; Ebel, Celtic Studies, p. 103.

Langosta is in old Spanish a locust or grasshopper (Minsheu), in modern a lobster, while langostina is a prawn (H. J. Rose). Bishop Wilkins in his Essay towards a Philosophical Language, 1668, groups with "Lobster," "Long oyster, Locusta marina" (p. 128, fol.).

In old English languste is the locust, e.g. :—

Wilde hunie and languste his mete, and water was his drinke.

Old Eng. Homilies of 12th Cent. 2nd S. p. 127 (ed. Morris, E. E. T. S.)

In the Adriatic this fish (Pabirus vulgaris) is known as agosta or aragosta, the initial l having been mistaken for the article. "Of Locusts of the sea, or Lobster" is Holland's title to Pliny Nat. History, bk. ix. ch. 30.

Locust, a fish like a lobster, called a long-oyster.—Kersey, Dictionary, 1715.

Presents . . . of Mr Sheriff, 2 hogshheads of beer, 2 carp, a isle of sturgeon, a isle of fresh salmon, 1 pike, 3 trout and 1 long oyster.—Expenses of the Judges of Assize, 1599 (Camden Miscellany, vol. iv. p. 37).

LODGE. Corn is said to be lodged when it lies flat, beaten down by storm or rain. This can scarcely be the same word as lodge, to dwell or sojourn, Fr. loger, originally to occupy a hut, O. Eng. loge, Fr. loge, from Low Lat. laubia, a leafy bower (Scheler). It is perhaps a survival of A. Sax. logjan, to place, set, or put together, akin probably to Goth. logjan, to lay. So lodged would be equivalent to laid. Ettmüller co-ordinates logjan with A. Sax. loh, place (? cf. Lat. locus, locare). Compare low, old Eng. loogh, Dut. laag, Icel. lagr, originally "lying flat," from the base lag, to lie.

Also we may number among the faults incident to corne their rankenesse; namely, when the blade is so ouergrowne and the stalke so charged and loden with a heauie head that the corn standeth not vpright, but is lodged & lieth along.—Holland, Pliny N. Hist. i. 574.

Though bladed corn be lodged and trees blown downo.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1, 55.

Our sighs and they [tears] shall lodge the summer corn,

And make a dearth in this revolting land.

Id. Richard II. iii. 3, 163.

LOFTSANG, an old Eng. word for a hymn or song of praise in The Early Eng. Psalter, Ps. lxiv. 2, as if a high or lofty song (O. Eng. lofte, the air), is an incorrect form of A. Sax. lōf-sang (= Ger. lob-gesang), from O. Eng. lofe, praise, A. Sax. lōf. Loue song in the following is perhaps the same word:—

Tech me, iesu, þi loue song, wip suete teres euer among.

Böddeker, Atteng. Dichtungen, p. 204, l. 156.

Lof-song syngen to God 3erne

Wip such speche as he con lerne.

Castel of Loue, l. 30.

LOOK'EM, } are given by Wright as LEWCOME, } provincial words for a window in the roof. They are corruptions of the old word lucayne, Fr. lucarne, from Lat. lucerna, a lantern. Compare Goth. lucarn, Ir. luacharn, Wel. lygorn. In the French argot luisante is a window (Nisard, Livres Populaires, tom. ii. p. 374).

LOOSE-STRIFFE, a popular name of the plant lysimachia, is a translation of that word into its component elements, Greek lúsis, a loosing, and maché, a fight. According to Pliny, however, it was called after a King Lysimachus (Prior).

Lysimachie, Willow-herb, Loose-strife, Water-willow.—Cotgrave.

Lysimachia, as Dioscorides and Plinie doe write, tooke his name of a speciall vertue that it hath in appeasing the strife and unrulinesse which falleth out among oxen at the plough, if it be put about their yokes; but it rather retaineth and keepeth the name Lysimachia, of King Lysimachus the sonne of Agathocles, the first finder out of the nature and vertues of this herbe, as Plinie saith.—Gerarde, Herbal, 1597, p. 388.

LOSE, a corrupt form (for leese) of old Eng. lesen, or leosen (past partic. loren, lorn), A. Sax. leösen (= amittere, to lose), which has been assimilated to old Eng. losien, to loose (past partic. lost), A. Sax. losian, to become loose (Skeat, Etymolog. Dictionary). The old word leasing, lying (Psalm iv. 2), A. Sax. leásung, is near akin.

Leesunge, or lyyng, Mendacium.

Lesunge, or thyngys loste, Perdicio.

Losyn or vnbyndyn, Solvo.

Prompt. Parvulorum.

Whose 3ong lerneþ, olt he ne leseþ;

Quoþ Hending.

Proverbs of Hending, l. 46.

"Hasardry is very mother of lesinges." . . . Trulye it maye well be called so, if a man consydre howe manye wayes, and how many thinges, he loseth thereby, for firste he loseth his goodes, he loseth his tyme, he loseth quyknes of wyt, and all good lust to other thinges, he loseth honest companye, he loseth his good name and estimation, and at laste, yf he leaue it not, loseth God, and Heauen and all.—R. Ascham, Taxophilus, 1545, p. 54 (ed. Arber).

LORD, an old slang term for a hump-backed person. It is dubious whether this nickname has originated in a popular grudge against the nobility, or in a sort of mock respect for the cripple. At all events we must probably set aside as mere curious coincidences the medical term, "lordosis, the bending of the backbone forward in children" (Bailey), Greek lordós, bent forwards, Low Lat. lordicare, to walk with bent back, as these words are not likely to have been known to the populace. It may possibly be another use of the old English loord, lordain, lurden, or lourden, a maladroit clownish fellow who cannot, or will not, work for his living, a sluggard. "Lorel, or losel, or lurdene (lordayne), Lurco."—Prompt. Parvulorum. This is the same word as Fr. lourd (O. Fr. lorde), heavy, clumsy, loutish, sottish, unhandsome, It. lordo, foul, filthy, Low Lat. lurdus, from Lat. luridus, discoloured, ghastly.

A laesy loord for nothing good to donne.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, III. vii. 12.

Latimer speaks of "lording loyterers" (The Ploughers).

My lord, a hunch-back.—Patterson, Antrim and Down Glossary, E. D. S.

She invariably wound up at night with a mad fighting fit, during which "my lord"—vulgar slang for hunchback—was always thrashed unmercifully.—The Standard, Dec. 6, 1879.

He [James Annesley] was in derision called my lord, which the mistress of the house hearing called him, and seeing he had no deformity to deserve the title, as vulgarly given, 'Tell me, says she, why they call you my lord.'—The Patrician, vol. i. p. 310 (1846).

That a deformed person is a Lord. . . . After a painful investigation of the rolls and records under the reign of Richard the Third, or "Richard Crouchback," as he is more usually designated in the chronicles,—from a traditional stoop or gibbosity in that part—we do not find that that monarch conferred any such lordships as here pretended, upon any subject or subjects, on a simple plea of "conformity" in that respect to the "royal nature."—C. Lamb, Essays of Elia.

I euer haue bene a sworne enemy to laſye lurdens.—Tell Trothes New Yeares Gift, 1593, p. 3.

Syker, thous but a laesie loord.
Spenser, Shepherds Calender, Julye.

[On which E. K. comments "A loorde was wont among the old Britons to signifie a Lorde," and "Lurdanes = Lord Danes"!]

It is observable, in this connexion, that in the Vision of Piers Plowman Pass. xxi. 107, where the C-text has lordlings, the B-text has lordcynes, clowns (Skeat, Notes, in loco).

The analyzing of lurden or lordain into Lord Dane is a very old bit of "folk's-etymology":—

The comon people were so of them oppressed, y<sup>e</sup> for fere & drede, they called them, in euery such house as they had rule of, lord Dane. . . . This worde lorde Dane was, in dyrision and despyte of the Danys, tounred by the Englysshemen into a name of opprobrie, and called Lurdayn, whiche, to our dayes, is nat forgotten but when one Englysshe man woll rebuke an other, he woll, for the more rebuke, call him Lurdayn.—Fabyan, Chronicle, p. 205 (ed. 1811).

LOVAGE, O. Eng. lov-cache, as though it were love-parsley, is a corruption of Fr. livèche, levesche, Low Lat. levisticum, from Lat. ligusticum, the Ligurian plant.

Loveache, herbe, Levisticus.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Another old Eng. form is lufuste. See LUFESTICE.

Similar corruptions are Belg. levestock, liefstieckel, Ger. liebstockel, as if "dear little plant."

The distilled water of Louge, cleereth the sight, and putteth away all spots, lentiles, freckles, and rednes of the face, if they be often washed therewith.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 855.

Take a handfulle of herb lovache,
And anoþer of persely.

Liber Cure Cocorum (1440), p. 18.

As for Laueach or Livish, it is by nature wild and sauage, and loueth alone to grow of it self among the mountains of Liguria, whereof it commeth to haue the name Ligusticum, as being the naturall place best agreeing to the nature of it.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. 1634, vol. ii. p. 30.

LOVE, an old name for a game (Wright) played by holding up the fingers behind the back of a blindfolded person, sometimes with the words, "Buck! Buck! How many fingers do I hold up?" (Lat. micare). This game, which is very widely diffused, was called in French amour; "Jouer à l'amour, One to hold up his fingers, and another, turned from him, to ghesse how many he holds up" (Cotgrave), whence came Eng. love. The French phrase, however, is corrupted from jouer à la mouvre; mouvre being "the play of love, wherein one turning his face from another, guesses how many fingers he holds up" (Cotgrave), identical with It. mora, "a kind of game much used in Italy with casting of the fingers of the right hand, and speaking of certaine numbers" (Florio), probably from Lat. morari, to play the fool, Gk. mōros, a fool.

If any unlearned person or stranger should come in, he would certainly think we were bringing up again among ourselves the countrymen's play of holding up our fingers (divinatione digitorum, i.e. the play of love).—Bailey, Erasmus's Colloquies, p. 159 [see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary].

LOVE, as used in sundry games with the meaning of nought, as in the phrases "to play for love," "ten to love," "love all," is perhaps the same word as Icel. lyf, denoting (1) a herb or simple, (2) anything small or worthless, as in the Edda of Sæmund, "ekki lyf," not a whit (Magnusson, Journal of Philology, vol. v. p. 298). Cognate words are old Dan. löv, Swed. lyf, O. H. Ger. lupi, A. Sax. lib (Cleashy, p. 400). So lyf seems to have been used in old English for a whit or small particle:—

"Yit I preye þe," quod pers "par Charite, 3if þou Conne
 Eny luf of leche Craft: here hit me, my deore.
Langland, Vision of P. Plowman,
 A. vii. 241.

It is more likely, however, that love is here the ordinary antithesis to money, as in the phrases "to play for love [of the game] and not for money," "not to be had for love or money."

I sometimes . . . play a game at piquet for love with my cousin Bridget—Bridget Elia.—C. Lamb, Essays of Elia (Works, p. 356, ed. Kent).

LOVE-APPLES, Fr. Pommes d'amour, Lat. poma amoris, all corruptions of It. pomi dei Mori, or Moors' apples, having been introduced as mala Æthiopica (Prior).

Apples of Loue do growe in Spaine, Italie, and such hot countries, from whence my selfe haue received Seedes for my garden, where they do increase and prosper.—Gerarde, Herbal, 1597, p. 275.

LOVER, a North country word for a chimney, or more properly the lantern or aperture in the roof of old houses through which the smoke escapes. "It is plainly the Icelandic lióri (pronounced liowri or liovri), Norweg. liore, West Gothland liura, a sort of cupola serving the twofold purpose of a chimney and a skylight. Lióri is evidently derived from liós, light, analogous to Fr. lucarne."—Garnett, Philolog. Essays, p. 62.

Prof. Skeat, however, shows clearly that lover is really from old Fr. l'ouvert, l'ouvert, i.e. "th' opening," and quotes the line—

At louers [louert, Fr. text], lowpea, archers [it] had plente.—Partenay, 1175.

I presume to abroad the same vnder the shadow of your wings, and to grace it with the louer of your honorable name, that enuy may be quite discouraged from giuing any sharpe assault, or at the least her noysome smoke ascending to the top, may finde a vent wherehy to vanish.—Howard, Defensative against the Poyson of Supposed Prophecies (1620), Dedication.

Ne lightned was with window, nor with lover.

Spenser, F. Queene, VI. a. 42.

Lover of an howse, Lodium, umbrex.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

LOVERTINE, a term which Julia, in the old comedy of Patient Grissil (1603), applies to her three inamorati, is apparently a corruption of libertine.

There are a number here that have beheld . . . these gentlemen lovertine, and myself a hater of love.—Act v. sc. 2 (Shaks. Soc. ed.), p. 89.

LOWER, now generally applied to the sky when gloomy and overcast, so spelt, perhaps, from an idea that it indicated a lowering or descent of the clouds, is the same word as old Eng. lour, to frown or look surly, Dut. loeren, to frown.

Perhaps we laugh to heare of this, that such dead blockes and lowring louts as many of us have beene to this day, . . . should become any other.—D. Rogers, Naaman the Syrian (1641), p. 887.

The sky is red and lowring.—A. V. St. Matt. xvi. 3.

So loked he with lene chekes · lourede he foule.

Langland, Vision of P. Plowman,
 A. Pass. v. l. 66.

LUBBERKIN, the name of a certain species of fairy in old writers, as if the little lubber (cf. Milton's "lubber fiend"), seems to be corrupted from LUBRICAN, which see.

As for your Irish Lubrican, that spirit Whom by preposterous charmea thy lust hath raised

In a wrong circle, him Ile damne more blacke

Then any tyrant's soule.

Dekker, Honest Whore, Pt. II. (1630).

By the Mandrakes dreadful groanea,
 By the Lubrican's sad moanes.

Drayton, Nymphidia, 417.

LUBBER'S HEAD, the sign of an inn, is an old corruption of The Leopard's Head (Hotten, History of Signboards, p. 147).

He is indited to the Lubber's-head in Lumhert Street.—Shakespeare, 2 Henry IV. ii. 1, 30.

LUBRICAN, an old corruption of leprichawn, the name of a species of Irish fairy, generally seen in the form of a diminutive cobbler, and endowed with the Protean faculty of slipping through the hands of his seizer, if not steadfastly watched; so written as if connected with Lat. lubricus, slippery. In Dekker's Honest Whore, Pt. II. (1630), a jealous husband speaks of the Irish Lubrican.

Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. iii. p. 58 (ed. Bohn), compares with this:—

I'll be no pauder to him; and if I finde any loose Lubrick 'scapes in him, I'll watch him.—Witch of Edmouton, p. 32, 1658.

This pigmy sprite is also known by the names of luprachoun, lurricane, loughryman, and leithbhragan, as if from Ir. leith, one, brog, shoe, an, maker (O'Reilly). The more correct designation, it seems, is luchorpán, "Little-body," from lu, small, and corpán, a body (Whitley Stokes, see Joyce, Irish Place-Names, 1st Ser. p. 183; Croker's Fairy Legends, p. 105, ed. Wright).

LUCE, the old Eng. name for the pike, Lat. lucius, is not probably a derivative of lucce, to shine (like "bleak," the river fish, from Ger. blicken, to gleam), but of Greek lukos, a wolf, on account of its wolf-like rapacity. The voracious fish which is named lukos in Greek, lupus in Latin, is no doubt the pike.

LUFESTICE, } Anglo-Saxon words
LUF-STICE, } for the plant lovage, as if derived from luf, love (under which word Dr. Bosworth in his Dictionary actually ranges them!), and stice or sticce, are corruptions of the Low Latin name levisticum, for Lat. ligusticum. Compare the German corruption lieb-stöckel, and see LOVAGE.

LUMP, in the colloquial and vulgar phrase "to lump it," meaning to take things as they come, in the lump or gross as it were, without picking and choosing, e.g. "If he don't like it he may lump it;" "She must lump it," says Mrs. Pipchin in Dombey. Mr. Oliphant regards this word as a corruption of old Eng. lomp (Legend of St. Margaret), A. Sax. gelamp, it happened, and so to lump would be "to take what may chance" (Old and Mid. Eng. p. 255). The A. Sax. verb is ge-limpan, to happen or occur; past partic. ge-lumpen.

God hit wot, leoue sustren, more wunder ilomp [a greater wonder has happened].—Aneren Riwele, p. 54.

Nyf oure lorde hade ben her lode3-mon hem had lumpen harde.

Alliterative Poems, p. 49, l. 424.

LUPINE, Lat. lupinus, as if the wolf's bean, from lupus, a wolf, and so Venetian fava lovina, is probably of a common origin with Greek lopos, a husk, lepó, to peel or hull (Prior), Polish lupina, a husk.

LUKE-WARM. Luke, formerly used as an independent word meaning tepid, is an altered form of old Eng. lew (Wycliffe), A. Sax. hleo; cf. Ger. leu, Dut. laauw, Dorset lew (Barnes, Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1864; and so Skeat). It has been assimilated evidently to A. Sax. wlæc, tepid, weakly warm (cf. Goth. thlakwus, weak, tender.—Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 710).

Lewke not fully hote, Tepidus.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

With-drow þe knif, þat was lewe
Of þe seli children blod.

Havelok the Dane, l. 499.

Boyle hit in clene water so fre,
And kele hit, þat he bot lue.

Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 33.

As wunsum as euer eni wlech weter [As pleasant as ever any luke water].—St. Juliana, p. 70 (1230).

As if thu nymest ri3t hot water, and dost cold ther-to,

Thu hit mi3t maki wlak and entempi so.

Wright, Pop. Treatises on Science, p. 138.

Ðe wop . . cumeð of þe wlache heorte [Weeping cometh from the warm heart].—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 151 (ed. Morris).

LUPAERD, an old spelling of leopard, apparently from some confusion with Lat. lupus, a wolf.

The spack Sir firapeel the lupaerd whicke was sybbe somwhat to the kyng, and saide, sire kyng how make ye suche a noyse ye make sorrow ynough though the quene were deed.—Coxton, Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 52 (ed. Arber).

LUSCIOUS is a corruption of old Eng. licious, delicious, near akin to old Eng. lickorous, lickerish, dainty; Cheshire licksome, pleasant; Ger. lecker, Fr. lécheur, lécher, A. Sax. liccera, a gourmand, glutton (orig. "one who licks his lips"), under the influence of lush, rank, juicy, It. lussare, lussuriare, to grow rank, orig. to live in voluptuousness or luxury.

Bp. Hacket uses licious in the sense of luscious :—

He that feeds upon the letter of the Text feeds upon Manna; he that lives by the Allegorie feeds upon licious Quails.—Century of Sermons, p. 515, fol. 1675.

She leaves the neat youth, telling his lushious tales, and puts back the serving-mans putting forward, with a frown.—Sir

Thos. Overbury's Works, p. 47 (ed. Rimbauld).

LUTESTRING, a name for a certain lustrous or glossy silk fabric, is a corruption of lustring, Fr. lustrine, from lustrer (Lat. lustrare), to shine. (Vide Skinner, Prolegom. Etymologica).

To wash point-lace, tiffanies, sarsnets, a-la-modes, lute-strings, &c.—Female Instructor (Nares, s.v. Point-lace).

I was led to trouble you with these observations, by a passage which, to speak in lute-string, I met with this morning, in the course of my reading.—Letters of Junius, No. 48.

Within my memory the price of lutestring [as a material for scarfs] is raised above twopence in a yard.—The Spectator, No. 21 (1711).

M.

MACKIN, } in the old popular oath,
MACKINS, } "By the mackins," is no doubt a corruption of may-kin or maid-kin (Ger. mädchen), like lakin for lady-kin. Thus the adjuration is "by the Virgin" (O. Eng. may, A. Sax. mæg, a maid), "by our Lady." It is probably from a misunderstanding about this old Eng. may, or from some mere play on the word, that the month of May is now regarded as especially dedicated to the Virgin.

I would not have my zon Dick one of these boets for the best pig in my sty, by the mackins.—Randolph, The Muses Looking-glass, iv. 4 (Works, p. 253).

MACKNINNY, a curious word for a puppet-show used by North, is perhaps a corruption of Fr. mécanique, a mechanical contrivance, an automaton worked by concealed mechanism.

He could . . . represent emblematically the downfall of majesty as in his raree-show and mackinny.—Examen, p. 590 [Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary].

MADEFELON, } old English names
MADFELOUN, } for the plant centaurea nigra, are corruptions of its Latin name maratriphyllon, Gk. marathrou pháillon, "fennel-leaf." Prior, Pop. Names of Brit. Plants.

MAD-NEP, a trivial name for the cow-parsnip, is a corruption of mead-nep. Similarly MAD-WORT, the asperugo procumbens, is the Dutch meed, "madder," instead of which its root was used (Prior).

MADRIGAL, Sp. Fr. madrigal, It. madrigale, madriale, originally mandriale, a pastoral song, from Latin and Greek mandra, a sheep-fold. The word was perhaps mentally connected with mad-rugar (Sp. and Portg.), to rise, (L. Lat. maturicare from maturus) to rise early, as if a "morning-song," like aube and aubades, and serenade "evening song," from sera. The Italian word has also been analyzed into madre gala, "song of the Virgin," Quarterly Review, No. 261, p. 162, but incorrectly.

For the omission of the n compare muster, It. mostra, from Lat. monstrare, to make a show, to display.

MAGWEED, a local name in some parts of England for the ox-eye daisy (chrysanthemum leucanthemum), is said to be a corruption of Fr. marguerite, a daisy, the symbol of S. Margherita of Cortona. (C. Yonge, Hist. of Christian Names, vol. i. p. 265.)

MAIDEN-PINK, said to be a mistake for mead or meadow-pink (Prior).

MAKE-BATE, a popular name for the plant polemonium (caeruleum), which was translated as if a derivative of Greek pólemos, war (Prior). Compare LOOSE-STRIPE, a mis-rendering of lysimachus.

MAKINBOY, a name for the plant Euphorbia hiberna, is an anglicized form of the Irish makin-bwee = "yellow-parsnip" (Britten and Holland).

Mackenboy, a sort of spurge with a knotted root.—Bailey, Dictionary.

MALECOLYE, an old and incorrect spelling of melancholy, as if it were the evil choler (Wright), Lat. malus.

MAN, a conical pillar of stones erected on the top of a mountain. "Such cones are on the tops of all our mountains, and they are called men."—Coleridge. (Dickinson, Cumberland Glossary, E. D. S.). An evident corruption of Keltic maen, a stone.

MAN, vb. a falconer's term for training a hawk into obedience to his commands, to tame, has often been understood to mean to accustom the bird to the society of man. For instance Nares commenting on Juliet's expression "my unmann'd blood" (Rom. and Jul. iii. 2), says the term is applied to a hawk "not yet made familiar with man." The true meaning of to man, or mann, is to accustom to the hand, Fr. main, Lat. manus. So manage was originally to handle, to control a horse by the hand, It. maneggio, from mano, the hand, Fr. manier, to handle, mani-able, tractable.

Compare Lat. mansuetus, Gk. chei-roéthês, accustomed to the hand. So Gk. palamáomai, to manage, from palamê, the hand.

Unmanned, a term in falconry, applied to a hawk that is not yet tamed, or made familiar with man.—T. Wright, Dict. of Obsolete and Prov. English.

In time, this Eagle was so throughly mann'd,
That from the Quarry, to her Mistress hand
At the first call 't would come, and faun upon her,
And hill and how, in signe of love and honour.

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas (1621), Works,
p. 112.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come and know her keeper's
call.

Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iv.
1, 207.

MANDARIN, a title given to certain Chinese officials (not of native origin) is probably an Indian word corrupted from the Sanscrit mantrin, a counsellor or minister, and assimilated in the Portuguese mandarim, to mandar, Lat. mandare.

MANDRAGON, an old name for the plant mandragoras.

In English we call it Mandrake, Mandrage, and Mandragon.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 281 (1597).

The white Mandroge some name Arsen, the male.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 235 (1634).

Mandragore, mandrake, mandrage, mandragon.—Cotgrave.

MANDRAKE, a corruption of old Eng. mandrage, Lat. mandragoras, was long supposed to grow in the shape of a man. See the curious figure in Berjeau, The Bookworm, vol. iii. p. 56, and Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. iii. p. 12, ed. Bohn. The following amazing statement in a volume lately published is a popular etymology with a vengeance,

The mandrake, so called from the German mandragen, resembling man, was, &c. !—T. F. T. Dyer, Eng. Folk-lore, p. 30.

[He knows] where the sad mandrake grows
Whose groans are deathful.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

So, of a lone unhaunted place possesset,
Did this soules second Inne, built by the guest,
This living buried man, this quiet mandrake,
rest.

Donne, Poems (1635), p. 309.

Many molas and false conceptions there are of mandrakes. The first, from great antiquity, conceiveth the root thereof resembleth the shape of man; which is a conceit not to be made out by ordinary inspection, or any other eyes, than such as, regarding the clouds behold them in shapes conformable to pre-apprehensions . . . Illiterate heads have been led on by the name, which in the first syllable expresseth its representation; but other have better observed the laws of etymology, and deduced it from a word of the same language, because it delighteth to grow in obscure and shady places; which derivation, although we shall not stand to maintain, yet the other seemeth answerable unto the etymologies of many authors, who often confound such nominal notations.—Sir Thos. Browne, Works, vol. i. p. 192 (ed. Bohn).

Sweet as a screech-owl's serenade,
Or those enchanting murmurs made,
By th' husband mandrake and the wife
Both bury'd (like themselves) alive.

S. Butler, Hudibras, Pt. iii. canto i.

MANGEL WURZEL, i.e. in German "scarcity root," is properly mangold wurzel.

MANGIANTS, EASTER, a curious popular name for the plant polygonum Bistorta in Cumberland and Westmoreland, also spelt may-giants, magiants, mun-giands, ment-gions. Of doubtful origin, perhaps from Fr. manger (Britain and Holland).

MANNA, Gk. μavvá, in Baruch i. 10 (A. V. "Prepare ye manna, and offer upon the altar of the Lord our God"), is a corrupt form in Hellenistic Greek (also μαvάδ) of Heb. mincha, an offering.—Ewald, Antiquities of Israel, p. 36.

MANNER, in the old law phrase "to be taken with the manner," i.e. red-handed, or in the very act of committing a crime, with the thing stolen in one's possession, is a corruption of the older form mainour, O. Fr. mainouvre (or manœuvre), possession. Compare "Manowrer, to hold, occupy, possess (an old Norman word)." —Cotgrave. Blackstone defines "A thief taken with the mainour (or mainouvre), that is with the thing stolen upon him in manu (in his hand)." Law Lat. cum manu-opere captus.

In the Baron of Bradwardine's Charter of 1140 (Kemble) occur the terms "infangthief et outfangthief, sive handhabend, sive bak-barand." In old Scotch law phrase the thief was said to be caught with the fang (i.e. with the thing in his grasp, A. Sax. fang), or bak-be-rand, or hand-habend (C. Innes, Scotland in Mid. Ages, p. 182).

The Fehm-Law enumerated three tokens or proofs of guilt in these cases; the Habende Hand (having hand), or having the proof in his hand; the Blickende schein (looking appearance) . . . and the Gichtige Mund (faltering mouth).—Secret Societies of Mid. Ages, p. 332.

Felons inome hond-habbing

For to suffre judgement.

King Horn and Floriz, ab. 1280, p. 70

(E. E. T. S.).

O villain, thou stol'st a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner.—Shakespeare, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4.

Even as a thief that is taken, with the manner that he stealeth.—Lutimer, Sermons, p. 110.

Mainour, alias Manour, alias Meinour. From the French Manier, i, manu tractare: In a legal sense, denotes the thing that a Thief taketh away or stealeth. As to be taken with the Mainour, Pl. Cor. fol. 179, is to be taken with the thing stollen about him.—Cowel, Interpreter (ed. 1701).

Prendre au faict flagrant. To take at it, or in the manner; to apprehend vpon the deed doing, or presently after.—Cotgrave, s.v. Flagrant.

As we were issuing fourth, we were he-wrayed by ye harking of a dog, which caused the Turkes to arise, and they taking vs with the manner stopped vs from flying away.—E. Webbe, His Trauailles, 1590, p. 28 (ed. Arber).

Mr. Tow-wouse, being caught, as our lawyers express it, with the manner, and having no defence to make, very prudently withdrew himself.—H. Fielding, Joseph Andrews, bk. i. ch. xvii.

MANNER, a Lincolnshire corruption of manure, which is merely a shortened form of manceuvre, originally used for tillage in general.

No inhabitant shall bring his manner into the streete.—Town Record, 1661 (Peacock).

In Antrim and Down manner is used in a wider sense for to prepare, which is closer to the etymological meaning, "to work with the hand," manceuvre, It. manovrare, Lat. manu operari. Thus land is said to be well mannered by the frost, and flax is mannered by being passed through rollers (Patterson). To manure was formerly used for any sort of agricultural handling or treatment.

Voluntaries for this service he had enough, all desiring to have a lash at the dog in the manger, and every mans hand itching to throw a cudgel at him, who like a nut-tree must be manured by beating or else would never bear fruit.—I. Fuller, The Holy Warre, p. 59 (1647).

MANPERAMBLE, a Leicestershire word for a kind of apple, is a popular corruption of nonpareil (Evans, Glossary, E. D. S. p. 190).

MANRENT, a Scotch term for homage done to a superior (Jamieson), as if a rent, or something rendered, is a corruption of the older form manred, manredyn, A. Sax. man-red or man-ræden, the state of being the man (or homo) of a lord, vassalage, homage (cf. hatred, kindred, where the termination is the same). Manrede occurs in The Digby MS. ab. 1290, Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 26.

MANSWORN. In the north of Ireland a perjured person is said to be mansworn (Patterson, Antrim and Down Glossary), perhaps with some idea that he has casuistically taken the oath to man, and not to God.

For man-sworne, & men-sclazt & to much drynk

For þeft, & for þrepyng, vn-þonk may mon haue.

Alliterative Poems, p. 42, l. 183.

It is O. H. Ger. meinsweridi, perjury, from main, mein, stain, injury, bad, O. Norse mein, crime (Morris).

MANGLE, to mutilate or tear, for mankel, a frequentative form of old Eng. manken, "Mankkyn, or maymyn, Mutilo."—Prompt. Parvulorum; that is, to render maimed; Lat. mancus (Skeat). It has perhaps been assimilated in form to mangle, Dut. mangelen, to roll linen, to crush as with a mangonel or war-engine, Lat. manganum, Greek manganon.

MANTUA, as in mantua-maker, an old word for a lady's cloak or mantle, as if so called from having been made at Mantua, in Italy. So I. Taylor, Words and Places, p. 424; and compare the witty adaptation of Vergil's line, ascribed to Dean Swift, when a lady's mantle knocked down and broke a valuable fiddle, "Mantua, vœ miseræ nimum vicina Cremonæ!" It is evidently a corrupted form of Fr. manteau, mante, It. and Sp. manto, a mantle, from Lat. mantellum.

"Mantoe or Mantua gown, a loose upper garment."—Phillips, 1706. Similarly portmantua (Dryden), portmantue (Cotgrave), are variants of portmanteau.

MANY, an old word for a household, or a body of retainers, or retinue of servants, so spelt as if identical with many (= Lat. multi), A. Sax. manig, and significant of a multitude, or numerous attendance. It is really a corrupted form of the older word meinie, menyee, mainee, a household, derived from O. Fr. "mesnie, a meyny, family."—Cotgrave; also spelt meisnie or maisnie, identical with It. masnada, a family or troop, Low Lat. mansnada, mansionata, a household, the contents of a mansion, Lat. mansio (see Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v. Menial). This meinie is therefore near akin to ménage, household arrangement, old Fr. mesnage, a household, for maisonage, from maison, a mansion. It is confounded with many in most dictionaries, but the meinie might be few or numerous, and there is no contradiction when Sir John Maundevile in his Travels writes of a "few many," p. 226 (ed. Halliwell).

Alle the meynes of hethene men schulen worscheipe in his 313t.—Wycliffe, Psalms, xxi. 28.

Vor þe man is oþerhuyl zuo out of his wytte, þet ha heat and smit and wyf and children and mayné.—Ayenbite of Inwytt, p. 30 (1340).

Als wa fadirs, and modirs, at þat day,
Sal yhelde acount, þat es to say,
Of sons and doghtirs þat þai forthe broght,
þe whilk þai here chasted nocht
And lovers als wa of þair meigné.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 5871.

Moyses, my Lord gyffes leyf,
Thi meneye to remeve.
Towneley Mysteries, Pharao (Marriott,
p. 104).

Me mynys my master with mowth told unto his menyee,
That he shuld thole fulle mekille payn and dy apon a tree.
Miracle Plays, Crucifixio, p. 150 (ed.
Marriott).

And so befell, a lord of his meinie, -
That loved vertuouse moralitee,
Sayd on a day betwix hem two right thus,
A lord is lost, if he be vicious.

Chaucer, Canterbury Tales, l. 7627.

His possession was . . . fyue hundred of femal assis, and ful myche meynee.—Wycliffe,
Job i. 3.

The man whiche bought the Cowe cometh home, peradventure he hath a many of children, and hath no more Cattell but this Cow, and thinketh hee shall haue some milke for his Children.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 156 verso.

And after all the raskall many ran,
Heaped together in rude rablement,
To see the face of that victorious man.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, l. xii. 9.

Yet durst he not his mother disobay,
But her attending in full seemly sort,
Did march amongst the many all the way.
Id. IV. xii. 18.

Forth he far'd with all his many bad.
Id. V. xi. 3.

They summon'd up their meiny, straight took horse.

Shakespeare, Lear, ii. 4, 35.

O thou fond many, with what loud applaans
Didst thou beat heaven.

Id. 2 Hen. IV. i. 3, 91.

See Abbott, Shakespearean Grammar, p. 63.

Menial, servile, now probably sometimes confounded with mean, O. Eng. mene, low, base, merely denotes pertaining to a household or a domestic servant, old Eng. meyneal (Wycliffe), meineal.

A retainer was a servant not menial (that is, continually dwelling in the house of his lord and master), but only wearing his livery and attending sometimes upon special occasions upon him.—Strype, Memorials, v. 5, p. 302.—[Southey, C. Place Book, vol. i. p. 495.]

Also my meyneal frendis 3eden away from me.—Wycliffe, Job vi. 13 (Clarendon Press ed.).

MARBLES, pellets of baked earth, used in a variety of schoolboy games, as if made out of marble, which, I believe, they never are.

The word is not improbably a corruption of Fr. marelles, mérelles, used also in boyish games (see Cotgrave, s.v. Merelles). So marble-thrush, a provincial word for the missel-thrush (Wright), may be for merle-thrush, Fr. merle, "a Mearle, Owsell" (Cotgrave), also a kind of thrush, Lat. merula; and in nine-penny miracle = nine men merils, me-

riis (Fr. merelle, Lincolnshire marvils, Holderness mahvil), seems to have been confounded with merveille. Contrariwise marl is found for marvel (Wright).

In Leicestershire marls is the ordinary name for these boys' playthings, and they were commonly manufactured out of marl. Mr. Evans thinks that marble may be a popular expansion of this word (Glossary, E. D. S. p. 190).

MARBLES, a slang word for furniture, moveables, personal effects, is from Fr. meubles, i. e. Lat. nobilium, moveable property.

MARCH-PANE, a biscuit composed of sugar and almonds, probably somewhat like a macaroon, also called massepain, and corruptly in mediæval Latin Martii panes (Timbs, Nooks and Corners of Eng. Life, p. 198).

Dull country madams that spend Their time in reading receipts to make March-pane and preserve plumbs.

Wits (in Nares).

It is from Fr. massepain, O. Fr. marsepain, It. marzapane, Sp. mazapan, the first part of the word being probably Lat. and Gk. maza, a cake.

There be also other like Epigrammes that were sent vsually for new yeares giftes or to be Printed or put vpon their banquetting dishes of suger plate, or of march pines.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (1589), p. 72 (ed. Arher).

Item, a well-grown lamprey for a fife;
Next some good curious march-panes made into,
The form of trumpets.

Cartwright, The Ordinary, act ii. sc. 1 (1651).

MARE, A. Sax. mere, feminine of meah, a horse, has sometimes been absurdly confused with Fr. mère, mother, as if the mare denoted originally the mother of the stud, the dam (Fr. dame), as opposed to the sire. Thus a distinguished scholar speaking of the ancient Egyptian language says, "The name of the female horse was ses-mut, the last word either expressing 'mother,' like the English 'mare,' or the plural."—Dr. S. Birch, in Wilkinson, Ancient Egyptians, vol. iii. p. 299 (ed. 1878). At this rate a filly ought to mean "daughter," Fr. fille.

MARE, or NIGHTMARE, an incubus, regarded as an evil spirit of the night that oppresses men during sleep, is A. Sax. mara, Dan. mare, Ger. mahr, Russ., Swed., Icel. and O. H. Ger. mara, all no doubt identical with Sansk. māra, mar, a killer or destroyer, a devil (M. Williams, Sansk. Dict.), from the root mar, to crush or destroy. Cf. Wendish marawa; Prov. Fr. mark, nightmare (Liège); machuria (Namur), apparently from Bret. macha, to oppress.

See Maury, La Magie et l' Astrologie, p. 253.

The word has frequently been confounded with its homonym mare (A. Sax. mere), a female horse; e.g. by Captain Burton, Etruscan Bologna, p. 225; and the incubus has actually been depicted by Fuseli, in consequence, as visiting a sleeper in the shape of a snorting horse or mare. Compare Dut. nacht-merrie, a nightmare, assimilated to merrie, a mare.

The forest-fiend hath snatched him—
He rides the night-mare thro' the wizard woods. Maturin, Bertram.

Compare "the night-mare and her nine-foals" (Fol. nine-fold).—Lear, iii. 4. In W. Cornwall nag-ridden is troubled with the night-mare (M. A. Courtney).

On Hallow-Mass Eve the Night-Hag will ride,
And all her nine-fold sweeping on by her side. Scott, Waverley, ch. xiii.

Topsell, in his account of horses, thinks it necessary to include the night-mare.

Of the night Mare.—This is a disease oppressing either man or beast in the night season when he sleepeth, so he cannot drawe his breath, and is called of the Latines Incubus. It commeth of a continuall crudity or raw digestion of the Stomach, from whence grosse vapors ascending vp into the head, do oppresse the braine, and al the sensitiue powers, so as they cannot do their office, in giuing perfect feeling and mouing to the body. . . . But I could neuer learn that Horses were subiect to this disease.—Topsell, The History of Foure-footed Beasts, p. 253.

This account is also given verbatim in T. Blundevill, The fower chiefest Offices belonging to Horsemanship.

My night fancies have long ceased to be afflictive. I confess an occasional night-mare; but I do not, as in early youth, keep a stud of them.—C. Lamb, Works (ed. Routledge), p. 393.

Jesu Crist, and Seint Benedight, Blisse this hous from every wicked wight,
Fro the nightes mare, the wite Pater-noster;
Wher wonest thou Seint Peter's suster.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 3486 (Tyrwhitt).

Nyghte mare, or mare, or wytyche, Epihaltes vel ephialtes.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Pacolet's horse is for their lords, and the night-mare or ephialtes for their viragoes.—
Gayton, Festivous Notes, p. 192.

The Latins seem to have attributed this nocturnal oppression to the Fauni, or gods of the woods and fields (cf. A.
Sax. wudu-mære, the wood-mare, a nymph). Pliny says the peony "is good against the fantastical illusions of the Fauni which appeare in sleep" (lib. 25, cap. iv.), on which Holland remarks, "I suppose he meaneth the diseases called Ephialtes or Incubus, i.e. the night Mare" (Nat. Hist. 1634,
vol. ii, p. 214).

Ephialtes in Greek, in Latine incubus . . . is called in English the mare.—Burrough's
Method of Physic, 1624.

Skelton, Philip Sparrow, speaks of Medusa as—

That mare

That lyke a feende doth stave.

[Vid. Nares.]

In some parts of Germany, the nightmare is simply called Mar or Mahrt. It is a mare or horse figure. At the same time it reminds us, by name as well as by some of its attributes, of the Vedic spirits, departed souls, or storm phantoms,—the Máruts, who assist Indra with their roaring tempest-song in the battle he has to fight,—even as the Valkyrs assist Wodan. The special connection of the North-German Mar with the Valkyrs or shield-maidens, those terrible choosers of victims that came on horseback from the Cloud-land of the Odinic creed, is provable through the name which the nightmare still bears in Oldenburg. It is there called die Wal-Riderske,—that is, the Little Battle-Rider, or Little Carrier of the Slain.
—K. Blind, in the Nineteenth Century, No.
28, p. 1109.

MARE-BLOBS, a trivial name for the cattha palustris, is said to be from A.
Sax. mere, a marsh, and blob, a bladder
(Prior).

MARIGOLD, formerly spelt Mary
Gowle, is supposed to have been a corruption of A. Sax. (mersc-) near-gealla, i.e. (marsh-) horse-gowl (Prior). But gold (Chaucer) was an old name for the plant, and it was traditionally regarded as sacred to Mary the Virgin. Compare the "winking Mary-buds" of

Cymbeline, ii. 3.

The noble Helitropian
Now turns to her, and knows no sun.
And her glorious face doth vary,
So opens loyal golden-Mary.
Lovelace, Aramantha, Poems, ed. Singer,
p. 93.

W. Forrest, writing of Queen Mary, says:

She may be called Marygolde well,
Of Marie (chiefe) Christes mother deere
That as in heaven she doth excell,
And golde on Earth to have no peere,
So certainly she shineth cleere,
In grace and honour double fold.
The like was never erst seen heere
Such as this flower the Marygolde.

In a ballad of the time of Queen
Mary, we find—

To Mary our Queen, that flower so sweet,
This marigold I do apply:
For that name doth seme so meet,
And property in each party.

[C. Hindley, Tavern Anecdotes and Sayings,
p. 239.]

This riddle, Cuddy, if thou canst, explain . . .
"What flower is that which bears the Virgin's name,

The richest metal added to the same?"

Gay, Pastorals.

Marigolds, it is said, are particularly introduced in Lady chapels as appropriate ornaments.

MARLING, a cord for binding round ropes, so spelt as if a substantive in -ing (A. Sax. -ung), like plunking, rigging, shipping, is a corrupt form of marline, a "bind-line," Dut. marlijn, from marren, to bind, tie, or moor, and lijn, a line. Other corruptions are Dutch marling, and marl-reep for marreep [resulting from a false analysis, marl-ing instead of mar-ling] (Skeat,
Etym. Dict. s.v.).

Some the galled ropes with dauby marling
bind.

Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, 148.

MARMOSSET, a small American monkey, is Fr. marmouset, old Fr. mar-moset, meaning (1), something made of marble (Lat. marmor), marmoretum;
(2), esp. the spout of a fountain, a grotesque figure through which the water flows; (3), any antic or puppet (cf.
grotesque, originally pertaining to a grotto); and (4), an ape or monkey.
This last meaning of the word was evidently determined through a confusion with the somewhat similar, but quite unrelated word, Fr. marmot, marmotte, It. marmotta, a little monkey or marmoset (Skeat, Etyim. Dict. s.v.).

She had a grete mouth with longe teeth. . . . I wende hit had be a mermoise or baubyn or a mercatte.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox (1481), p. 98 (ed. Arber).

He wente forth into that fowle stynkyng hool, and fonde the marmosette.—Id. p. 100.

Arte is . . . onely a bare immitatour of natures works, following and counterfeiting her actions and effects, as the Marmoset doth many countenances and gestures of man.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 310 (ed. Arber).

MARMOT, a mountain rat, It. marmotto, O. Fr. marmotan, owes its present form, no doubt, to some confusion with Fr. marmot, It. marmotta, a little monkey (apparently for mermot, from old Fr. merme, little.—Skeat). The typical form is the Grisons marmont, from Lat. mar(-em) mont(anum), "mountain-mouse." Compare old Fr. marmountain, O. H. Ger. muremunto.

MARQUISATE, a corrupt form of the name of the mineral called marcasite, Ger. markasit, as if connected with marquis; from Arab. marqachitha.

The mountains are not without Marquisate and Minerals, which but by search are not to be discerned.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 16.

MARRY, COME UP! This ejaculation is said to be a perversion of the phrase, marry, go up; marry quep in Hudibras, i. 3, 202; marry gip, Bartholomew Fair, act i.; the forms marry quep, marry gep, and marry gip being also found. These latter, as Dyce has pointed out, are shortened forms of Mary Gipsy! adjoined by Skelton in his Garlande of Laurell, 1455, i.e. S. Marie Egypcien, St. Mary the Egyptian, frequently alluded to by old writers. See Prof. Skeat, Notes to Vision of Piers Plowman, p. 353.

Gard. Marry gip, minx!

Phil. A fine word in a gentleman's mouth! T'were good your back were towards me; there can I, Read better content than in the face of lust.

J. Heywood, The Fair Maid of the Exchange, p. 45 (Shaks. Soc.).

MARQUETRIE, chequered inlaid work in furniture, from Fr. marqueter, to stipple, or put in the lights and shades of a picture, to spot, as if connected with marquer, to mark, is, according to Diez, really near akin to It. macchiare, to spot, Sp. macar, It. macchia, a spot or stain, from Lat. macula.

MARSHALL is sometimes used as if identical with martial, as in this line from Peele's Farewell, 1589.

The times of truce settle down by marshall lawe.

A commission given by Charles I. to Thomas, Earl of Arundel, in 1640, to be captain-general, empowers him "to use against the said enemies, traitors, and rebels, . . . the Law called Marshal-Law, according to the Law-Marshall."—Rymer. On the other hand, martial (like Mar(t)s, the war-god) is sometimes written incorrectly for marshal (originally meaning a "horse-servant," O. H. Ger. maraschalh, then a master of the horse).

They when they ride in progresse send their Harbingers before to take up lodgings, and Martials to make way.—Daniel Featley, Clavis Mystica, p. 31 (1636), fol.

MARTEN, a sort of weasel, O. Fr. martin, so spelt perhaps from a confusion with the personal name Martin (which was once in French a familiar name for the ass, as it is still in English for a species of swallow). It is a contracted form of old Eng. marter-n (the excrescent n having swallowed up the organic r, as in gambol for gambold, i.e. gambaud, the l has driven out the d), from old Eng. and old Fr. martre, Low Lat. marturis (see Skeat, s.v.).

MARY-BONES, the large bones of the legs, the knees, spelt maribones in Dryden's Sir Martin Mar-all, act ii. sc. 2, is not, as it has been sometimes understood, the bones on which our forefathers went down to pray to Mary, the Blessed Virgin, but another form of marrow-bones, mary being an old Eng. word for marrow. "Mary, or marow of a boön (marwhe,) Medulla."—Prompt. Parv., 1440. So marrow, a mate or fellow, O. Eng. marwe, is probably from Fr. mari, a husband.

Arrived, by pure necessity compelled,
On her majestic mary-bones she kneeled.
Dryden, Wife of Bath her Tale, l. 191.

A coke they hadden with hem for the nones,
To boile the chikenes and the marie bones.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 382.

To which I resemble poore scullians, that, from turning spit in the chimney corner, are on the sodayne hoysed vp from the kitchen into the wayting chamber, or made barons of the beaues and marquesses of the mary-boanes.—T. Nash, Pierce Penilesse (1592), p. 21.

Tendre hrowyce made with a mary-boon,
For fieble stomakes is holsum in potage.

Lydgate, Order of Fooles.

Mary is the old Eng. form of marrow, otherwise marwehe, A. Sax. nearh (Icel. mergr), a word which was perhaps sometimes confounded with the old Eng. meruwe, tender (A. Sax. nearu, O. H. Ger. maro).

Out of the harde bones knocken they
The mary, for they casten nought away.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 12476.

The force whereof pearceth the sucke and marie within my bones.—Palace of Pleasure, ii. S 5 b.

MART, LETTERS OF, as if Letters of War (Mart, from Mars, being an old poetical word for war), permission to make reprisals in time of war (Beaumont and Fletcher), is a corruption of letters of marque, found in the Elizabethan writers. The law of marque, Fr. droit de marque, L. Lat. jus marchium, was the right to cross the borders or marches (marchas) and plunder the enemy's country.

MARTIR, the name given to a beast killed at Martinmas as provision for the winter, in the old romance of Sir Tristrem (about 1220)—

Bestes thai brac and bare;
In quarters thai hem wrought;
Martins as it ware,
That husband men had bought.
Fytte First, xlii. (p. 32, ed. Scott).

Such a beast is still called in Scotland a mart; and it is this word which is here corrupted, perhaps under the influence of Scotch martyr, to hew down, to butcher. It is curious to find marti in modern Greek as a word for a fatted sheep, so called from the festival of San Martino.—Lord Strangford, Letters and Papers, p. 112; Irish mart, a beef, a cow.

What a prime Mart, James!
Wilson, Noctes Ambrosianæ, vol. i. p. 133.

MASH, to "make" tea, to infuse or set it to draw (Leicestershire)—

You put the tea in the oven to mask before you went to chapel.—Round Preacher

(Evans, Lincolnshire Glossary, p. 191, E. D. S.)— is a survival of the old Eng. masche, to mix, "Maschyn, yn brewynge, misceo," akin to Lat. miscere, and mix. Hence also masking-pot (Burns), a tea-pot. See Skeat, s.v. Mash.

MATHOOK, a corrupt form of mattock (A. Sax. matucc, Welsh matog), quoted in Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, from North's Evamen.

Libels served as spades and mathooks to work with.—P. 592.

MATRASS, a chemical vessel, Fr. matras, old Fr. matelas, a kind of violl or bottle (Cotgrave), seems to be a derivative of Lat. matula, a pot or vessel. Haldeman thinks it was a vessel shaped like a Gallic javelin, matara; Devic would connect it with Arab. maṭara, a leathern vessel, which seems less probable.

MATTRESS, a technical term in the manufacture of playing cards, applied to those which are rejected for some defect, afterwards to be made up and sold at a cheaper rate, is an Anglicized form of Fr. mattresse, which is similarly used. Compare "Trialle. On nomme ainsi les cartes les plus imparfaites, mais qui néanmoins peuvent entrer dans les jeux : quelques-uns leur donnent le nom de Mattresses."—Du Monceau, Art du Cartier, 1762.—Trans. Philolog. Soc., 1867, p. 56.

MATTRESS, sometimes incorrectly regarded as an expanded form of mat, A. Sax. meatta (Lat. matta), is the same word as old Fr. materas, derived from Arab. matrah, something thrown down (to lie upon), a bed.

The word for "bed" or "couch" is not that which denotes the Oriental mat, or mattress, on which the Jews stretched themselves for repose, . . . but the Roman triclinium, the divan, or raised couch.—S. Cox, The Expositor, 2nd Ser. No. 3, p. 184.

The two words coincide very closely in meaning, as is seen in the following quotations.

Monie oðre swuche weopmen & wunnen mid hore greate maten & hore herde heren, neren heo of gode ordre? [Many other such men and women with their coarse mattresses and their hard hair-cloths, were not they of good order?]
—Ancren Riwele (1225), p. 10.

I'll have no mats but such as lie under the feather-bed.—Centlivre, Beau's Duel, iv. 1 [Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary].

MAUD, a Scotch word for a plaid worn by shepherds, also written maad, which Jamieson connects with old Swed. mudd, a garment made of skins.

A shepherd's maud wrapped round his person.—Mrs. Trollope, Michael Armstrong, ch. xxviii. [Davies].

MAUL-STICK, a corruption of Ger. maler-stock, i.e. "painter's-stick," from maler, a painter, malen, to paint, from Ger. mahl (old Eng. maal, a spot or stain, A. Sax. mál, a mole or mark, "iron-moul-d"), akin to Lat. macula, a spot.

MAW-SEED, Ger. magsamen, poppy-seed, not from magen [A. Sax. maga], the mar, but Pol. mak, Gk. mékôn, the poppy (Prior).

MAYDUKE CHERRIES, originally Medoc cherries, named after the district in the Gironde, S. France, from which they were introduced. Medoc is from Lat. in mediis aquis, between the two rivers, like Mesopotamia.

MAY-WEED, a popular name for the wild chamomile or pyrethrum parthenium, is so called, not from the month it flowers in, but from the O. Eng. may, a maiden, it being esteemed useful for hysterics and other feminine complaints. Other names for it are "Mayde wede, or maythys (mayde-wode, maydenwede), Melissa, amarusca" (Prompt. Parv.), maghet, A. Sax. mageðe; all from mægð, a maid. Cf. its Greek name parthenion, virginwort. "Weed" represents the termination of A. Sax. mageðe, oxeye, mayweed, wild chamomile (Bosworth).

MAZZARDS, a popular name for the wild cherry, is said to be from Low Lat. manzar, bastard, spurious (Prior), a word of Hebrew origin.

MEADOW-SWEET is, according to Dr. Prior, a corruption of its older name, mead-sweet, mead-wort [? mead's-wort], A. Sax. mede-wyrt (cf. Dan. mïd-wrt, Swed. mïd-ört), its flowers being used to flavour mead. Another corruption is Maid-sweet (Old Country and Farming Words, E. D. S. p. 32).

The metall first he mixt with Medawart,
That no enchauntment from his dint might ave.

Spenser, F. Queene, II. viii. 20.

MEDDLE, literally to mix oneself up with the affairs of others (Fr. medler, orig. mesler, through Low Lat. misculare, from Lat. misceo), seems to owe something of its form and meaning to the old Eng. verb middel, to intervene, as if to come between where one is not wanted. Cf. Icel. meðal, among.

Forsoth the now the feeste day medlinge
Ihesu wente vp in to the temple.—Wycliffe,
John vii. 14 (1389).

Thei weren medlid [= mixed] among bethene men, and lerneden the werkis of hem.—Id. Psalms, cv. 35.

Why shouldest thou meddle to thy hurt.—
A. V. 2 Kings xiv. 10.

MEDLAR, derived from Fr. meslier (Lat. mespilus), on the model of the verb to meddle, from Fr. mesler (Prior). Prof. Skeat observes that medlar is properly the tree that bears medles, which is the old name of the fruit.

MEEDWIF, quoted by Jamieson as an old Scotch form of midwife, as if the wife or woman who attends for a meed or reward (A. Sax. méd), a derivation approved by Archbishop Trench, after Skinner, Junius, and Verstegan. Indeed, Wycliffe has meed-wiff and mede-wiff, as well as myd-wiff. Midwife, however, is the correct form, being compounded with old Eng. mid, myd, Ger. mit, Dan. med, with (cf. Greek mēta), i.e. the wife who is with, or by, another to help in need (so Strattmann); Ger. bei-frau, Sp. comadre. The word accordingly corresponds, not to A. Sax. méd-wyrhta, "meed-wright," a hired servant, but to mid-wyrhta, "with-wright," a coadjutor or assistant. Similarly Lat. ob-stetrix, a midwife, is one who stands by to help (cf. ad-sisto); Icel. nær-kona, i.e. "near-wife" (cf. næra, to nurse, lit. to draw near (nær), Ger. nähren, A. Sax. generan, and also nésan, nébs-ian, to visit); Icel. náveru-kona (presence woman), yfirstetu-kona (over-sitting woman).

And teche the mydewyf neuer the latere,
That heo haue redy clene watere,
Thenne bydde hyre spare for no schame,
To folowe [= baptize] the chylde there at hame.

J. Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests, l. 90
(E. E. T. S.).

Another old corruption is maid-wife.

I war maist ingrat if I sould forget my guid, godlie, and maist courteus Lady, my Lady Wedrington, wha wated on mair cairfullie then the maidwyff, and receavit him from the wombe in hir awin skirt, and finding him nocht livlie, maid hast to the fyre, and thrusting in her curshar, brunt it, and helde to his naistrilles, wherhy he quined and kythed signes of lyff.—J. Melville, Diary, 1584, p. 221 (Wodrow Soc.).

MEERSCHAUM, a fine sort of clay out of which pipes are manufactured, a German word apparently meaning "sea foam," meer schaum, seems originally to have been a corruption of the Tartaric name myrsen. (Mahn in Webster.)

MELICOTTON, an old name for a fruit generally considered to be a peach (Bailey, Nares, &c.), with an imagined allusion to the downy or cottony softness of that fruit, as in the quotation from Jonson. It is really, however, the quince, It. mele cotogna, Lat. malum cotoneum or cydonium, Greek mélon kudónion (Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1264), that is the "Cydonian apple," originally brought from Cydonia in Crete. Quince, old Fr. coingz, coignasse, is of the same origin.

Alas, you have the garden where they grow still! A wife here with a strawberry breath, cherry-lips, apricot cheeks, and a soft velvet head, like a melicotton.—B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, i. 1, Works, p. 307.

Peaches, apricots,
And Mulecotoons, with other choicer plums,
Will serve for large-sized bullets; then a dish,

Or two of pease for small ones.
Cartwright, The Ordinary, ii. 1 (1651).

MENAGE, an old form of manage, to control a horse by the hand, to handle, Fr. manege, It. maneggio, a handling, from mano, Lat. manus, the hand; so spelt as if derived from Fr. mener, It. menare, to lead or conduct, from Low Lat. minare, to drive cattle. On the other hand, menagerie is not, as one might imagine, the place where wild beasts are managed or controlled (cf. managery = management, Bp. Sander-son, Sermons, ii. 214, fol.), but originally the place where the animals of a household, Fr. ménage, were kept (Skeat).

A goodly person, and could menage faire,
His stubborne steed with curbed canoe bitt,
Who under him did trample as the aire.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, I. vii. 37.

Next after her, the winged God him selfe,
Came riding on a Lion ravenous,
Taught to obay the menage of that Elfe.

Id. III. xii. 22.

The hot horse, hot as fire,
Took toy at this, and fell to what disorder,
His power could give his will, hounds, comes on end,
Forgets schoole-dooing, being therein traird,
And of kind mannadge.

Shakespeare, The Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 4, 69 (1634).

MERECAT, an old name for a monkey, Ger. meerkatze, as if a long-tailed animal like a cat (katze), from beyond sea, mere (Ger. meer). It is really, says K. G. Andresen, a borrowed word from Sanskrit markata, an ape (Deutsche Volksetymologie, p. 6, 1876). Cf. O. E. mere-swyne, a dolphin, Ger. meer-schwein.

Ther laye in a grete ape with tweyne grete wyde Eyen . . . I wende hit had be a mermoyse, a baubyn, or a mercatte, for I sawe neuer fowler beest.—Caaton, Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 98 (ed. Arber).

There is an opinion that this kind of Ape [the monkey] is generated of a wilde-cat very like an Ape . . . it is called of the Italians Gatto maimone . . . of the Germans Meerkatz, that is the cat of the sea.—Topsell, Hist. of Four-Footed Beasts, p. 6.

MERE-GRÓT, A. Saxon word for a pearl, as if a sea-particle; mere being the sea, and grót, greót, an atom or grain of sand, similar to the Sanskrit rasopala, "water-stone," a name for the pearl. It is a corruption from Lat. margarita (Goth. markreitus) Gk. margaritēs. Compare Sansk. marakata, smaragdus.

Margarita, meregrota.—Wright's Vocabularies (11th cent.), p. 85.

A similar perversion is found in the old High German merigrietz, markreutz, Mid. High Ger. mergrietz, "sea-gravel," all through Gothic markreitus, from margarita (Grimm, Andersen). See also Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 54.

The Greeks haue no such tearms for them [pearls], neither know how to cal them: nor yet the Barbarians, who found them first out, otherwise than Margaritæ.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist., vol. i. p. 255.

For the sowle is the precious margarite vnto God.—The Book of the Knight of La Tour Landry, p. 157 (E. E. T. S.).

Without it [the Temple] was of smooth polisht white Marble stone, excellently beautifull and faire to the eye, much resembling the colour of anie Pearle, Vnit, or Margaret. —Itinerarium or Trauels of the Holy Patriarchs, &c., 1619, p. 12.

MERRY-MAID, a corruption of mermaid in use among the peasantry of Cornwall (Hunt, Drolls, &c., of West of England, i. 157). Mer-maid itself does not properly denote a maid of the sea, Fr. mer, but a maid of the mere or lake, A. Sax. mere, being an altered form of old Eng. mere-maiden (Skeat). Another corruption is presented in the following advertisement of a Bartholomew Play (c. 1700):—

There in the Tempest is Neptune, with his Triton in his Chariot drawn with sea-horses and Mair Maids singing.

MERRY-TREE, a provincial name for the wild cherry-tree, and merry, a wild cherry, from Fr. merise (Lat. mericea, merica), which was mistaken for a plural; so cherry from Fr. cerise, and old Eng. puny, vermin, from Fr. punaïse (Cotgrave, s.v.).

MESLINS, a Lincolnshire word for the measles (Peacock), as if connected with meslin, otherwise spelt myslen (Tusser), messling (Cotgrave), mislin (Leland), miscellan (Plot), from Lat. miscellanea, mixed corn, and intended to denote the corny or granulated appearance and feel of the body when affected with the disease. The word is really identical with Dutch maeselen, maeselen, measles, orig. spots. Thus Cotgrave gives "grain (bernage), meselin or Wheat, Rie, and Barly mingled together," and "grains de ladrige, spots of leprosie, mezild spots." It is interesting to note that this grain-like condition of the skin in measles has given names to the disease in various languages derived from seeds, peas, beans, lentils, or other pulse. The perception to the touch as of peas or shot beneath the skin is now, I believe, regarded by doctors as a diagnostic symptom of small-pox, differentiating it from measles. Dr. Mavor notes on Tusser's use of the word measling, that "measles in hogs are small round globules or pustules that lie along the muscles."—Tusser, Works, E. Dialect

Soc. ed. p. 250. We should remember, however, that in primitive time all zymotic diseases were roughly grouped under one or two general terms, which afterwards became narrowed and individualized in meaning. A curious similarity of origin is presented in the words following:—

1. Sansk. māsha, masura, denoting a bean or lentil (Hind. masūr), is also used for a cutaneous eruption, pimples or pustules, especially small-pox, whence old Ger. meisa, small-pox, misal, leprosy, Ger. maseren, measles, Dut. maeselen, mazelen, Eng. "measles." (Cf. old Ger. masar, másá, Ger. maser, a spot or mark in wood.)—Pictet, Origines Indo-Européenes, tom. i. p. 285.

2. In Hindustani matar is a pea, and mátá the small-pox.

3. In Arabic ádas signifies beans, and also pustules in the skin.

4. In Persian, pés, píst, leprosy, Kourd. pis, Armenian pisag, bisag, small-pox, are near akin to Sansk. péçi, a pea, Gk. pison, Lat. pisum, Ir. pis, Welsh pys, Eng. "pea."—Pictet, tom. i. p. 288.

In Bishop Corbet's Elegis upon the Death of the Lady Haddington who dyed of the Small Pox (1648), he uses this apostrophe:—

Oh thou deform'd unwoeman-like disease,
That plowst up flesh and blood, and there sow'st pease.

It is a curious survival, apparently of the doctrine of signatures, that in some parts of Germany it is recommended that children in the measles should be washed with water in which peas have been boiled (Kelly, Indo-Europ. Tradition, p. 300).

5. Pers. čidak, small-pox, čacak, a red spot, is most probably the same word as sisak, siskak, pulse, in the same language, and a reduplicated form of Sansk. čáka, pulse.

6. Similarly, in Illyrian scesce is the small-pox, while socivitsa, Russ. socivitsa, are names for the lentil.—Pictet, tom. i. p. 291.

7. Hives, a slight rising in the skin attended with great itching, is from Sp. kava, a bean, in which language "hávas are also great pimples caus'd by too much Blood, or Heat of Blood."—

Stevens, Spanish Dict., 1706. This word is derived from the Lat. faba, a bean.

So It. fave, "all manner of beanes, Also kernells or agnels that come between the flesh and the skin."—Florio.

8. In Latin lentigo, from lens, a lentil, is an eruption of the skin, or freckles; and lenticula has the same meaning. From the latter comes Fr. lentilles, "round specks, red pimples, wan, small, and lentil-resembling freckles, on the face or hands."—Cotgrave.

9. A miliary eruption, or fever, is one characterized by a number of small red pimples, like millet-seeds, Lat. miliarius, pertaining to millet, milium. The German name is hirsefieber from hirse, millet. Similarly

10. Lat. panus, an ear of millet, is also a swelling or tumour. Senepion, the Provençal word for measles, is from Lat. sinapi, mustard-seed.

11. In Latin cicer, a chick-pea, would seem also to have been used for a wart or excrescence, as Plutarch says that "Cicero had a thing upon the tip of his nose, as it had bene a little wart, much like to a cich pease, whereupon they surnamed him Cicero" (North's Trans. p. 859, ed. 1612).

Cicero, that wrote in prose
So called from rouncival on's nose.
Musarum Delicia, 1656.

Diez thinks that the Mid. Lat. cecinius, a swan, got its name from cicer, with reference to the excrescences on its bill. Chicken-pock may perhaps be connected with chick, chickling, Fr. chiche, rather than with "chicken."

12. Sansk. kumbhika, having a swelling on the eyelid like the seed or grain of the plant kumbhika or Pistia Stratiolles. Similarly

13. Lat. hordeolus, a grain of barley, is used for a sty on the eye. A modern form of this is Fr. orgeol, "a long wart resembling a barley corn, and growing on the edge or corner of an eye-lid."—Cotgrave. Compare Ger. gerstenkorn, a barley-corn, also a sty; O. Eng. neb-corn (face-grains) = pimples (Cockayne, Leechdoms, &c., i. 118).

14. Glanders, O. Fr. glandre, is a disease in horses resembling glandules (Lat. glandula, glan(d)s), i.e. acorns. It. ghiañdole, "agnels, wartles, or kernels in the throat. Also the glanders in a horse. Also the meazels in a hog." "Ghiandoso, full of Acornes. Also glandulous or full of wartles. Also full of the glanders as a horse, or of the meazels as a hog."—Florio.

15. Sivvens, a Scotch name for a certain disease with spots resembling raspberries, also the itch, is from sivven, a raspberry. So Frambesia is the technical name for a disease, in the West Indies called Yaws, in which the eruption is like a raspberry, Fr. framboise. In Cumberland excrescences on the under parts of cattle, resembling raspberries or hineberries, are termed jam-berries (Dickinson). And, finally, a tumour on the legs of horses is called a grape.

Prof. Skeat maintains that measles (old Eng. maysilles, maisils, maseles) is a totally distinct word from mesel, a leper (meselled, leprous), which is from Lat. misellus (i.e. miserulus, from miser), a wretched being.

Ye, sir, sich powder apon us dryfys,
Where it abides it makes a blyayn,
Meselle makes it man and wyfe.

Miracle-Plays, Pharao, p. 104 (ed. Marriott).

Bot ye Ebrewes, won in Jessen,
Shalle not be markyd with that measse.
Id. p. 98.

And som, for þe syn of lechery,
Sal haf als þe yvel of meselery.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 3001.

She had enuye and despite of her brother of the whiche she had displesaunce to God, and he made her become meselle, so that she was putte away, and departed from alle the pepille.—The Book of the Knight of La Tour Landry, p. 90.

And take ye kepe now, that he that repreveþ his neighbour, either he repreveþ him by som harme of peine, that he hath upon his bodie, as Mesel, coked harlot; or by som sinne that he doth. Now if he repreve him by harme of peine, than turneth the repreve to Jesu Christ, for peine is sent by the right-wise sonde of God, and by his suffrance, be it meselrie, or maim, or maladie.—Chaucer, Canterbury Tales, p. 160 (ed. Tyrwhitt).

MICA, glittering particles of a silvery mineral found in granite and other stones, is no doubt only the Latin word mīca, a crumb or particle, but applied to the mineral from a notion that it was related to Lat. micare, to shine or glitter (Skeat, Etym. Dict.).

MIDDING, } a provincial and espe-MIDDEN, } cially a North country word for a dunghill, old Eng. myddyng and myddyl (Prompt. Parv., c. 1440), "so termed possibly," says that usually most accurate antiquarian, Mr. A. Way,
"from its position in the fold-yard."

It is the A. Saxon midding, Dan.
mødding, which is for møgdynge, from møg, dung (compare Eng. "muck," O. Norse myki, A. Sax. mir, meow, dung), and dynge, a heap, Icel. myki-dynja.

A fouler myddyng saw þou never nane,
þan a man es, with flesche and hane.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 629.

MIDDLING, a corrupt spelling of midden, A. Sax. midten. So we find in old authors such spellings as wooling
(Pepys) for woolen, kitching for kitchen,
"No kitching fire, nor eating flame."
—Sir John Suckling, Fragmenta Aurea
(1648), p. 12.

MIDDLE-EARTH, old Eng. middle-erd, an old word for the world, A. Sax. mid-dan-eard, is a corruption of middangeard (Ettmüller, p. 214), the original form, i.e. "The middle region," the earth as distinguished from heaven above and hell beneath, from geard, a region, enclosure, or "yard;" cf. Mid.
H. Ger. mittil-gart. But the form in the A. Saxon gospels is middan-eard.
As it vel of him sulue, þo he deide on þe rode, þat þoru al þe middelerd derk hede þer was inon.

Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle, p. 560
(ed. 1810).

Ic eom middan-eardes lecht, ða hwile ðe ic on middan-earde eom.—S. John, ix. 5.

Emperours and kynges they knele to my kne,
Every man is a ferde whan I do on hym stare

For all mery medell erthe maketh mencyon of me.

The Worlde and the Chylde (1522), O.
Plays, xii. 315.

Take thy leave of sun and moon,
And also of grass and every tree,
This twelvemonth shalt thou with me gone,
And middle earth thou shalt not see.

Thomas of Ercildoune (Robert's Ballads,
p. 360).

MILDEW. The etymological diversities of this word are remarkable.

The A. Sax. form mele-deaw suggested melu, meal, as its origin, in allusion to its powdery appearance, and so Ger.

mehlthau, "meal-dew." But Mid.
High Ger. miltou, O. H. Ger. militou, Mid. Lat. mel rovis, as if honey-dew, presuppose a connexion with Lat. mel,
Goth. miliths, honey.

The Gaelic mill-cheo, which was probably borrowed from the English word, seems to mean a "destructive mist," a blight, from mill, to injure, and ceo, a mist.

The original of all these words may no doubt be recognized in the Greek miltos, which signifies a mist or mildew on corn (? of a reddish nature), as well as red-earth, ruddle. Compare Lat.
rubigo, (1) redness, (2) mildew; Ir.
derge, (1) redness, (2) rust (W. Stokes);
Eng. rust, connected with Lat. russus,
russet, red. Other forms are M. H.
Ger. milchtou, Prov. Ger. milb-thau
(? mothdew), and meldreck. Compare
A. Sax. mil-deaw, honey dew (Ett-müller), also mele-deaw, Dutch meel-dauw, Dan. meeldug. That the first part was properly understood as honey, is proved by the Dutch honig-dauw,
Dan. honning-dug, Swed. hånings-dagg,
which are other terms for mildew (Aufrecht, Philolog. Soc. Trans., 1865,
p. 5).

Ihesu swete ihesu . . . mi huuiter, mi hali-wei.

Swetter is munegunge of þe þen mildeu o muþe.

Old Eng. Homilies, 1st Ser. p. 269.

[Jesu, sweet Jesu . . . my honeydrop, my balm. Sweeter is the remembrance of thee than honey in the mouth.]

Myldew, Uredo.—Prompt. Parvulorum, 1440.

Some will have it called Mildew, quasi Mal-dew, or Ill-dew, others Meldew or Honey-dew, as being very sweet (oh, how lushious and noxious is Flattery!) with the astringency thereof causing an atrophy or Consumption in the Grain. His etymology was peculiar to himself who would have it termed Mildew, because it grindeth the Grain beforehand, making it to dwindle away almost to nothing.
—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p.
47.

The Honny of Bees is longer kept pure and fine, than any Manna or Meldew, or rather it is not at all subject to corruption.—Topsell,
Historie of Serpents, p. 65.

O lips, no lips, but leaves hesmear'd with mel-dew!

O dew, no dew, but drops of honey-combs!

O combs, no combs, but fountains full of tears! Abumazar, act ii. sc. 1.

MILK, in Shakespeare's "milk of human kindness" (Macbeth, i. 5), may possibly be a reminiscence of the old Eng. word milce, mercy, confused with mylche, milk (cf. A. Sax. milc, meole, milk).

In cristes milce ure hope is best.
Old English Miscellany (E. E. T. S. ed.
 Morris), p. 25, l. 802.

Mylce þer nas myd hym non.
Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 389
 (ed. 1810).

So a writer in Parker's excellent Tracts for the Christian Seasons, says, "We wish that more of the milk of charity ran in their veins, and gave sweetness and softness to their speech."—vol. iii. p. 9.

There seems a general relationship to exist between the words following, A. Sax. milts, mercy, miltsian, to pity; milsc, milisc, mild; mil, mile, honey (Lat. mel, malsum); malso, tender (Ettmüller, Goth. -malseks; milcjan, to milk (mulgere); O. Eng. "mylche, or mylke, of a cow, lac" (Prompt. Parv.), "mylche, or mylte (or spleen), splen."—Id. (i.e. the soft and milk-like, milt); Prov. Eng. melch, soft, warm, and damp (of the weather, Lincolns. and Yorks.). "Milche-hearted" occurs in Huloet's Abecedarium, 1552 (= tender-hearted). The instant burst of clamour that she made . . . Would have made milch the burning eyes of heaven. Hamlet, ii. 2, l. 539.

MILKSOP, a term of contempt for an effeminate man, as if one as soft and mild as a sop of bread soaked in milk, is a corrupted form of the old English melk slope, meaning a bag for (straining) milk, which occurs in Robert Manning's Handlyng Synne, p. 18 (1303).

Alas, she saith, that ever I was yshape
 To wed a milksop, or a coward ape.
Chaucer, Canterbury Tales, l. 13916.

MILL, a slang term for a fight, is not (as Max Müller considers) traceable to the idea of bruising and pounding as in a corn-mill, but is a corrupt form of the Scot. mell, a conflict (Barbour's Bruce), to mell, to intermingle, join in battle, Lowland Scot. mellé, or mellay, a fight, battle, or mélée, O. Fr. meslee, all from a Latin verb misculare (from miscere), to intermingle.—Skeat, in N. and Q., 5th S. vi. 186.

MILLER, a common popular name for the white moth which flies in the twilight, also the dusty miller, or millard (Wilts., Akerman), sometimes called the mealer, as in East Anglia, as if the moth that covers what it touches with meal. Compare Grison fafarinna, Sard. faghe-farina, a butterfly, as if Lat. fae farinam, "make meal" (but really, no doubt, = It. farfaglione, farfalla, = Lat. papilio(n)).

These words are probably extensions and corruptions of the Danish møl, a moth; mølle and møller being the words in that language for mill and miller respectively. Møl (Goth. malo, a moth), would denote etymologically "that which frets or consumes" (garments), from the root mar, to rub, grind, or destroy. The name miller was considered appropriate on account of the mealy dust that the insect leaves behind when handled. Hence the nursery interrogation:—

Millery, millery, dustipoll,
 How many sacks have you stole?
Halliwel, Nursery Rhymes.

Similarly a large caterpillar is addressed by Worcestershire children, as millad, a miller.

A millad, a mollad,
 A ten o'clock schollad.

Wright, Prov. Dict.

However, in the Wallon patois a beetle with whitish wings is termed un meunier, a miller (Sigart).

MILLINER, formerly millener, so spelt from a general misapprehension that it was derived from millenarius, as if it denoted a dealer in the thousand (mille) little articles which go to make up the world (mundus) of woman.

Mille habet ornatus, mille decenter habet.
Propertius.

Haberdasher—in London also called Millenier a Lat. mille, i.e. as one having a thousand small wares to sell.—Minsheu, Dictionary, 1627.

A millener, a Jack-of-all-trades, Propola, institor; q.d. millenarius or mille mercum venditor, pantopola.—Littleton, Eng. Lat. Dictionary, 1677.

Millener (of mille, L. a thousand), a Seller of Ribbons, Gloves, &c.—Bailey.

The word is really a corrupted form of Milaner, one who dealt in gloves, laces, and other articles of finery for which Milan was famous. In the Second Dialogue appended to Stevens,

Spanish Dictionary, 1706, occurs the following:—

Margaret. Now let us go to the Milleners . . . Show me some Womens Heads, White Crape, Laces, &c. . . . All this is course, I would see finer.

To this "Master Milliner" responds:—

Then in this Box you will see the Rarity of the World, it is all Milanese Work.

This passage of Stevens is borrowed from The Pleasant and Delightfull Dialogues in Spanish and English, by John Minshew, 1623 (p. 13), wherein Margaret and Thomas enter a shop and ask for—

Wires of silver, bone worke or bone lace, stitched worke, head attire of all sorts, . . . fine holland, cambricke, and other sorts of linnen.

To whom the Merchant,

In this chbest shall your worship see the principallest that is, all is worke of Milan.

Thomas. Warke of Milan, see me but touch me not. [Because they are toies, if you touch them they breake in peeces.]

Beaumont and Fletcher use the expression Milan skins, apparently for fine gloves (Nares), and the best bells for hawks were called Milans, because imported from Milan (I. Taylor, Words and Places, p. 424).

For its silk hose and bonnets in particular Milan was celebrated. In the Inventory of Henry VIII.'s wardrobe mention is made of "a pair of hose of purple silk and Venice gold . . . wrought at Milan, and one pair of hose of white silk and gold knits, bought of Christopher Millener" [i.e. the Millaner]. Hall, the chronicler, speaks of some who wore "Myllain bonnets of crymosyne sattin drawn through with cloth of gold," and in the roll of provisions for the marriage of the daughters of Sir John Nevil (temp. Henry VIII.) the price of "a Millan bonnet dressed with agletts" is marked at 11s. See Knight's Pictorial Shakspeare, Comedies, vol. i. pp. 16, 17. Millan or Millain was the old spelling of Milan.

He sayes, Collen brand Ile haue in my hand & a Millaine knife fast by me knee.

Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 68.

The Milaners (or natives of Milan) of London constituted a special class of retail dealers. They sold not only French and Flemish clotus, but Spanish gloves and girdles, Milan caps, swords, daggers, knives, and cutlery, needles, pins, porcelain, glass, and various articles of foreign manufacture. All that remains of this once important class of tradesmen is but their name of "milliner," which is still applied to dealers in ladies' caps and bonnets.—Quarterly Review, No. 239, p. 69.

How many goodly cities could I reckon up, that thrive wholly by trade, where thousands of inhabitants live singular well by their finger ends, as Florence in Italy by making cloth of gold; great Millan by silk, and all curious works; Arras in Artois by those fair hangings,—Burton, The Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 53 (16th ed.).

MILLION, an old corruption of melon, still common in America (Bartlett).

Musk million, in April and May.—Tusser, 1580, E. D. Soc. p. 94.

Melon, a Melon, or Million.—Cotgrave.

Sylvester notes that the seas have—
As well as Earth, Vines, Roses, Nettles, Millions, Pinks, Gilliflowrs, Mushrooms, and many millions
Of other plants.

Du Bartas, p. 92 (1621).

Taylor the Water Poet (1630) speaks of musk-millions. "Chamæleon" is similarly disguised when Idlenis in the old interlude of The Marriage of Wit and Wisdom, says—

I cane turne into all
Coullers like the commillion.

P. 58 (Shaks. Soc. ed.).

MILL-MOUNTAIN, a trivial name for the plant linum catharticum, is, according to Dr. Prior, arbitrarily constructed out of the Lat. cha-mel-inum montanum, Gk. chamai-linon, ground flax. This seems unlikely.

MILT, the soft roe of fishes, so spelt as if identical with milt, the spleen of animals, A. Sax. milte, Dan. milt, Ger. milz. It is really a corruption of milk, so called from its resemblance to curd or thick milk, as we see by comparing Dan. fiske-melk, "fish-milk," milt; Swed. mjölke, from mjolk, milk; Ger. milch, milk, milt (see Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.).

Myltche, or mylke of a cow, lac.

Myltche, or mylte (or spleen), splen.

Prompt. Parvulorum (1440).

MINIATURE, Ger. miniatur, It. miniatura, now generally understood to mean a painting or portrait on a smaller scale than the ordinary, a picture in little, as if from Lat. minor, minus, less, originally denoted a rubricated figure or vignette drawn with minium (Ger. mennig), vermilion or red lead, from It. miniare, to paint with vermilion.

MISLEST, in the Cheshire dialect, a corruption of molest, used also in Leicestershire (Evans, Glossary, E. D. S.).

MIS-PRISION. } In these synony-MIS-TAKE. } mous words, a taking or prision (O. Fr. -prision, from Lat. prehensio, Low Lat. prensio), amiss, the prefix mis would seem to be the same particle in each case. But in misprision, old Fr. mesprision (= Mod. Fr. méprise), mis stands for old Fr. mes, Span. menos, from Lat. minus, less (than is right), wrong, badly; so misalliance (Fr. més-alliance), mischance (Fr. més-chance). In mis-take, the prefix is A. Sax. mis-, Icel. Dan. and Dut. mis-, Goth. missa-, meaning wrongly; near akin to old Eng. misse, a fault or error, M. H. Ger. missc, an error, Dut. mis, and miss, to fall short of, not to hit; so mis-believe, mis-carry, mis-lead, mis-deed. A similar distinction is probably to be made with regard to the prefix in the synonymous words mis-name and mis-nomer (for Fr. mes-nommer).

MISTY, when applied to a person's language, views, or philosophical opinions, which are said to be misty when vague and obscure, not clear and intelligible, would seem naturally to be a mere metaphorical use of misty, euveloped in mist or fog, hazy, dark, A. Sax. mist, darkness. It is remarkable, however, that in old English misty, mysty, used in the same sense of dark, hard to be understood, having a hidden meaning, is only another form of mystic, mysterious; there was perhaps a confusion of A. Sax. mistig, misty, with Low Lat. misticus, Lat. mysticus. Compare mysti-fy (for mystic-fy), to render mysty or mysterious, to puzzle or baffle one's comprehension.

Misty, or prevey to mannys wytte, Misticus.

Mystery, or prevyte, Misterium.
Promptorium Parvulorum, p. 340.

Misty, or rooky, as the eyre, Nebulosus.
Id.

Bot in þe apocalypse apparty,
Es sayd þus ful mistyly,
. . . "his fete er like latoun bright Als in a chymné brynnand light."
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, ab. 1340,
l. 4368.

These philosophres speke so mistily
In this craft, that men cannot come therby,
For any wit that men have now adayes.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 16864.

And than hir joy, for aught I can espie,
Ne lasteth not the twinkling of an eye.
And somþe have never joy till they be deed,
What meaneth this? what is this mistiheed?
Chaucer, The Complaint of Mars and Venus,
l. 225.

Ry3t so is vch a Krysten sawle,
A longande lym to þe mayster of myste.
Alliterative Poems, p. 14, l. 462.

Whensoeuer by your similitude ye will seeme to teach any moralitie or good lessons by speeches misticall and darke, or farre fette, vnder a sence metaphorical applying one naturall thing to another, or one case to another, inferring by them alike consequence in other cases, the Greekes call it Parabola, which terme is also by custome accepted of vs, neuerthesse we may call him in English the resemblance misticall.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 251 (ed. Arber).

The very mistiness of the Prime Minister's own words, and the repugnance he exhibits to endorse or accept plain and explicit language upon the subject from anyone else, lead us to suspect that the Government have not succeeded so far in picturing with any legal definiteness what it is they want the Government of the United States to consider.—The Standard, June 21, 1881, p. 4.

MIXHILL, given by Grose as a Kentish word for a dunghill, is a corruption of mixen, a dungheap, from A. Sax. meow, dung, akin to Ger. mist, dung, Goth. maihstus.

þet coc is kene on his owune mixenne.
[The cock is brave on his own dunghill].—Ancren Riwele, p. 140.

MOCKAW, an old spelling of macaw, with some allusion, perhaps, to the mimicking powers of parrots.

But, Caleb, know that birds of gentle mind
Elect a mate among the sober kind,
Not the mockaws, all deck'd in scarlet pride
Entice their mild and modest hearts aside.
Gay, Eclogues, Poems, vol. ii. p. 78 (1771).

MOHAIR, Fr. moire, old Fr. mohère, mouhaire, Wallach. moile, Ger. mohr, all perhaps from an oriental word moiacar, a kind of camlet (so Skinner, s.v.). As a form miire is quoted by Littre from a document of the 13th century, it is probable, as Scheler remarks, that the English word is a transformation made under the influence of "hair," and not, as Diez thinks, itself the origin of Fr. moire. Mr. Isaac Taylor thinks that it was originally the fabric manufactured by the Moors or Arabs in Spain; but M. Devic traces the origin correctly to the Arabic mokhajyar, a cloth made of goat's hair (cf. It. mocajardo).

MOILED, bare, applied in Antrim and Down to a bare-looking building (Patterson, Glossary), also moily, hornless, a hornless cow (Id.), are Anglicized forms of Irish maol, shorn, bereft of horns.

MOIL, an old corruption of the word mule, A. Sax. múl, Lat. mulus (prob. for maclus; cf. Greek muklos, an ass), as if it meant the labouring animal, a drudge, from moil, to toil laboriously (cf. Lat. moles, Gk. mólos, &c.). The Gipsy name for a donkey is moila (Smart).

As the Athenians made a law, when they builded their temple called Hecatompodon: that they should suffer the moyles and mulets that did service in their cariages about the building of the same, to graze everywhere, without let or trouble of any man. And they say there was one of their moiles thus turned at liberty that came her selfe to the place to labour.—Sir Thos. North, Lives of Plutarke, p. 348 (1610).

Sir Thomas Overbury says the Creditor—

Is a lawyers moyle, and the onely beast upon which he ambles so often to Westminster.—Miscellaneous Works, p. 160 (ed. Rimbault).

Mulet, a Moyle, Mulet, or great Mule.—Cotgrave, Dict. s.v.

In W. Cornwall mule is to work hard, and moyle, a mule (M. A. Courtney).

MOILLERE, an old Eng. word for a woman or wife, derived from the old Fr. moillere, also found in the forms moilier, moillier, moivillier, as if the soft sex, from Fr. mol, molle, moiviller (Lat. mollis), while in reality it is from Lat. mulier, a woman (compare A. Sax. meowle, a maid).

As pre persones palpable is pureliche hote
o man-kynde,
The which is man and hus make and moillere- is issue,

So is god godes sone in pre persones pre trinite.

Langland, Vision of Piers the Plowman, Text C.
Pass. xix. ll. 235-7, ed. Skeat (see his note in loc.).

"Mulier, quasi mollior," saith Varro, a derivation upon which Dr. Featley thus commenteth; "Women take their name in Latin from tenderness or softness, because they are usually of a softer temper than men, and much more subject to passions, especially of fear, grief, love and longing."—Southey, The Doctor, p. 538.

Compare the soothsayer's interpretation of the word in Cymbeline, v. 5:—

The piece of tender air, thy virtuous daughter,

Which we call "mollis aer;" and "mollis aer"

We term it "mulier."

A somewhat pretentious book lately published, The Biblical Things Not Generally Known, makes good its title by soberly stating that mulier is from Lat. mollior, as if the softer sex.<sup>1</sup> It is probably akin to mulgere, Gk. amelgō, A. Sax. meoluc, from the Sanskrit root mrij, and so would mean "the milk-giver," "the suckler" (Benfey).

MOLE, the small burrowing quadruped, is a contraction of mould-warp, or mold-warp (Shakespeare), or mold-werp (Wycliffe), Icel. mold-varpa, the animal that *warp*s, or throws up, the mould.

With her feete she diggeth, and with her nose casteth awaye the earth, and therefore such earth is called in Germany mol werff, and in England Molehill.—Topsell, Historie of Foure-footed Beasts, 1608, p. 500.

On the other hand, mold is sometimes incorrectly used for mole, a mark on the body. See IRON-MOULD and MAUL-STICK.

Upon the litle brest, like christall bright,
She mote perceive a litle purple mold.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, VI. xii. 7.

MONKEY-PEE, a Kentish word for the wood-louse, originally "a molli-pee," <sup>1</sup> In the same place, § 160, this ingenious writer observes that woman is formed from man, with the prefix wo- distinctive of sex. Sir Thos. Urquhart's epigram was better than this, and almost as correct.

"Take man from woman, all that she can show,
Of her own proper, is nought else but wo."

i.e. multipes (O. Eng. and West, "many-feet"), the Latin word, no doubt, being mistaken for a plural. See Philolog. Soc. Trans., 1860, p. 16.

MONGOOSE, a small Indian quadruped, is a corrupted form, probably, of some native oriental word, which appears in French as mangouste (Buffon).

The boy importuned me for Bakshish to exhibit a fight between a snake held in his hand and a mongoose concealed in a basket.—M. Williams, Modern India, p. 28 (1878).

MOOD, a state of mind, is sometimes confused with mood, a certain character of music depending on the intervals in the scale, as "the Doric mood," Lat. modus, whence also the grammatical mood or mode of a verb.

That strain I heard was of a higher mood.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 87.

It is really the same word as O. Eng. mood, wrath, A. Sax. mód, mind, Icel. móðr, Ger. muth, impulse, Goth. mods, wrath. A moody person is one inclined to wrath.

þin wounðes & þin holy blod
Made hire huerte of dreori mod.

Bödeker, Alteng. Dichtungen, p. 201, l. 64.

With egre mode and herte full throwe,
The stewardes throte he cut in two.

The Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 1018.

þo he com to þe temple, and wolde prechi,
He vunde þer-ynne chepmen. þet were mody
þeyh hi were prute, he heom vt drof.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 39, l. 75.

And sone he cam in-to ðat lond,
A modi stiward he ðor fond,
Betende a man wid hise wond.

Genesis and Exodus, l. 2713.

To the feminine mind in some of its moods all things that might be, receive a temporary charm from comparison with what is.—G. Eliot, Adam Bede, ch. xiv.

MORAL, a common corruption of mold in Ireland and the provincial dialects of English, e.g. "He's varry moral of his fayther."—Holderness Dialect: W. Cornwall Glossary, M. A. Courtney.

Loike 'is faither? Whoy, a's the very moral on 'im.—Evans, Leicestershire Glossary, p. 195, E. D. Soc.

MORE-FOUND. In an old Treatise on Diseases of Cattle, quoted by Nares, is mentioned "The Sturdy, Turning-evill, or More-found." It is a corruption of morfond, a disease in horses, Fr. morfondre. See FOUNDER.

MORRIS. } Morris, an old game MORALS. } played with counters or pegs on lines scored either on the ground or on a board, and mentioned by Shakespeare (Mid. Night Dream, ii. 2) in the form "Nine men's morris," is a corruption of morals, with an allusion to the well-known morris (or Moorish) dance, which the intricate movements of the pegs was fancied to resemble. The word morals itself, quoted by Dr. Hyde in the phrases, nine men's morals, three men's morals (vid. Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. ii. p. 481, ed. Bohn), is a corruption of merils or merrils, Fr. marelles, mérelles. "Le jeu des merelles, The boyish game called Merils, or five-penny Morris; played here most commonly with stones, but in France with pawns, or men made of purpose, and termed Merelles."—Cotgrave. Mérelle or marrelle is only the fem. form of méreau, a counter, which is traced by Scheler (through marellus, mairrellus) to Lat. matrellus, from matarā, a spear, a Celtic word meaning, perhaps, originally something thrown, jeton: root mat, to throw (Lat. mittere). In the form nine-penny miracle, also quoted by Dr. Hyde (loc. cit.), miracle would seem to have resulted from a confusion of Fr. mérelle with merveille, even as our playground marbles have sometimes been turned into marvels. Conversely to the above, mirles, a Scotch word for the measles, seems to have been derived from the French morbilles.

Diefenbach connects Fr. mérelles, marolles, O. Fr. mereau, a pebble, Netherland marellen, to play with pebbles, Mid. Lat. marella, merelli, playing stones, with Mid. Lat. margella, a coral bead, Greek márganon, a pearl, and margaritēs (Goth. Sprache, ii. 54).

MORTAR BOARD, as a name for a college cap, is perhaps not originally derived from the square implement of the wall-plasterer, but a reminiscence of the old French term mortier, a species of cap worn by the clergy and graduates (Gattel), and by the Lord Chancellor and others on high days (Cotgrave).

MOSAIC, an artistic arrangement of vari-coloured marbles, &c., in a manner worthy of the muse, Fr. mosaïque, Sp. mosaico, Low Lat. mosaicum, musaicum, seems to have in some way been connected with the name of the Jewish lawgiver. An eminent living prelate (the same who found Jew crystallized in jewel) discovered Moses petrified in mosaic, and moralized accordingly on the degeneracy of Israel! Marvel had a truer insight when he wrote

Music the mosaic of the air, both words being from Greek moûsa, the muse. Cf. the forms Fr. musif, It. musaiico, Ger. musiv-, Low Lat. musicum (sc. opus).

The vaught he garnysshed with golde and hyse with dyuers storyes of as subtyll musyn [! musy] worke as maye be.—The Pylgrymage of Syr R. Guylyforde, 1506, p. 37 (Camden Soc.).

The deep indentings artificial mixt
Amid Musicks (for more ornament)
Haue prizes, sizes, and dies different.
J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 442.

In the bottom of this liquid Ice
Made of Musick work, with quaint device
The cunning work-man had contrived to trim
Carpes, Pikes, and Dolphins seeming even to swim.
Ibid. p. 435.

No less admirable was the Art, of that kind the Arabs call Marbutery, but the Jews Mosaick [!]; a composition of many small pieces of Marble variously coloured.—Sir T. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 146.

The base deed of fallen Judaism round the Holy Sepulchre is avenged in the wretched caricatures of the children of Abraham, who haggle with the drunken and the hungry over second-hand clothes, and sell mosaics and jewellery, the very words being a witness against them.—The Leading Ideas of the Gospels, p. 16 (1872).

Miss F. R. Havergal prefaced the last outpourings of her pious muse with these appropriate lines:—

Master, to do great work for thee, my hand Is far too weak! Thou givest what may suit—
Some little chips to cut with care minute,
Or tint, or grave, or polish. * * * *
Set each stone by thy master-hand of grace,
Form the mosaic as thou wilt for me,
And in thy temple-pavement give it place.
Life Mosaic, 1880.

MOTHER, the dregs or cloudy sediment formed in vinegar, &c., Ger. moder and mutter (e.g. essichmutter), is a corrupted form of mudder, Low Ger. mudder, mud, Swed. and Dut. modder, High Ger. motter, connected with moder, and High Ger. mud, Dan. mudder, mud. Cf. Wallon nutri, mouldy (Sigart).

A curious coincidence is Gk. grais, (1) an old woman, (2) scum of liquor.

Mood, the mother of vinegar.—Williams and Jones, Somerset Glossary.

Unhappily the bit of mother from Swift's vinegar-barrel has had strength enough to sour all the rest.—J. R. Lowell, My Study Windows, p. 95.

MOTHER CAREY'S CHICKENS. It has been suggested that Mother Carey in this sailor's expression for the stormy petrels is a corrupted form of mater cara, as if oiseaux de Notre Dame, aves Sanctæ Mariæ, but this wants confirmation. Certainly swallows are called uccelli della Madonna in the valleys of Tirol, the lark is named Our Lady's Hen in Orkney (Jamieson), and mario-nette is a provincial name of the buff-headed duck; Icel. máriatta, the wagtail. Cf. Gertrude's Bird, the great black woodpecker, St. Cuthbert's Duck, &c.

MOTHER WOOL, a driver's cry to his horses in Surrey, is for 'm hither, wolt, i.e. come hither, wilt thou. So the Lincolnshire mock-mether-hawve! turn to the left, seems to be mog-come-hither-half, i.e. move on, come (to the) hither side (Skeat).

MOTHER-OF-PEARL, so called as if the bearer of pearl, the matrix in which it is produced (like the Arabic expressions "mother of wine" = the vine, "son of the sea" = a pearl) is perhaps a misunderstanding of Fr. mère-perle, mother of pearl (Cotgrave), as if confounded with mère, mother; whereas this, like mère goutte, the first juice of the grape, and mère laine, is derived from Lat. merus (old Fr. mere), pure, excellent of its kind (Scheler). But then Ger. perlenmutter, Dan. perlemor, "pearl-mother," It. madre perla, must be corruptions also. In any case mother-pearl, and not mother-of-pearl, seems to be the original form.

This shell-fish which is the Mother of Pearle, differs not much in the manner of breeding and generation from the Oysters. — Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 254.

Some say that these mother-pearles haue their Kings and Captaines.—Id. p. 255.

Thereby his mortall blade full comely hong
In yvory sheath, yearv'd with curious slights, Whose hilts were burnisht gold and handle strong
Of mother perle; and buckled with a golden tong.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, I. vii. 30.

MOUND, a hillock or small elevation of earth, has been altered both in form and meaning from being confounded with mount (Lat. mon(t)s, Fr. mont). It is really the modern form of A. Sax. mund, a protection, used in the sense of an earthen defence (O. H. Ger. munt). Compare barrow, a raised mound (Ger. berg, a mountain), near akin to A. Saxon beorgan, to protect. Mount was formerly used for an embankment of earth (North), and so A. V. Jer. vi. 6.

MOUND, an heraldic term for the representation of a globe surmounted by a cross, denoting the ascendancy of Christianity over the world, is a corruption of Fr. monde, Lat. mundus. Mounde for world occurs in old English:—

Synneles y bare þe yn to þys mounde.—
Robt. Mannyng, Meditacyuns on the Soper of our Lorde, l. 942 (ab. 1315).

There was found a denice made peradventure with King Philips knowledge, wrought al in massiue copper, a King sitting on horsebacke vpon a monde or world, the horse prouncing forward with his forelegges as if he would leape of, with this inscription Non sufficit orbis, meaning, as it is to be conceaned, that one whole world could not content him.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 118 (ed. Arher).

[He] seems halfe ravisht when he looks upon
That bar, this bend; that fess, this cheveron;
This manch, that moone; this martlet, and that mound.

Herrick, Poems, p. 316 (ed. Hazlitt).

MOUTHS, in the sense of grimaces, as in the Prayer Book version of the Psalms (xxxv. 15), "making mouths at me, and ceased not" (= mocking me), is a corruption of old English moues; moue being a contemptuous grin or projection of the lips in ridicule, Fr. moue, old Fr. moe, from Dutch mouwe, a protrusion of the lower lip. So to make a moue, Fr. faire la moue (= Prov. Fr. faire la lippe) = Dutch mouwe maken (Diez).

"Make hym þe moue" occurs in the Handlyng Synne, p. 125, and Hamlet speaks of some "that would make mows" at his uncle (act ii. sc. 2).

The Bible Word-Book (Eastwood and Wright) notes that the original reading in the Prayer Book passage was moues or mows, which retained its place as late as 1687, and that in the following from Hamlet (iv. 4) the same alteration has occurred:—

Whose spirit with divine ambition puff'd
Makes mouths at the invisible event.

So Cotgrave gives "moue, a moe, or mouth; an ill favoured extension or thrusting out of the lips," and "Grimacer, to make a face or a wry mouth, to moue."

Moue or skorne, Vangia vel valgia.—
Prompt. Parvulorum.

Mouare or makere of a moue, Valgiator.—
Id.

I moo, I mocke, I moue with the mouthe,
ie fays la moue.—Palsgrave, Lesclaircissement, 1530.

And bot if thou can, we wille not trow,
That thou hast saide, bote make the mow
When thou syttes in yond sett.

Miracle Plays, Crucifixion, p. 140
(ed. Marriott).

Thei scorniden me with mowyng, thei gnastiden on me with her teeth.—Wycliffe, Psalms, xxxiv. 16.

This sowne was so full of japes,
As ever mowes were in apes.

Chaucer, The House of Fame,
bk. iii, l. 716.

I can moue on a man,
And make a lesyng well I can
And mayntayne it ryght well than.

The Worlde and the Chylde, 1522
(Old Plays, xii. 311).

Wyfe, quoth he, then must I nedes know,
What is your wyll, then, for to haue:
At me you must neither mocke nor mow,
Nor yet loute me, nor call me knaue.

Black-Letter Ballads (Lilly ed), p. 130.

And other-whiles with bitter mockes and
moues,

He would him scorne, that to his gende
mynd,

Was much more grievous then the others
blowes.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, VI. vii. 49.

MOUSE-BARLEY, Ger. maus-gerste, Lat. hordeum murinum, is, according to Dr. Prior, a mistake for hordeum murale, "wall-barley," so called from its growing about walls.

MOUSE-WEB, } Scotch names for a
MOOSE-WEB, } spider's web, or for the gossamer, Cleveland muzweb, muz- wipe. The first part of the word is most probably, as Mr. Atkinson has pointed out, a corruption of mesh, O. Norse möskvi, Swed. maska, Dan. maske, Ger. masche. Compare Spinner-mesh, a Cleveland word for the spider's web.

MOWDIEWART is a corruption of molddi-warp the mole used by the Ettrick shepherd in the Noctes Ambrosianæ, vol. i. p. 68. In Banffshire mothiewort (Gregor).

MUCK, in the phrase "to run a muck," meaning to pursue a mad and reckless career, jostling or overturning all one meets, perhaps so spelt with some idea that the violent exertion throws the runner (like Mr. Thornhill's gay ladies) into "a muck of sweat."

Frontless and satire-proof, he scours the streets,

And runs an Indian muck at all he meets.

Dryden, The Hind and Panther, l. 1187.

It is a corruption of amok, a native word for a kind of mania or uncontrollable fury among the Malays, which impels the sufferer to rush madly onward, striking right and left with his kris. "The first warning of such an event is given by the cry of 'Amok, amok!' when there is a rush, and people fly right and left to shelter; for the runner makes no distinction between friend and foe; his eyes are indeed dark, and he is blind to everything but the intense desire to kill all he can before he renders up his own wretched life."—M'Nair, Perak and the Malays, p. 212-214.

He was upon the design of moqua; that is, in their language, when the rascality of the Mahometans return from Mecca, they presently take their axe in their hands, which is a kind of poniard. . . . with which they run through the streets, and kill all those which are not of the Mahometan law, till they be killed themselves.—Tavernier, Voyages, ii. p. 199.

Drawing their poisoned daggers, they cried a mocca upon the English.—Id. p. 202.

MUDDY-WANT, a Somerset name for the mole or mouldi-warp.

MUDWALL, a name for the bee-eater (apiaster), Johnson, Webster, also spelt modwall (Bailey), is no doubt a corruption, but of what I cannot say.

MUGWEED, a name for the plant asperula odorata, also muguet (Gerarde), are corruptions of Fr. muguet, O. Fr. musquet, Lat. muscatius, "musk-scented" (Prior).

MUG, a vulgar word for a face or mouth (especially an ugly one), stands for murg, Scot. morgue, a solemn face, murgeon, to mock by making mouths (Jamieson), from Fr. morgue, a sour face, a solemn countenance, morguer, to look sourly; cf. Languedoc, murga, countenance.

MUG-WORT, A. Sax. mucg-wyrt, a popular name of the plant Artemisia vulgaris, O. Eng. wyrnwyr, is said to be from O. Eng. moghe or mough, a maggot or moth (Prior). It was anciently believed to be a corrupted form of motherwort. "Mugwort, herbe, idem quod moder worte."—Prompt. Parvulorum. On this Mr. Way quotes from the Arundel MS.:—"Mogwort, al on as seyn some, modirwort: lewed folk þat in manye wordes comen no ryzt sownynge, but ofte shortyn wordys, and changyn lettrys and silablys, þey corruptyn þe o. in to u. and d. in to g. and syncopyn i. smytyn a-wey i. and r. and seyn mugwort." Ælfric glosses it matrum herba, the Catholicum Anglicum mater herbarum.

Mr. Cockayne thinks old Eng. mucg-wyrt, mucgwyr, is properly "midge-wort" (mycg = midge). "Heo affig-deofulseocnyssa" (It puts to flight devilsickness, i. e. epilepsy).—Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft, vol. i. p. 102.

MULE, or mule-jenny, a machine used in spinning cotton, is an anglicized form of Ger. mühle, a mill, M. Ger. mule (Webster), Lat. mola, a mill, whence Fr. meule, a mill-stone, It. mulino. Compare It. molinello, a spinning-wheel (Florio).

MULL, to warm wine or ale with sugar and spice, has been evolved out of mulled, in the phrase mulled ale, misunderstood as a part participle. But mulled ale is a corruption of old Eng. mold-ale or mold ale (Prompt. Parvulorum), a funeral ale, literally mould-ale, ale provided when a person is interred or committed to the mould. Cf. Scot. mulde-mete, a funeral banquet; Icel. molddar, a funeral. The word was probably confounded with old Eng.

mullen, to powder, with allusion to the grated spices which the beverage contained.—Prof. Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v. It may possibly have been influenced by Fr. mouiller, to render soft, to mellow, Lat. mollire. Shakespeare uses mulled for stupefied, softened. Coriolanus, iv. 5, 239.

New cyder mull'd, with ginger warm.

Gay [in Johnson].

There was a tun of red port wine drank at his wife's burial, besides mulled white wine.—Misson, in Brand Pop. Antiq. ii. 240 (ed. Bohn).

The thief of a poet sang the lampoon for him . . . over a quart of mulled beer.—P. Kennedy, Evenings in the Duffrey, p. 305.

Compare O. Eng. moweld (i.e. mould) = mouldy, moulded.

þe ruste of þat moweld moné

Agayne þam þan sal wittnes be.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 5571.

MULLEIN, Fr. molène, the name of a plant, might seem to be so called from its soft downy leaves (like the Fleabane Mullet from Fr. mollet, soft), Fr. mol, Lat. mollis, soft. Compare its names woolen, Ger. woll-kraut, L. Lat. lanaria. It is probably, however, the plant which attracts the moths (Gerarde, p. 634), blattaria, from Dan. møl, a moth, Goth. malo (Diefenbach, Wedgwood, Skeat).

The male Mullein or Higtaper hath broad leaues, very soft, whitish and downie.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 629.

MULLET, in heraldry a figure like a star with five points, usually the distinguishing mark for the third brother (Bailey), was originally molet, the rowel of a spur, Fr. molette, properly a little mill, from Lat. mola, a mill. Cf. Fr. moulinet, a little wheel.

The fader the hole, the eldast son different,
quhiche a labelle; a cressent the second;
third a molet; the fourt a merl to tent.

Booke of Precedence, &c. p. 95, l. 45
(E. E. T. S.).

The stede was whyte as any mylke,
The brydylle reynys were of sylke,
The molettys gylte they were.

Octavian, l. 720 (Percy Soc.).

MUNIFICENCE, bountifulness, Lat. municipentia, a derivative of Lat. municipus, bountiful, from munus, a present (or duty) and facere, to make, and so "present-making," is curiously used by Spenser in the sense of defence or fortification, evidently on the false assumption that the word was akin to munition, munition, Lat. munire, to fortify, mœnia, defensive ramparts.

Until that Loctrine for his Realmes defence,
Did head Against them make and strong munificence.

Faerie Queene, II. x. 15.

MUNTIN, a Leicestershire word for the munition or mullion of a window, confounded probably with "mountain or upright beam in a building, Fr. montant."—Sherwood, Eng.-French Dict. 1660.

Other forms are muntion, monion, monyal, moynel (Parker), Fr. moignon, a stump, akin no doubt to Ital. monco, maimed, Lat. mancus. The munition of a window is the central stump before it branches off into tracery (Skeat).

MUSCOVADO, the name given to raw sugar as imported into this country (Latham, Dict. s.v.), is the Spanish word mascabado assimilated to such words as muscadine, muscatele, muscovy.

Sp. and Portg. mascabado, unrefined (sugar), is from mascabar, to depreciate, the same as Sp. menoscabar, from mas or menos (less) and cabo (head).—M. Roulin. It is thus radically the same word as mischief, old Fr. meschief, misfortune, injury, Sp. menos-cabo, bad result, depreciation, loss.

MUSCOVY DUCK, a corruption of musk-duck, which "derives its name from its exhaling at times a strong odour of that drug. The term Muscovy is wholly misapplied, since it is an exclusive native of the warmer and tropical parts of America and its islands."—Nuttall, Ornithology of the United States, p. 404. [Latham, Dictionary, s.v.]

MUSE, to ponder or meditate, formerly to study, Fr. muser, so spelt as if the word meant to cultivate the muses, Lat. musæ, (1) the goddesses of learning, (2) studies (Gk. mousai), and so generally understood (Coleridge, Richardson). Book titles like "Musings in Verse," were doubtless adopted with this idea.

Mousūn, or prively stodyñ (al. stodyn a dowl), Muso, musso.—Promptorium Parvulorum, 1440.

I muse my mother
Does not approve me further.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 2, 8.

In this passage muse means to wonder. The primitive meaning, however, of the French muser is seen in its use as a term of the chase to use the nose (muse, museau), of a dog to lay it to the ground, of a stag to lift it in the air. A male deer is said faire la muse when it lifts up its muzzle (Cotgrave). From sniffing the air or being in a state of open-mouthed expectation (which is also the original meaning of abide) came the sense of pausing or pondering. Compare It. musare, "to muse, to surmise, also to goe idly up and downe, or to hold ones muzzle in the air" (Florio). These words are derivatives of Fr. museau, old Fr. musel (Eng. "muzzle"), Prov. mursel, It. muso (for murso), from Lat. morsus, (1) a bite, (2) an open mouth (Diez). Similarly Wycliffe uses muscel for "morsel:"—"This man forsakith treuthe, 3he, for a muscel of breed."—Proverbs, xxviii. 11.

Almost identical is the meaning of the transitive verb amuse, Fr. amuser, to hold folks at gaze, to make them muse, to engross their attention, formerly, so far from diverting them, to make them sad. "Donner la muse à, To amuse, or put into dumps, to drive into a brown study."—Cotgrave.

Bishop Hacket says:—

A glorious splendor fill'd the mountain where Christ was transfigur'd, and it did amuse Peter, James, and John.—Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 31, fol.

John Howe begins a sermon on the untimely death of a most hopeful young gentleman cut off in his prime by observing:—

The peculiar occasion of this present solemnity may be somewhat amusing to narrower and less considering minds.—The Redeemer's Dominion over the Invisible World.

Fuller in his Church History speaks of one "Being amused with grief, fear, and fright" (bk. ix. § 44).

I amused a long while Upon this wall of berile,
That shone lighter than a glas.
Chaucer, The House of Fame, bk. iii.

MUSH-RUMP, an old corruption of mushroom, old Fr. mouscheron.

A night grown mushrump.
Edward II. (Nares).

MUSKRAT is said to have been originally and properly an American word musquash, and that a corruption of a native Indian word mouskouessou. So "moose" is from the native word mous-souk, and "skunk" from sagankou. (Bryant and Gay, Hist. of United States, vol. i. p. 319.)

MUSLIN-KAIL, a Scottish word for broth made of barley and greens.

I'll sit down o'er my scanty meal,
Be't water-brose, or muslin-kail,
Wi' cheerfu' face.
Burns, To James Smith, Globe ed.
p. 35.

Penny wheep [= beer]'s gude enough for muslin-kail.—A. Hislop, Proverbs of Scotland,
p. 246.

This muslin is for mashlin or meslin, mixed grain (miscellanea, barley, oats, &c.).

MUSSULMEN is sometimes used by inaccurate writers as the plural of mus-sulman (Pers. musulmán, a true believer), a Mohammedan, instead of mus-sulmans, as if the last part of the word was our English word man. One might equally well use talismen for talismans.

The word Islám denotes "an entire devotion to the will of another," and from this the Arabians derived the term Moslem or Mustim, i.e. one who has entirely submitted himself to the will of God, and is consequently, "in a state of salvation" (Salam or Aslama). The dual Muslimáni, has most commonly been substituted for these terms by Eastern nations; and hence the various forms of that name employed by European writers—of Muselman, Mussulman, Mussulmans, Mus-sulmen, &c. as applied to the professors of the Mahometan faith.—Cyclopædia of Religious Denominations, p. 333.

MUSSELL, an old Eng. form of muscle or mussel, the shell-fish, Lat. musculus (a little mouse), occurs in the King's Coll. Cambridge MS. of the Promptorium Parvulorum. Another corruption of musculus seems to be Welsh misgl, misglen, a muscle.

MUSS-ROLL, } old names for the nose-MUSE-ROLL, } band of a horse's bridle, as if the roll for the animal's mus (= mouth, old Eng.), are corruptions of Fr. muserolle, a noseband, a derivative of museau, the muzzle, It. muso, which is from Lat. morsus, (1) a bite, (2) the open mouth (Diez).

Martingal, a thong of leather fastened at one end to the girths under the belly, and at the other to the muss-roll.—Bailey.

Musoliéra, a muzle, a museroll, a muffer.—Florio.

MY SONG! a Cleveland expletive, is a corruption of an ancient oath La Sanguie! La Sanguie Dieu! (Atkinson).

MYSTERY, when applied to an early religious play and to a mechanical art or trade to which an apprentice is bound, as if denoting some secret or recondite knowledge kept from the outer world and imparted only to those duly initiated, is a corruption of old Fr. mestier (Portg. mister, It. mestiero, Prov. mestier, Sp. menester), from Latin ministerium, a religious ministry or service. Though mystery, more properly mistry, old Eng. mister, a handicraft, closely corresponds to Fr. métier (mestier), a trade or business, it may also represent the Norm.-Fr. maisterie, science, knowledge, It. mæstria (from magister), the mastery of a thing, "also skill, industrie, cunning, arte and wit" (Florio), mæstrare, "to maister, to teach, to instruct." Mistry would come from maisterie, just as mister from master, mistress from mai(s)tresse, and mistral, the N.W. wind, from mæstral, mæstro, the masterful wind.

(1) Mistry = old Eng. mistere, a trade, old Fr. mestier.

Of þis mestere serueð þeo unselie outfule iðe deofles kurt [of this art (viz. grimacing) maketh use the unhappy envions in the devil's court].—Ancren Riule, p. 212.

Marthe mester is uorto neden & schruden poure men, ase husefeldi [Martha's business is for to feed and clothe the poor men, as household].—Id. p. 414.

Wyþ-oute pacience non ne comþ to perfection. þerof we yzef uorbisne ate leste ine alle þe mestyeres þet me deþ mid hand [Without patience none cometh to perfection. Thereof we see example at least in all the crafts that one practises by hand].—Ayenbite of Inwyt (1340), p. 167.

Rihtes mester hit is and wes,
In vche dom Pees to maken.
Castell off Loue, l. 479.

And on ðe sexte hundred ger
Wimmen welten weres mester.
Genesis and Exodus, l. 532
(E.E.T.S.).

[Women exercised men's arts.]

Of all the comun people about,
Withinne burgh and eke without,
Of hem that ben artificers,
Whiche usen craftes and mestiers,
Whose art is cleped mechanic,
And though they ben nought alle like,

Yet netheles how so it falle,
O lawe mot governe hem alle.
Gower, Confessio Amantis, vol. iii.
p. 142 (ed. Pauli).

In youthe he lerned hadde a good mistere,
He was a wel good wright, a carpentere.
Chaucer, Canterbury Tales, l. 615.

Shame light on him, that through so false illusion,
Doth turne the name of Souldiers to abusioa,
And that, which is the noblest mysterie,
Brngs to reproach and common infamie!
Spenser, Mother Hubbards Tale, l. 222.

And bad him goe his waye such as he was,
The sclauder of an honest mistrye.
F. Thynn, Debate between Pryde and Lowliness (ab. 1568) p. 48 (Shaks.
Soc.).

Leauing these manner of dissimulations to all base-minded men, and of vile nature or misterie, we doe allow our Courtly Poet to be a dissemler only in the subtilties of his arte.
—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589,
p. 308 (ed. Arber).

Alcum. But what stripling is this?
Peter. One that is desirous to learne your craft.

Alcum. Craft, sir boy! you must call it
mistrye.

Raffe. All is one, a craftie mystery, and a mysticall craft.

J. Lilly, Gullathea, act ii. sc. 3 (1592).

Every manuary trade is called a mystery, because it hath some slight or subtlety of gayning that others cannot looke into. Every man cannot be a carpentour of his owne fortune.—Mannighum's Diary, April 10, 1603,
p. 166 (Camden Soc.).

Every Printer offending therein shall be for euer hereafter disabled to use or exercise the Art or Mysterie of Printing.—Decree of Starre-Chamber, Concerning Printing, 1657.

It is strange to find a critical writer thinking that this mystery is the Greek músterion, "something kept secret."

There is common to nearly all arts and *mysterie*s (as the old term itself inaples) a certain jealousy of the outside world, which is distinct from any individual reticence produced by the fear of competition.—*Saturday
Review*, vol. 48, p. 657.

There are certain *mysterie*s or secrets in all trades, from the highest to the lowest, from that of prime-ministering to this of authoring, which are seldom discovered unless to members of the same calling.—Fielding, Joseph Andrews, bk. ii. ch. 1.

A mystery play was one acted by a guild of handicraftsmen, such as the carpenters, the lorimers, &c. See M.
Petit de Julleville, Les Mystères.

(2) Mistry, perhaps = maistrie, old
Eng. meistre. Cf. Ger. meister, master.

Maisterie, a Mystery, a masterly action, Magistracy, masterly workmanship.—Bailey, Dictionary.

Maistry, skill, is frequent in old Eng. writers. Sir Thos. More, for instance, speaking of Wycliffe's Translation of the Bible, says:—

These things he so handled (which was no great maistry) with reasons probable & likely to ley peple & vlnered that he corrupted in his time many folke in this realme.—Dialogue concernyng Heresyys (1528), bk. iii. ch. 14.

Maistry and magistry were used specifically by the Alchemists for their own mystery.

Our Magistry is Three, Two, and One,
The Anmall, Vegitable, and Minerall Stone.

Thus who can worke wisely
Shall attain unto our Maistry.

Bloomefields Blossoms (Ashmole, Theat. Chemicum, p. 323).

The Maistry thou gettest not yet of these Planets seaven,
But by a misty meaning knowne only unto
us.

Id. (op. cit. p. 315).

In the same collection is a poem on the Mystery of Alchymists, by Geo. Ripley (p. 380).

Or oez par maisterie que li chars signifie.
Philip de Thauin, The Bestiary (12th cent.), l. 153.

[Now hear by science what the cart signifies.]
His penance was forgotten, he asked for his archere,
Walter Tirelle was haten, maister of that mister.

Robert of Brunne, Langtoft's Chron.
p. 94 (ed. 1810).

þet haueð to muche meistrie on monie [That hath too much mastery over many].—*Ancren
Riwle*, p. 140, and so mesterie, p. 108.

It were a lytell maistry
To make a blynde man to se
As suche a yerde trvely.
The Smyth and His Dame, l. 82.

Gramercy, syr, sayd she,
For thov hast wrovght on me;
It was a fvlw great maistry,
As I vnderstande;

I was blynde, nowe may I se.
Id. l. 168.

It is curious to observe words so different as Lat. magister (from magis), one greater, a master, and minister (from minus), one less, a servant, yielding a word of the same form, mystery, knowledge, craft, and mistery, a religious play.

MYSTERIOUS, a Derbyshire woman's corruption of the plant-name mezereon, with the explanation, "We call it the mysterious plant, sir, because its flowers come out before its leaves."—Britten and Holland.

N.

NACKER, a provincial word for a drum in N.W. Lincolnshire (Peacock, Glossary), probably mentally associated with words like nacker, to snap the finger, knack, knock, &c., is the old Eng. naker, nakyre, Fr. nacaire, naquaire, Low Lat. nacara, Arab. naqarah, a drum.

& ay þe nakeryn noyse, notes of pipes,
Tymbres & tabornes, tulket among.
Alliterative Poems, p. 77, l. 1414.

NACORNE, an old Eng. word for a sort of kettledrum, but sometimes taken to be a wind-instrument like a hoboy, and so called as if compounded with corne, a horn, is a corrupt form of naker, naquayre, from the oriental word naqarah, a drum.

Nacorne, ynstrument of mynstralsye. Nabulum.—Prompt. Parv. (vide Way's note).

NAG-NAIL, a provincial word for a sore at the root of a finger-nail, as if that which nags or gnaws the nail, is perhaps only another form of O. Eng. ang-nægele (ang = sore, pain). (See HANG-NAIL.) But compare Icelandic anmeqlur, the skin round the finger-nail, a corruption of which is aumneqlur (an agnail), as if "sore-nail," from aumr, sore.

NAIL, a provincial word for a needle in East Cornwall (Couch, E.D.S.), is an assimilation to naïl, a spike of metal (A. Sax. nægel), of old Eng. nelde, neelde, a transposed form of nedle, a needle, A. Sax. næðl. Compare Dan. naal, Icel. nál, Dutch naald, a needle, beside Ger. nadel, O. H. Ger. nádela, Goth. nethla, originally "the sewer," cognate with Ger. nähen, to sew. Needle, which in Gammer Gurton rhymes with feele, is in Shakespeare often pronounced as a monosyllable, very much like neeld, and the d, as in vild (vile), may have been scarcely perceptible (Abbot, Shakspearian Grammar, p. 346).

Alle þeos þinges . . . ne beoð nout wurð a nelde.—Ancren Riwele, p. 400.
Naked as a neede and non help aboute hym.
Piers Plowman, text C, xx. 56.

We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,
Have with our needls created both one flower.
Shakespeare, Midsummer N. Dream,
iii. 2, 205.

NANCY-PRETTY, a Scotch name for the plant London Pride, a corruption of None-so-pretty (Jamieson). It is found also in the Holderness dialect of E. Yorkshire.

Lords and ladies, love in a mist, none so pretty, true love of Canada, and bachelor's buttons.—Nares, Think-I-to-Myself, ii. 41.

NAPOLEON, a popular corruption in the Isle of Wight of the plant-name trifolium (incarnatum).—Britten and Holland.

NARROW-WRIGGLE, a corruption in the Eastern counties of the provincial word "an erri-wiggle," A. Sax. ear-wigga, an earwig. — Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1858, p. 97.

NEAR, used in the provincial dialects (e.g. Sternberg, Northampton Glossary) and colloquial English with the meaning of parsimonious, stingy, is in all probability a corrupted form of old Eng. hneaw, sparing, niggardly (Cædmon, 171, 5), influenced, it may be, by the synonymous word close, understood as hard-by, instead of tight-fisted, having one's bowels of compassion shut up. Hneáw, Icel. hnöggr, seems to be akin to A. Sax. gnagan (? hnagan), to gnaw or nag, Swed. gnaga, Lincolnshire gnag, Ger. nagen, Norse nagga, and to mean one who gnaws and scrapes his bones, a cheese-paring skinflint. Identical with this is Danish gnier, a miser, a griping penurious fellow, which, as well as gnidsk, stingy, is from gnide, to rub. Cf. old Eng. gnede, stingy (Havelock the Dane, l. 97). Parallel and related are niggard, old Eng. nygun (Handlyng Synne, l. 5578), from Icel. nyggja, to rub, scrape, or gnaw; nuggjen, stingy, Swed. nugg. Also Greek gniphôn, a miser, knipós and sknipós, niggardly, from knizô, to scrape, skniptó, to nip or pinch. Compare Cumberland scroby, parsimonious, akin to Dut. schrobben, Gael. sgriob; to scrape.

A company of studious paper-worms, & leane schollers and niggardly scraping Vsurers.—Lingua (1632), act iii. sc. 2.

This near, penurious, occurs in Mabbe, The Rogue (1623), part i. p. 107, and in Miss Burney's Cecilia, book ii. ch. 9:—"Miss, he's so near it's partly a wonder how he lives at all." See Fitzedward Hall, Modern English, p. 243.

As he is very careful of his fortune I always thought he lived in a near manner.—The Spectator, No. 402.

Mr. Barkis was something of a miser, or, as Peggotty dutifully expressed it, was "a little near." — Dickens, David Copperfield, ch. x.

The word has perhaps partially coalesced with old Eng. nare, narrow, confined, A. Sax. nearw, close, restricted, "narrow;" compare "Hit is somdel nare." — Wright, Pop. Treatises on Science, p. 139, l. 318. Indeed narrow is found in the sense of close-fisted, parsimonious.

Be not too narrow, husbandmen! hut fing
From the full sheaf, with charitable stealth,
The liberal handful.

Thomson, The Seasons, Autumn.

NEARER, an incorrect and somewhat modern formation based on the assumption that near is a positive, whereas this word, A. Sax. neár, is really the old comparative of the adverb neáh, nigh, Goth. nehw. Thus near-er is a pleonastic comparative just equivalent to nigh-er-er (Morris, Skeat). Compare the following where near = more nigh.

The neere to the Church the ferther from God.—Heywood, Proverbs, C.
With this Chanon I dwelt have seven yere,
And of his science am I never the neere.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 16189.

At alle peryles, quod þe prophete, I aproche hit no nerre.

Alliterative Poems, p. 91, l. 85.

Your sighes yow fet from farre,
And all to wry your wo:
Yet ar ye nere the narre,
Men ar not blinded so.

Tottel's Miscellany (1537), p. 58
(ed. Arber).

Doe not imitate those foolish Patientes, which hauing sought all meanes of recouery,
are neurer the neere, run vnto Witchcraft.
—S. Gosson, Schoole of Abuse (1579), p. 60,
ed. Arber.

He loued her more then seuen yere,
Yet was be of her loue neuer y<sup>e</sup> neere.

The Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 18.

NEAR-HAND, } as in the sentence
NIGH-HAND, } "He was nigh-hand drowned before I reached him," A. Sax.

neáh-hand, almost, nearly, is not compounded, according to Dr. Morris, with hand (= manus), but with an old adverbial termination (cf. A. Sax. neádn, nearly).

I am ne re hande dold [= stupified], so long have I nappyd.

Townley Mysteries, Pastores.

The Lady searched my wounds full soone, Shee gave me drinke for to restore, for neere hand was I hied before.

Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 362, l. 244.

Unto Eld so gan he pas þat al his hare neerhand white was.

Cott. MS. See Pricke of Conscience, ed. Morris, p. 308.

NEAT, cattle of the ox species, according to a popular etymology as old as the time of Alfred, are so called because nyton, they know naught, have no wit or understanding, the word being regarded as a derivative of A. Sax. nitán (= ne witan) not to know, like old Eng. not for ne not.

To those who are not aware of it, it might be interesting to know that neat is a compounded word, answering exactly to the Greek Alogon [irrational], although the latter is confined to horses, and the former to cattle.—Sat. Review, Aug. 6, 1881, p. 181.

But neat, A. Sax. neát, Scot. nout (and nolt), Icel. naut, mean etymologically the beasts useful to man, from A. Sax. neótan, to make use of, Icel. njóta (see Skeat, Etym. Dict.). So a cow that is a good milker is said to be "of good note," i.e. profit. See NOT-ABLE.

NEDDY, a familiar term for a simpleton, has nothing to do with the name Edward. In Cheshire the word appears as "an eddy," which seems to be the same word as A. Sax. eádig, happy, blessed (from eád, happiness), the idiot or innocent being universally regarded as a favourite of Heaven, "Eádig ys se þeow" (Blessed is that servant).—Matt. xxiv. 46. So silly originally meant happy, A. Sax. selig; sackless, in Prov. Eng. (A. Sax. sac-leas), (1) guiltless, (2) witless. Cf. Fr. benet, orig. blessed; Ger. albern, orig. kind; Gk. euêthes, &c. In early English a fool was sometimes called Eád-wine (Edwin; see J. C. Robertson, Materials for Hist. of Thos. Becket, vol. i.); in A. Saxon Eád-wine (Icel. aud-vinnr) means an easy friend, one soft and kind. Similarly auðunn, the Icelandic form of Edwin, is popularly used for a nonentity. Cornish easy, idiotic, is perhaps a corruption of eady (O. E. eath = easy).

Assuer an Ebrewish is eadi an English: þet is ure Lonerð, þet is eadi ouer alle [Assuer in Hebrew is blessed in English; that is our Lord, that is blessed over all].—Ancren Riwle, p. 146.

NECESSITY, a common corruption of "necessity" in Scotland and N. Ireland. Similarly ill-convenient for "inconvenient."

NEED-FIRE, Scotch neid-fyre, "fire produced by the friction of two pieces of wood" (Jamieson), Low Ger. nodfüre (1593), niedfyr in the Capitularies of Carloman (8th cent.; see E. B. Tylor, Early Hist. of Mankind, pp. 256 seq. 3rd ed.), is not fire so obtained when in want of better as we might imagine, but literally "friction fire," need being another form of knead, and from the old English gnidan, to rub, Dan. gnide, Swed. gnida, to rub (compare Swed. gnid-eld, "rub-fire" = need-fire, gnidsten, rub-stone).

Nine ænne sticcan & gnid to sumum þinge, hit hatað þær-rihte of ðam fyre þe him on lutað.—Astronom. Treatise of 10th Cent. in Wright, Pop. Treatises on Science, p. 17.

[Take a stick and rub it to something, it heateth straightway with the fire that lurketh in it.]

Ger. nothfeuer, of the same meaning, though seemingly compounded with noth (cf. Goth. nauthjan, Icel. nauda, Dan. nøde, to force, as if "forced fire"), is probably of the same origin. Compare A. Sax. nedan, to force; "ned swot," forced sweat.—Ancren Riwle, p. 110.

Tine-egan, or Neidfyre, i.e. forced fire. All the fires in the house being extinguished, two men produced a flame of potent virtue by the friction of wood. This charm was used within the memory of living persons, in the Hebrides, in cases of murrain among cattle.—Sir W. Scott, Fair Maid of Perth, note to ch. xxvi.

Needfires used to be lighted on the occasion of epidemics occurring among cattle, and the custom is still observed here and there to this day. Wherever it can be traced among people of German or Scandinavian descent, the fire is always kindled by the friction of a wooden axle in the nave of a waggon wheel, or in holes bored in one or two posts.—W.

Kelly, Curiosities of Inda-European Tradition and Folk-lore, p. 48.

NEGROMANCER, } old spellings of ne-NYGROMANCER, } romancer, from Gk.
nekromantis, a diviner (mantis) that consults the dead (nekros), following the Italian negromante, Sp. and Portg.
nigromante, O. Fr. nigremance, as if from It. negro, Lat. niger, black, and denoting one that deals in the black art, Sp. magia negra.

Negromancers put their trust in their circles, withiñ which thei thinke them self sure against all y<sup>e</sup> deuils in hel.—Sir Thomas More,
Works, p. 120 b.

On the next page the same writer speaks of “nygromancers that put theyr confydence in the roundell and cercle on the grounde.”

Compare the following definition:—

It. negromantia, a nigramancie, enchanting, or the blacke arte by calling.—Florio.

Negromante, a nigromant, or enchanter, that raiseth, calleth up, and talketh with the spirits of dead bodies.—Id.

Low Lat. nigromansia dicitur divinatio facta per nigros [q. d. the shades of the departed].—Vocabulary, 1475 (Trench, Eng. P. and P. lect. v.).

For he sal þan shew wonders many Thurgh enchauntementes and nygromancy.
Pricke of Conscience, p. 117, l. 4286.

Of calculacion and negremauncye
 Also of angrym and of asmatryk . . .
 In alle this scyens is non us lyke.

The Cavernty Mysteries, p. 189.

Nigramancye and perimancie þe pouke to Rise makeþ.

Vision of Piers Plawman, Pass. XI.
 l. 158, text A, E.E.T.S.

Nigramauncers are thei that bi figeris or markyngis vpon the dead body of best or of man, thus enforcith to geit wytyng.—Apology far the Lollards, p. 95 (Camden Soc.).

Trust not, ne love not Negromancy,
 For it is a property of the Devill to lye.
Norton, Ordinall of Alchemie (ed.
Ashmole), p. 101.

For rather er he shulde faile,
 With nigromaunce he wolde assaile,
 To make his incantacion
 With hote subfumigacion.

Gower, Confessia Amantis, vol. iii.
 p. 45 (ed. Pauli).

And the third sister, Morgan le Fay, was put to schole in a nunry, and there shee learned so much that shee was a great clarke of nigromancy.—Sir T. Malory, History of King Arthur (1634), vol. i. p. 6 (ed.
Wright).

I haue brought a boye to thee,
 Which hath wrought me moche wo;
 He is a grete nygromancere,
 In all Orlyounce is not his pere,
 As by my trouth I trowe.

A mery geste of the Frere and the
Boye, l. 429. Early Popular
Poetry, vol. iii. p. 79.

A negro stood by us trembling, whom we could see now and then to lift up his hands and eyes, muttering his black Art as we apprehended, to some hobgoblin, but (when we least suspected) skipt out, and as in a limphatick rapture unsheath'd a long skean or knife which he brandisht about his head seven or eight times, and after as many muttering spells put it up again, then kissed the earth three times, which done, he rose, and upon a sudden, the skie cleared and no more noise affrighted us.—Sir Thomas Herbert, Travels,
 1665, p. 29.

Exactly the same misunderstanding is exhibited in the Mid. High. Ger.
 word nigromanzie.

NEITHER, a corrupted form, from a desire to assimilate it to either, of the old Eng. nother, A. Sax. náwðer, which is a contraction of ná-hwæðer, i.e.
 “no-whether,” not either (= Lat.
neuter, ne-uter). Other old forms are nauther, nouthor, nowther (see Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.).

Vor her hors were al astoned, and nolde after wylle

Sywe næp spore ne brydel.
Robert of Gloucester, p. 396.

þat felde I nawþer reste ne traunyle.
Alliterative Poems, p. 32, l. 1087.

Nather by hire wordes ne hire face,
 Before the folk, ne eke in hir absence
 Ne shewed she that hire was don offence.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 8798.

NETHERMOST, so spelt as if it meant “most lower,” is a false form due to a popular etymology which connected the ending with most; it is really a corruption of A. Sax. niðemesta (= Lat. infimus), from ni, down. Niðem-est is really a double superlative form, like a Latin infim-issimus (see Skeat, Etym.
Dict. s.v.).

The nethermost chamber was five cubits broad.—A. V. 1 Kings, vi. 6.

NEVER-THE-LESS, a corruption of the older form natheles (understood as ne'ertheless), A. Sax. ná þe læss, no the less, i.e. not the less. Here þe is for þý, the instrumental case of the article, “non eo minus;” as in “the more the merrier," i.e. in that (proportion) it is more, in that it is the merrier (Skeat).

Now wolde God mighte suffice
To tellen all that longeth to that art;
But natheless, yet wol I tellen part.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 16186.

Noþeles he wolde iwite hwuder he were iled [Nevertheless he would know whether he were led].—Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 43, l. 214.

Naupæles þa3 hit schowted scharpe.
Alliterative Poems, p. 26, l. 877.

And noþeles hi nome alle þre, and toward tounne bere.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p.
44, l. 307.

NIBBLITIES, a Cumberland corruption of "novelties."

Wi' nibblities as guod as nyce.
Stagg.

(Dickinson, Supplement, E.D.S.)

NICK, in the popular expression "Old Nick," meaning the devil, has no connexion with Nicholas, but is a survival of old Eng. nicor, a goblin, originally a water-monster, human above, fish or serpent below, Icel. nyker, O. H. Ger. nichus, Dan. nøkt, Swed. nåk, Ger. nix.

On fðum slóg niceras nihtes.
Beowulf (8th cent.), l. 422
(ed. Arnold).

[On the waves he slew the nixes of the night.]

See S. Baring-Gould, Iceland, p. 148; Douce, Illustrations of Shakspeare (1839), p. 240; Walker, Selections from Gentleman's Mag. ii. 215; Thorpe, Northern Mythology, ii. p. 20; Nares, s.v.

Mr. Wedgwood thinks the original is the Plat-Dutch nikker, an executioner (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1856, p. 12).

Butler says:—

Nick Machiavel had ne'er a trick,
Though he gave his name to our Old Nick,
But was below the least of these.

Hudibras, pt. iii. canto 1.

And so Ramsay:—

Fause flatt'ry nane but fools will tickle,
That gars me hate it like auld Nicol.

Epistle to Arbuckle (1719).

Out vpon it! how long is Pride a dressing herselfe? Ennie, awake! for thou must ap-peare before Nicholao Malevolo, great muster-master of hel.—T. Nash, Pierce Peniless's
Supplication to the Devil, p. 31 (1592), Shaks.
Soc. ed.

Similarly Old Harry is said to be corrupted from Dan. Eric ("Old Eric"), applied to the devil, and Old Scratch from Schratz or Schrat, a satyr or spirit of the woods (Thorpe).

Dan Michel says of flatterers and slanderers:—

þise byep þe tuo nykeren þet we uyndep ine bokes of kende of bestes. Vor hy byep a ssewynge of þe 3e þet me klepþ nykeren, þet habbeþ bodyes of wyfman and tail of uissse [These be the two nickers that we find in bokes of natural history. For they be a phenomenon of the sea that men call nickers that have bodies of woman and tail of fish].
—Ayenbite of Inuyt, p. 61 (1340).

Tho cryde he alas me growleth of thyse fowle nyckers! Come they out of helle. men may make deuyles a ferd of hem. goo and drowne them that euy! mote they fare I sawe neuer fowler wormes, they make al myn heer to stand right vp.—W. Caxton, Reynard the
For, p. 100 (1481), ed. Arber.

"What is a nicor, Agilmund?" asked one of the girls. "A sea-devil who eats sailors."
—C. Kingsley, Hypatia, ch. xii.

NICK-NAME, so spelt as if meaning a name that mocks, or slanders, or, in old English, nicks one. Compare Ger.
necken, to banter, rally, or tease.

Nyckname, brocquart. — Palsgrave, Les- claircisement, 153).

Susurro, a priuie whisperer, or secret car-rytale that slaunderseth, backbiteth, and nicketh ones name.—Junius, Nomenclator, by John Higgins, 1585.

The Greeks . . . nicked Antiochus Epi-phanes, that is, the famous, with Epimanes, that is, the furious.—Camden, Remains con- cerning Britaine (1637), p. 158.

Fuller, speaking of the old local proverb, "Banbury zeale, cheese, and cakes," said to have originated in an old misprint for "Banbury veal," remarks:—

But what casual in that, may be suspected wilful in the next and last Edition anno 1637, where the error is continued out of design to nick the Town of Banbury, as reputed then a place of precise people, and not over-conformable in their carriage.—T. Fuller, The Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 220.

I call to mind an Anagram which the Papists made of Reverend Calvin—"Calvinus, Lucianus." And now they think they have nicked the good man to purpose, because Lucianus was notoriously known for an Atheist, and grand Scoffer at the Christian Religion.
—T. Fuller, The Worthies of England, vol. ii.
p. 538.

Believe me, Sir, in a little time you'll be nick'd the town-bull.—Princess of Cleve, 1689 [Nares].

"How happie, how cleane would this our Armie be, were it but purged from Tails and Long-tails!" That the English were nicked by this speech, appears by the reply of the Earle of Salisbury, following still the metaphor: "The Son of my father shall presse thither today, whither you shall not dare to approach bis Horse-taile." . . . If any demand how this nick-name (cut off from the rest of England) continues still entailed on Kent? The best conjecture is, because that County lieth nearest to France, and the French are beheld as the first founnders of this aspersion.—T. Fuller, The Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 486.

Warbeck, as you nick him, came to me.

Ford [in Webster].

Ye haue a figure by which ye play with a couple of words or names much resembling, and because the one seemes to answer th' other by manner of illusion, and doth, as it were, nick him, I call him the Nickname.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 212 (1589), ed. Arber.

Skylark grew to be her ordinary appellation, shortened, indeed, to Skylie—the nickname nicked.—Mrs. Whitney, The Gayworthys, ch. xxvi.

Compare in German spitzname, a nickname, often popularly derived from spitzen, to clip or sharpen, spitzig, keen, sharp (Andresen, Volksetymologie).

Similarly Spenser uses nip for to slander:—

To heare the Javell so good men to nip.

Mother Hubberds Tale, Globe ed. p. 519.

Nickname, however, which might be supposed to correspond to a French nom de nique, "name of mockery" (cf. faire la nique, to mock), was originally a nekename, formed, by agglutination of the final n of the article to the substantive, from an ekename, i.e. an added name (cf. "addition" = title), from eke, to increase. Compare old Eng. sekeness = sickness.

Neke name, or eke name. Agnomen.—Promptorium Parvulorum, 1440.

An ekename, agnomen.—Catholicon Anglicum, 1483 [Way].

Agnomen, an ekename, or a surename.—Medulla.

Compare Swed. ökenamn, Icel. auknefni, and auka-nafn, i.e. an eke-name, an additional name of a descriptive or defamatory nature, from auki, addition, A. Sax. eaca, Ger. auch, Eng. eke. Similar are Lat. agnomen, i.e. ad-(g)nomen; Eng. surname, i.e. super-name; It. sopranome, "a by or nickname"

(Florio); Fr. sobriquet, from supricus (supra); Ger. zu-name, O. Eng. to-name. "Hys toname ys Grostest."—Handlyng Synne, p. 150.

Ac [who] so redeþ of [þe] riche · þe reuers he may fynde,

How god, as þe godspel telleþ · gyueþ hem foul tou-name.

Vision concerning Piers the Plowman, Pass. xiii. l. 210 (1393), Text C.

(E.E.T.S.).

So vayr erytage, as ých abbe, ýt were me gret ssame,

Vor to abbe an louerd, bote he adde an tuu name.

Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 431 (ed. Hearne).

Thai theifs that steills, and tursis hame

Ilk ane of thame hes ane to-name,

Will of the Lawis

Hab of the Shawis.

Maitland, Aganis the Thievis of Liddisdail.

Compare also Ger. beiname, Eng. by-name, Gael. leth-ainm, leas-ainm (a side-name), nickname (from leas, leth); Bret. leshano, a nickname, from lez (side, Lat. latus); and, according to Wedgwood, Lap. like namm, Esthon. liig nimmi, a by-name, from liki, liggi, by, near; patois de Flandre nom-g'te (i.e. nom jété), a nickname, a name flung at one.

NIDDYWIT, a provincial word for a simpleton (Wright), as if compounded with wit, is perhaps a corruption of a nidiot for an idiot; like nidget for idiot (Nares); assimilated to niddy, nidcock, a fool. A similar corruption, idhiwit for "idiot," as if compounded with wit, wit, occurs in Professor Wilson's Noctes Ambrosianæ.

NIGHT-SHADE, the Bella-donna. If Dr. Prior be correct in his ingenious surmise, the name of this plant affords a very curious instance of corruption by false derivation. Its official name in Latin is solatrum, i.e. soother or anodyne (from solaris, to soothe), and this, it is supposed, was resolved into sol- + atrum, as it were "sun-darkened," an eclipse, night-shade. I have known a schoolboy, by a similar mistake as to the instrumental termination, suggest that Lat. feretrum, a bier, was compounded of ferre and atrum, as if a "sable-bearer."

NINE-MAN'S-MARRIAGE, } Derbyshire THREE-MAN'S-MARRIAGE, } words for a children's game played with nine or three men on a board divided into squares. Whichever of the two players first gets three of his men into a row wins. (Notes and Queries, 5th S. viii. p. 218.) This is evidently a corrupted form of the "Nine men's morris" alluded to by Shakespeare:—

The Nine men's morris is fill'd up with mud.

Midsummer Night's Dream, act ii. sc. 2.

See MORRIS.

NINEPENCE, RIGHT AS, a slang phrase meaning perfectly correct, apparently a corruption for "right as ninepins," which are carefully set up in the proper rhomboidal disposition.

NINES, in the colloquial phrase, "dressed up to the nines," i.e. to the highest degree, to perfection, something like the French tiré à quatre épingles, is unexplained. We may hazard a conjecture that it is a corrupted form of "dressed up to the neyen," or "nine," found in old English for eyes, old plu. eyen, eyne.

He can without hurting his conscience praise the Spanish poor women up to their eyes.—H. J. Rose, Among the Spanish People, i. 13.

Gibbs hits off a simple scene o' nature to the nines.—Prof. Wilson, Noctes Ambrosianæ, vol. i. p. 315.

Thou paints auld Nature to the nines,

In thy sweet Caledonian lines.

Burns, Poem on Pastoral Poetry

(Globe ed. p. 114).

A blacked up 'is butes, an' a sheaved an' a drest

Proper up to the noines in his new Soonday-best.

Ar Obadayer, Evans, Leicestershire Glossary, p. 35, E.D.S.

Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, cites the following:—

He's such a funny man, and touches off the Londoners to the nines.—Galt, Ayrshire Legatus, ch. viii.

He then . . . put his hand in his pockets, and produced four beautiful sets of handcuffs bran new, and polished to the nine.—Reade, Never too Late to Mend, ch. lxx.

"Pinkie nine" (=eyes) occurs in Lodge's Wounds of Civil War (Doddsley, Old Plays, viii. 63); Pink nyez, in Laneham's Letter from Kenilworth (Ballad Soc. ed. p. 17); Yorks. nœen; Old Eng. thi nynon for thin ynon, thine eyes.

As y lift vppe my nyes that were sore of weping . . . y felte some dropys falling don to me.—The Revelation to the Monk of Evesham, 1196, p. 31 (ed. Arber).

However, we frequently find numbers used with an indefinite latitude of meaning, e.g. "As pretty as Seven," a German phrase for very pretty, which has given a name to one of Ludwig Bechstein's popular stories; nine-murder, Ger. neuntödter, a name for the shrike or butcher-bird; Span. mata-siette, "kill-seven," &c.; "a nine-days' wonder"; "a nine days' glory" (Vaughan, 1650).

It is to be observed that the W. Cornwall folk have the phrase, "Dressed up for the nones," i.e. for the nonce, for the special occasion, and as they also use nines for nones or nonce (M. A. Courtney, Glossary, E. D. S. p. 40), this is no doubt the real origin. "For the nonce" or "nones" is in old Eng. "for then ones," i.e. for the once.

A wlech beað iwlaht for þen ones in forte beaðien.—St. Juliana, p. 71 (ed. Cockayne).

[A warm bath tempered for the nonce (lit. once) for to bathe in.]

NINE SHILLINGS, a slang expression for cool audacity, evidently corrupted from the French nonchalance (Slang Dict.).

NINNY-HAMMER. Mr. S. Baring-Gould thinks this word may be an Anglicized form of Icelandic nei (a negative) and einn-hammar, a man in his right senses (Iceland, Its Scenes and Sagas, p. 160). Compare nincompoop from non compos, "a gråatnum-cumpus" in Tennyson's Northern Cobbler.

NOAH'S ARK, a popular name for a certain formation of the clouds when resembling an ark or ship (Sternberg, Northampton Glossary; Halliwell). In Cleveland it is called Noe-ship. Mr. Atkinson observes that in Denmark when the clouds arrange themselves in this way the countryman says, "The ark is built" (Arken bygges). Such an appearance is called there Noa-skeppet "Noe's ship," a name which is said to be derived, not from the Noah of the Bible, but from Noe or Noen, a corruption of the name Odin still very generally current in North Scania and parts of Wärend. Noa-skeppet consequently must be the same as Odens-skeppet. It is considered indicative of rain both in Denmark and England. Odin was the god of the waters, and his "ship of gold" appears in more folk-lore notions than one. Hence the easy substitution of Noak for Noe (= Odin) and the ark for the ship (Cleveland Glossary, p. 605).

NOD, a provincial word for the nape of the neck in Surrey (Leveson-Gower) and Sussex (Parish), as if that which nods, the joint which enables one to bend the head. It is really the projecting knot at the back of the neck surmounting the spine, and stands for knod, = Dut. knod, knodde, a knob, Icel. hnúðr, Lat. (g)nodus, and so is only another form of knot. I have heard an intelligent English girl call this bony protuberance "the knot of the spine." So in Italian nodo del collo is the nape of the neck, and nodello (a little knot) is "the turning joynt in the chine or backe-bone."—Florio; and in Latin nodus is used for a vertebra, "Cervix articulorum nodis jungitur."—Pliny. Compare Lat. cer-via, the neck, the nape, the "head-binder" (caravinciens), originally a bone of the neck, and hence commonly used in the plural, cervices, a neck. Noddle, a ludicrous name for the head (for knoddel), old Eng. nodyl, the nape of the neck. (Prompt. Parv.), is the same word.

Nod of the neck, the Knappe, Kent.—Kennett, Parochial Antiquities, 1695, E.D.S.

It caught me right across the nod of my neck.—Parish, Sussex Glossary.

This joint [of the ridge-bone] or knot abouesaid they call Atlantion, and it is the very first spondyle of them all.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 310.

NOON-SHUN, a mid-day repast, or luncheon (Brown, Brit. Pastorals), as if, like the words noon-scape and noon-ing, it meant a retreat from the noon-tide heat, is no doubt a corruption of nuncheon, a lump of food, nunch or nunc, a thick lump; just as luncheon, with which it came to be confounded, meant originally a large lump of bread or other food, and so huncheon, a large hunch. Halliwell gives nuncheon as a "lump of food sufficient for a luncheon, Kent."

Noonchion or Nunchion, of bread, or any edible, a great piece, enough to serve for the nooning or dinner of any common eater.—

Kennett, Parochial Antiquities (E. D. Soc. ed.), 1695.

Nummet, a luncheon, lit. noon-meat.—Britton, Beauties of Wiltshire, 1825 (E. D. Soc. ed.).

Nuncheon, formerly noonchyne, i.e. the noon cut or slice.—Id.

They took a comfortable noonchine together.—Graves, Spiritual Quixote, bk. ix. ch. 5.

The good Earl of Cassilis, in his breakfast, Had nooning, dinner, supper, all at once.

Sir W. Scott, Auchindeane, act ii. ec. 1.

He sits without motion, except at such times as hee goes to dinner or supper, for then he is as quicke as other three, eating sixe times euerie day. [margin] Videlicet, before hee come out of his bed, then a set breakfast, then dinner, then after noones nunchings, a supper, and a rere supper.—T. Nash, Pierce Penniless's Supplication to the Devil, p. 56 (1592), Shaks. Soc.

In the ende our good neighbour came home to her husband with a painted face, as if shee had beene at her nuntings with cats.—Trotches New-Yeares Gift (1593), p. 13 (New Shaks. Soc.).

Of old we had breakefastea in the fore-noonne, beuerages or nuntings after dinner, and thereto reare suppers.—Holinshed, Chronicles, i. 170.

What then, is there nothing in the Sacrament but bread and wine, like an hungry nunscion? Nay, we say not that the Sacrament is nothing but a bare sign.—H. Smith, Sermons, p. 63 (1657).

Nuncheon, "an afternoones repast" (Sherwood, Dictionary, 1632), was turned into noonchion, or noonchyme, and eventually into noon-shun, as if the meal eaten by labourers while shunning the mid-day heat.

Harvest folkea, . . . .
On sheafes of corne, were at their noonshuns close.

W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, 1616.

Compare—

Nooning, beavre, drinking, or repast ad nonam, three in the afternoon, called by the Saxons non-mæte, in y<sup>e</sup> North parts a noonchion, an afternoon's nunchion.—Bp. Kennett. Nunmete, Merenda.—Prompt. Parv.

Merenda, breakfast, or noone meate.—Thomas, Ital. Grammar, 1548.

In provincial English there are many instances of meals being named from the hour at which they are usually eaten. Thus in Sussex an elevenner is a luncheon; among the haymakers and reapers of Durham a four o'clock is their afternoon meal (Parish, Sussex Glossary); fourses (for fours) is an East Anglian word for the repast of labourers at four o'clock, 'levennes (for elevens) the same at eleven (E. D. Soc. Reprint B. 20); Norfolk fourings, Northampt. four-o'clock, an afternoon meal at that hour; Scot. four-hours, an afternoon tea, forenoon, a luncheon, twal-hours, a noon-tide meal (Jamieson). Compare Fr. patois none, a mid-day repast, old Fr. noner, to dine (from none, noon, Scheler); Ger. mittag-essen, dinner (at any hour); Span. siesta, "the heat of the day from noon forwards, so called from hora sexta" (i.e. the sixth hour, noon).—Stevens, a mid-day rest; Spanish once, a lunch, literally, the eleven o'clock meal (Ford, Gatherings from Spain, p. 117), the more correct word for luncheon being merienda, from meridie, the twelve or mid-day meal (mediâ die).

Prof. Skeat, however, quoting nonechenche, donations to drink, from Riley's Memorials of London (27 Ed. III.), maintains that nuncheon is from none, noon, and schenche, a pouring out of drink (A. Sax. scencan, to skink, or pour out drink), and so means a mid-day draught.

NOSE-BLEED, an old popular name for the plant yarrow or millefoil, because "the leaves being put into the nose do cause it to bleede" (Gerarde, Herball, p. 915), is in old Eng. nosblede, which, according to Mr. Cockayne, is for niesblæd, i.e. "sneeze-leaf" (A. Sax. blæd, a blade, and niesan, to sneeze or sneeze), being otherwise called sneeze-wort, Lat. sternutamentoria, Gk. ptarmicē (Leechdoms, &c., vol. iii. Glossary). But see Britten and Holland, s.v.

NOTABLE, an old word still in provincial use, meaning useful, active, thrifty, profitable, especially in housewifery, sometimes spelt nottable, is distinct from the classically derived word to which it has been partially assimilated, and with which it is sometimes confounded. The whole of the following passage from a critical article in the Saturday Review (Jan. 4, 1879) is based upon the assumption that there is but the one word notable, viz., worthy of being noted, remarkable, but used with a difference of signification which it does not attempt to explain:—

Notable had once fallen so much out of fashion that Johnson in his Dictionary says that it is now scarcely used but in irony. In Northcote's Life of Reynolds there is an amusing instance of the double signification of the word. He had, he said, long wished to see Goldsmith. Sir Joshua suddenly introduced him to the great writer, saying, "This is Dr. Goldsmith; pray why do you wish to see him?" "I was much confused," writes Northcote, "by the suddenness of the question, and answered in my hurry, 'Because he is a notable man.'" This, in one sense of the word, was so very contrary to the character and conduct of Goldsmith that Sir Joshua burst into a hearty laugh, and said that Goldsmith should in future always be called the notable man.

The apparent incongruity was in the no'table, or noteworthy, author being for a moment regarded as not'able (pronounced nottable), i.e. thrifty and prudent. Similarly Goldsmith's creation, the simple, homely, and thrifty housewife Mrs. Primrose, is described by him as "a good-natured notable woman," with the explanatory observation added, "she could read any English book without much spelling; but for pickling, preserving, and cookery, none could excel her. She prided herself also upon being an excellent contriver in house-keeping."—Works, Globe ed. p. 1. It is of course this native and idiomatic notable that Johnson remarked was but rarely used in his time, and not the classical notable (= remarkable, notorious), which has never been out of fashion. Its true origin and acceptation may be traced by a comparison of the quotations here appended, which show it to be compounded of old Eng. not (= profit) and the French termination -able, and so = profit-able, thrifty, or "fendy" as they say in Cumberland.

Note, dede of occupacyon, Opus, occupacio.—Prompt. Parvulorum (ab. 1440).

In the old mystery play of The Deluge, when Noah's shrewish wife is received into the ark with the words:

Welcome, wife, into this boate!

she replies, with a slap on his cheek,

And have thou that for thy note.

[i.e. for thy benefit or pains.]

Marriot, Miracle Plays, p. 11.

In Lancashire a cow is said to be of good note [i.e. profit] when she gives milk a long time (Philolog. Transactions, 1855, p. 278). The following is an instance of the verb:—

He binam him alle þe mihte þe he hadde nutted fram þe biginninge of þe worelde.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 23.

[i.e. He [Christ] took from him [the devil] all the power that he had enjoyed from the beginning of the world.]

The Alliterative Poems say that Belshazzar spent his time—

In notyng [= enjoying] of nwe metes & of nice gettes.—P. 75, l. 1354.

There may no note he sene
For sich small charys.

Townley Mysteries, Pastores.

Your honourable Uncle Sir Robert Mansel . . . hath been very notable to me, and I shall ever acknowledge a good part of my Education from him.—Howell, Letters, book i. sect. 2, letter 5 (1621).

Those whom they call good bodies, notable people, hearty neighbours, and the purest goodest company in the world, are the great offenders in this kind [i.e. plain speaking].—The Spectator, No. 300.

In the days and regions of notable personal housewifery . . . grandmother's treasures of porcelain gathered and came down . . . to second and third generations.—Mrs. Whitney, Gayworthys, ch. i.

St. Fanny was a notable housewife. Her house was a temple of neatness.—Douglas Jerrold, Jokes and Wit, p. 207.

The good dame at the great farm house, who was to furnish the [communion] cloth, being a notable woman, thought it best to save her clean linen, and so sent a foul cloth that had covered her own table for two or three Sundays before.—G. White, Natural History of Selborne, p. 235 (ed. 1853).

A comely, bowerly 'oman her was—a notable, thorough-paced, stewardly body.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 11.

Farmer Sandford, in Sandford and Merton (sub fin.), says he was born "of a notable mother."

Mrs. Elizabeth Montague (b. 1720), speaking of the reapers and haymakers in the South, observes:—

I think our northern people are much more notable. Their meals are more plentiful and less delicate—they eat coarse bread and drink a great deal of milk.

But she was, I cannot deny,
The soul of notability;

She struggled hard to save the pelf.

Combe, Dr. Syntax, Tour I. c. xxvi.

[Davies].

Nottable, active, industrious, thrifty in household matters.—Holderness Dialect, E. Yorks. (E. Dialect Soc.).

The word is found with the same signification in Cumberland (Dickinson's Glossary, E.D.S.), and even in Sussex:

"Nottable, thrifty, industrious." Mr. Lower says that this word is never applied in Sussex to a man. "Mrs. Allbones she be a nottable 'ooman, sure-lye!" So Mr. Parish (Sussex Glossary), who incorrectly identifies the word with Fr. notable. It is really a derivative of Prov. Eng. to note, to use, to profit, Lancashire note, use, business, old Eng. note, use, occupation, business (Owl and Nightingale, 51), A. Sax. notu, use, utility, notjan, to use or occupy, also neotan, nytlíc, useful, Goth. niutan, to receive joy from (Ettmüller). Cf. Ger. nützen, Dut. ge-neiten, Icel. njóta, to use or enjoy.

NOTWITHSTANDING, a modernized form of old Eng. nought-withstanding, i.e. naught opposing, nothing standing in the way, Lat. nihilò obstante. But not itself was originally nought or naught, A. Sax. ná-wiht, no whit. See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.vv.

For nought withstanding all the fare
Of that this world was made so bare,
And afterward it was restored,
Among the men was nothing mored
Towardest God of good living.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. ii. p. 181
(ed. Pauli).

"NOW WELL! NOW WELL!" an exclamation common in old Christmas songs and carols, is a corruption of noël, Fr. noël, from Lat. natalis (dies), Christ's natal day.

Pottys and pens and bolllis for the fest of Nowell.—MS. Laud, 416.

On Christmas-Eve, in former days, . . . those who were in the mine would hear voices melodious beyond all earthly voices, singing, "Now well! now well!" and the strains of some deep-toned organ would shake the rocks.

"Now well! now well! the angel did say,
To certain poor shepherds in the fields who lay

Late in the night, folding their sheep."

R. Hunt, Romances and Drolls of W. England, 2nd Ser. p. 123.

NUT, a vulgar word for the head, as in the school-boy phrase in playing at leap-frog, "tuck in your nut," is perhaps only a corrupt form of Prov. Eng. nod, the occiput, originally a knot, knob, or protuberance; see NOD. Compare nott, to poll the hair. Chaucer has not-hed, which has been understood to mean a head like a nut, old Eng. note (Tyrrwhitt).

A not-hed hadde he, with a broune visage.
Cant. Tales, l. 109.

Thou knotty-pated Foole, thou Horson obscene greasie Tallow Catch.

Shakespeare, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4
 (1st fol. 1623).

However, the Romance nuca, Fr. nuque, the nape of the neck, seem to be from Lat. nuc-s, nux (Diez).

NUTHAWKE, the explanation attached to the word picus in the old Latin-English dictionary called Ortus Vocabulorum, as if the bird that hawks at nuts as its prey, is a corrupted form of nuthack or nut-hatch, the bird that hacks and cleaves nuts.

Nothagge, a hyrde, iaye.—Palsgrave.
Nothak, hyrde. Picus.—Prompt. Parv.

The nuthake with her notes newe,
 The sterlynge set her notes full trewe.
The Squeyr of Lowe Degre, l. 56.

NUZZLE, } “to hide the Head as a NOSELL, } young Child does in its Mother’s Bosom” (Bailey), as if to go noseling (or nose-long), to push with the nose, or nosel, or nozzle, as Spenser speaks of “a nousling mole” (F. Queene, IV. xi. 32), “Like Moldwarps nousling still they lurke” (Colin Clout, &c., l. 763), “Ever sense I noozled the nepple.”—Uncle Jan Trenoodle (Cornish dialect), “The hogs would nuzzel . . . in the straw.”—Observations in Husbandry (E. Lisle), 1757, p. 331. In Somerset noozle is to nestle (Wright).

So glow’d the blushing hoy, lifting his burning cheek from Venus’ kiss ambrosial, nuzzling to her breast.—Harington, Nugæ Antiq. vol. ii. p. 88.

To nuzzle, however, old Eng. nousle, musle, nosell, was originally to nursle or noursle, to fondle, cocker, nurse, or rear up. Perhaps nuzzle, to nose, was a distinct verb, to which nursle was assimilated.

First they nosell them in sophistry and in benefundatum.—W. Tyndale, Obedience of a Christen Man, 1528.

Whom, till to ryper yeares he gan aspyre,
 He noused up in life and manners wilde.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, I. vi. 23.

Now adays, says he, our women do so nuzzle their little Imps in their Cradle, that they suck in vanity as soon as they take the dug.—Bp. Hacket, Century of Sermons, p. 6 (1675).

So thence him farre she brought Into a cave from companie exile,
 In which she noursled him till yeares he raught.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, V. i. 6.

Consider with what fruit we requite God for this seventy yeares of his Gospel past, by nouzeling up among us a generation that know no more of sinne, Christ, Judgement day, then the swine at the trough, but rather trample upon these pearles!—D. Rogers, Nauman the Syron (1641), p. 348.

A sort of bald Friers and knavish shavelings . . . as in all other things, so in that, soughte to nousell the common people in ignorance.—E. K. Glosse on Spenser, Shepherds Calender, June.

Martyrs—This County [Cumberland] affordeth none in the Reign of Queen Mary; whereof accept a double reason. First, the people thereof were nuzell’d in Ignorance and Superstition.—T. Fuller, The Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 235.

O impe of Antichrist, and seede of the devyll !
 Borne to all wickednesse, and nused in all evyll.

New Custome, act iii. sc. 1. (1573).

So nosil (Wright) = nursel, to encourage or uphold (Bailey).

Nurse is a contracted form of nourice (Spenser), nourish (Shakespeare), Fr. nourice, Lat. nutric-em.

When at their mother’s moisten’d eyes babes shall suck;

Our isle be made a nourish of salt tears.
 1 Hen. VI. i. 1.

O.

OAK-CORN, a common misunderstanding of ACORN, which see.

Ocorn, or acorn, frute of an oke (al. ocorne or akorne) Glans.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

OBSEQUES, Fr. obsèques, Span. obsequias, Late Lat. obsequie, funeral rites, corrupted perhaps from the more common word exsequies (the following forth to the grave), with a reference to the obsequium or dutiful regard and complaisance of the attendant friends.

That father lost, lost his, and the survivor bound

In filial obligation for some term

To do obsequious sorrow.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 2, l. 92.

OCTEMBER, an old assimilation of October to the names of the preceding and two following months, is quoted by Hampson (Med. Aevi Kalendarium, ii. 296) from a Saxon Menologium, also the following from a Metrical Kalendar (Galba), op. cit. i. 415:—

Octembrem libra perfundet lampide mensem.

ODD or OD, a corrupt form of the name of the Deity in mincing oaths to avoid being openly profane, e.g. Od's pitikins! (by God's pity).—Cymb. iv. 2; Odd's bodikins! (His body); Od's plessed will.—Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 1.

ODDS-AND-ENDS, and sometimes corruptly orts-and-ends, which is the phrase in East Anglia (E. D. Soc. Reprint B. 20); orts or odds being the Mid. Eng. ords, fragments (of victuals, &c.). "Ord and ende" in Cædmon, 225, 30, signifies beginning and end (Ettmüller); A. Sax. ord, a point, or beginning; and so odds-and-ends means etymologically "points and ends," scraps. Odd, strange, irregular, is however itself the same word as A. Sax. ord, a projecting point, an unevenness (Skeat).

Letten after þe abbot sende,
Aut tolden him þe ord & ende.
Marina, l. 184, Bödeker, Alteng.
Dicht. p. 262.

In Chaucer the phrase appears in the corrupt form "word and ende."

Lucan, to thee this storie I recomende . . .
That of this storie writen word and ende.
Canterbury Tales, l. 14639 (ed. Tyrwhitt).

OFFICE, a provincial corruption of efese, the eaves of a house; Devon. ovvis, old Eng. ovese. In an old Bestiary it is said the spider spins her web "o rofer on ouese," in roof or in eaves (Old Eng. Miscellany, E.E.T.S. p. 15, l. 465). Compare O. H. Ger. opasa, M. H. Ger. obse, eaves, akin to Eng. over, as if that which projects over.

OF-LETE, } an old English word for
OF-LETE, } the sacramental bread or wafer used in the Mass (Bosworth, Anglo-Sax. Dict.; Morris, Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 242); also ovelete, as if a derivative of of-letan, to leave, and so an offering (cf. læt þær þine lác, leave there thine offering.—S. Matt. vi. 24). It is really, as might be expected, like other old ecclesiastical words, of Latin origin, being a corruption of oblata, the sacramental wafer or host, literally bread offered in sacrifice (Lat. oblatus, offered). So oblations in the English communion office are understood to mean the elements offered on the Holy Table. From oblata also come old Fr. oblaie, oblée, Mod. Fr. oublie (Ger. oblata, a wafer), old Eng. obly, obley, oble.

For þi mai godes word turnen þe ovelete to fleis, and þe win to blod [Because God's word can turn the wafer to flesh and the wine to blood].—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 99, l. 6 (E.E.T.S.).

Obly, or ubly (brede to sey wythe masse), Nebula.—Prompt. Parvulorum, p. 361.
Nebula, noble [i.e. an oble].—MS. in Way, note in loco.

OF-SCAPE, an old corruption of escape, as if compounded with of. Escape, from old Fr. eschapper, escaper, It. scappare, from a Low Lat. escappare, meant originally to ex-cape, to slip out of one's cape or cloak (ex cappā), to elude a pursuer by leaving one's garment in his hand. Thus Joseph literally "ex-caped" from Potiphar's wife (Gen. xxxix. 13), and the young man in the Gospels from the servants of the chief priests, when "he left the linen cloth and fled from them naked" (S. Mark, xiv. 52).

þer adde vewe alyue of scaped in þe place [There had few escaped alive in the place].
—Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 398, l. 5
(ed. 1810).

þe erl hadde so gret help þat he of scapede
wel inou.—Id. p. 570, l. 14.

The same writer uses of-serve for ob-serve, and of-ssamed for ashamed; Wycliffe has of-brode for a-broad (on-broad).

They strove to take him, and he was fain to slip off his linnen, and run away from them naked, as Joseph did when he left his cloak with his light Mistris, when he slipt from her: which sheweth how void of shame and modestie they were, to offer such violence to a stranger, that hee could scarce scape their hands naked.—H. Smith, Sermons, 1594, p. 387 (ed. 1657).

OILIFLAME is the strangely perverted form that John Stowe the chronicler gives to the word oriflamme in his account of the battle of Cressy:—

The French King commaunded his hanner called oiliflame to be set up.—History, p. 379, Qto. 1600.

On which the margin supplies this delightfully naïve commentary:—

The French banner of oilie flame signified no mercy more than fire in oil.

The sacred banner of St. Denis was called oriflamme, L. Lat. auriflamma, from its golden flagstaff and crimson flag that streamed like a flame or fiery meteor; with which we may contrast Portg. labareda, a flame, derived from Lat. labarum, a banner. (See Spelman, Glossary, s.v. Auriflamma; Du Cange, s.v.; Dante, Paradiso, xxxi. 127.) This banner, first borne by Charlemagne, was called "Romaine," afterwards "Montjoie." It is mentioned in the Chanson de Roland:—

Montjoie, ils crient! Entre Eux est Charlemagne;
Geoffroy d'Anjou y porte l'Oriflamme,
Fut de Saint Pierre, et avoit nom Romaine;
Mais de Montjoie son nom là prit échange.

See F. Marshall, International Vanities, pp. 196 seqq.

Quod cum flamma habeat vulgariter aurea
nomen,

Omnibus in bellis habet omnia signa preire.
Guillaume le Breton [in Du Cange].

Sir Reynolde Camyan baneret—that daye bare the oriflamme, a speciall relyke that the Frenshe kynges vse to bere before them in all battayles.—Fabyan, Chronicles, sub anno 1355, p. 467 (ed. 1811).

OILS, a Sussex word for the beards of barley (Parish; also Old Country and Farming Words, E.D.S. p. 65), is a corruption of old Eng. eiles, in the Essex dialect aïls, A. Sax. egle or egl, an ear of corn, from the root ac, to be sharp; compare eglan, to prick, eglian, to feel pain, to ail.

The eiles or beard upon the eare of corne.—Hollyband.

The Dorset word is hoïls, Suffolk hauels.

OINTMENT, a corrupt spelling of old Eng. oinement, oynement (Wychiffe), old Fr. oignement (= Lat. unguentum), due to a confusion with the verb anoint, as if for anointment (Skeat).

Oynement, or onyment, Unguentum.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Ne oinement that wolde clense or bite,
That might helpen of his whelkes white.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 634.

All pat maken . . . charmes with oynements of holy chirch.—J. Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests, p. 23, l. 734.

OLD ESPEEL, a legendary being about whom a traditional belief (? still) lingers in the co. Limerick, is a reminiscence of the universally popular Eulen-spiegel, Owl-spiegle (Jonson), or "Owl-glass" (Fr. Tiel-Ulespiegle, old Eng. Tyll Howleglass), introduced by the Germans of the Palatinate. (See Thoms, Lays and Legends of Various Nations, Ireland, 1834.)

Old Scottish writers transformed the wanton jester into Holieglass (e.g. Sempill, Legend of the Bishop of St. Andrews). James Melvill in his Diary, 1584, enumerates with those "maist infamang the peiple, theiffs, drunkards, gluttones . . . holie-glasses, comoun trickers and deceavers" (Woodrow Soc. ed., p. 176). Jonson describes Holieglass as—

Much like an ape,
With owl on fist,
And glass at his wrist.

The Fortunate Isles, 1626 (Works, ed. Moxon, p. 650).

In several languages, as in his own, an Eulenspieglerei and Espieglerie, or dog's trick, so named after him, still by consent of lexicographers, keeps his memory alive.—T. Carlyle, Essays, vol. ii. p. 237 (ed. 1857).

OLD-FATHER, a Sussex word for the person who gives away the bride, it not being customary among the labouring classes for the father to be present at the ceremony (Parish). This is obviously the same word as eld-father, a father-in-law, as if another meaning of A. Sax. eald-feder, a grand-father. It is probable, however, that eld-father is a corrupted form of old Eng. el-fadyr (= socer.—Prompt. Parv. and Cath. Ang.), compounded with el (= alius, other), as if "another father," like el-land, another (i.e. a foreign) land, el-peod, another people, a foreigner. Cf. O. Eng. eld-moder, el-moder, N. Eng. ell-mother, a mother-in-law.

However, ealdafeder (= socer) is found at an early period in the Old English Homilies, 2nd Ser.

Similarly alder-first, alder-last, are frequent in old English for aller-first, aller-last, first or last of all, with a d intrusive; and alder, the tree, = N. Eng. eller, A. Sax. abr, Ger. eller.

Mr. Atkinson in his Cleveland Glossary gives "Elmother, a step-mother," explaining it as I have done here; and so Ray, "An el-mother, Cumb. a step-mother."—North Country Words, p. 28

(ed. 1742). "Ell-mother, [Welsh] Ail, the second. So that perhaps a step-mother might be called the second mother."—Id. p. 94. Compare Welsh mab ail, "other son," an adopted son.

OLD-ROT, a Somerset name for the plant cow-parsnip (heracleum spondylium), Williams and Jones, Somerset Glossary, is probably only another form of eltrot, a popular name for the wild parsley.

OLDSTER, a modern coinage for an elderly person used by Thackeray and H. Kingsley (see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary), from analogy to youngster. The termination -ster properly denotes the agent, and is suffixed to verbal stems, see Morris, Eng. Accidence, p. 89.

OLEANDER, Fr. oléandre, It. oleandro, Sp. oleandro and elcandro, Portg. loandro, as if connected with olea, the olive, oleaster, the wild olive, is, according to Diez, really from the Low Lat. lorandrum, which again is a corruption from rhododendrum, influenced by laurus.

OLIVER, a Devonshire word for a young eel (Wright), is a corrupted form of the synonymous West country word elver.

Defoe mentions elver-cakes, made out of little eels, as a Somerset delicacy (Tour thro' Great Britain, ii. 306).

ONESPRUTE, a "spirting upon," in the Northumbrian Psalter, seems to be a curious adaptation of the Lat. inspirationio, a breathing upon, the word in the Vulgate (A. V. "blast").

And groundens of erttheli werthe vnhiled are,
For þi snibbing, Lanerd myne;
For onesprute of gast of wreth pine.

Psalms xvii. [A. V. xviii.], 16.

ON-TEN-TOES, "A Goose-on-ten-toes," a Michaelmas goose, is an old popular misunderstanding of a goose-intentos, which is thus defined by Bailey, "a goose claimed by custom by the Husbandmen in Lancashire upon the 16th Sunday after Pentecost, when the old Church Prayers ended thus, ac bonis operibus jugiter præstet esse intentos."—Collect for 17th Sunday after Trinity. See Brand, Pop. Antiq. i. 367 (ed. Bohn).

Somewhat similarly legem pone was formerly a proverbial phrase for ready money, from those words occurring as the opening ones of the Psalms on the first quarterly pay-day of the year, viz. Lady Day, March 25th (vide Nares).

ON THE BATTER, a slang phrase for a bout of low debauchery, riotous living, might be imagined to be another usage of Prov. Eng. batter, to wear out, "wear and tear;" or a connexion might be supposed with Fr. "batre les rues, to revell, jet, or swagger up and down the streets a nights."—Cotgrave; "bateur de pavez, a pavement-beater, a dissolute or debauched fellow."—Id. These French phrases, indeed, accurately convey the original meaning of the English expression, although it has nothing to do with battre, to beat. It is of Anglo-Irish origin, and signifies "on the street," "on the road," from the Irish word bóthar, a road (originally a road for cattle, from bo, a cow), in some parts of Ireland pronounced batter, as in the place-names, Batterstown, Greenbatter, Stonybatter, Booterstown. See Joyce, Irish Names of Places, 1st Ser. pp. 44 seq. 357.

As for the word Bater that in English purporteth a lane bearing to an highwaie, I take it for a meere Irish word that crept unawares into the English.—Stanihurst, Description of Ireland, p. 11.

ORANGE, Fr. orange, so spelt as if it meant the golden fruit, aurea mala, poma aurantia, pomme d'or (compare Ger. pomeranze, Swed. pomerans, Welsh eur-afal, "golden-apple," the orange), is a corruption of the Low Lat. arancia, It. arancia, Sp. naranja, all from Pers. nârenj, Arab. nâranj, Sansk. nâranga, an orange-tree. The strictly correct form of the word would therefore be a narange. Compare Milanese naranz, Venetian naranza.

The Sanskrit nâranga, contracted from nâga-ranga (nâga, a serpent or "snake," and ranga, a bright colour), is suggestive of the dragon-guarded golden apples of the Hesperides, the kingdom of the nâgas.

The velvet Peach, *gilt Oreng*e, downy Quince.
J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 59 (1621).

"Oronge, fructe, Pomum citrinum" is mentioned in the Promptorium Porvulorum about 1440, and *poma de Oreng*e are recorded to have been obtained from a Spanish ship at Portsmouth in 1290.

þe fayrest fryt þat may on folde growe,
As orange & oper fryt & apple garnade.
Alliterative Poems (14th cent.),
p. 67, l. 1044.

ORCHAL, } It. orcello, "Orchall-ORCHELLA, } hearbe to dye Purple with" (Florio), also oricello, Span. orchilla, as if of the same origin as Fr. archal, It. oricalco, Lat. aurichalcum, and so often mistakenly defined as a stone (e.g. Bailey and Kaltschmidt), is a transformation of It. roccella, properly "a little lichen which grows on the rocks [roccelle] of Greek isles and in the Canaries, and having drunk a great deal of light into its little stems and button-heads will give it out again as a reddish-purple dye, very grateful to the eyes of men."—G. Eliot, Romola, ch. xxxviii. Cf. O. Fr. ortrait for re-trait.

ORDEAL, pronounced or-de'-al, from a notion that the word is of foreign derivation, like re-al, ether-e-al, whereas it is purely English, or-deal, i.e. an out-deal, or dealing out of judgment, a decision, Old Eng. or-dal, A. Sax. or-dél (or = out), Dut. oor-deel, Ger. ur-theil (Skeat, Etym. Dict.).

Whan so you list, by ordal or by othe,
By sort, or in what wise so you lest,
For love of God, let preve it for the best.
Chaucer, Troilus and Crissida, bk. 3, l. 1048.

ORE, sometimes used in the distinctive sense of gold, or golden radiance, no doubt from a supposed connexion with Fr. or, It. oro, Lat. aurum. It seems to be the same word as A. Sax. ár, bronze, brass, Lat. æs, æris (see Skeat, Etym. Dict. s. v.).

Like some ore among a mineral of metals base.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, iv. 1.

So sinks the daystar in the ocean hed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore

Flames in the forehead of the morning sky.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 171 (see Jerram, note in loc.).

A golden splendour with quivering ore.
Keats, Endymion, bk. ii.

OR EVER, frequent in old authors in the sense of before, ere that (Lat. priusquam), probably stands for or ere, misunderstood as or e'er, where or itself means before, being the old Eng. ar, er, A. Sax. ær, ere, to which ere was afterwards pleonastically added.

Two long dayes iourney (Lords) or ere we meete.

Shakespeare, King John, iv. 3.

The lions . . . brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came at the bottom of the den.—
A. V. Dan, vi. 24.

We, or ever he come, are ready to kill him.
—Id. Acts xxiii. 15.

Long or the bright sonne up risen was.

Chaucer, Flower and Leaf, 27.

See Bible Word-Book, s.v. or; Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.

ORGANS, a name for the herb penny-royal occurring in Witts Recreations, p. 85, is a corruption of its scientific name organ, organum, Greek organon ("mountain-pride"), marjoram.

"I'd make et treason to drink ort hut organ tey."—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 7.

ORIGIN, a word in Tyndale's version of the Bible translating Heb. téó, an animal of the antelope species, Authorized Version, "the wild ox," is a corrupted form of Lat. orygem, the word in the Vulgate, which is the accusative of oryx, Greek óruα (órugos), a wild goat.

These are the heastes which ye shall eat of, oxen, shepe, and gootes, hart, roo, and bugle, hart-goote, unicorn, origin, and camelion."—Deut. xiv. 5 (Tyndale).

For particulars as to the oryx, see Bochart, Opera, vol. i. p. 945, ed. 1682; Smith, Bible Dict. s.v. Ox.

ORN-DINNER, a meal between-times, Prov. Eng. (Boucher, Suppl. to Johnson), is a corruption of orndern, undern, an old English name for the hour of tierce, or nine o'clock in the morning, sometimes the morning generally. (See Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalend. ii. 381; Ettmüller, Lex. Anglo-Sax. p. 47).

The true form, as Garnett remarks, is undern, A. Sax. undern, compare Goth. undawrn, Ger. unter, properly a between time (unter = Lat. inter, Sk. antar).—Philolog. Essays, p. 59.

Orndorns, Cumberland, Afternoons Drinkings.—Ray, North Country Words, p. 47 (ed. 1742).

Riht to-genes þe undrene also þe holi songere seið on his loft songe [Right towards the third hour as saith the holy singer in his song of praise].—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 117.

Were thritté trentes of masse done,
Betwyx vndur and none,
My saule were scourt ful sone.
Anturs of Arthur at Tarnewathelan,
st. xvii.

ORPHAN-JOHN, an East Anglian name for the plant sedum telephium (E. D. Soc. Reprint, B. 20), is an evident corruption of its usual name orpine or orpin, Fr. orpin. The latter word is a mutilated form of orpiment, which is itself derived from Lat. auri-pigmentum, "gold paint," yellow arsenic. The plant was so called from its yellow flowers, which resemble orpiment.

ORTHOPÆDIC, a definitive term applied to a certain class of hospitals wherein deformities of the feet are surgically treated, so spelt as if (like encyclopædia) it were a derivative of Greek paideia, the treatment or training (of a child, país), seems really to be a mongrel compound of Greek orthós, straight, and Lat. ped-s (pes), the foot, and consequently a corrupt spelling of orthopedic, which is also found.

X. Y. . . sends me some strings of verses—candidates for the Orthopedic Infirmary, all of them.—O. W. Holmes, Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, ch. xii.

Fr. orthopédie is understood as a derivative of paideia (Scheler).

OSSPRINGER, a form of the word osprey, O. Eng. ossifrage, L. Lat. ossi-fraga, "the bone-breaker," occurring in Chapman's Homer, Iliad, xviii. 557 (Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-Book, s.v. Ossifrage).

OTHERGUESS, a frequent corruption of otherwise, or othergates (Shakespeare), = otherwise. See ANOTHER-GUESS.

I co'd make othergess musick.

Flecknoe, Love's Kingdom, 1664.

You have to do with other-guess people now.—Smollett, Roderick Random, ch. xlvii. [Davies].

OTTER, a slang word for eightpence, from the It. otto (eight), Lat. octo. See BEWARE.

OVERENYIE, an Aberdeenshire name for the plant southernwood, is a corruption of averoyne, old Fr. abroigne, Picard. avrogne, Fr. aurone, all from Lat. abrotonum. In the Rouchi patois the word is ivrone, as if connected with ivrogne, ivre, drunk.

OVERLOFT, } a Scottish word for the OVERLAFT, } upper deck of a ship, as if the loft over-head (Scot. loft, laft, a floor, a gallery), is a corruption of old Eng. overlope or overloope, now orlop, which, like many other of our naval terms, we have borrowed from the Dutch. It is Dut. overloop, the deck, literally that which runs (loopt) over or across (over) the vessel from side to side (Ger. überlauf).

Baladore, the overlope or over deck of a ship.—Florio, It. Dict. 1611.

Thare hetchis, and thare ouerloftis syne they <sup>bete</sup>
Plankis and geistis grete square and mete,
Into thare scbippis joynd with mony ane dint.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, 1553, p. 153, l. 2 (ed. 1710).

The bott wanting ane overlaft, the seall was carsen over hir ta end, and ther I leyed up.—Jas. Melvil, Diary, 1584 (Wodrow Soc. p. 168).

Another Scottish corruption is overlap (Jamieson), as if that which laps over the sides of the ship.

OUGHTS, used for leavings by Lisle, 1757 (Old Country Words, E.D.S. p. 65), is a corruption of orts, remnants of a meal, leavings, Old Dut. corets, i.e. not-eaten, a scrap left out or over after eating (Skeat). "Aughts, fragments of eatables. Heref. and Sussex" (Wright). Another corruption is Scottish worts, refuse of fodder (Jamieson).

Ortus, relief of beestys mete. Ramentum.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Let him have time to live a loathed slave,
Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave,
And time to see one that by alms doth live
Disdain to him disdain scraps to give.

Shakespeare, Lucrece, l. 987.

OUNCEL, the name sometimes given to a kitchen utensil for weighing goods, the weight being determined by the depression of a spring and marked on a graduated scale, is a corruption of the older term auancel, which has been assimilated to the word ounce as if it meant an ounce-weight.

Auancel weight as I have been informed is a kind of weight with scales hanging, or hooks fastened at each end of a staff, which a man lifteth up upon his forefinger or hand, and so discerneth the equality or difference between the weight and the thing weighed. —Cowell, Interpreter, 1658 (in Wright).

Auncer is found in Piers Ploukman. It is a derivative perhaps of the French hausser, to raise or lift up. Cf. enhance; East Anglia houncings for housings.

þe pound þat hue paiede hem by · peised a quarter

More þan myn Auncel · whenne ich weied treuthe?

Langland, Vision of Piers the Plowman, Pass. vii. l. 224, text C.

On this Mr. Skeat quotes "one balance called an auncere" in 1356, from Riley's Memorials of London, p. 283, observing that it was a kind of steelyard with a fixed weight and a movable fulcrum, which was obtained by raising [hauusing] the machine upon the forefinger.

Sewel, in his Dutch Dictionary, 1708, gives "Auncel, een Onster," the latter word apparently from ons, an ounce, which may have favoured the English corruption.

OUST, so spelt perhaps from a confusion with out, Ger. aus, as if to turn out, is an Anglicized form of the old Fr. oster, to remove, Mod. Fr. ôter.

OUTDACIOUS, a vulgar corruption of audacious. Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, quotes an instance from Mrs. Trollope, and the following:—

'E were that outdacious at 'öäm.
Tennyson, The Village Wife.

OUT-HEES, } Old English words for a
UT-HEST, } clamour or out-cry.

Yet saw I woodnesse laughing in his rage,
Armed complaint, outhees, and fiers outrage.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2014.

My hodye is all to-rente
With outhes false alwaie fervente.
Chester Mysteries (Shaks. Soc.),
vol. ii. p. 191.

Ar ich utheste npon ow grede.
The Owl and Nightingale, l. 1696.

The word so spelt, as if compounded of A. Saxon út, out, and hæs, a hest or command, is a corruption of the Low Latin hutesium or uthesium, a hue-and-cry. Other forms of the word are outhes (Robert of Brunne, 14th cent.), outas (Prompt. Parvulorum, c. 1440), outas (Paston Letters, 1451), and perhaps utis (Shakespeare, 2 Hen. IV. ii.

4, l. 18). Hutesium is near akin to old Eng. huten (Ormulum), Swed. huta, to hoot, Fr. huer. Vid. Notes and Queries, 5th S. vii. 503; viii. 24.

Then hee singeth as wee use heere in Eng-lande to hallow, whope, or showte at houndes, and the rest of the company answer he him with this Owtis Igha, Igha, Igha!—Hakluyt, Voyages, vol. i. p. 284 (1598).

Bale uses the verb outas, to shout or proclaim. See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary.

OUTRAGE, OUTRAGEOUS, has nothing to do with letting one's rage out, as we might imagine when we say that a person who did not control his passion became quite outrageous, but is from the old Fr. oultrage, oultrageux, It. oltraggio, a going beyond the limits of propriety, excess, unbounded violence, from old Fr. oultre, beyond, It. oltra, Lat. ultra; Mod. Fr. outrager.

Owterage, or excesse. Excessus.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Aquarius hath take his place
And stant well in Satornes grace,
Which dwelleth in his herbergeage
But to the sonne he doth oultrage.
Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 125
(ed. Pauli).

Alexander Hume, in the beginning of the 17th century, evidently considered the word a native compound:—

Hyphen is, as it wer, a band uniting whol wordes joined in composition; as, a hand-maed, a heard-man, tongue-tyed, out-rage, etc.—Orthographie of the Britan Tongue, p. 23 (E.E.T.S.).

An old corruption is outrake, found in the Cursor Mundi (14th century), as if from rake, to wander about and play the vagabond.

And if yee do suilk an outrake
Ful siker may yee be o wrake.
Vol. i. l. 4133 (E.E.T.S.), Cotton MS.
[where other readings are outeruke and utruck].

Of bothe þer worldes gret outrage we se
In pompe and pride and vanite.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1517.

Here I moue you my Lordes, not to be greedy and outrigious in inhausing, and raying of your rentes.—Lutimer, Sermons, p. 63.

There be iiij. rowes . . . of pylers through-out ye church, of ye fynest marhle yt may be, not onely meruaylous for ye nõbre but for ye outrayous gretnes, length, and fayrenes thereof.—Pylgrymage of Sir R. Gylfiorde, 1506, p. 36 (Camden Soc.).

Now Chichevache may fast longe,
And dye for al her cruelttee;
Wymmen han made herselfe so stronge,
For to outrage humylite.

Lydgate, Chichevache and Bycorne.

Yet sawe I woodnesse laughing in his rage,
Armed complaint, outhees, and fiers outrage.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 2014.

OUTSTRAPOLOUS, a Scotch corruption of obstreperous.

OWLER, an old word for a smuggler of wool when its export was prohibited, as if "one who goes abroad o' nights like an owl" (Bailey), is a corruption of wooler. Defoe speaks of "the Owling Trade, or clandestine exporting of wool," and Smollett has owl for wool. See T.
L. O. Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary,
s.vv., who also quotes,
To gibbets and gallows your owlers advance.

T. Brown, Works, i. 134.

Compare Icel. ull, Scot. oo, wool;
ooze for old Eng. woze; old Eng. oof and oothe (Prompt. Parv.) for woof and wood, mad; oode for woad (Davies, Glossary).

OWN, in such phrases as "I own it was my fault," "I own I was mistaken," "I own to that impeachment," meaning I plead guilty, grant, or concede that it is true, seems to signify I appropriate, or take to myself, the accusation or mistake, acknowledging it to be my own (meâ culpâ peccavi), as in the lines of a well-known hymn,

Teach us to feel the sins we own,
And hate what we deplore;

so spelt as if connected with A. Sax.
âgan and âhnian, to own, possess, or have (Goth. aigan, Ger. eigen). It is really the modern form of A. Sax.
unnan, to grant or concede.

Ge nowen nout unnen þet eni vuel word
kome of ou; uor schandle is heued sunne [Ye ought not to allow that any evil word come from you, for scandal is a chief sin].—
Ancren Riwe, p. 380.

He on þe Muclehe more [He grants thee much more].—Proverbs of Alfred, l. 241 (Old Eng. Misc. p. 116).

I ever fear'd ye were not wholly mine;
And see, yourself have own'd ye did me wrong.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien, l. 165.

O YES! O YES! The proclamatory phrase wherewith the crier of the courts calls for silence, attention to the matter in hand, is a modern pervasion of the old Norman Oyez! Hearken!

Oez le altre nature [Hear the other nature].
Oies escripture [Hear scripture].

Philip de Thaur, Bestiary, ll. 452 and 468.

Search. First, crie oyes a good while . . .
Idlenes. Oyes! oyes! oyes! oyes! [very often].
The Mariage of Witt and Wisdome, p. 42
(Shaks. Soc. ed.).

Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy oyes.
Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor,
v. 5, 45.

On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st

Oyes
Cries "This is he."

Id. Troilus and Cressida, iv. 5, 143.

OYSTER-LOIT, an old name for the plant polygonum bistorta, also oster luci (Turner), is a corruption of Belg.
ooster-lucye, L. Lat. ostriacum, astro- lochchia, for aristolochia. Other names for the same, and similarly derived, are ostericks and ostrich.

So china-asters in the mouth of a Devonshire gardener became china- oysters.

Oyster-loit, the Herb otherwise call'd Snake-weed.—Bailey.

OYSTER OF VEAL is a provincial word for the blade-bone dressed with the meat on (Wright). It is perhaps a corruption of the word oster, Scot.
oster (Lat. avilla), the arm-pit or shoulder. Compare Scot. ouse for ox;
oskin for oxgang.

Ye might hae been lugged awa to the Poleesh-office, wi' a watchman aneath ilka
oster.—Noctes Ambrosiane, vol. i. p. 113.

OXHEAD, another form of HOGS-HEAD
(q.v.). Smiles, in The Huguenots, quotes from a wine-bill dated 1726:—

Oxhead of Clarate, prise agreed, £11.

Oxhead of Benicarlo at 2s. 6d. per gal.

Compare Dut. okshoofd or oxhoofd,
"a Hogs-head, a certain wine cask" (Sewel, Woordenboek, 1708), Swedish
ox-hufvud.

OXLIP, so spelt as if the plant was named from some fancied resemblance to the lips of an ox, is an incorrect form of ox-slip, A. Sax. owan-slyppe, the slip, slop, or plat of an ox (Skeat, Etym.
Dict.). See COWSLIP. Gerarde has the forms oxe lip, oxelip, and oweslip.

The greater sort called for the most part
Oxeslips and Paigles.—Herbal, p. 637.

For the merging of s in the x, see EVERHILLS.

Where oxlips and the nodding violet grows.
Shakespeare, Midsummer N. Dream,
ii. 1, 250.

As cowslip unto oxlip is,
So seems she to the boy.
Tennyson, The Talking Oak.

OXNA-LYB, an Anglo-Saxon corruption of Latin oxylapathum, Greek oxylápathon, a kind of dock (Lye, in Bosworth), as if denoting "ox-bewitchment."

P.

PACKMANTIE, } a Scotch word, as if POCKMANTEAU, } a pack, pock, poke, or bag, for holding a cloak, is a corruption of portmanteau.

PACKWAX, a tendon or sinew in the neck of animals, old Eng. "Paxwax, synewe" (Prompt. Parv.), fax wax, and few wax, which is supposed to mean "hair (A. Sax. feax) growth" (wax), like Ger. haar-wachs, the back of the neck where the hair-growth begins. The Scot. fw-fax, and fair-hair, a name for the same, Banff. fite-hair, i.e. white hair, which the texture of this tendon closely resembles, would lead us to suppose that the original form may have been fæger-feax (whence the surname Fairfax), fair-hair. It used also to be called maiden-hair in Scotland (Jamieson).

H. Crooke, speaking of the ligament which connects the spine and head, says:—

In heastes of hurthen it is very thicke for more strength, and of all the Ligaments of the body is refused for meat; yet saith Vesalius some commend it to be eaten to make the haire grow long. It may be (saith he) because it is easily dissolved as it were into yellow haire.—A Description of the Body of Man, 1631, p. 916.

PADDOCK, a small enclosure, is a corruption (perhaps due to some confusion with paddock, a toad) of parrock, A. Sax. pearroc, the original form of (par'k) park. See Skeat, Etym. Dict., s.v.

PADDY-NODDY, a word for a tedious rigmarole speech in the Holderness dialect of E. Yorkshire, is perhaps a corruption of pater-noster, that Latin prayer being used as a by-word for something unintelligible, Fr. patenôtre.

PADROLL, a corruption of patrol (An- trim and Down Glossary, Patterson), as if a roll or circuit on a fixed pad or path.

PAGOD, the older English form of pagoda, "an image worshipped by the Indians and Chinese, or the temple belonging to such an idol" (Fr. pagode), was formerly understood (e.g. by Bailey) to be a contracted form of Pagans-God. Even Wedgwood thinks that the Portuguese word pagode is from pagão, a pagan. It is really a corrupted form of Pers. but-khoda, an idol-house, from but, an idol, and khoda, a house. Devic spells the Persian word poutkoudé.

Sir Thos. Herbert uses pagod for an image or idol:—

Upon the culmen has been a Pagod, which the inhabitants thereabouts say was Jamsheat, he that succeeded Ouchang.—Travels, 1665, p. 159.

Upon the same declivity or front of the mountain in like sculpture is figured the Image of their grand Pagotha: A Dæmon of as uncouth and ugly a shape as well could be imagined. . . . And albeit this Pagod as to form be most terrible to behold, yet in old times it seems they gave it reverence.—Id. p. 156.

PAINIM, } frequently but incorrectly
PAYNIM, } used for a single heathen, whereas the proper meaning of the word is an aggregate of pagans, or a pagan land, "A geaunt fram paynym."—King Horn, 803. It is from old Fr. paienisme, paganism, Lat. paganismus (Skeat). So fairy, now used for a single elf, was originally faerie, the land (or assemblage) of the fays; like Jewry (Jewerye, Chaucer), a collection of Jews, or the land of the Jews; and dairy (old Eng. deyerye), the place of the dey or milk-maid. Cf. yeomanry, infantry, &c.

Paynyn (or Paynim), Paganus.—Prompt. Parv.

At last the Paynim chaunst to cast his eye . . . Upon his brothers shield.

Spenser, F. Queene, I. v. 10.

And ihesu crist þet for us wolde an erþe be (i)-bore. and anured of þo þrie kinges of painime.—Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 28 (E. E. T. S.).

So þat in þe fyrmament þat folc þoþte hii sey A long suerd, red as fur, þe poynt ssarp ynou, And ouer paynym Estward þat poynt hem þoþte drou.

Robt. of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 395.

PAINTER, a nautical term for a rope

wherewith a punt is towed, or made fast to a buoy, is no doubt the same word as the Irish paínte, a cord, which Pictet identifies with Sansk. pankti, a line, from the root pac, to extend (Langues Celtiques, p. 17).

Prof. Skeat regards it as identical with old Eng. panter, a noose, old Fr. pantere, a snare, from Lat. panther, a hunting-net, Greek panthēros, catching every (pan) beast (thēr).

It is of little use to have a great cable, if the hemp is so poor that it breaks like the painter of a boat.—G. Macdonald, The Seaboard Parish, p. 584.

PAINTER, an American name for the puma, a corruption of panther.—Wood, Natural History, Mammalia, p. 163.

PAINT-HOUSE. This form of pent-house is quoted in Wright from a work of the date 1599. Compare Derbyshire paintice. See PENT-HOUSE.

PALLECOTE, an old form (Bailey) of the word we now write paletot, a loose overcoat, as if compounded with cote, a coat, is perverted from palletoque, old Eng. paltok, Fr. palletoc, derived from old Dut. palt-roc, pals-rock, i.e. "palace-coat," a court dress, holiday attire (pals = palace). See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.

Proude preostes cam with hym · passend an hundred;

In paltokes and pikede shoes.

Vision of Piers Plowman, C. xxiii. 219.

Paltok, Baltheus.—Prompt. Parv.

PALSY might seem to be a derivative of Greek palsis, a shaking (from pallo, to shake), with reference to the tremor which sometimes accompanies it. It is merely the modern form of old Eng. palesy, palasie (Wycliffe), or parlesy, Fr. paralysie, from Greek parálysia, a loosening or relaxation of the limbs, and so the same word as paralysis.

The shaking Palsey and saint Fraunces fire.

Spenser, F. Queene, I. iv. 35.

Of parlesy war helid grete wane,

And dum and defe ful maniaue.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 130, l. 300

(E. E. T. S.)

Som for ire sal have ala þe parlesy, þat yvel þe saul sal grefe gretely.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 2997.

Of that disease which is called paralysis, resolution, or the dead palsy, wherein sometimes sense alone is lost, sometimes motion alone, and sometimes both together perish, I intend not to speak. . . . I would compare it to that corporal infirmity which physicians call tremorem, and some vulgarly, the palsy; wherein there is a continual shaking of the extremer parts; somewhat adverse to the dead palsy, for that takes away motion, and this gives too much, though not proper and kindly.—T. Adams, Sermons, vol. i. p. 487.

PALTER, to shuffle, prevaricate, play fast and loose, in old English to run on (of a babbling tongue), has been generally regarded as a derivative of Prov. Eng. paltry, trash, rubbish, Swed. palator, rags (see Skeat, Etym. Dict., s.v.). It is perhaps the same word as It. "paltonire, to palter, to dodge, to cheate, to loiter" (Florio), from paltono (also paltoniere), "a paltrie knave, or varlet, a roguing companion, a base raskal" (Id.); cf. old Fr. pautener, a vagabond, a loafer (Vie de St. Aubin, l. 460, ed. Atkinson), old Eng. pautener, a rascal (K. Alysaunder, l. 1737); all from Lat. palitari (a frequentative of palari), to wander about, to vagabondize. Compare Prov. Eng. paultring, pilfering (Kent).

Now I must . . . dodge

And palter in the shifts of lowness.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra, iii. 11, 63.

Who never sold the truth to aerve the hour

Nor palter'd with Eternal God for power.

Tennyson, Ode on Wellington.

PAMPER. Milton, in the following passage, apparently uses this word as if it were a derivative of Fr. pamprer, to abound in a too luxuriant growth of vine leaves, from pampre, Lat. pampinus, the tendril or leaf of the vine.

Fruit-trees over-woody reach'd too far Their pamper'd boughs, and needed hands to check

Fruitless embraces.

Paradise Lost, bk. v. 216.

Compare:—

Pamprer, to fill, furnish, or cover with Vine leaves.—Cotgrave.

Meane while, shore up our tender pampering
twig,

That yet on humble ground doth lowly lie.

Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange,

Prologus.

It is really formed from old Eng. pampe, to fatten up or feed sumptuously, Low Ger. pampfen, to live luxuriously, vulgar Ger. pampfen, to cram; all originally meaning to feed with pap (Low Ger. pampe, a nasalized form of pap), and so to cocker, like a delicate child.

See Skeat, s.v.

The noble Soule by age growes lustier,
Her appetite, and her digestion mend ;
We must not sterve, nor hope to pamper her
With womens milke, and pappe, unto the end.
Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 156.

Our health that doth the web of woe begin,
And pricketh forth our pamperd flesh to sin,
By sicknesse soakt in many maladies,
Shall turn our mirth to mone, and howling cries.

S. Gosson, Speculum Humanum, 1576.

Good mistress Statham . . . doth pymper me up with all diligence, for I fear a consumption.—Latimer, ii. 386 (Parker Soc.).

PANG, a sharp pain, a stitch, is the modern form of old Eng. prange, or pronge, a three or severe pain, the same word as prong, the sharp tine of a fork (from prog, Welsh procio, to prick or stab). Its present form is probably due to some confusion with Fr. poign-, pricking, as in poignant, piercing, pointet,
a stitch in the side, Lat. pungen(t)s ;
or with Fr. poigne, a seizure or grip (Skeat).

PALMER, } old names for the PALMER-WORM, } caterpillar (A. V.
Joel, i. 4; Amos, iv. 9), so called perhaps from the resemblance of the hairy species to the catkin of a willow in provincial English called a palm,—

The satin-shining palm

On sallows in the windy gleams of March.
Tennyson, Vivien.—

Ger. palme, Low Ger. palme, a bud or catkin (cf. Lat. palmes, a vine-sprout).
So catkin and caterpillar are both named from a fancied likeness to a cat.
At an early period, however, the word came to be identified with palmer, a pilgrim, with allusion to the wandering habits of the insect. In the western counties it is called a hali-palmer (as if holy-palmer), perhaps a corruption from hairy-palmer, due to the religious associations connected with the palmer or pilgrim. See Adams, Philolog. Soc.
Trans. 1860-1, p. 95. Halliwell and Wright, from not understanding that millepes and multipes were used as mediæval names for the caterpillar, give palmer, incorrectly, as meaning a wood-louse.

Millepièdes the worme, or vermine, called a
Palmer.—Cotgrave.

Courtilliere, A kind of Palmer, or yellowish, and many legd vermin.—Id.

There is another sort of these Catterpillers, who haue no certaine place of abode, nor yet cannot tell where to find theyr fooode, but like vnto superstitious Pilgrims, doe wander and stray hither and thither, (and like Mise) consume and eate vp that which is none of their owne; and these haue purchased a very apt name amongst vs Englishmen, to be called Palmer-worms, by reason of their wandering and roghish life (for they neuer stay in one place, but are euer wandering) although by reason of their roughnes and ruggednes, some call them Beare-wormes. They can by no means endure to be dyeted, and to feede vpon some certaine herbes and flowers, but boldly and disorderly creepe ouer all, and tast of all plants and trees indifferently, and liue as they list.—Topsell, History of Serpents, 1608,
p. 105.

PANSY, old Eng. panuce, is derived,
as everybody knows, from Fr. pensée, thought. It has been conjectured that pensée may be a corruption of Lat.
panacea, Gk. panákeia, "heal-all." The Latin word seems to have been used with great latitude of meaning, and may perhaps have been transferred (as the name Heartsease also was) amid the general confusion to the viola tri- color.

Now the shining meads

Do boast the panuce, the lily, and the rose.
Jonson, The Vision of Delight.

Cf. Fr. panser, to heal, orig. to take care of, the same word as penser.

PANTABLE, an old word for a kind of shoe or slipper, as if from table, Ger.
tafel, a board (a German band-tafel is compared), is used by Lyly, Massinger, and others (Nares).

It is a corrupted form of the common old word pantofle, a slipper, Fr. pan- toufle, which seems to be for patoufle
(cf. Dut. pattuffel, Piedm. patofle), from patte. See Scheler, s.v. Another corruption is presented in the Catalonian plantofa, as if from planta, the sole of the foot.

PANTHER, apparently the animal which partakes of the characteristics of every beast, Greek panthēr (pan, every,
thēr, beast), is probably corrupted from Sanskrit pundarika, a leopard (Pictet, Benfey). See PAINTER.

PARADISE. This word we have borrowed from the Greek, where it is spelled parádeisos, as if compounded with the preposition para, beside. The Greeks in turn borrowed it from the Zend or old Persian word pairidaeza, compounded of pairi (= Gk. peri, around), and déz, a heap. So the strictly correct form would be peridise, a place heaped around, a circumvallation or enclosure, a park or garden, the latter being the sense the word bears in Greek, and so pardès in Hebrew (Song of Songs, iv. 13).—Spiegel, Justi, Delitzsch.

M. Littré observes that daeza (in pairidaeza) is a rampart, = Sansk. dēha, Gk. teichos. So pairi-daeza exactly corresponds to Greek péri-teichos.

PARAGON, a complete model or pattern, so spelt from false analogy to words like pentagon, heptagon, &c. (Fr. and Sp. paragon), is a word made up of the two Spanish prepositions para con, in comparison with (others), and so one that may be compared with others, a model or standard. See Skeat, s.v. With his faire paragon, his conquests part Approaching nigh, eftscones his wanton hart
Was tickled with delight.

Spenser, F. Queene, IV. i. 33.

PARALLELOPIPED, so spelt as if the o was the ordinary connecting vowel of compounds, as in camelo-pard, serio-comic, Græco-Roman, is a corrupt form of parallelepiped, from Lat. parallel-epipedum, Greek parallel-epipedon, "parallel-plane" (epipedon, a plane).—Skeat.

PARBOIL, to boil partially or insufficiently, understood as part-boil (like partake, for part-take, and participate, to take a part of), owes its meaning to an ancient misunderstanding of old Eng. parboyle, which once meant to boil thoroughly, old Fr. parbouillir, Lat. per-bullire, to boil thoroughly. The par-corresponds to Lat. per, thoroughly, as in par-don = Lat. per-donare.

Parboylm mete, Semibullio [al. parbullio].—Prompt. Parvulorum.

What a rare cat (sweet hart) have we two got,

That seeks for mise even in the porredgepot.

Nay, wife, (quoth be) thou maist be wonder'd at,

For making porredge of a perboild cat.

S. Rowlands, Four Knaves, 1613, p. 74
(Percy Soc.).

But from the sea, into the ship we turne

Like porboyl'd wretches, on the coales to burne. Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 152.

PARCHMENT, an old name for a species of lace, as if made on a pattern traced on parchment.

Nor gold nor silver parchment lace

Was worn but by our nobles:

Nor would the honest, harmless face

Weare ruffles with so many doubles.

Roxburge Ballads, The Map of Mockbeggor Hall.

It is really a corruption of Fr. passement, lace (Cotgrave, 1660), "a lace, such as is used upon livery clothes" (Miege, 1685), in ordinary usage a narrow tissue of silk, gold tinsel, &c., such as ribbons (Gattel), galloon trimming, gold or silver braid.

It was proposed in a parliamentary scheme, dated 1549, that no man under the degree of an earl should be allowed to wear "passamen lace."—The Egerton Papers, p. 11 (Halliwell, s.v.); see Notes and Queries, 5th S. ix. 7, 231.

The French word passement itself is not, as it would appear at first sight, a derivative of passer, with the customary suffix -ment, but a corruption of Sp. pasamano, lace, a border, originally a balustrade along which the hand (mano) passes (pasar).—Covarruvias, Diez, Scheler; just as guard is a very common word in the Elizabethan writers for the trimming, lace, or facing of a garment. Hence It. passamano, "any kind of lace for garments" (Florio). A fresh corruption is presented in Ger. posament, lace.

Figures and figurative speeches, . . . be the flowers as it were and colours that a Poet setteth vpon his language of arte, as the embroiderer doth his stone and perle, or passements of gold vpon the stuffe of a Princely garment.—G. Pattenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (1589), p. 150 (ed. Arber).

A faire blacke coate of cloth withouten sleve,
And buttoned the shoulder round about;

Of xx<sup>s</sup> a yard, as I beleve,
And layd vpon with parchment lace without.

F. Thynn, Debate between Pride and Loulinesse
(ab. 1568), p. 19 (Shaks. Soc.).

Above this he wore, like others of his age and degree, the Flemish hose and doublet, . . . slashed out with black satin, and passamented (laced, that is) with embroidery of black silk.—Scott, Fair Maid of Perth, chap. iv. sub init.

PARK-LEAVES, a popular name for the plant hypericum, Gk. hypêrikon, of which this, as well as its French synonym parcœur, "by-heart," are no doubt corruptions, with some reference perhaps to its perked (or pricked) leaves (Prior).

PARIS-CANDLE, a large wax-candle, apparently a corruption of perch- or parch-candle, one set on a perch; otherwise called a percher. Compare PERISH.

My lord Mayor hath a perch to set on his perchers when his gesse be at supper.—Calphill, Answer to Martiall, p. 300 [Davies].

PARMA CITY (Skinner), a corruption of spermaceti. According to Minshew from the city of Parma!

Parmaceti for an inward brnise.
Her. IV. Pt. I. i. 2, l. 58.

PARSLEY, Fr. persil, Low Lat. petrosillum, Lat. petroselinum, from Greek petro-selinon, rock-parsley, was sometimes regarded as a derivative of Lat. parcus, sparing, parcere, to spare.

Parsley, or Frugality.—Declines a man's estate in this world, as if his hand had scattered too lavishly, there is an herb in this garden; let him for awhile feed on it—parsley, parsimony. Hereon he will abridge himself of some superfluities; and remember that moderate fare is better than a whole college of physicians.—T. Adams, Contemplation of Herbs, Works, ii. 164.

PARSLEY-PERT, } a popular name for PARSLEY-PIERT, } the plant alchemilla, is a corruption of the French percepierre, "pierce-stone," from its supposed efficacy in cases of calculus (Erius, Bailey).

PARSNIP, } a corruption of old Fr.
PARSNIP, } pastenague, Lat. pastinaca, from a desire probably to assimilate the word to turnip or turnep.

PARTISAN, an old species of battle-axe, is a corruption of Fr. pertuisanc, which seems to be from pertuiser, to pierce (pertuis, a hole), from Lat. per-tusus, pertundere, to strike through. However, the Italian word is partegiana, a partesan, a iavelin, and parteggiano, a partyman (Florio). Skeat thinks that the word is an extension of O. H. Ger. partá, M. H. Ger. bartc = Eng. (hal-)berd, a battle-axe.

An Eagle chanced to snatch a Partisane out of a Soldiers hand; and thereupon some gathered a likely comfort, that the tyranny whereby the people were suppressed and trod vnder foot, should haue an end.—Howard,

Defensative against the Poyson of Supposed Prophecies, 1620, p. 16.

The labourers do go into the fields with swords and partizans, as if in an enemies countrey, bringing home their wines and oiles in hogs-skins.—Sandys, Travels, p. 7.

Compare part-eisen, a colloquial corruption of partisan (as if from eisen, iron), which may be frequently heard in Germany (Andresen).

PARTNER, so spelt as if a direct derivative from part, is a curious corruption, due to a misreading, of old Eng. parcener, from old Fr. parsonnier, Low Lat. partitionarius, a partitioner or sharer (Skeat).

I am parcener of alle that dreden thee; and kepen thin heestis.—Wycliffe, Ps. cviii. 63.

PASSAGE, an old game played with three dice, is said to be the French passé dix (Wright).

PASSAVANT, an old Eng. corruption of pursuivant, as if one who goes before (passé avant), and not one who follows (poursuit), a herald, Fr. poursuivant. A Scottish perversion of the same is purserhand (Jamieson).

In W. Cornwall a fussing meddlesome person is said to be pussivanting, that is, going about making inquisitions and visitations like a pursuivant (M. A. Courtney, Glossary, p. 45).

PASS-FLOWER, an old name for the anemone pulsatilla, a corruption of pasque-flower, the flower that blows at the passover or Easter time, Fr. pasques, Gk. pascha.

Pulsatille, Pulsatil, Pasque flower, Passe-flower, Flaw-flower.—Cotgrave.

After them a second kind of Passe-flower or Anemone, called also Leimonia, beginneth to blow.—Holland, Pithy's Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 92.

PASSING-MEASURE, } a slow dance, is PASSY-MEASURE, } a corruption of PASSA-MEASURE, } passamezzo from the Italian (passo, a step, and mezzo, mean, middle).

Prithee sit stil, thon must daunce nothing but the passing measures.—Lingua iii. 7 (1632).

Then he's a rogne, and a passy measures panyn.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, v. 1. 206.

PASSIONS, } popular names for a cer-PATIENCE, } tain species of dock or sorrel (polygonum Bistorta), appear to be corruptions of the Italian name under which it was introduced from the south, lapazio (Lat. lapathum), from its similarity of sound to la Passio, the Passion of Our Lord (Prior).

In Cheshire it is called Patient Dock.

Mist. May. Good Sir, lend me patience.

May. I made a sallad of that herb.

Webster, Northward Ho, i. 3.

You may recover it with a sallet of parsly and the hearbe patience.—Look about you, 1600, Sig. C. 3.

PASS-LAMB, a corrupt form of paske-lamb or paschal-lamb, with reference to the passing over of the destroying angel at the first passover, from Lat. and Greek pascha, the passover (a word often brought into connexion with Greek paschō, to suffer, by early writers), from Heb. pesach, a passing over. See PASS-FLOWER.

Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, quotes the following:—

I will compare circumcision with Baptism and the pass lamb with Christ's Supper.—Tyndale, iii. 245.

There's not a house but hath som body slain,
Save th' Israelites, whose doors were markt before

With sacred Pass-lamb's sacramentall gore.

Sylvester, The Lawe, 583.

PASS-PORT, Fr. passé-port, a safe conduct or permission to pass the gates (portes) of a town, seems to have superseded and been confounded with passé-par-tout, a permit to travel everywhere.

A travelling warrant is called Pasport whereas the original is Passe per tout.—Howell, Letters. iv. 19 (p. 475, ed. 1754).

Thus wildly to wander in the worlds eye,
Withouten pasport or good warrantye.

Spenser, Mother Hubberds Tale, p. 514
(Globe ed.)

PASTAUNCE, an old word for pastime, spelt so as to range with pleasauunce, is an Anglicized form of Fr. passé-temps, old Eng. pastans [for pass-tense].

Now herkis sportis, myrthis and mery plais,
Ful gudely pastance, and mony sindry wayis.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 126, l. 2
(ed. 1710).

PASTE-EGGS, } also called Pace-eggs, PAST-EGGS, } eggs stained various colours, customarily given as a present at Easter in the olden time, a corruption of Pasche, or Pasque, eggs, i.e. "Passover eggs." See Brand, Pop.

Antiquities, vol. i. p. 168-175 (ed. Bohn). Dutch paasch eyeren, Friesic peaske aaien.

Oeufs de Pasques, Past-eggs; eggs given to the children at Easter.—Cotgrave.

Holy Ashes, Holy Pace eggs, and Flams, Palmes, and Palme Boughes.—Beehive of the Romishe Church, 1579.

In some part of the North of England such eggs are still also presented to children at Easter, and called paste (pasque) eggs.—Arch, xv. 357 (1806) [in Davies].

Fase, Wycliffe's word for the pass-over (Exod. xii. 21, 43, Forshall and Madden), is a corruption of Lat. phase (Vulgate) = Eng. pace, pasch, Lat. pascha.

M. Mery. Nay for the poishe of God, let me now treate peace.—Udall, Roister Doister, iv. 3 (p. 65, ed. Arber).

M. Mery. A way for the pashe of our sweete Lord Iesus Christ.—Id. iv. 8 (p. 78).

Item, that part of the act maid be the Quin Regent in the parliament baldin at Edinbruche, 1 Februar 1552, giving special licence for halding of Peace and Zuill [i.e. Easter and Yule].—J. Melville, Diary, p. 297.

PATIENCE, an old name for a species of dock, seems to have been derived from Fr. lapace, It. lapazio, lapato (Lat. lapathium, lapathum, sorrel), misunderstood as la patience; Low Ger. patich. See PASSIONS.

Lapace, The ordinary or sharp-pointed Dock.—Cotgrave.

Lapas, Patience, Monks Rhewbarb.—Id.

Patientie, herbe Patience.—Id.

Lapato, the wild Docke or Patience.—Floria.

Cf. L. Lat. patientia (Pictet, Orig. Indo. Europ. i. 308).

He is troubled, like Martha, about many things, but forgets the better part. Give him some juice of bulapathum, which is the herb patience. "For he hath need of patience, that after he hath done the will of God, he might receive the promise."—T. Adams, The Soules Sickness (Works, i. 505).

Bulapathum; the herb Patience.—Is a man, through multitudes of troubles, almost wrought to impatience, and to repine at the providence of God, that disposeth no more ease? Let him fetch an herb out of the garden to cure this malady: bulapathum, the herb patience. . . . God hath an herb which he often puts into his children's salad, that is rue: and man's herb, wherewith he eats it, must be lupathum, patience.—T. Adams, A Contemplation of the Herbs, Works, vol. ii. p. 461.

PATRICK, the Scotch word for a part- ridge, old Eng. partriche, Fr. perdriva, Lat. and Greek perdia.

Let the creturs mak their ain nests, . . . like pheasants, or partricks, or muirfowl.—Nactes Ambrasianæ, vol. i. p. 25.

The whurr o' a covey o' partricks.—Id. p. 327.

The Partryche Quayle and Larke in fielde Said, her may not auayle but spere and sheld. Parlament of Byrdes, Early Pop. Poetry, iii. 173.

PATTER, a slang term for the language of street-folk, especially for the professional talk or harangue of showmen and jugglers, is not, as has been thought (Wedgwood), and as the spelling would suggest, the same word as patter, to yield a quick succession of reiterated sounds like hail or little feet (Fr. patte, Greek patein); compare pit-a-pat, Fr. pati-pata, Maori pata, Manchu pata-pata, to patter, Sansk. pat, to fall, words formed from the sound (see Taylor, Primitive Culture, vol. i. p. 192). So Jonson speaks of "the ratling pit-pat noise" of boys with their pop-guns (Petition of Poor Ben).

The original word was pater, i.e. to paternoster, or gabble over the Lord's Prayer in Latin, as people were accustomed to do in pre-Reformation times, repeatedly in rapid succession.

Compare Wallon paterliker, to say one's prayers often (Sigart).

Shee was not long in bibble babble, with saying she wist not what . . . she doth not as our Papistes doe, which prittle prattle a whole day upon theyr Beades, saying our Ladies Psalter.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 306, verso.

How blind are they which thinke prayer to be the pattering of many words.—Tyndall, Workes, p. 232 [Richardson].

Longfellow happily combines the meanings of the two words when he makes—

The hooded clouds, like friars,
Tell their beads in drops of rain,
And patter their doleful prayers.

Midnight Mass for the Dying Year.

I have part of my padareens to say, before I get to the chapel, wid a blessin'.—W. Carleton, Traits and Stories of Irish Peasantry, vol. i. p. 353 (ed. 1843).

And King Arthur gave her a rich patre of beads of gold, and so shee departed.—Malory, King Arthur, vol. i. p. 301 (1634), ed. Wright.
þou cowþeꝝ neuer god nauþer plesene ne pray,
Ne neuer nauþer pater ne crede.
Alliterative Poems, p. 15, l. 485 (ed. Morris).

So pater is popularly used in French, and paidir in Irish, as a short name for the Paternoster. It was "a superstitious conceit," as Archbishop Leighton (d. 1684) remarks in his Exposition of the Lord's Prayer, "to imagine that the rattling over these words is sufficient to prayer." Hence come such phrases as "Al thys was done as men say in a pater noster wyle."—Paston Letters, vol. i. p. 14 (ed. Fenn), that is, in a moment. "Indeed there is nothing sooner said, we may do it in a Pater-noster-while."—Farindon, Sermons, vol. iv. p. 241 (ed. Jackson). Langham (Garden of Health, 1597) directs an onion to be boiled "while one may say three paternosters." Among the Roman Catholics along the Rhine, the repetition of this prayer is still the measure of time for boiling an egg!

It is easy to see, then, how pater, to gabble a prayer mechanically, would mean after a time to babble or reel off any set form of words. Similarly the Spaniards say en un crédo (= in the twinkling of an eye.—La Vidade Lazaro de Tormes, 1595, p. 57), "en ménos que vn crédo, in lesse time then a man might say his beleefe or creed" (Minsheu); and "venir en un santiamen, to come in the twinkling of an eye: From the first and last words of a prayer omitting all the rest for brevity" (Stevens, Span. Dict. 1706). Génin quotes a French phrase, "Cette pluie n'a duré qu'unes sept saumes, comme aujourd'hui cinq Pater et cinq Ave" (Récréations Philolog. tom. i. p. 129), i.e. the seven penitential psalms. No wonder that breviarium, the breviary, degenerated into Fr. "Breberions, old dunsicall bookes, also the foolish charmes or superstitious prayers used by old and simple women against the toothache, &c." (Cotgrave), and finally became brimborion, a trifle or thing of little worth.

The street sellers of stationery, literature, and the fine arts . . . constitute principally the class of street-orators known in these days as "patterers," and formerly termed "mountebanks,"—people who, in the words of Strutt, strive to "help off their wares by pompous speeches, in which little regard is paid either to truth or propriety."—H. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, vol. i. p. 227.

It is not possible to ascertain with any certitude what the patterers are so anxious to sell, for only a few leading words are audible.—Id. p. 236.

Tyb. Lorde! how my husbände nowe doth patter,
And of the pye styl doth clatter.

Heywood, Dialogue on Wit and Folly,
p. xxxvii. (Percy Soc.).

Ever he patred on theyr names faste,
Than he had them in ordre at the laste.

How the Plowman Lerned his Paternoster,
ll. 159-160.

On the strength of this passage Prof. Skeat restored what is no doubt the true reading in the following:—

A and all myn A. b. e. after haue y lerned,
And patred in my pater-noster iche poynt
after oþer.

Peres the Ploughmans Crede (ab. 1394),
ll. 5-6.

The Prestes . . . doo vnderstonde no latine at all: but synge & saye and putter all daye with the lyppes only that which the herte vnderstondeth not.—W. Tyndale, The Obedience of a Christen man (1528), fol. xii.

Forth came an old knight
Pattering ore a creede.

The Boy and the Mantle, l. 82 (Child's Ballads, vol. i. p. 11).

Whom shoulde[n] folke worshippen so,
But us that stinten never mo
To patren while that folke may us see,
Though it not so behind hem be.

Romant of the Rose, l. 7195.

I have more will to ben at ease
And have well lever, sooth to say,
Before the people patter and pray.

Id. l. 6794.

Hence in Scotch to patter meant to mutter or talk in a low tone, with which Jamieson compares Armoric pateren, to say the Lord's Prayer. Bishop Gawin Douglas says, "Preistis suld be Patteraris" (Bukes of Eneados, 1553, Bk. viii. Prologue), i.e. men of prayer, on which the editor (1710) remarks, "In some places of England they yet say in a derisory way to patter out prayers, i.e. mutter or mumble them."

Similarly jargon, which has been incorrectly equated with old Eng. chirk, cearcian, is Fr. jargon, gibberish, It. gergo, from gergare, "to speake the pedlers french . . . the gibbrish or the rogues language" (Florio), which may be only another form of chercare, chiericare, to play the clerk (chercio, chierico, from Lat. clericus, clericare), then to speak Latin or a tongue "not understanded of the people," to speak unintelligibly. (The word was probably confounded with jargoviller, to warble or chatter of birds, lit. to use the jargeul, or throat, Eng. gargle.)

From the same source probably comes the old slang word jarkeman, one who can write and read, and sometimes speak Latin (Harman, 1573; Luther, Book of Vagabonds, p. xxix. ed. Hotten; Fraternitje of Vacabondes, 1575).

So cant is from Lat. cantare, to sing or intone a Service. Throughout the Middle Ages, any strange speech, and even the chatter and singing of birds, was called latin, It. latino, old Eng. leden, the language of the Church having become a by-word for unintelligible language.

E cantino gli augelli
Ciascuno in suo latino
Da sero e da mattino.

Dante, Canzone V. Opere, vol. v. p. 548
(ed. 1830).

Si oisiaus dit en son latin
Entendez, fet il à mon lai.

Le Lai de l'oiselet.

She understood wel every thing
That any foule may in his leden sain.
Chancer, The Squieres Tale, l. 10749.

In W. Cornwall talk or a song, &c., monotonously repeated, is "the same old lidden" (M. A. Courtney, E. D. S. p. 34).

PATTERERO, an old-fashioned cannon for throwing grape-shot, as if from its pattering or pelting like hail, is really the Sp. pedrero, Fr. perrier, a machine for throwing stones, pedra, pierre (Tylor, Prim. Culture, i. 194).

He planted his courtyard with patereroes continually loaded with shot.—Smollett, Peregrine Pickle, ch. i.

See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.vv. Paterero and Petrary.

PATTY, a little pie or tartlet, as oyster-patty, apparently akin to pat, is an Anglicized form of Fr. pâté, O. Fr. pasté, a pasty, Lat. pasta, Greek pasté, a (salt) besprinkled lump. Curious to observe, these words have no connexion with It. pastello, a little cake, or pie, pasto, food, Lat. pastillus, a little loaf, which are from Lat. pastus, food.

PAWN, a name for the peacock occurring in Drayton's Mooncalf, "Garish as the pawn," is a corruption of the French paon.

PAY, to cover with pitch, is from the old Fr. empoier, to pitch (French poix, pitch), poixer, to bepitch (Cotgrave), Span. pegar, empegar, from Lat. picare, to pitch (pix, pitch). So pay, to discharge a debt, Fr. payer, It. pagare, is from Lat. pacare, to pacify (a creditor), pa, peace.

Compare the proverb, "The devil to pay, and no pitch hot," where the allusion is said to be to a certain seam, called by sailors the "devil," from its awkwardness to caulk, which requires to be pitched.

With boiling pitch, another near at hand, From friendly Sweden brought, the seams instops,

Which well paid o'er the salt sea waves withstand

And shake them from the rising beak in drops.

Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 147.

Whom the Duke of Buckingham did soundly beat and take away his sword, and make a fool of, till the fellow prayed him to spare his life . . . and I wish he had paid this fellow's coat well.—Pepys, Diary, July 22nd, 1667.

PEA, a weight used with the steel-yard (South Eng.) is a corruption of the French poids, confounded with pois, a pea. Poids itself owes its form to a false etymology, being a derivative, not of Lat. pondus, but of pensum; cf. old Fr. pens, pes, pois, Ital. peso (Littre, Histoire de la Langue Françoise, tom. i. p. 65).

PEA, an old and provincial name for the peahen (Nares, Wright), which word is itself perhaps a corruption of the French paon (Prov. Eng. pawn), Lat. pavo(n). Compare old Eng. po, A. Sax. paue (Ger. pfau), whence old Eng. pacok, a peacock.

A priest [= priest] proud ase a po.

Political Songs, temp. Ed. 1. p. 159 (Camden Soc.).

PEA-GOOSE, a corruption of peak-goose (Beaumont and Fletcher, Prophetess, iv. 3) or peek-goose, a goose that peaks or looks sickly.

If thou be thrall to none of these,
Away, good Peek goos, hens, Iohn Cheese.

R. Ascham, Schoolmaster, 1570, bk. i. p. 54 (ed. Arber).

Gabriel Harvey has the false spelling

pick-goose, "The bookworm was never but a pickgoose" (Trench, Eng. Past and Present, Lect. iii.).

Benet, a ninnyhammer, a peu-goose, a coxe, a silly companion.—Cotgrave.

Respect's a clowne supple-jointed, courtesie's a verie peagoose; 'tis stiffe ham'd audacity that carries it.—Chapman, Mems. D'Olive, act iii.

The phlegmatic peagoose Asopus.—Urquhart's Rabelais, bk. iii. ch. xii. [in Davies].

PEA-JACKET, a rough overcoat worn by sailors, sometimes written P-jacket, and regarded as an abbreviation of pilot-jacket (Wright). The first part of the word is Dut. pij, pije, a rough coat, seen also in old Eng. court-py, a short cloak.

A kertil & a courtepy.—Piers Plowman, A. v. 63.

Philip Bramble was a spare man, about five feet seven inches high: he had on his head a low-crowned tarpaulin hat; a short P-jacket (so called from the abbreviation of pilot-jacket) reached down to just above his knees.—Capt. Marryat, Poor Jack, ch. xxii. p. 153 (1840).

PEARL-BARLEY, probably a corruption of pill-, or pilled-, barley.

Pilled, pelè, monde, whence pilled-barley.—R. Sherwood, Eng.-French Dict. 1660 [Wedgwood].

Orge mondé, a kind of Barley whose huske, when it is ripe, falls from it of itself—pilled and cleansed Barley.—Cotgrave.

PEARLING, in the Scottish dialect a kind of lace, and pearl, a seam-stitch in a knitted stocking, so spelt apparently from some fancied resemblance to a pearl or bead, like Fr. fil perlé, hard-twisted thread (Cotgrave), are less correct forms of Eng. perl, an edging for bone lace, contracted from purfle, a derivative of Fr. pourfiler, to border, It. porfilo (an outline), porfilare, the same word as profile. On the other hand, compare PURL.

Purle, a term in knitting, the act of inverting the stitches (Norfolk).—Wright, Prov. Dict.

PEARMAIN, a variety of pear, is probably not from Fr. poire and magne, great, as has been supposed (Sat. Review, vol. 46, p. 538), since Cotgrave gives "Poire de permain, the permain pear." It may, perhaps, from the analogy of poire de garde, a warden, or keeping, pear, be derived from a verb permanoir, as if poire de permanence.

Rough Elliott, Sweet Pearmain.—Philips, Cyder, 1700.

PEASWEEP, a name sometimes given to the lapwing, is properly a mere imitation of its cry. Compare its names, peewit, te-wit, teu-fit, tirichit; Scot. peeweip, pit-cake, tuquheit, thieve's-neck; Ger. kibitz; Dut. piewit, kiewit; Fr. diachuit; American Phoebe(-bird).—Bartlett.

The laverock, the peasweep, and skirlin' pick-maw

Shall hiss the bleak winter to Lapland awa'.
Andrew Scott, Rural Content.

The Russian peasant hears the bird crying Peet! Peet! i.e. Drink! Drink! from pit, to drink.

PEEL-BEAR, a Devonshire word for a pillow-case (Wright), is a corruption of pilwebere or pillowbere.

PEEL-CROW, Pilcrow (Tusser), pyl-crafte (Prompt. Parv.), a printers' term for the mark of a paragraph, of which word it is a corruption.

Why a peel-crow here?

Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iv. 1.
In husbandrie matters, where Pilcrowe ye finde,

That verse appertaineth to huswiferie kinde.
Tusser, 1580 (E. D. Soc.), p. 2.

PEELED, in the Authorized Version of Isaiah xviii. 2, 7, "a nation scattered and peeled," Ezek. xxix. 18, "every shoulder was peeled," signifies, not deprived of skin (Lat. pellis), but stript of hair (Lat. pilus, Fr. poil), robbed, Fr. pillé, and translates the Vulgate depilatus.

Compare

"Pyled as an ape."

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, 3933.

Peel'd priest.

Shakespeare, 1 Henry VI. i. 3.

Pyllid, or scallyd. Depilatus.—Prompt. Parv.

Pylled as one that wanteth heare, pellu.—Palsgrave.

Pillid prechouris.—Coventry Mysteries (Shaks. Soc.), p. 384.

(See Way's note in Prompt. Parv.)

When they be myghty and doubted, thenne ben they extorcionners and scatte and pylle the peple.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox (1461), p. 114 (ed. Arber).

But govern ill the nations under yoke,
Peeling their provinces, exhausted all
By lust and rapine.

Milton, Par. Regained, iv. 137.

So pillage is properly "fleeing," from Fr. piller (old Eng. pill, to plunder), Lat. pilare, to deprive of hair; words often confounded with peel, to take off the skin or rind, Fr. peler, It. pelare, from Lat. pellis, skin.

PEELSHOT, a Scotch word for the dysentery in cattle, seems to be the same word as pilsoucht, also a cattle disease, which has been resolved into pil, an arrow, and Teutonic sucht, sickness, as if "the arrow sickness" (Jamieson).

PEEP, in the phrase "Peep of Day," does not refer to the "opening eyelids of the morn" (Milton), when the day, as it were, looks forth timidly over the dark horizon, but is the substantival form of the old verb peep, "to cry like a chicken" (Bailey),—

Pepier, to peep, to cheep, or pule, as a young bird in the nest.—Cotgrave,—

Lat. pipire (vid. A. V. Is. viii. 19, x. 14).

Pypyng, crye of yonge bryddys.—Prompt. Parv.

So peep of day corresponds to the old Eng. :—

At daye pype, à la pipe du jour.—Palsgrave, (1530),— and denotes that moment at break of day when the birds begin to record and essay their earliest notes, as in Tennyson's wonderfully beautiful lines :—

Ah sad and strange as in dark summer's dawns

The earliest pipe of half-awakened birds
To dying ears, &c.

The corresponding term at the close of the day is Fr. "la pipée du Sor, the edge of the evening" (Cotgrave), with reference to their vesper song.

The uther [dove], at my hamcoming on the morn, as I was washing my hands, cam, lighted at my fute, and pitiusly crying, "Pipe, pipe, pipe!" ran a litle away from me . . . and parting from me with a pitifull piping, within twa or thrie houre died also.—J. Melville, Diary, 1588, p. 270.

Compare Scotch creek of day, skreigh (or skreek) of day, the dawn, connected with skreigh, a shrill cry, skry, the noise of fowls. (A shower about the time of daybreak is popularly "the cry of the morning.")

So "the grygymge of the daye" is an old English expression for the dawn; Scot.

gryking, greking, the peep of day; Shetland greek, daybreak; Dut. kriecken, peep of day (Sewel); all allied to creak, to emit a sharp sound. It is quite possible, however, and even probable from the frequent interchange of words expressive of sound and light, that a word like pipe, denoting a small faint cry, a chirp, would eventually come to be applicable to the faint light of incipient day.

Compare the following:—

The morrowe graye no sooner hath begunne
To sprede his light euen peping in our eyes,
When he is vp and to his worke yrunne.

T. Sackville, Mirrour for Magistrates, 40 (1563).

They came post-haste; for the Sunne did no sooner peepe, but even at the verie breake of the day, they were all ready to flocke unto the Judge against him.—H. Smith, Sermons, p. 388.

The early morn let out the peeping day,
And strew'd his path with splendid marigolds:

The moon grows wan, and stars flee all away,
Whom Lucifer locks up in wonted folds.

P. Fletcher, The Purple Island, canto xi. st. 1.

In a morning up we rise,
Ere Aurora's peeping,
Drink a cup to wash our eyes,
Leave the sluggish sleeping.

I. Walton, Compleat Angler (1653), chap. xi.

PELLITORY, an herb (Bailey), Sp. pelitre, a corruption of Lat. pyrethrum, Greek pyrethron, the fiery plant (pur, fire), so called from its hot taste (Gerarde, Herbal, p. 619). Quite distinct from this is pellitory, the name of a wild flower that grows on walls, which stands for paritory, Fr. paritoire, Lat. parietaria, the flower that grows on walls (parietes). The name "pellitory of Spain" was sometimes incorrectly given to the plant "imperatoria or Masterwort" (Gerarde, 619, 848), apparently from a confusion of imperatoria with parietaria.

Take pesole, pelitre an oyns, and grynde.
—Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 27.

PENNANT, another form of pennon, Fr. pennon, It. pennone, a flag or streamer, from Lat. penna, pinna, a wing, flap, assimilated partly to the word pendant, like the Sp. pendone (a flag), as if from pendere, to hang.

Vpon the wall a watchman standeth continually, to discover the shipping that approacheth: who hangs out as manie flags as he descrieth vessels; square if ships, if gallies pendants.—Sandys, Travels, p. 6.

A furious tempest suddenly arising, the main-mast was split in pieces with a clap of thunder; the pendant on the top of the main-top-mast was burnt to ashes.—Mather, Providences in New England, p. 77 (ed. Ofor).

PENNY-ROYAL, a corruption of its old English name pubiol royal (Dut. poley), Lat. pulegium regium.

Pulege, Penny royall, Puliall royal, Puding-grasse, Lurkydish.—Cotgrave.

Pyleol Royal, Origanum.—Prompt. Parv.

Tusser, 1580, spells it peneriall, and penal riall (E. D. Soc. pp. 94, 95).

Doth poverty fasten her sharp teeth in a man's sides, and cannot all his good industry keep want from his family? Let him come to this garden for a little penny-royal, content. . . . He gathers hence infallibly, that God will bless his honest endeavours; and whiles he is sure of God's benediction, he thinks his penny-royal, his poor estate, rich.—T. Adams, Works, ii. 463.

In Mid. High Ger. pulegium became polenkrüt, as if the Polish plant; in French pouliot, and thence corruptly Wallon polué, pouyé.

PENNY-WIDDIE, a Scottish word for a small dried haddock not split, is a corruption of pin-the-widdie (Jamieson), perhaps so called from being hung on a widdie or withy.

PENNY-WINKLE, } as names of a small PERIWINKLE, } shell-fish, are cor-ruptions of its ancient name, A. Sax. pine-wincla (Skeat), which was assimilated to the plant-name periwinkle, which stands for old Eng. peruente, Lat. pervinca. Penny-winkle therefore is nearer to the original.

Many giue counsell for the cough . . . to drinke in hot water the flesh of a raw perwinckle well punned.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Historie, vol. ii. p. 442.

The first part of the word, A. Sax. pine, old Eng. pyne, is borrowed from Lat. pina, or pinna, Greek pinna, a shell-fish: the meaning of the compound, therefore, is the wreathed, or turbinated, shell-fish.

At last the Romans made a pyne [Lat. pina] of copper and gilt and sette it in a ryght hyghe place. And it is sayde all the provynces were entaylled and graven merveylously wythin that pyne.—Caxton, Golden Legend, 1483, fol. 197.

In Acarnania there is a little Cochle called Pinna [i. a Nacre] which engendreth such [pearls].—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 256.

The following refer to the flower:—

A gerland of peruenke set on ys heved.

Political Songs (ed. Wright), p. 218.

Heo is lillie of largesse,

Ilco is peruenke of pronesse.

Bödeker, Alteng. Dichtungen,
p. 170, l. 52.

As for the Pervinck it continueth fresh and greene all the yeare long.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 92.

PENSIL, a Somerset word for a boil, also spelt pinswil and pinswheal, in the Dorset dialect pin-sweale, a boil or pimple, apparently from A. Sax. pin, pain, and swelan, to burn.

In Devonshire the word appears as pinsole (to cure which a curious charm is given in the Transactions of the Devonshire Association, vol. ix. p. 96), and pinswill.

A' is cruel a' troubled wi' pinswills and nimpingys.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 32.

PENTHOUSE, a corruption of pentice, a sloping shed, Fr. appentis, It. pendice, Lat. appendix, something hanging on by, or appended to, another, an out-house or shed, from pendere, to hang. The name for such an erection in the Dorset dialect is a hangen-house.

Other forms are appenticium, pentees, (Parker, Glossary of Architecture); Fr. "soïpendue, a pent-house, jutti, or part of a building that juttieth beyond, or leaneth over, the rest" (Cotgrave). Wash-house, work-house, bake-house, being vulgarly pronounced washus, workus, bakus, so pentis, pentice, was mistaken for pentus, and resolved by "correct" speakers into pent-house.

From the storke in the top of the Firre tree, to the Swallow that buildeth under every pent-house.—Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, fol. p. 199.

Pentice of an howse ende, Appendicium.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

A pentis, appendix.—Cath. Anglicum.

Caxton speaks of

The rayne watres that fallen donne a-long the thackes of thappentices and houses.—Boke of the Fayt of Armes, pt. ii. c. 17.

To-falle, schudde (or shedde), appendicium, appendix.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

How, if on Swithin's feast the welkin lours,
And ev'ry penthouse streams with hasty show'rs,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain.

Gay, Trivia, bk. i. l. 185.

In the Wallon dialect of French, a pent-house is called une zacinte, orig. "fournil fait à zacinte," which is a corruption of the word adjacent, mistaken for à zacinte (Sigart).

PERCOCK, a kind of early apple (Wright), from præcox, early ripe. See PRINCOCK.

PERFORM, so spelt as if compounded of Lat. per and formare, to do or form thoroughly, is a corrupted form of old Eng. perfourn or parfourn, Fr. parfournir, to accomplish or furnish thoroughly. The form parfurnysh is also found. See parformer, parfournir (Roquefort). Similarly Prov. formir, corresponds to Fr. fournir, It. formire (Diez), probably from O. H. G. frumjan, Goth. fruma (Littré).

Parformyn, or fullyllyn, Perficio.—Prompt. Parv. ab. 1440.

le achieve, declared in I parforme.—Palsgrave, 1530.

In an ancient poem entitled—

Here Begynneth The Justes Of The Moneth of Maye Parfurnyshed And Done By Charles Brandon, Thomas Knyuet, Gyles Capell, and Wyllyam Hussy. The xxii yere of the reygne of our Souerayne lorde Kyng Henry the seuenth.

occur these lines:—

On horsbacke mounted for to proue theyr myght

Two seruauntes of this lady of delyte . . .
. . . That to *parfurnyssh*e theyr chalenge dyde entende.

Early Pop. Poetry, vol. ii. p. 116, l. 69.

Lo! suche a wrakful wo for wlatsume dede

Parformed þe hyȝe fader on folke þat he made.

Alliterative Poems, p. 52, l. 542.

I parfourned þe penance þe preast me enioyned.

Vision of Piers the Plowman, B. v. 67 (ed. Skeat).

He that thenkith schrewid thingis with iȝen astonyed, biȝith hise lippis, and parformeth yuel.—Hycliffe, Proverbs, xvi. 30.

Nowe it remaineth that we deliuer vnto you the Dogges of a mungrell or a currishe kinde, and then will wee perfourme our taske.—A. Fleming, Caius of Eug. Dogges, 1576, p. 33 (repr. 1880).

PERISH, as used in the phrase, "I am perished with the cold," i.e. penetrated through and through (e.g. Evans, Leicestershire Glossary), is undoubtedly a corrupted form of the provincial and old Eng. persch, persh, or pershe, to pierce, Fr. percer, old Fr. peruisier, It. (perciare) perugiare, from Lat. perustus (perundo), through a form perustiare.

Peercynge, or borynge (perchinge, or per-singe) Perforacio.—Prompt. Parv. ab. 1440. pare was a knyghte redye with a spere and perchede þe syde of Ihesu.—Religious Pieces (ab. 1440), E.E.T.S. p. 42.

Perche myne herte for pure petie.—Id. p. 85.

Persh, persch, are found in Merlins (ab. 1450), E.E.T.S. pp. 155, 327.

His 4 sonnes were all a bowne flor to perish his Acton, double Maile and plate.

Percy Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 460, l. 1246.

Richard Hawkins mentions that in an engagement with the Spaniards off Quito in 1594, he received a wound—

Through the arm, perishing the bone, and cutting the Sinewes close to the arme-pitte.—The Hawkinses Voyages, Hakluyt Soc.

His hert was perysshed with very compas-syon.

Life of Joseph of Armathia, 1520, l. 13 (E.E.T.S. No. 44, p. 37).

In the Cleveland dialect, perching, peerching, is piercing, penetrating, of the cold, or a cold wind; perishment, a thorough chill (Atkinson).

It's a pearchan cold-wind, this!—Dickinson, Cumberland Glossary, p. 71.

Curious to say, parch, to scorch or burn slightly, may be substantially the same word; compare "Parchyd, as pesys, or benys, Fresus [i.e. ground or crushed]."—Prompt. Parv.; Lat. fabce fresce, ground (? split) beans; "Paarche pecyn, or benys, Frigo."—Id. The word seems to have meant (1) to split or grind peas or beans, and (2) to toast them.

For the same word being indicative of the action both of heat and cold, compare Lat. uro, (1) to burn, (2) to frost-bite, and Milton's "The parched air burns frore [= frosty]." Perish, however, was formerly used as a transitive verb, meaning to destroy.

He mas þan vowes, and cryes on Crist,
For, he es afered þat he sal be peryst.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 2943.

PERIWIG, old Eng. perwicke, a corruption of Dutch perwik, "perwijk, a perwig" (Sowel, 1708), Fr. perruque, It. perruca, Sp. peluca, Sard. pilucca, from Lat. pilus, hair. Wig is the result of dropping the first part of the word, which was perhaps mistaken for a prefix, peri; uke instead of peruke (which is the same word) would be a parallel formation.

His disshevel'd beames, and scattered fires
Serve but for Ladies Periwigs and Tyres.

Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 201.

For which bald place, the Reader (if so pleased) may provide a perewake, and with his pen insert such Sheriffes as come to his cognizance.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 73.

Nay, after that his clinne hath lost his pride,

'Twill put him to a periwigge beside.

S. Rowlands, Four Knaves, 1611, p. 52
(Percy Soc.).

PERLINGS, } otherwise "Purlins,
PURLINGS, } pieces of Timber which lie across the Rafters on the inside, to keep them from sinking in the middle of their Length" (Bailey), is a corrupt form of the old word purloynes, "prolongations," from a French pourloigner, = Lat. prolongare.

A contract for putting a roof on the chapel of St. John atte hill in Bury, 1438, agrees that it shall have "atwix iche two princepals a purloyne, a iope, and iij sparrys."—Parker, Glossary of Architecture, s.v. Jopy.

PERRE, an old Eng. name for the pearl, Fr. perré (from pierre, petra), which appears anciently, as Mr. Way observes, to have been considered a precious stone, O. Eng. pery, perreye.

Perre, perle, Margarita.—Prompt. Parv.
Peerle, a stone, perle.—Palsgrave.

A perle stone, margarita.—Cath. Ang.

PERT, saucy, impudent, is no doubt often regarded as being merely the accented syllable of im-pert-inent (like slang 'tec' for a de-tec-tive), or of mal-a-pert (Fr. mal apert = ill-bred). It is really the same word as Prov. Eng. peart, perk, brisk, lively, Welsh pert, percus, smart, pert; Eng. to perk (Skeat).

And she was proud, and pert as is a pie.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 3948.

When he perceyues Don Cortez here so parte,
 May well be mindefull of his own deserte.
S. Gosson, see School of Abuse (ed. Arber),
 p. 78.

PERUSE, to read attentively, is probably no derivative, as it appears at first sight, of Lat. peruti, perusus, to use thoroughly, but a corruption of peruise, the old way of writing pervise (so Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 22, and Webster), Lat. pervisere (from pervideo), to view thoroughly, to scan, survey, or examine closely, which is the original signification of peruse also. In a letter of Leicester to Walsingham, dated 1588, he gives particulars of his visit "to peruse" the fort at Gravesend and at Tilbury (Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. i. p. 370). With peruse for pervise we may compare old Eng. rule for reuel, the old way of writing revel (and so mis-rule formerly at Christmas-tide for mis-revel.—Douce), e.g. Reuel, Reueloure (Prompt. Parv. c. 1440). "North Eng. reul, to be unruly."—Wright. So "This uncivil rule" (Twelfth Night, ii. 3) = noisy sport, revel. Dyce quotes from Cole's Lat. Dictionary, "Rule (stir), Tumultus."

How now, mad spirit!
 What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 2, l. 4.

Cf. O. Eng. recure for recover, curfew for couvre-feu, lauandress for lavandress, auntre for aventure. Somewhat similar contractions are rule, O. Fr. ruile, from Lat. regula; tile, O. Fr. tuile, from Lat. tegula; roster, a list of men on active service (? for reister), old Eng. reister, i.e. register (rejister). In Have-lok the Dane, l. 2104, reure occurs for reaver, robber; and so poor, O. Eng. pourre (for povre = Fr. pauvre), "To begge of the power and nedy."—Rede me and be nott wrothe, p. 76 (1528); Leveson spelt Lusun in Machyn's Diary (1560), p. 245, and still so pronounced; Devonshire ranish for ravenish, shewl or showl for shovel; West country rawn for raven; Scot. deil for devil; old Eng. pament, pawment, for pavement; manure from manceuvre; Lat. mutare for movitare; nuntius for noventius.

I therefore most feruently stirred up by your gracis comforte in perusyng my saied

Dictionarie have proceded to the correction and amplificacion thereof in suche fourme as hereafter foloweth.—Bibliotheca Eliotæ Eliotis
Librarie, 1545, Preface.

Further I am not to wade in the foorde of this discourse, because it was my purpose to satisfie your expectation with a short treatise (most learned Conrade) not wearysome for me to wryte, nor tedious for you to peruse.—
A. Fleming, Caius of Eng. Dogges, 1576, p. 38
 (repr. 1880).

Perusing yesteright, with idle eyes,
 The Fairy Singer's stately tuned verse,
 . . . I streight leapt ouer to the latter end.
T. Nash, Pierce Penillessé, 1592, p. 92
 (Shaks. Soc.).

Thus perusing all the ladies and gentle-women, to some they loste, and of some they wonne.—Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, Words- worth, Eccles. Biog. vol. i. p. 359.

I climbed the Hill, perus'd the Crosse
 Hung with my gaine, and his great losse.
Vaughan, Silex Scintillans, 1650,
The Search.

PESTER, to trouble, harass, or annoy
 (by importunity, &c.), is popularly connected with pest (Lat. pestis), as if to plague one, and so identical with Fr.
empester, to set the plague on, give the plague unto (Cotgrave), empesté, plaguy, pestilent, pestiferous (Id.). Thus Bailey and Richardson. When St. Paul was accused of being "a pestilent fellow" (Greek "a plague"), Acts xxiv. 5, to the Jews, in modern parlance he would be said to have pestered them, just as a very troublesome person is sometimes called "a regular pest." The old meaning, however, was to embarrass, to clog, to throng, to crowd, originally to fetter or impede, and so encumber or deprive of free action; and it is derived from old Fr. empestrer, to pester, intricate, intangle, trouble, incumber (Cotgrave), Mod. Fr. empêtrer; It.
impastojare ("impastojato, put into shackles, or fetters, or pasterns."— Florio), to fetter or shackle; literally, to confine with a pastern or horse's clog, pastaja or pastora, Low Lat. pas- torium, a shackle for cattle at pasture, a pasturing tether (Diez).

So many dishes shal you haue pestering the table at once, as the unsaciabest fellow, the devouringst glutton, or the greediest comrant that euer was, can scarce eate of every one a little.—Stubbes, Anatomie of Abuses, p.
 59.

They could not close their ranks in the front, nor ioyné them together in the midst of the battell . . . and to fight hand to hand

they were so pestered behind, that one thronged and overlaid another.—North, Plutarch (Flaminius), p. 384 (1612).

Let but Falstaff come,
Hal, Poins, the rest, you scarce shall have a room

All is so pestered.

Leonard Digges, Verses to Shakspeare.

I pray you look into the streets, and the chambers or lodgings in Fleet Street or the Strand, how they are pestered with them (coaches) especially after a mask or a play in the court.—John Taylor, The World runs on Wheels.

Which [canonization] the Pope is very sparing to confer; First, because sensible that multitude of Saints abateth veneration. Secondly, the kalender is filled (not to say pestered) with them, justling one another for room, many holding the same day in copartnership of festivity.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 8 (ed. 1811).

Or saw the churches, and new calendar,
Pester'd with mongrel saints and relics dear.

Bp. Hall, Satires, bk. iv. sat. 7.

We may suppose the multitudes had not so pestered the Town but that one Lodging might be spar'd, if there were horse-room in the Stable, as it appears there was, because Christ lay in the manger.—Bp. Hacket, Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 9.

PETER, a Scandinavian name for

The pious hird with the scarlet breast

Our little English Robio,

Peter Ronsmad in Norway, looks like a perversion of its name in southern Europe, It. pettorosso, pettirosso, a Rudcocke or Robin-red-breast (Florio), Sp. petiroxo.

Art thou the Peter of Norway boors?

Their Thomas in Finland,

And Russia far inland?

The bird, that by some name or other

All men who know thee call their brother?

Wordsworth, Poems of the Fancy, xv.

PETER, an old English name for the plant peretrum (i.e. pyrethrum), of which word it is a corruption. Cf. PELLITORY.

Petyr, herbe (also peretre, and petyr).
Peretrum.—Prompt. Parv.

Petyr, propr name. Petrus.—Id.

The same word has been curiously corrupted into different proper names. See BERTRAM.

PETER, in Blue Peter, the name of a flag (a white square on a blue ground) which is hoisted to give notice that a vessel is about to set sail, is sometimes said to be a corruption of Fr. partir (to depart). Mahn (Webster, Dict. s.v.) suggests with more probability that it is for Blue Repeater, one of the British signal flags.

PETER-GRIEVOUS, a Sussex word for fretful, whining, e.g. "What a pete-grievous child you are!" Mr. Parish thinks may be from Fr. petit-grief, but this seems doubtful.

PETER-SEE-ME, a wine mentioned by Taylor the Water Poet, and in Middleton's Spanish Gipsy, iii. 1, also called Peter-simine, is a corruption of Pedro Ximenes.

The Pedro Ximenes, or delicious sweet-tasted grape which is so celebrated, came originally from Madeira, and was planted on the Rhine, from whence about two centuries ago one Peter Simon brought it to Malaga, since when it has extended over the south of Spain.—Foid, Gatherings from Spain, p. 152.

I am phlegmaticke as may be,

Peter see me must inure me;

I am sanguine for a Ladie

And coole Rhenish shall conjure me.

Brathwaite, Vandunk's Four Humours, &c.

1617.

PETRONEL, an old fire-arm, so called, not, as would appear at first sight, from discharging stone bullets, like the perriere or paterero (from pierre, petra), but from its being discharged from the breast (Fr. poitrine, Lat. pectus), its French name being poictrial. So petrel, a breastplate, is from Fr. poict-rail.

PETTICOAT TAILS, a Scotch name for a species of tea-cake, a corruption of petits gateaux, little cakes; the name and the thing are said to have been introduced by Mary Stuart.

Never had there been such slaughtering of capons and fat geese and barn-door fowls—never such boiling of reested hams—never such making of car-cakes and sweet scones, Selkirk bannocks, cookies, and petticoat-tails—delicacies little known to the present generation.—Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xxvi. (sub init.)

PETTITOE, so spelt as if it denoted little toes, is said to be "a corruption of Norm. petots, little feet (Patois de Brai), so modified as to give the word an apparent meaning in English" (Wedgwood).

It. Peduccii, all manner of feete, or petitoes.—Florin.

PHARAOH, the name of an old game in the comedy Which is the Man? (p. 60), by Mrs. Cowley, is a corrupt spelling of faro, apparently from It. faro, "I will do or make."

Faran, a sort of game.—Boiley.

The Princess Craon has a constant pharaoh and supper every night.—Horace Walpole, Letters (ed. Cunningham), vol. i. p. 53 (1740).

Nannette last night at twinkling Pharaoh play'd. Gay to Pulteney.

May I never taste the dear delight of breaking a Pharaoh bank.—The Way to Keep Him, act i. (1760) [in Davies].

PHARISEES, a popular corruption in Sussex, Hampshire, and elsewhere, of "fairies," old Scotch phairies or pha-reis, the guid wichtis (J. G. Dalryell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland, p. 538). Cf. Manx ferrish, a fairy.

A preacher in a country village once preached on the text, "There was a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus—The same came to Jesus by night." An old woman of the parish said she liked the discourse very much indeed, "And I always did hear say that it was by night the fairies danced on Harborough Hill.—Rev. J. M. Neale, Mediæval Preachers, p. xlvii.

PHILBERT, } a corrupt spelling of PHILBERD, } filbert or filberd, the hazel-nut, from a mistaken notion that it was "so named of Philibert, a King of France, who caused by arte, sundry kinds to be brought forth."—Peacham. But thou art of those harvesters I see Would at one shooke spoile all the philberd tree. Peele, Eglogue, 1589.

The Philibert that loves the vale,
And red queen apple, so envie
Of school-boys passing by the pale.
Peacham, Emblems, 1612 [Richardson].

Filberd, old Eng. fylberde, Prov. Eng. filbeard (Cheshire, and so Tusser), would seem to signify the nut which completely fills the beards of the calyx, instead of projecting beyond them (Wedgwood), and indeed beard-tree is a popular name for the tree which produces the filbert, Corylus avellana (Britten and Holland); compare the German name bart-nusz, "beard-nut." Beard, then, must be an undoubted part of the word, but fil- has nothing to do with the verb to fill, being a relic of the mediæval name of the nut, fillum, for phyllum (Greek phúllon), the tree being called phyllis (Greek phúllis).

Fylberde, notte, Fillum.

Filberde, tree, Phillis.

Prompt. Parvulorum (c. 1440).

On this latter word Gower has woven a story:—

That Phillis in the same throwe
Was shape into a nutte-tre,
That alle men it might se;
And after Phillis philliberd
This tre was cleped in the yerd:
And yet for Demephton to shame,
Into this day it bereth the name.

Confessio Amantis, vol. ii. p. 30 (ed. Pauli).

Filbert, then, would originally have been a mongrel compound, phyllio-beard (= "leafy-beard"), philliberd.

Filberds are covered with a soft bearded huske.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 446.

Instead of flowers [of the Filberd] hang down catkins, agets or blowings, slender and well compact; after which come the Nuts standing in a tough cup of a greene colour; and iagged at the vpper end, like almost to the beards in Roses.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1250.

The fulbyrdes hangyng to the ground,
The fygge-tre, and the maple round,
And other trees there was mané oue.

The Squyre of Lowe Degre, l. 39.

The pith or meat [of the Coco-nut] is above an inch thick, and better relisht then our Philberts, enough to satiate the appetite of two reasonable men.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, 1653, p. 30.

PHILIPPINE. When a person lights on a nut with a double kernel, it is customary in some places for the finder to challenge one of the company to be his or her Philippine, it being understood that whichever at their next meeting is the first to cry Philippine! will be entitled to a pair of gloves or other forfeit. A nut of the kind described is also called a Philippine nut. This custom has not been noticed, I think, in any volume of folk-lore, but may be traced in Ireland, England, and America. The word would seem to be borrowed from Ger. Philippinchen, used in the sense of a sweet-heart or valentine, a corruption of Viel-liebchen. The Americans sometimes incorrectly spell it philopena (Bartlett). See Notes and Queries, 6th Ser. iv. 174.

PHILOMOT, an old word denoting a certain pale yellow tint, assimilated in its form to words like philomath (derived from the Greek philos), is a corruption of the French feuille morte, and so implies the colour of a dead leaf.

One of them [the hoods] was bluè, another yellow, and another philomot.—Addison, The Spectator, 1711, No. 265.

Swift (Advice to Servants) speaks of a filemot colour, and Woodward (On Fossils) of a foliomort colour.

PHLEGME, an old incorrect form of phleam, a lancet (commonly spelt fleam), from Lat. phlebotomum, Greek phlebo-tómon, = "vein-cutter," whence also M. H. Ger. fliedeme, and Fr. flamme. The Eng. word has passed through the stages phlebotomum, phle'tomum, phle'omum, phle'am.

The Phlegme or lancet, is that Instrument wherewith they vse to open a Veine, and may be of vse in tender and Soft parts, and where the Apostemation is outward.—H. Croke, Practise of Chirurgery, 1631, p. 3.

PIANO ROSE, a corruption of Peony Rose (Antrim and Down Glossary, Paterson).

PICK-AXE is a modern corruption of the old Eng. pikeys or pykeys (Prompt. Parv.; Robert of Brunne), or pikois; Somerset peckis (Williams and Jones, Glossary); picoise (Wycliffe, 1 Kings xiii. 20); old Fr. picois.

Thurske . . . markyd out there the foresaid place withe an iron pukkes.—Deposition, quoted in Stanley's Westminster Abbey, p. 513. Ech man to pleye with a plonh · a pycoyse oþer a spade.

W. Langland, Vision of P. Plowman, C. Pass. iv. 465 [see Skeat's ed. pt. 4 (Notes), p. 72].

PIE-POWDER COURT, a court attached to fairs in the olden time, having summary jurisdiction to arrange disputes between buyer and seller, literally "The wayfarer's court," from Fr. pieds poudreux, = Scot. dustifute, "a fair and man." Vid. Morley, Memoirs of Bartholomew Fair, pp. 76-79; Soane, New Curiosities of Literature, ii. 161.

Pie poudreux, etranger, marchand forain, qui court les foires.—Roquefort.

Is this well, goody Joan, to interrupt my market in the midst, and call away my customers? Can you answer this at the pie-poudres?—Ben Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iii. 1.

He was an officer in the court of pie-poudres here last year.—Id. iv. 1.

PIG AND WHISTLE, as the sign of an inn, was once in Danish, it is said,

Pige Washael, the maiden's greeting, i.e. the salutation of the B. Virgin (Miss Yonge, Christian Names, i. 267). But this is more than doubtful; see Hotten and Larwood, Hist. of Signboards, p. 437 (3rd ed.).

PIGGESNIE is given by Dr. Prior as an old popular name of the pink, being applied, in conjunction with the prime-rose or primrose, as a complimentary term to a lady in Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 3268. Tyrwhitt thought it meant a "pig's eye"! Another form is pinckanie, a term of endearment (Wright). Pigany and pickanniny are probably the same word. It has been considered a corruption of pinksten-eye, i.e. Low Ger. pingsten, Ger. pfingsten (= Greek pentēkostē), Whitsuntide, and eye = Fr. œillet (Lat. ocellus), denoting (1) a little eye, (2) a pink (Pop. Names of Brit. Plants). Compare Spinks = Dut. Pinkster-bloem; Ger. pfingstrose, the peony; Dan. pask-lilja, the daffodil; Lent-lily, Gang-flower, Michaelmas daisy, Christmas rose, &c.

More probably piggesnie is another form of pinkanie or pinknye, one with small twinkling eyes (cf. Lat. ocelle mi! as a term of endearment, Plautus), from Prov. and old Eng. pink, to wink or twinkle (Dut. pinken, pinkoogig).

Upon drynkynge my eyse will be pinkynge. Heywood, The Four P's (Dodsley, i. 72, ed. 1825).

Though his eye on us therat pleasantlie pinke. Heywood, Spider and Flie, 1556.

Them that were pinke-eyed and had very small eyes they termed ocellæ.—P. Holland, Pliny N. Hist. 1634, vol. i. p. 335.

Laneham has pink nyez, which comes very near to pinkanye, and Shakespeare:—

Plumpy Bacchus with pink eyne.
Antony and Cleop. ii. 7.

I find by her stink
And the pretty pretty pink
Of her nyes, that half wink,
That the tipling feast,
With the doxy in the nest,
Hath turned her brain
To a merry merry vein.

Brome, A Jovial Crew, ii. 1.

R. Royster. What, she will helpe forward this my sute for hir part.

M. Merry. Then ist mine owne pygs nie, and blessing on my hart.

Udall, Roister Doister, i. 4, p. 27 (ed. Arber).

M. Mery. To mine owne deare coney birde, swete heart, pigsny
 Good Mistresse Custance present these by and by. Id. p. 50.

All the bumbast, epithetes, pathetical adjuncts incomparably fair, curiously neat, divine, sweet, dainty, delicious, etc. pretty diminutives corculum, suaviolum, etc, pleasant names may be invented, bird, mouse, lamb, puss, pigeon, pigsney, kid, hony, love, dove, chicken, etc, he puts on her.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, III. ii. 4, 1.

Pigs, in the common sayings,
 "Please the pigs," "Please God and the pigs," is the Somerset pigs, fairies or pixies, probably akin to Puck (as if pucksy), Icel. puki, Welsh pwca, Corn.
bucka, a goblin.

PIKE-STAFF. The proverbial simile,
 "As plain as a pike-staff," is an old corruption of "As plain as a pack-staff," which is the common form of the saying in Leicestershire (Evans, Glossary, E.D.S.), the pack-staff being the stick on which the packman or pedlar carries his pack over his shoulder.

Some say my satires over loosely flow,
 Not, riddle-like, obscuring their intent;
 But, pack-staff plain, ut'ring what thing they meant.

J. Hall, Satires, 1597, Prologue, bk. iii.
 (ed. Singer).

His honestie
 Shall be as bare as his anatomie,
 To which he bound his wife. O, packstaffe rimes!

Why not, when court of stars shall see these crimes?

Marston, Scourge of Villanie, 1599, Sat. I.
 (Works, iii. p. 249, ed. Halliwell).

You make a doubt, where all is as plaine as a pike staffe; you seeke a knot in a bulrush, in which is never any at all.—R. Bernard,
Terence in English, 1641, p. 89.

But pike-staff is an old word, occurring in Langland:—

My plow-fote shal be my pyk-staf.—Vision of Piers Plowman, B. vi. 105.

PILE, when used of a large and stately building, as Westminster Abbey might be spoken of as a splendid pile, generally understood to be only another use of pile, a heap, as if referring to the vast accumulation of stone and material used in its erection, is old Eng.
pile, a castle, Scot. pele, peel, or peill,
 a fortress or stronghold; north Eng.
peel and pile, a tower (Wright); Welsh pill, a stronghold or castle, still found in the Pile of Foul Bray (Philolog. Proc.

 vi. 131); the same word as pile, a large stake driven into the earth as a support for a foundation, then a pier or pillar, from Lat. pila, a pier or pillar. Pile,
 a heap, a round mass, is from the Lat.
pila, a ball.

Pere, or pyle of a brygge or other fundament. Pila.—Prompt. Parvolorum.

The numerous peels along the border are an evidence of the insecurity arising from border warfare in times when every man's house was, in a literal sense, his castle also.
 —I. Taylor, Words and Places, p. 262 (2nd
 ed.).

By an interesting coincidence Wordsworth's "Elegiac Stanzas suggested by a Picture of Peele Castle" begin with the line,

I was thy neighbour once, thou rugged Pile.

They left neither pile, village, nor house standing unburnt.—Expedition in Scotland,
 1544 [Davies].

Swinburne, a little castle or pile, which gave name unto a worthy family.—Holland's
Camden, p. 806 [Davies].

Though I cannot as an architect,
 In glorious piles or pyramids erect,
 Unto your honour; I can tune in Song
 Aloud; and, haply, it may last as long.
Ben Jonson, Underwood, xcv.

PILL-CROW, } old corruptions of PYLCRAFT, } the word paragraphe, through the old Eng. forms paragraffe (Ortus), paragraffe, and used for the printers' mark shaped thus ¶, which the French term a fly's-foot, pie-d- mouche.

Paragraphe, a paragraffe, or Pill-crow, a full sentence, head, or title.—Cotgrave.

In Husbandry matters, where Pilcrowe ye finde,

That verse appertaineth to Huswiferie kinde.
Tusser, Points of Husbandry.

Pylcraft, yn a booke (pilecraft) Asteris-cus, paragrabus.—Prompt. Parv.

Paragrapha, pylcrafft in wry(t)ynge.—Me- dulla.

PILLEY-STAIRES, a Scotch word used in Pitscottie, is regarded by Jamieson as a corruption of pilasters.

PIN is regarded by Dr. Morris as the modern form of old Eng. preon (prin), from which the r has been lost (Eng.
Accidence, p. 73, 2nd ed.). In that case it is the same word as Scot. prin,
prein, or preen, a pin made of wire,
 A. Sax. preón, a needle, Icel. príón,
 Dan. preen, Gael. prin. Compare Clev-land prin-cod, a pincushion (Atkinson). Then old Eng. pin, pinne, a wooden peg, Celtic pinne, a peg, Dut. pin, Lat. pinna, a "pen," must be a distinct word, to which pin (prin), the toilet requisite, was assimilated, just as old Eng. grin, a snare, is merged in gin.

Punne, of metalle, as yryne or oper lyke, Spintum.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Euery wyndowe by and by,
On eche syde had there a gynne,
Sperde with many a dyuers pinne.

The Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 98.

Gal prenes and ringes wið hem
Diep he is dalf under an ooc.

Story of Genesis and Exodus (1250),
p. 54, l. 1873.

A' your cocks, and a' your reests,
I value not a prin;
For I'll awa' to Meggie's bower,
I'll win ere she lie down.

The Drowned Lovers, l. 16 (Child's Ballads, vol. ii. p. 176).

A few lines later occurs pin = peg:—

Then he is on to Meggie's bower,
And tirded at the pin. Id. l. 42.

My memory's no worth a preen.
Burns, Poems, p. 80 (Globe ed.).

PIN, in the phrase "to be in merry pin," i.e. in a cheerful, joyous mood, has been generally considered to have some reference to the old custom, said to have been introduced by Dunstan, of having pins or pegs fixed in tankards to define each man's proportion of liquor; see Fuller, Church Hist. iii. 17. It was enacted by the Council of London (A.D. 1002), "Ut presbyteri non eant ad potationes, nec ad pinnas bibant." He who drank more than his share, it was conceived, might be described as "in a merry pin." This seems a somewhat forced explanation. It is much more likely that pin, O. Eng. pinn, is a corruption of Fr. point (compare to pill and Fr. poiler; pitch, Fr. poix; pintel and pointel; to pin or pynd (cattle) and pound). Cotgrave explains point, "the state or issue of a cause; also, the order, trimme, array, plight, health, estate, case, taking, one is in," e.g. "En bon point, handsome, faire, fat, well liking, in good taking;" Scot. "in good point" (Jamieson); so être in gaillard point, would mean "to be in merry trim or pin."

Ech lyme faire i-streijt also, in god point as he were.

13th Cent. Poem, in Wright, *Pop.
Treatises on Science*, p. 140.

Nowe set thy hert on a merry pin.

Interlude of the Four Elements (Percy Soc.), p. 47.

To be set on the merry pinne. Estre en ses gouettes.—R. Sherwood, *Eng. and French
Dict.* 1660.

Each sett on a merry pin.

Percy Folio MS. Fryar & Boye, l. 484.

But I haue sett her on such a pin,
King Adler shall her nener winne.

Id. vol. ii. p. 297, l. 34.

The Callender, right glad to find
His friend in merry pin.

Cowper, John Gilpin.

Calamy describes Thos. Fuller as a gentleman "who was generally upon the merry pin."—Memoirs of Howe, p. 20 (ed. 1724). The old form of the phrase, "On a merry pin," would favour the first-mentioned hypothesis.

King Edgar, because his subjects should not offend in swilling, and bibbing, as they did, caused certaine yron cups to be chayned to everie fountaine and wells-side, and at everie vintner's doore, with yron pins in them, to stint euery man how much he should drinke; and he that went beyond one of those pins forfeited a pennie for everie draught.—T. Nash, Pierce Penilesse, 1592, p. 54 (Shaks. Soc.).

That priests should not go to public drinkings, nec ad pinnas bibant, nor drink at pins. This was a Dutch trick (but now used in England) of artificial drunkenness out of a cup marked with certain pins.—T. Fuller, Church Hist. III. ii. 3.

He will,

Imagine only that he shall be cheated,
And he is cheated: all still comes to pass,
He's but one pin above a natural.

W. Cartwright, The Ordinary, ii. 3.

PIN AND WEB, an old name used by Shakespeare for a disease of the eye which resembles a white web or veil drawn across the sight, a cataract, is partly a corruption, partly a translation, of It. panno dell' occhio, "a pin and a web in the eye" (Florio), from panno, Lat. pannus, a cloth. This use has arisen from a confusing of panno with pano, an agnel, wartle, or kernel, a hote swelling, a duskish spot (Florio), Lat. pānus, a swelling or tumour, Low Lat. pannus. Cf. "panni del viso, freckles in the face."—Florio. Gascoigne uses the more correct expression, "pinne or webbe."

This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet . . . he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip.—King Lear, iii. 4.

All eyes

Blind with the pin and web but theirs.

Winter's Tale, i. 2.

Cataratta, a dimness of sight occasioned by humours hardened in the eyes called a Cataract or a pin and web.—Florio.

Penne, a disease of the eye, occurs in Leechdoms, Wortcunning, &c., ed. Cockayne, vol. i. p. 374.

PIN-FOLD, a pound for cattle, and pinner, an old name for one who impounds them, so spelt apparently on the assumption that these words were derived from old Eng. pin, pinmen, another form of old Eng. penmen, to pen or shut up (originally to fasten with a pin or peg).

If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfold I would make thee care for me.—Shakespeare, K. Lear, ii. 2, l. 10.

Pynfolde, Inclusorium.—Prompt. Parv.

Pynny, or spere wythe a pynne, Conca-villo.—Id.

Pin-fold, however, stands for pind-fold, old Eng. pynde-folde, pond-fold, pound-fold; and pinner for old Eng. pinder, pyndare, from A. Sax. pyndan, to impound or shut up (Skeat).

Fro þe poukes poundfalde no maynprise may ous fecche.

Vision of Piers Plowman, C. xix. 282.

There is neither knight nor squire, said the
pinder,

Nor baron that is so hold,

Dare make a trespass to the town of Wakefield

But his pledge goes to the pinfold.

Ritson, Robin Hood, vol. ii. p. 16.

As for Pindar, 'tis a peculiar word and office in the north of England, that implies, one that looks after strays, and the like, being much the same as pound-keeper in the southern parts of the kingdom.—Hist. of George à Green, 1706 (Thoms, Early Eng. Prose Romances, ii. 155).

PINIONS, the refuse wool after combing (Somerset), = Fr. peignages, is from the Fr. peigner, to comb.

PINK-OF-MY-JOHN, or Pink-o'-my-John, a provincial name for the pansy, would seem to be a corruption of pinkenny-John (in Wright), pinkany or pinckanie, being a term of endearment, sometimes written piggesmie (which see).

PIP, a horny substance growing on the tongue of fowls, perhaps regarded as the same word as pip, a kernel or seed, and indeed the Span. pepita bears both meanings, is old Eng. pyppe, Fr. pepie, It. pipita, all from Lat. pituita, plegm, the pip.

PIPISTRELLE, a name for a species of bat, which would seem to refer to its piping or making a shrill noise (cf. It. pipire, to chirp), is borrowed from It. pipistrello, a corruption, through the forms vipistrello, vespistrello, of vesper-tillus for Lat. vespertilio, the bird of evening (vesper), a bat.

PIPRAGE, } popular names for the PIPPERIDGE, } barberry, are corruptions of Fr. pepin rouge, "red pip," old Eng. pipercouge (Prior).

PIPS, the spots or marks on cards, so spelt as if named from their resemblance to the pips or seed of fruit, is a corruption of picks, which is the word for diamonds at cards, and sometimes spades, in old and provincial English; "A diamond or picke at cards."—Minshew, 1627; from old Fr. picque, pique, a spade (Skeat). So "picks and hearts" (the red pips), is a provincial phrase for red spots on the body (Wright). See Taylor, History of Playing Cards, p. 233.

PIROUETTE, a quick turn in dancing, Fr. pirouette, a whirling about, a whirlingig, a diminutive of Prov. Fr. piroue, a whirlingig, a little wheel (Guernsey), so spelt from a supposed connexion with roue, a wheel, as if a rotatory wheeling motion, is only another form of Eng. pirie or pirry, a whirlwind (Skeat). See BERRY.

PISH-MOTHER, a Scottish name for an ant (Jamieson), is a corruption of pis-mire, the latter part of the word, old Eng. mire, an ant, Icel. manurr (Dan. myre), being confused with mother (Dan. mor).

PISMIRE, a name in the Orkneys given to a steel-yard (Edmondston), is a corruption of bismare, an instrument for weighing, Dan. bismar, Icel. bismari, Ger. besem.

PIT, in the phrase, "the pit of a theatre," apparently the part sunken like a well (Lat. puteus), where the "groundlings" sit, may be, as Mr. Wedgwood conjectures, from Sp. pátio, the central court of a house, but Piedm.

platea, the pit of a theatre (= It. piazza, Lat. platea), is a different word. Fr. parterre, the pit, orig. = a floor, or plot of ground.

PITTANCE, old Eng. pitance, Fr. pitance, It. pietanza, a small allowance of food or money, as if something doled out to the poor from pity (old Fr. pitè) or piety, like our phrase, "to give charity," and alms from Greek elēmōsunē, pity. Compare the following:—

Pytawnce, Pietancia.—Prompt. Parv.

Pitanza, a pittance or allowance of meate and drinke. But properly any almes giuen for pitties sake or for the loue of God, namely to poore begging Frieres, consisting of meate and drinke.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

Item 23rd. He bids them distribute their pittances, "pitancias," regularly on obits, &c. [Note—Pitancia, an allowance of bread and beer, or other provision to any pious use.—Kennet].—G. White, Antiquities of Selborne, Letter xiv. p. 234 (ed. Jardine).

The same word which in the Hebrew signifies "righteousness," in other Oriental languages, especially Syriac and Arabic, is commonly used for alms; . . . and is ordinarily translated by the LXX. ἐλεημοσύνη, "almsgiving," or "charity."—Bp. Beveridge, Sermons, vol. iv. p. 336 (Oxford ed.).

Justitia est portio vini quæ monachis ad perfectionem ministrabatur; et cibi diurna portio.—Du Cange.

The oldest form of the word, however, is Low Lat. pictantia, an allowance of food given to monks of the value of a picta, a small coin. So Fr. pitance, from old Fr. pite, a farthing (Skeat).

Ther is payn and peny-ale as for a pytaunce y-take.

Vision of Piers the Plowman, C. x. 92.

Forgoð enne dei our pitauce [Forego your pittance for one day].—Ancren Riwe, p. 412.

PLANT, a slang term for a piece of cheating or trickery, an imposture, "That's a regular plant," seems to be the same word as plant, an old French form of plan, "the ground-plot of a building" (in Cotgrave). The transitions of meaning would thus be, plan, a plane or flat surface (Lat. planus), the design of a building, &c., drawn out on a flat surface, any plan or scheme, a design or project for entrapping or deceiving another, "a plant." Compare the evil meaning which has been acquired by the words scheming, designing, plotting.

"I was away from London a week and more, my dear, on a plant," replied the Jew.—Dickens, Oliver Twist, ch. xxxix.

PLASHER, } North country
PLASHIE, } names for plaice, as PLASH-FLUKE, } if to denote the splashing and bounding motions of the fish when caught, are corruptions of the word plaice (in some districts called plavish), old Fr. plais, from Lat. platessa, a flat fish (Greek plátus, flat).

PLAT, an old spelling of plot, a patch of ground, A. Sax. plot, as if it meant a flat piece, a plateau, old Eng. plat, flat, Fr. plat.

PLATOON, a body of soldiers, so spelt from false analogy to words like plateau, platform, &c., is a corruption of Fr. peloton, a circular group, a knot, or company (cf. Lat. globus), from pelote, a ball or pellet.

PLAUDIT, applause, so spelt as if it were the Lat. plaudit, he applauds, third pers. sing. (like audit, credit, tenet), is an incorrect form of the older a plaudite (Bailey), i.e. clap your hands, the actors' concluding words to the audience on the Roman stage, second pers. plural of Lat. verb plaudo. The word was sometimes mistaken as a dissyllable, as if the final e was silent, and sometimes as plaudity, with a plural plaudities (Tourneur).—Skeat.

PLAY-FAIR, a Scotch corruption of the word play-fere, a play-fellow, from fere, a companion (cognate with Lat. par, Eng. peer, an equal).

PLENY-TIDES, as it were full tides, is probably a corrupted form of plenitudes (Lat. plenitudo, fulness).

Let rowling tears in pleny-tides oreflow,
For losse of England's second Cicero.
Greene, Groatsworth of Wit, sub fin.

PLIGHT, an old verb meaning to fold, so spelt from a false analogy to words like plight (= condition), fight, night, tight (compare spright, an old spelling of sprite), is an incorrect form of plite, old Eng. pliten, to fold, another form of pleat or plait (Skeat).

Time shall unfold what plighted cunning hides [Globe ed. plaited].

Shakespeare, K. Lear, i. 2, 283.

Compare with this "God's wisdom has double folds."—Job xi. 6 (Gesenius, 410), opposite to sim-plex, single-fold, simple; Scot. ane-fald, Ger. ein-falt.

So duplicité = double-foldedness.

All in a silken Camus lilly whight
Purged upon with many a folded plight.
Spenser, F. Queene, II. 3, 26.

Some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live,
And play in the plighted clouds.

Milton, Comus, l. 301.

Pure spirit that rapt'st above the Firmest Sphere,

In fiery Coach thy faithfull Messenger,
Who smiting Iordan with his plighted
cloak,

Did yerst divide the Waters with the stroak.
J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 72.

PLOT, a design or conspiracy, apparently formed from plot or plat, the plan of a building, plat-form, a scheme or plan (Shakespeare), plot, to lay out a ground or plot (so Wedgwood), is really a shortened form of complot, Fr. complot, a conspiracy, in old Fr. a crowd or throng (see Littré, Hist. de la Langue Française, i. 208), from Lat. complicitum (complic'tum), "a complication," an involved or intricate business, from complicare, to fold together, to interweave. So one involved in a plot is a complice or accomplice, Lat. complex. Compare Lat. sutela, a sewing together, a trick or device; dolos nectere and suere; Greek δολούς πλέκειν, ράπτειν; Heb. arabh, (1) to weave, (2) to act cunningly, plot; "He gan to weave a web of wicked guyle."—Faerie Queene, II. i. 8.

So forth they forth yfere make their pro-gresse,
And march not past the mountenance of a shott

Till they arriv'd whereas their purpose they did plott.

Spenser, F. Queene, III. xi. 20.

Revenge now goes,
To lay a complot to betray thy foes.

Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, v. 2, 147.

PLOUGH, in the University phrase "to be ploughed," i.e. to fail in passing, to have one's examination stopped, seems to be a wilful perversion of the probably older, and certainly more intelligible, term, "to be plucked," to be divested of all one's superficial plumage of knowledge, stuck on for the occasion, and be rejected as an unqualified pretender, like the magpie in the fable. Pluck, Ger. pflücken, appears to have been sportively confounded with plough, Ger. pflügen, from pflug, a plough (O. Fris. ploch), akin to plock, a peg or plug.

The fate of the idle pass-man is predicted with painful accuracy in an ancient poem:—

I shall so palle him, if I can
That he shall in a fewe stoundes
Lese all his markes and his poundes, . . .
Our maidens shall eke plucke him so,
That him shall neden fethers mo.

Romant of the Rose, l. 5983.

He went to college, and he got plucked, I think they call it.—C. Brontë, Jane Eyre, ch. x.

He had been a medical student, and got plucked, his foes declared, in his examination.—C. Kingsley, Alton Locke, ch. xx. [Davies].

PLOUGH-STILT, a word for a plough-handle in N. W. Lincolnshire, stilt being a corruption of stert or start, a handle, A. Sax. steort. Cf. Ger. pflugstert.

PLUM AND FEATHERS, a tavern sign near Oxford, was originally the Prince of Wales' Plume of Feathers (M. Muller, Lectures, 2nd ser. p. 530).

PLUME-DAMES, an old Scotch word for damsons, quoted by Jamieson from Acts James VI., is from plum-dammes, i.e. Damascene plums; cf. Dammes, damask-work; Dammys, Damascus (Jamieson). Blumdammes, another form of the word, is used for prunes.

PLUMPENDICULAR, a popular corruption of perpendicular, as if hanging or falling plump down, like a builder's plumb.

The rain that rained one plumpendikkalu
pour,
As you may say enough to ha drowned Muster Noah.

Summat from Suffolk, N. and Q. 6th
S. IV. 226.

PLURISY, an old orthography of pleurisy (i.e. pleuritis, a disease of the pleura, the rib or side), has been warped both in form and meaning from a supposed connexion with Lat. plus, pluris, more. In old writers its common acceptance is overmuchness, plethora, excess. Richardson actually throws it into the one group with plural!

Thy plurisy of goodness is thy ill.
Ford, 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, iv. 3.

Goodness growing to a plurisy
Dies in his own too much.

Hamlet, iv. 7, l. 118.

Arcite in The Two Noble Kinsmen (v. 1, 66) addresses Mars as one that—

Cur'st the world
O' the pluresie of people.

See Littledale's note in loco.

Thy plurisy of goodness is thy ill,
Thy virtues vices, and thy humble lowness Far worse than stubborn sullenness and pride.

Massinger, The Unnatural Combat, iv. 1.

But this man proved no good Church Physician, had she been sick of a Plurisy, too much abounding with blood as in ages past, then such bleeding Physick perhaps might have done it no harm.—Hurington, Nugæ Antiquæ, i. 103.

Long since had this land been sick of a plurisie of people, if not let blood in their Western Plantations.—T. Fuller, Holy State, p. 91 (1648).

Pluresie or Pleuresie, with what medicines it is cured.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. ii. Index.

Even if we regard this as a distinct word from pleurisy (with Dyce, Remarks on Editions of Shakspeare, p. 218, and Skeat), it has evidently been assimilated to it in form.

POKER, the American name for a game of cards, is a corruption of the old English "Post and Paire," through a contracted form Po'per. See E. S. Taylor, History of Playing Cards, p. 451.

Now Post and Pair, old Christmas's heir,
Doth make a gingling sally.

Ben Jonson, Masque of Christmas.

POLE-AXE, which Richardson defines to be "an axe affixed to a pole," is undoubtedly the same word as the Icelandic bol-öx, an axe for felling trees (Cleasby, p. 72), Swed. bolyxa, from bola, to fell trees. Scotch forms are bullace and balax. Another corrupt spelling is poll-axe, as if an axe to smite one on the poll or head.

Foorth he took his Polax or mall,
And hit Dane Hew vpon the head
That he fel down stark dead.

A Mery Jest of Dane Hew, l. 204.

With what wepen did they hym kyll,
Whether with polaxe or with hill?

A good felowshippe lightly tell.
Roy and Barlowe, Rede me and be nott wrothe,
1528, p. 38 (ed. Arber).

His foote-men fower in number about him, bearing each of them a gilt poll-axe in their handes.—Cavendish, Life of Wolsey (Wordsworth, Eccles. Biog. vol. i. p. 354).

Pole-axe is the spelling in Clarendon's History of the Rebellion, and Leland's Collectanea; in Orminn (ab. 1200) the word appears as bulaxe, representing the Scandinavian palöxi, bolöxi; in Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ii. 176, boleax.

POLE-CAT, so spelt as if the Pole or Polish cat, and indeed it is so explained by Johnson, Bailey, Richardson, and Mahn. It is rather, however, from the old French pulent, stinking, the offensive smell of the animal being proverbial, pole- being etymologically akin to A. Sax. fúl, "foul," Goth. fuls, Icel. full, Fr. pouacre (nasty), Lat. puter, Sansk. puy, to stink. (See also Farrar, Chapters on Language, p. 175; Cockayne, Spoon and Sparrow, p. 110; Morris, Accidence, p. 209.) Compare the French putois, from putere, to stink, It. puzzola, "a Pole-cat, a stinking thing" (Florio), from puzzare, to stink; Eng. fulmart, the "foul-martin;" and fitch, fitchew, O. Fr. fissau, Dut. fisse, from Scand. fisa, fise, to fist, fizzle, or emit an evil odour. Prof. Skeat conjectures that the original form may have been pool-cat, the cat living in a hole (Celtic poll).

The difference of a Poul-cat from the wild-cat is because of her strong stinking savour, and therefore is called Putorius of Putore because of his ill smell.—Topsell, Hist. of Four-footed Beasts, p. 219.

Polecat is probably nothing more than the Polish cat. Foumart, fulmart, fulimart are contractions of foul marten, a name applied to it in contradistinction to the sweet marten, on account of its disgusting odour.—Bell, History of British Quadrupeds (Latham, Dict. s.v.).

And eke ther was a polkat in his hawe,
That, as he sayd, his capons had yslawe.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 12789.

How should he, harmless youth, how should he then

Who kill'd but poulcats, learn to murder
men?

Gay, The What D'ye Cull It, i. 1.

POLICY, a Scotch word for the pleasure-grounds about a gentleman's house. The origin of the word has not been satisfactorily explained. Jamieson says it is from Fr. police, but I cannot find that this word was ever used in a similar sense. I would suggest with some confidence that it is a somewhat corrupted form of Fr. palissé, "palisadoed, staked, or paled about," from palisser, "to impale, to inclose with pales, to defend with palisades" (Cotgrave), and so = a piece of ground paled off, a park, or enclosure. It is well known that a large number of French words have been naturalized in Scotch. See also Twiss's Tour in Ireland, p. 73.

I visited the policies of Conon House a full quarter of a century after this time.—Hugh Miller, My Schools and Schoolmasters, p. 216 (ed. 1869).

For the change of vowel compare Eng. pole with Fr. pal, Lat. palus; pollaver, "to play the Sycophant, to flatter, or sooth" (Bailey), from pal-laver, Port. palavra, a word, Sp. palabra, from Lat. parabola (It. parola, Fr. parole), i.e. nothing but words.

Wodes no foreste withouten palaisé parke.

Robt. Brunne, p. 110.

It is not every field or common which a gentleman pleases to surround with a wall or paling, or to stock with a herd of deer that is thereby constituted a legal park.—Blackstone, Commentaries, b. ii. c. 3 (in Richardson).

Within fermans and parkis cloys of palys.

G. Douglas, Prolong of xii Buk of Eneados, l. 176 (1513).

POLICY, a contract entered into by an insurance office to pay conditionally certain moneys, Fr. police, Sp. poliza, It. polizza, a bill or schedule, is from Low Lat. politicum, poleticum, a corruption of polyptichum, a register, from Greek poluptichon, a "many leaved" document, from polus, many, and ptuchē, a fold. Hence also Fr. pouillé, a church register (see Chéruel, Dict. des Institutions, s.v. Polyptique), and possibly poulet ("a pullet"), a love-letter.

POLLIE-COCK, a Scotch word for a turkey, also called a powie, is a corruption of the French poulet or poule d'Inde.

POLLY-PIKELET, a familiar and childish word for a sort of crumpet or tea-cake, which I remember to have heard some thirty years ago in Ireland, is probably a corrupted form of the old word "bara-picklet [Welsh] cakes made of fine flour, kneaded with yeast."—Bailey; from Welsh bara, bread, and perhaps some derivative of pigo, to prick.

Popelins, soft cakes made of fine flour, kneaded with milk, sweet butter, and yolks of eggs; and fashioned, and buttered, like our Welch Barrapyctids.—Cotgrave.

PONEY-COCK, a Scotch word for a turkey, also written pownie, or pownie, is a misapplication and corruption of poune, or powin, the peacock, Fr. paon, Lat. pavo(n).

PONTIFF. } The Latin word pon-
PONTIFICAL. } tifex, which is the origin of ours, seems on the face of it to be derived from pon(t)s, a bridge, and facio, to make, as if the Roman priest was originally charged with the construction and maintenance of bridges. In allusion to this Longfellow says:—

Well has the name of Pontifer been given Unto the Church's head, as the chief builder
And architect of the invisible bridge
That leads from earth to heaven.

The Golden Legend, v. ll. 7-10.

Milton actually uses the expression "pontifical art" for the art of bridge-making, and pontifice (like ædifice) for the bridge built.

Now had they brought the work by wondrous art

Pontifical, a ridge of pendent rock,
Over the vex'd abyss.

Paradise Lost, x. ll. 312-314.

This new wondrous pontifice.

Id. l. 348.

Curtius thinks that the pontifices were indeed originally the "bridge-makers," or more generally "road-makers," Lat. pon(t)s being cognate with Gk. pátos, Sansk. patha, a way or path (Griech. Etymologie, i. 235), A. Sax. pað.

So Mommsen—

The five "bridgebuilders" (pontifices) derived their name from their function, as sacred as it was politically important, of conducting the building and demolition of the bridge over the Tiber.—History of Rome (Eng. trans.), vol. i. p. 178.

The clergy were literally the great road-makers of the middle ages, many of the best roads in Spain and elsewhere having been constructed by them for the benefit of pilgrims to the most frequented shrines (vid. Ford, Gatherings from Spain, p. 42). Among the mediæval guilds was one of bridge-builders, "associated for the building or keeping in repair of bridges for the use of wayfarers—of pilgrims above all" (Trench, Mediæval Church History, p. 412).

The order of bridge-builders at Avignon, with the peculiar love of punning which characterized the middle ages, were called frotres pontificales; and sometimes fratres pontis and factores pontium.—Wright, Essays on Archaeology, vol. ii. p. 139.

He was verus Pontifex, in the grammatical notation thereof, building a fair Bridge at Braundford (within three miles of Worcester) over the river Teme.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 468.

Professor Francis Newman, however, is probably right in his conjecture that the primitive form of pontifex was pompifex, i.e. one who holds a religious procession (Gk. pompê), supported as it is by the Umbrian word pontis (in the Iguvine Tables) = pompis, Gk. pompais (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1864). Compare old It. pompe, Oscan ponde, Gk. pempe (= pente, πέντε); and Pontius, for Pomp-tius, = Pomperius, = Quinctius. Lange, indeed, supposes that pontifex may have originally meant "Five-maker" (Fünfmacher), as they were five in number.

PONX, a sporting term for a sum of money wagered as a bet, £25 says the Slang Dictionary, £50 says Wright's Provincial Dictionary, is probably, like many other cant words, borrowed from the gipsies. Cf. Slang poona, a sovereign, pound, Scotch pun', used with a considerable latitude of meaning for a sum of money.

POOL, a term applied to the money staked in certain games, so called as if from the pool-like hollow or depression in the gaming-table in which the stakes are placed. It is evidently an Anglicized form of Fr. poule, which Gattel thus defines, "à certains jeux de cartes, quantité d'argent ou de jetons dont chacun des joueurs contribue à son tour, et qui demeure à celui qui gagne le coup. Au Trictrac et à quelques autres jeux, faire une poule, jouer une poule, faire une partie où tous les joueurs mettent une certaine somme chaque fois qu'ils entrent au jeu, et qui demeure en entier à celui qui a gagné tous les autres de suite."

POOR JOHN, an old English name for the hake fish when dried and salted. It was esteemed a coarse kind of food, probably like ling, but from its frequent mention in old writers must have been in common use.

A drie fishe called poore John, 8d.—Expenses of Judges of Assize, 1598-9 (Camden Soc. Miscell. vol. iv. p. 32).

There appear'd a fish call'd a poor John,
Cut with a lenten face, in my own likeness.

Massinger, The Picture, act iii. sc. 1.

Bret. A Spaniard is a Camocho, a Callimanco, nay which is worse a Dondego, and what is a Dondego?

Clown. A Dondego is a kind of Spanish stock-fish or poor John.

Bret. No, a Dondego is a desperate Viliago, a very Castilian, God bless us.

Dekker and Webster, Famous Historie of Sir Thomas Wyatt, 1607.

I would not be of one that should command me

To feed upon poor John, when I see pheasants
And partridges on the table.

Massinger, The Renegado, i. 1.

How could the Dutch but be converted, when
The Apostles were so many fishermen? . . .
Though Herring for their God few voices missed,

And Poor-John to have been the Evangelist.

Marvell, Satires (Murray's ed.), p. 117.

'Tis well thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor-John.—Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul., act i. sc. 1.

Stale Barrel'd, and Bisket Browne,
Salt-butter, that like Soape doth smell,
Rusty Bacon, rotten Poore John,
And Stinking Anchovaes we sell.

Sir Wm. Davenant, Works, fol. 1673,
p. 337.

See also Hall, Satires, p. 97 (ed. Singer); Harington, Epigrams, ii. 50.

It has been ingeniously conjectured that "a poor-John," is merely a popular corruption of Fr. habordean, Eng. haberdine, cheap salt-fish, though in the following passage they seem to be distinguished:—

His dayntie fare is turned to a hungry feast of dogs and cats, or haberdine and poore John, at the most.—Nash, Pierce Penilless, His Supplication to the Devil, 1592 (Shaks. Soc. ed. p. 19).

Habordean, haberden (Tusser, 1580), is the same word as Ger. laberdan, "salted cod-fish, Aberdeen fish" (Kaltschmidt), Dutch labberdan, older Dutch aberdaan (Sewel).

There is a Rhine fish not unlike the haddock, which those of the district salt and dry much after the manner of the Scotch. They call it aberdanum.—Badham, Prose Halieutics, p. 334.

Like the finnin (or findon) haddock it derived its name from the place where it was cured.

Heine mentions a Dutchman "investigating the distinction between Kabeljaw, Laberdan, and Saltfish, and finding out that they were at bottom one and the same" (Stigand, H. Heine, i. 347).

POPE, a Northampton name for the common red poppy (Wright), with an imagined reference to the scarlet vestments of the Bishop of Rome and his cardinals, is obviously a corruption of old Eng. poppy, A. Sax. popig, the poppy, from Lat. papaver.

Poppy, weed, Papaver.—Prompt. Parv.

There is growend upon the ground

Popy, which bereth the seede of slepe.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. ii.

p. 102.

POPE, altered from A. Sax. pápa (Fr. pape), Lat. papa, father, perhaps under the influence of Lat. pōpa, a priest's minister, a sacrificial priest. Wycliffe thought it was derived from the Latin interjection papœ! wonderful! Greek papai! popoi! Compare Florio's account of popinjay, s.v.

So weren cristis apostlis betere þan ony pope of rome. For þis name is newe foundun, & it betokeniþ wundirful; for summe þenken it greet wundir þat worldly glory & hoolynesse shulden be knyttid in o persone.—Unprinted Works of Wycliffe, p. 471 (E. E. T. S.).

POP-GUN would seem to be beyond question the miniature gun that goes pop! (Fr. pouf!) and yet the history of the word when traced back suggests a different origin. The earliest mention of the word is probably in the Promptorium Parvulorum, about 1440.

"Powpe, holstykke (al. hole styke), Capulus (vel caupulus)," that is, a "hollow stick," a pop-gun (Way). With this agrees "Poupe for a chyldre, Poupée."—Palsgrave, Lesclaircissement, 1530. Cotgrave defines Fr. poupée (from Lat. pupus, pupa, a boy, a girl), as "a baby, a puppet or bable," i.e. a doll, a bauble, or as we would now say, a toy. Pop-gun is therefore properly a poup-gun, a "toy-gun" for a child. Cf. poppet for puppet, and It. poppare, puppere, to suck (play the baby), poppa, a teat, and lollipop; Scottish pippen, a doll, with which Jamieson compares Teut. poppen, playthings.

Popgun was formerly corrupted into potgun, which was the name of an ancient piece of ordnance.

Scopus . . a potgun made of an elderne sticke, or hollow quill, whereout boyes shoote chawen paper.—Nomenclator, 1585.

Jonson in his Humble Petition of Poor Ben speaks of

The ratling pit-pat noise
Of the less poetic boys,
When their pot-guns aim to hit
With their pellets of small wit.

Works, p. 719 (ed. Moxon).

. . . Me thinks, those things, in which The world appeares most glorious, and most rich,

Are no more worthy of my serious hopes,
Then Rattles, Pot-guns, or the Schoole-boyes
Tops.

G. Wither, Britain's Remembrancer, To the King, 1628.

POPINJAY is not the jay that pops about, or is frequently popped at as a mark (vid. Cotgrave, s.v. papegay), Fr. papegai, Sp. and Portg. papagay, Med. Greek papagas, but the "priest's (pope's) cock," being a corrupted form of Fr. papegau (Cotgrave, gau = cock), Mod. Greek papagallos, It. pappagallo, papagallo, from papa, a priest (a class who were noted bird-fanciers, Diez) and gallus, a cock. In Greek pappos denoted some small bird. Compare parroquet, It. parrocchetto, orig. a priestling (from parochus); Prov. Eng. pope, Dan. dompap (lord pope), the bullfinch; Fr. prestrot, a priestling, a little bird resembling a linnet (Cotgrave); Fr. moine, moineau, It. monaco (monk), Fr. nonnette, Sp. fraile, names of birds.

The earliest mention I have found of the word is in Alexander Neckam (died 1217), who explains it as follows:

Psittacus, qui vulgo dicitur papagabio, id est, principalis seu nobilis gabio.—De Naturis Rerum, lib. i. cap. xxxvi.

Apparently "the pope of chattersers."

Others, however, interpret the word as meaning the "talking cock," comparing Bav. pappel, a parrot, Ger. pappeln, to babble or chatter, It. pap- pare, to prattle, Prov. Eng. popple, to talk nonsense (Norfolk), popping, chattering. "Hold thy popping, ya gurt Washamouth."—Exmoor Scolding, l. 138 (E.D.S.).

If a popinguy speake she doth it by imitation of mans voyce artificially.—Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 312 (ed. Arber).

Florio has the curious entry:—"Papa-gallo, a wonderfull Cocke; for Pape is admirable [i.e. a word of admiration, 'as gods! oh!'] Greek pappaî and Gallo, a Cocke."—New World of Words (1611).

Pyes & papeiayes purtrayed with-inne
As pay prudly hade piked of pomgarnades.
Alliterative Poems, p. 79, l. 1466.

He is papeiai in pyu þat hetep me my hale.
Bödeker, Alteng. Dicht. p. 145,
l. 21.

POPPEY, a familiar term of endearment for a baby, a darling, with a latent reference, perhaps, to its popping up and down when dandled, is a survival of old Eng. popet, a doll, old Fr. paupette, a little baby, a diminutive of Lat. pupa, a girl, and so the same word as "puppet."

Popet, for childre to play with, poupée.—Palsgrave, Lesclai cissement, 1530.

This were a popet in an arme to embrace
For any woman, smal and faire of face.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, 13631.

POPPY-HEADS, the name given to the elevated ornaments often carved at the end of church pews, is said to have no connexion (as might maliciously be supposed) with the somniferous papaver. According to the researches of the Ecclesiological Society the mediæval form of the word was poppea, paupada, and "seems to mean a bundle of clouts or ragstied up into something like a human figure;—much such a resemblance as a child's rag doll bears to the same thing" (Handbook of Eng. Ecclesiology, p. 105). If this be correct, poppy here is the same word as Fr. poupée, "a puppet, or bable, a distaffe full of flax, &c." (Cotgrave), Lat. pupa, a little girl, our "puppet" and "puppy."

PORCUPIG, a provincial Eng. name for the porcupine, Scot. pork-pik, is a corruption of the French porc-épic, old Fr. porc-espi, Lat. porcus spicatus, "the spiky pig."

You would have thought him for to be Some Egyptian porcu-pig.

The Dragon of Wantley.

PORE BLIND, a mis-spelling of the word purblind found in writers of the 16th and 17th centuries, as if it meant so defective in sight that one has to pore or peer (O. Eng. pouren) very closely to distinguish an object. The oldest form of the word, however, is pur blind (written separately), i.e. pure (= altogether, absolutely) blind (mere cæcus).

Me ssolde pulte oute hope hÿse eye, & make hÿm pur blynd.—Robt. of Gloucester, Chronicle (ab. 1298), vol. iii. p. 376 (ed. 1810).

Where another version has starke blynde. Wycliffe (1389) has pure-blynde (Ex. xxi. 26, Vulg. luscus), and so the Promptorium Parvulorum (ab. 1440), "Purblynde, luscus." We have now reverted to the original spelling, but retained the meaning of poring or partially blind (so Skeat, with whose article, Etym. Dict., s.v. this independently written closely agrees).

The dust or powder heeof [of Fussballs] is very dangerous for the eies, for it hath beene often seen that diuers haue beene pore blinde euer after, when some small quantitie thereof hath beene blowen into their eies.—Gerarde, Herball, fol. p. 1387 (1597).

The visage wan, the pore blind sight,
The toil by day, the lamp at night.

Sir Wm. Blackstone, The Lawyer's Farewell to His Muse.

The dung of cocks and capons . . . is singular good for those that be pore-blind or short-sighted.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. ii. 367 (1634).

Which [Fuzz-balls] heing troden vpon do breath foorth a most thinne and fine powder, like vnto smoke, very noisome and hurtfull vnto the eies, causing a kinde of blindness, which is called Poor-blinde, or Sand-blinde.
Gerarde, Herball, p. 1385.

Thus heartlesse hares with purblind eyes do peere

In the dead lyon's pawes, yea dastard deere
Over his heartlesse corps dare domineere.

T. Fuller, Dauids Hainous Sinne, 1631,
st. 47.

PORK-POINT, an old Eng. name for the porcupine, as if the pig with the sharp points, is a corruption of the still older name porkepyn, O. Fr. porc espin (Palsgrave), i.e. the pig with the pins or spines (Lat. spina, a thorn).

Poorck point, heste (also, porpoynte and perpoynt), Histrix.—Prompt. Parv.

From pork-point or por-point came the old Eng. name of the animal, por-pentine.

The xxiiiij day of Feybruarii was bered ser Wylliam Sydny knyght, in the contey of Kentt, at ys plasse callyd Penthurst, with ij harolds of armes, . . . ys target, and mantyll, and helmet, and the crest a hlw porpyntyn.—Machyn's Diary, 1552-3, p. 31 (Camden Soc.).

He gaue for his denice the Porkespick with this posie pres et loign, both farre and neare. For the *purpentine*s nature is, to such as stand aloofe, to dart her prickles from her, and if they come neare her, with the same as they stick fast to wound them that hurt her.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 118 (ed. Arber).

P. Holland has given the word a new twist into porkpen, with allusion to its sharp pens or quills.

The Porkpens come out of India and Africa.—Plinius Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 215.

PORRIDGE, a kind of thick gruel or soup, is old Eng. porree, old Fr. porrée, assimilated to potage, Fr. potage, from pot. It perhaps stands for porrettes, plu. of porette, broth, It. porrata.

PORTENAUNCE, an old spelling of apurtenance (Wycliffe, Gen. xxxi. 36), generally used of the intestines or offal of an animal, as if from Fr. porter. It denotes properly what pertains, or is appended, to the head (compare pluck, Prov. Eng. gather and race, Dorset hinge (for hang), the heart, liver, and lights of an animal, all that can be torn away so as to hang together).—A. V. Exod. xii. 9.

Portenance of a beest, Fresseve.—Palsgrave, Lesclaircissement, 1530.

Portenance, of a thyng. Pertinencia, in plurali excidie.—Prompt. Porvulerum (c. 1440).

The duke is the head, and I, Blurt, am the purtenance.

Middleton, Works, i. 302 (ed. Dyce).

The shaft against a rib did glance
And gall him in the purtenance.

Butler, Hudibros, pt. i, c. 3, l. 318.

PORT-HOSE, an old word for "a certain kind of service book, e.g. on my Porthose I make my oath,—an expression strange and full of difficulty" (Skinner, Etymologicon, 1671, Pt. 2. s.v.).

It is variously spelt portos, portesse, portuas, portas, and is a corruption of the French porte-hors, "a carry-abroad," Lat. portiforium (from portare foras).

It was a clerical vade-mecum or portable breviary, "which the clergy might take along with them as a ready manual for all ordinary occurrences" (Wordsworth, Ecclesiastical Biography, vol. ii. p. 237, ed. 1810). See also Palmer, Origines Liturgicæ, vol. i. p. 208 (ed. 1832).

Among the bequests of the Black Prince's Will, 1376, occurs the following:—

Yeelx missal et portehors ordenons à servir perpetuelement en la dite chappelle.

They find them by chance in their popish portifoliums and masking books.—Bale, Select Works, p. 175 [Davies].

POSTHUMOUS, surviving, Fr. posthume, so spelt as if born after the father was under ground (post humum), is, of course, only the Latin postumus, the superlative of post, afterwards.

Sylvester speaks of the silk-worm Leaving a Post-hume (dead-line) seed behinde her.

Du Bartas, p. 111 (1621),

and Vaughan the Silurist calls books,

Man's posthume day

The track of fled souls, and their milkie way.

Silex Scintillans, 1650.

POSTMASTER, an academic word, one who has a certain allowance or portion at one of the Universities, just as sizar is one who enjoys a size at commons.

The second brother of A. Wood became one of the portionists or postmasters of Merton College.—Life of A. Wood, p. 10.

Postmaster is said to be a contracted form of portion-master, Lat. portionistæ magister.

POSTURE-MAKER, a merryandrew, is, according to Mr. Wedgwood (Philolog. Trans. 1855, p. 69), a corruption of Dut. boetsen-maecker, Ger. possenmacher, from possen, tricks, but this I doubt.

POT, a North country word for a deep pool or hole in the bed of a river. "The deep holes scooped in the rock by the eddies of a river are called pots; the motion of the water having there some resemblance to a boiling caldron." So Sir Walter Scott (Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, ii. 188, ed. 1861) in a note on the following passage:—

The deepest pot in a' the linn

They fand Erl Richard in.

Earl Richard.

Pot is also used in Scottish for a pit or dungeon, and is the same word as old Eng. put, putte, a pit, A. Sax. pyt, Lat. puteus, a well or pit. Dunbar speaks of "the pot of hell."

And vthir sum thare with gan schete ful hot Deip in the soroufull grisle hellis pot.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneadis, p. 108,
l. 16 (ed. 1710).

O an' ye gang to Meggie's bower,
Sae sair against my will,
The deepest pot in Clyde's water,
My malison ye's feel.

The Drowned Lovers, l. 28 (Child's Ballads, ii. 176).

Hence, probably, may be explained the old popular phrase, "To go to pot," originally "to go to the pot," i.e. to the pit or pot of destruction, the bottomless pit, and so to be ruined or destroyed, to perish. Wedgwood compares Prov. Swed. far te putton! go to hell!

In Shakespeare's Coriolanus, when Marcius pursues the Volscians within the gates of Corioli, and one of his soldiers exclaims:—

See, they have shut him in ;

they all cry out:—

To the pot, I warrant him.

Act i. sc. 4.

Aussi tost meurt vache comme veau. As soon the young, as old, goes to the pot.—Cotgrave.

Then goeth a part of little flock to pot and the rest scatter.—Tyndale, Works, iii. 110 (Parker Soc. ed.).

Creweltie. Thou wouldest not sticke to bring thine owne brother to payne.

Avarice. Ha, ha, ha; no, nor father and mother, if there were ought to be got, Thou mightest sweare, if I could, I would bring them to the pot.

New Custome, 1573, act ii. sc. 3.

Flawn. Why, the weakest goes to the pot still.

Mam. That jest shall saue him.

Jacke Drums Entertainment, act i.

l. 218 (1616).

The rhyming Monsieur, and the Spanish plot,

Defy or court, all's one, they go to pot.

Dryden, Epilogue to The Tempest, 1667.

He was conniv'd at and kept in his place, otherwise he had infallibly gon to the pot.—

Life of A. à Wood, sub anno 1648, p. 39 (ed. Bliss).

If Cannibals they be

In kind we doe not know ;

And if they he, then welcome we,

To pot straightway we goe.

Ballad of R. Baker, in Hakluyt's Voyages, 1563.

Latimer seems to have understood the expression with reference to the melting pot of the refiner:—

You see by dayly experience that the most part of wicked men are lucky in this worlde, they beare the swing, all thynges goeth after their myndes, for God letteth them haue their pleasures here. And therefore this is a cōmon saying: The more wicked, the more luckye: but they that pertaine to God, they shall inherite euerlastyng life: they must goe to the pot, they must suffer here according to the Scripture.—Sermons (1552), p. 183.

The explanation is complicated by the curious statement in Pierce the Ploughmans Crede (1394), that useless friars were sometimes put out of the way with pottes on her hedes.

l. 614.

vnder a pot he schal be put in a pryvie chambre.

l. 627.

POTENT, an old English word for a crutch occurring in Chaucer, would more correctly be a potents, being from the French potence, a crutch, Low Lat. potentia, a support.

In heraldry a cross Potent is one each arm of which resembles a crutch.

POT-SHAUGH, the scarcely recognizable form which Pasha wears in Sir Thos. Herbert, corresponds closely enough to the original Persian word, which is pād-shâh, a sovereign or emperor, from pād, protecting, and shâh, a king.

To speak truly, the Pot-shaugh had then no affection for him, when probably by reason of his old-age he was disabled to do him further service.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 221.

Here we met the Pot-shaw again.—Id. p. 220.

The word translated "governor" in A.V. 1 Kings x. 15, Ezra v. 3, is in Hebrew pechâh, which seems to be an adaptation of Pers. pād-shâh, explained by M. Müller to be pad (Sansk. pati, lord, Greek pōsis) + shâh (the remains of Cuneiform khshâyathiya, king), see Pusey on Daniel, pp. 570-72.

POTTINGAR, Scotch for an apothecary, influenced in form apparently by the word pottinger, a jar, an earthen vessel, as if it meant the man of gallipots, according to Swift's jesting derivation, "a-pot-he-carries." Compare the old Eng. potygar, potecary; Scotch poti- garies, drugs, pottingry, the apothecary's art.

In pottingry he wrocht great pyne ;
He mordreit mony in medecyne.
Dunbar.

Pharmacopile, vulgo le Pottinger.—Bardsley, Hist. of Surnames, p. 173 [where the meaning is mistaken].

Compare Potecarry, a provincial word for an apothecary.

A parallel is afforded in German folkspeech by topfträger, pot-carrier (Andresen).

POU DE SOIE, } the French name
POULT DE SOIE, } of a species of thick silk stuff, is doubtless only another form of the English word, padisoy, Scot. poddisoy, poddaswoy, compounded of Fr. padoue and soie, i.e. Padua silk. Fr. padou is a sort of silk ribbon tissue originally manufactured at Padua (Gattel).

POUNDGARNET, a corruption of pomegranate (Wright).

POURCUTTEL, a fish mentioned in Holland's Pliny, seems to be a corrupted form of the name pourcontrell, which he also applies to it. Under the head of the "Polypus or Pourcontrell kind," he says, "As for the Many-feet or Pourcuttels they lie hidden for two months together, and about two yeares they lye not."—Naturall History, tom. i. p. 250 (1634).

PRESS, To, to enlist soldiers, to constrain men to serve in the navy, originally to prest, or take them into the service by giving them prest-money (i.e. ready money, an earnest), or something in prest (Lat. præsto, O. Fr. prest, Fr. prêt, ready, in which sense prest occurs in Shakespeare, Mer. of Venice, i. 1.). So spelt as if it primarily meant to force men to serve on compulsion, like the French forçat from forcer, and It. sforzati, galley-slaves perforce (Florio). But prestmen (Chapman, Od. iv.) denoted hired men, in contrast to bond men, and prest in Bacon is a loan, money advanced.

When went he, or with what train dignified?
Of his selected Ithacensian youth?

Prest men, or bond men, were they? Tell the truth.

Chapman, Odysseys, bk. iv. l. 861
(ed. Hooper).

He should have by the way of a prest a thousand markes of his pension out of Winchester.—Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, Wordsworth, Eccles. Biog. vol. i. p. 482.

Souldiers, late prest, are now suppress;
Croft and cassied from further pay.
J. Sylvester, Epigrams, Works, p. 615.

In the following, prest means ready at hand, willing to serve as volunteers:—

White (Swan-like) wings, fierce talons, alwaies prest
For bloody hattails.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 106 (1621).

The winged Legiona,
That soar about the bright Star-spaugled Regions,
Are ever prest, his powfull Ministers.

Id. p. 143.

Though the Rulers of the earth take counsel against the Lord and against his Christ, yet there is an Army always prest in the air.—Hacket, Century of Sermons, p. 66, fol. 1675.

Prêt came to be mistaken for a past participle, as if pressed. Compare the following:—

Must grandson Filbert to the wars be prest? . . .

O tyrant Justices! have you forgot
How my poor brother was in Flanders shot?
You press'd my brother—he shall walk in white . . .

Now will you press my harmless nephew too?
Gay, The What D'ye Call It, act i. sc. 1.

We to a Committee of the Council to discourse concerning pressing of men.—Pepys,
Diary, Feb. 27th, 1664-5.

I yesterday expressed my wonder that John Hay, one of our guides, who had been pressed a-board a man-of-war, did not choose to continue in it longer than nine months, after which time he got off.—Boswell, Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides, Aug. 31.

He [John Newton] went to sea at eleven years old. Presently we find him impressed into the navy, and there, through his father's influence made midshipman.—Saturday Review, vol. 51, p. 201.

Privy-Seals were common in her [Elizabeth's] Days, and pressing of Men more frequent, especially for Ireland, where they were sent in Handfuls.—J. Howell, Familiar Letters, bk. iv. 12.

PRESS, a cupboard, is generally regarded as being a derivative of Lat. pressorium, an instrument for pressing or compressing, used for the receptacle wherein clothes or linen are pressed. However, Bret. pres, armoire, a cupboard (dialect of Léon), Gael. preas, a wooden case, armarium, are suggestive of a Celtic origin (Ferguson, Cumber- land Glossary, s.v.). Compare Welsh pres, and preseb, a crib.

A presse for cloths, pressorium.—Levins, Manipulus (1570), 84, 30.

Those of Marchia . . . do put it into chests and presses among clothes, to preserue them from moths or other vermine.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1111.

PRESS-GANG, } a party of men em-
PRESS-MONEY, } ployed to enlist men for the royal service by giving them prest-money. It has nothing to do with the verb press, to urge, impel, or constrain.

Preste money, of Fr. prest, Lat. præsto, ready at hand, Earnest-money commonly given to a Soldier when he is listed, so called because it binds the Receiver to be ready for service at all Times appointed.—Bailey.

The King covenants to pay half of the first quarter's wages in advance. This was the prest-money, . . . [or part of their wages paid in advance on engaging them. "On peut de plus ici observer le terme de prest, qui est encore aujourd'hui en usage parmi les troupes, pour signifier une avance de quelque argent qu'on fait aux soldats."—Daniel, Milice Franç. tom. 1. liv. iv. ch. 2.]—Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. i. p. 280.

Your Lordship is likewise to take orders that there be prest, and sent with the said soldiers, one Drum and Drummer to every 100 men.—Letter, 1640 (Scott, op. cit. p. 407).

PRESTIDIGITATOR, Fr. prestidigitateur, a juggler or conjurer, so spelt as if it meant a "quick-fingered" fellow, from preste, quick, and digitus, a finger, perhaps from the analogy of leger-de-main "light-of-hand" (cf. prest-oreille, quick-eared). This is quite a recent formation and a corruption of the older word prestigiuteur, "a Jugler, a cheating Conjuror" (Cotgrave), Eng. prestigiator (Henry More), It. prestigiatore, all from Lat. prestigiator, a juggler, and that from præstigiæ, a deception or sleight of hand, lit. that which dazzles the sight (cf. Fr. prestige), from præ-stingere, to obscure or baffle (sc. the eyes).

In the Autobiography of Robert Houdin it is stated that one Jules de Rovère, a professor of sleight of hand, being of noble birth, created this word as an appropriate title for himself, instead of the vulgar name escamoteur.

The first his honest, hard-working hand; the second his three-fingered Jack, his pres- tidigital hand.—Reade, Never too late to mend, ch. vi. [Davies].

PRIAL, an old term at cards, is a corruption of pair-royal, which denoted three kings, three queens, &c., and is frequently used in old authors for any triad or three. The word came to be written perryall, and finally prial (see Nares, s.v.), from false analogy to words like espial, trial, &c. Indeed, pair-royal was sometimes used to rhyme with trial, e.g. by Quarles in his Emblems. For similar compressions of words, compare skeg for suck-egg, a Northampton word for a fool (Sternberg); pifler for pipe-filler (Wright); proxy for proc-cy, from procuracy; sex-ton for sac-stan, from sacristan.

Is crazy time grown lazy, faint or sick,
With very age? or hath that great pair-royal
Of adamantine sisters late made trial
Of some new trade!

Quarles, Emblems, bk. v. 7.

PRICK-MADAM, a popular name for the plant sedum, is a corruption of the French trique-madame, for triacque à madame, Lat. theriaca, as it were "lady's-treacle."

Erithales—which some take to be Prick-madame of the French Trique-Madame.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 237.

So Gerarde, Herbal, p. 414.

PRIDE, the trivial name for the small river lamprey (Ammocetes Branchialis), one of the lampride, It. lampreda, from which perhaps it is derived. It is sometimes called the sand-pride or sand-prey.

The fresh-water lamprey, or pride, is about half the size of the sea lamprey.—Badham, Prose Hætiotics, p. 445.

PRIME, to prepare a firearm for immediate service (by putting powder on the nipple), has no connexion with Lat. primus, Eng. prime, first (as if the first thing to do), but is a corrupted form of the verb preim (Dunbar), proim, or prune, to dress or trim. Proim, also spelt proigne, is probably from Fr. provignier, Low Lat. propaginare.

To prime is still a provincial word for pruning or triming trees (Forby), while conversely the priming of a gun was formerly called pruning (Florio, 1611). The old meaning of prune, proim, was to dress, or trim one's self, esp. of birds, to arrange the plumage.

He pruneth him and piketh,
As doth an hauke, when him wel liketh.

Gower, Conf. Amantis.

He kembeth him, he proineth him and piketh,
He doth all that his lady lust and liketh.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 9885.

The popeiayes perken and pruynen fol proude.

Celestin and Susanna, l. 81.

The swana did in the solid flood, her glass
Proin their fair plumes.

Marlowe, Hero and Leander, 1598

(Works, p. 297.)

Doe men proyne

The straight yong bowes that blush with thousand blossoms,

Because they may be rotten ?

The Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 6, 244

(ed. Littledale.)

The blinded Archer-boy, like larke in showre of raine

Sat bathing of his wings, and glad the time did spend.

Under those cristall drops, which fell from her faire eies

And at their brightest beames him prouynd in lovely wiae.

Spenser, Mourning Muse of Thestylis

(p. 565, Globe ed.)

His royal bird

Prunes the immortal wing and cloys his beak
As when his god is pleased.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 4, 118.

A husband that loveth to trim and pamper his body, causeth his wife by that means to study nothing else but the tricking and pruning of herself.—Holland, Plutarch's Morals,
p. 318 [Trench].

Night's bashful empress, though she often wane,

As oft repeats her darkness, primes again.

Quarles, Emblems, bk. iii. 1, l. 11.

Keep close your pris'ner—See that all's pre-par'd.

Prime all your firelocks—fasten well the stake.

Gay, The What D'ye Call It, ii. 1.

Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, quotes :

When she was primmed out down she came to him.—Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, iii. 37.

Tell dear Kitty not to prim up as if we had never met before.—Mdme. D'Arblay, Diary,
ii. 108 (1781).

PRIME-COCK, } old English words
PRINCOCKE, } for a pert, forward
PRINCOCKS, } youth, are corrup-
PRINCY-COCK, } tions of the Latin præcox, precocious, early ripe (præ and coquere).

Wright gives prime-cock-boy, a novice, of similar origin ; compare :—

Herba da buof, . . . used often for a prime-cock-boy, a fresh man, a novice, a milkesop, a boy new come into the World.—Florio.

You shall heare a caulier of the first feather, a princookes that was but a page the other day in the court, and now is all to be frenchified in his souldiours aute, stand vpon termes with "God's wounds! you dishonour me, sir."—T. Nash, Pierce Penilesse, 1592,
p. 52 (Shaks. Soc.).

I have almost these two yeares cast in my head, how I might match my princocks with Stello's daughter.—J. Lilly, Mother Bombie, act i. sc. 3 (ed. Fairholt).

PRIMARY, an old popular word for a scrape, difficulty, or trouble, is a corruption of præmunire, which was once used in the same way. "To fall into a Præmunire is to involve one's self in trouble."—Bailey. The allusion is to the penalties incurred under the Statute of Præmunire, long a popular bug-bear, as being fertile in vexations and troubles
(Notes and Queries, 5th S. vii. 119.)

I deant want to git myself intiv a primi-
nary.—Whitby Glossary, F. K. Robinson
(Eng. Dialect Soc.)

The following citations are from
Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary :—

So my lady has brought herself into a fine
præmunire.—Centlivre, The Gamester, act iv.

I, seeing what a primary I had by my badneas brought myself in, I saw that it could not be avoided.—Letter of Robert Young, 1680 (Harl. Misc. VI. 334).

Compare excommunicate, an Irish pronunciation of excommunicate.

If you don't, by the blessed St. Dominick I'll exkimmicate ye both.—Carleton, Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry, i. 69.

PRIM-PRINT, a popular name for the privet plant, is a corruption of Fr.
prime-printemps, earliest spring.

The most excellent is the Greene coloured Catterpillar, which is found vpon that great hushy plant, vsually termed Priuet or Prim- print.—Topsell, Hist of Serpents, p. 103 (1608).

PRIMROSE has nothing to do with rose, but is a corruption of the old English word pryme rolles or primerole, being the same word as Fr. primverole,
It. primaverola, diminutive of prima- vera, i.e. primula veris, "the firstling of spring" (Prior). Florio, It. Dict. 1611, has both primvrosa and primuera.
Chaucer has pryme-rose, and so the Promptorium Parvulorum, "Prymerose, primula;" but primerols occurs in Wright's Lyric Poetry (Percy Soc.), p.
26.

The apparent, but mistaken, etymology is taken as granted in the following:—

And, gazing, saw that Rose, which from the prime

Derives its name.

Wordsworth, The River Duddon, xxii.

For the latter Part of January, and February, . . . Prime-roses, Anemones, The Early Tulippa.—Bacon, Essays (1625), p. 556 (ed. Arber).

Primrose Peerless, a popular name for the narcissus, Dr. Prior thinks may have arisen from primula paralyseos (properly the cowslip), i.e. the narcotic spring flower.

Prim-rose, first-borne child of Ver,
Merry spring-time's herbinger
With her bells dimme.

The Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1, l. 9
(ed. Littledale).

Here plucks the Cowslips, Roses of the prime,
There Lavander, sweet Marjoram, and Thyme.

G. Wither, Britains Remembrancer,
p. 137, verso, 1628.

þe primerole, he passeþ, þe paruenke of pris.
Bödeker, Älteng. Dicht. p. 145, l. 13.

That is the monthe belongende
Unto this Signe, and of his dole,
He yiveth the firste primerole.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii.
p. 125 (ed. Pauli).

PRINT, a shortened form of primet, primprint (from French prime printemps), is a provincial word for the privet.

Be gamesome, whiles thou art a goodly creature,

The flowers will fade that in thy garden grew,

Sweet violets are gather'd in the Spring,
White primet falls withouten pitying.

Oliphant, Musa Madrigalesca, p. 280.

Her watchmen, arm'd with boughie crest,
A wall of prim hid in his bushes bears,
Shaking at enery winde their leanie spears,
While she supinely aleeps, ne to be wak'd fears!

G. Fletcher, Christs Victorie on Earth,
st. 44.

PRIVY, an old English name (Tusser) for the privet plant, corrupted from its name primet, primprint, Fr. prime printemps (Prior). For the interchange of v and m, compare malmsey for old Eng. malvesie; It. vermena for verbena; Swed. hamn, = haven.

The borders round about are set with privie sweete.—N. Breton, Daffodils and Prim-roses, p. 3.

Set privie or prim,
Set boxe like him.
Tusser, 1580 (E. D. Soc.),
p. 33.

PROFORCE, a Scottish word quoted by Jamieson from Monro's Expeditions, for the "provost-marshal" of an army, is no doubt a corruption of the first part of that word. Our "provost" is itself a perverted form from Lat. præpositus (one set before others), which is crushed out of all resemblance in the German probst (also profos). The old Eng. form was práfost, Fr. prévôt, Sp. preboste. Compare old Scottish perforce, the title of a military officer in Acts Chas. I. (Jamieson), meaning probably a "provost marshal."

PROPOSAL. } Who would not ima-PROPOSITION. } gine that in the phrase, "I have a proposition to make," he might substitute the word proposal, not only as strictly synonymous, but etymologically identical?
And yet the words have no real connexion. Proposal is, of course, from propose, Fr. proposer, where poser is derived—not from Lat. ponere—but from Lat. pausare, to rest or pause (afterwards "to make to rest, to set," from a confusion with ponere), from Greek paúsis, a ceasing or pause (Diez, Littré).

On the other hand, proposition comes through the French from Lat. propositio(n), derived from propositus, past part. of proponere, to set before.

Similarly deposal (from de-pausare) is unrelated to deposition (from de-ponere);
and compose has no affinity with composition, nor impose with imposition. See PURPOSE.

Prof. Skeat remarks that this extraordinary substitution of Low Lat. pausare for Lat. ponere, the meaning of which it usurped, whilst in all compounds it completely thrust it aside, is one of the most remarkable facts in French etymology (Etym. Dict. s. v.
Pose).

PROVENDER, old Eng. prouende, Fr.
provende (Ger. pfriende), It. profenda, so spelt as if, like the word provision
(Ger. proviant), it denoted something provided, Lat. providenda (from providere), is really a corrupt form of It.
prevenda and prebenda, Sp. prebenda,

Fr. prébende, all from Lat. præbenda, things to be supplied, sustenance.

PRUNELLA, a plant-name, as if a little plum, a diminutive of Lat. prunus, is a modification of Brunella (Brunel in Gerarde), which is formed from the German die Braune, a kind of quinsy, for which this plant was deemed a specific. Salmon, English Physic, p. 753, speaks of a "sorethroat called Pruna." See Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 68 (E. D. Soc.). Another name for it is Brown-wort, old Eng. brunwyr̄t, brunethan (Cockayne, Leechdoms, Læce Boc, I. iv. 6).

PRUTENE, an old Eng. name of the plant Southernwood (Cockayne, Leechdoms, Wortcunning, &c., vol. iii., Glossary), as if connected with prütian, to be proud or stately, is a corruption of its Latin name abrotonum.

PUBLISHT, in the curious Scottish phrase, "a weel-publisht bairn," i.e. a plump, well-conditioned child (Jamieson), perhaps denotes properly well-nourished, and is a derivative of Lat. pabulum, food, nourishment, pabulari, to feed, as if pablisht.

PUCK-FIST, a popular name for the fungus Lycoperdon (pet du loup), and of much the same meaning, being compounded of old Eng. fist (Ger. feist), the explosion which the puff-ball makes when struck, and Puck, the merry wanderer of the night. Other names are The Devil's Snuff-box, Ir. cos-a-phooka, "Puck's-foot."

Fungus Orbicularis, or Lupi Crepitus, . . . in English Fusse bals, Pucke Fusse, and Bul-fists.—Gerarde, Herball, fol. p. 1385 (1597).

All the sallets are turn'd to Jewes-ears, musbrooms and Puckfists.—Heywood and Brome, Lancashire Witches, 1634, sig. E 4.

Do you laugh? you unseasonable puckfist? do you grin?—Webster, Northward Ho, i. 2.

Now the 'spital-house' on the Puck-fist tribe of them.—Randolph, Hey for Honesty, ii. 3.

PUDDING, more correctly puddin, Fr. boudin, Welsh poten, has been conformed to the present participial form and that of substantives in -ing (A. Sax. -ung), such as a "roasting," "a boiling." Similarly "chicking," "capturing," may sometimes be heard as vulgar pronunciations of "chicken," "captain," and I have seen in old letters curring for cousin. Kitching is frequently in old writers for kitchen.

A bad kitching did for ever spoil the good Meat of the Bishop of Landaffe.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 164 (ed. 1811).

No kitching fire nor eating flame.—Sir J. Suckling, Fragmenta Aurea, 1648, p. 12.

Pepys speaks of "woolring knit stockings" (Diary, July 16, 1667).

PULLEY, so spelt as if connected with the verb to pull. In John Hookham Frère's burlesque mathematical poem, The Loves of the Triangles, the line, The obedient pulley strong MECHANICS ply, is accompanied by the annotation:—

Pulley—so called from our Saxon word PULL, signifying to pull or draw.—Works, vol. i. p. 90.

It is, however, the old Eng. poleyne (Prompt. Parv. ab. 1440), pullayne (Palsgrave, 1530), Fr. poulie, Sp. polea, polin, identical with Fr. poulain, a colt or foal, also a pulley-ropes (Cotgrave), Prov. poli. The idea common to both is that of a carrier or weight-bearer.

Comparable with this and nearly related are Sp. potro, a wooden stand, Fr. poutre, a cross-beam, same as Sp. potro, It. poledro, Low Lat. poledrus, pulletrus, a colt, Gk. pólos. Hence also Ger. folter, a rack (Diez).

How broughtest thou me ones in to the welle where the two bokettys henge by one corde rennyng thurgh one pulley whiche wente one vp and another down.—Carton, Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 96 (ed. Arber).

Machines or appliances used for carrying, lifting, or supporting weights are often called by the names of beasts of burden, such as horse, mule, ass, e.g. It. asinone, a great ass,—also "an engine to mount a piece of ordinance" (Florio). It. caualetto, "any little nagge or horse,—also any tressel, or saddlers or Armorsers wooden horse" (Florio). Fr. chevalet, Eng. "horse," a stand for towels, clothes, &c. "Easel," a painter's tressel, Ger. esel, Lat. asellus, a little ass.

Gk. kilibas (κίλιβας), of the same meaning, is from killos (κίλλος), an ass. Gk. ónos (ὄνος), an ass, also a windlass. Sp. and Port. muleta, a crutch, from mulus, a mule. It. bordone, Fr. bourdou, a pilgrim's staff, from burdo, a mule. "Gauntree," a frame to set casks upon, Fr. chantier, is the Latin cantherius, a pack-horse, also a prop, a rafter. Lat. equuleus, a young horse, also a wooden rack.

Fr. bourriquet, a handbarrow, is from bourrique, Sp. and Port. burro, an ass, Low Lat. buricus, a nag.

O. Eng. somer, a bedstead, is the French sonier, sommier, a sumpter-horse, also a piece of timber called a summer; Prov. sauma, a she-ass, from the Lat. sagmarius, a pack-horse. The Persian bakrah denotes a cow, and also a clothes-horse; bakarah, a pulley.

PULP-FISH, or POUPE, an old name for the octopus or cuttle-fish, as if denoting its pulpous or fleshy nature (Fr. poulpe, polpe, It. polpa, Lat. pulpa, flesh), is a naturalized form of Fr. poulpe, the Pourcontrell or many-footed fish (Cotgrave), It. polpo, which Florio defines "a Pulpe-fish, a Pourcontrell, a Many-feete or Cuttle-fish." These are only contracted forms of polype, It. polipo, from Lat. polypus, Greek polú-pous, "many-foot." The forms Fr. pourpe, It. porpo, which are also found, recall a curious perversion of the pathological polypus in the case of a poor woman I once knew who complained much of the sufferings she experienced from a porpoise in her inside.

PUNCH, in the popular phrase, "to punch one's head," i. e. to thump or pound it, as if identical with punch, to perforate or make holes, is a corruption of punish, just as in old Eng. vansh is found for vanish and pulsh for polish (Skeat, Etym. Dict.). On the other hand compare PERISH.

Punchyn', or chastysyn' (al. punysshén), Punio, castigo.—Prompt. Parv.

Punchynge (al. punysshinge), Punicio.—Id.
Punchyn', or bunchyn', Trudo, tundo.—Id.

PUNCH, the humpbacked hero of the street drama, apparently the same word as punch, a thick, stout person of small stature (Gregor, Banff. Glossary), punchy, pot-bellied.

Staying among poor people there in the ally did hear them call their fat child Punch, which pleased me mightily, that word being become a word of common use for all that is thick and short.—Pepys, Diary, April 30, 1669 (ed. Braybrooke).

It is really a contraction of Punchinello, which is a corruption of It.

pulcinello, pulcinella, a buffoon, a puppet, orig. a chickling (i. e. a little pet), from pulcino, a chicken. Chéruel adds that the Maccus, or buffoon of the Atellane Farces, is represented in ancient designs with a long nose like a chicken's beak, and that he was the original of the French polichinel (Hist. des Institutions, p. 996).

PUPPY, a cockcomb, a conceited fop, formerly "an unexperienced raw fellow" (Bailey), is not a figurative use of puppy, a little dog, but derived from Fr. poupin, or popin, spruce . . nice, dainty, prettie, se popiner, to trimme or trick up himselfe (Cotgrave), poupper, to dandle or cocker (Id.), poupée, a puppet or doll; all from Lat. pupus, a boy, a child. Puppy, a whelp, is of the same origin. Compare Prov. Eng. poppin, a puppet (Forby), poppy, soft, tender (Wright).

Popyn, chylde of clowtys (or moppe), Pupa.—Prompt. Parv.

PURÉE, a vegetable soup, Fr. purée, so spelt as if it denoted a clear soup, from Fr. pur, pure, is old Eng. puree, poré, or porree, old Fr. porée, pottage made of beets or with other herbs (Cotgrave), It. porrata, leek-soup (Florio), from Lat. porrum, a leek.

Porre, or purre, potage, Piseum, vel pisea.—Prompt. Parv.

Recipes for "Blanchéd Porray," and "Porry of white pesc," are given in Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 44.

Fr. poirée is a distinct corruption.

PURL, spiced ale, apparently connected with purl, to flow with a murmuring sound, Swed. porla, to bubble along, is, according to Prof. Skeat, a corruption of pearl, so called with reference to the pearl-like bubbles resting on its surface, Fr. perlé, Ger. perlen, to bubble, to pearl. For a contrary change see PEARLING. Compare the following:—

O for a beaker full of the warm South,
Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene,
With beaded bubbles winking at the brim
Keats, Ode to a Nightingale, st. 2.

PURLIEU, now applied to the borders or environs of any place, especially to the slums or bad part of a neighbourhood, meant originally the outskirts of a forest, so spelt as if denoting a place (Fr. lieu) exempt or free (Fr. pur) from the forest laws, disforested. The proper meaning, however, is, as Bailey gives it, "all that space near any Forest which being anciently Forest, is afterwards separated from the same by Perambulation," literally perambulated (as formerly parishes used to have their bounds beaten), being a corruption of purley, or purlic, an Anglicized form of old Fr. puralee, pourallee (Wedgwood), i.e. a going through, a perambulation. The proper meaning, therefore, is the borders of a forest.

Nares quotes the phrase, "to hunt in purley."—Randolph, Muses Looking-Glass (Old Plays, ix. 244), where Hazlitt (1875, p. 247) prints purlicue. Compare "Purrel-way, the boundary line of a parish."—Wright.

Oh! if these purlicues be so full of danger,
Great God of hearts, the world's sole sov'- reign ranger,
Preserve thy deer.

F. Quarles, Emblems, bk. iii. 9
(p. 123, ed. 1865).

His greatest fault is, he hunts too much in the purlicues.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Philaster, iv. 1.

But every moderne god will now extend
His vaste prerogative as farre as Jove.
To rage, to lust, to write to, to commend,
All is the purlewe of the God of Love.

Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 47.

There was much Land disafforested, which hath been called Pourlicues ever since, whereof there were appointed Rangers.—J. Howell, Familiar Letters, bk. iv. 6.

PURLOIN. I cite this word in order to note that the most learned of the translators of the Authorized Version attached a meaning to it, where it occurs in Titus ii. 10, indicating the duty of servants,—“Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity,”—curiously different from the general acceptation. The word in the Greek is νοσφιζομαι, which means either (1) to put aside or away (νόσφι) for one's self, to appropriate, steal, or (2) to go aside or away, to withdraw, to retire (compare the two meanings of “to steal away”). It is in the latter sense that Bishop Andrewes understood the word, as is plain from the following passage:—

Rules of behaviour in divine service—5.
Depart not from it till it be ended; Exod. xxxiii. 11, Joshua “departed not out of the tabernacle;” Tit. ii. 10, “not purloining;”

For as we pray that God should hear us,
. . . so we should take heed we go not from Him.—Pattern of Catechistical Doctrine (1641), p. 139 (Oxford ed.).

Purloin was originally to put away, old Eng. “purlongyn or prolongyn, or put fer a-way, Prolongo, alieno.”—Prompt. Parvulorum; proloyn (Wycliffe); old Fr. purloignier, Low Lat. prolongare, to be, or to set, far away (Lat. longe, Fr. loin). Andrewes was no doubt led to give the word this unusual meaning from a reminiscence of the kindred old Eng. verbs forloin, to go away, depart, forsake, and esloin, to put away, remove, banish, withdraw.

Vch freke forloyned fro þe ryȝt wayes.

[Each man departed from the right ways.]
Alliterative Poems, p. 45, l. 282
(ed. Morris).

þay *forloyn*e her fayth & folȝed oþer goddes.
Id. p. 70, l. 1165.

For esloin or eloin, old Fr. esloigner, = Lat. ex-longare, compare:—

From worldly cares himselfe he did esloyn.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, I. iv. 20.

I'll tell thee now (deare Love) whatthou shalt doe

To anger destiny, as she doth us,
How I shall stay, though she esloigne me
thus.

Donne, Poems, p. 24 (1635).

Upon the rooffe the hirde of sorrowe sat
Elonging ioyfull day with her sad note.

G. Fletcher, Christs Victorie on Earth
(1610), st. 24.

PURPOSE, an intention, old Eng. porpos, from old Fr. purpos, Lat. propositum, something set before one, a design, has no etymological connexion with the verb purpose, to intend, with which it is naturally and invariably associated. To purpose, Fr. pur-poser, is from Lat. pro + pausare, to rest (lay down, set) before one, as an object to be attained, to propose (Skeat). See PROPOSAL.

PURSY, “over-fat, short, or broken-winded” (Bailey), is no necessary symptom of the moneyed man who has a well-filled purse, but is a corruption of Fr. pourciff, “pursie, shortwinded” (Cotgrave), from the old verb poursser in the sense of to pant, Lat. pulsare. Old Eng. forms are purcy, purcyf.

Purcy, in wynd drawynge. Cardiacus.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Purcyf, shorte wynded, . . . Pourciff.—Palsgrave.

Compare Limousin poussá, to breathe with difficulty; It. bolso, asthmatic, broken-winded, bolsina, pursiness (for polso, &c., from polsare, to pant), which bears a similarly deceptive resemblance to bolza, borza, a purse; old Fr. poulsif. All these words are from Lat. pulsare, to pant, to beat violently.

Pursy insolence shall break his wind
With fear and horrid flight.

Timon of Athens, v. 4, l. 11
(Globe ed.).

A pursie man, or that fetcheth his breath often, as it were almost windlesse.—Baret.

Pursy, cardiacus.—Levins, Manipulus, 108, 37 (1570).

A pursie double chind Læna, riding hy on a sumpter-horse with prouder at his mouth, and she is the Litter-Driner: shee keeps two Pages, and those are an Irish Beggar one the one side, and One that sayes he has been a Soldier on the other side.—Dekker, Seuen Deadly Sinnes of London, 1606, p. 34 (ed. Arber).

Let but our English belly-gods punish their pursie bodies with strict penance.—T. Nash, Pierce Penilesse, 1592, p. 51 (Shaks. Soc.).

PUSH, a common old word for a blister or pustule, as if that which pushes up through the skin, like Fr. bouton, a botch or pimple, from bouter, to push up as a hud, is probably only a naturalized form of Fr. poche, a pustule (Skeat), originally a little sac, "pouch," "poke," or "pock-et," and so near akin to pock. As poche does not seem to have borne the above meaning in old French (e.g. in Cotgrave), push seems to me to be more likely identical with Lat. pusa, a blister, implied in Lat. pusula, and pustula, a bubble or blister, originally something blown up or inflated, akin to Greek phûsa, a bellows, a blast, phûsalis, a bladder, phûskê, a blister. Compare also Dan. puse, to swell up, and Lith. puslė, a bladder or pimple.

If it be pouned with barly meale and laide to pushes, it taketh them away.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 949.

The root being dried and incorporat with rosin . . . discusseth and healeth the swelling kernels behind the eare; the angrie pushes also and biles in other Emunctories called Pani.—Holland, Pliny, vol. ii. p. 36.

It was a Prouerb, amongst the Grecians; that, He that was praised to his Hurt, should have a Push rise upon his nose.—Bacon, Essays, xxix. (1625), p. 355 (ed. Arber).

PUTTER, a Scotch word for a short piece of ordnance, as if from to put, in the sense of casting or throwing a heavy stone, &c., is a corruption of petard, old Eng. petarre, Fr. petard, that which makes a crack or explosion (pet).

PUTTOCK-SHROUDS, a naval term, a corruption of futtock, i.e. foot-hook, shrouds. Puttock is a kite.

He actually arrived at the puttock-shrouds.—Smollett, Roderick Random, ch. xxvii. [Latham, Dict. s.v.]

PYRAMID, Greek pyramid-s, pyramis, so spelt as if connected with pur, fire (whence pyre), from its resemblance to the tapering shape of a flame, "For fire by nature mounteth like a Pyramis," as Seneca remarks (Works, translated by Lodge, p. 787, 1614), and the triangular figure Δ, from the same resemblance to an upward-tending flame, was the symbol of Siva (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 114). The word is no doubt of Egyptian origin, probably from pi-ram, "the lofty," from ram, aram, to be high (S. Birch, in Bunsen's Egypt, vol. v. p. 763). Brugsch says that in Egyptian pir-am-us is "edge of the pyramid," and abumir, a pyramid (Egypt under the Pharaohs, vol. i. p. 73).

The Taper is the longest and sharpest triangle that is, and while he mounts vpward he waxeth continually more slender, taking both his figure and name of the fire, whose flame if ye marke it, is alwaies pointed, and naturally by his forme couets to clymbe; the Greekes call him Pyramis of πύρ.—G. Puteham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (1589), p. 108 (ed. Arber).

This epithet has an old traditional consecration to Venus, and in such an application springs upward like a pyramid of fire into a far more illimitable and imaginative value.—De Quincey, Works, vol. xi. p. 100.

Wordsworth says that church spires sometimes—

When they reflect the brazen light of a rich, though rainy, sunset, appear like a pyramid of flame burning heavenward.—See The Ecclesiastic, iii. 74 (1847).

Q.

QUAFF should properly be to quaff (occurring in Of the Olde God and the Newe, 1534, sig. O), from old Eng. quawght, which was no doubt mistakeu for a past participle (compare PRESS), Scot. waught, waucht, to quaff or swig, waught, a large draught of drink; "A waught of ale."—Ramsay.

I quaught, I drink all out.—Palsgrave, 1530.

Compare Icel. vökva sig (to moisten one's self), to drink, to slake one's thirst (Cleasby, 721). Qu often takes the place of w in Scotch.

Do waucht and drink, bring cowpis full in handis.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 250, l. 47.

We'll tak a right guid willie-waught,

For anld lang syne.

Burns, Poems, p. 227 (Globe ed.).

QUAGMIRE, formerly sometimes spelt quake-mire, as if the mire that quakes or is (Prov. Eng.) quaggy or quaky, is a corruption of the old Eng. quick-mire, a bog that seems quick or alive because it shakes or moves, just as quick-silver is moving silver, and quick-sand, moving sand. Compare Dan. quæg, living, and quæg-sand and quik-sand, quicksand. The change was the more natural as quick is near akin to quake, A. Sax. cwacian, cweccan, to move or shake; see Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 488.

Quickmire, a quagmire, Devon.—Wright, Prov. Dictionary.

Compare the following:—

Lo, þe erthe for heuynesse þat he wolde dep
suffre,

Quakede as quike þyng.

Vision of Piers Plowman, C. xxi. 259.

All wagged his fleche as a quyk myre.

Pierce the Ploughman's Crede, l. 226
(ed. Skeat).

When the sand of the Goodwins is observed to be in a shifting, moving condition, it is still said by sailors to be "alive."

At low tide a portion of the sand is dry and bard, . . . but as the water again flows over any part of it, that part becomes, as the sailors say, "all alive," soft and quick, and ready to suck in anything that lodges upon it.—J. Gilmore, Storm Warriors, p. 87.

Compare with this old Eng. quitch (to be lively), to stir or move; quaggy, a Prov. word for shaky, "Quaggy bog-earth" (Ellis, Mod. Husbandman, IV. iv. 42); Prov. Eng. quob, a quick-sand or bog (West), quob-mire (Shrops.), "quabbe or quagmire."—Minshew, 1617; quave, to shake. Other forms of the word are wag-mire and quave-mire.

For they bene like foule wagmoires overgrast,
That if thy galage once sticketh fast,
The more to wind it out thou doest swinck,
Thou mought ay deeper and deeper sink.

Spenser, Shepherds Calender, September.

It was a great deep marish or quauemire, through the midstest wherof the riuier called Apsus did run, being in greatnesse and swiftnesse of streame, very like to the riuier of Penevs.—North, Plutarch, p. 381 (ed. 1612).

QUAIL, to blench, shrink, or cower from fear, meant formerly to pine or die, and the true orthography should be queel or queal, it being old Eng. quelen, to perish, from A. Sax. cwelan, to die (Dut. quelen, to pine away). Compare Devonshire queal, to faint away. See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.

The word appears to have been warped in shape and meaning from having been confounded with quail, an old and provincial verb meaning "to curdle as milk" (Bailey, Wright), which is a naturalized form of old Fr. cailler, coailier (It. quagliare), to curdle, Lat. co-agulare.

Qualyn, as mylke, and other lycowre. Co-agulo.—Prompt. Parvulorum, 1440.

I quayle, as mylke dotthe, i.e. quaillebotte.—Palsgrave, 1530.

[Laser is given] to such as haue supped off and drunk quailed milke, that is cluttered within their stomack.—Holland's Pliny, fol. 1634, tom. ii. p. 134.

The word was then conceived to have originally meant to have one's blood curdled or congealed with fear, just as It. cagliare, to curdle, came also to be used with the meaning "to quail in one's courage, to be afraid, to hold one's peace."

And let not search and inquisition quail
To bring again these foolish runaways.

Shakespeare, As You Like It, ii. 2, l. 21.

The braunch once dead, the budde eke needes must quaille.

Spenser, Shepherds Calender, Nov.

Her . . . look'd like wan quailing [= fainting] away.—M. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 8.

QUAINT, formerly used in the sense of pretty, elegant, handsome, dainty, old Eng. quoynt, quoint, coint, from Fr. "coint, quaint, compt, neat, fine, spruce, brisk, smirk, smug, dainty, trim, tricked up."—Cotgrave. This meaning originated in the assumption that the word was identical with compt, Lat. comptus (from comō), neat, spruce, nicely-dressed. It is really the same word as It. conto, known, noted, and derived from Lat. cognitus, known, and meant (1) well-known, famous, remarkable, excellent, (2) handsome, fine. Wedgwood well contrasts with this uncouth [= in-cognitus], (1) unknown, strange, (2) awkward, ungraceful. It follows that ac-quaint, to make known (from Lat. ad and cognitus), is radically the same word, but here again old Fr. account, acquainted, came also to be used for "neat, compt, fine, spruce" (Cotgrave).

þeos kointe [al. cwointe] harloz þet scheaweð forð hore gutefestre [Those notorious harlots that show forth their dropping ulcers].—Ancren Riwele, p. 328.

Wiþ how coynste cuntenance · he cuerede hire after.

William of Palerne, l. 2824 (ed. Skeat).

Greene speaks of a lady who had seen a handsome man "sitting in a dump to think of the quaintness of his personage" (Nares); compare "My quaint Ariel."—Tempest, i. 2.

For a fine, quaint, graceful and excellent fashion, yours [a gown] is worth ten on't.—Shakespeare, Much Ado, iii. 4, l. 23.

Propelet, a dapper, neat, spruce, quaint, or compt fellow.—Cotgrave.

For Amoret right fearefull was and faint,
Lest she with blame her honor should attain,
That everie looke was coy and wondrous quaint.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV. i. 5.

QUANDARY, a perplexity, is, according to Prof. Skeat, a curious corruption of old. Eng. wandreth, wandrethe, evil plight, adversity, from Icel. wandræði, difficulty, assimilated apparently to words beginning with qu of Latin origin, like quantity, quaternary, &c.

þe sexte vertue es strengthe . . . eynly to suffire þe wele and þe waa, welthe or wandreth.—Religious Pieces (ab. 1440), p. 11 (E.E.T.S.).

And folc sal thol wandreth and ten,

For folc sal duin for din of se.

Eng. Metrical Homilies, p. 21 (ed. Small).

[People shall suffer perplexity and sorrow, for people shall faint for the noise of the sea.]

He quandaries whether to go forward to God, or . . . turn back to the world.—Thos. Adams, Sermons, vol. i. p. 505.

QUARREL, a dispute or contention, spelt so as to correspond to old Eng. quarrel, a square-headed arrow (from Lat. quadrellus), stands for querel, old Eng. querelo, old Fr. querere, from Lat. querela, a complaint; compare querulous. In the Authorized Version quarrel is still used for complaint (Levit. xxvi. 25), and so in the Prayer Book version of the Psalms, "staud up to judge my quarrel" (xxxv. 23).

Forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any.—A. V. Colos. iii. 13 [margin, complaint, and so Revised Version].

For God foond querels in me, therfor he demyde me enemy to hym silf.—Wycliffe, Job xxxiii. 10.

Querel, pleynte, Querela.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Quarrelous, quarrelsome (Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iii. 4), is querulous in Holland.

There inhabit these regions a kind of people, rude, warlike, ready to fight, querulous, and mischievous.—Holland, Camden's Scotland, p. 39 [Trench].

QUARRY, a fowl flown at and killed, originally a reward given to Hounds after they have taken the game (Bailey), is an Anglicized and corrupted form of old Fr. curée or corée, the same (Cotgrave), properly the intestines, which (like Sp. corada, entrails) is from Low Lat. corata, the pluck, the heart and its appurtenances, from Lat. cor, the heart (old Fr. quor, quer). Compare Norm. Fr. curaille, Vie de St. Auban, l. 256 (ed. Atkinson).

But when the Falcon (stooping thunder-like)
With sudden souse her to the ground shall strike;

And with the stroak, make on the sense-less
ground

The gut-less Quar, once, twice, or thrice, rebound.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 361.

The small guttes to the lyghtes in the deres, Aboue the hert, of the beast, when thou them
reeres,

With all the bloud that ye may get & wynne, Altogether shall be take, and laid on the skynne,

To gyue your houndes, that called is, Y wis,
The querre, aboute the skynne, for it eaten is.

Book of St. Albans, How ye shall breke an Hart.

The forster for his rightes,
The left schulder yaf he;
With hert, liuer, and lightes,
And blod till his quirrè.

Sir Tristrem, st. xlv. (ed. Scott).

Her from the quarrey he away doth drive,
And from her griping pounce the greedy prey doth rive.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, V. iv. 42.

Let Reason then at her own quarry fly,
But how can finite grasp infinity?

Dryden, Hind and Panther, Pt. I. l. 105.

QUART, a provincial word meaning to go contrary to, to plough transversely or across, to disagree, fall out (Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary), is no doubt identical with to thwart, Icel. þverr, þvert, a-thwart, across, old Swed. tvär, tvärt, Dan. tvær, tvært, old Ger. twerk, Mid. Ger. thwairs, Goth. þwairhs (angry), A. Sax. þweorh; compare Ger. quer, transverse, Low Ger. queer, across, obliquely, Eng. "queer," peculiar, out of the straight line. See Diefenbach, Gothisch. Sprache, ii. 720. For kw = pv, cf. Icel. kvistr and tvistr, kvisl, and tvisl; N. Eng. twill for quill, twilt for quilt; Dan. trane, a crane. Hence, no doubt, the verb quarter, to cross a road obliquely in driving, Mod. Fr. cartayer, the same (which Littré derives from quatre, as if to cut the road in four!), and perhaps quartering, a sea-term, sailing obliquely, "neither by a wind, nor before wind, but, as it were, betwixt both" (Bailey).

Compare Scottish thorter, across, a-thwart, to thorter, to go athwart, to cross the furrow obliquely in ploughing [= quarter]; so thorter-, thwarter-, and quarter-, ill, a disease of cattle.

The postilion (for so were all carriages then driven) was employed not by fits and starts, but always and eternally, in quartering, i.e. in crossing from side to side, according to the casualties of the ground.—De Quincey, Works, vol. xiv. p. 296.

The two adverse carriages would therefore, to a certainty, be travelling on the same side; and from this side, as not being ours in law, the crossing over to the other would, of course, be looked for from us. . . . And every creature that met us, would rely upon us for quartering.—De Quincey, Works, vol. iv. p. 334.

QUARTER, as in the phrase "to give one no quarter," = to show him no mercy, is "the sparing of the lives and giving good treatment to a conquer'd enemy" (Bailey); Fr. "quartier, Quarter, or fair war, where Souldiers are taken prisoners, and ransomed at a certain rate." The original meaning seems to have been to keep prisoners taken in war in quarters or lodgings, and not to put them to the sword (Littré). This word for enforced residence or detention is perhaps from old Eng. quartern, a place of confinement, a prison, A. Sax. cweart-ärn, cwert-ern, a prison (interpreted as a "house (ärn) of lamentation (cweart)."—Ettmüller, p. 403). Can it possibly be a corrupt form of carc-ern? see QUYER-KYN, and compare Fr. chartre for charcre, from Lat. carcer. Quarters in the ordinary sense of lodgings would then be a modified use of the same word; but quarter, Fr. quartier, a neighbourhood, a district of a town, is from Lat. quartarius, a fourth part. Thus Herod at first showed John the Baptist some quarter, "He beclýsede Iohannem on cwearterne," A. Sax. Version, S. Luke, iii. 20, i.e. he shut him in prison.

þe lichame þe sholde ben þe soule hiltiche bure, makeð hire to ateliche quarterne [The body that should be the soul's joyous chamber, he maketh for her a horrible prison].—Old Eng. Homilies (12th cent.), p. 213 (ed. Morris).

He didn heom in quarterne.—Peterborough Chron. sub ann. 1137.

They do best, who, if they cannot but admit Love, yet make it keep Quarter: And seuer it wholly, from their serious Affairs, and Actions of life.—Bacon, Essays, Of Love, 1625, p. 447 (ed. Arber).

Latimer plays on the word quarter-master, one who provides quarters.

But they do it because they will be quarter maister with their husbandes. Quarter maisters; Nay halfe maisters: yea some of them wil be whole maysters.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 107 verso.

QUARTER SESSIONS ROSE, a gardener's corruption of Fr. rose de quatre saisons.

QUARTES, said to be an old French name for playing cards (E. S. Taylor, History of Playing Cards, p. 89), as if associated with the idea of the four suits (quatre, Lat. quatuor) rather than with the paper or card-board (carte, Lat. charta) of which they are made.

QUAVE, an old Eng. form of wave, a billow, as if derived from quave, to shake, to move up and down (whence quaver).

Al hali Kirc, als thinc me,
Mai bi this schippe takened be,
That Crist rad in and his felawes,
Imang dintes of gret quaves.

Eng. Metr. Homilies, p. 135 (ed. Small).

Compare—

Quelle alle þat is quik with quawende flodeþ.
Alliterative Poems, p. 46, l. 324.
 þe wal wagged and clef and al þe worlde
quawed.

Vision of P. Plowman, B. xviii. 61.

The waterish Fenne below

Those ground-workes laid with stone unearth coulde beare

(So quaving soft and moist the Bases were).

Holland, Camden, p. 530 [Davies].

Wave, old Eng. "wawe, of the see or other water" (Prompt. Parv.), A Sax. wæg (Ger. woge), Icel. vágr, Goth. wegs, is etymologically that which wags or undulates, from A. Sax. wagian, Goth. wagian, to wag or shake, Icel. vega. Hence also Fr. vague, a wave, which was probably imagined to have a connexion with vaguer, to wander (Lat. vagari), as if denoting a wandering or restless volume of water, like Lat. "vaga æquora" (Propertius), and Tennyson's "fields of wandering foam."

QUEEN, the name of a piece in chess, it has been conjectured is an adaptation of its foreign names, Fr. Dame, It. Donna, Fr. Vierge, which were suggestive of the Virgin Mary. But Vierge is a corruption of the older Fr. fierge, fierce (old Eng. fers), from Low Lat. fercia, farnia, which is merely a Latinized form of farz or ferz, a counsellor or minister, the name of the piece in Persian. However, this is improbable, as it was called Regina as early as the 12th century. See D. Forbes, History of Chess, pp. 92, 209; Basterot, Jeu des Echecs, p. 17.

The kynge is the highest, and the queene (whiche some name amasone or layde) is the next.—J. Rowbotham, The Pleasaunt and wittie Playe of the Cheests, 1562.

And when I sawe my fers away,
 Alas, I couth no longer play.

The Booke of the Dutchesse, l. 655.

Although I had a check,
 To geue the mate is hard.

* * * * *

For I will so prouide,
 That I will have your ferse.
 And when your ferse is had,
 And all your warre is done :
 Then shall your selfe be glad
 To ende that you begon.

Tottel's Miscellany, 1557, p. 21 (ed. Arber).

QUEER, an old and Scottish form of quire or choir.

The majority of parish churches seem to have had a small apartment called the queer, which is thought to have been used for baptisms, marriages, and masses.—Guide to the Land of Scott (quoted in Notes and Queries, 5th S. vii. 306).

Herie ye hym in a tympane and queer ;
 herie ye hym in strengis and organ.—Wycliffe, Ps. cl. 4.

QUERY, an Anglicized form of Lat. quære, enquire, imperative of quærere, to seek, originally no doubt a marginal annotation made in reading a book, meaning "investigate this," assimilated to enquiry, &c. So we have jury for Fr. jurée, levy for levée, motley for mattefé, punny for puis-né.

He objects, "Peradventure the woman shall not be willing to follow me." At last being satisfied in this quære, he takes the oath : as no honest man which means to pay, will refuse to giue his bond if lawfully required.—Fuller, Holy State, p. 20 (1648).

For men to thiuk that they shall drive away demons by any such means is folly and superstition. I shall add no more in answer to the first quære proposed.—Mather, Remarkable Providences, p. 187 (ed. Offer).

The only quære which this Article, or this part of the Article will admit, is, whether by his burial we are to understand the interring or depositeure of his body in the monument.—Thos. Jackson, Works, 1673, vol. ii. p. 928.

QUEST, or queest, a name for the wood-pigeon (wood-quest, Columba Palumbus), supposed to have been so called from its plaintive note, Lat. questus, complaint (Bailey). Cf. "Turtur gemit."—Vergil, Ecl. i. 59.

Deep-toned
 The cusht plains ; nor is her changeless plaint Unmusical.

Grahame (Johns, British Birds in their Haunts, p. 330).

The stock-dove only through the forest coos, Mournfully hoarse ; oft ceasing from his plaint,
 Short interval of weary woe !

Thomson, Seasons, Summer.

Coulon ramier, A Queest, Cowshot, Ring-dove, Stockdove, wood-culver.—Cotgrave.

Quest, however, is beyond doubt a contracted form of cusht, A. Sax. cusceote (cf. request, contracted from Lat. requisitus). See COWSHOT supra.

The wings of two bustards, the feet of four quest-doves . . . and a goblet of Beauvois.—Urquhart, Rabelais, Bk. II. ch. xxvii. [Davies].

QUESTIONS, for cushions, occurs in the following extract from a letter dated 1582, quoted by Halliwell and Wright in their edition of Nares' Glossary:—

 "Her Majestie did stand upon the carpett of the clothe of estate, and did all-most leaue upon the questions."

Another old form is quishim; compare Ger. küssen, kissen, Fr. coussin, It. cuscino, all from Lat. culcita.

QUIGHT, an old and incorrect spelling of quite, from a supposed analogy to such words as might, right, light, &c., where the g is organic.

Noblest hearts proudly abandon quight
 Study of Hearbs, and country-lives delight.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 69 (1621).

And, whiles he strove his combred clubbe to quight

Out of the earth, with blade all burning bright,
 He smott off his left arme.

Spenser, F. Queene, I. viii. 10.

QUILL. The explanation of this word in the following passage has long been the opprobrium of commentators.

My masters, let's stand close; my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill.—Shakespeare, 2 Hen. VI. i. 3, ll. 1-4.

Some have supposed this to mean "in writing," as if "in the pen" could convey that sense. Nares thought that it might signify "in form and order, like a quilled ruff"! Dyce quotes a confident assertion of Singer that it means in the quoil or coil, i.e. the bustle or tumult (2nd ed. vol. v. p. 202). In an old Eng.-Latin Dictionary, "In the quill" is said to be rendered ex compacto, i.e. by joint action, combinedly. This would lead us to regard quill as a corrupt form of Fr. cueilli, gathered together, cueillette, a collection; cueillir, to gather, from Lat. colligere, especially since Wycliffe has quylet and quelet, a gathering or collection (Lev. xxiii. 36, Deut. xvi. 8). So "in the quill" would correspond to "in the quylet" (en cueillette, ex collecto), and would imply that the petitioners made their supplication altogether and by joint action. Possibly this may be an instance of the use of the old word quill, a stream (compare Ger. quelle; old Eng. cwellen, O. Dut. and O. H. Ger. cwellen, to bubble up; "þe welle . . . kvelþ," Ayenbite, 248; Dan. kilde, a spring or fountain, Cleveland keld), which I cannot find registered in any of the dictionaries, though it occurs in Bp. Andrewes' Sermons.

Quasi fluvius Pax (saith Esay) Peace as a water-streame, the quills whereof make glad the city of our God (p. 106, fol.).

The meaning then would be that their petitions were brought to bear "in a stream," with a united and well-directed effort, upon the protector. In Ireland there is a coarse phrase of the same origin, by which persons who are great chums, or hail-fellows-well-met, are said "mingere in uno quill (= rivulo)," "They p— in the same quill."

He would have us believe that he and the Secretary p—d in a quill; they were confederates in this No Fanatic plot.—North, Examen, p. 399 [Davies].

Marvell has the phrase in a somewhat altered form:—

I'll have a council shall sit always still,
 And give me a license to do what I will;
 And two secretaries shall p— [mingent]
 through a quill.

Poems, p. 188 (Murray repr.).

Thou runn'st to meet thy self's pure streams
 behind thee,
 Mazing the Meads where thou dost turn and winde-thee.

Anon, like Cedron, through a straighter
Quill,

Thou strainest out a little Brook or Rill.

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 433 (1621).

QUILL, as a term in millinery, to gather or plait into small folds or pipes like quills (just as the folds of the ancient ruff were termed quills), is most probably a naturalized form of Fr. cueillir, to gather, from Lat. colligere (Eng. to cull), O. Fr. coillir. Cf. Guernsey enquiller, to plait (Wedgwood). Wycliffe has quylet, quelet, a gathering (collectio), Lev. xxiii. 36, Deut. xvi. 8. Quill, a ruff, seems to be the same word, Sp. cuello, a ruff (Minsheu), introduced into English as quellio.

Your carcanets

That did adorn your neck, of equal value:
 Your Hungerland bauds, and Spanish quellio
 ruffs;

Great lords and ladies feasted to survey
 Embroider'd petticoats.

Massinger, The City Madam, act iv. sc. 4
 (p. 447, ed. Cunningham).

From Fr. cueillir, to gather or collect, also come N. Eng. quile, quyle, coil, to gather hay into cocks, quile, a hay-cock, and probably Devon quilly, to harden or dry (? orig. to shrivel or gather up). Quillet, an old word for a croft or small parcel of land, especially a detached portion of one county, &c., located in another, is doubtless from Fr. cueillette, a collection or gathering, a small piece gathered out from a larger.

This family would not think itself the less, if any little quillet of grownd had been conveyed from it.—Donne, in Z. Grey's note to Hudibras, III. iii. 748.

Over Seile . . . though surrounded by Derbyshire is yet a quillet or small parcel of Leicestershire.—Peck, in loc. cit.

“Suffolk Stiles.”—It is a measuring cast, whether this Proverb pertaineth to Essex or this County; and I believe it belongeth to both, which, being inclosed Counties into petty quillets, abound with high stiles, troublesome to be clambred over.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 326.

QUILT seems to owe its present form to a supposed connexion with the verb to quill (as if quilt = quilled), in allusion to the panels or patterns which were formed on it by through-stitching, as on duvets still (Richardson), or the quilled bordering with which it was surrounded. The older form was cowlte.

3were beon thi castles and thi toures? thi chaumbers and thi riche halles? . . . .
Thine cowltes and thi covertoures?

Debate of the Body and the Soul (13th cent.), l. 15.

Cowlte is Fr. courte, coulte, old Fr. coute, coute, It. coltre, coltra, Lat. culcita, culcitra, a wadded covering, a cushion. See COUNTER-PANE.

The sharpe steele, arriving forcibly
On his broad shield, bitt not, but glauncing
fell

On his horse necke before the quilted sell.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, II. v. 4.

QUINTAL, a term for an hundred pound weight (Bailey), French and Sp. quintal, It. quintale, have no connexion with Lat. quintus, but are derived from Arab. kintār (qintār) of the same meaning. This latter word (adds Prof. Skeat) is from Lat. centum, a hundred.

QUIVER, a case for arrows, is an altered form of old Eng. quequer (see Cockayne, Spoon and Sparrow, p. 129), A. Sax. cocer (cf. Ger. köcher), to which it stands in the same relation that quiver, to quake or tremble, does to Lat. querquerus, shivering, querquera, the ague. Old Fr. cuiivre, couivre, is of the same origin.

To a quequer Roben went
A god bolt owthe he toke.

Robyn Hode and the Potter, 201.

Quyver, for to putt yn boltys, Pharetra.—Prompt. Parv.

QUYER-KYN, an old slang name for a prison in Harman's Caveat for Common Cursetors, 1567, as if a queer ken, i.e. an evil house, from quyer, quier, naughty, bad, and ken, a house. It probably is in reality a corruption of A. Sax. carcern, carcern, a prison; which itself seems to denote a house, cern, of care, carc, but is obviously corrupted from Lat. carcer. Similarly Fr. chartre (for charere, from carcer), a prison, came to be used for sadness, languishing, decay. Compare, “A Quire Bird is one that came lately out of prison” (Fraternitye of Vacabondes, 1575), as we would say, “a jail bird.”

R.

RABBIT, to channel boards, and RABBETING, the overlapping of the edges of boards planed so as to fit, are corruptions from the verb to rabbate (see REBATE), Fr. rabot, a plane. “Rabet, yonge conye, cunicellus,” also “yryne tool of carpentry, Runcina.”—Prompt. Parv.

RACE, in the expression “a race of ginger,” is the O. Fr. raiz, a shortened form of racine (Lat. radic-s), i.e. a root of ginger, O. Eng. rasyn.

I holde a penny that I shall grate this lofe, or you can grate a rasyn of gynger.—Palsgrave, Lesclairissement, 1530.

I must have saffron to colour the warden pies, mace, . . . a race or two of ginger.—The Winter's Tale, act iv. sc. 3.

I spent eleven pence, besides three rases of ginger.—Lodge, Looking glasse for London and England.

A dainty race of ginger.

B. Jonson, The Metamorphosed Gipseys.

Racy, full of flavour or essential quality, would naturally seem to mean full of the flavour of the race or root, distinguished by radical qualities, as Cowley speaks of “racy verses” in which we

The soil from whence they came taste, smell, and see.

The real sense is having the spirit of the breed or race, Fr. race, Sp. raza, It. razza, lineage, family, words derived from O. H. Ger. reiza, a line (sc. of descent), which have been altered under the influence of Lat. radix, a root (see Skeat, s.vv.)

RACHITIS, the learned name of the disease popularly termed ricketts, as if a disease of the back, Greek rachis (rhachis), was invented by one Dr. Glisson in 1650 in order "to free the English name from its barbarousness," on the supposition that it was a provincial corruption. Ricketts is really the original and native word from rick (e.g. "to rick one's ankle," i.e. to strain it), old Eng. wrick, to twist (akin to wring), Swed. vricka. It denotes the state of being rickety, i.e. weak on one's legs, tottering, deformed, twisted (Skeat). Cf. also Icel. rykker, a rough pull or movement, a spasm, Dan. ryk. See N. and Q. 6th S. i. 209, 362, 482; ii. 219, to which I am indebted for some of the following quotations:—

It has occurred in this, as in other instances, that the vulgar had recognized or given a name to the disease, before medical men had discriminated its nature. . . . The first account of the disease is that of Dr. Glisson, published in the year 1650. In this treatise we are informed that the ricketts had been first noticed in the counties of Dorset and Somerset about thirty years before, where it was vulgarly known by this name. . . . Its first appearance, as a cause of death, in the bills of mortality in London, was in the year 1634. . . . With a view of accommodating a classical name both to the vulgar appellation and to the symptoms of the disease, Glisson invented the term rachitis, i.e. spinal disease, since the curvature of the spine which ensues is one of the most prominent symptoms.—Rees, Encyclopædia, vol. xxx. (1819).

The new disease.—There is a disease of infants, and an infant-disease, having scarcely as yet got a proper name in Latin, called the Ricketts; wherein the head waxeth too great, whilst the legs and lower parts wain too little.—T. Fuller, Meditations on the Times, xx. (1647), p. 163 (ed. 1810).

Dr. Daniel Whistler, writing in Latin in 1645, says that "The Ricketts, which seems first to have become prevalent during the last twenty-six years or so, is reported to have got its name from the surname of a certain practitioner who treated it empirically." Others, he adds, think that the word comes from Dorsetshire, where persons who draw their breath with difficulty (a frequent symptom of this disease) are said to rickett.

Ostenta Carolina; or the late calamities of England with the authors of them; the great happiness & happy government of K. Charles II. ensuing, miraculously foreshewn by the finger of God in two wonderful diseases, the Rekets & King's Evil; wherein it is also shewen & proved, I. That the Rekets after a while shall seize on no more children, but quite vanish through the mercy of God & by means of King Charles II. By John Bird, 1660.

In this extraordinary work the author expresses his belief that rekets is for regets, and this for regents (1), the disease being due in some mysterious manner to the political iniquities of "the authors of our late calamities," who "according to the name of the disease" were nothing else but regents! He testifies that The Rekets "was not heard of in our fathers times, but began in our memory, and not many years ago . . . in either Dorset or Somersetshire."

About 1620 one Ricketts of Newbery, perhaps corruptly from Ricards, a practitioner in physick, was excellent at the curing children with swoln heads & small legges; & the disease being new & without a name, he being so famous for the cure of it they called the disease the ricketts; as the king's evil from the king's curing of it with his touch; & now 'tis good sport to see how they vex their lexicons, & fetch it from the Greek ῥαχίς, the back bone.—Aubrey, Nat. Hist. of Wiltshire, p. 74.

Cavil. Hospitals generally have the ricketts, whose heads, their Masters, grow over-great and rich, whilst their poor bodies pine away and consume.

Answer. Surely there is some other cure for a ricketish body, than to kill it.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 34 (ed. 1811).

No wonder if the whole constitution of Religion grow weak, ricketty, and consumptuous.—Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 262 [Davies].

Ricketts is a rustic word for the staggers in lambs (Old Country and Farming Words, E. D. S. p. 107).

RACKET, the game of tennis, the bat with which it is played, so spelt as if called from the sharp clattering noise, or racket, made by the ball as it is driven about the court (so Richardson, Wedgwood), cf. Gael. racaid, noise, Scot. rack, a crash. It is really the Anglicized form of Fr. raquette, It.

rachetta, Sp. and Portg. raqueta, which denoted originally the palm or flat of the hand with which the ball was struck before the bat was introduced. Compare old Fr. rachette, Portg. rasqueta, the wrist. All these words are from Low Lat. racha, which is from Arab. rāha, the palm of the hand (Devic). Compare Fr. jeu de paume.

Les os de la rachette de la main qui sont huit.—H. de Mondeville [Littré, s.v.].

The Saturnine line going from the rascetta through the hand, to Saturns mount, and there intersected by certain little lines, argues melancholy.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, I. ii. 1, 5.

Canst thou plaien raket to and fro.

Chaucer, Troilus and Creseide, bk. iv. l. 461.

The mayster devyll sat in his jacket,
And all the soules were playinge at raket.
None other rackettes they hadde in hande,
Save every soule a good fyre brand.

Heywood, the Four P's (Dodsley, O. P. i. 91, ed. 1825).

Th' Hail, which the Winde full in his face doth yerke

Smarter than Racquets in a Court re-ierk Balls 'gainst the Walls of the black-boarded
house,

Beats out his eyes, batters his nose, and brows.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, Div. Works and Weeks, 1621, p. 392.

In Italian sometimes by transposition of letters rachetta was changed into archetto, as if a little bow (Florio).

RAG OF MUTTON, } colloquial
SCRAG OF MUTTON, } forms of rack of mutton, A. Sax. hracca, the neck or back part of the head, akin probably to A. Sax. hrycg, the back, a "ridge," Dan. ryg, Ger. rück, Gk. rháchis.

Lucia. . . Methought there came in a leg of mutton.

Dro. What all grosse meat? a racke had been dainty.

Lilly, Mother Bombie, iii. 4.

Rack, the back. A rack of mutton, dorsum ovile.—Kennett, Parochial Antiquities, 1695 (E. D. Soc. ed.).

At dinner, plumb-broth, a chicken, a rabbit, rib of a rack of mutton, wing of a capon, the merry-thought of a hen.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, I. ii. 2, 2.

He laboured so to the queene that he gate leue for to haue as moche of the beres skyn vpon his ridge as a foote longe.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 45 (ed. Arber).

RAKEHELL, a dissolute fellow, a de- bauché, formerly spelt rakel, has been regarded as a derivative from Fr. racaille, the rascality or outcasts of any company (Cotgrave), which Littré connects with raca, the Syriac term of abuse mentioned in the Gospels, Diez with Icel. rakhi, Ger. racker, rekel, a dog, like canaille, from canis.

The *rakehell*ye route of our ragged rymers.—E. K[irke], Epistle to G. Harvey, prefixed to Shepheards Calender.

And farre away, amid their rakehell bands,
They spide a Lady left all succourlesse,
Crying, and holding up her wretched hands.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, V. xi. 44.

Kerne, kighegren, signifieth a shower of hell; because they are taken for no better than rakehells, or the devil's blacke garde.—Stanihurst, Description of Ireland, ch. 8, fol. 28.

It might be questioned whether rakel was not evolved out of old Eng. rekeles (= negligens, Prompt. Parv.), i.e. reckless or retchless. We find the two words brought together in the following:—"Enfans sans souci, Carelesse children, retchlesse fellowes, dissolute companions, . . . also a certain *rakehell*ye generation of juglers or tumbleres."—Cotgrave, s.v. Souci. Compare Prov. Eng. rackle, rash, rackless, careless, rack, to reck or care. Chaucer has rakel = rash, rakelnesse = rashness.

O rakel hond, to do so foule a mis.

O troubled wit, o ire recchell . . .

O, every man beware of rakelnesse.

Manciples Tale, ll. 1727, 17232 (ed. Tyrwhitt).

He þat is to rakel to renden his cloþe3
Mot eftē sitte with more vn-sounde to sewe hem togeder.

Alliterative Poems, p. 104, l. 527.

Rakyl, insolens.—Levins, Manipulus, 1570, 129, 8.

Oure wytte were rakyl and ovyr don bad,

To fforefete ageyns oure lordys wyllē

In ony wyse.

Coventry Mysteries, p. 24 (Shaks. Soc.).

As well in steryng or to be bessy with takle:
A galey rower schuld not be to rakle.

Piers of Fulham, l. 280.

But rake-hell, O. Eng. rakel, Cleveland ragel, ragil, Holderness raggil, Cumberland raggelt (Ferguson), a dissolute, good-for-nothing fellow, probably have their true cognates in old Swed. rækell, Swed. räkel, Dan. rækell, a worthless fellow, Icel. reikall, wandering, vagabond, all akin to Icel. reiċka, to wander, to rake, or run wild, to swerve from one's course.

We laye there styll in wondre grete trybulacion and fere, for if our galye had fallen to rakynge and draggynge ayen, we hadde ben all loste.—Sir R. Gyltforde, Pilgrimage, 1506, p. 65 (Camden Soc.).

"She is too noble," he said, "to check at pies, Nor will she rake; there is no baseness in her."

Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

Enfans de choënr de la messe de minnick. Quirresters of midnights masse; night walking rakehels.—Cotgrave.

A Rakehell, Malus, tetricus.—Levins, Mani-pulus (1570), 57, 21.

A multitude of rakehels of all sorts.—North's Plutarch, Life of M. Brutus (1612).

When he was a school-boy at Winchester [Dr. Twiss] saw the phantom of a school-fellow of his, deceased (a rakehell), who said to him, "I am damned." This was the occasion of Dr. Twiss's (the father's) conversation, who had been before that time, as he told his son, a very wicked boy.—J. Aubrey, Miscellanies, p. 87 (Lib. Old Authors).

The flowred meades, the wedded birdes so late Mine eyes discover: and to my minde resorte, The ioly woea, the hatelesse shorte debate, The rakehell lyfe that longes to lones disporte. Tottel's Miscellany, 1557, p. 11 (ed. Arber).

However, the phrase to rake hell was used at an early date with the meaning to have recourse to necromancy, to raise the devil, to have recourse to desperate measures, to leave no stone unturned. Wedgwood compares Low Ger. höllebensem, hell-besom, Dut. helleveeg, sweep-hell, used as terms of abuse.

Such an ungratious couple a man shall not finde agayne, if he raked all hell for them.—R. Ascham [in Richardson].

Ye cannot, I am sure,
For keeping of a cure
Fynde such a one well,
If ye shulde rake hell.

Doctor Double Ale, l. 430.

And in your ayde let your great God come too:

Let him rake Hell, and shake the Earth in sunder,

Let him be arm'd with Lightning and with Thunder.

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 415 (1621).

She mutters strange and execrable Charmes: Of whose Hell-raking, Nature-shaking Spell, These odious words could scarce be hearkned well. Id. p. 426.

Not thaw ya went to rüäke out Hell wi' a small-tooth cöämb.

Tennyson, The Village Wife.

Although a Magus was an innocent Artist at first, yet some of the tribe were so far corrupted in their knowledge, that Magick was accounted no better than raking hell, and charming infernal spirits for satisfaction.—Hacket, Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 119.

It seldom doth happen in any way of life, that a sluggard and a rake-hell do not go together; or that he who is idle, is not also dissolute.—Barrow, Sermons, Of Industry in General.

RAM, } old names for the RAIN-BERRY, } buckthorn, are corruptions, through the forms ramme, It. ranno, of Lat. rhamnus, Greek rhamnos. A Low Ger. corruption of the same is Rhine-berry.

Ranno, hot, . . . also Ramme, Christs-thorne, Harts-thorne, Way-thorne, Bucke-thorne, or Rainberry-thorne.—Florio.

This Ramme is found on the sea banks of Holland.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1152.

Christs Thorne or Ram of Lybia is a very tough and hard shrubbie tree.—Id. p. 1153.

In lowe Dutch they call the fruit or berries Rhijnbesien, that is, as though you should say in Latine Baccæ Rhenanæ, in English Rheinberries.—Id. p. 1155.

RAMMALATION-DAY, a name given to Rogation Monday in the Holderness dialect, E. Yorkshire (Glossary, E. D. Soc.), with allusion apparently to the rammeling or rambling around the parish boundaries that takes place on that day, is a popular corruption of Perambulation Day, the meaning being the same. Compare ramble, to ramble (Whitby), the b being a modern interpolation, ram, to roam (Holderness).

For fruit on Perambulation Day, £1 0 0.

Churchwardens' Account (Brand, Pop. Antiq. i, 205.

The Country Parson is a lover of old customs. . . . Wherefore he exacts of all to be present at the Perambulation.—G. Herbert, Country Parson, 1632, ch. xxxv.

RAMMISH, a provincial word, meaning (1) violent, untamed, (2) rank, pungent (Wright), has no connexion with the butting and ill-savoured ram (cf. Lat. hircus), but is a corrupt form of ramage, (1) wild, untamed, (2) having a game taste, from Fr. ramage, living among the branches (rames, ramée, Lat. ramus, a branch), of birds "ramage, wild" (Cotgrave). A ramage hawk was the correct term for a wild unreclaimed bird in falconry.

Compare savage, Old Eng. salvage, Fr. sauvage, It. selvaggio, from Lat. silvaticus, living in the wood (silva); haggard, wild (of a hawk), living in the hedge (hag); and wild, Goth. wiltheis, perhaps connected with weald, a wood.

Though rammish has undoubtedly superseded ramage in the above senses, it is itself an old word; and Prov. Eng. ram is fetid, high-scented, offensive, Dan. ram. Compare the following:—

For all the world they stinken as a gote ;
Hir savour is so rammish and so hote.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 16355.

Else he is not wise ne sage
No more than is a gote ramage.

Id. Romaunt of the Rose, l. 5384.

Do you not love to smell the Roast
Of a good Rammish Holocaust?

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque,
p. 169.

So Scot. rammage, rash, furious, rammaged, mad with drink; rammish, deranged, crazy (Jamieson).

RAMPART, an incorrect form of rampar, Old Eng. rampfer, rampfire, rampyre, old Fr. rempar (It. riparo, a defence), from Fr. remparer (= Lat. re-im-parare), to defend.

The t is excrement as in pageant-t (O. Eng. pagyn, Wycliffite Works, p. 206, E. E. T. S.), tyrant-t, parchment-t, peasant-t, pheasant-t, ancien-t.

RAMPER EEL, a Scotch word for the lamprey (Jamieson), of which word it is apparently a corruption, just as ramplon, another Scotch term for the same fish, is from the French lamproyon. Compare LAMPER EEL, the lamprey.

Jamieson gives a curious old Scotch word for this fish, argoseen, as if Arguseen, having as many eyes as Argus; Prov. Eng. nine-eyes.

RAMPIKE, a contemptuous term in some parts of Ireland for an old woman, synonymous with harridan or beldame, is the same word as old Eng. rampick, a tree which begins to decay at the top through age (Bailey), more correctly spelt ranpick.

Only the night-crow sometimes you might see Croking to sit upon some ranpick tree.

Drayton, The Moone-calf.

Ranpick is still used in Leicestershire, and applied to anything bare of bark or flesh, as if raven-picked (Evans, Glossary, E.D.S., p. 223). So Ravenstone is pronounced Ranston, and shovel, shoul (Id. p. 8). Cf. West Eng. ravn, to ravin; and see PERUSE and RULE. An old form of the word is rownsepick.

Over his head he sawe a rownsepik, a bygge bough leveles. — Morte d'Arthur, i. 181 [Nares].

RAMS-CLAWS, a Somerset name for the crow's foot, looks like a corruption of ranunculus, its scientific name. In Dorset ram's clās.

RANGED-DEER, } old forms of the RANGE-DEER, } word rein-deer, derived from the French ranger, rangier, Lap. raingo, Norweg. hreingyr, Low Lat. rangifer. See REIN-DEER.

Olaus Magnus in his History of the Northern Nations (translated by Streeter, 1658), says that it is named the "ranged-deer," because "the instrument placed upon the horns to enable it to draw the sledges of the Laplanders is called in their language rancha."

The Ranged Deer was the sign of the King's gunsmith in the Minorities, 1673. . . . This ranged deer was simply intended for the Reindeer, which animal had just then newly come under the notice of the public; their knowledge of it was still confused, and its name was spelled in various ways, such as, raindeer, ruined-deer, range-deer, and ranged-deer. — Larwood and Hotten, History of Sign-boards, p. 165.

This beast is called by the Latines Rangifer, by the Germans Reim, Reiner, Raineger, Reinsstier, by the French Raingier, and Ranglier, and the later Latins call it Reingus. . . . This beast was first of all discovered by Olaus Magnus in this Northern part of the world, towards the poale Artique, as in Norway, Swetia, and Scandinavia, at the first sight whereof he called it Raingifer, quasi Ramifer, because he heareth hornes on his head like the boughes of a tree. — Topsell, History of Four-footed Beasts (1608), p. 591.

Rangleer, a kind of stag so called by reason of his lofty horns, resembling the Branches of trees. — Bailey.

Cerf rame, a raime-deere. — Cotgrave. [As if from its branching antlers.]

Rangifero, a Raine-deare, a beast in the Northern cold countries of the bignesse of a Mule. — Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

The first part of the word rain-deer was evidently brought into connexion with old Fr. rain (= raim), a bough.

RANGER, applied to a forester, as if so called because it is his duty to range up and down through the woods. Mr. Wedgwood is of opinion that the word is a corruption of ramageur, the name by which the guardian of the forest was formerly known in France, literally he who oversees the ramage (Mid. Lat. ramagium) or right of cutting branches (Lat. ramus). Compare Northampton rangewood, brushwood, with Fr. rainche, rains, rain, rain, a branch.

RANK, used in the sense of strong-smelling, offensive, is old Eng. rank, strong, proud, A. Sax. ranc, altered in meaning through confusion with old Fr. rance, fusty, Lat. rancidus, rancid.

RANSACK, to search thoroughly, to search for stolen goods, old Eng. ransaken, Icel. ramnsaka, to search a house (Swed. ransaka). The first part of the word is Icel. rann, a house (= Goth. razn), the latter part is not (as might be imagined from the spelling) sack, to plunder or rummage for booty, as when we speak of sacking a city, but from sékja, to seek (Cleasby, 617), akin to A. Sax. sécan, to seek (Ger. suchen). The word was sometimes used as if it meant to plunder. Compare the following:—

We sack, we ransack to the utmost sands,
Of native kingdoms, and of foreign lands,
We travel sea and soil, we pry, we prowl,
We progress, and we prog from pole to pole.
F. Quarles, Emblems, bk. ii. 2.

They did not, as our church-sackers and ransackers do, rob God with the right hand, and give him a little back with the left; take from him a pound, and restore him a penny. —T. Adams, God's Bounty, Sermons, i. 144.

In what vile part of this anatomy
Doth my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack
The hateful mansion.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet, iii. 3, 108.

He gan hem ransaken on and on,
And fond it ðor sone a-non.

Genesis and Exodus, l. 2324.

RAPPED, an incorrect form of rapt, Lat. raptus, ravished, enraptured, as if the past partic. of a verb to rap. See WRAPPED.

Confused forms flit by his wandering eyes,
And his rapped soul's o'erwhelmed with extasies.

Maxwell, Poems, p. 175 (Murray repr.).

However, there was in old English a verb rappe, rape, to hurry away, or ravish, which no doubt was merged in the classical rapt of later writers, the recognized adjectival form of rapture. We even find rapted for enraptured (Nares).

We shall dye euery one of vs; yet some shall be rapt and taken aliuie, as Sainct Paule sayth.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 113 verso.

RARE, somewhat raw, underdone, insufficiently cooked (Prov. Eng., Ireland, United States), has been confused with rare (Lat. rarus), thin, scarce (so Bailey), and with Prov. Eng. rare, early, soon (Devon), as if too soon taken from the fire, too quickly done, a contraction of rather, like or from other, smoor (Ramsay) for smother (so Wedgwood). Compare the following:—

The broccolow are rare [= early] this year.
We go to bed pretty rare on Sundays.—M. A. Courtney, W. Cornwall Glossary, E.D.S.

O'er yonder hill does scant the dawn appear,
Then why does Cuddy leave his cott so rear?

[Note.—An expression in several counties of England for early in the morning.]—Gay, Poems, i. 69.

It is really the old Eng. "gere, or nesche, as eggys, Mollis."—Prompt. Parv.; A. Sax. hrér, half-cooked, hreram, to half-cook (Cockayne, Leechdoms, iii. Glossary). Kennet spells it reer.

One reere roasted chick.—Harington, Epigrams, iv. 6.

Compare Icel. hrâr, raw, old Ger. raver (for hraver), which Pietet connects with Lat. crutor, as if sanglant, Sansk. krûra, crude, Welsh crav, gore (Orig. Indo-Eur. ii. 20).

RARE-LINES, } names for the trans-RATTLINGS, } verse ropes in the rigging of a ship which form a ladder, are corruptions of rat-lines. Perhaps connected with Dan. rat-line, a "wheel-line" or tiller-rope, from rat, a wheel (Lat. rota).

RASTYLBOW, an old name for the "wede, Resta bovis," or rest-harrow, in the Promptorium Parvulorum (ab. 1440), which Gerarde (Herbal) names Arresta bovis, in French arreste boeuf. It is from the latter that the word is corrupted.

It is sooner founde then desired of husbände men, hicause the tough and woodie rootes are combersome vnto them, by reason they do stiaie the plough, and make the oxen stande.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 11<sup>42</sup>.

RAT. The colloquial expression “to smell a rat,” meaning to conceive a suspicion, suspect something wrong, has been explained as a perverted translation of the German unrath wittern (Blackley, Word-Gossip, p. 55). “To smell a rat” is actually Kaltschmidt’s definition of unrath merken, unrath being filth, waste, mischief. The knowing look of an excited tier when he has scented his enemy is quite sufficient to account for the phrase, originally no doubt a sporting one, and it needs no other explanation.

Babulo. Whoop! Whither is my brother basket-maker gone? ha! let me see: I smell a rat.—Patient Grissil, act iv. sc. 2 (1603), Shaks. Soc. ed. p. 65.

I smell a rat;

And, if my brain fail not, have found out all,
Your drifts, though ne’er so politicly carry’d.
May, The Old Couple, 1658, act iii. sc. 1.

Moch mony being test vpp, and moch more to sett, the Pope being the younger 55, though it weare the greatest game of the cardes, yet smelling the ratt, for they be all nasuti, and mistrusting, as it was indeed, that thear was and elder game on the board, gaue it ouer.—Harington, Nugæ Antiquæ, vol. ii. p. 195.

No I do smella fox strongly.—The Roaring Girl, i. 1 (1611).

RAT, a Scotch word for a “wart,” is another form of wrat, Old Eng. wret, A. Sax. weart, Iccl. varta, Ger. warze (cf. Lat. verruca). So Dutch wratte for werte, Prov. Eng. wret, a wart (Forby).

Wrette, or werte yn a manny skynne, Veruca.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

The erbe Eliotropia is called verrucaria, wrotwork, bycause it destruyeth and fordoth wrottyss [Way, in loco].

RATE, to rate, or give one a rating, meaning to scold or chide sharply, so spelt as if it were another use of rate, to tax one [with an offence], or lay it to his charge, from rate, Lat. rata (sc. pars), a fixed proportion, an assessment or valuation (so Wedgwood), is really another form of old Eng. rette, to reckon or charge to one’s account (e.g. Wycliffe, Gen. xv. 6; Numb. xxiv. 9; Deut. xxi. 8; Gal. iii. 6; Jam. ii. 23, where it translates the Vulgate reputare; and Rom. iv. 8; Philem. 18, where it translates imputare). “God was in Crist . . . not *rettyng*e to hem her giltis.”—Wycliffe, 2 Cor. v. 19, = non reputans illis delicta ipsorum (Vulgate).

O. Eng. rette (or a-rette) is from old Fr. reter, to reproach, Sp. retar, old Sp., Portg., Prov. reptar, Grison ravidar, all which are from Lat. reputare. The forms rehete (Towneley Mysteries), rahate (Udal), are curious.

Rectyn, or rettyn, or wytyn [= blame], Imputo, reputo, ascribo.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

RATTLEMOUSE, an old name for the bat, is a corruption of its A. Saxon name hrecpenus (Cockayne, Leechdoms, Starcunning, &c., vol. iii. Glossary).

By this means Philino serued all turnes and shifted himself from blame, not vnlike the tale of the Rattlemouse who in the warres proclaimed betweene the foure footed beasts, and the birdes, beyng sent for by the Lyon to be at his musters, excused himselfe for that he was a foule and flew with winges; and beyng sent for by the Eagle to serue him, sayd that he was a foure footed beast, and by that craftie cauill escaped the danger of the warres, and shunned the seruice of both Princes.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 148 (ed. Arber).

RAVEN-TREE, a Scotch form of the word rowan-tree, or roun-tree, the mountain ash.

The raven tree was good to keip upon both man and beist.—North Berwick Kirk Session Register, 1663 (Dalyell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland, p. 139).

RAWBONE, a name for the radish, is a corruption of rabone (Gerarde, p. 184), Sp. rabano, Lat. raphanus. The Spanish word seems to have been assimilated to rabo, a tail, with reference to the tail-like shape of its tap-root.

RAW-MOUSE, a bat (Somersetshire), is a corruption of rere-mouse, A. Sax. hrére-muis, from hréran, to move, agitate (the wings), and so the flying mouse. To which I leap’d, and left my keel, and high Clamb’ring upon it did as close imply My breast about it as a reremouse could.

G. Chapman, Odysseus, bk. xii. l. 610.

The Rere-mouse or Bat alone of all creatures that fly, bringeth forth young aliae.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 301.

Some war with rere-mice for their leathern wings,

To make my small elves coats.

Shakespeare, A Midsummer N. Dream, ii. 2, 5.

RAY-GRASS, a popular name for lolium perenne. The first part of the word represents Fr. ivraie, drunkenness, from the supposed intoxicating quality of some species (Prior). In the north of England it is named drunk, in Latin lolium temulentum, drunken dandel. Crap or crappe, which is also applied to it, and has not been explained, is probably from the Latin crapula, the effects of drunkenness.

REACH, a popular form of retch, to vomit, as if to extend or strain forward, like vulgar Eng. heave (used in this sense in Holland's Pliny). Retch is not, as has been supposed, a derivative of It. recere, to vomit (from Lat. reicere, reicere, to cast up), but of A. Sax. hræcan, to vomit (Ettmüller, 502), Norse hrækja. Hence also old Fr. racher, to spit up, Prov. racar, Wallon rechi, and Fr. cracher. Compare Prov. Eng. wreak [better reak], a cough, Westm. (Wright).

This is a medicine that would not bee mistured inwardly to fearefull, timorous, and faint-hearted persons . . . and least of all vnto those that spit or reach vp blood.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 219.

READILY, in such phrases as "to give readily," "I readily promise to do so," i.e. willingly, without reluctance, is for O. Eng. hrædlice, speedily, immediately, from hræd, hræð, swift, quick, a distinct word from redis, prepared (in Orrmin), which is a derivative of ræd, râd, ready, prepared.

Blithe ther of was he
And redily yaf him sa
Of wel gode moné,
Ten schillings and ma.
Sir Tristrem, i. 56 (ed. Scott).

REBATE, to plane boards so that the overlapping edges will fit one another, so spelt (e.g. in Bailey) as if the same word as rebate, to lessen or diminish (also to blunt the edge of a sword), Fr. rebattre, to beat back, is a corruption of rabbet (rabbot, Holland), from Fr. raboter, to plane or level, which stands for rabouter (i.e. re + ad + boter, "re-abut"), to thrust back. See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.

RECKLING, a puny infant, the smallest in a litter, is more correctly wreckling (Holland, Pliny), which is the form in the Cleveland dialect (Atkinson), and in Cumberland (Ferguson). Other forms of the word are wrackling, reckling, writling. Compare Scot. wrig, a puny child, the feeblest bird in a nest, Prov. Dan. wræg, wrægling, Low Ger. wrak, a poor contemptible creature, originally anything refuse or rejected, Swed. wrak, refuse, Old Dan. wræka, to cast out. The word is thus akin to wreck, wreckage, and wretch.

A mother dotes upon the reckling child,
More than the stroug.

Taylor, Philip van Artevelde,
pt. ii. v. 3.

Was one year goue, and on returning found,
Not two but three; there lay the reckling, one
But one hour old!

Tennyson, Mertin and Vivien, l. 559.

RECOGNISE, so spelt from analogy to baptise, catechise, symbolise, &c., seems to have been evolved out of the substantive recognisance, old Fr. recoignissance, recoignoissance. Boyle used the form recognosce, going back direct to Lat. recognoscere.

The examiner [Boyle] might have remembered, . . . who it was that distinguished his style with ignore and recognosce.—Bentley, Works, i. liv.

Similarly, to agnize was formed out of agnition.

The very agnizing and celebrating of them fills our souls with unspeakable joy.—Beveridge, Works, vol. iii. p. 122 (Oxford ed.).

RECOIL, so spelt as if derived from Fr. re-cueillir, Lat. re-colligere, to draw one's self together, to shrink as a coil of wire does when extended (cf. coil from cueillir), is a corruption of the older form recule, Fr. reculer, to turn tail (cul, Lat. culus), just as to start back is connected with old Eng. stert, steort, the tail.

They bound themselves by a sacred lay and oth to fight it out to the last man, vnder paine of death to as many as seemed to turne backe or once recule.—Holland, Plinies Naturall Historie, vol. ii. p. 495, 1634.

Teucer with his bowe made them recule backe agayne, when Menelaus tooke hym to his feete, and ranne away.—R. Ascham, Toxophilus, 1545, p. 68 (ed. Arber).

So thay marchyd forward, and so the gunes shott, and the morespykes encontered together with gratt larum, and after reculyd bake again.—Machyn, Diary, 1559, July 1 (p. 202, Camden Soc.).

Off he made him stagger as unstayd,
And oft recule to shunne his sharpe despight.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, VI. i. 20.

Thus when this Courty Gentleman with toyle
Himselfe hath wearied, he doth recoyle
Unto his rest.

Spenser, Mother Hubberds Tale,
ll. 753-755.

Whan the Normayns sawe them recule
backe, they had maruell why they dyde so.
—Lord Berners, Froissart, 1523, cap. i.

Next morne when early Phœbus first arose
(Which then arose last in Vriah's sight)
Him Joab in the forfront did dispose
From whom the rest recoyled in the fight.

Fuller, Davids Hainous Sinne, 1631,
st. 46.

RECOUNSEL, the form used everywhere by Wycliffe in his Bible for re- concile (e.g. 2 Cor. v. 18, Deeds vii. 26, &c.), as if to advise over again, or try new counsels.

Go first for to he recounseild to thi brother.
—S. Matt. v. 24.

RECOUNT, to relate or rehearse, is not a native compound like re-count, to number over again, but should properly be racount (compare REFINE, for raffine), being derived immediately from Fr.
raconter, to tell or relate a story, from re- and old Fr. aconter (= conter), Lat.
re-ad-computare.

RECOVER, to become convalescent, sometimes imagined to be identical with re-cover (Fr. couvrir, Lat. co- operire), as if the reference were to an open wound covering over again (Trench, Richardson), a false analogy being assumed in heal (A Sax. hǣslan, to make hale), as if from A. Sax. helan, to cover.
The word properly means to regain or get back (one's health), or, as the Americans say, to recuperate, being derived through Fr. recouvrer (It. ri- coverare) from Lat. recuperare, to obtain again, originally to make good, from old Lat. cuprus, good (Corssen, Littré). It was, no doubt, confused with old Eng. cover, coveren (see Strat-mann), also akoveren, A. Sax. acofrian, to recover from sickness (Cockayne, Leechdoms, vol. iii. p. 184), which it eventually superseded. Diefenbach suggests a connexion for these latter words with old Swed. kofra, to profit, increase, progress, Scand. kober, useful,
good, old Dut. koever, abundant, coe-

veren, to gain, old Eng. quiver, lively,
A. Sax. câf, swift, quick, Icel. ákaf, eager, earnest (Goth. Sprache, ii. 484).

He drinkeð bitter sabraz norto akoueren his heale [He drinketh bitter sabraz for to recover his health].—Anceren Riwle, p. 364.

Nan nauēð ðeauer mare hope of nau a- couerunge [None hath ever more hope of any recovery].—Old Eng. Homilies, 1st Ser.
p. 251 (ed. Morris).

When he is seke, and bedreden lys, . . .
þan er men in dout and noght certayn,
Wethir he sal ever cover agayn.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 811.

Yf that he mouthen heled he.

For yf he mouthe couere yet, . . .

Mi-self shal dubbe him to knith.

Havelok the Dane, l. 2042.

[He] siked þanne so sore · þe soþe forto telle, þat uch wið þat it wist · wend he ne schuld keuer.

William of Palerne, l. 1488.

The lady was wyth the quene,
With myrthe and game them betwene
To covyr hur of hur care.

Romance of Octavian, l. 522 (Percy Soc.)

Early instances of recour, recure, for recover, are these:—

Recuryn, of sekenesse. Convaleo, reconvaleo.—Prompt. Parv.

þou hit sselst wel recouri, þou art yong,
and strang, þou sselst libbe long.—Ayenbite
of Inwyt (1340), p. 32.

This loue is not for to recouere ony worship,
but alle dishonour and shame.—Knight of La
Tour Landry, p. 179 (E.E.T.S.).

REDCOAL, a Scotch term for the horse-radish, also spelt red-coll, is a corruption of the name rot-coll, the horse-radish, said to be from the old Swedish rot, root, and koll, fire, as it were the "hot-root" (Jamieson). But Swed. kol is merely coal. The word is probably due to some confusion with Swed. rot-kål, bore-cole [root-cole], otherwise kål-rot, turnip-rooted cole.
Gerarde says that the ancients confounded the radish with "cooleworts" (Herbal, p. 188), and that the horseradish "is called in the north part of England red-cole" (p. 187).

RED-GUM, } an infantile disease, is RED-GOWN, } a corruption of old Eng. red-gounde, A. Sax. gund, a purulent discharge. See GUM.

Soft Child-hood puling
Is wrung with Worms, begot of crudity,
Are apt to Laske through much humidity :

Through their salt phlegms, their beads are hid with skulls,
Their Limbs with Red-gums and with bloody balls.

J. Sylvester, Du Burtas, p. 212.

Stale chamber-lie . . . cureth the red-gomb in yong infants.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. ii. 307.

RED LETTUCE, an old word for a tavern, is a corruption of red lattice, which was the distinctive mark of these houses.

Your red lattice pbrases.—Merry Wives of W. ii. 2. (Vid. Douce's Illustr. of Shakspeare.) See LETTUCE.

REDOUBT, a term in fortification, a small fort, is the Fr. redoute, reduit, It. ridotto, a little fort, Lat. reductus, with the b inserted from the false analogy of redoubted, dreaded, redoubtable, formidable; Fr. redoubter, to dread. Redoubt is properly a stronghold to retreat to, identical with "reduct, an advantageous piece of ground, entrenched . . . for an army to retire to in case of a surprize."—Bailey.

And made those strange approaches by false-brays,
Reduits, half-moons, horn-works, and such close ways.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

8 Oct. I passed by boate to Bruges, taking in at a redoutt a convoy of 14 musketeers.—J. Evelyn, Diary, 1641.

REFINE would more properly be spelt raffine, being derived from Fr. raffiner, i.e. re-affiner, and not a direct compound of re and fin; cf. the cognate forms, It. raffinare, Ger. raffiniren, Dan. raffinere, &c., all from re and Low Lat. raffinare.

REFRAIN, the recurring or repeated part of a poem, an antistrophe, Fr. refrain, Prov. refranh, Span. refran, which are respectively from refraindre, refranher, = Lat. refrangere, to break off. So a refrain is that which breaks, or interrupts, the sequence of strophes, an intercalated verse (Diez and Scheler). You tip your speeches with Italian "motti," Spanish "refranes," and English "quoth he's." Believe me,

There's not a proverb salts your tongue, but plants
Whole colonies of white hairs.

Abumazar, act iv. sc. 13.

REFUIT, in old English a place of escape to flee to for safety, is apparently a corruption of refuge (Lat. refugium), assimilated to Fr. refuite, flight, escape, from refuir, to fly.

pat Almiti God, pat may best,
Send 3ow sum refuit and sum rest.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 231, l. 282.

And the Lord is maad refuit, ether help, to a pore man; an helpere in couenabletymes in tribulacioun.—Wycliffe, Ps. ix. 10.

For thou art my stidefastnesse; and my refuit.—Id. Ps. lxx. 3.

To Walys fled the cristianytee
Of oldē Britons, dwellynge in this Ilē;
Ther was hir refuit for the menē whilē.

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale, l. 546.

REGALE, to feast, has often been understood as meaning to entertain regally, or royally, Fr. regalement, Lat. regaliter (so Bailey, Skinner).

Se regaler, To make as much account, and take as great care, of himself, as if hee were a king.—Cotgrave.

A table richly spread in regal mode,
With dishes piled, and meats of noblest sort
And savour.

Milton, Pur. Regained, ii. 310.

For thy Cates rich Alexandria drugs, Fetch'd by carvels from Ægypt's richest streights,

Found in the wealthy strand of Africa,
Shall royalize the table of my king.

Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (1594), p. 166 (ed. Dyce).

Compare old Eng. emperialle, to deck royally.

pan emperialle by Cuppeborde
With Siluer & gild fulle gay.

The Bubees Book, p. 131, l. 231 (E. E. T. S.).

To regale, regalar, tratar regiamente ou com regalo.—Vieyra, Portuguese Dict. vol. ii.

However, Fr. regaler (Sp. regalar, It. regalare) is derived from old Fr. galer, to enjoy one's self, to be liberal, to entertain with good cheer, old Fr. gale, It. gala, mirth, good cheer. Cf. O. H. Ger. geil, merry, wanton, luxurious, Goth. gailjan, to gladden. So regale is to keep a gala-day or festival. Regale, a feast (Cowper) is also found in the forms regalia (D'Urfey), regalio and regalo (Walpole); see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s. vv.

I thank you for the last regalo you gaue me at your Musæum, and for the good Company.—Howell, Letters (1635), bk. i. sect. 6, 20.

The fatal end of their journey being continually before their eyes, would not alter and deprave their palate from tasting these regalios?—Cotton, Montaigne's Essays, ch. xvi.

For 'tis, like Turks with hen and rice to treat,
To make regalios out of common meat.

Dryden, Epilogue to The Wild Gallant,
1667, l. 12.

REHORSE, an old English term for laying on the colours thickly in painting, in impasto, is a corrupt form of Fr. rehausser, or rehaulser, to heighten or enhance.

Rehaulser, to raise, or set higher, to place above; also (in Painting, &c.) to rehorse, heighten; to leave, to imbosse.—Cotgrave.

Rehaulment, a rehorsing, heightening.—Id.

REIGN, an old spelling of rein, as if it were the governing power (regnum) which directs (regit) a horse's movements. "Reine, the reign of a bridle" (Cotgrave). Compare Prov. regna. However, when we find that the Italian for rein is redina, Portg. redoa, we may rather believe that it is a derivative, as Diez holds, of the Latin retinere, to hold back.

Apes have been taught to leape, singe, drie Wagons, raigning and whipping the Horses very artificially.—Topsell, Four-footed Beastes, p. 3 (1608).

REIN-DEER, } so spelt as if to denote
RAIN-DEER, } the deer that runs in harness with a rein, is a corruption of the A. Sax. hrán, Swed. ren, Dan. rens (dyr), Fr. renne, Lat. reno or rhenno (Cæsar). Topsell, History of Four-footed Beastes, spells it Ræyner and Rainger. He says, "This beast was first of all discovered by Olaus Magnus . . . . at the first sight whereof he called it Raingifer, quasi Ramifer, because he beareth hornes on his head like the boughes of a tree," p. 591 (1608). The Germans make it rennthier, as if "the running beast," from rennen, to run. The spelling rain seems due to a confusion with Fr. rain, a bough, as if a branching antler. See RANGED-DEER.

It is a word probably of Finnish origin. "þa deór hie hátað hránas."—K. Alfred, Orosius, i. 1, § 15. In Icelandic, where it is not a native term, the animal is called hreinn (which is also the word for clean, A. Sax. hrám, Eng. "rinse"). Pictet (Origines Indo-Europ. tom. i. p. 439) suggests that the word may be contracted from harana, = Sansk. árana, éalana, a stag. Other names, or forms of the name, are Fr.

ranger, rangier, Norweg. hreingyr. Prof. Skeat regards the word as meaning undoubtedly the pastured or domesticated animal, from the Lapp reino, signifying "pasture" (N. and Q. 6th S. i. 363).

He had of his owne breed 600 tame deere of that kinde which they call Rane Deere: . . . a beast of great value, and marueilously esteemed among the Fynnea.—Hakluyt's Voyages, 1598, p. 5.

Haste my raindeer, and let us nimbly go.

The Spectator, No. 406.

A sharp controversy, arising out of a wager as to the true spelling of this word, was carried on in the papers, Nov., 1862.

Professor Stephens observes that hrán, a rane or rein, was originally applied to any large creature, first to the whale, e.g. Runic hron, Gaelic rón róin, the seal, and then to the reindeer, e.g. Icel. hreinn.—Old Northern Runic Monuments, p. 943.

REINS, the common Bible word for the kidneys, is the French reins, Lat. ren, renis. It has apparently been assimilated in its orthography to the reins of a bridle, O. Fr. reime.

The gall [of a hedgehog], with the braine of a Bat and the milke of a Dog, cureth the raines.—Topsell, History of Four-footed Beasts, p. 280, 1608.

RELICT, an occasional mis-spelling of relic (Fr. relique, Lat. reliquie, remains, leavings), as if from Lat. relictum, something left. On the other hand, a deceased person's widow is sometimes popularly spoken of as his relic.

'Tis baalish gold in David's coin disguised;
Which to his house with richer relicts came
While lumber idols only fed the flame.

Tate, in Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, pt. ii. l. 545.

Adore the purple rag of majesty,
And think 't a sacred relict of the sky.

Oláham, Satire on the Jesuits, sat. i.

REMEDY, a term in use at Winchester College for a partial holiday, when the boys are let off certain work, is a corruption of remi-day, which is for remission-day (dies remissionis).—H. C. Adams, Wykehamica, pp. 289, 431.

REMNANT must have been originally only a vulgar pronunciation of remanent, Lat. remanen(t)s, a remaining (portion), what is left, a residue. Similar popular contractions are enmity for enemity or enimity (in-amity); fortnight for forten-night (fourteen-night); mint for minet; plush for peluche; platoon for peloton; sprite for spirite; dirge for dirige.

The remnaunt toke his seruantes and in-treated them vngodly and slewe them.—Tyn-dale, S. Matt. xxii. 6.

The remnant tooke his seruants and in-treated them spitefully and slew them.—A. V. ibid. (1611).

RENATE, an old name for a species of apple, as if it denoted pomum renatum, one that had been regenerated or renewed in its nature (Lat. re-natus) by grafting, is a corruption of renet, rennet, or reneting, a sort of pippin (Bailey), which is but an Anglicized form of Fr. reinette, "the queen apple," a russeting. Gerarde (Herball, p. 1274, 1597) gives a figure of "The Quining, or Queene of Apples, Malum reginale," which may be the fruit in question.

I am informed that Pippins grafted on a Pippin stock are called Renates, bettered in their generous nature by such double extraction.—Thos. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 3 (ed. 1811).

When a Pepin is planted on a Pepin-stock, the fruit growing thence is called a Renate, a most delicious apple, as both by Sire and Dam well descended. Thus his blood must needs be well purified who is gentiely born on both sides.—T. Fuller, Holy State, p. 138 (1648).

Richard Harrys, fruiterer to King Henrie the 8, planted . . . the temperate pypyn and the golden renate.—Lambarde, Perambulation of Kent, 1596 [in Wright].

The renat, which though first it from the pippin came, Growne through his pureness nice, assumes that curious name.

Drayton, Polyolbion, Song 18.

Reinette, the French name of the fruit, is also frequently spelt rainette, and is thought to have been so called from its being spotted like a little frog (rainette, from raine, Lat. rana), Gattel, Scheler, &c. Compare ranunculus, orig. a little frog.

Nor is it every apple I desire,
Nor that which pleases ev'ry palate best;
'Tis not the lasting deuzan I require:
Nor yet the red-cheek'd queening I request.
Quarles, Emblems, bk. v. 2.

RENDER, when used as meaning to melt or liquefy lard, fat, &c., has no connexion with its homophone (= Fr.

rendre, It. rendere Lat. reddere), but is the same word as Dan. rinde, rende, to run, to flow, Icel. renna, to cause to run, to liquefy, A. Sax. rinnan.

REFINE, so spelt as if meaning to pine or feel a renewal of pain at the thought of something, is in Froissart spelt repoyne, which is from Fr. repointre, to prick again, Lat. re-pungere (Wedgwood), or perhaps from Lat. re-poenitere [?].

They . . . repoynd in that they had sende to the kynge as they did.—Lord Berners, Froissart, cap. cxxx. (1523).

Repining courage yields
No foote to foe: the flashing fier flies,
As from a forge, out of their burning shields.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, I. ii. 17.

REPOSE is not derived, as used generally to be imagined, from Lat. repono, reposui, to place back. Just as "pose" is from Fr. poser, Sp. posar, It. posare, Prov. pausar, Low Lat. pausare, to give one pause, bring him to a stand-still, to puzzle him, so "repose" is Fr. reposer, Sp. reposar, It. riposare, Prov. repausar, Low Lat. re-pausare, from Gk. paipsis, a cessation. A Spanish inn whereat to put up for the night is called the posada.

REPRIMAND, from the Latin reprimendus, deserving to be checked, owes its present form to a supposed analogy with demand, command, &c.

REPRIEVE, old Eng. reprieve, seems to be an assimilation to believe, conceive, receive, &c., of old Fr. repreuver, reprover, from Lat. re-probare, to try or prove over again, to re-consider a sentence, just as the synonymous word respite (Lat. respectus) meant originally a re-consideration.

RETABLE, an architectural term for the ledge raised above the communion table (or altar), on which the cross and vases of flowers are placed in churches, Fr. retable. The word seems irresistibly to suggest the idea of a contre-table, or a repetition of the table proper. However, restaule (for restable), the old French form of retable, shows that the true origin of the word is Low Lat. re-stabilis, just as re-stabilire is of retablir; and so retable in an architectural sense would mean something fixed or erected behind the altar, a back-support. An older English form retaulle is given in Rev. F. Lee's Glossary of Liturgical and Ecclesiastical Terms. It may be noted as decisive of the matter that the prefix re- is never compounded directly with a substantive. Thus retable is lambris rétabli (restabilitus).

REVEL, to make merry, especially in the night-time, generally regarded as identical with Fr. réveiller, to waken or keep awake, and so to keep late hours (so Bailey). Compare réveillon, a meal taken late at night. In former times watch, to wake, had precisely the same meaning, to spend the night in riot and drinking. See Dyce, Remarks on Editions of Shakespeare, p. 210.

Withdraw your hand fro riotous watchyng.

Lydgate, Fall of Princes, b. ix. fol. xxxi.

His hede was heuy for watching ouer nyghte.

Skelton, Bowge of Courte (Works, i. 43, ed. Dyce).

Late watchings in Tauerns will wrinkle that face.

The Wandering Jew, 1640, sig. D.

Hostesse, clap to the doores: watch to night, pray to morrow. Gallants, Lads, Boyes, Harts of Gold, all the good Titles of Fellowship come to you.—Shakespeare, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4 (1623).

So when Hamlet says,

The king doth wake to-night and takes his rouse,

Keeps wassail. Hamlet, i. 4, 9,—

he immediately goes on to characterize it as "a heavy-headed revel," l. 17.

Watchfulness as it is only a restraint from bodily sleep is not that which I urge and enforce; this is a season wherein I know its much in use, to sit up late; they that intend games and revels, and pastimes are watchful enough, though they turn the night into day, and the day like heavy sluggards into night.—Hacket, Century of Sermons, p. 18.

The following play upon words is quite in the manner of folks-etymology:—

The on'y thing like revellin' thet ever come to me,

Wuz hein' routed out o' sleep by thet darned revelee [= réveille].

J. R. Lowell, Biglow Papers, No. 8.

Revel, old Fr. reveler, is really akin to old Fr. reveleux, wanton, lascivious, unruly, outrageous (Cotgrave), revelé, extravagant, revel, reviel, reviau, enjoyment, merry-making, riot (Scheler), from Dut. revelen, to dote, to wander in mind, to rave, old Dut. ravelen. These words again are derived from old Fr. reverser, râver, Mod. Fr. rêver, to dote or rave. Fr. rêver, rêve, comes through the forms raiva, Low Lat. rabia, from Lat. rabies, madness. Revel is thus near akin to rave and rage. Réveillon is perhaps for revelon, and assimilated to réveillier (Scheler).

And in twenty places mo than there,
Where they make reuell, and gaudy chere,
With fyll the pot fyll, and go fyll the cau.

The Hye Way to the Spyttel Hous, l. 245.

REVELL-COYLE, a word used occasionally by Taylor the Water-poet in the sense of riot, disorderly living, as if a compound of revel and old Eng. coil, trouble, tumult, is a corruption of the old word level-coil (from lever coil, to lift one's tail, i.e. to leave one's seat and scramble for another, as in the game of Puss and Four Corners).

To dance, sing, sport, and to keepe revell-coyles. Workes, 1630.

REYNOLD, } an old name for the fox,
REYNOLDS, } still in provincial use,
is a corruption of Reynard, a distinct name.

When a fox has visited the poultry-yard, a Sussex man will say, "Mus Reynolds [i.e. Master Reynard] come along last night—He helped hisself" (Rev. W. D. Parish, Glossary, p. 94).

But th' Ape and Foxe ere long so well them sped . . .

That they a Benefice twixt them obtained;
And craftie Reynold was a Priest ordained.

Spenser, Mother Hubberds Tale, l. 553.

Raynold, the fox, may well heare vp his tayle in the lyon's denne, but when he comes abroad, he is afraide of euerie dogge that barks.—Nash, Pierce Penilesse (1592), p. 23 (Shaks. Soc.).

There was a superstitious aversion in many countries to give the fox his true name. In England he is also frequently called a Charley.

Reynard, old Eng. Reynart, is Low Ger. Reynaert, Reinaert, and Ger. Reinhart, for Reginhart, or more properly Raginohard, a name descriptive of the animal's cunning (J. Grimm, Reinhart Fuchs, p. cclx.), strong (hard, Goth. hardus, = Gk. kartus) in counsel (ragin, Goth. ragin). "Ffor reynart is a shrewe and felle and knoweth so many wyles that he shal lye and flatre and shal thynke how he may begyle deceyue and brynge yow to some mockerye," says Caxton (Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 11, ed. Arber), translating,

*Reinaert es fel ende quaet
hi sal hu smeken ende lieghen mach hi, hi sal hu bedrieghen met valschen wörden ende met sconen.*

Willens, Van Den Vos Reinaerde, l. 484.

Reynold, whence our surname Reynolds, is a familiar form of Reginald.

This confusion of the two names is an old one. In R. Morysine's Exhortation to Styrrre all Englyshmen to the Defence of their Countreie, 1559, "Reynolde Pole the Cardinal" is referred to as Reynard:—

Percase the Bishop of Rome is persuaded that men here are of two sorts, some yet remaining his true friends. Reynard, his man, may put this in his head.

It is a common superstition not to call the fox by his right name, whence the variety of names in different languages.—Cleasby, Icel. Dict. p. 167, s.v. Fœa.

RHODOMONTADE, an incorrect spelling of rhodomontade used by De Quincey, from a false analogy to rhapsody, rhetoric, rhododendron, and other words derived from the Greek. A similar mistake is rhyme for rime. "Rodomantade" is swaggering language such as befits Rodomonte, the hero of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

It. rodomontada, a boast, a brag, a cracke, or vainglorious vanting.—Florio.

Has't heard o' th' loud Rhodomontade
That t'other Day Jupiter made?

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque,
Poems, p. 275.

RHYME, a corruption of "rime," from a supposed connexion with rhythm, Greek rhythmos. "Rime," or "ryme," is the word in Milton, Shakespeare, and all old English writers. A. Sax. rim, Fr. rime, It. and Sp. rima, Ger. reim, Sw. and Dan. rim, Icel. rima. (See also F. Hall, Modern English, p. 158.)

Ryme, Rithmicus vel rithmus.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Man og to luen ðat rimes ren, ðe Wisseð wel ðe logede men.

[Man ought to love that rhymes course, that teacheth well the lewd men.]

Genesis and Exodus, l. 1.

Here y schal beginnen a rym,
Krist us yeue wel god fyn.

Hauelock the Dane, l. 21, ed. Skeat.

Seye a pater-noster stille,
For him þat haueth þe rym[e] maked.

Id. l. 2998.

And thanne y made this boke. But y wolde not sette it in ryme, but in prose, forto abregge it, and that it might be beter and more plainly to be understood.—Boke of Knight of La Tour Landry, p. 3.

This was a pretie phantasticall obseruation of them, and yet brought their meetes to haue a maruelous good grace, which was in Greeke called ῥυθμὸς: whence we haue deriued this word ryme, but improperly and not wel because we haue no such feete or times or stirres in our meeters, by whose simpatie or pleasant conueniencie with th'eare, we could take any delight: this rithmus of theirs, is not therefore our rime but a certaine musicall numerositie in vtterance, and not a bare number as that of the Arithmetically computation is, which therefore is not called rithmus but arithmus.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (1589), p. 83 (ed. Arber).

And vow you'le be reueng'd some other time
And then leave me to make the reason rime.

S. Rowlands, The Four Knaves (1611), p. 27
(Percy Soc.).

RIBAND, } an incorrect spelling
RIBBAND, } (Cowper), as if compounded with band, of ribbon, old and prov. French riban, Low Lat. ribanus (1367, Littré), perhaps connected with Lat. rubens, red (the Fr. word was sometimes spelt ruben, Scheler). Diefenbach suggests a connexion with Goth. raip, a thong, Dan. reeb, Gael. rib, Icel. reip, Eng. rope and reef (Goth. Sprache, ii. 163). The nautical term rib-band, a thin lath, is distinct.

With ribands pendent flaring 'bout her head.
Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor,
iv. 6, 42.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanted in the wind.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, bk. i. l. 185.

RICE, a Sussex word for underwood cut sufficiently young to bear winding into hedges or hurdles, is the modern form of A. Sax. hris, a thin branch (Parish).

RIDING, a corrupted form of the word trithing, i.e. a thirding or third part of a shire. The ancient appellations nor-treding, sud-treding, were mistakenly analyzed into nor(h)-reding, sud-treding (south-riding), in place of nor-treding, sud-treding (nor'-thriding, sou'-thriding).

In Domesday Book trithing is the name of the three divisions of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. The counties of Cork and Tipperary have in modern times been divided into ridings, but there are only two thirdings in each of those shires.

A French writer once thought it necessary to inform his readers that a certain learned Society in the West Riding was not a "Société hippique" (Wheatley, What is an Index?).

RIG, a riotous or wanton course, seems to be a corruption of the older form reak or reek.

Little he dreamt when he set out
Of running such a rig.

Cowper, John Gilpin.

Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, quotes the following:—

Love and Rage kept such a reakes that I thought they would have gone mad together.—Breton, Dream of Strange Effects, p. 17.

It were enough to undo me utterly, to fill brimful the cup of my misfortune, and make me play the mad-pate reaks of Bedlam.—Urquhart, Rabelais, bk. iii. ch. ix.

RIG-DOWN-DAISY, an old Scotch name for a dance performed on the grass, as if a rig or frolic, that beats down the daisies, is a corruption of Eng. rigadon, Fr. rigadon, rigodon, originally rigaudon, a lively dance, so called after one Rigaud, its inventor (Littré). Somewhat similarly downsella, the name of an old dance (Wright), is from It. donzella.

We danced a rigadon together.—The Guardian, No. 154.

"Yes," sez Johnson, "in France
They're beginnin' to dance
Beelzebub's own rigadon," sez he.

J. R. Lowell, The Biglow Papers, No. 5.

RIGHTEOUS, a mis-spelling of right-wise, old Eng. rightwis, A. Sax. rihtwis, from a false analogy to such words as plenteous, bounteous, &c. A similar malformation is the Scotch wrongous.

Fore hel is not ordend fore ry3twyse mon,
Bot fore hom þat seruen þe fynd.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 221, l. 340.

Seven sythes at the lest of the day
The ryghtwis falles.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 3432.

Welcome right-wise king, & Joy royall,
he that is grounded with grace!

Percy Folio MS. vol. iii. p. 237, l. 9.

The ryghtwis peple ben al loste, trouthe and rightwysnes ben exyled and fordriuen.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox, 1461, p. 117 (ed. Arber).

To Ceasar geue tribute, taxe, subsidie, and all other dueties pertaining to him, as to haue hym in thy honour and reuerence: to obey his iust lawes and rightwise commaundements.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 94 verso.

RIGMAROLE, an unmeaning harangue, a long and rambling discourse, is a corruption of old Eng. ragman-roll, a catalogue or roll of names, sometimes applied to a papal bull, and to an old game in which a roll of parchment played an important part. The essential idea seems to have been a long document containing many items. The original form was Ragman's roll, i.e. the Devil's roll—Ragman (Swed. raggen) being an old name for the devil. See Skeat, Notes to P. Plowman, pp. 13, 378.

Fescennia Carmina I dooe here translate accordyng to our Englyshe proverb a ragman's rewe, or a bible. For so dooe we call a long geste that railleth on any person by name or toucheth a bodyes honesty somewhat near.—Udall.

Wip merkes of marchauntes · y-medled bytewene,
Mo þan twenty and two · twyes y-noubred, þer is none heraud þat haþ · half swich a rolle,

Rigt as a rageman · haþ rekned hem newe.
Pierce the Ploughman's Crede, l. 180.

He blessed hem with hus [breet] · and blerede hure eye[n],
And raghte with hus rageman · rynges and Broches.

Vision of Piers Plowman, C. i. 73.

Venus, which stant withoute lawe,
In none certeine, but as man drawe
Of Rageman upon the chaunce,
She laith no peise in the balaunce.
Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 355.

Tutivillus. Here a rolle of ragman of the rownde tabille,
Of breffes in my bag, man, of synnes dampnabille. Towneley Mysteries, Juditium.

Explicit Ragmannes rolle,
Lenvoy of the prynter
Go lytyl rolle, where thou arte bought or solde,

Among fayre women behaue the mannerly :

And yf that they do blame the wrongfully,
Excuse thy prynter and thy selfe also,
Layenge the faute on kynge Ragman holly
Whiche dyde the make many yeres ago.

W. de Worde, Ragmannes Rolle.

Ragmen alone came to be used in Scottish for a rhapsody or discourse. Of my bad wit perchance I thoct haue fenit
In ryme an ragmen wise als curiouse,
Bot not be twentye part sa Sentenciuse.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 8, l. 25.

A further corruption is rig-my-roll.

You must all of you go in one rig-my-roll way, in one beaten track.—Richardson, Sir C. Grandison, vi. 155.

RISER, a provincial word used in Warwickshire for a pea-stick (Wright), as if that which lifts up the plant or helps it to rise.

There can be little doubt that this is only another form of Prov. Eng. rise (rice), branches, pease-straw, old Eng. rise, ris, a branch, A. Sax. hris, a thin branch, Dan. riis, brushwood, a rod. See RICE.

The wodeward waiteth us wo that loketh under rys.

Wright, Political Songs, p. 149 (temp. Ed. II.).

Here is pepyr, pyan, and swete lycorys,
Take hem alle at thi lykyng,
Bothe appel and per and gentyl rys,
But towche nowth this tre that is of cunnyng.

Country Mysteries, p. 82 (Shaks. Soc.).

RIVEL, } a wrinkle, are corrup-
RIVELING, } tions of writhel, writhelling, from writhel, to twist, Swed. wrida, Dan. wride. So Prov. Eng. writhled, withered, originally shrivelled, wrinkled. Compare Queen-hive (Pepys) for Queen-hithe; kif (Sylvester) for kith; Prov. Eng. fill-horse, fistle, firsty, for thill-horse, thistle, thirsty.

Sylenus now is old, I wonder, I
He doth not hate his triple venerie.
Cold, writhled eld, his lives-wet almost spent,
Me thinks a unitie were competent.

Marston, Scourge of Villanie, sat. iv.

I vow'd your breasts for colour and proportion
Were like a writhel'd pair of o'erworn foot-balls.

Randolph, The Jealous Lovers, act ii. sc. 3 (1632).

But cursèd cruell be those wicked Hags,
Whom poysonous spight, envy, and hate have won

T' abhorred sorcery, whose writhled bags Fould fiends oft suck, and nestle in their loathsome rags.

H. More, Pre-existence of the Soul, st. 47.

Alle my lymes ben dryuun in to nou3t.
My ruuelungis seien witnessyng a3ens me.—
Wycliffe, Job xvi. 8, 9.

This . . . is much used to take away
riuels, and so smooth the skin both of the face and also of the whole body besides.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 38.

I'll give thee tackling made of riuell'd gold,
Wound on the barks of odoriferous trees.

Marlowe, Dido Queen of Carthage, act iii.
(1594), p. 261 (ed. Dyce).

It [grief] dries up the bones; . . . makes them hollow-ey'd, pale, and lean, furrowfaced, to have dead looks, wrinkled brows, riveled cheeks, dry bodies.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, I. ii. 3, 4.

Then drooped the fading flowers (their beauty fled)

And closed their sickly eyes, and hung the
head,

And riuelled up with heat, lay dying in their bed.

Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf, l. 378.

ROAM is probably of a radical identity with ramble (? for rammle), Dut.
rammeln, to rout about, old Dut. rommelen, to move hither and thither. It first appears, says Mr. Oliphant (Old and Mid. Eng., p. 249), in Layamon's Brut (vol. i. p. 335), ab. 1205, as rame-den, the perfect of ram. This at an early period assumed the form of rome, to walk about.

For though we slepe, or wake, or rome, or ride,

Ay flieth the time, it wol no man abide.

Chaucer, The Clerkes Tale.

Mr. Wedgwood would connect the word with A. Sax. rym, Ger. raum, Icel. rim, as if to room abroad or range
at large, comparing to expatiate, Ger.
spazieren, Lat. spatiari, to walk abroad,
from spatium, an open space. So Dut.
ruymen, to make room, give away, withdraw (Sewel), Ger. räumen.

We certainly find an old Eng. rum or room, to clear or make a way for one's self, A. Sax. ryman, and rumian.

Hii al3te with drawe snerd, with matis mani on,

& with mani an hard stroc rumede hor wey anon.

Robt. of Gloucester's Chronicle, vol. ii. p. 536
(ed. 1810).

This also appears as reme, to make room or clear a passage in Kyng Aly-saunder, l. 3347.

And thoctfull luffaris rowmys to and fro.

G. Douglas, Proloug to XII Buk of Eneados,
l. 201 (1513).

Kynges and knihtes · scholde kepen hem bi Reson,
And Rihtfuliche Raymen · þe Realmes abouten.

Vision of Piers Plowman, A. i. 93.

Many of his lignage myght not fynde iu their hertes to see hym dye but token leu sorrowfully and romed the court.—Carton, Reynard the Fox (1461), p. 31 (ed. Arber).

On the morow erly he rumed his castel and wente with grymbart.—Id. p. 61.

These burdes I joyne together,
To keep vs safe from the wedder,
That we may rome both hither and thider,
And safe be from this floodde.

Chester Mysteries, The Deluge.

When hee was in his bayne, the queene and her daughter La beale Isoud roumed up and downe in the chamber.—Malony, Hist.
of King Arthur (1634), vol. ii. p. 22 (ed.
Wright).

However this may be, rome or roam
soon came to be regarded as meaning to wander about like a pilgrim who travels toward Rome [cf. Icel. Róm-för, Róm-ferð, a pilgrim to Rome (Cospa- tricius rome fare occurs in the Divise de Stobbo, A.D. 1200), Rúma-vegr, a pilgrimage], from the analogy of the following:—

It. romeo, a roamer, a wanderer, a Palmer for deuotion sake; . . . Romeare, to roame or wander vp and downe as a Palmer or solitary man for deuotion sake.—Florio, 1611.

Compare old French romier, and Spanish "romero, a Pilgrim, so called because most Pilgrimages were formerly to Rome" (Stevens, 1706); Prov.
romerage, pilgrimage. Rome, it should be remembered, was formerly pronounced the same as room.

Roome is come to bee the cytye whear owr Lord was crucyfied (for I ame sewr none of his pure stamp beleene that Christe sayd to Peeter at Roome-gate, Vado iterum crucifigi).
—Harington, Nugæ Antiquæ, vol. i. p. 269.

Win. This Rome shall remedy.

War. Roam thither, then.
Shakespeare, 1 Hen. VI. iii. 1.

Dante says that "people that go on the service of God" are called *palmer*s (palmerj) when they bring back the palm from beyond sea; pilgrims (pere- grini) when they go to the House of Galicia (i.e. di Santo Jacopo); and "roamers inasmuch as they go to Rome"—romei in quanto vanno a Roma.—Vita Nova, Opera, vol. iv. p.
723 (Firenze, 1830).

The Romieu family of Provence bear the pilgrim's emblem, escallops, in their coat-of-arms.

Miss Yonge, therefore, wrote with curious felicity when she said, "Restless roaming to take one opinion after another always seemed to be a symptom of the Oxford Tractarians who fell away to the church of Rome."—Musings on the Christian Year, p. xxi.

Saunter will possibly occur to many as a parallel. It is by no means certain, however, that saunter, or santer
(1548), meant originally aller à la Sainte
Terre, though this account of the word is given in Blount, Glossographia (1656), and has been adopted by Archbishop Trench and others. It is more probably to journey about from holy place to holy place, visiting the saints or sanctuaries, and near akin to Span. santero,
Fr. sainteur. Compare the following:—

Sentourete, pèlerine; un pèlerin, dans notre idiome, s'appelle u sentouré, celui qui va vénéraler les reliques des saints.—V. Lespy, Proverbes du Pays de Béarn, 1876 (see Notes and Queries, 5th S. x. 246).

Similarly in Scotch to palmer or pawmer is to go from place to place in an idle, objectless sort of way.

The *Palmer*s . . . were a class of itinerant monks without a fixed residence . . . visiting at stated times the most remarkable Sanctua- ries of the several countries of the West.—
Chambers' Cyclopædia, s.v. Palmer.

When the Turkish pilgrim Evlilyâ, one of the greatest travellers of the seventeenth century, formed the resolution of passing his life in travelling and visiting the tombs of the saints, his biographer remarks that his name
Evlilyâ (= Saints) thus became significant, as he had always a predilection for visiting those places of pilgrimage (Travels of Evlilya Efendi, vol. i. p. v.
Oriental Fund Trans. ed.). In fact he was a saunterer. Probably santon has a similar meaning in the following passage, though in Spanish and French it now means a hypocrite:—

To every one of these principall Mosques belongs publicke hagnios, Hospitalis, with lodgins for Santons, and Ecclesiasticall persons.—Sandys, Travells, p. 32, fol.

Saunter is sometimes used by country folk as meaning, not a lazy, leisurely walk, a stroll, but a journey, however long and rapid, if undertaken for pleasure. Late on a November afternoon in 1879, I found myself in the same compartment of a train bound for Brighton with a respectable man, apparently of the gardening class, and his wife. They informed me they had left Norwich before 11 o'clock that morning, and were "taking a saunter" to Brighton to see their son.

In the Exmoor Scolding, one girl calls the other "ya sauntering troant" (l. 282), i.e. idle, dilatory.

ROAST, in the colloquial phrase to rule the roast, meaning to domineer, or have everything one's own way, as if to preside over the chief dish and dispense it as one pleases, has been explained by Wedgwood, with reference to the primary meaning of the words A. Sax. hróst, Dutch roest, as denoting a rod, which is ruled or wielded by a sovereign as an emblem of authority. He cites the expression, "to rule the rod" = to be supreme, hold sway, from the collection of Scotch poems called the Evergreen. It seems more likely, however, that the original phrase was to rule the roost, to tyrannize as a cock does over the poultry yard. The domineering character of the gallus gallinaceus has originated synonymous expressions, e.g. "To be cock of the walk." To rule the rother (i.e. the cattle) occurs in the same sense in the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 382. Richardson quotes from Jewell:—

Like bragginge cockes on the rawst, flappe your whinges, and crow out aloude.

Ihon, duke of Burgoyne, . . . ruled the rost, and governed both kyng Charles the Frenche kyng, and his whole realme.—Hall, 1548 [in Nares].

Roost, the rod on which fowls perch, and roast, the rod on which meat used to be dressed, are but different uses of A. Sax. hróst, above (Ger. rost). See N. and Q. 6th S. iii. 170.

To rost was the old form of to roost.

Trees that growe long tyme be rosted in a lytell whyle.—Polycricon, 1527, f. 120.

Compare the following:—

Thou dotard! thou art woman-tired, unroosted
By thy dame Partlet here.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, ii. 3, 76.

'Tis a purgatory, a mere limbo,
Where the black devil & his dam Scurrility,
Do rule the roost, foul princes of the air!

Randolph, The Mases Looking-Glass, act iv. sc. 5, 1638 (p. 255, ed. Hazlitt).

Sylla rubing the roste, & bearyng all the stroke in Rome (saieth Plutarchus) was in minde and wille to take awaie from Caesar, Cornelia the daughter of Cinna the dictater.—Aphorismes of Erasmus, 1542, p. 294 (repr. 1877).

Let us not look heere to rule the roste, but to be rosted rather of Rulers.—A. Kingsmyl, Most Excellent and Comfortable Treatise, p. 20, 1577.

Whatsoever ye brage our boste,
My mayster yett shall reule the roste.

Debate of the Carpenters Tools (ab. 1500),
Nuga Poetica, p. 17.

Thus thwarting ouer thom,
He ruleth all the roste
With braggyng and with bost;
Borne vp on euery syde,
With pompe and with pryde.

Skelton, Why Come ye nat to Courte?
(ab. 1520).

The Lawyer leapeth io,
Nay, rather leapes both ouer hedge and ditch,
And rules the rost, but fewe men rule by right.

G. Gascoigne, The Steel Glas, l. 427 (1576).

Where champions ruleth the roste,
There dailie disorder is moste.

Tusser, Five Hundred Pointes, 1580
(E. D. Soc. p. 144).

Nay yf richesse myghte rule the roste,
Beholde what cause I haue to boste.

Heywood, The Four P's (Dodsley, i. 78,
ed. 1825).

By natures spite,—what doo I saye?

Dooth nature rule the raste?

Nay, God it is, say wel I may,
By whom nature is tost.

Black-letter Ballads (1566), p. 243
(ed. Lilly).

Some of them will be whole maysters, and rule the roast as they list themselves.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 107 verso.

And here they crake, bable, and make grete boste

And amonge all other wolde rule the roste.

The Hye Way to the Spytell House, l. 959.

But these by the priuie entries of the eare, slip downe into the hart, and with gunshotte of affection gaule the minde, where reason and vertue should rule the roste.—S. Gosson, Schoole of Abuse, 1579, p. 32 (ed. Arber).

He rules the roste; and when my honourable lord saies it shall be thus, my worshipfull rascall (the grome of his close stoole) saies it shal not be thus.—Marston, Eastward Hoe, act ii. sc. 1, vol. iii. p. 25 (ed. Halliwell).

Remember many years bygone,
When he that ruled us right was slain;
Respect to Quality was lost,
Tinkers and Coblers ruled the rost.

Joco-Ser. Dis. p. 36.

The Monarch who of Fraoce is hight,
Who rules the Roast with matchless might,
Since William went to Heaven.

N. Rowe, Works, vol. ii. p. 283 (1766).

He . . . was looking forward to the days when he himself would sit authoritative at some board, and talk, and direct, and rule the roast, while lesser stars sat round and obeyed.—A. Trollope, Barchester Towers, vol. i. ob. 3.

ROCK-A-LOW, a popular term for an overcoat, is a corruption of the French roquelauve (Slang Dict.), a species of cloak brought into use by the Duke of Roquelauve in the time of Louis XIV. (Gattel). Cf. Eng. a spencer.

Within the Roquelauve's clasp thy hands are pent,

Hands, that stretch'd forth invading harms prevent. Gay, Trivia, bk. i l. 51.

Bailey spells it roccele, Madame D'Arblay rococo and roquelo.

A connexion was perhaps imagined with the old word rock, rocket, a cloak (rochet); cf. Devon rockel, a woman's cloak.

Muffled up in a plain brown rococo.—Mod. D'Arblay, Diary, vi. 353.

ROMAN BEAM, a sort of balance or stilliards, otherwise called a stelleer (Bailey), is not, as one might naturally suppose, of Roman origin, but is the same word as Fr. romaine and balance romaine, old Fr. romman (14th cent.), Sp. romana, Low Lat. romana (Du Cange), which are all from the Arabic rommāna, a balance (Littre), originally the movable weight or counterpoise, so named from its shape resembling a pomegranate, rommān (Devic). The word is thus akin to Heb. rimmōn, a pomegranate.

Romaine, a Roman beam, a Stelleere.—Cotgrave.

Romana, a paire of ballance or scales to weigh with, a pomgranate.—Minsheu, Spanish Dict. 1623.

ROOK, the name of a piece in the game of chess, is a corruption of It. rocco, old Fr. roc, roquer, Sp. roque. The Italian word rocco signifies not only the chessman, but a rock, fort, or castle, and is itself a corruption of Pers. rōkh, Sansk. roka, a boat—that being the original form of the piece. From this mistake arose its other names torre, tour, castello, our "castle" (D. Forbes, Hist. of Chess, pp. 161, 211). In old English writers it is sometimes called a duke.

E. There's the full number of the game ; Kings and their pawns, queen, bishops, knights and dukes.

J. Dukes? They're called rooks by some.

E. Corruptively.
Le roch, the word, custodié de la roch,
The keeper of the forts.

Middleton, Game of Chess, Induction.

The Russian lodia, a boat, preserves the original signification of the rook. The Icelandic hrokr is an assimilation of the foreign word to the name of the crow, exactly as in English. M. Devic thinks that the original of the word was old Pers. rōkh, a knight errant; and the primitive shape of the piece, an elephant surmounted by a castle, the castle finally predominating. See also Basterot, Jeu des Echecs, p. 18.

In a curious old set of Scandinavian chessmen, the hrokr is represented as a warrior on foot.—Wright, The Homes of other Days, 221.

Root, to grub or turn up, as a pig does the earth with its snout, so spelt as if to eradicate or tear up by the roots ("The wild boar out of the wood doth root it up."—Ps. lxxx. 13, P.B.V.), was originally to wroot or wrote, A. Sax. wrotan, Dut. wroeten. The initial w is also lost in Dan. rode, Ger. rotten, Icel. róta (? Lat. rodere). Nearly related is write, A. Sax. writan, orig. to cut or engrave.

Hic scrohs, a swyn-wrotynge.—Wright's Vocabularies, p. 271.

Right as a sow wroteth in every ordure, so wroteth she hire heautee in stinking ordure of sinne.—Chaucer, The Persones Tale, p. 149 (ed. Tyrwhitt).

At one of the Rodings in Essex no Hogs will root.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 5 (ed. 1811).

Sum men ladeð here lif on etinge and on drinkinge also swin, þe uulieð and wroteth and sneuieð aure fule [as swine that defile and root and sniff ever foully].—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 37 (ed. Morris).

These engineers of mischief, that like moles doe lye and wrot in sinne, till they haue cast vppe a mount of hatefull enormitie against heauen, they may well be called the souldiers of the deuil.—B. Rich, Homestie of this Age (1614), p. 36 (Percy Soc.).

Soon we shall drive hack,
Of Alcibiades the approaches wild,
Who like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's peace.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, v. 1, 167.

Come dunghill worldlings, you that root like swine,

And cast up golden trenches where you come.

Quarles, Emblems, bk. i. emb. 9 (1635).

ROOT, curiously used by Bunyan in the phrase "to learn by root of heart," as if thoroughly, of a lesson committed to memory so as easily to be repeated, is old Eng. "Root, of vse and custom, Habitus, consuetudo" (Prompt. Parv.), which is from Fr. route, a beaten track or road, old Fr. rote; originally to learn par routine or par rotine (Cotgrave), according to customary habit, in a groove, mechanically.

I advise that thou put this letter in thy bosome; that thou read therein to thyself and to thy children, until you have got it by root-of-heart.—Pilgrims Progress, pt. ii. p. 11.

In the following the sense is different:—

Hee spake with a premeditate pride from his heart root, which passed not whether it were sin or no, come what will come of it.—H. Smith, Sermons, p. 171 (1657).

ROSE, the sprinkler of a watering-pot, the perforated head of its spout, is a word overlooked in Latham and most other dictionaries. It stands for roser, Scottish rouser, rooser, a watering-pot, from Fr. arrosoir, arrosoir, which is from Fr. arrouser, "to bedew, besprinkle, wet, moisten, water gently" (Cotgrave). Compare Sp. rociar, to bedew, besprinkle, old Fr. aroser, from ad + roser, Fr. rosée, dew, Lat. ros, Slav. rosa, Lith. rasa, Sansk. rasa, water, liquid.

Des lermes arusée est sa face.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 515 (ed. Atkinson).

La Providence est une source

Toujours prête à nous arroser.

Malherbe [in Littré].

The French word was adopted into English as arrowze, and sometimes spelt arrose.

The blissefull dew of heaven do's arrowze you.
The Two Noble Kinsmen (1634), v. 4, l. 104 (ed. Littledale).

ROSEMARY has no connexion either with rose or Mary, but is the Latin rosmarinus, "sea-spray," so called from its usually growing on the sea-coast (Prior). Compare Danish rosmarin, Fr. rosmarin, Low Lat. rosmarinus. The following passage, speaking of relics of the mediæval cultus of the Virgin still surviving in the names of flowers, is doubly incorrect:—

The Rose (of) Mary is still among the most fragrant, as the Mary-Gold is among the gaudiest, in our gardens.—Church Quarterly Review, April, 1879, p. 153.

Rosemary, which was once customarily worn at weddings, seems by a curious error to have been regarded as a derivative of Lat. mas, maris, a male, and so connected with Fr. mari, Lat. maritus, a husband, as if rosa maris, rose de mari.

The last of the flowers is the rosemary (Rosmarinus, the rosemary, is for married men), the which by name, nature, and continued use, man challengeth as properly belonging to himselfe.—Roger Hacket, A Marriage Present, 1607.

(See Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. ii. p. 119, ed. 1854.)

His herbe propre is rosmarine,

Which shapen is for his covine.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 132.

Fat Colworts, and comforting Perseline,

Colde Lettuce, and refreshing Rosmarine.

Spenser, Muirpotmus, l. 201.

Biting on annis-seed and rosemarine,
Which might the fume of his rot lungs refine.

J. Hall, Satires, bk. iv. sat. 4.

The Rosemarie Branch.

Grow for two ends, it matters not at all
Be't for my bridall, or my buriall.

Herrick, Hesperides (p. 249, ed. Hazlitt).

The xiiij day of July was mared in Ssat
Mary Wolnars in Lumbard strett iij dowthers of master Atkynson the skrevener; . . . and they went to the chyrche all iij on after a-nodur with iij goodly cupes garnysshes with lases gilt and goodly flours and rosmare.—Machyn, Diary, 1560 (p. 240, Camden Soc.).

Here is a strange alteration: for the rosemary that was wasbt in sweet water to set out the bridall, is now wet in teares to furnish her buriall.—Decker's Wonderfull Yeare, 1603.

ROSTER, the official list of regiments, &c., on active service, seems to be a corruption of register (as if refister, reister, roster), but the vowel change is not easily accounted for.

The eighteen regiments first on the roster for foreign service should be kept really fit for service.—The Saturday Review, vol. 47, p. 293.

ROUGH, } to trump one's adversary's RUFF, } card at whist (Wright), is without question a derivative of the Dutch word troef, a trump at cards (Sewel), which was resolved into
t' roef, to ruff or rough. Troef itself, like Dan. tromf, Scot. trumph, a card of the principal suit, Eng. trump, is for triumph (or winning) card, Lat.
triumphus. Contracted orthographies, like t' ransack (More), t' run, for to ransack, to run, occurring in old writers, would favour this corruption.

And change is no robbery. I have been robbed, but not at ruff; yet they that have robbed, you see, what a poor stock they have left me.—Heywood and Rowley, Fortune by Land and Sea (1655), act v. sc. 3.

Saint Augustine compareth the Divell in his greatest ruffe and illolity, vnto those eager Labourers, which, digging at the mettals, want neither will nor instruments.—Howard, Defensative against the Poysoun of supposed prophecies, 1620, p. 9.

The following clear elucidation by a Saturday Reviewer (vol. 48, p. 609) is delightful:—"According to Richardson, the primary meaning of ruff is elevation or exaltation, and the articles of costume so denominated owe their name to their being raised or puffed out or up; and this would explain the use of the word ruff, instead of trump, in the taking of tricks by a card of the dominant suit of the deal." (!)

ROUND, in modern slang to peach, inform on, or give evidence against one, perhaps with some idea of turning round upon him treacherously, in old English meant to whisper, and is a corrupt form of roun or rowne, A. Sax. rūnian (Ger. raunen), akin to Icel. rín, a secret, a whispering, also a mystic character, a Rune (Cleasby, p. 504), Goth. runa, a mystery, a conference (Diefenbach, ii. 177).

Rownyng togeder, Susurro.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Heo runep to-gaderes.

and spekeþ of derne lue.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 188, l. 60.

[They whisper together and speak of secret love.]

One rounded an other in the eare and sayd : Erat diues. He was a rich man. A great fault.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 64.

I rounded Rabalais in the eare when he Historified Pantagruell.—Lingua, ii. 1 (1632).

He rounded softly in their ears.—North's Plutarch, Life of M. Brutus.

In the police reports of the Times of March 15th, 1875, appeared the following statement:—

The defendant wanted to take a large piece of cheese away with him, which Clarke prevented by speaking to the butler. On leaving the house the defendant said, "What do you mean by rounding upon me?" and struck him a violent blow on the side of the head.

He overstopped his time, but at last as his wife said she would "round" on him if he did not go back, he gave himself up.—Police Reports, Standard, Sept. 20, 1876.

Five years long, now, rounds faith into my ears,
"Help Thou, or Christendom is done to death!"

Browning, The Ring and the Book, canto 10.

See also Nares, s.v.

ROUND, the cross piece or step of a ladder, so spelt as if it denoted a round step, it being commonly shaped like a cylinder (so Craik, English of Shakespeare, p. 128), is a corruption of old Eng. ronde, a stick or stave, which perhaps came to be confounded with Fr. rond, round.

Te grene bowes beoð al uordruwede, & forwurðen to drueie hwhite rondes [The green boughs be all dried up, and degenerated into dry white staves].—Anceren Riwele, p. 148.

This round, ronde, seems to be only a different form of Scottish rung, roung, a stick, staff, or cudgel, Eng. rung (old Eng. rong), the bar of a ladder, Gael. rong, Dut. rong, Icel. raung, Goth. hrugga (pronounced hrunga), a staff (Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 590). Compare rung, the rib of a ship, A. Sax. hrung, a beam, Icel. röng.

Then up she gat aue meikle rung,
And the gudeman made to the door.

The Wife of Auchtermuchty (Roberts, Ballads, p. 549).

Auld Scotland has a raucle tongue,
She's just a devil wi' a rung.

Burns, Poems, p. 12 (Globe ed.).

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face;
And when he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees,

By which he did ascend.

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, ii. 1, 26.

Where all the rounds like Jacob's ladder rise,
The lowest hid in earth, the topmost in the skies.

Dryden, Hind and Panther, pt. ii. l. 221.

You'll have to begin at a low round of the ladder, let me tell you, if you mean to get on in life.—George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, ch. x.

ROUND, in such phrases as "to take one roundly to task," "to rate one roundly,"

Pray you, be round with him.

Hamlet, iii. 4, meaning outspoken, unreserved, full, plain, not circuitous, using no circumlocutions, but going straight to the point, is a distinct word from round, circular. It is identical with the North country word round, full, large, Dan. rund, liberal, abundant, Swed. rund, large, liberal. But Fr. ronde also means blunt, plain, open-hearted (Cotgrave), which would suggest as possible transitions of meaning, (1) round, (2) plump, full, (3) free, outspoken.

Come roundly, roundly, come, what is the matter?

The Famous History of Captain Thomas Stukeley, l. 26 (1605).

Your reproof is something too round; I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.—Shakespeare, Henry V. iv. 1, 218.

Let his queen mother all alone entreat him, To show his grief: let her be round with him.

Id. Hamlet, iii. 1, 191.

I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver, Of my whole course of love.

Id. Othello, i. 3, 90.

At this the Fish did not bite; whereupon the King took a rounder way, commanding my Lord Chancellor and the Earl of Pembroke to propound joyntly the same unto him, (which the Archbishop had before moved) as immediately from the King.—Reliquie Wottoniana, p. 409 (1672).

The good woman, whether moved by compassion, or by shame, or by what ever other motive, I cannot tell, first gave her servants a round scold for disobeying the orders which she had never given.—Fielding, History of a Foundling, bk. viii. ch. 4.

ROUND, v. a., a technical term in the manufacture of playing cards, meaning to trim the edges of the card-boards, so as to make them straight and rectangular, is no doubt a corruption of the French verb rogner, used in the same sense, “dresser avec les ciseaux les bords du Carton.”—Transactions of Philolog. Soc. 1867, p. 74.

ROUNDELAY, “a shepheard's dance, sometimes used for a Song” (Dunton's Ladies Dictionary), is the French rondelet Anglicized and assimilated in its termination to lay, a song, like virelay. In Vaughan's Daphnis it is actually spelt as a compound word.

Here many garlands won at roundel-lays Old shepherds hung up in those happy days.

Sacred Poems, p. 242 (ed. 1858).

Fr. rondelet (= rondeau), a rime or sonnet that ends as it begins.—Cotgrave.

Then haue you also a rondelette, the which doth alwayes end with one self same foote or repeticion, and was thereof (in my judgement) called a rondelet.—G. Gascoigne, The Steele Glas, 1576, p. 38 (ed. Arber).

Where be the dapper ditties that I dight And roundelays and virelays so soot.

Davison, Poet. Rhaps. 60 (repr.).

Now instead of parley with courtly gallants, ahee singeth songs, carols, and roundelays.—Tom a Lincoln, 1635, Thoms, Early Eng. Prose Romances, vol. ii. p. 280.

Who, listening, heard him, while he searched the grove,

And loudly sung his roundelay of love.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, bk. ii. l. 78.

. . . The cock hath sung beneath the thatch, Twice or thrice his roundelay.

Tennyson, The Owl, Song 1.

Lay itself is a perverted form of A. Sax. leoth, = Ger. lied, a song.

ROUND ROBIN, a corruption of ronde ruban, a circular band, a name given in France to the method adopted by some officers of the Government to make known their grievances, so that no one name should seem to stand first (N. & Q. 5th S. vi. p. 157).

In Prov. English round-robin is a small pan-cake (Devon), and the word was often irreverently used for the sacramental wafer in the controversial tractates of the Puritans in Reformation times. It is used by Hacket for a rebel or leader of sedition (see Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.v.).

Various emendations were suggested, which it was agreed should be submitted to the Doctor's consideration. But the question was, who should have the courage to propose them to him? At last it was hinted that there could be no way so good as that of a Round Robin, as the sailors call it, which they make use of when they enter into a conspiracy, so as not to let it be known who puts his name first or last to the paper.—Boswell, Life of Johnson, vol. iii. ch. 3.

The abruptness of the interruption gave to it the protecting character of an oral “round robin,” it being impossible to challenge any one in particular as the ringleader.—De Quincey, Autobiographic Sketches, Works, vol. xiv. p. 46.

ROUSE, a drinking bout, a carouse, is the same word as Ger. rausch, drunkenness, Dut. roes, Dan. rusende, be-ruset, fuddled, intoxicated. Hence also Prov. Eng. rouse, noise, riot, from which (mistaken as a plural?) row, a disturbance.

Dekker speaks of “the German's upsy-freeze, the Danish rowsa” as different sorts of toping (Gul's Hornbook).

In Germany every one hath a rouse in his pate once a day.—J. Howell, Instructions for Forraine Travell, 1642, p. 65 (ed. Arber).

The king doth wake to night and takes his rouse. Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 4.

Mar. We'll talk anon: another rouse! we lose time. [Drinks.]

Massinger, The Bondman, ii. 3.

Fill the cup and fill the can,
Have a rouse before the morn.

Tennyson, Vision of Sin, l. 96.

RUDDER, an old Eng. name for horned cattle, is a corruption of rother, A. Sax. hryðer, hrud̄er, hriðer, akin to Fris. rither, Ger. rinder (-pest) from hrind, and perhaps runt, an old cow.

Rother beasts, horned beasts, North Country.—Bailey.

Four e roperen hym by-fora þat feble were wopen.

Peres the Plowman's Crede, l. 431 (ab. 1394).

Boote, . . . a serpent that lyes by milke of rudder beasts.—Florio, 1611.

For þis yl[on]d ys hest to brynge forþ tren, & fruyt, & roperon, & oþere hestes.—Trevisa, Description of Britain [Morris and Skeat, Specimens, i. 236].

Euerych sowtere þ̄ makeþ shon of newe ropes leþer, ahal bcte, at þat feste of Estre, twey pans, in name of shongable [i.e. shoongable, shoe-tax].—Eng. Guilds, p. 359.

RUFFIAN has acquired its modern sense of a brutally violent fellow, an outrageous bully, from its having been, no doubt, popularly connected with rough, which was formerly spelt ruff, just as one of the coarse boisterous canaille is now called "a rough." The word may have been further influenced by old Eng. ruff and ruffle, to raise a tumult or disturbance, to be rough and turbulent, to bully or swagger. Compare Icel. rúfinn, rough, uncombed, and the following citations:—

Lacno, a dogs name, as we say Shag-haire, Ruffe, or Ruffian.—Florio.

It. ruffiano, a ruffin, a swagrer, a awash-buckler.—Id.

Ruffo, a ruffian, a ruffling roister; . . . also rude, ruffe, or rough.—Id.

Ruffare, to ruffle or make ruff.—Id.

Shakespeare speaks somewhere of "the ruffian billows," and Chapman of "the ruffinous pride of storms and tempests" (Iliad, vi. 456).

A fuller hlast ne'er shook our battlements:
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea.

Othello, ii. 1, 7.

The night comes on, and the bleak winds
Do sorely ruffe. King Lear, ii. 4, 304.

The old meaning of ruffian was curiously different, viz., an effeminate curled darling, a minion (amasius), having curly or bushy hair, which would argue a connexion with Sp. rufo, curled, It. arruffare, to ruffle, bristle, stare with ones haire, to frounce. See Trench, Select Glossary, where he quotes from G. Harvey, "ruffianly hair," from Prynne, "an effeminate, ruffianly lock," and "ruffians . . . in their deformed grizzled locks and hair." Compare also Homilies, p. 331 (Oxford ed.), Fuller, Church Hist. vol. i. p. 290 (Nichols' ed.)

She could not . . . mince finer, nor set on more laces, nor make larger cuts, nor carry more trappings about her, than our ruffians and wantons do at this day.—H. Smith, Sermons, p. 208 (1637).

We might infer from the following that ruffian once denoted, not so much roughness of behaviour, as roughness of appearance, especially in the matter of hair.

I will not write of sweatie, long, shag haire,
Or curled lockes with frised periwigs:
The first, the badge that Ruffins vse to weare,
The last, the cognisance of wanton rigs.

Tom Tel-Troths Message, l. 274
(Shaks. Soc.)

Let ruffins weare a bushe,
and sweat tilt well nigh dead,
In that lme bald I care no rush,
but onely wipe my head.

Denham, Defence of a Bald Head, in Register of Stationers' Company,
ii. 99 (Shaks. Soc.)

Fr. rufien, Sp. rufian, It. ruffiano, Prov. Ger. ruffer, denote specifically a bawd or pander, and a connexion has been suggested for these with It. ruffa, dirt, scurf, Fr. rouffe, as if morally filthy (Diez, Scheler).

The following is mere folks-etymology:—

A swaggerer is one that plays at ruffe, from whence he took the denomination of ruffyn.—J. H. (Gent), Satyirical Epigrams, 1619 [Brewer].

Shall I fall to falling bands, and be a ruff-an no longer? I must; I am now liegeman to Cupid, . . . Therefore, hat-hand, avault! ruff, regard yourself! garters, adieu!—Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange, act i. sc. 3 (Shaks. Soc. ed. p. 22).

RULE, an old word for a tumult or disturbance, is a contracted form of revel (reuel), the v being vocalized as in old Eng. recure, recoure, for recover, recover. See PERUSE and REVEL.

Compare old Eng. reweyill, proud (Lancelot of the Laik, l. 2853), from old Fr. revellé, haughty; renule (Wycliffe, Ps. ciii. 30), from renouveler, to renew.

In Devonshire rowl is a wake, a rustic fair held on the anniversary of the dedication of a church.

Vor why vor ded'st roily zo upon ma up to Challacomb rowl.

Exmoor Scolding, l. 2 (E. D. S.).

To reul, to be rude, to behave one's self unmannerly, to rig. A reuling Lad, a Rigsby.—Ray, North Country Words (p. 51, ed. 1742).

What for running for aqua vitae, posting for ale, plying warm clothes, and such like, there was no lesse rule then is in a tauerne of great resort.—The Passionate Morrice (1593), p. 79 (Shaks. Soc.)

And at each pause they kiss; was never seen such rule

In any place but here, at bonfire, or at yule.

Drayton, Polyolbion, xxvii. [Nares].

When Malvolio checks Sir Toby for making a disturbance late at night, he says:—

If you prized my lady's favour at anything more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule.—Twelfth Night, ii. 3, 132.

With alle þe murþes þat men may vise,

To Reuele with þise buyrdes briht.

A Song of Yesterday, l. 15 (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1858, p. 133).

That he that is so by the saide fraternyte electe to be a Maister, and he wolde refuse to take the gouernaunce vppon hym, wherby a inordynatt ruell schulde ensue, that then he so electe, for his refusell, to paye XXs.—English Gilds, p. 332 (E.E.T.S.).

All game and gle,

All myrthe and melodye,

All reuell and ryotte

And of host wyll I never blynnne.

The Worlde and the Chylde, 1522 (O. Plays, xii. 313).

Here rule and reuel appear side by side:—

The Deuil hath his purpose this way, as well as the other, he hath his purpose as well by reuelling and keeping ill rule all night, as by rising early in the morning, and banquetting all daye. So the Deuil hath hys purpose both wayes.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 108.

RUMMER, a large tumbler, as if for rum, is the German römer, as if roomer (Bailey).

Hostess meanwhile pours the wine into the Rummers, and puts the sugar on the shives.—The Comedy of the Prodigal Son, act iii.

Then Rhenish rummers walk the round,
In humpers every king is crowned.

Dryden, To Sir G. Etherege, l. 46.

RUNAGATE, an old word for a worthless, roving fellow, as if runaway, from run and old Eng. gate ("runnagate slaves."—Golding), is a corruption of renegade, O. Eng. renegate, Fr. renegat, It. riniegata, one who has denied or renounced his faith or country, from Lat. renegare, whence also comes the Shakespearean word renege or renegue, to deny. This latter still survives in Ireland, where I have heard a farmer's wife condemning a neighbour for renegeing her religion. Vide Ps. lxxviii. 6 (Prayer Book version).

Idle vagabonds and loitering runagates.—Homily against Idleness.

The devil is . . . a vagrant runagate walker like Cain.—Adams, Works, vol. ii. p. 45.

And must I hence, and leaue this certain state,

To roam vncertain (like a Runagate).

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 308 (1621).

In the Genevan version of the Bible the Lord says to Cain:—

A vagabond and a runnagate shalt thou be in the earth.—Gen. iv. 12.

Runagate, apostata.—Levins, Manipulus (1570), 40, 5.

Runnagate or rebell, whyche forsaketh allegiance or profession, apostita.—Huloet.

Bynd bundels to-geder to be I-brent,

Bynd spousehreckers with awouters,

And ranegates with raueners.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 212, l. 63.

Is there any renogat among us fer as ye knaue,

Or ony that pervertyth the pepil wyth gay
eloquens alon?

Coventry Mysteries, p. 384 (Shaks. Soc.).

I wyll not playe the runagate and go enerywhere, but I retourne agayne to my father.—Udal's Erasmus, John, fol. 88b.

Ever since he fell from heaven he hath lived like Cain, which cannot rest in a place, but is a runagate over the earth, from door to door, from man to man, begging for sins as the starved soul begs for bread.—H. Smith, Sermons, p. 486 (1657).

Hence, hence, ye slave! dissemble not thy
state,

But henceforth be a turne-coate runnagate.

Marston, Satyres, I. (vol. iii. p. 217).

My Lord Will-he-will was turned a very rebel and rungate.—Bunyan, Holy War, ch. iii.

We take you to be some vagabond runagate crew.—Id. ch. iv.

A kitchin Co is called an ydle runagate Boy.—The Fraternitie of Vacabondes, 1575.

In Sussex, runagate is still in use for a tramp or vagabond (L. J. Jennings, Field Paths and Green Lanes, p. 45).

RUN COUNTER. Sir John Stoddart thought that this expression was a corruption of rencounter, Fr. rencontre (Philosophy of Language, p. 178), but it may be doubted whether he was correct.

Shakespeare speaks of "a hound that runs counter and yet draws dry-foot well."—Com. of Errors, iv. 2.

RUNNABLE, a Norfolk word meaning glib, loquacious, is no doubt a corruption of the old word renable, misunderstood as if a derivative of renne, to run, while it is really a contraction of the word reasonable.

Of tonge she was trew and renable.
Ywaine and Gawaine, l. 208.

A "renabelle tonge," occurs in Myrc's Duties of a Parish Priest; renably, in Chaucer, Preres Tale, l. 211. Resonable, in Vision of Piers the Plowman, Pars I. l. 176, Text C, is renable in Text B (see Skeat, Notes, in loc.).

Hast þou also powde I-be
Of any vertu þat god 3af þe? . . .
Or for þow hast a renabelle tonge,
Or for thy body is fayr and long.

Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests, l. 1122 (E.E.T.S.).

The gift whereof [of prayer] he may be truly said to have, not that hath the most rennible tongue; for prayer is not so much a matter of the lips as of the heart.—Bp. Hall, Works, vol. vii. p. 487, ed. Pratt.

[The editor in his Glossary explains rennible as running, voluble.]

RUSH, Friar Rush, a famous personage in old popular romances, was a certain "divell" who found his way into a certain ill-regulated house of religious men "to maintaine them the longer in their ungracious living." See The Historie of Frier Rush: How He came to a House of Religion to seeke service, And being entertained by the Priour, was first made Under Cooke. Being full of pleasant mirth and delight for Young People, 1620. He is styled Broder russche in a Low German version (about 16th century), Frater Rauschius, in B. Seidelius, Paræmice Ethicæ, 1589, Des Teufels russiger Bruder in Grimm's

Marchen, ii. 84 [Thoms' Early Eng. Prose Romances, vol. i. p. 253, seq.]. Rush here is no doubt a corruption of Ger. rausch, q. d. "Brother Topsy." See also Nares, s.v. and Rouse above.

RUSSET-FEES, a street mountebank's attempt at ratafia, ratafia.

They [wafers] goes at the bottom of the russetfees cake.—Mayhew, London Labour and the London Poor, vol. iii. p. 113.

Ratafia is (not from rectifié, rectified spirit, as Kettner, but) for 'raq-tafia, Malay araq + táfia, rum-arrack, the arrack or spirit called tafia (Skeat).

RUSTY, in the colloquial phrase "to turn rusty," used of a person who becomes stubborn, perverse, surly, churlish, or disobliging, probably from the idea of no longer running smoothly, but grating harshly like a key in a lock that wants oiling, is in all probability a corruption of resty, Fr. restif, stubborn, that will not go forward (of a horse), from Fr. rester, to stop, stand still, Lat. restare.

In the Cleveland dialect a restive horse is said to reist, to take reist, to be reisted (Atkinson). Rusty (stubborn): reist: resty, restive: Fr. rester, to hold back:: Rusty (rancid): reast: resty, reasty: Fr. rester, to stand too long, be over-kept. Wright gives rusty=restive (Dict. of Prov. and Obsolete English), and so Akerman's Wiltshire Glossary. "Rust, to be restive or stubborn."—Patterson, Antrim and Down Glossary.

On the second day, his brown horse, Orator, took rust, ran out of the course, and was distanced.—Colman, The Gentleman, No. 5 [F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 251].

Old Iron, why so rusty? will you never leave your innuendoes.—The Guardian, No. 160.

In cart or car thou never reestit.
Burns, The Auld Farmer to his Auld Mare, Maggie (p. 54, Globe ed.).

Rustynes of synne is cawse of these wawys,
Alas! in this flood this werd xal be lorn.

Coventry Mysteries, p. 47 (Shaks. Soc.).

The yeomen ushers of devotion, where the master is too resty or too rich to say his own prayers, or to bless his own table.—Milton, Iconoclastes, c. xxiv.

Restive, or resty, drawing back instead of going forward, as some horses do.—Phillips, New World of Words [Trench, Sel. Glossary].

Indeed the Skirmish at Martial's Elm . . . fought 1642, made much Noise in men's eares; . . . and is remembered the more, because conceived first to break the Peace of this Nation, long restive and rusty in ease and quiet.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 293.

RUSTY, as applied to bacon in the sense of rancid, with an imagined reference, perhaps, to the yellowish rust colour it then assumes, seems originally and properly to have been reasty (Tusser) or resty; that which has been spoiled by over-keeping being said to be reezed (Hall, Marston).

Rusty Bacon, rotten Poore John,
And stinking Anchovaes we sell.

Sir W. Davenant, Works, 1678, fol. p. 337.

Relant, musty, fusty, resty, reasie, dankish, unsavoury.—Cotgrave.

I reast, I waxé ill of taste, as bacon.—Palsgrave, 1530.

Reeste, as flesche (resty). Rancidus.

Reestyn, as flesche, Ranceo.—Prompt. Parv. ab. 1440.

To seche so ferre a lytill bakon flyk

Which bath long hanggid, resty and tow.
Poem (ab. 1460), Reliquiæ Antiquæ, vol. ii. p. 29.

A-reste, or resty as flesche (al. areestyd, areest or reestyd), Rancidus.—Prompt. Parv.

To do away Restyng of Venisone.—Forme of Cury, p. 111.

For to save venysone from restyng.—Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 33.

Holderness reeasty, Cleveland reesty, rancid, reeze, to become so. The origin, perhaps, is Fr. rester.

What academick starved satyrist

Would gnaw rez'd bacon, or, with ink-black fast,

Would tosse each muck-heap for some out-cast scraps

Of balfe-dang bones, to stop his yawning chaps?

Marston, Scourge of Villanie, 1597, sat. iii.
(Works, ed. Halliwell, p. 259).

Or once a week, perhaps for novelty,
Reez'd bacon sords shall feast his family.

Bp. Hall, Satires, b. iv. sat. 2, p. 81
(ed. Singer).

RYE-MOUSE, a name for the bat in Wiltshire and Gloucestershire, is no doubt a corruption of rere-mouse, an old name for the vespertilio, A. Sax. hrere-mus, from hreran (agitare, sc. alas). See RAW-MOUSE.

S.

SABOTH, a very common mis-spelling formerly of Sabbath, from a confusion with the "Lord God of Sabaoth," i.e.

of Hosts, in the Te Deum (Heb. te-bâôth, armies).

At a Quarter Sessions held in Devonshire in July, 1595, it is declared that church or parish ales, May games, &c., lead "to the great profanation of the Lord's Saboth."—A. H. A. Hamilton, Quarter Sessions, p. 28.

The best, bathe of the Town and University . . . resorted verie frequentlie to the Collage everie Sabothe.—J. Melvill, Diary, 1586, p. 254.

Alvayes the brethren present thocht him to be ane rogh ridder, and ordayned him, for the brack of the Saboth, to mak his repentance, and pey four merkis penalty.—Presbytery Book of Strathbogie, 1642, p. 28 (Spalding Club).

And zealously to keepe the Sabbaths rest,
His meat for that day, on the eu'n was drest.

Harington, Epigrams, bk. i. 20.

Mr. Grove says of this word Sabaoth :—

It is too often considered to be a synonym of, or to have some connexion with Sabbath, and to express the idea of rest. And this not only popularly, but in some of our most classical writers. Thus Spenser, Faery Queen, [VII.] Canto viii. 2 :—

"But thenceforth all shall rest eternally
With Him that is the God of Suboath hight;
O that great Sabaoth God, grant me that Sabaoth's sight."

And Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 24 :—

" . . . Sacred and inspired Divinity, the Sabaoth and port of all men's labours and peregrinations."

And Johnson, in the first edition of whose Dictionary (1755) Sahaath and Sabbath are treated as the same word. And Walter Scott, Ivanhoe, i. ch. 11 (1st ed.) :—

"A week, aye the space between two Sabaoths."

But this connexion is quite fictitious. The two words are not only entirely different, but have nothing in common.—Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, iii. 1064.

SACK, or Sherris sacke, the drink so frequently mentioned in old English writers, was a dry Spanish wine, especially sherry (vide Nares, Glossary, s.v.), and is a corruption of the Spanish Xeres seco, Fr. vin sec (Dut. sek), into Sherry sack. Bp. Percy found the form seck in an old account book, and it is still, I believe, called seco in Spain. Formerly it was conceived to have been wine strained through a sack, like Hypocras. Cf. "Sackt wine or wine strained through a bag: hippocras."—Nomenclator (in Wright, Prov. Dict.). Isidore of Seville actually gives sacca- tum as a liquor (or light wine) made by passing water and the dregs of wine through a sack (Ducange, s.v.). Douce (Illustrations of Shakspeare, p. 257) quotes from Guthrie's Tour through the Crimea a statement that the keeping of wine in goat-skin sacks "is a practice so common in Spain, as to give the name of sack to a species of sweet wine once highly prized in Great Britain."

But one much better versed in "Spanish affairs" tells us that—

Sherris sack, the term used by Falstaff, no mean authority in this matter, is the precise seco de Xerez, the term by which the wine is known to this day in its own country; the epithet seco or dry . . . being used in contradistinction to the sweet malvoisies and muscadels, which are also made of the same grape.—Ford, Gatherings from Spain, p. 150.

Wyne sect, an old Scotch corruption of Fr. vin sec, is quoted by Jamieson.

Get my lorde a cup of secke to comfort his spirites.—Ponet, Treatise of Politike Power, 1556.

Ha, gentle Doctor, now I see your meaning, Sack will not leave one leane, 'twill leave him leaning.

Harington, Epigrams, bk. ii. 79.

SACKBUT, a bass trumpet like a trombone, is Sp. sacabuche (as if a tube that can be drawn out, from sacar, to draw out), corrupted from the Latin sambuca (Ascham spells it sambuke), Greek sambúkê, Heb. sabka.

The sambuca, however, was a stringed instrument, like a lyre, often of a triangular form, and derived its name seemingly from being made of elderwood, Lat. sabucus, sambucus. Compare Latin boxus, (1) boxwood, (2) a flute.

Vid. Kitto, Pictorial Bible, on Dan. iii. 10; Chappell, History of Music, vol. i. p. 255; Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-Book, s.v. Sabka was the original Semitic name which the Greeks, adopting the instrument, pronounced sambúkê (Pusey on Daniel, p. 24).

Such strange mad musick doe they play vpon their Sacke-buttes.—T. Decker, Seven Deadly Sins of London, 1606, p. 27 (ed. Arber).

Sylvester spells it sagbut.

From a trumpet Winde hath longer life
Or from a Sagbut, then from Flute or Flie.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 128 (1621).

Shawms, Sag-butts, Citrons, Viols, Cornets, Flutes. Id. p. 301.

SAINT, a corrupt orthography of the name of the old game called cent (because one hundred points won), quoted by Nares from an old play:—

Husband, shall we play at saint?

It is not saint, but cent, taken from hundreds.
Dumb Knight, O. Pl. iv. 483 (Nares).

SAINTFOIN, } old names for the lu-
ST. FOIN, } cerne, are corrupt SAINCT-FOIN, } spellings of the word sainfoin, from Fr. sain, wholesome, and foin, hay, Lat. sanum foenum. All these names appear to have arisen from a misunderstanding of the other name medica, i.e. the Median plant, as if it meant medical or curative (Prior).

SAINTS' BELL, a corrupt form of sanctus-bell, sometimes called saunce-bell, sancte-bell, or sacring-bell; which was "A small bell used in the Roman Catholic Church to call attention to the more solemn parts of the service of the mass, as at the conclusion of the ordinary, when the words 'Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus, Deus Sabaoth' are pronounced by the priest, and on the elevation of the host and chalice after consecration."—Parker, Glossary of Architecture.

Whene'er the old exchange of profit rings,
Her silver saints-bell of uncertain gains;
My merchant-soul can stretch both legs and wings,

How I can run, and take unwearied pains!

Quarles, Emblems, iv. 3.

Thou shalt bee constrained to goe to the chiefe beame of thy benefice, . . . and with a trice trusse vp thy life in the string of thy sancebelle.—Nash, Pierce Penilese, p. 46
(Shaks. Soc.), 1592.

SALAD, Fr. salade, an old name for a species of light helmet formerly worn, also spelt salet, sallet, and celate (Nares). See Sir S. D. Scott, British Army, vol. i. p. 198.

Sallet, Fr. celate, is from Sp. celada, It. celata, Lat. celata (sc. cassis), en-chased (Littré).

Salade, ne spere, ne gard-brace, ne page.

Chaucer, Dreme, l. 1555.

But for a sallet, my brain-pan had been cleft with a crow's-bill.—Shakespeare, 2 Hen.
VI. iv. 10.

He dyd on hym hys bryganders set with gylt nayle, and his salet and gylte spores.—
Fabyan, fol. p. 404.

Then for the neither [nether] part he hath high shoone and then hee must haue a buckler to keepe of his enemies strokes: then he must haue a sallet wherewith his head may be saued.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 198 verso.

SALAD OIL, it appears, meant formerly not the refined oil to which we now attach the name, but a coarse description used in polishing sallets or helmets. A correspondent of The Gentleman's Magazine, writing in the year 1774 (Sept.), says:—

People are very apt to imagine that this sort of oil is named from its being used in mixing sallads for eating, as if the true way of writing it was sallad-oil; but the oil used in cookery was always of a better and sweeter sort than that rank stuff called sallet-oil. The truth is, the sallet was the headpiece in the times that defensive armour was so much in use, and sallet-oil was that sort of oil which was used for the cleaning and brightening it and the rest of the armour.

So with the word train oil. There are many, probably, who imagine that it has something to do with railway trains—perhaps with the lubricating of their wheels—whereas it bore that name long before trains were thought of. See TRAIN-OIL.

SALARY, the common name of celery in the Holderness dialect (E. Yorkshire) and among the peasantry of Ireland.

SALMON, "the great and inviolable oath" of the Scottish gipsies (Sir W. Scott), is probably a corruption of Fr. serment (from Lat. sacramentum), which it closely resembles in sound (F. H. Groome).

She swore by the salmon, if we did the kinchin no harm, she would never tell how the gauger got in.—Guy Mannering, ch. xxxiv.

They've taken the sacrament [= oath] to speak the truth.—F. H. Groome, In Gipsy Tents, p. 32.

SALMON-BRICKS. This curious term for bricks not burnt enough, used in Norfolk and Suffolk (Old Country and Farming Words, E. D. S. p. 157), with an imagined reference, perhaps, to their pinkish hue, is for sammen or sammy, half-baked. So sam-sodden is half-boiled; and in E. Cornwall a "zam oven" is one half-heated, "a door a zam" is half closed. See SAND-BLIND.

SALSIFY, a popular name for the plant trapogon porrifolius, Fr. salsifis, has no connexion, as its appearance would suggest, with Lat. salsus, salty, but is a corruption of Lat. solsequium, "the sun-follower."

SALT, used by Shakespeare in the sense of wanton, lecherous, and still applied to dogs, is apparently a misunderstanding of Lat. salax, Fr. salace, ready to leap, from salio, to jump or leap, as if a derivative of sel, salt.

All the charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan lip.

Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 1.

Yet, I protest, it is no salt desire
Of seeing countries . . . hath brought me out.

B. Jonson, The Fox, ii. 1.

Gifts will he sent, and letters which,
Are the expression of that itch,
And salt which frets thy suters.

Herrick, Hesperides, p. 186.

SALT-CELLAR. Cellar here is a corruption of seller, old Eng. salere, Fr. salière, a receptacle for salt, Lat. salarium (vas), from sal, salt. Thus salt-cellar is a "salt-vessel for salt."

With a gyld salere,

Basyn and ewere,

Watyr of everose clere,

They wesche ryth thare.

Sir Degrevant, l. 1392, Thornton

Romances, p. 235.

When Prester John is serued at his table, there is no salt at all set one in any salt seller as in other places, but a loafe of Bread is cut crosse, and then two kniues are layde across vpon the loafe.—E. Webbe, Trauuailes, 1590, p. 25 (ed. Arber).

The salte also touche nat in his salere,
Withe nokyns mete, but lay it honestly,
On youre Trenchoure, for that is curtesy.

The Babees Book, p. 7, l. 161 (E.E.T.S.)

SALTIER, in Shakespeare an intentional corruption of satyr, with some reference perhaps to Lat. saltare, to dance, sal, a bound (B. Jonson), Lat. saltus. "A dance of twelve Satyrs," is announced with the words—

They have made themselves all men of hair, they call themselves Saltiers, and they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols.—The Winter's Tale,
iv. 4, l. 335.

SALVE, to anoint, bears a deceptive resemblance to Lat. salvus, sound, well, salvare, to save, salvere, to be well, but is really akin to Goth. salbōm, Ger. salben, Gk. ἀ-λεῖψ-ό, Lat. de-lib-uo, Erse laib, mire, mud, "slob," Sansk. lip, to anoint.

SAMBO, the ordinary nickname for a negro, often mistaken as a pet name formed from Sam, Samuel, just as Chloe is almost a generic name for a female nigger, is really borrowed from his Spanish appellation zambo, originally meaning bandy-legged, from Lat. scambus, bow-legged, Greek skambós. A connexion was sometimes imagined perhaps with Uncle Sam, a popular name for the United States.

It is worth noting that Sambo's favourite instrument, the banjo, essentially modern and vulgar as it may seem, is also, like his name, of Greek origin. It has undergone a considerable metamorphosis in its transition through the following forms,—banjore (Miss Edgeworth), bandore (Stowe, Heywood), pandore (Drayton), Sp. bandurria, It. pandora, pandura, Lat. pandura, a species of guitar supposed to have been invented by Pan, Greek pandoura (apparently from pán, all, and doura, wood). Hence also Fr. mandore, old Fr. mandole, It. mandola, Eng. mandoline.

There shalbe one Teacher of Musick and to play one the Lute, the Bandora, and Cytterne.—Queene Elizabethes Achademy, Book of Precedence, p. 7 (E. E. T. S.).

What's her hair? 'faith to Bandora wires there's not the like simile.—Heywood, Fair Maid of Exchange, act i. sc. 3.

Some learn'd eares prefer'd it have before Both Orpharyon, Violl, Lute, Bandore.

Sir J. Harrington, Epigrams, bk. iv. 91.

SAND-BLIND, partially blind, stands for sam-blind, half-blind, from O. Eng. sám, half; so sám-cwíc (half-alive), sam-deá (Robert of Gloucester), sam-ope (half open), Cornw. sam-sodden (half boiled), Lat. semi, Gk. ἡμι.

I have been sand-blind from my infancy.
Baumont and Fletcher, Love's Cure, ii. 1.

Shakespeare puns upon the word:—
More than sand-blind, high gravell blind.
Merchant of Venice, ii. 2.

Berlué, Purblind, made sand-blind.—Cotgrave.

Luscus, he that is sand-blynde.—Wright's Vocubularies (15th cent.), p. 225.

Which [Fuzz-balls] being troden vpon do breath forth a most thinne and fine powder, like vnto smoke, very noisome and hurtfull vnto the eies, causing a kinde of blindnes, which is called Poor-blinde, or Sand-blinde.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1385.

The Sayntes haue not so sharpe eyes to see downe from heauen: they be purre blinde, and sande blynde, they cannot see so farre.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 123 verso.

He is in more danger to be sand-blind than a goldsmith. Therefore some call him avidum, à non videndo.—T. Adams, The Soul's Sickness (Works, i. 483).

SAND-FINE, stated in the Proceedings of the Philological Society, vol. v. p. 139, to be the name of a kind of grass, as if so called from the soil in which it grows, is a corruption of Fr. saint-foin. See SAINT-FOIN.

SANDEVER, the scoria of glass, which seems at first sight to suggest the word sand, is a corruption of the French sain de verre, the seam or fat of glass.

The matter whereof glasses are made . . . while it is made red hot in the fornace, and is melted, becoming liquide and fit to worke vpon, doth yeeld as it were a fat floating aloft. This is commonly called Axungia vitri; in English Saudeuer; in French Suin de voirre.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 429.

Soufre sour, & sauindyner, & oþer such mony.
Alliterative Poems, p. 66, l. 1036.

SANG-FROID, coolness, unconcern, borrowed from the French, literally, "cool blood" (compare "in cold blood" = deliberately, wilfully), is, according to M. Scheler, probably a corruption of the ancient expression sens froid, cool judgment, like sens rassis, sober judgment (Dictionnaire d'Etymologie Française, s.v. Sang.)

SANG REAL, "The Real Blood," a name very frequently given to the sacred dish which was used at the Last Supper, in which Joseph of Arimathæa was fabled to have collected the Holy Blood flowing from the five wounds, and which finally, in mediæval romance, became the mystic object of quest to the Knights of the Round Table.

Sangreal, Part of Christ's most precious blood wandering about the world invisible (to all but chaste eies) and working many wonders, and wonderful cures; if we may credit the most foolish, and fabulous History of King Arthur.—Cotgrave.

The following is the colophon of Caxton's edition of the said history, 1485, as "reduced into Englysshe by syr Thomas Malory:—

Thus endeth this noble and joyous booke, entytled La Mort Dathur. Notwythstandyng it treateth of the byrth, lyf, and actes of the sayd Kynge Arthur, and of his noble knyghtes of the rounde table, theyr marveyll-lous enquestes and adventures, thachyevyng of the sang real, etc.

In the edition of 1634 the word appears as Sanggreall.

Right so there came by the holy vessell of the Sanggreall with all maner of sweetnesse and savour, but they could not readily see who beare that holy vessell; but Sir Percivale had a glimmering of that vessell, and of the maiden that beare it, for hee was a perfect cleane maide. . . . "I wot well," said Sir Ector, "what it is; it is an holy vessell that is borne by a maiden, and therein is a part of the holy blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, blessed might hee bee."—History of King Arthur, vol. iii. p. 27 (ed. Wright).

King Pelbam lay so many yeeres sore wounded and might never be whole till Galahad the baut prince healed him in the quest of the Sangreal, for in that place was part of the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ that Joseph of Arimathy brought into this land.—Malory, Historie of King Arthur, 1634, vol. i. p. 83 (ed. Wright).

The holy Grale, that is, the real blood of our Saviour. . . . Many of King Arthur's Knights are in the same book represented as adventuring in quest, or in search of the Sangreal or Sanguis Realis.—Thos. Warton, Observations on The Fairy Queen, vol. i. p. 49 (ed. 1807).

The subject of one of these great romances is a search after the cup which held the real blood of Christ; and this history of the Sangreal forms a series of romances.—I. Disraeli, Amenities of Literature, vol. i. p. 92.

Sang-real was probably in some instances understood as the blood-royal, which is indeed the proper meaning of the compound in old French, sank real in old English. For instance, Skelton says of Wolsey, that

He came of the sank royall that was cast out of a bochers stall.

The Romaynes where so ryche holdene,
As of the realeste blode that reynede in erthe.
There come in at the fyrste course, he-for the Kynge seluene,
Bareheuedys that ware bryghte, burnyste
with syluer,
Alle with taghte mene and towne in togers
full ryche,

Of saunke reale in suyte, sixty at ones.
Morte Arthure, ll. 174-179 (E. E. T. S. ed.).

There is not the smallest doubt, however, that this sang-real is a mere misunderstanding of the old form san greal or seynt graal, where san or seynt (otherwise spelt seint, sainct, or saint) is holy, and greal or graal (otherwise spelt graile, grayle, old Span. grial, Prov. grasal, grazal), derived from Low

Lat. gradella and grasella, diminutives of gradale, grasale, denotes a bowl or plate. Gradella itself is a corrupted form of cratella, a diminutive of Lat. crater, Greek kratēr, a mixing-bowl. (Compare O. Eng. grayle, a service-book, from Low Lat. gradale; O. Fr. paelle, from Lat. patella; Fr. grille, from Lat. craticula, crates.)

See a full note by Prof. Skeat in Joseph of Arimathæa (E. E. T. S. ed.); p. xxxvi; Seynt Graal, ed. Furnivall; Baring-Gould, Curious Myths of Middle Ages, p. 604 seq.; Athencæum, April, 9, 1870, p. 481; Didron, Christian Iconography, vol. i. p. 270.

Là aussi nous dist estre un flasque de sang gréal, chose divine et à pen de gens connue.—Rabelais, Œuvres (ed. Barré), p. 453.

Which table round, Joseph of Arimathie,
For brother made of the saint grol only.

Harding, Chronicle of Eng. Kings, 1543.
Hither came Joseph of Arimathy,
Who brought with the holy grayle, they say,
And preacht the truth; but since it greatly did decay.

Spenser, Faerie Queen, II. x. 53.
And down the long beam stole the Holy Graill,
Rose-red with beatings in it, as if alive.
Tennyson, The Holy Graill.

SASH, the wood-work of a window which retains the panes, formerly spelt chasse, is the French châsse, or châssis, a frame or setting in which the glass is enchased or encased, the same word as Fr. caisse, It. cassa, Lat. capsa, a case.

The tumid bladder bounds at every kick, bursts the withstanding casements, the chassys,
Lanterns, and all the brittle vitrious ware.

Shaftesbury, Characteristicks, vol. iii. p. 14 (1749).

The primitive Casements modell'd were no doubt,
By that thro' which the Pigeon was thrust out,
Where now whole Sashes were but one great Eye,
T' examine and admire thy Beauties by.

Cotton, Wonders of the Peake, Poems,
p. 345.

SATYRE, a frequent old spelling of satire, a poem rebuking vice, Lat. satira, satura (from satur, full), (1) a dish full of different ingredients, a medley or olio, (2) a poem on different subjects, a satire. The word was confounded (e.g. by Wedgwood) with saty- rus, a Greek satyric drama, in which satyrs (Lat. satyri, Greek satúroi) were introduced. Ben Jonson uses satyrs to translate satyri, satyric dramas, Horace, De Arte Poet. l. 235:—

Nor I, when I write satyrs, will so love
Plain phrase, my Pisos, as alone t' approve Mere reigning words. Works, p. 733.

When Lynus thinks that he and I are friends,
Then all his Poems unto me he sends,
His Disticks, *Satyr*s, Sonnets, and Exameters.
Harington, Epigrams, bk. i. 67.

Satyre, a satyr, an Invective or vice-rebuking Pnem.—Cotgrave.

The said ancient Poets vsed for that purpose, three kinds of poems reprehensiuē, to wit, the Satyre, the Comedie, and the Tragedie: and the first and most bitter inuēctiue against vice and vicious men, was the Satyre: which to th' intent their bitterness should breede none ill will, either to the Poets, or to the recitours . . . and besides to make their admonitions and reproofs seeme grauer and of more efficacie, they made wise as if the gods of the wonds, whom they called *Satyr*s or Siluanes, should appeare and recite those verses of rebuke, whereas in deede they were but disguised persons vnder the shape of *Satyr*s.—G. Putterham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (1589), p. 46 (ed. Arber).

Adjourn not this virtue until that temper when Cato could lend out his wife, and impotent *satyr*s write satires upon lust.—Sir T. Browne, Works, vol. iii. p. 89 (ed. Bohn).

SAUCE-ALONE, a popular name for the erysimum alliaria, Ger. sasskraut. Dr. Prior thinks it likely that the latter part of the compound represents It. aghione, Fr. alloignon, garlick. So the word would mean "garlick-sauce" in reference to its strong alliaceous odour.

Sauce alone is joined with Garlick in name, not because it is like vnto it in forme, but in smell: for if it be brused or stamped it smelleth altogether like Garlicke.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 650.

SAUCY, pert, impudent,—sauce, impertinence,—said to be a corruption of Gipsy sass, impudence, also bold, forward, which has been connected with Hindu sahas, bold (C. Leland, Eng. Gypsies, p. 118), just as Gipsy bar, a garden, is from Pers. bahar.

A late English Romanist hath penned a sawcy lecture of modern Romes Christian Divinity . . . unto his late Sovereign Lord.—Thos. Jackson, Works, vol. iii. p. 975 (1673).

The word was, no doubt, understood as meaning highly-seasoned, tart, peppery, and derived from Fr. sauce, which is a derivative of Lat. salsus (1, salted, 2, witty), just as the French say, Il a été bien saucé, he has been sharply reprimanded (Gattel).

Shakespeare uses to sauce for to rate or scold, and it may be questioned whether the latter is not, after all, the true origin. I think it is.

I'll make them pay; I'll sauce them.
Merry Wives of Windsor, act iv. sc. 3.

I'll sauce her with bitter words.

As You Like It, act iii. sc. 5.

Ineptus is as much in English, in my phantasia, as sauic or malapert.—Stanihurst, Description of Ireland, p. 13, in Holinshed, vol. i. (1587).

We haue a common saying amongst us when we see a fellow sturdy, loftie, and proud, men say, this is a sauicy fellow: signifying him to be a highmynded fellow, whiche taketh more upon him then he 'ought to doe, or his estate requireth: which thyng no doubt is naught and ill: for euery one ought to behaue himselfe according unto his calling and estate: but he that will be a Christian man, that intendeth to come to heauen, must be a sauisic fellow: he must be well pounded [= pickled, corned] with the sause of affliction, not with prouidnesse and stoutnesse.—[Margin] Hee that will come to Heaven must be sauised.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 182.

Why did Christ vouchsafe to give him [Satan] any answer at all; whereas he might . . . have punished him for his sauicnesse?—Bp. Andrewes, On the Temptation, 1642, p. 18.

SAVE, an old name for the plant sage (Wright), is an Anglicized form of Lat. salvia, sage, so named from its salvatory or curative properties (Lat. salvare). It was a maxim of the school of Saliternum, "Cur morietur homo cui salvia crescit in horto." Sage, Fr. saugie (Ger. salbei), is the same word.

The wholesome Saugie.

Spenser, Muipotmos, l. 188.

And fermacies of herbes, and eke save,
They dronken, for they wold hir lives haue.
Choucer, Cant. Tales, l. 2717.

SAVING-TREE, the Scottish name of the plant juniperus sabina, or sabine. It is believed to have the power of producing abortion, and "takes its name from this, as being able to save a young woman from shame."—Gall. Enc. (Jamieson). The word is, of course, only a corrupt form of savine, Lat. sabina (sc. herba), the plant from the Sabine country.

Gerarde says that, "The leaues of Sauine boiled in wine and drunke . . . expelleth the dead childe and killeth the quicke."—Herball, p. 1194 (1597).

In Yorkshire the plant is called kill-bastard.

And when I look
To gather fruit, find nothing but the savin-tree,

Too frequent in nuunes' orchards and there planted,

By all conjecture, to destroy fruit rather.

Middleton, Game of Chess, Cl. h.

Those dangerous plants called cover-shame, alias savin, and other anti-conceptive weeds and poisons.—Reply to Ladies and Bachelors Petition (Harl. Misc. iv. 440).

The King has gane to the Abbey garden,

And pu'd the savin tree,

To scale the babe frae Marie's heart,

But the thing it wadna be.

Marie Hamilton, Roberts, Legendary Ballads, p. 34.

For the womb, mugwort, pennyroyall, fetherfew, savine.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, II. iv. 1, 3.

SAVOURY, Fr. savorée, It. savoreggia, is the Latin satureia, assimilated to "savour," Lat. sapor (Prior).

Sauorie hath the taste of Time.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 461.

Other corrupt forms are It. santoreggia, and Fr. sarriette (from sarrie, cf. Prov. sadreja).

per in cast persoley, ysope, saveray
pat smalle is haked by any way.

Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 44.

SAXON, the word for the seaton (i.e. sacristan) of a church in the Holderness dialect, E. Yorkshire.

SCALD, in the expression a "scald head," i.e. scurfy, having an eruption, tetter, or ringworm in the head, has nothing to do with scald, to remove the hair with boiling water (old Fr. eschalder, Lat. ex-cal(i)dare), but stands for old Eng. scalded, having a scall or tetter (Coles). The original meaning was probably bald.

Compare Icel. skalti, a bald-head, Dan. skaldet, bald, Swed. skallot, bald, Gael. sgall, baldness. Perhaps identical with A. Sax. calu, "callow," Ger. kahl, Lat. calvus, bald (Ferguson, Cumberland Glossary, s.v.), Sansk. khalati, from which words an initial s seems to have disappeared.

With skalded browes blak, and piled herd.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 629.

Scallyd, Glabrosus; Scalle, Glabra.—Prompt. Parv.

pe dyaue, pe doumbe, pe ssornede, pe scallede.—Ayenbite of Inwytt, p. 224.

Lowsy and sculde, and pyllid lyke as apes,
With scantly a rag for to couer theyr shapes,
The Hye Way to the Spyttel Hous, l. 114.

In his beued he has pe scall, pe scab ouer-gas his bodi all.

Cursor Mundi, l. 11820 (ed. Morris).

Adam Scrivener, if ever it thee befall,

Boece or Troilus for to write new,

Under thy long locks thou maist haue the scall.

Chaucer to his Scrivener.

In that manner, it cureth the scals in the head.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. ii. 277.

It is a dry scall, even a leprosy upon the head or beard.—A. V. Levit. xiii. 30.

A fomentation . . . cureth the leprosie, scurfe, and dandruffe, running vlcers and scals.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. ii. 155.

Her crafty head was altogether bald,

And, as in hate of honorable eld,

Was overgrowne with scurfe and filthy scald.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, l. viii. 47.

SCANTLING, an Anglicized form of Fr. échantillon, eschantillon, a small cantle or corner-piece, Sp. escantillon.

SCARABEE, a beetle in Beaumont and Fletcher, as if a certain kind of bee, is Drayton's scarabie, the Latin scarabæus.

The kingly Bird, that beares Joves thunder-clap,

One day did scorne the simple Scarabee.

Spenser, Visions of the Worlds Vanitie, iv.

SCARF-SKIN, the outward skin which seems to defend the body (Bailey), is supposed by Wedgwood to be another form of scurf-skin, akin to Bav. schurffen, scherpffen, to scratch, Ger. schorfen. It is probably merely the skin which scarfs up (cf. Macbeth, iii. 1), swathes, or covers as with a bandage or scarf, the underlying cuticle. Compare the following:—

The first containing or inuesting part is the Cuticle, which the Greekes call Epidermis, because it runs upon the surface of the true skin. . . . A moist vapour of the Blood foaming or frothing up, and driuen forth by the strength of the heat is condensed or thickened by the coldnesse of the Aire, and turued into a Cuticle, or Scarfe-skin, for so I thinke we may properly call it.—H. Croke, Description of the Body of Man, 1631, p. 71.

Vnder this Curtaine or Skarfe, lyeth the true and genuine Skin which the Greekes call δέρμας, because it may be excoriated or flayed off.—Id. p. 72.

SCAVENGER'S DAUGHTER, an old instrument of torture (H. Ainsworth, Tower of London), is said to have been so called because invented by Sir William Skevington, Lieutenant of the Tower, temp. Henry VIII.

SCENT, a corrupt spelling of the older and more correct form sent, Fr. sentir, Lat. sentire, to perceive by the senses, from a false analogy to words like scene, sceptre, scion, science, where the c is an organic part of the structure.

There is no more reason why we should write scent for sent than scense for sense. Similarly site and situation were formerly incorrectly spelt scite and situation.

Sylvester observes that a seasoned butt—

Retains long after all the wine is spent Within it selfe the liquors lively sent.

Du Bartas, p. 170 (1621).

We have but sent the Sent, but tasted the Taste, nor dare we touch the Touch, lest it distract us with it selfe in a new peregrination.—S. Purchas, Microcosmus, 1619, p. 113.

He that has a strong faction against him, hunts upon a cold sent.—Sir John Suckling, Aglaurá (1648), p. 6.

So sure and swiftly, through his perfect sent,
And passing speede, that shortly he her overhent.

Spenser, F. Queene, III. vii. 23.

SCHOOL, a shoal of fish, A. Sax. scôlu, or scôlu, a band or troop, perhaps ultimately the same word as school (Lat. schola), as if a following, retinue, or band of disciples (Ettmüller, p. 693).

In the Beowulf, l. 1317, hand-scale = an attendant troop. Compare Dut. school, an aggregate of fishes, birds, &c.

“Shoal” formerly was not exclusively used of fishes; Sylvester speaks of “shoals of birds” (Du Bartas, p. 133, 1621).

Sculle of a fysshe, examen.—Prompt. Parvolorum.

A scoole of fysshe, examen.—Horman, Vulgaria, 1519.

A knavish skull of hoyes and girdles.

Warner's Albions England, 1592.

This straunge and merueylous fysh folowynge after the scooles of mackrell came rushinge in to the fisher-mens netts.—Ancient Ballads and Broadsides, p. 145 (ed. Lilly).

There they fly or die, like scaled sculls,
Before the belching whale.

Shakespeare, Tro. and Cressida, v. 4, 22.

A great shoal, or as they call it, a scool of pilchards came with the tide directly out of sea into the harbour.—Defoe, Tour thro' G. Britain, i. 391 [Davis].

We were aware of a school of whales wallowing and spouting in the golden flood of the sun's light.—Rae, Land of the N. Wind, p. 154 (1875).

Sculk, a troop or herd, is apparently a diminutive form of the same word, as in the following, which I take from Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary.

Scrawling serpents with sculcks of poysoned adders.—Stanyhurst, Conceites, p. 138.

We say a flight of doves or swallows, a bevy of quails, a herd of deer, or wrens, or cranes, a skulk of foxes, or a building of rooks.—W. Irving, Sketch Book (Christmas Day).

SCHORBUCK, a word used by Holland in his translation of Pliny in the sense of scurvy:—

Some thinke this disease [viz. Stomacace] to bee Schorbuck or Scorbutie, which raineth yet at this day.—Naturall History, fol. 1634, tom. ii. p. 213.

It is the German scharbock, scurvy, which is apparently a corruption of scorbut, Low Lat. scorbutus (perhaps for scorbutus, connected with scrob-is, scrof-a, with reference to its disfigurement of the skin), as if compounded of bock and score, shear, scharben, &c.

But compare Dut. scheur-buyck, Iceel. skyr-bjúgr, scurvy (as if from skyr, curd, and bjúgr, a soft tumour), which Cleasby thinks may be from A. Sax. sceorfa, Eng. scurf.

There is a disease (saith Olaus magnus in his history of the northern regions) haunting the campos, which vexeth them there that are besieged and pinned vp; and it seemeth to come by eating of salt meates which is increased and cherished with the colde vapours of the stone wals. The Germaines call this disease (as we have said) Scorbuck.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 325.

SCIENCE, an old orthography of scion, Fr. scion, for secion, from Lat. sectio(n), a cutting (Scheler). Compare “Whereof I take this that you call love to be a sect or scion.”—Othello, i. 3, 337.

Surculus . . . A graffe or science.—Nomenclator, 1585.

Rejection, A young shoot, or sience, that springs from the root, or stock, of a tree.—Cotgrave.

A sience savours of the plant it is put into.—Richard Sibbes, Works (ed. Nichol), vol. vi. p. 528.

James i. 4, comparing divine truths to a sunce engrafted into a plant.—Id. vol. iv. p. 368.

SCISSORS, so spelt as if from Lat. scissors, cutters, from scissus, scindo, to cut, is a corrupted form of cizers, cizars (Cotgrave, s.v. Forcette), Fr. ciseau, O. Fr. cisel, Sp. cincel, Portg. sizel, Low Lat. cisellus, all probably from Lat. sicilicula, a small cutting instrument, from sicilis, our "sickle," sica, a dagger, near akin to secare, to cut. Similarly chisel, which is ultimately the same word, was anciently spelt scheselle (Wright's Vocabularies, p. 276).

Looke if my cizers, the pincers, the penknife, the knife to close letters, with the bodkin, the ear-picker, and the seale be in the case.—French Garden for Eng. Ladies . . . to walke in, 1621 [Braund, ii. 131].

Forcette, A cizar, a small paire of sheers.—Cotgrave.

Ciseler, to carve or grave with a chisel; also to clip, or cut, with sizars.—Id.

SCOLOPS, a cookery term for small slices of beef, veal, &c., is a corruption of collops (Kettner, Book of the Table, p. 420), Swed. kalops, slices of meat. So Fr. escalopes, supposed to be slices of meat rolled up in the shape of a scallop shell, en escalope (Scheler).

SCOREL, an old Eng. word for the squirrel (i.e. Lat. sciurus, Gk. skiouros, "The tail-shade"), as if connected with A. Sax. scéram, to cut, gnaw, or score, with its sharp teeth.

Scorel, or squerel, beest, Esperiolus, scurellus, cirogrillus.—Prompt. Parvulorum, ab. 1440.

SCORN. This word owes its present form to the French écorner, escorner, to disgrace or disfigure, also in an older sense, as we find it given in Cotgrave, "to unhorn, dishorn, or deprive of horns; to cut, pull, or take from one a thing which is (or he thinks is) an ornament or grace unto him; to lop or shred off the boughs of trees." The past participle escorné, unhorned, means also, he tells us, "melancholike, out of heart, out of countenance, ashamed to shew himself, as a Deere is, when he hath cast his head; . . . and hence, defaced, ruined, scorned, disgraced."

Florio, in his New World of Words,

1611, gives a like account of the Italian scornare, "to unhorne, to dishorne. Also to scorn, to mock, to vilifie, to shame."

Both these words appear to come from a Low Latin form, discornare or excornare, to render ex-cornis, or destitute of horns. And inasmuch as to deprive an animal of its horns is to deprive it of its chief glory and ornament, to render it quite defenceless and despicable, the word by an easy transition might become applicable to any species of contemptuous and dishonourable treatment, e.g., "Sothli Erroude with his oost dispiside him and scornede him clothid with a whit cloth" (Wycliffe, Luke xxiii. 11).

However, it is almost certain that the English word (and possibly the French and Italian words) has been accommodated to a false derivation, as we see by comparing O. H. Ger. skërno, derision, skernôn, to mock, It. scherno, schernire, old Fr. escharnir, to mock (Vie de Seint Auban, ed. Atkinson, l. 233), all of which (as Wedgwood suggests) may have meant originally to bespatter with dirt, or despise as dross, Dan. skarn, Prov. Eng. sharn, scarn, A. Sax. scéarn, Icel. skarn, dung, dirt. (Compare Greek skôr, whence scoria, dross, scum, Sansk. çakrt for sakart, dung, and probably Lat. scurra, a mocker, a buffoon, whence our "scurrilous;" cf. Lat. coprea (= Gr. koprias, a filthy jester.)

So in Greek we find skubalkizo, to regard as dung, to have a contempt for, to despise; and St. Paul expresses his "scorn" for all that the world could give (Phil. iii. 8) by saying that he counted it but dung or dross (skúbala).

In Robert Manning's Meditacyums on the Soper of Our Lorde (ab. 1315), he says Herod—

With a whyte clope y[n] skorne hym he clad (l. 500).

And a few lines afterwards—

With wete and eke dung þey hym defoule (l. 507).

Compare Banffshire sharn, to be daub with dung, and shard [dung], a term of contempt, "He's a caperneck-tious shard o' a mannie" (Gregor).

Scorn is said to occur for the first time in the Old English Homilies of the 12th century, 2nd series (ed. Morris), and next in the Ormulum, about 1200 (Oiphant, Old and Mid. Eng. p. 198).

In the Ancren Riwele (about 1225) we find "Me to beot his cheoken, & spette him a schorn," where another MS. has scharne, p. 106 (Camden Soc.), i.e. "They struck his cheeks and spat on him in scorn." In Manning's Hand-lyng Synne (p. 100), about 1303, it translates escharnir.

[He] makeþ his bisemers and his scornes, and þetwors is: bisemereþ and scorneþ þe gnode men.—Ayenbite of Inwyrt (1340) p. 22.

In schorn he was i.-wonden in purpil palle wede.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 223, l. 16 (E. E. T. S.).

[In scorn he was wound in clothing of purple pall.]

Drayton uses the word felicitously in the line—

I scorne all earthly dung-bred scarabies.
Idea, Sonnet 31.

The same word is North Eng. sharn, shard, cow-dung, whence corruptly share in cow-share.

This fellow tumbled and fell into a cow-share.—Copley, Wits, Fits, and Fancies, 1614—Compare SHORN-BUD.

SCOURSE, } an old word for to change
SCORSE, } (Bailey) or barter, still used in many of the provincial dialects, e.g. Somerset scorse, squocce, Dorset scwoce.

And there another, that would needsly scorse A costly Jewel for a hobby-horse.

Drayton, The Moon Calf.

Scorse is frequently used by Spenser, Jonson, and Harington (see Nares, s.v.), and scourser as a substantive. The older and more correct form, however, is corse, or coyse (Catholicon), Scot. cose; and an exchanger or dealer is courser or corser, e.g. "Corsoure of horse, Mango?" (Prompt. Parv.).

He can horse you as well as all the corsers in the towne, courtiers de chevaulz.—Palsgrave (1530).

Courser here is the same word as Fr. courtier, a broker or dealer, O. Fr. couratier, It. curatiere, one who has the charge or care (Lat. cura) of any business, a factor (Diez). The forms scourse, scourser, seem to have originated in this way. The most usual expressions in which the word occurred were horse-courser and horse-coursing, and these being to the ear undistinguishable from horse-scourser, horse-scoursing, were frequently spelt in this incorrect form; e.g. "Courratier de chevaue, A horse-scourser."—Cotgrave. The simple word afterwards retained the initial s which it had acquired when compounded, e.g.

Courratage, Brokage, scoursing, horse-scoursing.—Cotgrave.

Come, Tommy, let es scorce.—Devonshire Courtship, p. 38.

This catel gat he wit okering,
And led al his lif in corring.

Eng. Metrical Homilies, 14th cent.
p. 139 (ed. Small).

What horse-courser! you are well met.

Marlowe, History of Dr. Faustus, 1604 (Works, p. 96, ed. Dyce).

An horse scorse, he that buyeth horses and putteth them away againe by chopping and changing.—Nomenclator, 1585.

Will you scourse with him? you are in Smithfield, you may fit yourself with a fine easy goiug street-nag.—B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iii. 1.

A hedlam looke, shag haire, and staring eyes,
Horse-courser's tongue for oths and damned lyes.

S. Rowlands, The Four Knaves (1611),
p. 107 (Percy Soc.).

I scorsed away a pair of diamond ear-rings for these few onions, with a lady down at the cottage yonder.—W. D. Parish, Sussex Glossary, p. 99.

The resemblance of O. Fr. cosson, It. cozzone, a horse-dealer, Lat. cocio, is probably accidental.

SCRAPE, in the colloquial phrase "to get into a scrape," i.e. into a difficulty, to be embroiled in something that perplexes one or in involves disagreeable consequences, awaits a satisfactory solution. I have little doubt that it is the same word as Prov. Eng. scrap or scrape, meaning a trap, snare, or decoy for birds.

Scrap, A place baited with chaff, corn, &c., to catch sparrows.—Wright, Provincial Dictionary.

In defect whereof [i.e. fish, mice, and frogs], making a scrape for sparrows and small birds, the bitour made shift to maintain herself upon them.—Sir Thos. Browne, Works, vol. iii. p. 317 (ed. Bohn).

Mr. Wilkin's note on this passage is "A scrape, or scrap, is a term used in Norfolk for a quantity of chaff, mixed with grain, frequently laid as a decoy to attract small birds, for the purpose of shooting or netting them." So Worlidge, Dict. Rusticum, 1681.

A scrap, and scrap-nets, A place where small birds are fed, and lured to scrap about, till a net falls and catches them.—Norfolk Words, Transactions of Philolog. Soc. 1855, p. 36.

The original meaning was no doubt a snare, as we see by comparing Icelandic skreppa, a mouse-trap, from skreppa, to slip.

I beg you'll do me the honour to write, otherwise you draw me in, instead of Mr. — drawing you into a scrape.—Sterne, Letters, xii. Aug. 3, 1760.

SCRATCH, in the expression "Old Scratch," a vulgar name for the Devil, Cleveland Aud-scrat, is doubtless the same word as O. Norse skratti, Swed. dialect skratten, the devil, skrat, skrate, O. H. Ger. scrato, M. H. Ger. schräte, schrätze, a fiend, a ghost.

SCRATCH-CRADLE, a name sometimes given to the game of CAT'S-CRADLE (which see), is a corruption of cratch-cradle, the crèche or manger cradle.

SCRATCHINGS, a word used in the Midland counties for what is left behind when lard is melted and strained, the cellular substance of fat, seems to be the same word as A. Sax. screadung, a fragment, scrap, something left of food, used in the Northumbrian Gospels for the "fragments that remained."—S. Matt. xiv. 20; screadian, to shred, cut, M. H. Ger. skreitan, "screed," A. Sax. sceard. Compare scrunchings, scraps, leavings of food (Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary).

She'd take a big cullender to strain her lard wi', and then wonder as the scratchings run through.—G. Eliot, Adam Bede, ch. xviii.

SCREEN, a frame for sifting gravel, corn, &c. (Bailey), seems to be a distinct word from screen, a shelter (old Eng. scrine, Fr. escrain, a "shrine"). It is probably identical with Ger. schranne, a railing or grate, a trellis-work enclosure (O. H. Ger. scranna), whence also O. Fr. escraigne, a wattled hut, Mod. Fr. écraigne. There is no connexion with It. sgranare, to sever grain from the chaff, or with Lat. secerere, to separate.

SCREW, a sorry horse, is in Provincial German schroes, connected with schró, schrá, schra, lean, meagre, in the Westphalian dialect (Archiv der Neueren Sprachen, LV. ii. p. 157), rough coated, in bad condition, and Low Dutch schrae, poor, bare, Ger. schroff, rugged, rough. The original meaning is probably to be seen in Icelandic skrá, (1) dry shrivelled skin, (2) a scroll of parchment.

A curious verbal parallel is exhibited in Fr. écrouelles, the king's evil, = It. scrofole, and écrou, a screw, = It. scrofolà. See CRUELS.

"Why, where the dence did you get that beast from, Cardonnel?" . . . "Never saw such a screw in your stables."—Miss Braddon, Dead Men's Shoes, ch. xxx.

SCROOGE, } a vulgar word meaning
SCROUGE, } to crush, squeeze, press, or crowd (e.g. Evans, Leicester Glossary, E. D. S., Cleveland skrudge), made familiar in the language of literature by Dickens's Ebenezer Scrooge, popularly associated with screw (so Lye, Richardson;—it is pronounced screwge). Compare screwdy, to crowd.—Bedford (Wright).

It is the old Eng. scruze, to squeeze or crush (Spenser, Hall), and seems to have no native origin. It is perhaps from Sp. estrujar, to press, strain, or thrust, which is derived from Lat. extorcularē, to press out (as wine from grapes), torculum, a press, from torqueo, to twist.

Then atweene her lilly handes twaine
Into his wound the juice thereof did scruze.
Spenser, J. Queene, III. v. 33.

"Ah, Oi wull," shay says, scravgin up,
"moy Obadoyer!"—A. B. Evans, Leicestershire Glossary, p. 35 (E. D. S.).

I recollect I was goin' down from Augusty some two years ago in the old stage that Sammy Tompkins druv, and we had one of the she-crittars aboard—and she was a scronger I tell ye.—Orpheus C. Kerr Papers (1862), p. 230.

De people all did stare and scrounge
As thick as any fair.

Tom Cladpole's Journey to Lunnun, p. 26 (Sussex dialect).

Kit had hit a man on the head with the handkerchief of applea for "screwding" his parents with unnecessary violence.—Dickens, Old Curiosity Shop, ch. xxxix.

SCRUBBY-GRASS, a name for scurvy-grass in the Craven dialect, of which word it is a corruption. Another perversion is presented by the Icelandic skarfu-kál (skarfu-gras), as if from skarfr, a cormorant (Shetland scarf).

SCULLERY, so spelt as if it denoted the place where dishes (O. Eng. sculls, Fr. escuelles) were washed, is a corruption of old Eng. squeler, squyler, or squillary, a wash-house (compare squeler, squyler, squiller, a washer or scullion), from old Eng. swyll, swyle, or squill, to wash or rinse, near akin to Dan. skylle, to rinse or wash, Swed. skólja, Icel. skola, to wash, skol, washing water.

Ful wel kan ich dishes swilen.
Havelok, l. 919.

SEA-BOARD, the coast-line, would be more properly sea-bord, i.e. the sea-border, from Fr. bord, A. Sax. and Icel. bord, an edge.

SEA-CONNY, an Anglo-Indian name for a steersman, as if denoting one that is conny or canny about the sea, is the Hindustani sukkāni, a steersman, from sukkān, the helm.

Seapoy is an occasional American spelling of sepoy (spahi),—c.g. in India, by F. R. Feudge, 1880,—which is from Hind. sipahi, a soldier, one that uses sip, a bow and arrow.

SEAL, as applied in poetry to the closing up the eyes or eyelids of another, is a mis-spelling sometimes found of the old verb to seel, used to denote the cruel process of passing a thread through the eyelids of a hawk, in order to render her tractable by producing a temporary blindness. The analogous expression of "eyelids sealed," or closed in sleep, no doubt favoured the mis-spelling, but it is strange to find it in the pages of learned philologists like Mr. Wedgwood, Etymolog. Dict. vol. i, p. 314, 1859; compare also Thine eye unhooded and unsealed.

Abp. Trench, The Falcon.

'Tis sorrow builds the shining ladder up, . . .
Whereon our firm feet planting, nearer God,
The spirit climbs, and hath it's eyes unsealed.
Lowell, On the Death of a Friend's Child.

O that the pinions of a clipping dove,
Would cut my passage through the empty air;
Mine eyes being seal'd, how would I mount above
The reach of danger and forgotten care.
Quarles, Emblems, iv. 2.

Seal not thy Eyes up from the poor, but give Proportion to their Merits, and thy Purse.
H. Vaughan, Siler Scintillans, 1650.

I'll seal my eyes up, and to thy commands Submit my wilde heart, and restrain my hands.

Id. The Hidden Treasure.

In time of service seal up both thine eies.
Geo. Herbert, The Church-Porch.

It is derived from Fr. siller, a less correct form of ciller, "to seele or sow up the eie-lids" (Cotgrave), from oil, Lat. cilium, the eye-lid. Compare It. cigliare, to seel a bird's eyes (Florio), old Eng. to ensile.

But when we in our viciousness grow hard (O mercy on't!) the wise gods seel our eyes.
Antony and Cleop. iii. 11.

She that, so young, could give out such a seeming
To seel her father's eyes up close as oak.
Othello, iii. 3.

So God empal'd our Grandsires lively look,
Through all his bones a deadly chilness strook,
Siel'd-up his sparkling eyes with Iron bands.
Sylvester, Du Burtas, p. 137 (1621).

Come, seeling night,
Skarf up the tender eye of pitiful day.
Macbeth, iii. 1.

Sleep sieles his eyes vp with a gloomy clowd.
Sylvester, p. 318 (1621).

SEARCH, for cerch or cherch (Fr. chercher, Lat. circare, to go round about, go hither and thither), assimilated probably to the verb to searce, to examine by sifting, to choose out, to separate from what is worthless, to cleanse; compare

But before yt they were plunged in the ryner
To searche theyr bodyes fayre & clere
Therof they had good sporte.
Cock Lovelles Bote, ll. 67-69.

Cernere, to sift, to search, also to chuse or cull out.—Florio.

Tumiser, to searce, to houlte, to pass or strain through a searce.—Cotgrave.
Sasser, to sift, searce.—Id.

Let vs search deepe and trie our better parts.
Sir John Beaumont, Miserable State of Man.

Efter heging light of God, and sersing the Scripture by conference and reasoning discussit . . . all with a voice, in a consent and unitie of mynd, determines and concludes.—J. Melville, Diary, 1579, p. 78.

SEAR-CLOTH, a corrupt spelling of cere-cloth, i.e. a cloth prepared with wax, Lat. cera, as if derived from sear, dry.

Linen, hesmeared with gums, in the manner of searcloth.—Bacon, Sylva Sylvarum, Works (1803), vol. ix. p. 29.

SECT, Lat. secta, so spelt as if a derivative of sectus (seco), and meaning a section or part cut off from a larger body, e.g. the Church Catholic, just as schism means a rent, is really for secuta (from sequor), a following, sequela, or party attached to the same leader. Cf. sector, to follow, for sec(u)tor. Secta in classical Latin is frequently used as a cognate accusative after sequor; in Mid. Latin it denotes a series of things following one another in due order, a suit of clothes, a suit at law. Hence also a set of china, &c. See SET.

He berip þe sygne of pouerte,
And in þat secte ouresauyour ·sauede al mankynde.

Langland, Vision of Piers the Plowman,
Pass. xvii. l. 99, Text C.

And sitthe in oure secte · as bit semed, þow
deydest,
On a fryday, in forme of man, feledest oure
sorwe.

Id. Pass. viii. l. 130.

[Text B here has "in oure sute."]

SEERPAW, a name given in an English document, 1715, to a certain Oriental garment worn at Delhi (J. T. Wheeler, Early Records of British India, p. 171), is a corrupted form of sir-o-pa, lit. cap-à-pie, a garment covering the person from head to foot.

SELVAGE, a corrupt spelling (from false analogy to words like bandage, cordage, plumage) of selvedge, i.e. self-edge, that part of a material which makes an edge or border of its self without being hemmed (compare Dut. self-ende, self-egge, self-kant.—Wedgwood). See SMALLAGE.

þo ouer seluage he schalle replye
As towelz hit were fayrest in hye;
Browers he schalle cast þer-oupon, þat þe lorde schulle cense his fyngers [on].

The Babees Book, p. 321, l. 664
(E. E. T. S.).

SEPT, a clan (so spelt as if derived from Lat. septus, fenced off, enclosed), is a corruption of sect (Lat. secta, from secuta), a "tail" or following, which is also used for a clan. Compare Prov. cepte, a sect (Wedgwood).

There is a Sept of the Gerrots in Ireland, and they seeme forsooth by threatening kinnesse and kindred of the true Giraldins, to fetch their petit degrees from their ancestors. —Stanikurst, Description of Ireland, p. 33, in Holinshed's Chron. vol. i. 1587.

Every head of every Sept, and every chief of every kinred or familie, should be answerable and bound to bring forth every one of that kinred or sept under hym at all times to be justified.—Spenser, View of Present State of Ireland, p. 624 (Globe ed.).

SERAGLIO, It. serraglio, "a place shut in, locked, or inclosed as a cloister . . . also used for the great Turk's chief court or household" (Florio), an Italianized form of the Turkish Sarayli, a woman belonging to the Sultan's palace, saray, a palace, a mansion, as if from servare, to bolt or lock in, sera, a bolt (Wedgwood), like Sp. barras, a prison, orig. bars. Cf. Hind. sarâe, an inn, Eng. caravan-serai.

I passed by the Piazza Judea, where their Seraglio begins; for being environ'd with walls, they are lock'd up every night.—Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 15, 1645.

SERENADE, Fr. sérénade, It. serenata, Provençal serena, properly an evening song; cf. serain, Sp. sereno, evening dew. There was probably a confusion between the words derived from serenus and serus, e.g. sera (sc. hora), It. and Prov. sera, evening, Fr. soir.

With "serenade" compare Provençal alba, morning-song, Fr. aubade.

SERVICE-TREE, a corruption of the Latin cervisia, beer, which formerly was brewed from its berries (Prior). It might well, however, be only a perversion of its Latin name sorbus.

Crato utterly forbids all manner of fruits, as peares, apples, plumns, cherries, strawberries, nuts, medlers, serves, etc.—Burton, Democritus to Reader, p. 69.

SET, a number of things or persons similar or suited to each other, a connected series or sequence,—as "a set of pearls," "a set of teeth," "a set of studs," "a set of tea-things," "a set of quadrilles," "a set of thieves,"—is generally understood to mean a number set, i.e. placed or arranged, together, a fixed or regular combination. It is really, I have no manner of doubt, the same word as suit, a regular sequence or series, as "a suit of clothes," "a suit of cards" (old Eng. sywete), Fr. suite (old Fr. suitte, seute), a following, sequel, or succession, a connected series or set, a retinue, or train of followers

(compare "a suite of rooms," i.e. a set), It. setta, a sect, a faction or companie of one opinion (Florio), all from Lat. secta (for secuta, following), a sect, a band or troop. Jamieson gives sete as an old Scot. word for a legal suit or prosecution. See SECT. In the following sect refers to a crowd of beggars:—

Ah, Jesu mercy! what man could coniect
The mysery of suche a wretched sect.
The Hye Way to the Spyttel House,
l. 276.

We'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones.

Shakespeare, K. Lear, v. 3, 17.

That is, political sets or parties.

If haply he the sect pursues,
That read and comment upon news;
He takes up their mysterious face;
He drinks his coffee without lace.

Prior, The Chameleon.

As sure a card as ever won the set.
Titus Andronicus, iv. 1, 100.

He'll watch the horologe a double set,
If drink rock not his cradle.

Othello, ii. 3, 135.

I was there
From college . . . with others of our set.
Tennyson, Princess, Prologue, l. 8.

O wretched set of sparrows, one and all,
Who pipe of nothing but of sparrow-hawks!
Id. Geraint and Enid, l. 278.

SETTER, a slang term for sevenpence, is a corruption of the Italian sette (= Lat. septem).

Many of the cantwords of the London streets are of Italian origin, having been learned from the organ-grinders, image-carriers, &c., of that nationality, e.g. saltee, pence, = It. soldi, chinker saltee, fivepence, = cinque soldi.

It had rained kicks all day in lieu of saltees, and that is pennies.—Reade, Cloister and Hearth, ch. lv.

SETTLE, when used with the meaning to adjust or compose (a difference), to render quiet or clear, to defray an account, seems to be a distinct word from settle, a seat or setting, A. Sax. sētl, sētlung, a setting (from set, A. Sax. settian), and a corrupt form of old Eng. saetle, to appease or reconcile, to become calm, A. Sax. sahthian, sehtlian, to reconcile (Ettmüller, p. 622), from *sah*t, reconciled, *sah*t, peace, Icel. sátt, an agreement, concord (see Wedgwood, s.v.). Compare Swed. sakta (vb.), to abate, moderate, subside, (adj.) gentle, soft; Ger. sachte, soft, gentle.

When a sawele is saetled & sakred to dryztyng,
He holly haldes hit his & haue hit he wolde.
Alliterative Poems, p. 69, l. 1140.

Hit [the Ark] saetled on a softe day synkande to grounde.

Id. p. 49, l. 445.

I salle hym surelye ensure, that saghetlylle
salle we neuer,
Are we sadlye assemble by oure selfene ones.
Morte Arthure, l. 331 (E.E.T.S.).

Muche sor3e þenne satteled vpon segge Jonas.
Alliterative Poems, p. 100, l. 409.
[Much sorrow then settled upon the man
Jonah.]

Now lofe we, now hate, now saghtel [= reconciliation], now strife.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1470.

In the Cleveland dialect the old pronunciation and its old meaning of to satisfy (as well as to abate or subside) is still preserved, e.g. :—

Weel, it'll ha'e to be sae, Ah aims; but Ah's not sattled about 't [Well, it will have to be so, I suppose; but I am not satisfied].
—Atkinson, Glossary, s.v. Settle.

Corn's sottled a vast sen last market.—Id.
Mahnd an' git him to sattle 't [Mind and get him to receipt it, i.e. a bill].—Id.

In Banffshire to sattle is to reduce a person to peace or silence by a beating, a scolding, &c., and anything that silences a person is a sattler (i.e. a pacifier, a "settler").

I ga' 'im a sattler at the ootset.—Gregor,
Banff Glossary, p. 147.

þe comli quen of palerne · oft crist þonked, þat hade hire sent of his sond · so moche ioye
to haue,
& hade settled hire sorwe · so sone, þat was hug.

William of Palerne, l. 4562.

They [Northampton folk] have an odd phrase, not so usual in other places. They used to say when at cudgel play (such tame were far better than our wild battles) one gave his adversary such a sound blow as that he knew not whether to stand or to fall, that he settled him at a blow. . . . The relics and stump (my pen dares write no worse) of the long Parliament pretended they would settle the Church and State, but surely had they continued, it had been done in the dialect of Northamptonshire; they would so have settled us we should neither have knowu how to have stood, or on which side to have fallen.—T.
Fuller, Mixt Contemplations, xxvii. p. 44 (1660).

SETWALL, a popular name for the plant valerian, is a corruption of O.

Eng. setewale, zedualle, zeduar, from the Mid. Lat. zedoar (Prior).

Kanel and satewale.
Gy of Warwike.

Gyngyure, & sedewale, & þe gylofre.—Bædeker, Alteng. Dicht. p. 146, l. 40.

The form seatwell is quoted from an old Scotch MS. of the 14th century in Cosmos Innes, Scotland in the Mid. Ages, p. 237.

Zedoar, Fr. zédouaire, Sp. zedoario, Portg. zeduaria, are all derived from the Arab-Persian zedwār, or jedwar (Devic). A distinct corruption is It. zettovario.

He himself was swete as is the rote,
Of licoris, or any setewale.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 3207.

It hath beene had (and is to this day among the poore people of our northerne parts) in such veneration amongst them, that no brothes, pottage, or phisicall meates are worth anything, if Setwall were not at one end: whereupon some woman poet or other hath made these verses—

They that will haue their heale,
Must put Setwall in their keale.

Gerarde, Herbal, p. 919.

SHAFTMAN, an old word for a measure of extent, viz. from the top of the thumb when spread out to the other side of the palm, about six inches, is a corruption of O. Eng. schafftmonde (Morte Arthure), A. Sax. scaeft-mund, "spear-hand," from mund, a hand, or hand-breadth, prob. the breadth of the right hand. Bailey spells it shaftment, and so Cotgrave. In the Cleveland dialect shaftment is the circumference of the wrist.

The thrust mist her, and in a tree it strake,
And enterd in the same a shaftman deepe.

Hurington, Transl. of Ariosto, xxxvi. 56.

Couldier, A dwarf, . . . one that's but a shaftment high.—Cotgrave.

The same wound was a shaftmon broad, and had cut atwo many veines and sinewes.—Malory, Historie of K. Arthur, 1634, vol. i. p. 274.

Lette youre bowe haue good byg bend, a shaftemente and ii. fyngers at the leat.—Ascham, Toxophilus, p. 112 (ed. Arber).

SHAGEBUSHE, the name of a musical instrument mentioned in the following passage quoted by Nares from Nichol's Progresses:—

In which barge was shalines, shagebushes, and diuers other instruments of musicke which played continually.—Cor. of Anne B. p. 2.

is the Spanish sacabuche, a sackbut (q.v.).

May 3 (1495) To four shakbusses for their wages, £7.—Privy Parse Expenses of Henry VII.

SHAKEBUTT, an old mis-spelling of sackbut.

Then shalmes and shakebutts sounded in the ayre,

But shrilst of all, the trumpet of renowne.

G. Peele, Honor of the Order of the Garter, 1593.

SHAKES, in the slang and colloquial phrase "It is no great shakes," meaning it is nothing to boast of, not worth much, of inferior excellence (it occurs in Byron), has never, I believe, been satisfactorily explained.

It is probable that shakes here is identical with the provincial word shake, to brag (Wright), which must be of ancient usage, as we find "Schakare, or craker, or booste maker, Iactator, philocompus," in the Promptorium Parvulorum, about 1440. These words are near akin to Dan. skogger, noisy, roaring (in skogger-latter, roar of laughter, &c.), Icel. skak, skakr, a noise. For the change of meaning from "making a noise," to "boasting," compare crack, O. Eng. crake, (1) any loud noise, even a thunder-peal (so Shakespeare, cf. "crack of doom"), (2) a boast, a brag (cf. "a crack regiment," one to boast of); brag, (1) to make a loud noise (akin to bray, Lat. fragor), (2) to boast. Thus "no great shakes" would mean nothing to make a noise, or brag, about. Otherwise we may look for the origin in the provincial word shakes, a bargain (Wright), comparing Dan. skaklere, to peddle or huxter, Icel. skakka, to balance. Hotten asserts that in America "a fair shake" is "a good bargain" (Slang Dict. s.v.). These latter words seem to be cognate with A. Sax. scacan, Icel. skaka, to shake or wave (of the balance), just as weigh and wag are related.

Will Douglas, no great shakes at metre, did write these lines.—T. Carlyle, Cromwell's Letters, vol. ii. cvii. (note).

I saw mun stand on the poop, so plain as I see you, no great shakes of a man to look to nether; there's a sight better here to please me.—Kingsley, Westward Ho, ch. xxx.

He's nae great shake (i.e. he is of low character).—Gregor, Banff. Glossary.

SHAMBROGUE, a curious assimilation of shamrock to the word for the Irish accent.

I could easily observe . . . the Spanish myrtle, the English oak, the Scotch thistle, the Irish shambrogue.—Spectator, No. 455 (1712), vol. vi. p. 223 (ed. 1816).

SHAMEFACED and SHAMEFACEDNESS (A. V. 1 Tim. ii. 9) are modern corruptions of the good old English shamefast, shamefastness, A. Sax. sceam-fæst, sceam-fæstnes, i.e. fast or firm in modesty (comp. "sooth-fast," A. Sax. soð-fæst).

Sylvester presents a transitional form when he speaks of

Lust whose wanton flashes
A tender brest rak't-vp in shamefac't ashes.
Du Bartas, p. 20 (1621).

Wise, shamefast, and bringing forth goodly children.—North's Plutarch, Life of Lycurgus.

The following passage will show how naturally this perversion was likely to arise:—

There is no man so farre from brave and Courtly behaviour, as a blusher; those that have shamefast affections, those that have a divine touch and tincture of holinesse in their face.—Martin Day, Doomes-Day, 1636, p. 182.

Also wyymen in couenable abite, with schamfastnesse and sobirnesse. — Wycliffe, 1 Tim. ii. 9.

In this passage Tyndale has shamfastnes, the Geneva version shamefastnes, the A. V. 1611 shamefastnesse.

Schamefast sche was in maydenes schamefastnesse.

Chaucer, Doctor of Physic's Tale, 13470.

She is the fountaine of your modestee;
You shamfast are, but shamefastnes it selfe is shee.

Spenser, F. Queene, II. ix. 43.

In stede of the feruente desyre, which prooketh a chyld to be better than hys felowe, lette a man be as muche stirred vp with shamefastnes to be worse than all other.—Ascham, Toxophilus, p. 141 (ed. Arber).

Be a certean schamfastnes of a bashfull nature, quhilk he pat in me, [God] sa keipit me that I was nocht overcome nor miscaried be na woman.—J. Melville, Diary, 1579, p. 79.

The shamefac't birds with one wing faine to fly

Did hold their other fanne before their eye
For feare they should such filthinesse espie.

Fuller, Davids Heavie Punishment, st. 32.

SHAM-ROOT, a corrupt form of shamrock, Irish seamrog.

And for my cloathing in a mantle goe
And feed on Sham-roots, as the Irish doe.
Withers, Abuses Strip and Whipt, 1613, p. 71.

See also Crofton Croker's Ballads of Ireland, p. 35. Shamrotes occurs in Campion's Historie of Ireland, 1571 (Reprint, p. 25).

Taylor the Water Poet spells it shame-rags.

Master Oscabath [= Uisge beatha] the Irishman, and Master Shamrough his lackey.—Sharpham, The Fleire, 1610, act iii.

SHANKER, a sore or botch in the groin, &c. (Bailey), so spelt as if originally a sore on the shank or leg, is an Anglicized form of Fr. chancre, from Lat. cancer, a crab, apparently so called from its flesh-devouring malignity.

Helkiah Crooke, physician to James I., in his Practise of Chirurgery, 1631, says:—

The Cancer about all Tumors hath most need of the actual Cautery, . . . and because the fashion of a Crab doth represent the horrid forme of that Ulcer, whence also it hath his name; you haue here a Crab figured to make vnto you (as it were) a representation of a Cancer.—p. 6.

And thereupon the worthy old chirurgeon subjoins the effigy of the crustacean, claws and all complete, which must have been very helpful in their diagnostics to "the younger sort of the Barber-Chirurgians," for whom he wrote.

With gentlest touch, she next explores,
Her shankers, issues, running sores.
Swift, Young Nymph going to bed.

For the initial change, compare shanty, a wooden hut, from Fr. chantier, a pile of logs.

SHARK, a sharper, rogue, or cheat, as when a pettifogging attorney is termed a "landshark," is generally regarded as a figurative use of the word shark, the voracious sea-monster. It is really a slightly disguised form of Ger. schurke, a cheat or knave, Dutch schurk, "a shark, rascal" (Sewel, 1708), Dan. skurk. The radical idea seems to be scratching, scraping, or clutching, cf. Dut. schurken, to scratch (Wedgwood), schrok, a covetous fellow. Of the same origin are Fr. escroc, a swindler (Diez), It. scrocco, "a wilie shift namely for bellie-cheere," scroccare, "to shift shamelessly for victuals at other mens tables."—Florio.

To shark up and down, to go shifting and shuffling about.—Bailey, Dict. s.v.

Shark, a kind of Sea Wolf, the most ravenous of Fishes, which will chop a Man in two at a Bite: Whence it is commonly used for a sharpening Fellow, who lies upon the Catch.—Id.

The name of the fish, however, a distinct word, is from Lat. carcharus.

Then Citizens, were sharkt, and prey'd upon, In recompence of wrongs before time done To silly Countrimen.

G. Wither, Britains Remembrancer, 1628, p. 116.

Two hungry sharkes did travaille Pauls,
Untill their guts cride out,
And knew not how with both their wits,
To bring one meal about.

S. Rowlands, The Four Knaves (1611), p. 9 (Percy Soc.).

And carelesse knaves to spend their thrift:
And roaguish knaves to sharke and shift.

Id. p. 41.

But think not, gentle Madam, that I shark
Or cheat him in it.

May, The Old Couple, v. 1.

And in the steed of such good-fellow sprites,
We meet with Robin-bad-fellow a nights,
That enters houses secret in the darke,
And only comes to pilfer, steale and sharke.

S. Rowlands, The Four Knaves (1611), p. 115.

Pander, Gull and Whore,
The doting Father, Shark and many more
Thy scene represent unto the life.

E. Fraunces, Dedicatory Verses, Randolph's Works, p. 63 (ed. Hazlitt).

I will not have you henceforth sneak to taverns

And peep like fiddlers into gentlemen's rooms,

To shark for wine and radishes.

Randolph, The Jealous Lovers, act iii. sc. 5.

Some Orders of Mendicant Friars wander about and present themselves to the eyes of men, but say not a word for an Alms. . . . This is rather shorking than begging for benevolence.—Bp. Hackett, Century of Sermons, p. 560 (1675).

SHARPS, a name given to flour with the bran in it, with a supposed reference probably to the sharp silicious nature of the husky ingredient, is the same word as North Eng. shaps, oats without the grain, i.e. husks, Scot. shaups, husks, weak corn (shaupit, podded), and probably Icel. skálpr, a sheath, the hull or husk of corn being regarded as its sheath. See Ferguson, Cumberland Glossary, s.v.

Compare Prov. Dan. skalp, the pod or shell of peas, beans, &c.; and scavp, the Cleveland form of scalp. The r is intrusive as in treasure, partridge, pursey, hoarse, shrill, lark (= frolic), pimpernel, vagrant.

SHAVER, a slang term for a fellow, boy, or man, is from the Gipsy shavie, chavy, or chavo, a child or son. Vid. Simpson, Account of Gypsies, p. 334, and Smart in Philolog. Soc. Trans. p. 28, 1862-3.

To try the courage of so young a shaver.
Cranley, Amanda, 1635.

No one has ever given him credit for being a cunning shaver. (Be it here observed in a parenthesis that I suppose the word shaver in this so common expression to have been corrupted from shaveling, the old contemptuous word for a priest.)—Southey, The Doctor, ch. cliv.

And yet, wi' funny queer Sir John,

He was an unco' shaver,

For monie a day.

Burns, A Dream, p. 37 (Globe ed.).

We have a long way to go and the chaves [= children] are by themselves.—F. H. Groome, In Gipsy Tents, p. 81.

SHEAF, } the truckle or wheel of a
SHEAVE, } pulley, is properly the shive, slice, or disc of wood, on which the rope revolves; other forms of the word being Scot. schav, shave, Dut. schijve, Ger. scheibe, Dan. skive, Swed. skifwa, a slice.

SHED, in Water-shed, which is defined to be "a range of high land from which water is shed or made to flow in opposite directions" (Chambers, Etymology. Dictionary), is popularly regarded as the same word with shed, to spill, pour out, effuse (of liquids, e.g. tears, blood, &c.), A. Sax. sceddān, to pour out.

It is really a distinct word identical with Prov. and old Eng. shed, sced, to part or divide, shedding (sced), the division or parting of the hair, A. Sax. scēdān, Dan. skede, Dut. and Ger. scheiden, Goth. skaidan, all meaning to divide, sever, or separate (Diefenbach, ii. 229). Compare Lat. sci(n)do, Sansk. chhid, to cut (Benfey).

Water-shed (Ger. wasser-scheide) is therefore properly the parting of the waters, a ridge that makes rivers to flow this way and that.

The sonne to schede þe day fra þe nyght
And þe mone and þe sternes to tak þaire lyghte.

Religious Pieces (E.E.T.S.), p. 60, l. 45.

They hezn't shed tha' hair straight, bairn.
—Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 443.

This third chapter, which by the will of God we are entered upon, treateth in general of the mercy of God towards Nineveh, and sheddeth itself orderly into four parts.—Bp. John King, On Jonah (1594), p. 200 (ed. Grosart).

SHEER-THURSDAY, an old popular name for Maundy Thursday, the day before Good Friday. Other spellings were shere-, schere-, or schir-, Thursday.

Ande cause whi it is called Schir Thursday is this: for faders in olde dayes had in custome or vse for to scheer the heer that day . . . and to make them bonest withoute, forthe ageynes Estyrne Day (Hurl. MSS.). —Hampson, Mediæ Aevi Kalendarium, vol. i. p. 185.

Hit is also in Englis tong schere þursdoy for in owre elde fadur dayes men woldon þt day makon scheron hem honest & dode here hedes & clypon here hedes.—Mirk, Festival of Sermons (Hampson, ii. 351). See also Dyer, Brit. Pop. Customs, p. 145.

The word, however, has nothing to do with to shear, but is the old Eng. schir, pure, clean (Mod. Eng. sheer = utter, mere), as we see by comparing Icel. skír-dagr, skíri-þórsdagr, Maundy-Thursday, from skírr, pure, cleansed from guilt, skíra, to purify. It seems to mean the day when men went to confession and were absolved or cleansed from their sins (cf. Icel. skíra, to baptize). In the Lutheran Church it is called ablasstag, absolution day; Fr. Jevdy absolut, Sheer Thursday (Cotgrave). Similarly the first week of Lent used to be called "cleansing week," "chaste week," A. Sax. cyswuce, pure week.

A-non after schere þursday, Thow moste chawng þyn oyle also,
þat þey mowe be newed bo,
Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests,
p. 20, l. 642.

Lenton Stuff ys cum to the towne,
The clensynge weeke cums quicklye.

Old Ballad (see Marriage of Wit and Wisdom, p. 105, Shaks. Soc.).

The ancient Germans called Ash-Wednesday Schwertag, i.e. day of absolution (Hampson, ii. 358).

On Sher Thursday a man sholde do poll his here, and clyppe his berde, and a preest sholde shave his crowne, soo that there sholde nothyng be bytween God and hym; and thenae shryve theym, and make them clene within his soule as without.—Festival, fol. 31, quoted in Wordsworth, Eccles. Biography, vol. i. p. 296.

The same authority says it "is called sher thoursday for the people wolde that daye shere theyr hedes."

SHEET-ANCHOR, another form of shoot-anchor, which occurs in Udall's Roister Doister (cir. 1553), p. 11 (Arber reprint). In the Cleveland dialect shot-ice is sheet-ice (Atkinson).

Compare—

For a fistela or for a Canker,
Thys oyntment is even shot anker.
The Four P's (Dodsley, vol. i. p. 82).

For truely of all men he is my chief banker
Both for meate and money, and my chiefe
shootanker.

N. Udall, Roister Doister, i. 1 (p. 11, ed. Arber).

The cheefest hold and shoot-anchor, that godly Jonas found in the surges of distresse was to aduance both heart and hands to God alone.—Houard, Defensative against Poyson of Supposed Prophecies, 1620, p. 8.

SHELDAPPLE, an old name for the chaffinch (Nomenclator, 1585), it has been suggested is for sheld-alpe (Wedgwood), alpe being an old word for a bullfinch (? or any finch), and sheld, as in sheldrake, meaning variegated, parti-coloured (Ray). Icel. skjöldungr, the sheldrake, is so called, says Cleasby, from the shield-(Icel. skjöldr)-like band across his breast. Skjöldr is also used for shield-like spots on cattle, &c. Compare Ger. schildfink and schildern, to paint or mark. The form shell-apple is also given (Mahn in Webster); Cumberland shillapple (Ferguson).

SHELL, with the meaning to remove the husk of leguminous vegetables, e.g. "to shell peas," as if to remove their shell, has only an indirect connexion with this latter word, the older form being to sheal, or shale, or scale, Prov. Eng. shell and skill, to hull oats, A. Sax. scelian, to decorticate, to separate the skin, near akin to Dan. skille, Icel. skilja, to part or divide. Cf. Goth. skilja, a butcher, Greek skullō, to flay. Scale and shell are of similar origin. W. Cornwall "to shale peas" (M. A. Courtney).

Sheal, to uncover, as the shealing of beaus, pease, &c.

Sheal, to shel or sheal milk is to curdle it, or separate the parts.—Kennett, Parochial Antiquities, 1695 (E. D. Soc. ed.).

Fore Venus, Fauue, I have bene shaling of peascods.—Murston, The Fwne, act iv.

Escailer des noix, to pill, or shale, Walnuts.—Cotgrave.

Schale notys, and oþer schelle frute (schalyn or schelle frute, scaly n or shilly n nottis). Enochio.

Schyllyn owte of coddys, Exsiliquo.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Take smalle notes, schale not kurnele, As þou dose of almonds, fayre and wele.

Liber Cure Cocorum (1440), p. 25.

I saw him carry a wind-mell, Under a walnote shale.

Chaucer, House of Fume, bk. iii. l. 191.

Faggiolata, a tittle tattle or flim flam tale without rime or reason, head or foot, as women tell when they shale peason.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

Speak, unshale him quick.—Webster, The Malcontent, act i. sc. 1.

SHILLING SEEDS, a prov. word for the husks of oats (Antrim and Down, Paterson), is from shell or shale, to remove the husk. See SHELL.

SHIP-WRECK seems to have been formed out of the older form ship-break, old Eng. shipbreche (Wycliffe), A. Sax. ship-gebroc, the b being merged and lost in the preceding labial; just as we find exult, ævert, expatiate, for exsult, æxsert, æspatiate, the s being swallowed up by the preceding sibilant. Compare Lat. navfragium. The old phrase was "to break a ship" (Lat. navem frangere), and no verb to wreck seems to exist in old English.

Scripþreking he suffurd thrise [al. lec. ship-brekinge].

Cursor Mundi (14th cent.), vol. iv. l. 20973 (E.E.T.S. ed.).

Mr. Oliphant connects wreck with Scandinavian rek, something drifted on shore (Early and Mid. English, p. 211).

A close parallel is seen in O. Eng. bregirdle, a waist-band, used by Wycliffe (Jer. xiii. 1, 2, 4, 6), which is for breke-girdle, breeches-girdle, breke being the old form of breeches, cf. "Breche or breke, Bracce" (Prompt. Parv.).

His sad wreak,

Both of Ulysses' ship and me,

His own head 'scaping scarce the pain.

Chapman, Odysseys, bk. xii. Argument.

And must I here my shipwrecked arts bemoan?
Dryden, Poems, p. 157, l. 198
(Globe ed.).

To tempt the second hazard of a wrack.

Id. Aurengzebe, act iv. sc. 1.

SHOES, ANOTHER PAIR OF, a slang phrase for something altogether different, is said to be a corruption of the French phrase, C'est autre chose, chose being perhaps confounded with chaussure, chausser, &c.

"That, sir," replied Mr. Wegg, cheering up bravely, "is quite another pair of shoes."—Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, vol. i. p. 142.

We'll show 'em another pair of shoes than that, Pip, won't us?—Dickens, Great Expectations, ch. xl.

SHOE-GOOSE is the transformation that the word siya-gosh, i.e. black-ear, the Persian name of the lynx, undergoes in A. Hamilton's E. Indies, i. 125 (vid. Yule, Marco Polo, i. 354).

SHOOT, or shute, a spout through which the water falls from the roof of a house, is corrupted from Fr. chute, a fall.

SHORE, a vulgar corruption of sewer. Hear, ye foul speakers, that pronounce the air

Of stews and shores, I will inform you where, &c.

Lovelace, To Fletcher Revived, 1649.

Thus weary of my life, at length
I yielded up my vital strength,
Within a ditch of loathsome scent,
Where carrion dogs do much frequent:
The which now since my dying day,
Is Shoreditch call'd, as writers say.

Ballad of June Shore, ll. 129-134.

On this Bp. Percy observes that "it had this name long before, being so called from its being a common sewer (vulgarly shore) or drain."—Child's Eng. and Scottish Ballads, vol. vii. p. 199.

Shoreditch, however, more probably owes its appellation to the Soredich family, who possessed the manor from an early date.—Jesse, London, vol. ii. p. 419.

Stow, writing in 1603, spells it Sewers ditch, Sowers ditch, and Soersditch, and notes that it was called Soerditch "more than four hundred yeares since as I can prove by record."

From Holywell in the high street is a continual building of tenements to Sewers ditch.—Survey of London, p. 158 (ed. Thoms).

Bird. Dear heart, what a foul sink of sins runs here!

Mis. Flo. In sooth, it is the common shore of lewdness.

Randolph, The Muse's Looking-Glass,
act ii. sc. 3.

Then leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,
Where common shores a sullen murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from Holborn's fatal steep.

Gay, Trivia, bk. ii. l. 171-174.

Cloacina was a goddess whose image Tatius (a king of the Sabines) found in the common shore.—Note to Id. l. 115.

The origin of the word sewer has not been elucidated. It may be demonstrated, I think, that it is identical with Fr. évier, a sink. That word is not (as Scheler gives it) a direct derivative of old Fr. éve, water, but the mod. form of esvier, a sinke, or channel, to void water by (Cotgrave), old Fr. seuwière, esevière, a channel, conduit, or drain; Liège patois saiweu, a sink that discharges water, from saiwé, to discharge water; Wallons de Mons saiwé, to drain, make trenches (see Sigart, Glossaire, s.v.). All these words are compounded of s or es from Lat. ex, and old Fr. aiwe, eve, eave, eaue (derived through a form aigue from Lat. aqua), Liège aiwe, water. Hence Mod. Fr. eau, and our ever, a water-jug (old Fr. aiguière). Thus sewer is literally ex-ewer (Lat. ex-aquaria), a pourer out of water, like égout, a sewer, from ex and gutta, a pourer out of drops.

Compare Languedoc ayguer, a gutter, sink, or sewer, from aygue, water (Cotgrave); old Fr. esseuoière, a common sinke or Sewer, also eauièr, a gutter for the voiding of foul water (Id.).

Sewer was popularly regarded as meaning "that which sews," hence the Prov. Eng. verb to sew, to drain land, carry off water (Worlidge, Dict. Rusticum, 1681; Parish, Sussex Glossary). Compare Suffolk sew, to ooze out or exude. For the form of the word compare sample for example, square from Lat. ex-quadra, spend for expend, &c.

Prov. Eng. sew, to dry up, is, I think, a distinct verb, from old Fr. esuer, essuier (Mod. Fr. essuyer), Prov. essugar, Lat. ex-sucare, to draw off moisture (sucus, succus).

Worth comparing with this is the contrasted word—not registered in the dictionaries—eneaw or eneaw, an old term in aquatic falconry, used when the hawk drove the heron or other fowl into the water (en eau). Compare old Fr. eneauer, to turn into water (Cotgrave). See Edinburgh Review, vol. cxxxvi. p. 353.

He went forth . . . unto the river, where finding of a mallard, he whistled off his falcon . . . shee came down like a stone and eneued it, and suddenly got up againe.—Nash, Quaternio.

To make your hawke fly at fowle, which is called the flight at the river . . . let her eneue the fowle so long till she bring it to the plunge.—Markham, Treatise on Hawking.

[When] the sharp cruel hawks they at their back do view,

Themselves for very fear they instantly ineaw.

[Margin: "Lay the fowls again in the water."]

Drayton, Song 20.

For best advantage to eneaw the springing fowle againe.

Turbervile, In Commendation of Hawking.

SHORN BUD, an old name for the common dung beetle, "Blatta, or shorn bud, or painted beetle."—R. Holmes. It is a corruption of the word sharnbode (sharnbude.—Gower), from A. Sax. scearn, dung, and bowl or budde, a weevil, like scearn-wifel, a dung-beetle.

þet byþ þe sharnbodes þet beuleþ þe floures. and louiþ þet dong [These are the dung-beetles that avoid the flowers, and love the dung].—Ayenbite of Inuyt, p. 61.

SHORN-BUG, a provincial word for a beetle, from A. Sax. scearn, dung.

SHORT, when applied to pastry, which is said to "eat short" when crisp, friable, or crumbling, e.g. short-bread, is the same as short, a technical word meaning brittle (iron), otherwise shear, Swed. skör, Dan. skør or skiør, brittle, friable; compare A. Sax. sceard, broken, shreaded, sceard, a sheard or fragment, Icel. skarð, a notch, Ger. scharf, A. Sax. scearan, to cut or share (cf. Prov. Eng. shorts, refuse of corn).

Hence short-tempered, said of one whose composure is easily broken, Prov. Eng. short, peevish, easily provoked, and probably the slang shirty, ill-tempered, cross. Iron is said to be red-sheer or red-short which is brittle when red hot.

SHOULDARYE, a ludicrous corruption in the Chester Mystery Plays of the word sudary, Lat. sudarium, Gk. soudarion, the word in the original Gospels for the napkin which was used as one of the Lord's grave-clothes.

A! Petter, brother, in good faye,
My Lorde Jesu is awaye!
But his shouldarye, south to saye,
Lyinge here I fynde.

The Resurrection (Shaks. Soc.),
vol. ii. p. 98.

In this cornere the shete is fownde,
And here we fynde the sudary,
In the whiche his hed was wounde,
Whan he was take from Calvary.
Coventry Mysteries, The Three Maries,
p. 358 (Shaks. Soc.).

Shuddery seems to be another corruption of the same word.

A small, thin but fine Shuddery or Veil of Lawn they draw afore their secret parts.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 361.

SHOW-FULL, or shoful, bad money or sham jewellery, is a cant term which originated among the Jews, and is the Hebrew shâfâl (or shâphâl), low, base, vile, the word which David applied to himself when he danced before the ark, 2 Sam. vi. 22. Mayhew quotes show-fulls, had money, as a piece of costermongers' slang.—London Labour and London Poor, vol. i. p. 26.

It is curious to find the word once used by the King of Israel still living in the vocabulary of a London costermonger. Compare showful = showy.

The Torch-bearers habits were likewise of the Indian garb, but more strauagant than those of the Maskers; all showfully garnisht with seueral-hewd fethers.—Chapman, Masque of the Mid Temple.

SHREW-MOUSE is not the shrewd mouse, the baneful or injurious mouse, as generally regarded (Wedgwood, Marsh, comparing "wel shrewed mys."—Trevisa's Higden, i.e. mischievous mice.—Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1866, p. 194), but the modern form of old Eng. screáwa (Ælfric Gloss.), the field mouse, W. Cornwall screw, Antrim screw mouse (cf. Somerset shrew for screw), apparently the same word as Prov. Eng. sheer-mouse, the shrew mouse (Kent, Sussex), A. Sax. scerfemús, a rat or field mouse, lit. a rodent, from sceorfan, to gnaw (Ettmüller). Pictet compares Ger. soher, schermans, the mole, old Ger. scero; and Topsell says, "The Hollanders call it Mollmousse, because it resembleth a Mole" (Historie of Foure-footed Beasts, p. 534, 1608).

"From the venomous biting of this beast," says W. Turner, "we have an english proverb or imprecation, I be shrow thee, when we curse or wish harm unto any man, that is, that some such euil as the biting of this Mouse may come upon him" (Topsell, p. 535). A horse suddenly seized with numbness in his legs "was immediately judged by the old persons to be shrew-struck."—Bingley, see White, Selborne, p. 145 (ed. 1853).

It is a curious coincidence that in the Wallon de Mons patois piqueruelle denotes a sharp-tongued woman and also the shrew-mouse (see Sigart, Glossaire, s.v.).

When my vather's cows was shrew-struck she made un be draed under a brimble as growed together at the both ends, she praying like mad all the time.—C. Kingsley, Alton Locke, ch. xxi.

SHRUB, a word formerly in use for a kind of beverage resembling punch, is a contracted form (sirub, s'rub) of sirup or syrup, Fr. sirop, old Fr. ysserop, It. siroppo, sciropo, Sp. warabe, all from Arab. sharâb, drink, beverage, a derivative of sharîb, to drink. Of the same origin are sherbet, Fr. sorbet, It. sorbetto, Arab. shorba, in Turkish pronounced shorbet (Devic).

"I smoke on srub and water, myself," said Mr. Omer.—Dickens, David Copperfield, ch. xxx.

SHUT, in the phrase "To get shut of a thing," to get rid of, to clear one's self of a thing" (Bailey), still colloquially used in Ireland and in provincial English, seems to be corrupted from an older expression "to get shot of," i.e. to get cast off, delivered, quit, or free from a clinging encumbrance, from A. Sax. sceótan, scyttan (Icel. skjota), to shoot. Shot and shut indeed are in old English identical (y-shote, y-scheot).

His voice had a twang in it—in the dialect I mean,—reminded me of a little tongue, which I think sweeter—sweeter than the last toll of St. Dunstan's will sound, on the day that I am shot of my indentures.—Sir W. Scott, The Fortunes of Nigel, ch. ii.

And thin 'e coom'd to the parish wi' lots o'
Varsity debt
Stook to his taail they did, an' 'e 'ant got shut on 'em yet.

Tennyson, Northern Farmer, New Style, viii.

In the Cleveland dialect the phrase is "to get shot of" or "on."

Ah's noo gotten fairly shot on 'em.

Willy caan't get shot ov 'is meear, nae ways.—Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 448.

So if you would be shut of these moorish briers, the course is to destroy their nests.—T. Adams, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 480.

Compare Lancashire shoot, to get rid of, reject, eliminate.

I'll gie ya fifteen shillin a-piece for three hundred cows, an ya'll let ma shoot ten on 'em.—R. B. Peacock, Lonsdale Glossary, p. 73.

SHUTTLE-COCK is said to be a corruption of shuttle-cork, a cork shot backwards and forwards, like a shuttle (Skeat).

I trow all wyll be nought,
Nat worth a shyttel-cocke.

Skelton, Why Come ye Nat to Court, l. 351.

SIDLE, To, in such phrases as to sidle along, or up to a person, i.e. to move in an oblique or side-long direction, seems to be a modern verb manufactured out of the old adverb sidling (= sidelong), which owing to its form was misunderstood to be a present participle. So to headle might have been evolved out of old Eng. headling, i.e. headlong, or to middle out of middling, and so to grovel actually has been formed out of the adverb groveling (along the belly), which see, and to darkle out of darkling. The learned Southey, I observe, writes the word correctly as a compound:—

I am not, however, side-ling toward my object crab-like.

The Doctor, p. 304 (ed. 1848).

Sideling, old Eng. sydelynge, Scot. sydlyngis, is our modern side-long. See an excellent paper by Dr. Morris in Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1862, p. 104.

Some beame . . . passeth not forth ryghte, but sydelynge and blenchynge.—Trevisa, Glanvilla, f. cxxvii.

The horse will halt and in his going he will go sideling.—Topsell, Hist. of Foure-footed Beasts, 1608, p. 404.

Sgualebrato, a sidelin right-hand blow.—Florio.

Sidelin to the fight they both came on.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 45.

Presently a little demon came sidling up.—Ralston, Russian Folk Tales, p. 273.

Dick heard, and tweedling, ogling, bridling, Turning short round, strutting, and sidling, Attested, glad, his approbation.

Cowper, Pairing Time Anticipated.

Such as retire from the Princes presence, do not by and by turne taylor to them as we do, but go backward or sideling for a reasonable space, til they be at the wal or chamber doore passing out of sight.—Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 300 (ed. Arber).

I sud be laith to think ye hinted,
Ironie satire, sidelins sklentend.

On my poor Musie.

Burns, To W. Simpson, p. 78
(Globe ed.).

The main and great East light in the Chancel, Sir Edward Barkham himself undertook, and effected it at his own Charge, as the expression testifieth in the same Window. The other sideling by it; but inclining more southerly, Mr. George Whitmore, and Mr. Nicholas Rainton, performed.—J. Howell, Londinopolis, p. 55.

Now I was assailed right and left, till in my own defence I was obliged to walk sideling and wary, and look about me, as you guard your eyes in London streets, for the horns thickened, and came at me like the ends of umbrellas poking in one's face.—C. Lamb, Works (ed. Routledge), p. 668.

Affery still remaining behind her apron, he came stumbling down the kitchen stairs candle in hand, sidled up to her, twitched her apron off, and roused her.—Dickens, Little Dorrit, ch. xv.

I myself ventured to sidle up to the group, and put in a little word now and then.—Russell's Memoirs of Thomas Moore, vol. i. p. 42.

Nothing seemed to move but a few der-vishes, who, censer in hand, sidled through the rows.—Burton, Pilgrimage to Mecca and Medineh, 1856.

SIEVES, an old spelling of chives, Fr. cives, Lat. cepa (Prior, s.v. Siethes).

SIGHT, frequently used in prov. and old English in the sense of a crowd or multitude, a great quantity, e.g. "a sight of people," "a sight of money" (Palsgrave), as if a spectacle, something worth looking at, Scot. sicht, sichter, a large number, "What a sicht of cows!" Berwick swecht, a multitude, is perhaps the same word as A. Sax. sweót, or swit (implied by swital), a crowd or multitude, for swihot from swihan, to be joined or gathered together (Ettmüller, p. 760), the w being slurred as in sister, A. Sax. sweostor; sultry for sweltry; soun-d, to swoon, &c. Compare Icel. sveit, a company, party, or bevy; Prov. Eng. swat, a quantity (Lincoln, Cleveland), swither, the same (Warwick).

Sight, a multitude, is found in the prose Morte d'Arthur; and Juliana Berners uses "a bomynable syght of monkes" for a large company of friars (Marsh, Lectures on Eng. Language, p. 125, ed. Smith).

Ye are come vnto the Mounte Sion, . . . and to an innumerable sight of angels.—Tyn-dale, Heb. xii. 22 (1534).

SILVER TYPE, with which certain books are supposed to have been printed, is said to be a mere misunderstanding of Elzevir type (Chambers, Book of Days, vol. i. p. 40).

I remember to have read, however, in some old author, that Sir Henry Savile in his splendid edition of Chrysostom, had honoured the golden-mouthed orator with silver type.

SIMPKIN, the Indianized form of Eng. "champagne."

SIMSON, } a provincial name for the
SIMPSON, } common groundsel, evidently for sencion, which is also found, its botanical name being senecio, Fr. senecõn, as it were "old man" (senex), from its hoary head when covered with seed.

So in Latin pappus denoted (1) an old man, a grandfather, (2) downy seed, (3) groundsel.

There is an herb called Groundswel, which the Greeks name Erigeron, and we the Latines senecio. . . . The Greeks imposed that name Erigeron because in the spring it looketh hoarie, like an old gray beard.—P. Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. (1634), vol. ii. p. 238.

Simpson, Groundsel, Senecio: Ess. Suff.—Ray, South and East Country Words.

SINFULLE, an old English word for houseleek, five-leaved grass, or cinquefoil, of which latter word it is evidently a corruption, Lat. quinquefolium. Etmüller ranges it among the compounds of sin, ever, always, and defines it "semper-vivum" (Lex. Anglo-Saxonnicum, s.v.)!

Another corruption is sink-field.

Pentaphylle, Cinkfoile, Sinkefield, Fivefingergresse.—Cotgrave.

SINGULF, in Spenser (ed. 1590), a sigh or sobbing, perhaps with some reference to gulping in spasmodic respiration, is a corrupt form of singult (in later editions), Lat. singultus, a sigh.

There an huge heape of singulfes did oppresse
His struggling soule, and swelling throbs empeachu

His foltering toung with pangs of drerinesse.
Faerie Queene, III. xi. 11.

SINK, a drain, a receptacle in connexion with a sewer, apparently that through which slops when poured out sink or subside, has probably no immediate connexion with the verb sink, A. Sax. sincan. It seems to be a nasalized form of Prov. Eng. sike or syke, a drain or watercourse (Cumberland, Cleveland), Scot. syk, sike, a rill, A. Sax. sic, a trench or watercourse (connected with sihan, to ooze or percolate, to *sy*e.—Ettmüller, p. 666), Icel. sik, a ditch or trench, Prov. Dan. sige, a low place where water collects, O. H. Ger. gesich. Compare also Prov. Eng. sigger, to leak, sig, urine, sock, drainage, socky, soggy, wet, swampy; Icel. söggr, wet; Welsh soch, a drain; "soak," &c. (Diefenbach, ii. 204).

A sinke, cloaca, sentina.—Levinus, Manipulus, 1570, 138.

Bedowin in donkis depe was euery sike.

G. Douglas, Bakes of Eneados, p. 201, l. 10.

The Ureters, as two common Sewers, convey the same to the Sinke, or greater Vault the Bladder, thence to be exonerated.—S. Purchas, Microcosmus, 1619, p. 43.

SINK-A-PACE, the name of an old dance in Shakespeare (Twelfth Night, i. 3), also written sinque pace, and cinque pace, is a corruption of Fr. cinq pas.

Il est vray qu'on ne dansa pas

La pavanne ny les cinq pas.

Loret, Muse historique (in Génin, Recréations Philolog. i. 395).

Or of his daunce observed cinquupas,
Save playne and simple leaped for his joye,
His wyfe Mycholl ne liked of the grace,
Resembling him to a light head boye.

F. Ihynn, Debate between Pride and Lowliness (ab. 1568), p. 52 (Shaks. Soc.).

Yet I can beare with Curios nimble feete,
Saluting me with capers in the streete,
Although in open view and peoples face,
He fronts me with some, spruce, neat, sinque-pace.

Marston, Satyres, i. (vol. iii. p. 217, ed. Halliwell).

France and Italy are like a die, which hath no points between sink and ace, Nobility and Pesantry.—Fuller, Holy State, p. 105 (1648).

SINKFIELD, a popular name for the plant potentilla, a corruption of cinque-foil. See SINFULLE.

There be very many bastard names, where-with I will not trouble your eares: in high Dutch Junff fingerkraut . . . in Italian Cinque-foglio: in French Quinte feuille: in Spanish Cinco en rama, in English Cinkfoile, Five finger grasse, Five leaved grasse, and Sinkfield.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 839.

SIRLOIN, a mis-spelling of surloin, Fr. surlonge, the part above the loin (super-lumbare), which has given rise to the absurdly mythical story of this favourite roast having been knighted by the Merry Monarch. The joint was known as a surloyn some centuries before Charles II. was born. To stereotype the mistake a double "sirloin" has been styled a baron of beef, just as the title of My Lord has been bestowed by the Scotch on their favourite dish, the haggis.

Be not puffed up with knighthood, friend of mine,

A merry prince once knighted a Sir-loin.

Tom Brown, Epigram on the Knighting of Sir R. Blackmore.

Nev. But pray, why is it called a sirloyn?

Lord Sp. Why, you must know that our King James I. who loved good eating, being invited to dinner by one of his nobles, and seeing a large loyn of beef at his table, he drew out his sword and knighted it. Few people know the secret of this.—Swift, Polite Conversation (Conv. ii.) [Davies].

No, let me return again to onions and pease-porridge then, and never be acquainted with the happiness of a sirloin of roast-beef.—Randolph, Hey for Honesty, act ii. sc. 2.

Love probably may, in your opinion, very greatly resemble a dish of soup or a sirloin of roast-beef.—Fielding, Hist. of a Foundling, bk. vi. ch. 1.

SIR-NAME, Sire-name (Wycliffe, Gen. xxxv. 6), a mistaken spelling of surname, i.e. the name, over and above one's baptismal name' as if that inherited from one's sires, is Fr. sur-nom, It. sopranome, Sp. sobre nombre, Lat. super-nomen.

In the following extract from Bp. Nicholson, while explaining the word correctly he confounds it with the Christian name:—

Every Christian bearing two names; the one of nature, which is the name of his house, family, or kindred, and this he brings into the world with him; the other of grace, of favour, being his Sirname,* that is over and above added unto him (sobre nombre, superior name).—Exposition of the Catechism, 1661.

Where the Authorized Version mentions the super-added names of the disciples, it speaks of "Simon whose surname is Peter" (Acts x. 5), and "John whose surname was Mark" (Acts xii. 12); we would now call these Christian names. Perhaps surname meant originally the baptismal name. At all events, these instances render the following statement somewhat doubtful:—

The surname, the name expressing a man's relation, not to the kingdom of God, but to the worldly society in which he lives, is only of a much later growth, an addition to the other, as the word itself declares.—Abp. Trench, Study of Words, Lect. vii.

Cranmer's Bible (1539) presents the form syrrname in both the passages cited above. Camden, however, spells the word correctly, and explains it in accordance with modern usage:—

Surnames given for difference of families and continued as hereditary in families were used in no nation anciently but among the Romans. . . . The French and we termed them surnames, not because they are names of the sire or the father, but because they are super-added to Christian names, as the Spaniards call them Renombres, as Renames.—Remaines Concerning Britaine, p. 106 (1637).

Sirname, the Name of a Sire or Master of a Family and Name.—Bailey, Diet.

It was fashionable for the Clergy (especially if Regulars, Monks, and Friars) to have their Surnames (for Syr-names they were not) or upper-names, because superadded to those given at the Font, from the places of their Nativity; . . . Hence it is that in such cases we seldome charge our margin with other Authors, their Sirname being Author enough to avow their births therein.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 53.

Nor is it proved, or probable, that Sergius changed the name of Bocca di Porco, for this was his surname, or gentilitious appellation.—Sir T. Browne, Works, vol. ii. p. 264 (ed. Bohn).

It might bee his sirname: but doubtless it was first a nickname fastened on some of his progenitors.—Dean Wrenne, Note in loc. cit.
pat is [noʒt] reisonable ne rect * to refusy
my syres sorname.

Langland, Vision of Piers the Plowman,
Pass. iv. l. 369, Text C

The ancestors of all such now a dayes in our Country whose names doe end in son, or whose Sirnames come from proper names, have had other sirnames, and by some occasion or other have lost them.—Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, 1634, p. 308.

Tis not my person nor my play,
But my sirname Holliday
That doth offend thee.

Verses upon C[hrist] C[hurch] play, made by Mr. Holliday, 1638.

My christian and sir-name begin and end with the same letters.—The Spectator, No. 505 (1712).

Ally sirnamed Aben-hassen had no issue.
—Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 143 (1665),

He [Gildas] was also otherwise sir-stiled
Querulus, because the little we have of his Writing is only "a Complaint."—T. Fuller,
Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 286 (ed. 1811).

SIR-REVERENCE, in old writers a common corruption of save-reverence or saving your reverence, an apologetic phrase used when mentioning anything deemed improper or unseemly, and especially a euphemism for stercus
humanum. "Cagada, a surreverence." —Stevens, Sp. Dict. 1706.

He has (sir reverence) kick'd me three or four times about the tiring-house.—Ben Jon- son, Bartholomew Fair, Induction.

His wife, sir-reverence, cannot get him
. . . shift his shirt without his warrant.—
Id. act iv. sc. 1.

Siege, stool, sir-reverence, excrement.—Bp.
Wilkins, Essay towards a Philosophical Lan- guage, 1668, p. 241.

Thoo grins like a dog eatin Sir Reverence.
—Holderness Glossary, Eng. Dialect Soc.

Compare Span. salvoror = anus (Stevens).

Whereas thou sayest, that in thy presence,
I am of no regard ne countenance,
That is a lye, saving your reverence.

F. Thynn, Debate between Pride and Lowli- ness (ab. 1568), p. 14 (Shaks. Soc.).

A pleasant ghest that kept his words in mind,
And heard him sneeze, in scorn said, keep behind,

At which the Lawyer taking great offence,
Said, Sir, you might have us'd save-reverence.
Harington, Epigrams, bk. i. 82.

SKEWER. It is absurd to suppose that this is merely another form of secure, as if the splinter of wood which secures the meat from falling asunder (so Blackley, Word-Gossip, p. 32), though it is possible that with educated people that word may have exercised a reflex influence, the usual form of skewer in the provincial dialects being skiver, which seems to be identical with shiver, a splinter, from shive or skive, to slice, Dan. skive, Icel. skifa, to slice. Compare Ger. schiefer, a flake or splinter.

SKIN-THE-LAMB, a game at cards, a corruption of lansquenet. See LAMB.
SKIN-IT.

SKULL. The once generally received notion that our northern ancestors used to drink at their banquets out of the skulls of their enemies, appears to have arisen from not understanding that skull was a genuine old Teutonic word for a cup. The belief that the heroes of Valhalla drank their ale out of literal skulls, or as Southey puts it—

Thought
One day from Ella's skull to quaff the mead
Their valour's guerdon—is equally erroneous. In the death-song of King Ragnar Lodbrok, he consoles himself with the prospect of drinking beer in Odin's palace "out of curved horns." This Professor Rask has shown to be the trus rendering, and not "out of the skulls of our enemies," as it used formerly to be translated (Mallet, N. Antiq. p. 105). Skull, old Eng. scole and schal, a cup or bowl,

Scot. skul, skull, is the same word as Icel. skál, a bowl, Swed. skål, Dan.
skaal, Irish sgala (which latter Pictet equates with Sansk. kaluka, a small vessel.—Langues Celtiques, p. 43), and ultimately identical with scale (of a balance) and skull, the brain-pan, the "golden bowl" of Eccles. xii. 6. Compare Goth. skalja, a tile (Diefenbach, ii. 233); and Fr. tête, from Lat. testa,
an earthen vessel.

Fick was led into the same incorrect fancy that skulls of slaughtered fess were used as beakers by the fact that Indo-Europ. kumbha signifies a pot as well as the head (Wilkins, Owen Coll. Lectures, p. 314).

The original and extraordinary blunder lies with Olaus Wormius, the great Danish antiquary, to whose authority poets and historians bowed without looking further. . .
It became universal, and a century passed away without its being detected. It was so familiar that Peter Pindar once said that the booksellers, like the heroes of Valhalla, drank their wine out of the skulls of authors.
—J. Disraeli, Amenities of Literature, vol. i.
p. 32 (ed. 1863).

And seruanz war at this bridale,
That birl'd*win in cupp and schal,

And Mary bad that thai suld do
Al that Jesus said thaim to.

Eng. Metrical Homilies, p. 120
(ed. Small).

For thir titthings in flakoun and in skull
Thay skynn the wyne, and wauchtis cowpys full.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 210, l. 6.

On we kest of warme milk mony a skul.
Id. p. 69, l. 20.

. . . His wrath is achaufed,

For þat þat ones wat3 his schulde efte be vn-clene

þa3 hit he hot a bassyn, a bolle, oþer a scole.

[His wrath is kindled that a thing which once was His should afterwards he unclean, though it be but a basin, a bowl, or a cup.]—
Alliterative Poems, p. 69, l. 1145.

SKY-LARKING, boisterous horse-play,
a stronger form of larking. See LARK.

I had become from habit so extremely active, and so fond of displaying my newly acquired gymnastics, called by the sailors “sky-larking,” that my speedy exit was often prognosticated.—Marryat, Fr. Mildmay, ch.
iv. [Davies].

SLEEPER, a beam of timber used as a support to railway metals, perhaps from the French sommier, from a notion that that word was connected with sommeil, sleep (Blackley). But dormer or dormant is a provincial term for a beam in England, “Dormawnte tre, Trabes” (Prompt. Parv.), “Dormant tree, a great beam which lies across an house, a summer” (Bailey), “Dormant, never removed” (Id.).

His table dormant in his halle alway
Stode reddy covered alle the longe day.

Chaucer, Prologue Cant. Tales, l. 355.

SLEEVELESS, in the phrase a sleeveless errand, i.e. useless, unprofitable, is beyond doubt a corrupted form of some other word now no longer in use.
Allan Ramsay (Chamber's Pop. Ed. p.
7) has the phrase “a thieveless errand,” so that sleeveless not improbably may be a corruption of the Scottish thieveless, or thewless, devoid of thew or service, akin to A. Sax. þeón, to thrive, “thee,” or profit, þeow, a servant. The phrase occurs in Shakespeare, Troilus and Cress. v. 4, and is punned upon by Ben Jonson:—

It [the coat] did play me such a sleeveless
errand

As I had nothing where to put mine arms in,
And then I threw it off.

Tale of a Tub, iv. 4.

She cam wi' a right thieveless errand back.

Ramsay, Gentle Shepherd, i. 1.

Wi' thieveless sneer to see his modish mien,
He, down the water, gies him this guid-een.

Burns, Poems, p. 26 (Globe ed.).

Thieveless might become sieveless (cf.
sow-thistle and O. Eng. thow-thistle, has and hath, loves loveth, &c.), which for the sake of euphony and sense would become sleeveless.

She can make twentie sleeveless errands in hope of a good turne.—Whimzies, or A New Cast of Characters. p. 83 (1631).

The phrase occurs also in Heywood's
Works (1566), and The Spectator (1711).
Bp. Hall has “sleeveless rhymes” (Satires, b. iv. sat. 1), vid. Brand, Pop.
Antiq. vol. i. p. 132 (ed. Bohn).
Chaucer, Testament of Love, ii. 334, has “sleeveless words;” Taylor the Water-poet (1630), “a sleeveless message.”

Shee had dealt better if shee had sent himselfe away with a crabbed answer, then so vmannerly to vse him by sleeveless excuses.—
The Passionate Morrice, 1593, p. 65 (Shaks.
Soc.).

My men came back as from a sleeveless Arrant.
Harington, Epigrams, bk. iii. 9.

That same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissemhling luxurious drab, of a sleeveless errand.—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida,
v. 4, 10.

SLO-FAIR, a winter fair held in Chichester in October, so called from the verb sloh, sleah, slagen, to slay, being the fair when the slain beasts were sold to be pickled down for winter stores, no live cattle being brought to market till the following spring.—Notes and Queries, 5th S. vii. p. 116.

SLOUGH-HEAL, a popular name for the prunella plant, is a corruption of its older name self-heal (Prior).

SLOW-WORM is the Norse slefa, Icel.
slefa, akin to Icel. slefa, slaver, to drivel, slafra, to lick, Norse sleve, slime (Morris and Skeat, Specimens, p. 309).
Dr. Adams regards slow-worm as another form of slug-worm, lug-worm (Transactions of Philolog. Soc. 1860-1,
p. 9).

SLUG, heavy shot, is from A. Sax.
(ge-)slagan, “to slay” or strike, akin to slaugh-ter, Ger. schlagen, and slog, to strike hard at cricket.

This message he sent in a slug-bullet, being writ in cipher, and wrapped up in lead and sealed.—Pepys, Diary, Feb. 4th, 1664-5.

SLUG-HORN, as used by Browning, Dauntless the slug-horn to my lips I set.
Childe Roland, sub fin.

is evidently the same word as the Scotch slughorne, the watchword of an army, derived, according to Jamieson, from Keltic sluagh, an army, and corn, a horn.

The slughorne, ensenze, or the wache cry Went for the battall all suld be reddy.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 230, l. 37.

SMALLAGE, an old popular name for water-parsley (Apium graveolens), apparently a simple word like herbage, foliage, plumage, &c., is really a mongrel compound small-ache, the latter part being Fr. ache, parsley, from Lat. apium. It was so called in contradistinction to the larger horse-parsley.

Smallage, as Pliny writeth, hath a peculiar vertue against the biting of venomous spiders.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 863.

The leaves of this plant, which they termed by the name of Maspetum, came very near in all respects to those of smallach or persely.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 8.

SMITER, an old corruption of scimitar, Fr. cimeterre, It. cimitarra, more probably perhaps from Pers. shemshir, or shimshir, than from Basque cime-tarra, "sharp-pointed." Smiter is found in Lilly's Dramatic Works, vol. i. p. 15 (Lib. Old Authors); smeeter in Dekker; "Cimeterre, A Scymitar, or smyter, a kind of short and crooked sword, much in use among the Turks."—Cotgrave. An old French form is sannetterre (Devic). Hall (Chron. p. 543) speaks of "swordes like semitaries of Turkey."

Sam. But what is this, call you it your sword?

Top. No, it is my simiter; which I by construction often studying to bee compendious, call my smiter.—Lilly, Endimion, act i. sc. 3 (vol. i. p. 15, ed. Fairholt).

SMOKE, in the colloquial sense of "to discover a secret, to find out, twig, or understand one's meaning," has nothing to do with smoke (A. Sax. smeóc), fumus, but is a perverted form of A. Sax. smeógen, to seek out, investigate, or examine a matter (e.g. A. Sax. Vers. Luke xxii. 23; John xvi. 19), Bavarian schmecken, to sniff or smell out, Swiss erschmecktern, to smell out, discover (Wedgwood). Compare A. Sax. smeógan, to penetrate, smeág, subtle (Ettmüller, p. 707).

Groom. . . . What are you? you have been hang'd in the smoke sufficiently, that is, smelt out already.

Notch. Sir, we do come from among the brewhouses in St. Katherine's, that's true, there you have smoked us; the dock comfort your nostrils!—Ben Jonson, The Masque of Augurs, Works, p. 930, 1622 (ed. Moxon).

The two free-booters, seeing themselves smoakd, told their third brother.—Dekker, Lanthorne and Candlelight, 1620.

All's come out, sir.

We are smok'd for being coney-catchers: my master
Is put in prison; his she-customer
Is under guard too.

Mussinger, The Renegado, act iv. sc. 1.

He was first smoked by the old lord Lafeu.
Shakespeare, All's Well that Ends Well,
iii. 6.

And yet through all this difference, I alone
Smoked his true person.

G. Chapman, Odysseys of Homer, bk. iv. l. 337.

Who the devil could think that he would smoke us in this disguise?—Kelly, The School for Wives, act iii. sc. 5.

Besides, Sir, in this town, people are more smoky and suspicious.—Foote, The Liar, act
i. sc. 1.

The orator grew urgent; wits began to smoke the case, as active verbs—the advocate to smoke, as a neuter verb.—De Quincey,
Works, vol. xi. p. 86.

May not the word be from A. Sax.
smeccan, to taste (? or touch), past partic. i-smoked, from smác, a taste, flavour, or "smack" (Ettmüller, 705),
then to discover by tasting, to find out?
Compare—

Schrift 3et schal beon naked; þet is nakedliche imaked, and nout hisaumped feire, ne hendeliche ismoked [al. ismacked].—
Ancoren Rihte, p. 316.

[Confession must be naked, that is made nakedly, not speciously palliated nor gently touchd on.]

Smoaky is found in the sense of suspicious. Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, quotes the following:—

I' gad, I don't like his looks, be seems a little smoaky; I believe I had as good brush off.—Cibber, Prov. Husband, act ii.

A smoaky fellow this Classic, but if Lucinda plays her cards well, we have not much to fear from that quarter.—Foote, Englishman in Paris, act i.

SNAILS! a common expletive in the old drama, should be written 'snails! or 's nails! i.e. His nails, or God's nails. Compare the following:—

Maria. Though man that frayle is,
Swere armes and nales,
Braue, hlode, sydes, passyon;
Swete Sonne, regarde,
Your paynes harde,
Ye dyded for hym alone.
New Notbroune Mayd vpon the Passion of Cryste, l. 251.

His nayles, I would plague them one way or another,
I would not misse him, no, if hee were mine own brother.

New Custome (1573), act ii. sc. 3.

Snoils! wherefore come all these? Master, here's not fish enough for us.—Patient Grissil
(1603), act i. sc. 1.

'Snails, my shoes are pale as the cheek of a stew'd pander.—Rowley, A Match at Midnight, act i. sc. 1.

SNAP-SACK, a corruption of knapsack (from Dut. knap-zak, a provision-bag, from Dut. knap, eating).

Nor will it suffice to have raked up a few Notions . . . any more than a Soldier who had filled his Snup-sack should thereupon set up for Keeping House.—*Mémoires of Dr.
Robt. South*, 1717, p. 14.

SNOW, a small sea-vessel, is from the Low Ger. snau, or snauschip, a boat with a sharp prow or snout, snau; as Dutch sneb (navis rostrata) is from sneb, a beak. (See Wedgwood, s.v.
Smack.)

Far other craft our prouder river shows,
Hoys, pinks, and sloops; brigs, brigantines,
and snows.

Crabbe, The Borough, Letter J.
(Works, p. 176, ed. 1866).

I broke with them at last for what they did on board of a bit of a snow.—Scott, Red-gaurtlet, ii. 156.

SOAR-FALCON, a term in falconry for a young hawk that not having yet moulted retains the red plumage of its first year, is a corruption of the French sauve, and has nothing to do with its soaring flight.

Of the soave faulcon so I learne to fly,
That flags awhile her fluttering wings beneath,
Till she her selfe for stronger flight can breathe.

Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Beautie, l. 26.

SOAR-HAWK is not, as one might naturally suppose, a hawk that soars, but a young hawk in its first year

“from the first taking her from the eyrie, till she has mew'd or cast her feathers” (Bailey), and is so called from the reddish tint of its first plumage. Thus Cotgrave gives not only faulcon sor, “a soar Hawke,” but harenc sor, “a red Herring.” Soar
therefore is the same word as Fr. sor,
saur, “sorrel,” saurir, sorer, to redden, It. sauro, perhaps from a Latin caureus.

SODDEN, applied to bread or pastry, which is said to be sodden when close and heavy, the dough not having risen properly, as if another usage of sodden, the past partic. of seethe, to boil, with an oblique reference probably to the heavy indigestible nature of boiled paste, is a corruption of sadden or sad, which is the ordinary word in the prov.
dialects for heavy, solid, ill-baked (bread). Compare soddy, sad, heavy,
North. (Wright), sadden, to harden, to make solid, Lincoln. (Id.), old Eng.
sad, hard, solid (Prompt. Parv.), in Elizabethan English serious, sedate, in modern English downcast, sorrowful. The original meaning was full, satiated, A. Sax. säd, sated (sadham, to be full, be weary (Ettmüller, p. 627),
Icel. saddr (and södr), sated, O. H.
Ger. sat, Lat. satur, full, Goth. saps,
sads, full (see Diefenbach, *Goth.
Sprache*, ii. 179). Compare Welsh sad, firm, sadio, to make firm. The transition from fulness, satiety, to material heaviness (as of bread) and mental heaviness (of a man's mood) is easily understood.

SOIL, to feed cattle in the stall, seems to be a corrupted form of Prov. Eng.
soul, to satisfy with food, Fr. saoul, satiated, saouler, Prov. sadollar, Lat.
satullare, to sate, from Latin satullus,
satur, satis.

If the Horse goe to Soile in Aprill after fue daies bring him forth.—Topsell, Hist. of Foure-footed Beasts, 1608, p. 330.

SOLAR TOPEES, the name given to the pith hats worn in the East, as if “sun hats,” is said to be more properly sola topees, so called from the material of which the headdress is composed, Hind.
sholá, the pith of the plant Aschyro-mene aspera. Compare SEERPAW, for another corruption of an Oriental word.

SORRY, so spelled as if the adjectival form of sorrow (with which it has no real connexion) would more properly be sorey or sory; compare O. Eng. and A. Sax. sârig, sad, Scot. sary, A. Sax. sâr, a sore, O. N. sâr. Sorrow is A. Sax. sorg, mourning, grief, sorgian, to grieve, Goth. sairga. The two words are often brought together, e.g. sorga sârôst, "sorest sorrow."—Cædmon, 122, 19.

SOUND, a false orthography of old Eng. soun, Fr. son, Lat. son-us, the d having originally been added on by ignorant speakers, as in gound, swoond or swound, pound, to beat, for old Eng. poun or pun; bound, ready, for boun. I have also noted in old writers chapland for chaplain; gammond; salmond; anveld for anvil; lawnd for lawn; cynamond (Florio); sarmond for sermon; schollard; sold (Holland) for sole (fish); to scand (Norden). See ROUND (vb.).

He se3 þer ydel men ful stronge
& sa[y]de to hem with sobre soun,
"Wy stonde 3e ydel þise daye3 longe."
Alliterative Poems, p. 16, l. 533.

Sonans is short, yett sounding in English must bee long; and much more yf yt were sounding as thee ignorant generally but falslye dooe wryte; nay that where at I wonder more, thee learned trip theyre pennes at this stoane, in so much as M. Phaer in thee verye first verse of Virgil mistaketh thee woorde, yett sound and sowne differ as much in English as solidus and sonus in Latin.—Stanyhurst, Ænead, Preface [Davies].

SOUND, a corrupt form of swoon or swound, old Eng. swowne, A. Sax. aswunan, to swoon (see Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, s.v.).

I warrant your master is only in a sound; and I've a bottle of stuff in my pocket, that will fetch him in a whiff.—Bickerstaffe and Foote, Dr. Last in his Chariot, act iii.

Upon whose departure, with the paune left of his resolution, my minion fel into a sound.—The Passionate Morrice (1593), p. 79 (Shaks. Soc.).

SOUNDER, an old word for a wild-boar, is, I take it, for sunder, and means the animal that lives apart, separate, or a-sunder (A. Sax. sundar, Icel. sundr, Dut. sonder, Goth. sundro, a-sunder). Compare old Eng. synglere, a wild-boar, Fr. sanglier, from Lat. singularis, dwelling alone; Greek monios (i.e. lonely, solitary), the wild-boar; Sard. sulone, the same, from Lat. solus, alone.

It had so happened that a sounder (i.e. in the language of the period, a boar of only two years old) had crossed the track of the proper object of the chase.—Scott, Quentin Durward, i. 130.

A boor of the wode distriede it; and a singular wilde beeste deuouride it.—Wycliffe, Ps. lxxix. 14.

Sounder was also used for a herd of swine.

When he is foure yere, a boar shall he be,
From the sounder of the swyne tenne departyth he;

A synguler is he soo, for alone he woll go.
Book of St. Albans, ed. 1496, sig. d. i.

SOUTHDENES, a curious old corruption in the Vision of Piers the Plowman, Pass. iii. l. 187, Text C., "somenours and Southdenes," where other MSS. read sopdenes and sodenes. It is for suddenes, i.e. sub-deans, which seems to have been interpreted by the scribe as south-denes. Prof. Skeat (Notes in loc.) quotes south-bailys, for sub-bailiffs, from a Poem on the Evil Times of Edward II.

SOVEREIGN, a corrupt spelling of soveran (Milton, Par. Lost, i. l. 246), from a false analogy to reign. Cf. Fr. soverain, It. sovrano, soprano, supreme, from supra, above, Lat. superanus.

For Jupiter aboven alle,
Which is of goddes soverain,
Hath in his celler, as men sain,
Two tonnes full of love drinke.
Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 12.

SOW-THISTLE, O. Eng. suwe-distel, a corruption of its older form thowthystil (Pr. Parv.), A. Sax. puſepistel, or pupistel, O. Ger. du-tistel, "sprout-thistle," from puſe, a sprout (Prior). Mr. Atkinson questions this, adducing the Cleveland swine-thistle, Swed. svin-tistel, Dan. svinetidſel, svinedild, Ger. sau-distel.

Sowthystylle, or thowthystylle, Rostrum porcinum.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

In a 15th century MS. (quoted in Wright's Homes of other Days, p. 312) the word is spelt ffoothestylle. Cf. farborough, fursty, &c., for tharborough, thirsty, &c.

SPADE-BONE, an old word for the blade or shoulder bone, is connected with Prov. espatta, Portg. espádra, Sp. espalda, It. spatola, Lat. spatula, Greek spathē, a flat blade. "Spade" is of the same origin.

SPANISH BEEFEATER. This expression is quoted without explanation in Philolog. Soc. Proc. vol. v. p. 140, and said to be a corruption of "Spina bifida (a disease)."

SPARK, as a name for a self-sufficient fop or conceited coxcomb, has probably no direct connexion with the glittering particle of fire which we call a spark, any more than flunkey has to do with Ger. flunke, a spark. Mr. Wedgwood connects the word with Prov. Eng. sprag, sprack, quick, brisk, as if a lively young man (compare Ir. spraic, vigour, sprightliness), and Cleasby further points out a connexion with Icelandic sparler, sprakki, lively, sprightly, also a dandy. See also Prof. Skeat's Notes to Piers Plowman, p. 398.

Off has it heen my lot to mark
A proud conceited talking spark.
J. Merrick, The Chameleon.

Other connected words seem to be spry, nimble, brisk, Cumberland sproag, a pleasure excursion, spre, and perhaps spruce. In the following quotation two MSS. have sparklich for sprakliche, which here has the meaning of spruce, dandified:—

Barfot on an asse bak · bootless cam prykye,
With-oute spores oþer spere · and sprakliche
he lokede,
As is þe kynde of a knyght · þat comeþ to be
doubed,
To geten hus gilte spores · and galochea y-couped.

Vision of Piers Plowman, C. xxi. l. 12
(ed. Skeat).

Save you, boon sparks! Will't please you to admit me?
Cartwright, The Ordinary, act iii. ac. 5.

I will wed thee,
To my great widdowes daughter and sole
heire,
The lonely sparke, the bright Laodice.
Chapman, Widdowes Teares, act i.

Hitherto will our sparkfull youth laugh at their great grandfather's English, who had more care to do well, than to speake minion like.—Camden, Remaines, p. 25 (1637).

Your persuasion,
Chid us into these courses, oft repeating,
Shew yourselves city-sparks, and hang up money.

Massinger, The City Madam, act iv. sc. 2.

Let those heroike sparks whose learned
braine
Doth merit chaplets of victorious bayes,

Make kings the subject of their lofty layes,
Thy worthless praising doth their worth dispraise.

Fuller, Davids Heavie Punishment, st. 64.

Draw near, brave sparks, whose spirits scorn to light

Your hollow tapers but at honour's flame.

Quarles, Emblems, bk. i. emb. 9 (1635).

The true-bred spark, to hoise his name,
Upon the waxen wings of fame,
Will fight undaunted in a flood,
That's rais'd with brackish drops and blood.

Quarles, Emblems. ii. 11.

Here I also saw Madam Castlemaine, and, which pleased me most, Mr. Crofts, the King's bastard, a most pretty sparke of about 15 years old, who, I perceive, do hang much upon my Lady Castlemaine, and is always with her.—Pepys, Diary, Sept. 7th, 1662.

No double entendres, which you sparks allow,
To make the ladies look—they know not how.

Dryden, Love Triumphant, 1693,
Prologue, l. 24.

For matter o' that, I had rather have the soldiers than officers: for nothing is ever good enough for those sparks.—Fielding,
Hist. of a Foundling, bk. viii. ch. 2.

He comes i' th' middle of their Sport,
And, like a cunning old Trepanner,
Took the poor Lovers in the Manner,
And there, as one would take a Lark,
Trapp'd the fair Madam and her Spark.

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque,
Poems, p. 239.

Cowper seems to have identified this word with that for a luminous particle:—

So, when a child, as playful children use,
Haa burnt to tinder a stale last year's news,
The flame extinct, he views the roving fire,—
There goes my lady, and there goes the squire,

There goes the parson, oh! illustrious spark,
And there, scarce less illustrious, goes the clerk.

On some Names in the Biographia Britannica.

And so Ben Jonson:—

Thy son's a gallant spark and must not be put out of a sudden.

The Poetaster, i. 1 (Works, p. 108).

SPARROW-BALLS, } shoemakers' nails
SPARROW-BILLS, } (provincial Eng.), is perhaps a corruption of sparables, or sperrables (Herrick), dimin. form of spær, which is a derivative of sperr or spar, to make fast, according to Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. 1695. In Cornwall sparrows, sparras, or spars, are wooden skewers used in thatching (T.
Q. Couch).

Cob clonts his shoes, and as the story tells,
His thumb-nailes-par'd, afford him sperrables.
Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, p. 242.

SPARROW GRASS, a vulgar corruption of asparagus, and widely prevalent. Mr. S. R. Holes states that upon one occasion being asked to adjudicate at a rustic flower-show on the merits of certain classes of wild ferns and grasses, amongst the latter he observed three cases of asparagus being exhibited. Upon his saying to the exhibitors that this was not contemplated by the schedule, his ignorance was at once enlightened,—“Please, sir, it says ferns and grasses, and this is sparrow grass.”—Book about Roses, p. 30.

The Lincolnshire folk shorten the corrupted word, and will politely invite a guest to have a “little more grass” (Peacock, Glossary of Manley, &c.).

Steele, in The Tatler, No. 150, has sparagrass. Other old forms are sparagras, sparage, and sperage.

SPATCH-COCK, a name in cookery for a chicken grilled in a particular manner, as if an abbreviation of “despatch cock” because it was hastily prepared, was originally “spitchcock,” a corrupted form of “spitstuck,” i.e. en brochette. A spatch-cock fowl is one spread on a skewer after having been split open at the back, just as a broiled eel done on a skewer is called a spitch-cocked eel (Kettner, Book of the Table, s.v. p. 119).

We had a good deal of laughing at an Irishman who was of our party, on account of a bull he had made at breakfast, and which we called “half a nightingale” [bulbul],—a sort of “spotch-cock nightingale.”—Russell, Memoirs of Thos. Moore, vol. i. p. 317.

Yet no man lards salt-pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitchcock'd eel.
King, Art of Cookery.

Will you have some cray-fish and a spitch-cock?—Webster, Northward Ho, i. 1.

Next we'll have true fat eatable old pikes,
Then a fresh turbot brought in for a buckler,
With a long spitchcock for the sword adjoin'd.
Curtright, The Ordinary, act ii. sc. 1.

The first course consisted of a huge platterful of scorpions spits-cocked.—T. Brown, Works, ii. 221.

When thou cam'st hither (Captain-Swisher)
Scorch'd like a Herring, or a Rasher,

Sing'd like a Hog (foh ! thou stink'st still)
And Spitch cock'd like a salted eel.

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, Poems, p. 222.

SPIRIT, in the phrase “to spirit up a man to an act,” though at first sight it seems to come from the Latin, is in truth, says Mr. Oliphant, a disguised form of the old to-spryttan, to excite, spurt and sprout coming from the same root (Old and Middle English, p. 77).

SPLASHING, a provincial word for the interweaving of the branches of trees, hurdle-wise, so as to form a low hedge, e.g. Mr. Blackmore in Lorna Doone, a Romance of Eamoor, speaks of a “ram-part of ash, which is made by what we call splashing,” and shortly after he calls this a “stout ashen hedge” (3rd ed. pp. 231, 233). It seems to be a corruption of the more ordinary form to plash, old Eng. to pleach (“A thick pleached alley in my orchard.”—Much Ado about Nothing, i. 4), akin to Lat. plecto, and plico, Greek plékō, to twine or plait.

Women are not so tender fruit, but that they doc as well, and beare as well upon beds, as plashed against walls.—Sir T. Overbury, Neues (Works, p. 176, ed. Rimbault).

SPLINTER-BAR, a name for the bar to which a horse is harnessed in drawing. Splinter seems to be a corruption of sprinter for springtree, originally spangtree, the tree or timber to which (in provincial English) the horse is spanged or yoked. Compare Ger. spannen, to fasten, Dut. aanspannen, to harness. Another form of the word is spintree-bar (Wedgwood).

SPOIL, to injure, destroy, or render useless, is another form of to spill (A. S. spillan, to destroy, Dut. spillen), assimilated apparently to the other verb “to spoil,” Fr. despoiller, Lat. spoliare.

SPOON, a slang term, now in very general use, meaning to court or make love, to phillis and philander, to shew a lover's fondness; also “to be spoonery on a girl,” “to be spoons,” and “spoonery,” one foolishly fond, a weak-minded muff. These words were perhaps popularly supposed to mean “babyish, like an infant that is spoon-fed,” or perhaps a reference was imagined to the old notion that changelings, who were generally idiots, were substituted sometimes by the fairies for healthy infants, these changelings being in some instances veritable spoons.

This is she [Mab] that empties cradles,
Takes out children, puts in ladders.

Poole, Eng. Parnassus, p. 333.

(See Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 329; Keightley, Fairy Mythology, 336.) As a curious coincidence may be noted Ger. löffeln, to play the gallant, also to eat with a spoon, löffel, gallantry, and a spoon. To spoon, borrowed probably from some of the provincial dialects, seems to be akin to A. Sax. spanere (spanere), an allurer or persuader, sponung (spanung), persuasion, seduction, sponan (p. part. sponen), to entice or solicit, the primitive form of which was probably spunan, implied by Teutonic un-spunalih, inexorable (Ettmüller, p. 712). Thus the original meaning of spoon would be "to be seductive or alluring" in one's looks and manner, to woo. Compare spoon, the implement, from A. Sax. spón, a thin piece of wood.

SPORT, in the college phrase to sport one's oak, i.e. to keep one's door barred, to bring it into requisition, is regarded by Mr. Oliphant as a corrupted form of the old Eng. verb sparran, to close or bar, with a t suffixed to round it off, as in "thou art," for O. Eng. ar (Old and Mid. English, p. 76). But how would this explanation account for the phrases "to sport a new hat, a gold pin," &c., i.e. to exhibit, wear, or call into requisition?

SPRIGHT, an old and incorrect spelling of sprite (anciently spirite, Lat. spiritus, a breath, a vapour, an aerial being), from the false analogy of such words as light, night, right, sight, might, O. Eng. spight, &c., where the gh is radical and organic (cf. Lat. luc-s, noct-s, rect-us, Ger. sicht, macht, Lat. de-spect-us, &c.). The last-mentioned word, on the other hand, in the form of spite, has been falsely assimilated to vite, mite, kite, &c. Similarly, in The Two Noble Kinsmen (1634), wrighter occurs for writer (Prologue), kight (act i. sc. 1, l. 41) for kite, requight (v. 4, 36) for requite.

And Mars you know must Venus haue,
To recreate his spright.

B. Googe, Eglogs, 1563, p. 67 (ed. Arber).

Where flames doe burne, and yet no sparke of light,

And fire both fries and freezes the blaspheming
spright.

G. Fletcher, Christs Triumph over Death,
st. 42.

Bacon has sprights for short arrows used in sea fights, "without any other heads save wood sharpened" (Natural and Experimental History) [in Latham], evidently for sprits (Dut. spriet). As an instance of a similar mis-spelling, William Fuller, Bishop of Lincoln, in his will, 1675, directed his body to be buried "according to the rights [= rites] of the Church of England" (Bailey, Life of Thos. Fuller, p. 624).

SPRIGHTLY. Professor Skeat in his note on the word sprakliche, lively, in Langland's Vision of Piers Plowman, xxi. 10, Text C, says, "I much suspect that our sprightly is a mere corruption of sprakliche, with a change of vowel due to confusion with sprite (spright). Two things point to this—(1) that we retain the gh in the spelling; and (2) that the sense of sprightly is exactly that of sprakliche, and therefore different from spritely, which would mean fairy-like." Cognate with sprakliche are Icel. spræklaigr, sprækkr, sprightly, Prov. Eng. sprack and sprag, lively, quick. See SPARK.

Though now thy sprightly blood with age be
cold,

Thou hast been young: and canst remember still,

That when thou hadst the power, thou hadst
the will.

Dryden, Sigismundu and Guiscardo, l. 430.

SPRINGHOLD, an old Eng. name for an engine of war used for casting darts, stones, &c. (Matthew of Westminster), also written springold, springal. It is from the French espringalle (also espringard), Prov. espringulo, It. springare, to fling.

And eke within the castle were,

Springuls, gonnes, bowes, and archers.

Romauut of the Rose, l. 4191.

See Sir S. D. Scott, British Army, vol. ii. p. 167.

SPRING-WALL, used in the ballad of Auld Maitland for an engine of attack, as if that which springs a wall,

With spring-wall, stanes and goads of airn
Among them fast he threw.

It is a corruption of springal, Fr. espringalle. See SPRINGHOLD.

SPRUCE-BEER seems to be a corruption of Ger. sprossen-bier, that is, beer made out of the sprouts or shoots (sprossen) of the fir tree. Perhaps also spruce-fir is for Ger. sprossen-fichte (Wedgwood).

SPUR-HAWK, a Scottish name for the sparrow-hawk (Dan. spurv-høg), of which word it is a corruption. A Shetland corruption is spurrie-how (Edmondston).

SPURRINGS, a common provincial word for the publication of the banns of marriage in church, lit. "askings," is in some places misunderstood as referring to the equipment of a rider when preparing himself for a race. Mr. Peacock mentions that, in N. W. Lincolnshire, a person who has been once "asked" is said to have "one spur on," when twice "a pair of spurs" (Glossary of Manley and Corringham). It is the substantial form of O. Eng. spur, to ask,—

He spurred him gentlye.

Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 394—

Old Eng. spere, Scot. speir, spure, A. Sax. spyriam, Ger. spüren, Icel. spyrja. In Shetland spurins are tidings, tracings of anything sought for.

Alle þat he spured hym in space he expowned
clene,
þurȝ þe sped of þe epyryt þat sprad hym withinne.

Alliterative Poems, p. 83, l. 1607.

[All that he asked him he expounded plain at length through the help of the spirit that was diffused within him.]

He bad his man to go and spire

A place, where he might abide.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 324.

Whi spyr ye not syr no queystions ?

I am oone of youre order and oone of your sons.

Marriott, Miracle Plays, Juditium, p. 181.

He asked a countryman who was passing to be so good as to tell him the name of the Castle. The reply was somewhat startling—
"It's no the day to be speering sic things!"
—E. B. Ramsay, Reminiscences of Scot. Life and Character, p. 21 (10th ed.).

SQUALL. Fuller has the curious expression "squalling with the feet" for walking awry, divaricating, straddling.

William Evans was born in this County, and may be justly accounted the Giant of our age for his stature, being full two yards and a half in height: . . . he was not onely what the Latines call Compernis, knocking his knees together, and going out squalling with his feet, but also haulted a little.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 120.

It is the same word as Cumberland shawl, to walk crookedly (Ferguson), old Eng. schayl (Prompt. Parv.), Prov. Swed. skjåla, to walk crookedly, Icel. skjålgr, wry, oblique, squinting. Compare Cleveland skell, to turn obliquely, skelly, to squint (Atkinson), Cumberland skelled, awry, A. Sax. sceol, "scowling," squinting, Greek skellós, crooked-legged, Lat. scelus (crookedness), crime, all akin to Sansk. skhal, to err, go wrong, deviate.

I shayle, as a man or horse dothe that gothe croked with his legges.—Palsgrave.

Esgrailler, to shale, or straddle with the feet or legs.—Cotgrave.

Schouelle-fotede was that schalke, and schaylande hyme semyde,

With schankeȝ vn-schapy, schowande togedyrs.

Morte Arthure, l. 1099 (E. E. T. S.)

[Shovel-footed was the fellow and shambling (not scaly, as Ed.) he seemed, with unshapely shanks, shuffling together.]

Other, which were well legde, shaled with their feete, or were splafooted; and to be briefe, they that trode right, were either clouterly caulfed, tree like set, spindle shankte, or bakerly kneed.—The Passionate Morrice, 1593, p. 82 (Shaks. Soc.).

SQUINT, more properly squinch, an architectural term for a slit made in the pillar, &c., of a church to give a view of the altar, is not from squint, to look askew, but is the same word as Prov. Eng. squinch, a crevice or crack in boarding, squinky, narrow, slender.

Hagioscopes, squints, or loriculae, are those apertures which occur in different parts of the church, usually in one or both sides of the chancel-arch, to enable the worshippers to obtain a view of the Elevation of the Host.—Handbook of Eng. Ecclesiology, p. 200.

Measter was . . . looking down dro' the squiches in the planching.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 25.

The word is probably akin to chink, O. Eng. chynne (Oocleve), A. Sax. cinu.

[In the chancel of Bere Regis church the] plain rude arch with its huge squints—mere inartistic holes in the wall—was a part of the history of the fabric which it would be wrong to remove.—The Saturday Review, vol. 50, p. 106.

SQUIRE, a common word in old authors for a carpenter's square or rule, is a naturalized form of old Fr. esquierre, a rule, square, or measure (Cotgrave), or esquerre (Mod. Fr. équerre), Sp. esquadra, from Lat. ex + quadra.

To allow such manner of forraine and colored talke to make the iudges affectioned, were all one as if the carpenter before he began to square his timber would make his squire crooked.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 166 (ed. Arber).

One melts the White-stone with the force of Fire :

Another, leveld by the Lesbian Squire, Deep vnder ground (for the Foundation) joins

Well-polisht Marble, in long massie Coins.
Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 464.

But temperaunce (said be) with golden
squire

Betwixt them both can measure out a meane.
Spenser, F. Queene, 11. ii. 58.

Quadrante, a foure square, a squire or ruler.
—Florio.

Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squier.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 4, l. 348.

Fal. If I travel but four foot by the squire further a-foot, I shall break my wind.—1 Hen. IV. ii. 2.

SQUIRILLITY, a corruption of scurility, found in the old dramatists.

So long as your mirth be void of all squirility 'tis not unfit for your calling.—Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 1.

The heathen misliked in an orator squirilitie.—Stonihurst, Description of Ireland, p. 16 (Holinshed, vol. i. 1587).

The word is an assimilation perhaps to squire used in the sense of a pander or pimp (Wright, Nares). Somewhat similarly chicanery is corrupted, in Ireland into jackeenery, as if the conduct of a jackeen, or low cunning fellow, in America into she-coonery, as if the conduct of a she 'coon, or racoon.

STAFFOLD, a rustic assimilation of scaffold to the native word staddle, a stand or support.

I made my wheat-reek on staffolds.—E. Lisle, Observations in Husbandry (1757), p. 223.

(See Old Country and Farming Words, E.D.S. p. 68.)

STAGGER-WORT, an old popular name for the plant senecio Jacobæa, is probably a corruption of the form staggerwort also found, which in its turn would seem to be a corruption of the old French name Herbe de St. Jacques, as if St. Jacques wort, styacke-wort, stagg-wort.

[This plant] is called in Latine Herba S. Jacobi, or S. Jacobi flos, and Jacobæa: in high Dutch Sant Jacobs bloumen: in lowe Dutch Sant Jacobs Cruyt: in French Fleur de S. Jacques: in English S. James his wort: the Country people do call it Stagger wort, and Stauerwort, and also Ragwoorte.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 219 (1579).

STANDARD, so spelt as if connected with stand (Richardson actually groups it under the one head with that word), as if a standing ensign, whereas it really signifies an extended banner, being the French étendard, It. stendardo from stendere, Lat. extendere.

Similarly in Mid. High German Fr. étendard became stanthart, as if from "stand."

Ac to þe hatayle smot anon, as man wyþoute fere,

And byleuede dragon & standard, & stured vaste ys honde.

Robert of Gloucester, p. 303.

STANDARD, as applied to a tree, a distinct word from standard, a banner, is the same as standil or staddle, a tree reserved at the felling of woods for growth for timber (Worldige, Dict. Rusticum, 1681), A. Sax. staðol, something standing firm.

His kiugdom should not be like to coppice-woods; where the staddles being left too thick, all runs to bushes and briars.—Fuller, Holy State, p. 108 (1648).

STANDGALL, a name given to the windhover or kestrel, according to H. G. Adams, from its habit of remaining almost stationary while hovering in the air. He also gives as other names of the same bird stonegall, steingall (Nests and Eggs of Familiar British Birds, p. 6); which of these is the corrupted form, I cannot say. Contracted from one or other are N. Eng. stanchil, O. Eng. staniel, Mod. Eng. stannel.

Kestrel—(Falco tinnunculus), Also Windhover, Creshawk, Hoverhawk, Stannel or Stannel-hawk,—query, Stand-gale, as Montagu writes one of its provincial names Stone-gall. Windhover certainly suggests the meaning of Stund-gale, and that word would be easily shortened into Stannel.—J. C. Atkinson, Brit. Birds' Eggs and Nests, p. 20.

In an A. Sax. word-list of the 11th century occurs—

Pellicanus, stan-gella vel wan-fota.—Wright's Vocabularies.

With what wing the staniel checks at it!
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 5, 124.

STAR, a word for coarse grass, bent, in provincial and old Eng. (e.g. Havelok, l. 939), is the Danish stær, stær-grass, Icel. störr, probably akin to Ger. starr, stiff; "staring" of hair, = rough and rigid.

Herewith the amorous spirit, that was so kind

To Teras' hair, and Comb'd it down with wind

* * * *

Would needs have Teras gone, and did refrain,
To blow it down; which staring up, dismay'd
The timorous feast.

Marlowe, Hero and Leander, 5th Sestiad,
sub fn.

STAR-BOARD, the right side of a ship, is the A. Sax. steór-bord, i.e. the steer-board (Orosius; Etmüller, p. 739), Dan. styrbord, Icel. stjórn-borði, from stjórn, steering; so the Icel. phrase á stjórn = on the starboard side.

He took his voyage directly North along the coast, having vpon his steereboord alwayes the desert land, and vpon the leereboord the maine Ocean.—Hakluyt, Voyages, 1598, vol. i. p. 4.

STAR CHAMBER, the despotic court forming part of the old Exchequer buildings in New Palace Yard, Westminster.

The stars or contracts made between Jews and Gentiles in this country before the expulsion of the Israelites from England under Edward I. are said to have given to the place where they were deposited the name of the Star Chamber.—Blackstone.

The bonds of many a great baron . . . lay pledged for security in the "star-chamber" of the Jew.—J. R. Green, Stray Studies, p. 340.

Starra, a covenant, is a corrupted form of the Hebrew shetar. It is doubtful, however, whether the name is not derived from the stars with which the ceiling was anciently decorated (Jesse, London, vol. i. p. 221).

It is certainly translated as Camera Stellata, Chambre des Estoylles, but this may be from a misunderstanding of the English name.

Milton plays on the word:—

This authentic Spanish policy of licencing books . . . was the immediate image of a Star-chamber decree to that purpose made in those very times when that Court did the rest of those her pious works, for which she is now fall'n from the Starres with Lucifer.—Areopagitica, 1644, p. 79 (ed. Arber).

That in the Chamber of Starres,
All maters there he marres,
Clapping his rod on the borde,
No man dare speke a worde.
Skelton, Why Come ye nat to Courte?
(ab. 1520).

Court of Star Chamber, so called from the room in the king's palace at Westminster having its ceiling decorated with stars.—Mr. Burt in Old London, p. 254.

STAR-K-BLIND, utterly blind, is a corruption of old English stór-blind, from starian, to stare, denoting the fixed and open look of sightless eyes; Icel. star-blinda, blindness, from stara, to gaze (Cleasby), A. Sax. stareblind (Etmüller, p. 725).

Bi daie thee art stare-blind,
That thee ne sichest ne hou ne rind.
Owl and Nightingale, l. 241.

Twenty-seven years he sate Bishop of this See, till he was stark blind with age.—Fuller, Worthies, ii. 11.

STAR-K-NAKED, old Eng. steorc-naket and steortnaket (Legend of S. Margaret, ab. 1200, E.E.T.S. l. 5), so spelt as if from sterc, stearc, stiff, rough, an unlikely compound, is, according to Mr. Oliphant (Old and Mid. Eng. p. 255), a probable corruption of steort, the tail, and nacod, i.e. bare to one's extremities, utterly naked, the change from t to c being very common.

Bicleope pine sunne steornaked; þet is, ne hele þu nowiht of al þet lið þer abuten.—Ancrén Riwele, p. 316.

[Name thy sin starknaked; that is, cover thou naught of all that lieth thereabouts.]

His fo fetteþ hi in vche ende
And hap i-strupt him al stark naked,
Of miht and strengþe al bare i-maked.
Grosseteste, Castel of Loue, l. 432.

Vor steorc naked he was despuiled oðe rode.—Ancrén Riwele, p. 260.

[For he was stripped stark naked on the cross.]

Horace Walpole seems to have imagined that stark by itself meant naked.

Madame du Deffand came to me the instant I arrived, and sat by me whilst I stripped and dressed myself; for as she said, since she cannot see, there was no harm in my being stark.—Walpole, Letters, iv. 25 (1775).

STARLING, an old name for a penny, popularly supposed to have been so called because impressed with the figure of a star, as if it denoted a little star, is a corrupt form of sterling, old Eng. sterlynge, a standard coin, genuine money, said to have been named after the Easterlings (Low Lat. Esterlingi), or German moneyers, by whom it was first coined in England (Walter de Pinchbeck, temp. Ed. I.; see Wedgwood, s.v.). The Merchants of the Hanse were formerly known as Easterlings; see the quotation from Howell, and that from Minsheu, s.v. STEEL-YARD (2). The wise men from the East are sometimes so called by the Old Divines.

Min holy pardon may you all warice,

So that ye offre nobles or starlinges,

Or elles silver broches, spones, rings.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 12841.

þe king of is tresorie eche 3er him sende
A certain sume of sterlings, to is liue's ende.

Robert of Gloucester, p. 563.

The lesser payments were in starlings, which was the only coin then current, and stamp'd, which were pence so call'd. . . . The Saxon coins before the Conquest, were peoce of fine silver, somewhat weightier, and better then the latter starlings, and the probablest Reason that is given, why it was starling money, was, because in the ring or border of the peny, there was a starre stamped.—Howell, Londinopolis, p. 25.

In the time of his sonne King Richard the first, money coyned in the East parts of Germany began to bee of especial request in England for the puritie thereof, and was called Easterling money, as all the inhabitants of those parts were called Easterlings, and shortly after some of that Country, skilful in Mint matters and alliaies, were sent for into this Realme to bring the Coine to perfection; which since that time was called of them sterling, for Easterling, not from Striveling [Sterling] in Scotland, nor from a starre, which some dreamed to be coined thereon; for in old deedes they are alwaies called Nummi Esterlingi, which implied as much, as good and lawfull money of England.—Camden, Remaines concerning Britaine, 1637, p. 184.

Then the Queen caused a Proclamation to be published, That the Easterlings, or Merchants of the Hans, should be treated and used as all other Strangers were within her Dominions, without any Mark of Difference, in point of Commerce.—Howell, Fam. Letters, bk. l. vi. 3 (1632).

That Lane takes its name of Shermoniers, such as cut and rounded the plates to be coyned or stamped into Estarling pence.—ld. Londinopolis, p. 326.

The cape from whence they [the Wise Men] came affords one short note more, that they were Easterlings.—Bp. Hacket, Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 126.

There is no ale brewed among the Easterlings, but of mead there is plentie.—Hakluyt, Voyages, 1598, p. 6.

STAVE, a verse, stanza, or other portion of a song, has been regarded as a metaphorical use of stave or staff (A. Sax. stæf, Icel. stafr, Goth. stabs), a part of a hooped vessel, many of which are set together in its construction! (Wedgwood). Indeed Runic verses used sometimes to be cut on separate sticks or staves of wood; see the illustrations in Kitto, Pictorial Bible, vol. iii. p. 550. It is really, however, the same word as Icelandic stef, a stave in a lay, the burden or refrain of a song (Cleasby, p. 590), A. Sax. stefen, stefn, a voice, sound, or concert, old Eng. steven (Owl and Nightingale, l. 314).

He herd fra his hali kirke mi steuen.

Northumbrian Psalter (13th cent.),

Ps. xvii. l. 17.

A. Sax. stefen, stæfen, O. Eng. steven, may have come to have been considered as a plural in -en, of a singular stef, stæf, or stave.

Bishop Hacket actually uses staff in his sermons:—

The next staff of the Song is, "and on earth pence."—Century of Sermons, p. 73, fol. 1675.

Staffe in our vulgare Poesie I know not why it should be so called, vnlesse it be for that we understand it for a bearer or supporter of a song or ballad, not vnlike the old weake bodie, that is stayed vp by his staffe and were not otherwise able to walke or to stand vpright. The Italian call it Stanza, as if we should say a resting place.—Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 79 (ed. Arber).

As in the former staff of the song, so also in this, there is a touch of a distrustful conscience.—Bp. John King on Jonah (1594), p. 174 (ed. Grosart).

An Imperfect Ode, being but one Staff
Spoken by the prologue.

Webster, The Malcontent, act v.
sub fin. (p. 362, ed. Dyce).

You see how my author in the 55 Staffe of this Canto hath delivered to us, that Beatrice the mother of Bradamant, would never be wonne to accept Rogero for her sonne-in-law.

—Sir J. Harrington, Orlando Furioso, p. 404.

Rhythme royall is a verse of tenne syllables, and seuen such verses make a staffe.—Gascoigne, Steele Glas, 1576, p. 38 (ed. Arber).

A bird

Whom art had never taught staffs, modes, or notes.
The Lover's Melancholy.

In the Towneley Mysteries, Pastores, when the shepherds hear the angels' song, one of them exclaims,

This was a qwant stevyn that ever yit I hard.
Marriott, Miracle Plays, p. 132.

Whan I here of her vois the stevn
Me thenkth it is a blisse of heven.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, vol. iii. p. 30.

STAVES-ACRE, a trivial name for a species of larkspur, or Delphinium, is the French staphisaigre, Lat. staphis-agria, which is the Gk. ástaphisagria, from ástaphis, raisin, and agria, wild.

Staphisaigre, Stavesaker, Licebane.

Hei be aux pouilleux, Licebane, Stavesaker.—Cotgrave.

Astaphis agria . . . beareth bladders or little cods more like than grapes . . . also we are assured that Staphis-acre loueth to grow in Sun-shine places.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. ii. 148.

Staves-aker we must provide to kill lice.—Nash's Lenten Stuff.

In phlegmatic cases they seldom omitted stavesaker.—Sir Thos. Browne, Works, vol. iii. p. 215 (ed. Bohu).

Wag. Well, wilt thou serve me, and I'll make thee go like Qui mihi discipulus? . . . In beaten silk and stavesacre.

* * * *

Clown. Oho, oho, staves-acre! why then helike, if I were your man, I should be full of vermin.—Murlowe, Doctor Faustus, 1604 (p. 84, ed. Dyce).

STEEL, a cant term among the lower orders for the house of correction, or "lock up," is a corruption of Bastile.

STEELBOW, in the Scottish phrase "steelbow goods," meaning fixtures, goods on a farm which belonging to the landlord cannot be removed by a tenant, is identified by Jamieson with the Alemannic stahlhine viehe, immovable (? standing, = permanent) goods.

No man in the Parish is more familiar with . . . the feudal rights of the incoming tenant to the mysteries of "steelbow."—The Standard, May 24th, 1880.

STEEL-YARD, a balance, as if a yard or rod of steel, is a corruption of the older form stihlarde or stelleere.

Crochet, a Roman Beame, or Stelleere, a beame of Iron or wood full of nicks or notches, along which a certain peize of lead, &c., playing, and at length setting towards the one end, shews the just weight of a commodity hanging by a hooke at the other end.—Cotgrave.

And so v.v. Levrault and Romaine.

With the change from stelleere (steller) to stihlarde, and then to stilyard, steel-yard, compare lanyard, for laniard, from Fr. lanière; billyard (Cotgrave) for billiard; poneyard (Fuller, Worthies, ii. 492) for poniard; and, probably, halyard for halliard (Haldeman); standard (tree) for stander (Id.); lubbard for lubber; whinyard for whiniard; palleyard (Middleton) for palliard.

Stelleere is, without doubt, the same word as stiller, a north country word for a piece of wood carried over a milk-pail to balance it (Wright), from the old Eng. and Scotch still, stell, or steil, to place, set, or regulate. Compare Ger. steller, the regulator of a clock, from stellen, to set or regulate. The cognate words are Icelandic stilla, to regulate, arrange, put in order (whence stillir, "a regulator," i.e. a king), Dan. stille, to set, level a gun, A. Sax. stillan, O. Ger. stellan, Gk. stellein, Sansk. sthal, sthalā.

Borne to uphold creation in that honour
First nature stilde it in.

The Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1, 84
(Qto. 1634).

Thus steelyard, a regulator or balance, has no more to do with steel than the synonymous words, Scotch bismare, Dan. bismer, Icel. bismari, Ger. besemer, have to do with the Besemer manufacture of the same metal.

Richardson quotes stihlarde, from Fabyan, Chronycle, an. 1529; stihlarde from Burnet, Records, K. Edw. Remaines, vol. ii. pt. ii. b. ii.; stihlarde from Boyle, Works, vol. iii. p. 481.

Steelyard, as the name of a wharf, "is not taken from steel, the metal, . . . but from stapel-hoff, or the general house of trade of the German nation."—Pennant, London, The Steel-yard. Sir Thomas Overbury says, "An Ingrosser of Corne . . . had rather be certaine of some forraine invasion then of the setting up of the stilyard."—Works, p. 131 (ed. Rimbault).

STEELYARD, in "Merchants of the Steelyard," the name of a Flemish guild of traders who had a house of business on the banks of the Thames from the time of Edward the Confessor till 1597, arose from a mistranslation of the name of their store, staël-hof, which was a contraction of stapel-hof or staple-yard. (See F. Martin, History of Lloyds.)

The High-Dutch of the Hans Towns antiently much conversed in our Land (known by the name of Easterlings) . . . so that the Steel-yard proved the Gold-yard unto them.—Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 66 (ed. Nichols).

Howell mentions as standing on the east of Cosin Lane "the Steel-yard (as they terme it), a place for Marchants of Almain" (Londinopolis, p. 97). He says that in 15th of Edward IV. this is called "the Steel-house" (p. 99); the merchants themselves he incorrectly terms "Styliard Marchants" (p. 98).

They all (did shoot the) bryge be-twyn xij and on of the cloke, and a-g(ainst) the Stieard of Temes my lord chauseler mett (them in his) barge.—Machyn, Diary, 1554, p. 75.

Stilliard is a place in London, where the fraternitie of the Easterling Merchants, otherwise the Merchants of the Haunse and Almaine, are wont to have their abode. It is so called Stilliard, of a broad place or court wherein steale was much sould, q. Steeleyard, upon which that house is now founded.—Minshew, Guide into Tongues, 1617.

From him come I, to entreat you . . . to meet him this afternoon at the Rhenish wine-house i' the Stilliard.—Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 1.

Next to this lane on the East [Cosin Lane, Dowgate Ward] is the Steele house, or Steele yarde, (as they terme it) a place for Marchantes of Almaine, &c.—Stow, Survey of London, 1598, p. 184.

Men, when they are idle, and know not what to do, saith one, "Let vs go to the Stilliard, and drink Rhenish wine."—T. Nash, Pierce Penilesse, p. 56 (Shaks. Soc.).

STEM, used by Milton in the sense of sailing in a certain direction, literally, to turn the stem (or prow) of a vessel (A. Sax. stefn, stemn, Icel. stafn, stamn), like Icel. stemna, stefna, to direct the stem of the ship towards. This is a distinct word from stem, to withstand, or stand firm against, as "to stem a torrent," which is from Icel. stemma, to obstruct, stop, or dam up (especially of a stream or fluid).

They on the trading flood
Through the wide Ethiopian to the Cape
Fly, stemming nightly toward the Pole.

Paradise Lost, bk. ii. l. 642.

STEP-, the prefix in "step-mother," "step-child," &c., is A. Sax. steóp-, Ger. stief-, Dan. stiv-, Swed. stuf-, Icel. stjúp- (originally = bereft, orphan), all near akin to A. Sax. steópan, to bereave. Tooke and others erroneously supposed that the original form was sted-mother, &c., one placed in stead of the real mother, misled by the analogy of the corrupt Danish words sted-moder, sted-fader, sted-barn, &c.

A step-mother doth signify a sted-mother; that is, one mother dieth and another commeth in her stead: therefore that your love may settle to those little ones as it ought, you must remember that you are their sted-mother, that is, instead of their mother, & therefore to love them and tender them, and cherish them as their mother did.—Henry Smith, Sermons, 1657, p. 44.

Ne læte ic eow steop-cild, ic cume to eow.—A. Sax. Vers. Ino. xiv. 18.

Tre vnkynde; þou schalt be kud,
Mi sone step-moder · I · þe calle.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 133, l. 71.

[Tree unkind, thou shalt be shewn, My son's step-mother I thee call.]

þat seint Edwardes fader was: þat his stip-moder a-slou3.

Life of St. Swithin, l. 88 (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1858).

Latimer uses the prefix step- as if it meant alien, unnatural, tyrannical, misled by the popular opinion about step-parents.

You landlordes, you reentraysers, I may saye you steplordes, you unnaturall Lordes, you haue for your possessions yearely to muche.—Sermons, p. 31 verso.

STERAKELS, in the old phrase "to play one's sterakels," to storm or give one's feelings free play—

I take onne, as one dothe that playeth his sterakels, je tempeste.—Palsgrave, Lesclaircissement, 1530—is more than probably a corruption of hysterics, hystericals, taken to be histerics.

Why playest thou thy steracles on this fashion.—Palsgrave, Acolastus, 1540.

So I have heard a nervous lady humorously described by another as being in high sterics, and I remember a yeoman's wife once to have said of her ailing child, "it went off in a kind of faint or steric."

Southey, in one of his fits of literary buffoonery, proposed that the word hiccup should become in its objective use hiscups or hercups, "and in like manner Histerics should be altered into Herterics—the complaint never being masculine" (The Doctor, p. 492, ed. 1848).

Whan thou art sett upon the pynnacle,
Thou xalt ther pleyn a qweynt steracle,
Or ellys shewe a grett meracle

Thyssel ffrom hurte thou save.
Coventry Mysteries, The Temptation,
p. 209 (Shaks. Soc.).

The dead sayntes shall shewe both visyons
and myracles;

With ymages and rellyckes he shall wurke
sterracles.

Bale, Kyng Johan, p. 39 (Camden
Soc.).

STEW. A person in a state of fright or commotion is colloquially said to be "in a stew," and this is generally understood to be the same word as stew, to boil gently, as if the meaning was "in hot water," "in a state of ebullition," "perspiring with suppressed emotion." It is really Prov. Eng. stew, pother, vexation, disturbance, originally a cloud of dust or steam; Scot. stew, (1) dust, vapour, steam, (2) a battle or fight, like Lat. pulvis, dust, used metaphorically for toil and conflict. This is the same word as Low Ger. stûven, Dut. stuyven, to raise dust, Dan. stëve, O. H. Ger. stiu-ban, Ger. staub, dust, Goth. stufjus, dust (see Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 338). Near akin is Cleveland stife, close, oppressive, stifling, and stuffy. "To make a stew" is in Prov. Eng. to raise a dust or disturbance. Gawin Douglas uses stew for the dust of battle:—

[Eneas] with him swyftly bryngys ouer the hent

Ane rout cole blak of the stew quhare he went.
Bukes of Eneadas, p. 426, l. 6.

Thus the word has no more to do with stew, to boil, than broil, a quarrel or disturbance, em-broil, to involve in a quarrel (from Fr. brouiller, to jumble together, It. broglia, imbroglio, Gael. broighleadh, turmoil), have to do with broil, to fry. It may rather be compared with the phrase to fume or be in a fume, i.e. in a fret or passion (compare to vapour), Lat. fumus, smoke, Greek thumos, wrath, Sansk. dhûmas, smoke, near akin to O. H. Ger. tunst, storm, Swed. and Dan. dunst, vapour, Icel. dust, dust, Eng. dust.

STICKADOVE, a corruption of the Lat. flos stæchados, a species of lavender that came from the islands called Stæchades (now the Hyeres), opposite to Marseilles, Gk. stoichades, standing in a row.

Stæchados, Stæcado, or Stickadove, . . . French Lavender.—Catgrave.

Stycadose occurs in a 15th century MS. quoted in Wright, Homes of other Days, p. 312.

Here are other, as diosfalios,
Diagalanga and sticados, says the Poticary in Heywood's The Four P's (Dodsley, i. 83, ed. 1825).

The name was perhaps popularly imagined to have a reference to the long stick-like stalks and dove-coloured hue of the flower.

This jagged Sticadoue hath many small stife stalkes of a woody substance; whereupon do grow jagged leaues in shape like vnto the leaues of Dill, but of an hoarie colour; on the top of the stalks do growe spike flowers of a blewish colour, and like vnto the common Lauander spike.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 470.

STICKLER, which is now used for one who is a precisian, and sticks up stoutly for his rights or the observance of rules, denoted formerly the moderator at a contest who stood by to second or to part the combatants.

I stycyll between wrastellers or any folkes that prove mastries to se that none do other wronge, or I part folke that be redy to fight, Je me mets entre deux.—Palsgrave, 1530.

Sticklers were long supposed to have had this name from their carrying sticks or staves of office, like stewards, wherewith to interpose between the contending parties. (See Richardson, Dict. s.v.)

It is, however, another form of old Eng. stitel (Coventry Mysteries), or stighler, which is from old Eng. stiztle, A. Sax. stihtan, stihtian, to rule, dispose, or arrange. (See a good note in Wedgwood, Etymolog. Dict. s.v.)

Unstithe for to stire or stightill the Realme.

Troy Book, 117.

When þay com to þe courte keppte wern þay
fayre,

Sty3tled with þe stewarde, stad in þe halle.

Alliterative Poems, p. 39, l. 90.

[When they came to the court they were fairly entertained, marshalled by the steward, placed in the hall.

If we leuen þe layk of oure layth synnes, & stulle steppen in þe sty<sup>3</sup>e he stu<sup>3</sup>tle<sup>3</sup> hym selven,
He wyl wende of his wodschip & his wrath
leue.

Alliterative Poems, p. 100, l. 403.

[If we leave the sport of our loathsome sins, and still advance in the path He Himself arranges, He will depart from His rage and leave His wrath.]

þat oþer was his stiward þat stiztled al his meyne.

William of Palerne, l. 1199.

There had been blood shed, if I had not stickled.

Cartwright, The Ordinary, iii. 3.

The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,
And, stickler-like, the armies separates.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, act v. sc. 8.

'Tis not fit

That e'ry prenticeshould, with his shop-club,
Betwixt us play the sticklers.

Haywood and Rowley, Fortune by Land and Sea, 1655, p. 18 (Shaks. Soc.).

Our former chiefs, like sticklers of the war,
First sought to inflame the parties, then to poise.

Dryden, On the Death of Oliver Cromwell,
st. 11.

I am willing, for the love and kindness we have always borne to each other, to give thee the precedence, and content myself with the humbler office of stickler.—Sir W. Scott, Fair Maid of Perth, ch. xvi.

The note appended to this passage is:—

The seconds in ancient single combats were so called, from the white sticks which they carried, in emblem of their duty, to see fair play between the combatants.

STIM, in the phrase "I can't see a stim or stimmer," i.e. not a whit or particle, Cumberland styme, Scot. "a styme o' light," a gleam or glimpse of light, is doubtless the same word as
A.Sax. scima, Goth. skeima, Icel. skimi, Ger. schimmer, a shimmer or gleam of light. Cf. Swed. skymning, twilight, skymla, to glimmer. I have heard a person ambitious of being thought a correct speaker convert the idiomatic stim into stem, as if it meant not even as much as a stalk or stem, ne filum quidem.

She saw þer-inne a lith ful shir,
Also brith so it were day . . .
Of hise mouth it stod a stem,
Als it were a sunnebem.

Havelok the Dane, l. 592.

Therewith he blinded them so close,
A stime they could not see.

Robin Hood, i. 112.

I've seen me daez't upon a time;

I scarce could wink or see a styme.

Burns, Poems, p. 161 (Globe ed.)

STIRRICKS, a provincial word for violent fits of ill-temper, hysterics, a corruption of the latter word, evidently understood as "his steries."

Ah secan cured him o' them stirricks of his;
when they com on Ah put him inti rainwather tub.—Holderness Glossary (E. Yorkshire).

STONCK, an old form of the name of the skunk (Mephitis mephitica, from the Indian seganku, Bartlett, Dict. of Americanisms, p. 599, 4th ed.), is an evident assimilation to stink, stunk.

Thus the squonck, or stonck, of *Ray's Synop.
Quadr.* is an innocuous and sweet animal;
but when pressed hard by dogs and men, it can eject such a most pestilent and fetid smell and excrement, that nothing can be more horrible.—G. White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, Letter 25, p. 60 (ed. 1853).

STONEING, made of stone, a word found in old documents, is a corruption of stonen, an adjective strictly analogous to wooden, earthen, golden,
brazen, &c.

He pulled down a stoneing cross.—Letter, dated 1643 (Notes and Queries, 5th S. viii.
497).

Ine stonene þruh biclused heteueste [In a stone tomb shut up fast].—Ancren Riwle, p.
378.

The West Somerset folk still speak of a stoanen wall. (See Elworthy, Grammar of W. Somerset, p. 19.)

STORE, in the old idiom "to set store by" a thing, i.e. to prize or value highly, seems to be quite a distinct word from store, a plentiful supply, abundance (which is akin to re-store, Lat. re-stau-rare, Wedgwood; so to store, in-stau-rare, Levins). It is, no doubt, the Prov. Eng. store (adverb), much, greatly, e.g. "He likes the situation
good store [= very much].—Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 500; old. Eng.
stor, A. Sax. stór, great, vast, Dan. stor, Icel. stórr, great, important,—"þat þerr stórum," it amounts to much,—very frequently used as a prefix meaning greatly, highly, exceedingly, e.g. stór-fjarri, very far, stór-illr, very bad (Cleasby, p. 596). Similarly "to set store by" is to set much by, to appraise highly (magni facere), opposed to "to set light by."

I ne tell of laxatives no store.

Chaucer, Nonne's Priest's Tale.

Store, used in the sense of a large number, a great retinue, seems to be another use of the same word, e.g. :—

He had possession of flocks, and possession of herds, and great store of servants.—A. V. Gen. xxvi. 14.

With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
Rain influence, and judge the prize
Of wit or arms.

Milton, L'Allegro, l. 23.

For-þi her-to hereþ . viii. store schire, and on half schire [Therefore hereto belongeth eight grest shires and an half shire].—Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 146, l. 23.

þer he yet on hunting for,
With mikel genge and swiþe stor.

Havelok the Dane, l. 2383.

[There he yet a hunting fared with much company and exceeding strong.]

STOUT, a Wiltshire word for the gad-fly (Akerman), from A. Sax. stut, a gnat, fly, still used in this form in Somersetshire.

Stow, in the slang phrase "stow that" (= be quiet), "stow that nonsense," which may be found in Dickens (Hard Times) and Scott, comes from O. Eng. stewen, and wiðstewen, to restrain (Oliphant, Old and Mid. English, p. 180), akin to stay, stop, stand. Compare Shetland stow! hush! silence!

STRAIGHT, old Eng. streyte, seems to owe its spelling to a confusion with O. Fr. estroit, Prov. estreit, which are from Lat. strictus, constricted, tight, narrow, "strait." It is, however, the same word as A. Sax. stroht (akin to A. Sax. stræc, strac, intense, rigid, Ger. and Bav. strack), literally stretched, direct, tense, lying evenly between point and point, past parte. of A. Sax. streccan (Ger. strecken), to stretch. Compare "It streiste forth hise siouns til to the see."—Wycliffe, Ps. lxxviii. 12.

[Sir Cadour] girdeþ streke thourge the stour.

Morte Arthure, l. 1792.

[Smites straight through the battle.]

STRAP, an Anglo-Irish term of contempt for a worthless female, like Eng. baggage, is a corruption of Ir. striopach, a harlot, also found in the forms stribrid strioboid, akin to O. Fr. strupre, Sp. estrupar, Eng. strumpet, where m is intruded (as in trumpet), Lat. stuprata, debauched, from stuprum, harlotry; "Vch strumpet þat ber is."—Böddeker, Alt-Eng. Dicht. p. 106, l. 11.

STRICKEN, in the familiar phrase of our English Bible, "well stricken in years," is probably generally understood to mean smitten or pierced by the dart of time, struck down and disabled. Ben Jonson actually uses the words,

Our mother, great Augusta, struck with time.
Sejanus, iii. 1.

and Shakespeare,

Myself am struck in years.

Taming of Shrew, ii. 1, 362.

Stricken, however, seems here to have no immediate connexion with the verb to strike, but to mean advanced in years, far progressed in the journey of life, from A. Sax. strican, to go, to continue a course, connected with streccan, to extend or stretch, Ger. streichen, to move rapidly along, to wander, old Eng. strake, stryke, strecke, to roam.

Wip sterne staues and stronge þey ouer lond
strakeþ.

Pierce the Ploughman's Crede, l. 82 (c. 1394), ed. Skeat.

A lese of Grehound with you to streke,
And hert and hynde and other lyke.

The Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 765, Hazlitt's
Early Pop. Poetry, vol. ii.

Lollerres Iyuyng in sleuthe and ouer-londe
strykers.

Vision of Piers Plowman, C. x. 159,
ed. Skeat.

The words of the Greek translated "They both were now well stricken in years," are literally "They had advanced, or made progress, in their days" (Luke i. 7). Spenser speaks of a knight "Well shot in yeares," F. Queene, V. vi. 19.

From the same verb strican, to go, comes the phrase to strike in, to enter (i.e. into the conversation, dispute, &c.), as Sir Roger de Coverley did when he heard some people talking near him in the theatre (Spectator), it being as old as the time of Orminn (about 1200), who has he strac inn. (See Oliphant, Old and Mid. English, p. 228.)

The foxe said not one worde but kneled doun lowe to th[e]rthe vnto the kyng, and to the quene and stryked him forth in to the felde.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox, p. 104 (ed. Arber).

Abraham was old and well stricken in age.—(Margin, “gone into days.”)—A. V. Genesis, xxiv. 1.

He being already well stricken in yeares married a young princesse named Gynecia.—Sidney, Arcadia, p. 9, l. 48.

North uses the strictly synonymous expression which follows:—

Being stepped in yeares, and at later age, and past marriage he stole away Helen.—Lives of Platarke, p. 40, ed. 1612.

Sur le haut de son age, well steep into yeares.—Cotgrave, s. v. Haut.

This Aglaus was a good honest man well steep in yeares.—P. Holland, Plinies Nat. History, vol. i. p. 180 (1634).

For step in age was he and ald.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 235, l. 12.

Moth.

A notice

Some dele ystept in age! So mote I gone, This goeth aright.

Cartwright, The Ordinary, act ii. sc. 2.

STRING, a provincial word for race, descent (Wright), seems to be a corruption of the old English word stren, strene, strend, now “strain,” A. Sax. strýnd, stock, race, from strýnan (streónan), to beget or breed. Yet compare lineage from Lat. linea, a line, and see RACE. Moreover A. Sax. strenge, a cord or string, was also used for a line of descent, e.g. “Of þam strenge com” [He comes of that stock].—Ælfred (Ettmüller, p. 744).

He is of a noble strain, of approved valour and confirmed honesty.—Shakespeare, Much Ado, ii. 1, l. 394.

STRIPE, meaning race, kindred (Wright), is no doubt a corruption of the Latin stirps, stirpis, of similar signification, O. Eng. stirp.

Now leaving her stirp I come to her person.—Sir R. Naunton, Fragmenta Regalia, 1630, p. 14 (ed. Arber).

STRUCK, in the phrase “well struck in yeares,” for the more common “well stricken in yeares” (A. V. Gen. xviii. 11; xxiv. 1; Josh. xiii. 1), as if it meant switten or blasted by the withering influence of time, as a tree is struck with blight or decay. See STRICKEN.

STUCK, a thrust of a sword, in Shakespeare, is a corruption of stoccata, the Italian term for a thrust in fencing, from stocco, a short sword or tuck, whence stock, a sword (Peele), old Eng. stoke (Morte Arthure, l. 1436).

I had a pass with him, rapier, scabhard and all, and he gives me the stuck in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iii. 4, 303.

If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck Our purpose may hold there.

Hamlet, iv. 7, l. 163.

ST. VITUS DANCE might seem to be a corruption of Siphita, a name for this nervous disease found in the writings of Paracelsus and his followers (Rees, Cyclopædia, s. v.). “Siphita, a kind of disease called Saint Vitus his dance” (Florio), (perhaps from a Greek siphizo, to dance). I have heard this word in the mouth of a Wiltshire woman become Viper's Dance, in that of a Surrey woman St. Viper's Dance.

It is historically certain, however, that the Chorus Sancti Viti “is so called for that the parties so troubled were wont to go to St. Vitus for help; and after they had danced there awhile were certainly freed” (Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy). When the “Dancing Mania” visited Strasburg in 1418, the sufferers were conducted to the chapels of St. Vitus, near Zabern and Rotestein, and many through the influence of devotion and the sanctity of the place were cured. An ancient German chronicle says, “St. Vits Tanz ward genant die Plag,” the plague was called St. Vitus Dance. See Hecker, Epidemics of the Middle Ages, p. 84 (Sydenham Soc.).

STRY, a small abscess or pustule on the edge of the eyelid, seems to be a remnant of the old English word sty-anje (Prompt. Parvulorum, c. 1440), styonié (Levins, Manipulus, 1570), which not improbably was understood as “sty-on-eye.” Styany, or stiany, is still in use in Norfolk, styan or styne in Cumberland and elsewhere, old Eng. stian. Compare Norweg. stigkøyna, stigje, Low Ger. stieg. [It. stianze, kibes or chill-blains.—Florio.]

The marrow of a Calf, incorporate with equall weight of wax and common oile or oile Rosat, together with an Egge, maketh a soueraigne liniment for the Stian or any other hard swellings in the Eie-lids.—Holland, Translation of Plinies Naturall Historie, 1634, tom. ii. p. 324.

Stian seems to be for styng, old Eng.

stigend, from stigh, to mount or ascend, A. Sax. stigan, to ascend, and so denotes a rising or swelling. In Ælfric, Glossary, 10th cent., occurs, Ordeolus, stigend.—Wright's Vocabularies, p. 20.

Styony, disease growyng within the eyeliddes, Sycosis.—Huloet.

Sty-on-eye.—Leicestershire Glossary, Evans, E. D. S.

Sty-an-eye.—This is a small, troublesome, inflamed pimple at the edge of the eyelid; the charm for reducing which is, rubbing the part affected nine times with a wedding-ring, or any other piece of gold. In the Anglo-Latin Lexicon, 1440, occurs, "Styanne yn the Eye," and in Beaumont and Fletcher's Mad Lovers:

I have a sty here, Chilax;
I have no gold to cure it, not a penny.
J. Timbs, Things not Generally Known,
p. 164.

By my own Experience, again, I knew that a styan, (as it is called) upon the eyelid could be easily reduced, though not instantaneously, by the slight application of any golden trinket.—De Quincey, Works, vol. xiv. p. 70.

STYLE, Ger. styl, a mis-spelling of "stile," stil, as if derived from Greek stylus (στῦλος), a pillar, in peristyle, &c., instead of from Lat. stilus, a sharp-pointed instrument, a pen, for stiglius (cf. sti(g)mulus, Gk. stigma, Ger. stichel, from the root stig, to stick). In a letter of Dr. Sam. Parr, dated 1807, he writes, "The contents of your letter are so interesting . . . and the stile so animated." When this was printed in Notes and Queries, 6th S. i. 129, it was thought necessary to append a parenthetical sic to the unusual orthography.

Finally resulteth a long and continuall phrase or maner of writing or speach, which we call by the name of stile.—Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (1589), p. 155 (ed. Arber).

This was her paramount stile above all stiles . . . to be the Mother of God.—Bp. Montague, Acts and Monuments, p. 527.

SUBDUE seems to be a derivative of the Latin subdere, to bring under, influenced as to form by the verb subjungere.

SUCKERY, a popular name for the wild endive (in Tusser, 1580), or succory, is a corrupted form of Fr. chicorée, Lat. cichorium.

Succorie is not onely sowed in gardens, but groweth also by high waies sides.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 221.

SUCKET, a common word in old writers for sweet-meats or sugar-plums (Drayton), Sucket, spice, Succus.—Levins, Manipulus, 1573, col. 93.

is perhaps not from suck (Fr. sucoté, sucked gently.—Cotgrave), but from sugar. Compare Suffolk sucker, a sweet-meat, Scot. sucker, succur, Fr. sucre, Ger. zucker, It. zucchero, sugar.

And just a wee drap sp'ritual burn in,
And gusty sucker.
Burns, Scotch Drink.

The original meaning, however, of a sucket was a slice of melon or gourd.

Carbassat, Wet sucket, made of the upper part of the long white Pompion, cut in slices.—Cotgrave.

It is, in fact, It. zuccata, "a kind of meat made of Pumpions or Gourdes" (Florio), from zucca, a gourd or pumpkin, which is a shortened form of cucuzza, a corruption of Lat. cucurbita (Diez).

Bring hither suckets, canded delicates, Weele taste some sweete meats, gallants, ere we sleep.

Marston, Antonio and Mellida, Pt. II.
act v. sc. 5.

Ranciata, Sucket of Oranges, called Orangiada.—Florio.

"Rehearse the articles of your belief."
"I believe that delicacies, junkets, quotidian feasts, suckets, and marmalades are very delectable."—T. Adams, Mystical Bedlam (Works, i. 276).

SUMMER, "a main piece of timber that supports a building, an architrave between two pillars" (Bailey; Kennett, 1695), is from Fr. sommier, a beam, under part of a bed, originally a beast of burden (sonme), Lat. sagmarius. Compare Eng. bressomer, breast-summer, and fore-summer, a Sussex word for the front rail of a waggon.

SUMMER-GOOSE, a provincial corruption and bouleversement of the word gossamer, as if it were goose-summer, the original probably being god-somer. Compare missomer in Robert of Gloucester for midsummer, and Whisson Weke in the Paston Letters for Whitsun Week. It has been conjectured, however, with some probability that summer-goose may have been originally summer-gauze, and that gossamer is the inversion. Other names for these airy filaments certainly suggest the idea of a fabric, or something spun or woven, e.g. Cleveland muz-web, Ger. sommer-fäden, summer-threads, sommer-flocken, summer-locks, sommer-webe, summer-web, Marien fäden, Marien-garn, Lady-threads, Lady-yarn (Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 227).

With summer-geese we may compare summer-colt, the Cleveland word for the undulating steamy vapour that is seen to play along a bank, &c., on a hot summer's day, Scotch summer-couts or simmer-couts.

SUMMERSET, or SOMERSET, a double corruption, summer-, somer-, for sobre (= Lat. supra), and -set, from sault (= Lat. saltrus, a leap). Older forms are somersaut (Harington, Browne's Pastorals) and somersault (Sidney), all from Fr. soubresault, It. soprasalto.

"From sommer, a beam, and sault, French, a leap," says Walker in his pronouncing dictionary. "A leap by which a jumper throws himself from a beam and turns over his head"!

Some do the summer-sault,

And o'er the bar, like tumblers, vault.

Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. canto 3.

Izaak Walton uses the strange form simber salts, as if two words:—

About which time of breeding the He and She frog are observed to use divers simber salts.—The Compleat Angler, 1653 (Murray's Reprint, p. 70).

So doth the salmon vauit,

And if at first he fail, his second somersaut

He instantly assaays. Drayton.

He cust me ower on the uthar bank with the aedle betwix my leggea, and his heid going down, he lopea the supersault.—James Melville, Diary, 1587, p. 259 (Wodrow Soc.).

Then the sly sheepe-biter issued into the midst, and summersetted and fliptflappt it twenty times above ground as light as a feather.—Nashe, Lenten Stuffe [Davies].

First that could make love faces, or could doe

The valters somersalts, or us'd to woove,

With hoiting gambols, his owne bones to breake

To make his Mistris merry.

Donne, Poems, p. 324 (1635).

SUMPTER, a pack-horse, seems to owe its modern form to the reflex influence of such words as sumptuous, sumptuary, Lat. sumptus, sumptio, a taking up (sc. on one's back). The old Eng. form is somer, "He sende his moder iijj somers laden with money" (Thoms, Early Eng. Prose Romances, ii. 28), and this is from Fr. sommier, It. somaro, Lat. sagmarius, a pack-horse, derivatives of Fr. somme, Sp. salma, It. soma, Lat. and Gk. sagma, a pack, from sattein, to pack or load.

SUNDER, a Cleveland verb meaning to air in the sun, e.g. "Lay them claithes oot to sunder a bit."—Atkinson. Perhaps the original form of the word was sun-dry, from which sunder was evolved, by a false analogy to sunder, to separate, the verbal of sundry, several.

SUNDEW, a popular name of the plant Drosera.

The hoater the Sonne shineth upon this herbe, so much the moystier it is, and the more bedewed, and for that cause it was called Ros Solis in Latine, whiche is to say in Englishe, the dewe of the Sonne, or Sonne-dewe.—H. Lyte, 1578.

It is, however, most probably a corruption of its German name sindau, "ever-dewy" (Prior). Compare syndaw, O. Eng. name for Our Lady's Mantle, and sengreen, "ever-green," the house-leek (sin = ever).

SUN-DOG, the phenomena of false suns which sometimes attend or dog the true when seen through a mist (parhelions). In Norfolk a sun-dog is a light spot near the sun, and water-dogs are light watery clouds; dog here is no doubt the same word as dag, dew or mist, as "a little dag of rain" (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1855, p. 30). Cf. Icel. dögg, Dan. and Swed. dag, = Eng. "dew." In Cornwall the fragment of a rainbow formed on a rain-cloud just above the horizon is called a weather-dog (R. Hunt, Romances and Drolls of West of England, vol. ii. p. 242).

At Whitby, when the moon is surrounded by a halo with watery clouds, the seamen say there will be a change of weather, for the "moon dogs" are about.—T. F. T. Dyer, Eng. Folk-lore, p. 38.

SURCOAT, an old word for "a coat of Arms to be worn over other Armour, a sort of Upper Garment" (Bailey), as if a mongrel compound of Fr. sur, over, and coat (like Fr. surtout, pardessus, an "over-all" or "over-coat," opposed to soutane, an under-garment), is from Fr. surcot, originally meaning "an upper kirtle, or garment worn over a kirtle" (Cotgrave). In Scottish it is an under-waistcoat. Surcot is from Low Lat. sarcotus, saricotus, a smock-frock, sarcotium, a rochet, a derivative of sarica, a garment put over one's ordinary clothes. Akin, perhaps, to this are sark, Icel. serkr, Lat. serica, &c. The sarcotium or sarcotium was usually made of silk (J. R. Planché, Cyclopædia of Costume, i. 490).

An altered form of sarcotus is Low Lat. sarrotus, whence Fr. sarrot or sarrau, a blouse or smock-frock (Scheler), Wallon saro, the same.

A duchess dereworthily dyghte in dyaperde wedis,

In a surcott of sylke fulle selkouthely hewede.
Morte Arthure, l. 3252 (E. E. T. S.).

The Surcotes white of velvet wele sitting
They were in cladde.

The Flower and the Leaf, l. 141.

The ladies all in Surcotes, that richely
Purfiled were with many a rich stone.

Id. l. 328.

Th' Arabian birds rare plumage (platted fine)
Serues her for Sur-coat.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 447.

SURLY, often supposed to stand for sour-ly, A. Sax. sur-lic (Bailey, Richardson), meant formerly, not morose, crabbed, churlish, but haughty, proud, domineering, and is a corrupt form of sir-ly, old Eng. serreli (for sere-li), i. e. sir-like, like a signor, lordly, magisterial, haughty (old Eng. sere = sir). On the other hand compare sir-name for sur-name. E. K.'s gloss on Spenser's use of syrlie is "surly, stately and prowde."

Now william on his sterne stede · now stifi
forþ rides,

So serreli þurth þe cite · al him-self one.

William of Palerne, l. 3316.

[He rides eagerly forth so lordly (or sir-like, Skeat) through the city alone by himself.]

Like mister men bene all misgone,
They heapen hylles of wrath;
Sike syrlie shepheards han we none,
They keepen all the path.

Spenser, Shepheards Calender, Julye,
l. 204.

Johnson regarded surly as having a distinct meaning from sour :—

Boswell. "Pray, Sir, have you been much plagued with authors sending you their works to revise?" Johnson. "No, Sir; I have been thought a sour surly fellow."—Boswell, Life of Johnson, vol. iv. ch. 4.

Then also there is a decency in respect of the persons with whom we do negotiate, as with the great personages his equals to be solemne and surly, with meener men pleasant and popular, stoute with the sturdie and milde with the meek.—Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (1589), p. 299 (ed. Arber).

SURRENDER is perhaps from Fr. se rendre, to give up one's self, as if from an It. sur-rendere, Lat. sub-reddere. There is no French verb surrendre.

SWALLOW, the bird, A. Sax. swalewe, Dut. zwaluw, Ger. schwalbe, O. H. Ger. swalewa, Dan. swale, Swed. swala, has been ingeniously conjectured to be derived from swale, a portico (Wachter). Dr. Prior says swale is "a word retained in Danish," and denoting the broad extended eaves, the penthouse or lean-to that surrounds farm-houses, to serve as a passage from room to room, and for storing winter fuel." Compare Icel. swala, a swallow, and svalar, a balcony. Thus swallow would be the "eaves-bird." Cognate probably are Ger. schwelle, "a sill," N. Eng. siles, main timbers of a house.

SWAN-HOPPING, a corruption of the original phrase "swan-upping," or taking up of the young swans in the Thames annually in order to mark their beaks with the royal mark.

Just then passed by two City Companies in their great barges, who had been a swan-hopping.—Horace Walpole, Letters (1746), vol. ii. p. 47.

The following notice of the ceremony appeared in the Standard of August 8th, 1876 :—

SWAN HOPPING IN THE THAMES.—The annual celebration of this custom of swan "upping," or taking up the young swans on the Thames to mark them, was duly carried out yesterday, the 7th of August, as required by ancient charter. That the term "upping" is the correct one may be gathered from the orders to the gamekeepers in the reign of Elizabeth, in which it is ordained "that the upping of all those swans, near or within the said branches of the Thames, may be all upped in one day." . . . The bird of the first year is taken up in the presence of the Sovereign's swan herd, and a mark is cut in the skin of the beak, the same as was upon the beak of the parent bird. These marks are entered in a book and kept as "a register of swannes;" any found without such mark are confiscated to the Sovereign. Considerable attention has recently been directed to the historical aspect of this ancient order of "swannes."

<sup>1</sup> This must be a provincial word, as it is not registered in Ferrall and Repp's Don. Dict., nor in Wolff's, 1779.

This order must be kept, that the upping of all those swans, near or w<sup>in</sup> the said braunches of Tems, may be upped all in on day w<sup>t</sup> the upping of the Tems, w<sup>ch</sup> is referred to Mr. Mailard, of Hampton Courte, who hath the ordering of the Tems.—Letter, 1593, Losely Manuscripts, p. 306.

How stately is he attended, when he goes to take a view of the River, or a Swan-hopping.—J. Howell, Londinopolis, p. 395.

The swan-upping—that is, the catching and taking up of the swans to place marks on the cygnets and renew those on the old birds, if obliterated—took place before the royal swan-herdsman; and the swan-herds wore swan-feathers in their caps.—J. Timbs, London and Westminster, vol. i. p. 81.

SWAN'S-FEATHER, a name for the long rapier blade formerly affixed to a musket, is a corruption of Sweynes-feather or SWINE'S-FEATHER (q.v.).

The Sweynes-feather was invented in the reign of James I. During the civil wars its name was sometimes corrupted into swan's-feather.—Penny Cyclopaedia, s.v. Arms (vol. i. p. 376).

SWARM, in the phrase "to swarm up a tree" (it occurs, e.g. in Hughes' Tom Brown's Schooldays), i.e. to scramble up a tree by hugging it with the legs and arms, in the Cumberland dialect to swarmel, seems to be another form of to squirm, which is used in the same sense. It is probably near akin to O. Eng. swarf or swerve, to climb, O. Fris. swerva, to crawl, Bav. schwarbeln.

Having swarm'd sev'n score Paces up, or more, On the right Hand, you find a kind of Floor, Which turning back, hangs o'er the Cave below.

Cotton, Wonders of the Peake, Poems, p. 308.

SWARM, in the sentence "He was so troubled with swarms," quoted by Halliwell and Wright in their edition of Nares' Glossary from Wilson's James I., is a manifest corruption of the word swawme, a qualm ("A cold swawme of feare."—Holland's Anmian. Marcel. 1609), sometimes spelt sweame. Compare Icel. svima, to be giddy, svimi, giddiness, a swimming of the head, A. Sax. svima, Dan. svimle, to be dizzy.

Women beeing newly conceiued and breeding childe haue many swawmes come ouer their heart.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. ii. 146.

In old English swim or sweem is to swoon; and so in Prov. Eng. sweem, to swoon, sweemish, sweemy, faint (Williams and Jones, Somerset Glossary), Dutch zwym, a swoon, zwymen, to swoon, zwymelen, to become dizzy (Sewel). We still say that the head swims when it is dizzy and faint.

He swounnes one the swarthe, and one swym falls.

Morte Arthure, l. 4246 (E.E.T.S.).

Swythe y swyed in a sweem 'pat yswet after. The Crowned King, l. 29 (ed. Skeat).

[Quickly I sank in a swoon that I sweat after.]

Hys body is smyte ny þe þarmes,
He swelt with a sweemelý swow.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 201, l. 140.

[His body is smitten near the bowels, He died with a swooning faint.]

A heaue feat of the tertian overtuk me, that causit me keipe my hous twa dayes befor that Sabathe; and that sam morning it ceased sa on me that I swined and lay dead.—J. Melville, Diary, 1586, p. 248.

SWEET-CICELY. This pretty name for the plant Myrrhis odorata, so suggestive of old English country life and fair milkmaids, has no more to do with the feminine name Cicely (from Cecilia), than Sweet-Alison (Lat. alyssum) has to do with the old form of Alice. It is an Anglicized form of Greek séseli, or séselis.

Decoctions of wild chicory, water-cresses, chervil, sweet Cicely, and cochlearid.—Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. vii. chap. xxi.

SWEETHEART has often been regarded as a corruption of an older sweetard, parallel to such words as dullard, drunkard, &c. (so M. Müller, Stratification of Languages), but incorrectly, as no instance of the alleged original has been found, and all old writers employ the form sweet herte, e.g. :—

And fare now well, mine owne sweet herte.
Chaucer, Troilus and Creseide, bk. v.

Ere that the Moone, O dere herte swete,
The Lion passe out of this Ariete.

Id. bk. v.

Loe, myn herte swete
This yuell dyet

Shuld make you pale and wan.

The Notbrowne Mayde, l. 301.

þat mie child mie swete hurte: scolde such þing bitide,
Allas mie child mie suete fode; þat ich hadde
forþ ibroz̄t.
Life of St. Kenelm, l. 142 (Philolog.
Soc. Trans. 1858).

As he that said to his sweete hart, whom he checked for secretly whispering with a suspected person;
And did ye not come by his chamber dore?
And tell him that: goe to, I say no more.
G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie,
1589, p. 178 (ed. Arber).

My Mall, I mark that when you mean to prove me,
To buy a Velvet gown, or some rich border,
Thou calst me good sweet heart, thou swear'st to love me.
Harington, Epigrams, bk. i. 25.

SWEFFL, } an A. Saxon word for SUEFL, } brimstone, as if connected with sweftian, to put to sleep [? stupify],
sc. by its fumes, Ger. schwefel, Dut.
zwavel, Goth. swibls, is probably a perverted form by metathesis of Lat.
sulfur, sulphur, like Eng. surfel, sur-
ful.

SWILL, the form that the good old verb sweal takes in the mouths of some persons who are afraid of being thought vulgar if they speak too much alike to their primitive forefathers. I have heard a person of this kind remark "That candle is swilling," when a malformation of the wick was only heating the tallow, and causing it to run. Compare Dorset sweäle or zweal, to singe or scorch, A. Sax. swelan (A. Sax. Version, Mark iv. 6), Eng. "swelter," "sultry," Ger. schwelen, Icel. svæla, Sansk. sval or svar, to be warm, to beam.

Sylvester remarks that the sign of Cancer doth

Bring us yeerly, in his starry shell,
Many long dayes the shaggy Earth to swele.
Du Bartas, p. 77 (1621).

SWINACY, an old form of the word which we now write quinsy, but was formerly spelt squinzie, squinancy, all from old Fr. squinancie (It. squinanzia), from Lat. cynanche, Greek kunánghchē, "a dog-throttling."

Compare the following:—

This past: in-steps that insolent insulter
The cruell Quincy, leaping like a Vulture
At Adams throat, his hollow weasand swelling.

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 209.

When Abimelech sent Sarah back to Abraham—

His wif and oðere birðe beren
ða ðe swinacie gan him nunmor deren.
Genesis and Exodus (ab. 1250), l. 1188.

[His wife and others bore children, then the Quinsy did him no more harm.]

Som for glotoni sal haf þare,
Als þe swynacy, þat greves ful sare.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 2999.

With honey and salnitre, it is singular for the Squinancy.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist.
vol. ii. p. 277.

The ashes of salt Cackerels heads burnt and reduced into a liniment with honey, discusse and resolve the Squinancy cleane.—Holland,
Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 442.

The third kind of Quinancy (called Sy- nanche) killeth Dogs, because it bloweth vpe their chaps.—Topsell, Hist. of Four- footed Beasts, p. 183.

SWINE FEATHERS, or swyn feathers, an old implement of military warfare, consisting of a stake five or six feet long, tipped with iron, and used to fix in the ground to receive a charge of cavalry, is a corruption of sven-sk (= Swedish) feathers.

I would also have each dragonier constantly to carry at his girdle two swyn feathers or foot pallsadoes.—A Brief Treatise of War, 1649 (MS.).

I may in this place reckon the Swedish feathers among the defensive arms. . . .
Gustavus Adolphus was the first Swedish king that used them.—Sir James Turner, Pal- las Armata.

See Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army,
vol. ii. p. 34.

SWINE-PIPE, } provincial names for WIND-THRUSH, } the Turdus iliacus, are said to be corruptions of wine-pipe and winc-thrush, Ger. wein-drossel or pfeif-drossel, "the thrush that grapes doth love" (Sylvester), also called weingart-vogel and grive de vindage
(Latham, in Athenæum, Sept. 21, 1872).

SYBIL, more properly "sibyl," Lat.
sibylla, Greek sibylla, said to be compounded of Sîds and bolla, the Doric form of Diôs boulé, "the counsel of Zeus," the revealer of his will. In Latin, however, sibylla would be the natural derivative of the old word sibus, skilful, knowing. The spelling sybil is due probably to the reflex influence of such words as symbol, synod, sylph, sylvan, syndie, &c.

Howell says of the Sibyls :—

They were called Siobule, that is, of the Counsels of God : Sios, in the Eolic Dialect, being Deus.—Familiar Letters, bk. iv. 43.

Cleasby and Vigfusson, however, suggest that the Greek sibulla may have been an adopted word, through some Scythian tribe, from the Norse, where völva, which perhaps originally had an initial s, svölva, has exactly the same meaning, a sibyl, prophetess, or wise woman.

SYCAMORE, the Greek sukómoros, as if the fig-mulberry, from súkon, a fig, and móron, mulberry, is really the Hebrew shikmáh, from a verb shákam, to be sick, its fruit being considered difficult of digestion.

SYLLABLE is an assimilation to other words in -able, such as parable, fable, constable, of old Eng. syllabe, Greek sullabē, Lat. syllaba.

Where it endeth a former syllabe it soundeth longish.—B. Jonson, Eng. Grammar, chap. iii.

Indeed, our English tong, hauing in vse chiefly wordes of one syllable . . . doth also rather stumble than stand vpon monasyllabis.—R. Ascham, Scholemaster, 1570, p. 145 (ed. Arber).

Ascham, in The Scholemaster, writes silabe; Ben Jonson, in his Grammar, syllabe; and so writes Sir F. H. Doyle, in his Lectures on Poetry (1869). The insertion of the superfluous l—which no language but ours exhibits, and which does not appear in syllabic—is easily accounted for. An l was slipped into the -be of syl-la-be, to give the word a more English appearance; and, in course of time, it got to be pronounced, and was welcome, as giving the organs of speech something more prehensible than before to take hold of. This is only conjecture, of course.—F. Hall, Modern English, p. 161.

SYMBEL, an old English word for a banquet, e.g. Beowulf, l. 2431 (ed. Arnold), Icelandic sumbel (which Cleasby thought might be compounded of sam- (together) and öl, a feast), O. H. Ger. sumbal, may with more probability be regarded as a naturalized form of Lat. symbola, Greek symbolé, a feast to which every one contributes his share.

SYREN, a false spelling of siren, Greek seirén, a captivating nymph (from seiráo, to enchain, seirá, a rope, or band), owing to a mistaken notion that, like many other words, syrtes, syрма, syrus, it took its origin from the Greek verb syro (súro), to draw or drag forcibly.

SYREN, in the sense of the unwholesome damp of eventide, a blight, a word sometimes found in old writers, is a corruption of serene of the same meaning, Fr. serain, seréin, Span. sereno, apparently from Lat. serena (sc. hora), the evening regarded as the serene time of the day, and influenced in meaning by sera (the late hour), soir.

Serain, calm weather, the mildew or harmful dew of some summer evenings, also the evening.—Cotgrave.

The fogs and the syrene offend us more.

Daniel, Queen's Arcad. i. 1.

They like the syrens blast.

Ellis, Specimens, iii. p. 241.

Compare—

Some serene blast me.

B. Jonson, Fox, ii. 6.

Wherever death doth please t' appear,
Seas, serenes, swords, shot, sickness, all are there.

Id. Epigram on Sir John Roe.

They had already by way of precaution armed themselves against the Serena with a candle.—Gentleman Instructed, p. 108 [Davies].

SYVEWARM, } old Scotch words for SYVEWARIN, } the first magistrate of a town (Jamieson), corruptions of sovereign.

T.

TABBY, a name for a striped or brindled cat, as if marked like tabby (tabinet), a waved or watered silk (Fr. tabis, It. tabi, Arab. attābī, orig. the name of the quarter of Bagdad where it was manufactured, called after Prince Attab.—Devic), just as Herrick calls barred clouds "counter changed tabbies in the ayre" (see Yonge, Christian Names, i. 123).

There can be little question that Tabby here stands for Tibbie, a pet name for a cat, derived from Tibalt or Tybal (= Theobald), the proper name for puss in the old Beast Epic of the Middle Ages.

The title of the 10th chap. of Caxton's Reynard the Fox (1481) is "How the kynge sente another tyme tybert the catte for the foxe, and how tybert spedde with reynart the foxe."

Tho' you were Tybert the long-tailed prince of cats.

Dekker, Satiromastix.

Ben Jonson uses tiberts for cats, and Mercutio in Romeo and Juliet addresses Tybalt as "Good king of cats" (iii. 1, l. 80).

"TAILORS, NINE MAKE A MAN," said to be a corruption of "nine tailers (itself corrupted from tellers) make it a man," i.e. nine counting strokes at the end of a knell proclaim the death of a male adult (Blackley, Word Gossip, p. 76). Cf.—

The nine sad knells of a dull passing bell.

Quarles, Emblems, bk. iv. 15.

At Woodborough the Passing bell consists of three tolls thrice repeated for a man, and two tolls thrice repeated for a woman.—Jewitt, Halfhours among Eng. Antiquities, p. 176.

An old homily for Trinity Sunday declares that at the death of a man three bells were to be rung as his knell, and two bells for a woman (Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalend. i. 294).

It is observable that Taylor the Water-poet has a version of the phrase conformable to this, speaking of

The slaader that three taylers are one man.

Works, 1630, iii. 73.

Compare the following:—

God made him a man, he hath made himself a beast; and now the tailor (scarce a man himself) must make him a man again.—T. Adams, The Soul's Sickness, Works, l. 487.

Similarly taylor! was formerly the customary exclamation of a bystander when one came suddenly down on his tail or back, another form evidently of tailer! just as we often speak of one "coming a cropper" or "taking a header." Vide Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 1, and Nares, s.v.

TALLWOOD, wood cut up for firing, Fr. taille, bois taillis, from tailler, to cut.

Tallwood, billets, faggots, or other firewood.—Calthrop's Reports, 1670.

They are also to inquire after them, who go to the Countrey, and ingrosse any Billet, tall-wood, Fagot, Fosard, or other fire-wood.—J. Howell, Londinopolis, p. 393.

TALLY-GRAFT, the form that telegraph assumes in N. W. Lincolnshire (Peacock).

TANGLE, as a word for sea-weed, does not refer to the matted and confused mass in which the wrack is cast up upon the shore, but is the same word as Icel. þang, kelp or bladder-wrack, also þöngull, Dan., Scot. and Shetl. tang.

If with thee the roaring wells
Should gulf him fathom-deep in brine;
And hands so often clasp'd with mine,
Should toss with tangle and with shells.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, x.

TANSY, a Cumberland word for a public-house ball (Ferguson), is obviously the same word as Fr. danser, to dance, Ger. tansen, O. H. Ger. dinsan, thinsan, to draw (lead along the dance), Goth. (at-)thinsan, to draw (Diefenbach, ii. 704). The word is found in the Scottish children's rhyme which they chant as they dance round in a ring,

Here I gae round the jingie-ring,
And through my merrie-me-tansie.

Jamieson.

Hence possibly the phrase "something like a tansy," used by Swift and Sterne (Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary) for comme il faut, in perfect order.

TART, as a name for a pie or piece of pastry, seems to have been accommodated to tart, A. Sax. teart, with reference to the subacid flavour of the fruit of which it is composed. Tort would more correctly correspond to It. torta, Fr. tourte, Ger. torte, Low Lat. torta (sc. panis), i.e. "twisted bread," a "twist" (cf. Welsh torth, a loaf). However Scheler and Wedgwood think otherwise.

TASSEL, an old corruption of teasel, A. Sax. tesel.

Then is there a large close called Tasel Close, for that there were tassels planted for the use of cloth-workers.—Stowe, Survey, p. 63 (ed. Thoms).

TASSEL, } a species of hawk
TASSEL-GENTLE, } frequently mentioned by the Elizabethan writers, was originally and more properly called a tiercel or tiercel-gentle, Fr. tiercelet. The male bird is said to have got this name from being one third smaller than the female.

O for a falconer's voice
To lure this tassel-gentle back again.
Romeo and Juliet, ii. 2.

The tercell egle, as ye know full wele,
The foule royall, above you all in degre,
The wise and worthie, the secret true as stele.

Chaucer, Assembly of Fowles, l. 396.

Having farre off espyde a Tassel gent,
Which astraer her his nimble winges doth straine.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, III. iv. 49.

TEA OCCUPAGE, the name said to be given to a tea-service in the County Down, Ireland (Notes and Queries, 5th S. vi. 358), is evidently a corruption of equipage.

TEASICK, a Scotch word for a consumption (Jamieson), a corrupt form of phthisic; so also Prov. Eng. tissick, a tickling cough (Wright), and perhaps Gaelic teasach, a fever, as if from teas, heat. Similarly Topsell uses Pursicke for pursy or pursiness in horses (Four-footed Beasts, p. 376).

TEA-TATTLING, the Cleveland term for the equipment of the tea-table, tea-things, has no reference to the gossip that is indulged in over the social cup, but is a corruption of tea-tackling (Atkinson).

TEA-TOTALERS, an occasional misspelling of tee-totalers, as if it meant those who were totally for tea. Andersen (p. 25) holds tee-total to come from T. total, a shortening of Temperance total. It is more likely to be an intensive reduplication giving a superlative sense, as in tip-top for first-rate.

This giant had quite a small appetite . . . and was also a tea-totaller.—Thackeray, Cornhill Magazine, vol. iv. p. 758.

On Richard Turner, a hawker of fish at Preston.

Beneath this stone are deposited the remains of Richard Turner, author of the word Teetotal, as applied to abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, who departed this life on the 27th day of October 1846, aged 56 years.—R. Pike, Remarkable Blunders, Advertisements, Epitaphs, p. 154.

TEETHY, a Scotch word meaning crabbed, ill-natured, as if, suggests Jamieson, showing the teeth [like a snarling dog]. It is evidently a less correct form of titty, ill-humoured, testy, which he observes nearly resembles North Eng. teety or teeihy, fretful, fractious, "as children when cutting their teeth" (Grose). Brocket gives teethy, and Atkinson (who mistakes the derivation), teaty, tutty, testy, peevish, touchy (Cleveland Glossary). An older form is tetty.

If they lose, though but a trifle . . . they are so choleric and tetty that no man may speak with them.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 119 [Nares].

All these words I believe to be corrupted forms of Fr. îtu, headstrong, wilful, perverse (cf. entêté, obstinate, self-willed), just as testy is from the older Fr. testu, heady.

Tettish, and teatish, which Nares quotes from Beaumont and Fletcher, with the meaning of headstrong, wilful (like a child, he thinks, peevish for want of the teat!), are further corruptions.

Ray, however, gives "Toothy, Peevish, crabbed."—North Country Words, p. 63 (1742).

Teety, Teathy, peevish, cross.—E. B. Peacock, Lonsdale Glossary.

Lightly; hee is an olde man (for those yeares are most wayward and teatish) yet be he nener so olde or so froward.—Nash, Pierce Penitence, 1592, p. 35 (Shaks. Soc.).

TEMPT, a bad orthography of tent, Fr. tenter, Lat. tentare, a frequentative of tendere, to stretch, and so means to keep on the tenter hooks, to hold in a state of tension or suspense, to make trial of one's moral fibre, to prove or test. This corruption is found also in old Fr. tempter and Lat. temptare, and seems due to a false analogy with words like temper, temperate, temporal. So attempt comes through an old Fr. atenter from Lat. attendere. Compare tent, to probe a wound, which is the same word. Tentation is a common old form (e.g. A. V. Exod. xvii. 7, marg.) of temptation, and we still say tentative, not temptative. On the other hand, tense, the grammatical term, is an incorrect form of tempse, Fr. temps.

Sainte Powel seið—"Fidelis est Deus qui non sinet nos temptari ultra quam possumus." God, he seið, is treowe: nul he nener þolien þet te deonel tempti us ouer þet he isihð wel þet we muwen iðolien: auh iðe temptaciun he haueð iset to þe ueonde a merke, ase þauh he seide.—tempte hire so ueor, auh ne schalt tu gon no furðer.—Ancren Riwele, p. 228.

And as for sin, he suffered the outward in- vitement of tentation in great measure, but not the inward rebellion of concupiscence to which we are obnoxious.—Bp. Hucket, Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 206.

Felle temptande tene towched his hert.

Alliterative Poems, p. 45, l. 283.

The temptation was no sooner in his heart but the words were in his mouth.—H. Smith, Sermons, p. 171.

In the following we have the two forms side by side:—

Goda temptation maketh us happy: Blessed is he that endureth temptation, James i. but the Devils temptation brings us to misery.—Bp. Andrewes, Preparation to Prayer, 1642, p. 111.

God is faithful, which shal not suffer you to be tempted aboue your strengthe: but shal in the middes of the temptation make a way, that ye may be able to beare it.—1 Cor. x. 13, Genevan Vers. 1557.

TENABLE WEDNESDAY is stated by Gunning in his Lent Fast to have been a name sometimes given to Wednesday in Holy Week. Probably this was a popular corruption of Tenebræ Wednesday, it being customary in the pre-reformation church to put out the lights at the evening service on that evening, one by one, till the church was left in darkness (tenebræ). See Blunt, Annotated Book of Common Prayer, p. 98.

Hit is called w<sup>d</sup> diuers men Tenobles, but holi chbrch calleth it Tenebras, as Raccionale Diuinorum seth, þ̄ is to sey, thicnes or derknes to commemorate the betrayel of our lord by night.—MS. Homily, quoted in Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalendarium, ii. 370.

Het is callyd w<sup>t</sup> 3ow Tenubulles, but holy churche callyth hit tenebras, þ̄ is to sey derknesse.—Id. 371.

Compare Sp.

Tinieblas, certaine prayers or euensongs, said in the night, the wednesday, thursday, and friday night next before Easter day, in mournfull tune, and after every Psalme to put out a light till all be put out, and so to say or sing Miserère in the darke, and then depart.—Minshew.

TEN-PENNY NAILS are not nails ten of which may be got for a penny, but properly ten-pun'y or ten-pun'-nails, i.e. ten-pound, large nails, a thousand of which will weigh ten pounds (the old form of the verb to pound was pun).

It is surprising how slowly the commonest mechanical terms find their way into dictionaries professedly complete. I may mention, as instances of this, that penny, a denomination of the sizes of nails, as a six-penny, or a ten-penny nail, though it was employed by Featly two hundred years ago, and has been in constant use ever since, is not to be found in Webster.—Marsh, The Eng. Language, p. 126 (ed. Smith).

Six-penny, eight-penny, ten-penny nails, are nails of such sizes, that a thousand will weigh six, eight, or ten pounds, and in this phrase, therefore, penny seema to be a corruption of pound.—Ibid. note in loco.

He fell fierce and foule upon the Pope himselfe, threatening to loosen him from his chayre, though he were fastened thereto with a tenpeny naile.—Abel Redivivus, 546.

Why, it's been at livery in the Harrow-road, eating its head off, these two months. Sent up the iron trade wonderful. Tenpeny nails are worth a shilling now.—Jokes and Wit of Douglas Jerrold, p. 189.

TEN TOES. It has often been asserted that the common folk of Lancashire have sometimes called a Michaelmas goose, "a goose on ten toes" (Nares, Brand, Pop. Antiq. vol. i. p. 367, ed. Bohn), and that this is a humorous mistake for "a goose intentos," which Blount asserts was a name given to the bird because the old Latin collect for the 16th Sunday after Pentecost (our 17th Sunday after Trinity)—about which time it was usually eaten—ended with the words "bonis operibus . . . intentos," "given to all good works." Certainly Sundays were often familiarly named from some striking word or phrase which took hold of the imagination of the common people, e.g. Stir up Sunday, Fig Sunday, Palm Sunday, &c. However, the whole of the above account is very questionable, and that the expression ever was used is denied by Mr. Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalendarium, vol. i. p. 349.

TENT-WORT, a popular name for wall rue, was originally taint-wort, being used as a cure for the taint or rickets (Prior).

TERMAGANT, a corrupt spelling of ptarmigan, in the works of Taylor the Water Poet.

Heath-cocks, capercaillies and termagants.

The Pennyless Pilgrimage, 1618 (ed. Hindley).

TEST, to examine critically, to put to the proof, to try one's veracity or trustworthiness, is sometimes mentally associated with attest, Lat. testis, a witness, testari, to testify, to call as witness, as if the original meaning were to call into court as a witness, to bring to book, "to the law and the testimony." Thus Bailey gives "Test, Lat. testimonium, an Oath appointed by act of Parliament for renouncing the Pope's supremacy," &c. It is really derived from old Fr. test, a potsherd or earthen pot, It. testo, "the test of silver or gold—a Goldsmith's cruce or melting pot" (Florio), Lat. testum, an earthen pot.

So "to test" a thing, or "put it to the test," is properly to submit it to the crucible or melting pot to assay the quality of its metal, and the word is akin, not to testify, but to testy, heady, Fr. testu, from teste, head (Mod. Fr. tête), Lat. testa, a skull, originally an earthen vessel. Compare It. coppellare, from coppella, a little cup, a cupel, "to refine or bring gold or silver to his right and due test or loye" (Florio).

In the following teste is a vessel for assaying metals:—

Our cementing and fermentation,
Our ingottes, testes, and many things mo.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 16286.

Let there be some more test made of my metal,

Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, act i. sc. 1, l. 50.

Not with fond shekels of the tested gold.

Id. act i. sc. 2, l. 149.

Test appears to have slumbered a long while after the days of Shakespeare. Our countrymen [Americans] falsely have the credit of reviving it; and it is now accepted English again. Even such a purist as Lord Macaulay uses it more than once, and it is found in the pages of Dr. Arnold, Abp. Whately, Mr. De Quincey, Mr. W. E. Gladstone, and Mr. E. A. Freeman.—F. Hall, Modern English, p. 300.

She cannot break through a well-tested modesty.—Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, vol. iii. p. 187.

But I will test (as an American would say; though, let it be observed, in passing, that I do not advocate the use of Americanisms)—I will test Mr. Campbell's assertion.—Southey, The Doctor (1-vol. ed.), p. 397.

TERRAPIN, the American name of a species of edible tortoise or turtle, formerly spelt tarapin, terebin, and torope, is a corruption of the Indian word toarebe, a tortoise.—Bartlett, Dict. of Americanisms, p. 699 (4th ed.).

THAMES, in the proverbial saying, "He will never set the Thames on fire," is said to be a corruption of the old word temse, a sieve or searce, Belgian tems, It. tamiso, Dan. tamis,

N. Fris. tems, Dut. teems, Fr. tamis, so called from the stuff of which it is made (tammy). Similarly, in the Cleveland dialect, which has temse in common use, a tiffany is a sieve, properly one made of the fine material called tiffany (Atkinson, Glossary, s.v.).

"To set the temse on fire" would be a hyperbolic way of saying to work it so rapidly and energetically that the frame grows hot and is in danger of taking fire, and then, figuratively, to challenge attention by more than ordinary power or ability.

However, as William Langland (1393) uses the comparison of "a spark of fire falling in the Thames" for anything that is utterly quenched and put out, the phrase "to set the Thames on fire" may very well have risen as an hyperbole for doing something marvelous or admirable, Thames being used here (like Vergil's Achelöia pocula) as a general word for water.

Wickedede dedes

Fareþ as a fonk of fuþr þat ful a-myde
temese.

Vision of Piers Plowman, Pass. vii. l. 335, Text C.

Cf.—

It is, to geue him, as muche almes or neede
As cast water in tems.

Heywood.

And "to woke with themese," to moisten the Thames with (Vision of P. P., Pass. xviii. 71, Skeat, in loc.).

THICK, as colloquially used in the sense of familiar, intimate as bosom-friends are, might seem to be a metaphorical use of thick, Icel. þ ykkir, thronged, stout, as if firmly united and knitted together like the threads of some closely woven material, compact and fast in the bonds of friendship. It certainly appears to have been so understood by Burns when he says of The Two Dogs,

Nae doubt but they were fain o' ither,
An' unco pack un' thick thegither.

Poems, p. 2 (Globe ed.).

Compare Scot. thrang, intimate. "To make thick wi'," to ingratiate one's self with (Jamieson).

However, it is probably a distinct word of Scandinavian origin, near akin to Icel. þykkja (also þykkja and þykkja), to be esteemed or valued, þykkja, to know, to know one another, (Dep.) to like or be pleased, þekkr, agreeable, pleasant, þökk, pleasure, liking (cognate with think and thank). Compare Dan. tække, grace, tækkelig, pleasing, tækkes, to please, tak, thanks, tykke, opinion, pleasure, but tyk, thick. In the Craven dialect (Yorks.) cronies are said to be "As thick as inkle-weavers," or "As thick as thack" [= thatch].

Newcome and I are not very thick together.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. xxiv.

THIEF, a popular name for an inequality in the wick of a candle, or loose portion of it that falls into the tallow, causing it to waste and smoke, so called as if it stole so much of the candle. It may be a derivative of the A. Sax. þefian, to rage, originally to be hot or burning, akin to Lat. tepeo, Sansk. tap, to be warm (see Pictet, Origines Indo-Européennes, tom. ii. p. 507), and Icel. þefr, a smell [? of something burning], þefja, to emit a smell, to stink. So swealing (the result of a thief) is from A. Sax. swelan, to scorch or burn.

The least known evil unrepented of is as a thief in the candle.—Sam. Ward, A Coal from the Altar, Sermons, 1636.

If there be a theefe in the Candle (as we use to say commonly) there is a way to pull it out; and not to put out the Candle, by clapping an Extinguisher presently upon it.—J. Howell, Forraine Travell, 1642, p. 77 (ed. Arber).

If a thief be in his candle, blow it not out, lest thou wrong the flame; but if thy snuffers be of gold, snuff it.—Quarles, Judgment and Mercy, p. 132 (Repr. 1807).

The candle will never burn clear while there is a thief in it.—Thos. Brooks, Cabinet of Choice Jewels, 1669, Works, vol. iii. p. 295.

Maoy break themselves by intemperate courses, as candles that have thieves in them, as we say, that consume them before their ordinary time.—Sibbes, Works, vol. iv. p. 355.

Un voleur! un voleur! cried Mrs. Nugent, at an assembly. It turned out to be a thief in the candle!—Horace Walpole, Letters, vol. ii. p. 200 (ed. Cunningham).

An old name for the mushroom growth on the wick of a candle was a bishop, probably from the prelates of the church in the troublous time of the Reformation having become a by-word for ruthless burning. When milk was burnt in boiling, the common saying was, "The bishop has set his foot in it."

Fungo, that fry round in a burning candle called a bishop.—Florio, 1611.

The value of the above conjecture is lessened by the curious parallelism afforded by the Wallon dialect of French, where larron is a part of the wick of an unsuffed candle which falls burning on the tallow and causes it to melt (Sigart, Glossaire).

THIEF, a provincial word for a bramble, as if synonymous with "country lawyer," another word for the same, both apparently from the fleecing propensities of the genus Rubus (Evans, Leicestershire Glossary, E. D. S.).

The wicked are as briars and bushes that rob the sheep of their coats, which come to them for shelter.—T. Adams, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 479.

But thief is probably a corruption; compare A. Sax. þefe-born, þýfe-born, the tufty thorn, buckthorn, or bramble (Cockayne; Etmüller, p. 607), from þýfe, foliage (tufty.—Cockayne), þýf, luxuriant. Theve-thorn occurs in Early Eng. Psalter, Ps. lvii. 10, and Wycliffe has the same word for bramble, Judges ix. 14.

In The Owl and the Nightingale, the owl says,

Ich an loth smale fozle,
That ftoth bi grunde an hi thuele.
l. 278 (Percy Soc. ed.).

[I am hateful to small fowl that fly by the ground and underwood.]

THIEF, a rustic word for a "young ewe" in E. Lisle, Observations in Husbandry, 1757.

As a ewe of the second year is also called a two-teeth (Id. p. 361), it is probable that this word is a contraction of twoteef, a common pronunciation of two-teeth. Compare Lat. bidens, a sheep, and Sansk. shóqant, a young ox, literally "six-teeth" (shash + dant).

THIRDBOROUGH, an old name for a constable (Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, i. 1), is said to be a corruption of headborough [? th'headborough], which is the same as tithingman in the north, or borsholder in the south (Gentleman's Magazine, July, 1774). See Spelman, s.v. Headborow, Friborgus; Prompt. Parvulorum, s.v. Heed borow.

THOUGHTS, an old word for the THWARTS of a boat, which see.

THREED, an occasional spelling in old authors of thread (A. Sax. þræd, Dan. træd, Dut. draad, Icel. þráðr, Ger. draht, a twisted line, from A. Sax. þrawan, Dut. dracyen, Ger. drehen, to twist), as if it consisted of three filaments, like twine, a cord of two strands. It is also spelt thrid and thrid, see Nares. Compare It. trena, a threefold rope, from Lat. trinus; twill = Lat. (*divi-*lic-s) bilis, a fabric of two threads; drill, drilling = Lat. trilis, stuff of three threads. So Shetland treed, a thread, and tree, three (Edmonston).

Then, taking thrise three heares from off her head,

Them trebly breaded in a threefold lace,
And round about the Pots mouth bound the thread.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, III. ii. 50.

Small Cloudes carie water; slender threedes showe sure stiches; little heares haue their shadowes.—S. Gosson, Schoole of Abuse, 1579, p. 16 (ed. Arber).

THREE THREADS, in the phrase, now obsolete, "A pint of three threads," is a corruption of three thirds, and denoted a draught, once popular, made up of a third each of ale, beer, and "twopenny," in contradistinction to "half-and-half." This beverage was superseded in 1722 by the very similar porter or "entire."—Chambers' Cyclopædia, s.v. Porter.

Ezekiel Driver . . . having disorder'd his piamater with too plentiful a morning's draught of three-threads and old Pharaoh, had the misfortune to have his cart run over him.—T. Brown, Works, ii. 286 [Davies].

THRESHOLD denotes etymologically, not the sill under the door of a barn which holds in the threshing, but the piece of wood which is well beaten or trodden by the feet of those coming and going, it being the old English threswold, threshwald, A. Sax. þerswald, from þerscan, to beat or thresh, and weald, wold, wood.

Al entré del bus est la lyme (the therswald, al. threshwald).—Arundel MS. quoted by Way, Prompt. Parv. s.v. Ovurslay.

And she set down hire water-pot anon,
Beside the threswold in an oxes stall.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 8164.

In the dialect of Westmoreland and Cumberland the threshold is called threswood (Ferguson).

Wycliffe, in his translation of the Bible, 1389, uses the forms thresfold, thresfold, thrisfold (Forshall and Madden, Glossary, s.v.), as if it meant that which folds, or pens in, the threshing.

Aubrey seems to use the word as synonymous with threshing-floor. Speaking of the times of the Plantagenets and Tudors, he says the barns then stood on one side of the courtyard: "They then thought not the noise of the threshold ill musique."

In Icelandic the word appears, probably in its primitive form, as þreskjöldr, i.e. a threshing-ground (from þreskja and völlr, a field or paddock), later a doorsill; corrupted forms are þreskilldi, þreskalda, þreskolli, þreskuldr, and, strangest of all, þrespskjöldr, as if from þrep, a ledge, and skjöldr, a shield or shelter (Cleasby). Cf. O. H. Ger. dirscuwili, Dan. tærskel.

A Devonshire corruption is drekstool.

Her ne'er budg'd over the drekstool from wan week to another.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 10.

In the Vocabulary of S. Gall (7th cent.), drisguflī (i.e. drisc-uflī) is the gloss on sublimātare.

THRICE-COCK, a Leicestershire word for the missel-thrush (Evans, E. D. S.), represents A. Sax. þrisc (Somner), apparently a variant of þrostle, old Eng. thrystel.

THROUGH-STONE, a flat grave-stone, so spelt from some confusion with through, a bond-stone, which goes through a wall entirely. It is old Eng. "thurwhe-stone of a grave, Sarcophagus."—Prompt. Parv., A. Sax. þruh, þurh, a tomb, Icel. þró, a trough, stein-þró, a stone-coffin, Ger. truhe, a chest.

The cors that dyed on tre was berid in a stone,

The thrughe beside fande we, and in that grave cors was none.

The Towneley Mysteries, p. 290.

See Parker, Glossary of Architecture, s.v. Through.

In Cumberland and Cleveland a through or thruuff is a flat tomb-stone as distinct from a head-stone (Ferguson, Atkinson).

Ine stonene þruh biclused heteueste. Marie wome & þeos þruh weren his ancren huses.—Ancren Riule, p. 378.

[In a stone tomb (He was) shut up fast. Mary's womb and this tomb were his anchorite houses.]

Hi wende to þulke stede; þer as heo was ileid er,
& heucde vp þe lid of þe þrouȝ: & fonde hire ligge þer.

Early Eng. Poems (Philolog. Soc. 1858),
p. 70, l. 168.

[They went to that place where she was formerly laid, and heaved up the lid of the coffin and found her lying there.]

As a clot of clay þou were for-clonge,
So deed in þrouȝ þanne men þee þrewe.

Hymns to the Virgin and Child, p. 13,
l. 32 (ed. Furnivall).

He hyne leyde in one þruh of stone,
þat he hedde newe imaked, to him self one.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 51, l. 512
(E.E.T.S.)

These London kirkyards are causeyed with through-stanes, panged hard and fast thegither.
—Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, ch. iii.

It will be but a muckle through-stane laid down to kiver the gowd—tak the pick till't, and pit mair strength, man.—Scott, The Antiquary, ch. xxv.

THRUSH, a popular name for an eruption in the mouth or species of sore-throat, has not been explained. As thrush, the name of the bird, has been formed out of throistle, A. Sax. þrosle, þrostle (Dan. and Ger. drossel), old Eng.
thrustylle (or thrushill).—Prompt Parv.;
so probably thrush, the disease, is only a shortened form of throistle, for throistle, from A. Sax. þrot-swyle (Somner), a throat-swelling, inflammation of the throat, or quinsy. Compare Ger. dros-sel, the throat.

This morning I hear that last night Sir Thomas Teddiman, poor man! did die by a thrush in his mouth.—Pepys, Diary, May 13, 1668.

For the contraction, compare North
Eng. thropple, to throttle or strangle, also the windpipe, from old Eng. throthebolle, A. Sax. þrot-bolla.

And by the throthe-bolle he caught Alein.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 4271.

THRUSH-LOUSE (North Eng.), the Cheslip, woodlouse, or millepes, a corruption of O. Eng. thurs-louse, i.e. the insect of the thurse (thirs and thrisse).
—Wycliffe, A. Sax. thurs = Puck, or Robin-goodfellow, a goblin or giant.
Mouffet and Skinner thought it was the insect sacred to the god Thor. See Adams in Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1860,
p. 17 seqq. So hobthrush, a hobgoblin, is probably for hobthurs (Notes and Queries, 5th S. vii. 203). For the transposition, compare thrust, an old and prov. form of thirst (Nares, Wright).

THWARTS, rowing benches, so called as if seats placed athwart or across the boat (A. Sax. thweorh, Icel. thwert), have no more connexion with thwart than transoms (cross-pieces) have with trans.
The word is a corruption of the older form, "Thoughts, the rowers' seats in a boat" (Bailey), which is itself a perverted form of A. Sax. þofte, a rowing bench, Mod. Icel. þotta, old Icel. þopta, Dan. tofte, Swed. toft, Ger. doft, Dut.
doften.

Thoughts, seats whereon the rowers sit,
Doften.—Sewel, Dutch Dict. p. 648 (1708).

Bede has geþofsta for a companion or ally, "one in the same boat."

TICK, in the phrase "to go upon tick," or "to obtain goods on tick," meaning on credit, is a word of considerable antiquity.

Every one runs upon tick, and thou that had no credit a year ago has credit enough now.—Diary of Abraham de la Pryme (Surtees Soc.), p. 110.

The Mermaid tavern is lately broke, and our Christ Church men bear the blame of it, our ticks, as the noise of the town will have,
amounting to 1,500*l.*—Letter of Prideaur,
Dean of Norwich, May, 1661.

I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,
And once more, for that carcass vile,
Fight upon tick.

Butler, Hudibras, Pt. I. canto iii.

Of Butler himself it is said by Oldham,
Reduced to want, he in due time fell sick,
Was fain to die, and be interred on tick.

Satires, 1683, Bell's ed. p. 234.

"My tick is not good," wrote Sedley, 1668.

It is a mutilated form of ticket, a tradesman's bill, in which goods are booked to one's credit, a person being then said to "run on ticket."—Fuller.

No matter whether upon landing you have money or no, you may swim in twenty of their boats over the river upon ticket.—
Dekker, Gul's Hornbook, ch. vi. 1609.

Though much indebted to his own back and belly, and unable to pay them, yet he hath credit himself, and confidently runs on ticket with himself.—T. Fuller, Holy State, 1648, p. 114.

Compare ticket, a pass, giving the entrée into good society, an approximation to étiquette.

Well dressed, well bred,
Well equipped, is ticket good enough
To pass us readily through every door.
Cowper, The Task, bk. iii.

She's very handsome and she's very finely dressed, only somehow she's not—she's not the ticket, you see.—Thackeray, The New-comes, ch. vii.

TICK, one of the rural sports mentioned in Drayton's Polycolbion (xxx.):—
At hood-wink, barley-break, at tick, or prison-base. (Nares, s.v.)

In Lincolnshire, ticky-touch-wood.

It is probably a corruption of tig, a game still popular with children in most parts of Great Britain, the humour of which consists in evading the touch of one of their number, who acts as pursuer, an exemption from the liability to be touched being allowed on certain pre-arranged conditions, such as reaching and holding wood, iron, &c. With tig compare tag in Lat.
ta(n)g-o, te-tig-i.

Compare Dut. tikken, Low Ger.
ticken, to touch gently.

They all played tagg till they were well warmed.—H. Brooke, Fool of Quality, i. 87 [Davies].

In Queen Mary's reign tag was all the play, where the lad saves himself by touching of cold iron.—Brand, Popular Antiquities, ii.
443.

TICK, in the phrase "As full as a tick," has been variously explained as meaning, "as full as a bed-tick is of feathers," or "as the bloodthirsty insect, the tick, when it has drunk to repletion." These are confessedly mere conjectures. The expression is in all probability identical with Plan comme enne digue, which is found in the Wallon patois (Sigart), meaning "Full as a dike or dam."
This saying would be full of significance in the Low Countries, whence probably it came to us. So tick would be the same word as Ger. teich, A. Sax.
dik, Dut. dijk, Dan. dige, Icel. dike, old Fr. digue, Norfolk dick, dike.

TIGHT is generally regarded as having been originally a past participle of to tie, A. Sax. tygan, as a knot when fast tied is said to be tight. Indeed, Spenser uses tight for tied (A. Sax. tygde, tyged):—

And thereunto a great long chaine he tight.
Faerie Queene, VI. xii. 34.

So Tooke, and Chambers, *Etymolog.
Dictionary*.

The word was formerly spelt thight, old Eng. thyht, and meant close, compact, not leaking, as in water-tight, Cleveland theet, water-tight, the same word as Icel. þétrr, close, tight, not leaking, Dan. tæt, staunch, "taut," Prov. Swed. tjett, tjätt, Dutch dicht, all perhaps akin to thick, Ger. dick.

Orkney thight, close, so as not to admit water (Edmondston).

Thyht, hool fro brekyng, not brokyn, Integer, Solidus. Thyhtyn', or make thight, In-tegro, consoldo.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Gif t' vessel beean't theet, t' watter 'll wheeze.—Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p.
528.

This is that [cuticle] which serpents cast every yeere, we call it the Slough. . . . It is thighter or more compact than the skin itself, whence it is that those watery humours
. . . doe easily passe through the skin, but hang often in the Cuticle. [Margin] The thightnesse of it manifested.—H. Crooke.
Description of the Body of Man, 1631, p. 72.

TIGHT, when applied to a young person in the sense of active, well-made, lively, as for instance when Arbutnot speaks of "a tight clever wench," seems to suggest the idea of one well-knit, compact in figure, and girt for action, as opposed to looselimbed, flaccid, laxus, lazy.

Gie me the lad that's young and tight,
Sweet like an April meadow.

Ramsay, The Auld Man's Best Argument.

Blythe as a kid, wi' wit at will,
She blooming, tight, and tall is.

Ramsay, Bessy Bell and Mary Gray.

Here the tight lass, knives, combs and scissors
spies,

And looks on thimbles with desiring eyes.
Gay, Pastoral, vi.

The old Eng. form of the word is teyte, tayt, the original meaning probably being lively, playful, joyous, Icel.
teitr, glad, cheerful, A. Sax. tât— þe laddes were kaske and teyte.

Havelok the Dane, l. 1841

(E.E.T.S.)—

i.e. strong and active. In the same poem we find men baiting bulls "with hundes teyte" (l. 2331).

I schal biteche yow þo two þat tayt arn & quoynt.

Alliterative Poems, ed. Morris, B. 871.

[Lot of his daughters—"I shall deliver you the two that are lively and pretty."]

Gawin Douglas, in his Bukes of Eneados, 1553, has tait, = lively, playful:—

In lesuris and on lewis litill lamnes
Full tait and trig socht bletand to thare dammes.

Prologue to Booke XII.

Banff. ticht, to tidy, and ticht, neat,
“a ticht lass” (Gregor).

Thou fumblest, Eros; and my queen's a squire
More tight at this than thou: dispatch.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, act iv. sc. 4, l. 15.

Hold, sirrah, bear you these letters tightly;
Sail like my pinnace to these golden shores.
Shakespeare, The Merry Wives of Windsor,
act i. sc. 3, l. 89.

He had a roguish twinkle in his eye,
And shone all glittering with ungodly dew,
If a tight damsel chanced to trippen by.
Thomson, Castle of Indolence, lxix.

By all that's good, I'll make a loving wife,
I'll prove a true pains-taker day and night,
I'll spin and card, and keep our children
tight.

Guy, The What D'ye Call It, i. 1.

O. Eng. tite, tyte, quickly (Story of the Holy Rood, p. 81, ll. 690 and 704), may perhaps be connected, Cumberland tite, quickly, willingly (Ferguson).

þan has a man les myght þan a beste,
When he es born, and es sene leste;
For a best when it es born, may ga
Als tite aftir, and ryn to aud fra.

Hampole, Priche of Conscience, l. 471.

Alle men sal þan tite up-ryse
In þe same stature and þe same bodyse þat þai had here in þair lifedays.

Id. l. 4981.

The erthe xul qwake, both breke and hrast,
Beryelys and gravys xul ope ful tyth,
Ded men xul rysyn and that therin hast,
And fiast to here ansuere thei xul hem dyth
Before Godys face.

Coventry Mysteries, p. 18 (Shaks. Soc.)

Ma fa, I telle his lyfe is lorne,
He shalle be slayn as tyte.

Towneley Mysteries, Crucifixio, p. 156
(ed. Marriott).

After his other Soue in hast,
He send, and he began him hast,
And cam unto his fader tite.

Gower, Confess. Amantis, iii. 60
(ed. Pauli).

TILER, in Freemasonry “the name of an officer stationed at the door of a lodge, obviously comes from tailleur de pierre, the lapidicene of several mediæval charters.”—Encyclopædia Britannica, s.v. Freemasonry (ed. 9th), vol.

ix.; Fort, Antiquities of Freemasonry, p. 188.

Li mortelliers sont quite du gueit, et tout toileur de pierre, très la tans Charles Martel, si come li preudome l'en oï dire de père à fils.—Reglemens sur les Arts et Metiers de Paris, Boileau, 13th cent. [Fort, p. 464].

TILLS, an old corruption of lentils, as if it were Lent-tils.

The country people sow it in the fields for their cattle's food, and call it Tills, leaving out the Lent, as thinking that word agreeth not with the matter (!).—Parkinson, Theatrum Botanicum, 1640, p. 1068 (Prior).

Wycliffe has tillis for lentils, Ezek. iv. 9.

TILLY VALLY, an old exclamation of contempt, meaning Nonsense! Rubbish! seems to be a corruption of old Eng. trotevale, something trifling, a jest (Body and Soul, l. 146), probably the same word as tutivillus or titivillus, a demon who was supposed to haunt choirs in order to pick up the slurred syllables, false notes, and other trifling mistakes made by the singers (Walcot, Traditions of Cathedrals, p. 146), Lat. titivillitium, a trifle.

My name is Tutivillus

My horne is blawen;

Fragmina verborum Tutivillus colligit horum.
Towneley Mysteries, Juditium.

“Is not this House” (quoth he) “as near Heaven as my owne?” She not likinge such talke answered, “Tillie vallie, tillie vallie.”—Life of Sir Thos. More, Wordsworth Eccles. Biog. ii. 140.

Am I not of her blood? Tillyvally, Lady!

Shakespeare, Twelfth Nighi, ii. 3, 83.

Tilley-valley, Mr. Lovel—which, by the way, one commentator derives from tittivillitium, and another from talley-ho—but tilley-valley, I say—a truce with your politeness.—Scott, The Antiquary, chap. vi.

Coquette, a tating houswife, a titifill, a febergebit.—Cotgrave.

TIME, when used in the sense of leisure, favourable opportunity, as in the sentence “I will attend to it when I have time,” would seem naturally enough to be the same word as time, A. Sax. tīma = Lat. tempus, and this is, I may say universally, assumed to be the case. Thus when the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews says, “time would fail me to tell of” all the heroes of faith (A. V. ch. xi. v. 32; “Deficiet tempus.”—Vulgate), most persons would regard it as a change of construction merely, and not of words, if the verse ran "I have no time to tell of" them all. This latter word, however, time, as meaning leisure, is an altered form of Old Eng. toom, opportunity (Prompt. Parv.), tom, tome, a vacant or empty (i.e. unoccupied) hour or period, Scot. toom, empty, Icel. tóm, vacuity, leisure, tæma, to empty; compare Prov. Eng. teum, to empty, teem, to pour out (of rain, &c.), Scot. teym, teme, to empty, all akin to Dan. tom, Icel. tómur, A. Sax. tom.

And mani riche kingdon þati to tell haue her na tom [al. tome, tame].
Cursor Mundi (14th cent.), part i.
l. 2128 (E.E.T.S.).

So in the Westphalian dialect tóm is leisure (Archiv der Neueren Sprachen, Band LV. ii. p. 157), in Icelandic tómi, at leisure (Cleasby, 638).

I haue no tome to telle · þe Tayl þat hem fol-weþ
Of so many Maner Men · þat on Molde liuen.
Vision of Piers Plowman, A. ii. 160
(ed. Skeat).

[One MS. has tyme here instead of tome.]

More of wele wat3 in þat wyse, þen I cowþe telle þa3 I tom hade.
Alliterative Poems, p. 5, l. 134.

[Than I could tell though I had leisure.]
3if 3e wolde ty3t me a tom telle hit I wolde.
Id. p. 70, l. 1153.

[If you would give me an opportunity I would tell it.]

þei made her hors rennen in rees,
To stonde stille þei had no tome.
Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 218,
l. 241.

Here may a man read þat has tome,
A large proces of þe day of dome.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 6249.

Of his trifuls to telle I haue no tome now.
The Destruction of Troy, l. 43
(E.E.T.S.).

But þan bad þe King bliue · þe bodies take
Of alle þe gomes of gode · & greiþli hem here
Til þe tentis, til þey mi3t haue · tom hem to berie.

William of Pulerne, l. 3778.

[Quickly bear them to the tents, till they might have leisure to bury them.]

Of softe awakunge hii toke lute gome.
Vor to wel cloþi hom hii ne yene hom no
tome.

Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 557.

[Of soft awakening they took little care.
For to clothe themselves properly they gave them no leisure.]

Bot the king, that him dred sum thing,
Waytyt the sper in the cummyng,
And with a wysk the hed off strak;
And, or the tothyr had toyme to tak
His suerd, the king sic swak him gaiff,
That be the hede till the barnys claiff.
Barbour, The Bruce, bk. iv. l. 644.

We find the two words time and tome brought together in the following quotation from MS. Harl. :—

Tharfore þis tyme I may nocht cum Telle þi lord I haue no tome.
(See Alliterative Poems, Morris, p. 203.)

But this tyme is so tore & we no tome haue,
We will seasse till, now sone, the sun be at rest.

The Destruction of Troy, l. 645.

TINKER, a corrupt spelling of the older word, a tinkard, from the false analogy of the usual form of the name of agents, lover, labourer, cobbler, mender, &c., as if it meant one who tinks. Dr. Brewer actually defines the word as a "person who tinks or beats on a kettle to announce his trade" (Dict. Phrase and Fable, s.v.), and so Scot. tinkler.

Few things more sweetly vary civil life
Than a barbarian, savage tinkler tale?
Christopher North.

Ferrastracci, a Tinckard, a mender of any mettall-pieces.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

Magnano, a Lock-smith, a Key-maker, . . .
a Tinkard.—Id.

A tinkard leaueth his bag a sweating at the alehouse, which they terme their bowsing ln, and in the meane season goeth abrode a begging.—The Fraternitey of Vacabondes, 1575 (Repr. 1813, p. 5).

Tinkard, Welsh tincerdd, is from tin (cf. Ir. stanadoir, a tinker, from stan, tin), and Gaelic, and Irish, ceard, a smith; e.g. Gaelic ceard stavin, a tin-smith or tinker, or-cheard, a goldsmith, Ir. ceard-oir. Old Ir. cerd, cert, compare Welsh cerdd, art, Ir. creth, = Sansk. kṛta, work, all from the root kr, kar, to make. See Pictet, Origines Indo-Europ. tom. ii. p. 125. The Welsh, however, claim the word as wholly their own, explaining tincerdd as compounded of tin, a tail, and cerdd, a craft, meaning the lowest craft (Spurrell). The word is popularly associated with tink, old Eng. tyнке (Wycliffe, 1 Cor. xiii. 1), Welsh tinc, tincio, to tinkle, in allusion to the metallic ring he makes when at work.

Have you any work for the Tinker, mistress?
 Old brass, old pots, or kettles;
 I'll mend them all with a tink, terry tink,
 And never hurt your mettles.
E. Nelham, 1652, in Rimbault's Rounds,
Catches, &c. p. 41.

He sware an' banned like a tinkler.—Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 536.

Tinking Tom was an honest man,
Tink a tink, tink, tink, tink. . . .
 Any work for the tinker, ho! good wives.
Sam. Ackeroyd, Rimbault, p. 85.

Manhode. But herke, felowe, art thou ony craftes man?

Folye. Ye, Syr, I can bynde a syue snd tyнке a psn.

The Worlde and the Chylde, 1522.

Be dumb, ye insfnt chimes, thump not your mettle

That ne're out-ring a tinker and his kettle.
Bp. Corbet, Poems, 1648, p. 209
 (ed. 1807).

I once did know a tinkling pewterer
 That was the vilest stumbling stutterer,
 That ever hack't and hew'd our native tongue.
Marston, Scourge of Villanie, sat. ix.
 (vol. iii. p. 295).

But tho' his little heart did grieve
 When round the tinkler prest her,
 He feign'd to snirtle in his sleeve,
 When thus the Caird address'd her—
 "My bonnie lass, I work in brass,
 A tinkler is my station."

Burns, The Jolly Beggars, Poems, p. 51
 (Globe ed.).

"Is there a fire in the library?" "Yes, ma'am, but she looks such a tinkler."—C. Brontë, Jane Eyre, ch. xviii. [Davies].

In the Quarter Sessions records of the time of Queen Elizabeth (Devonshire), a man is licensed to exercise the trade and "scyence of Tynkyng."—A. H. A. Hamilton, Quarter Sessions, p. 27.

So the Americans have coined a verb to burgle (Bartlett) out of burglar, and the Daily News (Oct. 28, 1880) writes of "burgling circles."

TIRE, an old word for a headdress, e.g. "Bind the tire of thine head upon thee."—A. V. Ezek. xxiv. 17 (Heb. peér, translated "honnet."—Is. iii. 20), was originally attire, headgear (Jer. ii. 32; Prov. vii. 10; Ezek. xxiii. 15), from which it was corrupted, probably under the influence of a supposed connexion with tiar, tiara,

If I had such a tire, this face of mine
 Were full as lovely as is this of hers.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Verona, iv. 4.

See Wright and Eastwood, Bible Word-book, s.v.

Atyre or tyre of women, redimiculum.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

It has evidently been confounded with tiare, "a round and wreathed ornament for the head (somewhat resembling the Turkish Turbant) worn in old time by the Princes, Priests, and women of Persia" (Cotgrave), Lat. and Greek tiara.

Of heaming sunnie raies, a golden tiar
 Circl'd his head.

Paradise Lost, iii. l. 635.

Ne other tyre she on her head did weare,
 But crowned with a garland of sweet rosiers.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, II. ix. 19.

Your tires shall be upon your heads, and your shoes upon your feet.—A. V. Ezekiel, xxiv. 23.

In the Cleveland dialect a tire is the tinsel or metal edging of cabinets, coffins, &c. (Atkinson).

His wife is more zealous and therefore more costly, and he bates her in tyres what she stands him in Religion.—John Eurie, A Church Papist, Micro-cosmographie, 1628.

My lady hath neyther eyes to see nor eares to heare, shee holdeth on her way perhaps to the Tyre makers shoppe, where she shaketh out her crownes to bestowe vpon some new fashioned atire.—B. Rich, Honestie of this Age, 1614, p. 18 (Percy Soc.).

(These Apes of Fancy) that doe looke so like Attire-makers maydes, that for the dainty decking vp of themselves might sit in any Seamsters shop in all the Exchsng.—Id. p. 50.

Attire is itself a corrupted form of Fr. attour (atour), "a French hood, also any kind of tire, or attire, for a woman's head," which again is for the old Fr. atorn, a headdress, from atorner, attourner, to attire, deck, or dress (originally, to turn or direct aright; cf. "dress," Fr. dresser, from directiare, to direct or set aright). See Cotgrave.

In the Romaunt of the Rose, what is called a lady's "attire hright and shene" (l. 3713) is spoken of five lines later as "her rich attour." Smollett uses tour in the same sense: "Covering her black hair with a light-coloured tour."—Gil Blas, bk. iv. ch. 5.

Atyre for a gentilwoman's heed, atour.—Palsgrave, Lesclaircissement, 1530.

I'll gie to Peggy that day she's a bride,
 By an attour, gif my guid luck abide.
 Ten lambs at spaining-time.

A. Ramsay, The Gentle Shepherd, iii. 2.

Hore weaden beon of swuche scheape, & alle hore aturn swuche þæt hit beo eðcene bwarto heo beoð i-turnde.—Ancren Riwe, p. 426.

[Their garments be of such shape and all their attire such that it may be easily seen whereto they be devoted.]

And then her Shield's so full of Dread,
With that foul staring Gorgon's Head,
Which, dress'd up in a Tour of Snakes,
The Sight so much more horrid makes.

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, p. 247.

TIT-MOUSE, from A. Saxon māse (Icelandic meisingr, the bird called a titmouse, Dutch mossche, Ger. meise, a small bird), and Icel. títtr, a tit or sparrow, Orkney titing, a tillark. Compare, Dutch,—

Mos, mosje, a sparrow, a muskin. Musch, mussche, a sparrow.—Sewel, Dutch Dict. 1708,— French moucet, a sparrow (Cotgrave); and tit-lark, tom-tit, moor-tidy, in Cumberland the ground-lark.

And ek forthe the sulve mose
Hire thonkes wolde the to-tose.

Owl and Nightingale, l. 70 (Percy Soc.).

[And also for that the same tit-mouse her thoughts would thee injure.]

The Nightingale is sovereigne of song,
Before him sits the Titmouse silent bee.

Spenser, Shepherds Calendar, Nov. l. 26.

Another sly sets lime-twigs for the Wren,
Finch, Linot, Tit-mouse, Wag-Tail (Cock and Hen).

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 456.

As a natural consequence of the misunderstood singular resulted a plural tit-mice.

There is not much music among the Tit-mice.—Broderip, Zoological Recreations, p. 20.

Not only at Crows, Ravens, Dawes and Kites,

Rookes, Owles, or Cuckowes, dare she make her flights, . . .

At Wag tails, busie Titmice, or such like.

G. Wither, Britain's Remembrancer, 1628, p. 5.

A masque of birds were better, that could dsnce

The morrice in the air, wrens and robin red-breasts,

Linnets and titmice.

Randolph, Amyntas, act i. sc. 3 (1638).

TITTLE-BAT, a provincial name for the little fish Gasterosteus Trachurus, known in literature as the prenomem of the hero of Warren's Ten Thousand a Year is a corruption of its more ordinary name stickle-back (compare bat, the bird, for old Eng. back). Other names for it are similarly descriptive of its prickles, e.g. Bane-stickle, Bonetickle, Jack Sharpling, Prickleback, Stickling (see Satchell, Glossary of Fish Names).

TOAD-EATER. The suggestion that toady, toad-eater, is derived from (a hypothetical) Portuguese word todito, from todo (=Lat. totus), as if a fac-totum, a do-all, who will stick at nothing, but swallow everything he is required, advanced by Archbishop Whately and supported in Warter's Parochial Fragments, p. 196, will not stand examination. Its obvious meaning is the real one, a person that will consent to stomach anything, however repulsive (Fr. avaler des couleuvres), to please his patron, as in the following quotation:—

"See how accommodating we can be" [says one of the versatile fraternity of parasites in Athæneus, as translated by Dr. Badham]. "I, for instance, though certainly no water-drinker by choice, can, if necessary, and my entertainer be hydrophilously disposed, transmute myself instantly into a frog; or if he be fond (nasty fellow!) of cabbages, I can help him to demolish them like a caterpillar or snail."—Prose Haliæutics, p. 508.

The word originally meant a mountebank's assistant, who ate, or pretended to eat, toads, that his master might show his skill in curing him after partaking of fare reputedly so poisonous (see Quarterly Review, No. 198, p. 324).

Turn toad-eater to some foreign quack.—Thomas Brown.

This Proverb is no more fit to be used than a Toad can be wholsom to be eaten, which can never by Mountebanks be so dieted and corrected, but that still it remains rank poyson.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 377.

And I well remember the time, but was not eye witness of the fact (though numbers of people were) when a quack, at this village, ate a toad to make the country people stare, afterwards he drank oil.—G. White, Not. Hist. of Selborne, Letter 17 (1768).

Lord Edgcumbe's [place] . . . is destined to Harry Vane, Pulteney's toad-eater.—Horace Walpole, Letters, 1742, vol. i. p. 186.

The term "is explained as a novelty by Sarah Fielding, in her story of David Simple, published in 1744."—Cunningham, note in loco.

We have seen mountebanks to swallow dismembered toads, and drink the poisonous broth after them, only for a little ostentation and gain.—Bp. Hall, Occasional Meditations, Works, vol. xi. p. 180 (Oxford ed.).

TOAD-FLAX, according to Dr. Prior, has acquired its name from a blunder, it having been identified with the plant bubonium, which was so called from being used to cure sores named buboes, Lat. bubones. Bubonium was mistaken for bufonium, from bufo, a toad, and was explained to mean toad-wort, “because it is a great remedy for the toads”!

Dr. Latham, however, maintains that toad-flax is that which is dead, Ger. totd, or useless for the purpose to which proper flax is applied, just as toad-stone denotes basaltic rock which is dead (totd) or useless, as containing no lead-ore (Dictionary, s.vv.).

TOADS-CAP, Norfolk toadskep, from skep, a basket.

TOADY, a colloquial word for to flatter, to fawn like a sycophant, has perhaps nothing to do with toad-eater, as generally assumed. In Prov. English toady is quiet, tractable, kindly, friendly, a corruption of towardly, Cumberland towertly, Old Eng. toward, the opposite of one who is froward (i.e. from-ward), turned away, intractable, stubborn, perverse, Fr. revêche (from reversus), It. ritroso (from retrosus, retro-versus). The original phrase was perhaps “to be toady to one,” i.e. obliging, officiously attentive to him.

Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.
Shakespeare, 3 Hen. VI. ii. 2, 66.

For sum bene devowte, holy and towarde,
And holden the ryȝt way to blysse;
And sum bene feble, Jewde, and frowarde
Now God amend that ys amys!

Why I can't be a Nun, l. 318 (Philolog.
Soc. Trans. 1858, p. 146).

A Caciques sonne which was towardly in his youth, and pruned after dissolute, being asked the reason thereof, said, “Since I was a Christian, I haue learned to swear in varietie, to dice, to lie, to swagger; and now I want nothing, but a Concubine (which I meane to haue shortly) to make me a complete Christian.”—S. Purchas, Pilgrimages, p. 1100.

Nebuchadnezzar . . . chose the towardliest children of the Israelites to train them up in Idolatry, like the Popish Seminaries, that they might be his instruments another day.—H. Smith, Sermons, 1657, p. 224.

He's towardly, and will come on apace;
His frank confession shows he has some grace.
Dryden, The Wild Gallant, Prologue,
1667, l. 24.

TOAST, a health proposed, or a belle whose health is often drunk, so spelt as if it had some reference to the pieces of toast (panis tostus) frequently introduced into beverages in former days, is a corruption of toss, which in Scottish has the same meaning. “To toss a pot” was the old phrase for to drink it off at a draught, and toss-pot was an habitual drinker. Wedgwood traces a connexion with Ger. stossen, to clink the glasses together in drinking, which is also the meaning of tope, Sp. topar, to knock, It. topa! Compare also Fr. choquer, to knock glasses, to carouse; Argot cric-croc, à ta santé (Nisard, Hist. des Livres Populaires, ii. 371). The original form of the word, then, was toss-t, or tos-t, t being excrement as in hes-t (A. Sax. hês), truant-t, &c. See RAMPART.

Bye attour, my gutcher has,
A hich house and a laigh ane,
A' forbye, my bonie sel'

The Toss of Ecclefechan.

Burns, Poems, p. 254 (Globe ed.).

Call me the Sonne of beere, and then confine,
Me to the tap, the tost, the turfe; let wine,
Ne'r shine upon me.

Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, p. 82
(ed. Hazlitt).

That tels of winters tales and mirth,
That milk-maids make about the bearth,
Of Christmas sports, the wassell-boule,
That[s] tost up, after fox-i'-th'-hole.

Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, p. 134
(ed. Hazlitt).

The plumpe chalice, and the cup
That tempts till it be tossed up.

Id. p. 135.

In the Canting Vocabulary, “Who tosts now?” is rendered “who christens the health?” and “an old tost” is explained to mean “a pert pleasant old fellow.” The following passage shows plainly the etymology of toss-pot: it is extracted from the School-master, or Teacher of Table Philosophy, 1583, iv. 35, “Of merry jests of preaching friers: A certaine frier tossing the pot, and drinking very often at the table was reprehended by the priour.”—Brand, Pop. Antiquities, ii. 341 (ed. Bohn).

What has she better, pray, than I,
What hidden charms to boast,
That all mankind for her should die
Whilst I am scarce a toast!

Prior, The Female Phaeton.

But if, at first, he minds his hits,
And drinks champagne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the towering lasses;
Repeats you verses wrote on glasses.

Prior, The Chameleon.

Then to the sparkling glass would give his toast;

Whose bloom did most in his opinion shine.

King, Art of Cookery, 1776, iii. 75.

For Hervey the first wit she cannot be,
Nor, cruel Richmond! the first toast for thee.

E. Young, Love of Fame, Satire, vi.

And if he be (as now a-days
Many young People take ill Ways)
A Toss-pot, and a drunken Toust
It always is at his own Cost.

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, p. 243.

The word was assimilated to toast, the frequent accompaniment formerly of a draught.

Cut a fresh toast, tapster, fill me a pot,
here is money; I am no beggar, I'll follow thee as long as the ale lasts.—Greene, Looking-Glass for London and England, Works,
p. 127.

TOM, an old popular name for a deep-toned bell, as "Great Tom" of Oxford, of Lincoln, of Exeter, is probably not derived from St. Thomas of Canterbury, or any other Thomas, but seems to be an onomatopoeic word, imitative of the booming resonance of its toll, like Fr. ton, Lat. tonus, Greek τόνος, tonare, to thunder, Sansk. tan
(see Farrar, Chapters on Language, p.
181). Compare Fr. tan-tan, a cow-bell (Cotgrave), tintouin; Gaelic and Ir.
tonn, and Welsh ton, a resounding billow, "The league-long roller thundering on the reef" (Tennyson); Heb.
tēhôm, the great deep, "the booming sea" (Dryden); tom-tom, a drum, tambour, all expressive of sound.

So "Ding-dong, bell" (Tempest, i. 2, 403), and Dr. Cooke's round, "Bim,
Bome, bell."

Great Tom is cast,

And Christ Church bells ring, . . .

And Tom comes last.

Mutt. White (ab. 1630), *Rimbault's
Rounds, Catches*, &c. p. 30.

No one knows why "Tom" should have been twice selected for great bells, despite the tremendous sentence passed by Dryden on the name. Indeed Tom of Oxford is said to have been christened Mary, and how the metamorphosis of names and sexes was effected is a mystery.—Saturday Review, vol.
50, p. 670.

And know, when Tom rings out his knells,
The best of you will be but dinner-bells.

Bp. Corbet, On Great Tom of Christ-Church, 1648.

Hee sent . . . withall a thousand pounds in treasures, to be bestowed upon a great bell to be rung at his funerall, which bell he caused to be called Tom a Lincolne, after his owne name, where to this day it remaineth in the same citie.—Tam a Lincolne, ch. ii.
(1635), Thoms, Early Eng. Prose Romances,
vol. ii. p. 246.

We ascended one of the other towers afterwards to see Great Tom, the largest bell in England.—Southey, Don Espriella's Letters.

TOMBOY, a romping girl, was considered by Verstegan and Richardson a corruption of Old Eng. tumbere (cf.
Wycliffe, Ecclus. ix. 4), a tumbler or dancer. In the A. Saxon version of St. Matthew (xiv. 6), Herodias' daughter tumbled before them, tumbude befóran him, and in many ancient MSS. she is represented turning heels over head in the midst of the company, like a tomboy certainly. The word is, however, more probably an intensified form of "boy," tom corresponding to Scot. tumbus, anything large or strong of its kind, Prov. Eng. tom-pin, tom-toe (Wright), thumb, &c. Compare Old Eng. tom-rig, a hidden; Lonsdale tom-beadle, a cockchafer, tom-spayad, a large spade
(E. B. Peacock).

Tumbe, to Dance. Tumbod, Danced, hereof
we yet call a wench that skippeth or leapeth like a hoy, a Tomboy, our name also of tumbling commeth here hence.—Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence (1634), p.
234.

Some at Nine-pins, some at Stool-ball, though that stradling kind of Tomboy sport be not so handsome for Mayds, as Forreiners observe, who hold that dancing in a Ring, or otherwise, is a far more comely exercise for them.—J. Howell, Londinopolis, p. 399.

— A lady,

So fair . . . to be partner'd,
With tomboys hired with that self-exhibition
Which your own coffers yield.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, i. 6, 123.

TOM-CAT has generally been regarded as compounded with the shortened form of Thomas, as the most common masculine name, just as we speak of a Jack-hare; e.g. Mr. Oliphant thinks this word could scarcely have arisen till after the death of St. Thomas of Canterbury, which made the name widely popular (Old and Mid. Eng.

p. 39). Probably Tom here has no more to do with Thomas than carl, in the older form carl-cat, has to do with Charles as a Christian name; it seems to convey the idea of something large and strong of its kind, as in tom-bit, being akin to thumb, the strong member of the hand, A. Sax. thuma, Icel. thumall, from Sansk. root tu, to be strong, whence also Lat. tumor, old Eng. thee, theon, to thrive, Goth. theihan, to thrive, grow, and perhaps Prov. Eng. thumping, large, vigorous. Dr. Morris (Address to Philolog. Soc. 1876, p. 4) quotes from MS. Cantab. :—

The fiftē fynger is the thoumbe, and hit has most myzt,
And fastest halde of alle the tother, forthi
men calles it rīzt.

You're ollers quick to set your back aridge,— Though't suits a tom-cat more'n a sober bridge.

J. R. Lowell, Biglow Papers, Poems, p. 493.

TOMMY, a slang word for food, whence tommy-shop, a store belonging to an employer where his workmen are obliged to take out part of their earnings in tommy or food, is probably from the Irish tiomallaím, I eat (Tylor).

Shall we suppose . . . that it [panis siccus] is placed in antithesis to soft and new bread, what English sailors call "soft tommy?"—De Quincey, The Casuistry of Roman Meals, Works, vol. iii. p. 254.

TOM THUMB is supposed to have acquired his Christian name through the reduplication of his surname, Icel. pumbi, a mannikin, pumlungr, an inch, Ger. daumling (Fr. le petit Poucet), a thumbing, from Icel. pumall, a thumb, Ger. daum, A. Sax. pūma, Dan. tomme. Thus Tom Thumb would be really Thumb-thumb (Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction, p. 364). Compare tom-toe, the big toe, Icel. pumal-tá, the thumb-toe, or great toe. In children's game-rhymes the thumb is Tom Thumbkin, Dan. Tommelott, Swed. Tomme tott (Halliwell, Pop. Rhymes and Nursery Tales, p. 105). It is conjectured also that Tamlane and Tom-a-lin of old ballads is merely a corruption of the Northern Thaumlin or Thumbling.

Nor shall my story be made of the mad, merry pranks of Tom of Bethlem, Tom Lincoln, or Tom a Lin (Tamlane), the devil's supposed Bastard, nor yet of Garagantua, that monster of men; but of an older Tom, a Tom of more antiquity, a Tom of strange making, I mean Little Tom of Wales, no bigger than a miller's thumb, and therefore, for his small stature, surnamed Tom Thumb.—R. Johnson, Tom Thumb, 1621, Intro.

In Arthur's court Tom Thumb did live,
A man of mickle might,
The best of all the table round,
And eke a doughty knight :
His stature but an inch in height,
Or quarter of a span.
Life and Death of Tom Thumb, 1630
(Robert's Ballads, p. 82).

May 22. What makes me think Tom Thumb is founded upon history, is the method of those times of turning true history into little pretty stories, of which we have many instances one of which is Guy of Warwick.—Reliquie Hearnianæ, 1734, vol. iii. p. 138.

TONGUE-GRASS, a common name in Ireland for the oress, the pungent flavour of which bites the tongue.

In the Holderness dialect of E. Yorkshire water-cresses are called watther-crashes.

TOOTH AND EGG METAL, a popular corruption (vid. W. Carleton's Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry, p. 190, Pop. ed.) of the word Tutenag, or Chinese copper, a species of metal like German silver, compounded of copper, zinc, and nickel. Dr. Charnock states that a similar substance which the Portuguese found in use in India and China was called by them Teutonica, and that this term subsequently came back to Europe in the shape of Tutenag (Verba Nominalia, s.v.). M. Devic, however, agrees with De Sacy in holding tutenag, Portg. tutenaga, Fr. toutenage, O. Fr. tutunac and tintenague, to be derived from a Persian toutiā-nāk, a substance analogous to tutty, Fr. tutie.

In the list of commodities brought over from the East Indies, 1678, I find among the drugs tincal and toothanage. . . . Enquire also what these are.—Sir Thos. Browne, Works, vol. iii. p. 456 (ed. Bohn).

TOPSYTURVY is a curious corruption, through the form topsi'-to'erway, of topside-'t'other-way.

The estate of that flourishing towne was turned arsie versaie, topside the other waie, and from abundance of prosperitie quite exchanged to extreme penurie.—Stanhurst, Description of Ireland, p. 26, col. 2 (Holinshed, Chron. vol. i. 1587).

His words are to be turned topside tother way to understand them.—Search, Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. 2, c. 23 [Richardson].

With all my precautions how was my system turned topside turvy!—Sterne, Trist. Shandy, iii. 169 [Davies].

He tourneth all thyng topsy tervy,
Not sparyng for eny symony,
To set spretuall gyftes.

Rede Me and be nott Wrothe, 1528, p. 51
(ed. Arber).

A strange gentlewoman (some light huswife helike) that was dressed like a May lady, and as most of our gentlewomen are, was more sollicitous of her head tye, then of her health . . . and had rather be fair than honest (as Cato said) and have the commonwealth turned topsie turvie; then her tyes marred.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, III. ii. 3, 3.

He breaketh in through thickest of his foes,
And by his travail topsi-turneth then,
The live and dead, and half-dead horse and men.

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 319.

TOP, TO SLEEP LIKE A, has been asserted to be a corruption of a French original "Dormir comme une taupe," to sleep like a mole, It. topo, a mouse or rat. Compare:—

The people inhabiting the Alpes haue a common prouerbe, to expresse a drowsie and sleepey fellow in the German tongue thus: "Er musse synzyt geschlaffen haben wie ein murmelthier." . . . He must needes sleepe a little like the Mouse of the Alpes [i.e. a Marmot].—Topsell, Hist. of Four-footed Beasts, p. 552 (1608).

The expression is, however, derived from the apparent repose and absence of motion in a top when, rapidly revolving, it assumes a perfectly upright posture, and is then said "to sleep." Compare the French phrase, dormir comme un sabot, sabot being an old word for a top.

"Les vaisseaux qui là dormoient à l'ancre" (Froissart, v. iii. c. 52), i.e. lay motionless. See SLEEPER.

The expression is of considerable antiquity, as it occurs in The Two Noble Kinsman, 1634:—

O for a prickle now like a Nightingale, to put my breast
Against. I shall sleepe like a Top else.

Act iii. sc. 4, ll. 25, 26 (ed. H. Littledale).

TOUCH, in the well-known passage—
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin.

Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3,— is O. Eng. tache or tatch, a blot, fault, or vice of nature, a natural blemish, Fr. tache, It. tacca, taccia.

It is a common tatche, naturally gevin to all men . . . to wache well for their owne lucre.—Chalener, Moria Enconium (in Nares).

Compare old Eng. touch, to infect or stain (Wright) = Fr. tacher. So Bacon speaks of men being "touched with pestilent diseases," and an insane person is said to be "touched in the head."

To kinde, ne to keypyng, & be waar of knaue
tacchis.

The A. B. C. of Aristotle, Babees Book, p. 12.

Bursegaunt, we are foule deceived in you the tyme passed, for we wende that ye had be a true knight, and ye are but a mocker, and a iaper of ladies, and that is a foule tache.—Knight of La Tour-Landry, p. 33.

Ne neuer trespass to him in teche of mys-selene.

Alliterative Poems, p. 72, l. 1230.

For evermore Love his servants amendeth,
And from all evill taches hem defendeth.

Chaucer, Cuckow and Nightingale, l. 192.

"Ah," said the cowheard, "I wend not this, but I may belevee it well, for hee had never no taches of me."—Malory, Hist. of King Arthur, 1634, vol. i. p. 96 (ed. Wright).

For he that is of gentle blood will draw him unto gentle taches, and to follow the custome of noble gentlemen.—Id. vol. ii. p. 6.

A wyfe that has an yvell tach,
Ther of the husband shall haue a smache,
But 3if he loke well abowte.

The Tale of the Bosyn, l. 26 (Early Pop. Poetry, iii. 45, ed. Hazlitt).

I gaf hym male and palster and made of hym a pylgrim and mente al trowth, O what false touches can he, how can he stuffe the sleue wyth flockes.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 56 (ed. Arber).

His kynne and lignage drawe al afterward from hym, and stonde not by hym, for his falschede and deceyuable and subtil touchis.—Id. p. 78.

God forbid, but all euill touches, wantonnes, lyeinge, pickinge, slouth, will, stubburnesse and disobedience, shold be with sharpe chastisement, daily cnt away.—Ascham, The Scholemaster, 1570, p. 48 (ed. Arber).

TOUCHY, peevish, easily offended or irritated, is generally understood to mean, in accordance with the spelling, over-sensitive to the touch, shrinking or wincing at the slightest contact, like the retractile "tender horns of cockled snails," or the leaves of the sensitive plant. Compare the quotations from Cotgrave, Barnes, and Ray.

You have a little infirmity—tactility or touchiness.—Sydney Smith, Letters, 1831 [Davies].

It is really the same word as old Eng. techy, tetchy, titchy, morose, peevish, more properly tachie, tatchy, faulty, corrupt, vicious (Fr. taché, blemished), spoilt by a teche, teteche, tatch, or tache, a spot, stain, or vice of nature, hereditary blemish, Fr. tache. See TOUCH.

Touchy (from touch), very irritable or sensitive, impatient of being even touched. Noli me tangere.—W. Bornes, Dorset Poems, Glossary.

Chatouilleux à la pointe, Quick on the spur . . . tichy, that will not endure to be touched.—Cotgrave.

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy.

Shakespeare, Rich. III. iv. 4.

Sir G. Carteret is titched at this.—Pepys, Diary (ed. Bright), vol. iii. p. 317.

Titchy, morosus, difficilis.—Cole's Dictionary.

Tetch'e, or maner of condycyone, Mos, Condicio.—Prompt. Parv.

A chyldis tatches in playe shewe playnlye what they meane.—Horman, Vulgaria.

For hade þe fader ben his frende þat hym before keped,
Ne neuer trespass to him in teche of myseleue,

Alliterative Poems (14th cent.), p. 72,
l. 1229, E. E. T. S.

Ac I fynde if þe fader be false and ashrewe, þat somdel þe sone shal haue þe sires tocches.

W. Langland, Vision of P. Plowman, Text B,
ix. 145 (1377, ed. Skeat).

This teche had Kay take in his notice, that he dide of Sowke.—Merlin, p. 135.

She breeds yong bones

And that is it makes her so tutchy sure.

King Leir and His Three Daughters, 1605.

Away these tachie humors flung.

Wit and Drollery [Nares].

Ya purting, tatchy, sterling, . . . Theng.
—Exmoor Scolding, l. 21 (see Mr. Elworthy's note, p. 159).

Tetch, to be restive or obstinate.—Ferguson, Cumberland Glossary.

Mistetch, an ill or awkward habit acquired through bad training. Mistetched, having acquired such a habit.—Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 339.

Tetchy, quarrelsome, peevish.—E. B. Peacock, Lonsdale Glossary.

Mistetcht, That hath got an ill Habit, Property or Custom. A Mistetcht Horse. I suppose q. Misteacht, mistaught, unless it come from tetch, for distast, as it usually said in the South, he took a Tetch; a Displeasure or Distast; this Tetch seems to be only a Variation of Dialect for touch, and techey for touchy, very inclinable to Displeasure or Anger.—Ray, North Country Words, p. 45 (ed. 1742).

And þet is aye þe þri queade teches of þe misgiggere.—Ayenbite of Inwytt, p. 136.

[That is always the three had faults of slandersers.]

But yef the husbonde perceiuithe of the wiff sum leude taches in her gouernance or behauing, that he aught to be ielous.—Book of the Knight of La Tour-Landry, p. 24 (E. E. T. S.).

Nohille maydenes comen of good kyn ought to be goodli, meke, wele tached, ferme in estate, behauing, and maners.—Id. p. 18.

This frantic fellow took tetch at somewhat and run away into Ireland.—North, Life of Ld. Guilford, ii. 286 [Davies].

Hee is one that will doe more then he will speake, and yet speake more then hee will heare; for though hee loue to touch others, hee is techy himself, and seldome to his own abuses replies but with his Fists.—John Earle, Micro-cosmographie, 1628, A Blunt Man.

The techy Leper is displeas'd, hee'l hence,
The Jordan-Prophet dallies against sence.

Quarles, Divine Fancies, p. 64 (1664).

This is no age for wasps; 'tis a dangerous touchy age, and will not endure the stinging.—Randolph, Hey for Honesty, The Introduction (1651).

It may be noted that tetch is an American pronunciation of touch.

In the hardest times there wuz 1 ollers tetched ten shillins.—J. R. Lowell, Biglow Papers, No. 2.

TOUCH AN' HAIL, i.e. "Touch and heal," a name for the St. John's wort in Antrim and Down (Patterson), Hypericum, is evidently a corruption of the old Eng. name tutsan, misunderstood as touch an';—heal being then added to complete the sense.

Tutsan, O. Eng. tutsayne, is from Fr. toute-saine, all wholesome.

TOY, in the old phrase "to take toy," a fit of caprice or ill-humour, huff or offence, seems not to have been registered in any of the dictionaries. It is certainly distinct from toy, a plaything, and probably identical with Scotch tot, tout, a fit of ill-humour, Belgian togt, a draught of wind, a strong desire or emotion. Compare Scot. touttie, N. Eng. totey, irritable; Cleveland toit, to lark or play the fool; O. Eng. totte, foolish; and -toity, in hoity-toity, formerly = thoughtless, giddy, foolish (Wheatley, Dict. of Reduplicated Words).

As they sometimes withdraw their love from their children upon slender dislikes, so these many times take toy at a trifle.—Bp Sanderson, Works, vol. i. p. 358 (ed. Jacobson).

The hot horse, hot as fire,
Tooke toy at this, and fell to what disorder
His power could give his will.

The Two Noble Kinsmen, act v. sc. 4,
l. 65 (ed. Littledale).

Cast not thyne eyes to ne yet fro,
As thou werste full of toyes :
Vse not much wagging with thy head
It scarce becommeth boyes.

The Babees Book, p. 80, l. 332
(E.E.T.S.).

To hear her dear tongue robb'd of such a joy,
Made the well-spoken nymph take such a toy,
That down she sunk.

Marlowe, Hero and Leander, 5th Sestiad,
p. 304 (ed. Dyce).

She is one, she knows not what her selfe if you aske her, but shee is indeed one that ha's taken a toy at the fashion of Religion, and is enamour'd of the New-fangle.—J. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, 1628, p. 63 (ed. Arber).

Men. How now, my lady? does the toy take you, as they say?

Abi. No, my lord; nor doe we take your toy, as they say.—Marston, The Insatiate
Countesse, act i. (vol. iii. p. 115, ed. Halliwell).

The very place puts toys of desperation,
Without more motive, into every brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea
And hears it roar beneath.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 4, 77.

These are so far from that old quære of Christians, Quid faciemus?—What shall we do? that they will not admit the novel question of these toytheaded times, what shall we think?—T. Adams, Sermons, The Fatal Ban- quet, vol. i. p. 221.

TRACK-POT, } old Scotch words for a TRUCK-POT, } tea-pot, properly a pot in which tea is drawn, the first part of the word corresponding to Dan. trække, to draw (of tea), Dut. trekken, Ger. tra- gen. The Danes say, "Theen har ikke trukken nok," the tea has not drawn enough (Ferral, Repp, and Rosing).

TRADE-WINDS, "winds which at certain seasons blow regularly one way at sea, very serviceable in a trading voy- age" (Bailey), generally understood to mean, as in this definition, winds which favour trade or commerce. The proper meaning is customary routine winds which hold a certain well-defined course, from Old and Prov. Eng. trade, a beaten path, a rut in a road, a track,

a habit, a way of life, originally a trod- den path, from A. Sax. trëdan, to tread, Dan. træde, Icel. tröða, Goth. trudan, to tread. Compare Cleveland trod, a footpath, A. Sax. trod, Icel. tröd, a roadway to a farmstead, Prov. Swed. trad, a pathway.

Trade, from meaning motion to and fro, passing backwards and forwards on a beaten track, has passed through the sense of reciprocal intercourse, into that of traffic, commerce, perhaps under the influence of Fr. traite, trade,
Sp. trato (from Lat. tractus), handling, management, traffic, It. tratta.

Carr, a wheel-trade or wheel-rout.—Ken- nett, Paroch. Antiquities (E. D. Soc.).

A vast o' rabbits here, by the trade they make.—Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. 540.

A postern with a blinde wicket there was A common trade to passe through Priarh's house.

Lord Surrey, Æneid, bk. ii. l. 592
(ab. 1540).

Mr. Wedgwood has the apt quotation—

Wyth wind at will the trad held thai,
And in England com rycht swyth.

Wynton, vi. 20, 55.

—I'll be buried in the king's highway
Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet

May hourly trample on their sovereign's
head :

For on my heart they tread now whilst I live.
Shakespeare, King Richard II. iii. 3, 158.

Streight gan he him revyle, and bitter rate,

As Shepherdes curre, that in darke Eveninges
Shade,

Hath tracted forth some salvage beastes
trade.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, II. vi. 39.

It requireth of every man to return from his evil ways, his ancient and accustomed sins wherein he had travelled and traded himself, and made it his walk a long time.—
Bp. J. King, Lectures on Jonah, 1594, p. 238
(ed. Grosart).

The term trade-winds is of a doubtful origin and signification. Some think that it has been applied to these winds on account of their constancy, trade originally signifying a common course or track, the course treaded; and Hakluyt has the phrase, "the wind blowing trade," i.e. a regular course. Others think that it has been introduced by our seamen, because they considered these winds more favourable to the promoting of trade and commerce than any other wind they were acquainted with.—W. Wittich, Curiosities of Physical Geography, i. 105.

Teach a child in the trade of his way, and when hee is olde, hee shall not depart from it.—Genevan Version, Prov. xxii. 6.

So we travelled with this woman till we brought her to a good trade, and at length shewed her the Kinges pardon, and let her go.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 125 verso.

TRAIN-OIL, a species of coarse oil, is now understood by most people to have been so named from having to do with the only trains with which they are acquainted, viz., railway-trains, as if used for lubricating their wheels. Others have supposed that the word, formerly spelt trainy oil, comes from Fr. huile trainée, as if oil drawn off from the fat or blubber (trainer, to draw), like our "cold-drawn castor-oil" (so Chambers, Etym. Dict.). It is really from Dut. traan, whale-oil, trane-oil (Sewel, 1708), another usage of traan, a tear, a dripping, traenen, to shed tears, to trickle or run (as oil from blubber); Swed. tran, and tranig, trainy; Ger. thran, blubber oil, thräne, a tear, a drop, O. H. Ger. trahun.

Similarly tar, A. Sax. tëru, teor, tyrwa, Dan. tjere, Swed. tjära, Icel. tjara, might seem to be allied to tear, A. Sax. tear, tær, täher (Goth. tagr), used also for any dropping, distillation, or exudation, such as pitch from the pine. Compare balsames tear (Ælfric),—"The balsam tree weeps out a kind of gum, like tears."—T. Adams, Works, i. 364; Greek dákru, the tear of the pine = pitch (Medea, l. 1197); It. lacrima, "any kind of gum-drops, as Rosin or Terpentine."—Florio; "Arborum lacrimæ."—Pliny, xi. 6; "Thy ripe fruits and thy liquors."—A. V. Ex. xxiii. 29, Heb. "tear" (of thy trees); "mulberry-tree."—2 Sam. xxiii. 24, Heb. bákáh, the weeping, i.e. exuding, tree. Compare Dan. taar, a drop of drink, taare, a tear. Diefenbach, however, connects tar with tree, Goth. triu (Goth. Sprache, ii. 682).

Sylvester says of the balm:—

Whereof the rich Egyptian so endears Root, bark and fruit, and much more the tears.

Du Bartas, Divine Weekes, 1621, p. 181.

And where huge hogshheads sweat with trainy oil,

Thy breathing nostrils hold.

Gay, Trivia, ii. 253.

TRANSOM, a cross-beam, in a ship a piece of timber that lies a-thwart the stern (Bailey), is a naturalized form of Lat. transtrum, a cross-beam, originally a rower's bench, as if a timber going across (trans) from side to side of the vessel. This word itself is, however, a corrupted form of a Greek thránistron, a diminutival form of thrános, a rowing bench, akin to thrónos, a stool. A further corruption is transommer, as if compounded with summer, Fr. sommier, a beam of timber.

Forrests are saw'd in Transoms, Beams and Somers,

Great Rocks made little, what with Sawes and Hammers.

J. Sylvester, Du Bartos, p. 464.

TRAPES, a colloquial term for an idle, slatternly woman, is not, as we might suppose, derived from Prov. Eng. trape, to trail along in an untidy manner, as if a draggle-tail, but from trapes, traipse, to wander or saunter about, trapass, to wander about aimlessly (Peacock, Manley and Corringham Glossary, N. W. Lincoln.), Fr. trepasser, trespasser, to pass beyond (one's own limits), be a tramp or vagrant.

It wasn't vor want o' a good will, the litterlegg'd trapes hadn't a' blowed a coal between you and me.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 14.

Learnedly spoke! I had not car'd,
If Pallas here had been preferr'd;
But to bestow it on that Trapes,
It mads me!

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, Poems, p. 274.

Since full each other station of renown,
Who would not be the greatest trapes in town.

E. Young, Satire VI. On Women.

The following are from Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary:—

It's such a toil and a trapes up them two pair of stairs.—Mrs. H. Wood, The Channings, p.
471.

The daughter a tall, trapesing, trolloping, talkative maypole.—Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, act i.

Compare with this Scottish stravaig, to stroll or wander about idly, also of classical origin, being a derivative of Lat. extra-vagari, to wander beyond the bounds, be extravagant, whence It. stravagare, to wander, gad, or stray beyond or out of the way (Florio), Prov. estraguar, old Fr. estraye, and

Eng. stray. Cf. strange, from Lat. extraneus.

He has gi'en up a trade and ta'en to stravaign'.—A. Hislop, Scottish Proverbs, p. 118.

Th' extravagant and erring spirit.

Hamlet, i. 1.

Prophecy did not extravagate into remote subjects, beyond the Jewish or the Christian pale.—Davison, On Prophecy, p. 71 (8th ed.).

TRAVESTILE, "applied to an author when his Sense and stile is alter'd" (Bailey), is a corrupt form of travesty, Fr. travestie, lit. a disguise or change of vesture (trans and vestis).

TRAVELLER'S JOY. This popular name for the clematis presents a curious instance of a word originating in a mistaken etymology. The French name for the plant is viorné, shortened from Lat. viburnum (It. viburno). This being Latinized into viorna, was interpreted by Gerarde as vi(am)-ornans, the plant which decks the road with its flowers, and so cheers the traveller on his way, and Englished accordingly "Traveller's Joy." His own account is as follows:—

[It] is called commonly Viorna quasi vias ornans, of decking and adorning waies and hedges, where people tranell, and thereupon I haue named it the Traueilers Joie.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 739 (fol. 1597).

Here was one [hut] that, summer-blanch'd,
Was parcel-bearded with the traveller's joy.

Tennyson, Aylmer's Field, l. 153.

TREASURE, an assimilation of Fr. trésor, It. Sp. tesoro, Lat. Gk. thesaurus (a deposit of gold), to words like measure, scripture, verdure, portraiture, picture, ending in -ure, Lat. -ura.

pat es welth, als I sayde before,

Of worldly riches and tresore.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1266.

TREEN-WARE, given by Bailey as an old word for "earthen vessels," from Fr. terraine, so spelt as if connected with treen (i.e. tree-en), made of wood.

Treenware, Earthen Vessels.—Ray, North Country Words, p. 63.

TREPAN, to deceive or ensnare, has no connexion with the surgical instrument so spelt. The old form of the word was to trapan, being from It. trapanare, to cheat.

Some deduce it from Drepano, It. Trapani, a city and port in Sicily, into which some English ship having put under stress of weather received a friendly welcome, and afterwards by a breach of faith were forcibly detained there.—Skinner.

Some tell it thus, that Plowden being of the Romish persuasion, some Setters trapped him (pardon the prolepsis) to hear Masse.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 254.

The ladies' hearts he did trepan,

My gallant brow John Highlandman.

Burns, Poems, p. 50 (Globe ed.).

Forthwith alights the innocent trapunn'd
One leads his Horse, the other takes his Hand.

Cotton, Wonders of the Peake, p. 321.

TRIANGLES, a slang corruption of delirium tremens.

TRI-BUCKET, a name for the cucking-stool, an old punishment for scolding women. It consisted of a chair fixed at the end of a long pole, in which the offender was seated, and then ducked in a horse-pond.

The tri-bucket, a ducking-stool, seems to have been the general chastisement formerly; and each of these towns had one of these instruments also.—T. Bond, Topographical Sketches of the Boroughs of East and West Looe, in Cornwall, 1823.

The word has nothing to do with try or bucket, but is a corruption of trebuchet, which is used in the same sense, Fr. trebuchet, a trap, from trebucher, to stumble, trip, fall down, L. Lat. trebuchetum. "Trebichetum, a cokstole."—Ortus. See Way, Prompt. Parvulorum, p. 107.

TRIBULATION by a pseudo-etymology has sometimes been regarded as a derivative of Lat. tribūlus, a thorny plant, a thistle, from Greek tribōlos, a "three-pronged" instrument, a caltrop, a plant with spikes or prickles; with some latent reference, perhaps, to the thorns and thistles of the curse (Gen. iii. 18). Thus the men of Succoth were in tribulation when Gideon taught them with "thorns of the wilderness and briers" (Judges viii. 16). So teasel is the plant by which wool is teased, carded, or "vexed" (Dryden), and compare Sp. escolimoso, hard, obstinate, from Lat. scolymos, a thistle, Banff taisle, to vex or irritate (Gregor).

In reality, however, Lat. tribulatio comes through tribulare, to afflict or press down, from tribulum, a threshing instrument, and denotes affliction as that which morally separates the wheat from the chaff,

Till the bruising flails of God's corrections
Have threshed out of us our vain affections.

G. Wither.

See Trench, Study of Words, Lect. ii.

The confusion of these two words tribulus and tribulum in Italian is complete; compare:—

Tribolo, a kinde of weapon like a flaile; . . also the caltrop thistle or rough teazle, vsed also for a bramble, a brier, a thorne. Fure il tribolo, to waille, lament, scratch their faces, teare their haire, &c.

Tribolare, to afflict, vex, or bring into tribulation—to breake, to bruise, or thresh corne with a flaile—also to teaze clothes—also to enbrier.—Florio, New World of Words, 1611.

Durdar, the “thorns” of Gen. iii. 18, is translated in the Vulgate by the Latin tribulus (whence the English word “tribulation”) i.e. Centurea calcitrapa, the common thistle of Palestine.—Sir J. Hooker, in Aids to Bible Students, p. 50.

Latin words, . . . change their meaning because their meaning never was thoroughly understood. “Tribulation” very soon left off suggesting thistles, just as “decimation” has in our own day left off suggesting the number ten, because “tribulation” and “decimation” never so directly suggested the meaning of “thistle” and “ten,” as the words “thistle” and “ten” did themselves.—Saturday Review, July 8, 1876, p. 52.

Sins are fitly compared to thorns and briars, for their wounding, pricking, and such harmful offences. Therefore they are called tribuli, à tribulando, from their vexing, oppression, and tribulation they give those that touch them. The wicked are such calthrope to the country, boring and bloodying her sides; either pricking the flesh, or tearing of the fleece; as briars and bushes that rob the sheep of their coats, which come to them for shelter.—The Forest of Thorns, T. Adams, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 479.

Bernard compares afflictions to the teasle, which, though it be sharp and scratching, is to make the cloth more pure and fine.—T. Brooks, The Privie Key of Heaven, 1665, Works, vol. ii. p. 147.

Trial has ultimately the same meaning of threshing and winnowing.

Tried in sharp tribulation, and refined
By faith and faithful works.

Milton, Par. Lost, xi. 63.

God therefore in his wisdom thinks it good to trie our faith and patience, by laying affliction upon us: . . . this is that Fan which Christ is said to have in his hand, whereby he purgeth his floure, and separateth the good Corne from the Chaffe, Matth. 3.—Bp. Andrewes, Preparation to Prayer, 1642, p. 111.

Temptations . . . be (as the Fathers call them) rods to chasten us for sinne committed or to try and sift us, Mat. 3. 12, and so to take away the chaffe, the fanne being in the Holy Ghosts hand.—Bp. Andrewes, The Temptation of Christ, 1642, p. 5.

TRICE cannot be connected with thrice, as if in three moments (Richardson). It might seem to be the same word as Prov. Eng. trice, a small bit (Wright), a particle, sc. of time. Cf. Sp. triza, a particle (Prov. trisar, to grind, from Lat. tritrus, tritiare). In Irish treis is a while, a short time (O'Reilly). It is perhaps to be identified more probably with Sp. tris, a crack, an instant, Portg. triz or tris, a sharp, momentary noise, like the breaking of glass, also an instant, as “Elle veyo num triz, he came in a trice.”—Vieyra.

To tell you what conceyte

I had then in a tryce,

The matter were to nyse.

J. Skelton, Phyllup Sparowe (1522),
l. 1130.

All sodenly as who saith treis.

Gower, Confessio Amantis.

Nicholas Udall seems to have resolved treis into trey (= Fr. trois) and ace, as if a throw at dice, like “deuce-ace.”

I wyll be here with them ere ye can say trey ace.

Roister Doister (ab. 1550), act iii. sc. 3.

Now Pithias kneele downe, aske me blessing
like a pretie hoy,

And with a trise, thy head from thy shoulders

I wyll convay.

Edwards, Damon and Pithios, 1571 (Old Plays, i. 252, ed. 1825).

There is no vsurie in the worlde so heynous as the gaine gotten by this playe at dyce, when all is gotten with a trice ouer the thumbe, without anye traficke or loane.—Northbrooke, Treatise against Dycing, &c., 1577, p. 129 (Shaks. Soc.).

As, when two Gamesters hazard (in a trice) Fields, Vine-yards, Castles, on the Chance of Dice,

The standers-by diversly stird with-in,
With, some that This, and some that That may win.

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 453.

O the charity of a penny cord! it sums up thousands in a trice.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 4, 170.

TRICK, as an heraldic term, to draw or etch a coat-of-arms with pen and ink, representing the colours, metals, &c., by the conventional dots, lines, hatchings, &c., is the same word as Dutch trecken, trekken, to draw or trace outlines, trek, a stroke of a pen, Dan. træk, the same, Icel. dráka, a streak, Ger. tragen, Icel. draga, Goth. and A. Sax. dragan, Lat. trahere, to draw. Other uses are tricked out, i.e. blazoned ornately like a coat-of-arms; old Eng. trick = Dan. træk, a trait (tractum), feature, or characteristic peculiarity:—

A heart, too capable of every line and trick of his sweet favour.—All's Well that Ends Well, i. 1.

He hath a trick of Cœur de Lion's face.
King John, i. 1.

A trick at cards, Dutch trek, is a draught, haul, or with-drawing of them from the table. This is probably a distinct word from trick, to cheat or deceive, Fr. tricher, Prov. Eng. trucky, cheating (Yorks.), Scotch trucour, truhier, trucker, a deceitful, tricky person, compare Ger. trügen, to deceive, trug, a deceit or imposture, old Ger. trugi, a trick, triugan, to cheat, which words Pictet connects with Sansk. druh, to be mischievous, to hurt by enchantments, drôgha, malice (Origines Indo-Européennes, tom. ii. p. 636). Compare also A. Sax. trucan, to fail, pine, grow weak, Prov. Eng. truck (of a cow), to fail to give milk.

TRIFLE. } The latter of these two
TRIVIAL. } words has come to be regarded as pretty much the adjectival form of the former, but they have really nothing in common. Trifle, in old English tryfle, trufle, trofel, meant formerly a jest, a fable, a lying story, and is the same word as Fr. trufle, truffe, a gibe or jest, truffer, truffler, to mock, flout, or jest, It. truffa, a cozening, truffare, to cheat.

Trivial is It. triviale, "triuiall, common, of small estimation, used or taught in high-waies" (Florio), Lat. trivialis, pertaining to cross-roads, trivium, when three roads (tres viæ) meet. The trivial name of a plant is its roadside, vulgar or popular name. A "trivial saying" formerly meant, not a slight and worthless one, but one often quoted and probably therefore full of weight and wisdom, like Greek paroimia, literally a wayside saying, a popular proverb.

[It] is a trivial saying, A very good man cannot be ignorant of equity.—Bp. Hacket, Life of Williams, pt. i. p. 57.

See Trench, Select Glossary, s. v. Richardson remarks that "Trivial and Trifle bear a remarkable similarity in sound and application." The one has certainly exercised a reflex influence on the meaning of the other. A trivial excuse, for example, is now perfectly synonymous with a trifling excuse. Keble uses the word appropriately with allusion to a beaten track,

The trivial round, the common task,
Would furnish all we ought to ask.

The Christian Year. Morning.

Similarly appropriate is Gay's use of the word in his "Trivia or Art of Walking the Streets of London,"

Yet let me not descend to trivial song,
Nor vulgar circumstance my verse prolong.
Bk. ii. l. 302.

þeos ant oðre trufles þet he bitruflæð monie men mide, schulen beon ibrouht te nouht mid heale water ant mid þe holi rode tockne.—Ancren Riwele, p. 106.

[These and other falsehoods that he beguileth many men with, should be brought to nought with holy water and with the holy rood sign.]

And huanne þe mes byeþ y-come on efter þe oþer : þanue byeþ þe burdes and þe trufles uor entremes, and ine þise manere geþ þe tyme.—Ayenbite of Inwyrt (1340), p. 56.

[And when one dish comes in after another, then jokes and jests are for entrées.]

Many has lykyng trofels to here,
And vanities wille lethly lere,
And er bysy in wille and thought
To lere þat þe saul helpes nouht.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 186.

Treoflinge heo smot her and þer : in anoþer tale sone, þat boli man hadde gret wonder.

Life of S. Dunstan, l. 75.

Trow it for no trufles, his targe es to schewe !
Morte Arthure, l. 89.

I red thowe trette of a trewe, and trofle no lengere.
Id. l. 2932.

Not ydle only but also truflynge and bnsy-bodies.—Tyndale, 1 Tim. v. 13 (1534).

[So Cranmer's version, 1539; and the Geneva, 1557, translating φλύαροι, tatlers, silly talkers.]

But we ought not to trifle with God, we should not mocke him, he will not bee despised.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 140.

Thou art mancipium pauca lectionis, an ideot, an ass, nullus es, or plagiarius, a trifler, a trivant, thou art an idle fellow.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, Democritus to the Reader.

Husbandes, desiring no more than constancy, cannot content themselves with their desired felicity, but greene their own soules with triphells, and eate vppe their owne harts through suspition of disloyalty.—Tell-Trothes New-Yeares Gift, 1593, p. 31 (N. Shaks. Soc.).

TRIP MADAM, a trivial name of the sedum reflexum, Fr. trippe madame, is corrupted from triacque madame (Prior).

TROLL-MY-DAMES, an old word for a game, sometimes called pigeon-holes, is a corruption of Fr. trou-madame, the game called Trunks or the Hole (Cotgrave).

A fellow, sir, that I have known to go about with troll-my-dames.—Winter's Tale, act iv. sc. 3.

TROY-TOWN, a provincial name sometimes given to a labyrinth or maze, formed of banks of earth. Norfolk villagers call a garden laid out spirally a "city of Troy." They say that Troy was a town which had but one gate, and that it was necessary to go through all the streets to get to the market place (Wright). The word is a corruption of the British caer-troi, "turning town," or city full of turnings, from Welsh troi, to turn. Cf. tro, a turn, troad and troiad, a turning (Bret. tró), these mazes having been common in Wales. There is a hamlet called Troy-town, probably on the site of one of these, four miles from Dorchester. A certain labyrinthine pattern is (if I remember right) popularly known as "the walls of Troy."

I lost my way; 'twas a regular Troy town.—M. A. Courtney, W. Cornwall Glossary, p. 61.

Perhaps connected with old Eng. throw, to twist, throe, and Lat. torquere.

TROY-WEIGHT has been supposed to be a corruption of the Fr. octroi, a tax, a grant, something authorized, as if a pound Troy corresponded to livre d'octroi, but this needs confirmation.

Octroi is from octroyer, O. Fr. otroier, It. otriare, Sp. otorgar, Prov. autreyar, autorgar, from auctoricare, to authorize.

I am all redy to abey and accept your good and noble wil in the honour wherto ye require me, the which with good hert I otroye and graunt you.—History of Helyas Knight of the Swanne, ch. iii. sub fin.

TRUCHMAN, an interpreter, a word of common occurrence in old writers, is a corrupt form, like the French trucheman, Sp. trujaman, M. H. Ger. tragemunt, of Arab. targomân, from jarğama, to explain (Chaldee targum, a translation), whence also It. dragomanno, Fr. drogman, L. Lat. dragumanus.

It. torcimanno, an interpreter, a trouchman, a spokesman.—Florio.

Whereby w' are stor'd with Truch-man, Guide, and Lamp

To search all corners of the watery Camp.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 68 (1621).

Tears are his truchmen, words do make him tremble.

R. Greene.

Then Finland-folk might visit Africa, The Spaniard Inde, and ours America, Without a truch-man.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 256 (1621).

The word probably was conceived to have some connexion with truck, as if the interpreter were the medium by which ideas are exchanged or bartered, indeed the word "interpreter" itself (Lat. interpres) meant originally a factor, broker, or negotiator.

Sylvester observes that language alters by occasion of trade, which

With hardy luck

Doth words for words barter, exchange aad truck.

Latelye toe mee posted from Joue thee truch spirt, or herral of Gods.—Stanyhurst, Æn. iv. 375 [Davies].

The Earle, though he could reasonably well speake French, would not speake one French word, but all English, whether he asked any question, or answered it, but all was done by Truchemen.—Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 278 (ed. Arber).

Demosthenes complained . . . that Apollo was become King Pbilips friend, as if the Priests and truchmen had bene eyther so discouraged with feare, or so dazeled with a golden Sun; as they and theirs neyther durst nor would deliner anything, that might tend to the Kings preiudice.—Howard, Defensative against poyson of Supposed Prophecies, 1620, p. 17 verso.

I send a solempne ambassad<sup>e</sup> to the King's Maie by an herral, a trumpet, an orator speaking in a strange language, an interpreter, or a truchman with hym.—Losely Manuscripts, p. 33.

A valiant, learned, and religious King, Whose sacred Art retueth excellent

This rarely-sweet celestial Instrument ;
And Davids Truchman rightly doth resound,
(At the Worlds end) his eloquence renown'd.
J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 434.

Trounche man, in a passage quoted by Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, vol. ii. p. 351 (who takes it to mean a trunchman!), is, evidently a further corruption of trenchman or truchman, in Scottish trenchman :—

The Staff and Establishment of the Captain-General were, a Secretary, another for the French tongue, two surgeons, a trounche man, &c.

Compare :—

And having by his trenchman pardon crav'd,
Vailing his eagle to his sovereign's eyes, . .
Dismounts him from his pageant.

Peele, Polyhymnia, 1590.

This being trewlie reported again to him be his trunshman with grait reverence he gaiff thankes.—James Melville, Diary, 1588, p. 263 (Wodrow Soc.).

Dame Natures trenchman, heavens interpret true.
England's Parnassus, p. 621 (repr.).

TRUE-LOVE KNOT has no etymological connexion with love, although it denotes the knot of engaged lovers, being a derivative of the Danish trollove, to betroth or promise (love), fidelity (tro), Icel. trú-lofa (= lofa á sína trú), to pledge one's faith.

Herbe Paris riseth vp with one small tender stalke two handes high, at the very top whereof come forth fower leaues directly set one against another, in manner of a Burgunyon crosse or a true loue knot ; for which cause among the ancients it hath beene called herbe Trueloue.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 328.

The Outside of his doublet was,
Made of the foure-leaved trueloue grass
Changed into so fine a gloss,
With the oyle of crispy moss.
R. Herrick, The Fayrie Kings Diet and Apparrell, Poems, p. 481 (ed. Hazlitt).

Monli in his mantille he sat atte his mete,
With palle puret in poun, was prudliche pi3te,

Trowlt with trulufes and tranest be-tnene.
Anturs of Arther, st. xxviii. (Three Met. Romances, p. 13).

[Manly in his mantle he sat at his meat, with cloak furred with peacock (?) was proudly arrayed, encircled with true-loves and knots between.]

Under his tonge a trewe love he here,
For therby wend he to ben gracios.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 3692.

This trueloue knott, that tyes the heart and will
When man was in th' extremest miserye
To keepe his heart from breaking, existed still.

Sir J. Davies, Poems, vol. ii. p. 215 (ed. Grosart).

Thou sent'st me a true-love-knot ; but I
Returnd a ring of jimmals, to imply
Thy love had one knot, mine a triple tye.
Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, p. 186 (ed. Hazlitt).

No, girl ; I'll knit it up in silken strings
With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots.
Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 7, 45.

Three times a true-love's knot I tye secure,
Firm be the knot, firm may his love endure.
J. Guy, Shepherd's Week, iv. l. 116.

TRUEPENNY, the name which Hamlet applies to the spirit of his father moving "in the cellarage"—

Art thou there, truepenny ?
act i. sc. 5—

afterwards using the words,

Well said, old mole ! canst work i' the earth so fast ? A worthy pioner !

If Collier be correct in his assertion that truepenny is used as a mining term for some indication in the soil of the direction of the ore (Dyce, Glossary to Shakspeare), this word may be, like trepan, to bore, derived from Greek trupánē, trúpanon, a borer. Bailey gives Trupenny as "a name given by way of taunt to some sorry fellow ;" Casaubon says that he has often heard a crafty old hunx called "an old trupenie," and this he identifies with Greek trúpanon, which was sometimes applied to a stupid senseless fellow (De Quatuor Linguis Commentatio, 1650, pt. ii. p. 362).

Trepan, a boring instrument, either for (1) perforating the skull, or (2) breaking through the walls of a besieged town (Sylvester), is a corruption of Greek trúpanon, a borer.

TRUE-TABLE, a word used by Evelyn for a bagatelle or billiard table, which would seem to refer to the accuracy with which it is levelled in order to lie true, doubtless denotes a table furnished with pigeon-holes, Fr. trous. Compare TROLL-MY-DAMES.

There is also a howling-place, a tavern, and a true-table, and here they ride their managed horses.—Diary of John Evelyn, March 23, 1646.

TRUMP, a term at cards, is corrupted from triumph, Fr. trionphe.

She has Pack'd cards with Cæsar, and false play'd my glory

Unto an enemy's triumph.

Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 12.

A game without Civility or Law,
An odious play, and yet in Court oft seene,
A sawcy knave to trump both King and Queene.

Sir J. Harington, Epigrams, bk. iv. 12.

Honest men are turn'd up trump

I shall find them in a lump

But every knave must have a thump.

Randolph, Hey for Honesty, act i. sc. 2.

(1651).

I finde this reason given by some men, because they have been formerly naught themselves; they think they may be so served by others, they turned up trump, before the cards were shuffled.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, Pt. III. iii. 1, 2.

TRUMP, in the phrase "to trump up a story," meaning to invent, foist, or fraudulently concoct, Prov. Eng. trump, to lie or boast, as if to sound a blast on a trump or trumpet, is from Fr. tromper, to deceive, Sp. trompar, to whip a top, lead in circles, deceive, lead astray, trompa, a top, It. tromba, a circling whirlwind, probably from Lat. turbo (trubo? trumbo?), with inserted m, as in strumpet, from Lat. stuprata (strupata). So Diez.

B. Jonson says that Fortune "is pleased to trick or tromp mankind" (Wedgwood).

He nis not so trewe a knight as we wende, for he is but a tromper and a iaper, no fors, late nis sende for hym.—Book of the Knight of La Tour-Landry, p. 33 (E.E.T.S.).

When truth appear'd, Rogero hated more
Alcynas trumpries, and did them detest
Then he was late enamored before, . . .
Now saw he that he could not see before,
How with deceits Alcyna had bene drest.

Sir J. Harington, Orlando Furioso, bk. vii. st. 59 (1591).

TRUNK, the proboscis of an elephant, has no connexion with trunk, the stem or stock of a tree (Fr. tronc), but is O. Eng. trunk, a tube, a corruption of Fr. trompe, a trump or trumpet, "also the Snowt of an Elephant" (Cotgrave), just as trunk in the Northern dialects is used for trump at cards. The noise made by the elephant blowing through its trunk resembles the hoarse sound of a trumpet, and is called "trumpeting" (Sir J. E. Tennent, Nat. Hist. of Cey- lon, p. 97). In a MS. of the 15th century the animal is depicted with an actual trumpet for its proboscis (see Wright, Archæolog. Album (1845), p. 176). See Holland, Pliny, vol. i. p. 353.

He made a trunke of yron with learned advice, crammed it with sulphure, bullet, etc.—Camden, Remaines (1637), p. 203.

He that should lift up his voice like a trumpet doth but whisper through a trunk.—Thos. Adams, The White Devil, Works, ii. p. 224.
Through optic trunk the planet seemed to hear.

Marvell, Poems, p. 162 (Murray repr.).

And see Andrewes, Temptation of Christ, p. 51 (qto.); Cotgrave, s.v. Sarbacane.

Though God be our true glasse, through which wee see

All, since the beeing of all things is hee,
Yet are the trunkes which doe to us derive,
Things, in proportion, fit by perspective,
Deeds of good men; for by their beeing
here,

Vertues, indeed remote, seem to be neare.

Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 257.

TUBEROSE, the name of the flower so called (Polygonum tuberosum), is a corruption of the Fr. tubéreuse, Sp. and Portg. tuberosa, otherwise known as Jacinthe des Indes. These words are derived from Lat. tuberosus, which describes the tuberculated form of the root.

I begged their pardon, and told them I never wore anything but Orange-flowers and Tuberoses.—George Etherege.

TUMBLER, an old name for a species of hunting dog, understood to mean the dog that tumbles or makes sharp turns in coursing, originated in a mistake about the meaning of its French name vautre (old Fr. vaultre, veltre, It. veltro), as if connected with vautrer (old Fr. veautrer, voltrer, It. voltolare, Lat. volutare, to roll), to tumble, wallow, welter. So its Latin name vertagus, was supposed to be derived from vertere, to turn. However, vertagus, or rather vertagus, from which vautre (as well as Eng. fewterer, dog-keeper) comes, is a Gaulish word meaning "quick-runner," from Celtic ver (an intensive particle) + trag, akin to old Ir. traig, foot, Greek trécho, to run, Goth. thragga, Sansk. trksh (Zeuss, W. Stokes, Irish Glosses, p. 44).

Among honndes the Tumbler called in latine Vertagus, is the last, which commeth of this worde Tumbler flowing first of al out of the French fontaine. For as we say Tumble so they Tumbier, reserving one sense and signification, which the latinists comprehend under this worde Vertere.—A. Fleming, Caius of Eng. Dogges, 1576, p. 41 (repr.).

This sorte of Dogges, which compasseth all by craftes, fraudes, subtelties and deceiptes, we Englishe men call Tumblers, because in hunting they turne and tumble, winding their bodyes about in circle wise.—A. Fleming, Caius of Eng. Dogges, 1576 (p. 11, repr.). So Topsell, Fourfooted Beasts, pp. 168, 180.

The word tumbler undoubtedly had it's derivation from the French word tumbier [tomber] which signifies to tumble; to which the Latine name agrees, vertagus, from vertere, to turn; and so they do: for in hunting they turn and tumble winding their bodies about circularly, and then fiercely and violently venturing on the beast, do suddenly gripe it.—The Gentleman's Recreation, p. 34, 1697 [Nares].

Away, setter, away. Yet stay my little tumbler, this old boy shall supply now. I will not trouble him, I cannot be importunate, I; I cannot be impudent.—B. Jonson, The Poetaster, i. 1 (Works, p. 108).

TUMULT, a Scotch term for a portion of land connected with a cottar-house, is probably connected with the old Swed. tomt, area (Jamieson).

TURBAN, "a Turkish Ornament for the Head made of fine linnen wreathed in a rundle" (Bailey), seems in its present form to have been assimilated to the Latin turben (a twist), as if it meant a turbinated head-dress, or one wreathed like a whelk. Old forms are turbant, turband, turribant, tulipant, tolipant; Fr. turban, It. turbante, Low Lat. tulipantus; all from Pers. dulband, a turban, which is said to be compounded of dulāi (du, two, + lāi, fold) and band, a band.

Cotgrave defines turban (which he also gives as turbant, tulbant), "a Turkish hat of white and fine linnen wreathed into a rundle, broad at the bottome to inclose the head, and lessening, for ornament towards the top," with apparent reference to turbiné, "fashioned like a Top [Lat. turbin-] sharp at the bottome and broad at the top."

The Ambassadour standing up uncovered, the Persian King (frolick at that time, or rather in civility) took off his Tulipant.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, p. 313 (1665).

Elsewhere he spells it turbant. They are not leap'd into rough chins and tulipants.

Cartwright, Royal Slave, 1651.

For soon thou might'st have passed among their rant,
Wer't but for thine unmoved tulipant.

Marvell, Poems, p. 104 (Murray's ed.).

See also Selden, Titles of Honour, p. 184; Usher, Annales, p. 284; Prideaux, Conneexion, vol. i. p. 464.

Shashes are long towels of Callico wound about their heads: Turbants are made like globes of callico too, & thwarted with roulees of the same; having little copped caps on the top, of greene or red veluēt, being onely worne by persons of ranke, and he the greatest that weareth the greatest.—Sandys, Travels, p. 63.

His entrance was ushered by thirty comely youths who were vested in crimson Satten Coats, their Tulipants were Silk and Silver wreathed above with small links of Gold.—Sir Thomas Herbert, Travels, p. 141 (1665).

In A World of Wonders, 1607 [p. 235], turbant, an old spelling of turbun, is found marginally explained by tolibante.—F. Hall, Modern English, p. 112.

The Turke and Persian weare great tolibants of ten, fiteene and twentie elles of linnen a piece vpon their heads.—Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 291 (ed. Arber).

Spenser, strangely enough, seems to have connected the word with Lat. turris, and identified it with the turrita corona (Ovid), the towering or turreted crown, of Cybele, the turrita mater (Virgil), as he speaks of "old Cybele"

Wearing a Diademe embattild wide
With hundred turrets, like a Turribant.

Faerie Queene, IV. xi. 28.

Of the same origin is It. tulipano, Sp. tulipan, whence old Eng. tulipan, Eng. tulip, the flower which resembles a gorgeous coloured turban, Sp. tulipa, Fr. tulipe, Ger. tulpe. Gerarde says:—

After it hath beene some fewe daies flowered the points and brims of the flower turne backward, like a Dalmatian or Turkes cap, called Tulipan, Tolipan, Turban, and Turfan, whereof it tooke his name.—Herball, p. 117 (1597).

Tulipan, the delicate flower called a Tulipa, or Tulpie, or Dalmatian Cap.—Cotgrave.

See TWILLPANT. Ghiselin de Busbecq (died 1592) first brought into notice the lilac and the flower "which the Turks call Tulipan."

TURBOT, Fr. and old Dut. turbot, Welsh torbwot, old Fr. tourboz (14th cent.), perhaps a corruption of Thor-but, Thor's but or flat-fish (like Greek Zeus, Jupiter, = the dory). "Hic turbo, a but" (Wright's Vocubularies, p. 254). Compare A. Sax. þunor-bodu, sparus (Id. p. 55), þunor-bod (Ettmüller), which might become Thur-but, like Thurs-day beside Ger. Donners-tag, and Ger. dürrwurz, dörrwurz, and donnerwurz, various names for the plant Conyza (O. H. Ger. Donar = Thor). Perhaps other corruptions of the same are thorn-but, Ger. dorn-but, like dorn-stein, dorn-strahl, corrupt forms of Donr- (or Donner = Thor)-stein, -strahl (see G. Stephens, Old N. Runic Monuments, p. 977).

Compare Dan. torsk, the cod, Icel. þorsk, beside Dan. torden (i.e. Thor-din), thunder, Icel. þór-duna.

He tok þe sturgiun, and þe qual,
And þe turbut, and lax with-al,

* * * * *

þe Butte, þe schulle þe þornebake.

Havelok the Dane, l. 759.

TUREEN, so spelt as if from the city of Turin, is an incorrect form of terreen, Fr. terraine, properly an earthen vessel, from terre, Lat. terra, earth; Fr. Argot turin, pot de terre (Nisard, Hist. des Livres Populaires, ii. 377). Compare turmeric, from Fr. terre-mérite, and turpentine for terebinthine. So turnip (for terre-neppe), terce napus (Earle, Eng. Plant-Names, p. 96).

Item, pour 6 livres et demie de terbenine, 4s.—Carpenter's Bill, 1360, in Choice Notes, History, p. 71.

TURK, an old word for a dwarf or hunch-back, a short thick-set man, seems to be merely a corruption of Scot. durk, thick-set, dwergh, a dwarf, old Eng. dwerk, a dwarf (Lybeus Discopus), dwarqhe, Prov. Eng. durgan, a dwarf (Wright), derrick, a fairy, a pixy (Devon, Id.), A. Sax. dweorg, Dut. dwerq, Icel. dvergr, M. H. Ger. twerq, a dwarf, Ger. zwerg (cf. zwerch, awry). Cf. Prov. Eng. dergy, short, thick-set (Wright).

Turchie, short and thick, squar, Perth.—Jamieson, Scot. Dictionary.

Durgan, of short or low stature, as, he is a durgan, a meer durgan.—Bp. Kennett, MS. in Way, Prompt. Parv. s.v. Dwerowe.

Nanus, a dwarfe or a lytell Turke.—Ortus (ibid.).

For the change from d to t, compare old Eng. turk, a sword or dagger (1638, Nares), which must be for durk, Ir. dwirc.

Item, ther is comen a newe litell Turke, whyche is a wele vysagyd felawe off the age of xl. yere; and he is lower than Manuell by a hanfull, and lower than my lytell Tom by the schorderys [shoulders], and mor lytell above hys pappe; . . . and he is leggyd ryght i now.—The Paxton Letters, 1470, vol. ii. p. 394 (ed. Gairdner).

Into the hall a burne there came:
He was not hye, but he was broad,
& like a turke he was made,
Both legg & thye.

Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 91, l. 15.

TURKEY. Broderip in his Zoological Recreations conjectured that this bird may have been so called from the blue or Turquoise colour of the skin about its head.

Les Barbillons et creste d'iceluy,
Sont de couleur à l'azurée proche.

Belon, Portraits d'Oyseaux, 1557.

Turquois was formerly spelt Turky; Sandeys speaks of "the emerald and Turky;" Pepys of a "ring of a Turky-stone" (Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary).

TURKEY-BIRD, a Suffolk name for the wryneck (Wright), is no doubt a corruption of turcot, the name elsewhere given to it. "Turcot" is the French turcou, It. torticollo, "wry-neck."

TURMOIL, which seems to be compounded with the verb moil, to labour or drudge, is an Anglicized form of Welsh tramael, from tra, excessive, and mael, traffic, labour. The Welsh word also takes the form trafael, extreme effort, trouble, "travail."

TURNER, an old Scottish copper coin (Jamieson), is a corruption of Fr. tournois, a French penny (Cotgrave), from Lat. Turonensis, so called because first struck at Tours. So thaler, our "dollar," is a shortened form of Joachims-thaler, originally money coined in the Joachims Valley (Ger. thal = dale), in Bohemia (16th century). It might have been mentioned above that rap, a stiver, in the phrase "Not worth a rap," seems to be the same word as rappen, a small Swiss coin, the hundredth part of a franc, so named from the head of a raven, Ger. rabe, provincially rape, which was figured upon it (Chambers, Cyclopaedia).

TURNKEY. This name for the warder of a prison has been supposed by some to be a corruption of Fr. tournoquet.

(something that turns round), a turnstile (also a swivel, a screw), as if one who gives ingress and egress. That word, however, was never used in that specific sense; though a parallel usage is presented in the slang term screw for a warder (Slang Dict.).

Be sure you put Sheerness's letter in a sealed envelope. I find I have none, and it is not good enough to give it open to a screw. What is a screw?—A warder.—Examination of a Convict, Standard, Nov. 1, 1877.

The prisoners . . . seldom or ever "round" on the "screw," Anglicè, betray an officer, so long as he acts "square" with them and their "pals" outside.—Five Years' Penal Servitude, p. 59.

TURN-MERICK, a corruption of turmeric, is quoted from Markham's Cheap and Good Husbandry, 1676, in the last edition of Nares' Glossary. Turmeric itself is from Fr. terre-mérite.

TURRETS, a word (not registered in the dictionaries) for the rings of a horse's harness through which the reins are passed, so named now, perhaps, from a notion that they stand out from the collar like turrets or little towers from a castle, is in old English torettes or torettes, rings, from Fr. touret, "the annulet, or little ring whereby a Hawkes Lune is fastened unto the Jesses" (Cotgrave), a dimin. of tour, a turn, round, or circle (Prov. turn), from Lat. turnus, Greek tórnos, a turning wheel. Compare Fr. tournet, a ring in the mouth of a bit (Cotgrave).

About his char ther wenten white alauns, . . . Colored with gold, and torettes filed round.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 2154.

The Ringe [of the Astrolabe] renneeth in a manner of a turet.—Treatise of Astrolabe [Tyrwhitt, in loc. cit.].

A collar . . . with torrettes and pendants of silver and guilte.—Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, p. 240 (repr. 1870).

No sooner had he presented to us his mighty Jovian back, . . . whilst inspecting professionally the buckles, the straps, and the silvery turrets of his harness, than I raised Miss Fanny's hand to my lips.—De Quincey, Works, vol. iv. p. 306.

As one who loves and venerates Chaucer for his unrivalled merits of tenderness, of picturesque characterisation, and of narrative skill, I noticed with great pleasure that the word torrettes is used by him to designate the little devices through which the reins are made to pass. This same word, in the same exact sense, I heard uniformly used by many scores of illustrious mail-coach-men, to whose confidential friendship I had the honour of being admitted in my younger days.—Id. Note in loco cit.

TURTLE, the name of the sea-tortoise, is a corruption of its old name tortor, denoting the tortile (old Eng. tortyl, Fr. tortille) or crooked (limbed) animal, in allusion to its tortuous or twisted feet, Lat. tortus. Compare the names of the tortoise, Fr. tortue, Sp. and Portig. tortuga. The forms It. tartaruga, Fr. tartarasse would seem to refer to the tartarian or infernal ugliness of a beast regarded as mis-shapen.

They are like the crane and the turtu that turnthe her hede and fases backward, and lokithe ouer the shuldre.—Book of the Knight of La Tour-Landry, p. 15.

TWEEZERS. This very English-looking word for a pair of nippers used in tweaking or twitching out hairs, &c., formerly tweeze, a case of instruments, is a naturalized form (ettwees) of Fr. étuis, étui, old Fr. estuy, thus defined by Cotgrave, "a sheath, case, or box to put things in, and (more particularly) a case of little instruments, or sizzars, bodkin, penknife, &c. now commonly teamed, an Ettwee." Compare Sp. estuche, Mid. High Ger. stüche, Ger. stauche, a case. Similarly tweers, the bellows at an iron furnace (Wright), is from Fr. tuyère, a blast-pipe.

Here clouded canes 'midst heaps of toys are found,

And inlaid tweezer-cases strow the ground.

Gay, The Fun, bk. i. l. 126.

TWIG, to understand (Lincolnshire), and commonly used in slang in the sense of to notice or observe, is an adaptation of Ir tuigim, I understand, discern, or perceive.

"They're a twiggin' of you, sir," whispered Mr. Weller.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xx.

A landsman said, "I twig the chap—he's been upon the Mill."

Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, Misadventures at Margate.

Whitley Stokes compares Ir. tuigim, old Ir. tuccu, with old Lat. tongère, Goth. thagljan, Icel. thelkja, Eng. think (Irish Glosses, p. 165). See THICK.

TWILIGHT, a cloth or napkin, is a corruption of the word toilet, Fr. toilette, dim. of toile, a cloth (Lat. tela).

Compare old Eng. twayle (Joseph of Arimathe, l. 285) for towel, Fr. touaille.

A toilet is a little cloth which ladies use for what purpose they think fit, and is by some corruptly called a twilight.—Ladies' Dictionary [Wright].

Fine twi-lights, blankets, and the Lord knows what.—The Fifteen Comforts of Matrimony, 1706.

Similarly I have heard a schoolboy speak of making his twilight.

It was no use doing the downy again, so it was just as well to make one's twilight and go to chapel.—Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green, pt. ii. ch. 7.

But he once dead—

Brings her in triumph, with her portion,
down,

A twillet, dressing-box, and half a crown.

Dryden, Disappointment, Prologue, 1684,
l. 50.

TWILLED, in the subjoined passage of Shakespeare, has greatly perplexed the commentators. Pioned probably means decked with pionies (a provincial form of peonies), standing here for marsh-marigolds, which are so-called in the Midland counties. Twilled seems to mean furnished with twills, which is a North country word for reeds, and only another form of old Eng. quills, reeds. It is "the very word to describe the crowded sedges in the shallower reaches of the Avon as it winds round Stratford" (Edinburgh Review, vol. cxxxvi. p. 366).

Compare Cumberland and Cleveland twill, a quill; quyllle, a stalke, Calamus (Prompt. Parv.); Ir. cuilc, a reed (O'Reilly).

Thy banks with pioned and twilled brims,
Which spongy April at thy best betrims,
To make cold nymphs chaste crowns.

Shakespeare, The Tempest, act iv. sc. 1, l. 65.

A Twill; A Spool; from Quill. In the South they call it winding of Quills, because antiently, I suppose, they wound the Yarn upon Quills for the Weavers, though now they use Reeds. Or else Reeds were called Quills, as in Latin, calami.—Ray, North Country Words.

TWILL-PANT, the name of a flower quoted by Richardson from Chapman, Ovid's Banquet of Sense (1625), under the word Twill, a cane or reed, with which he supposed it was connected, is an evident corruption of tulipant, the old name of the tulip, so-called, like the Martagon, or Turk's cap lily, from a fancied resemblance to a turban, old Eng. tulipant, of rich and varied colours.

TWITCH, a Lincolnshire word for couch-grass (triticum repens), is another form of quitch grass, A. Sax. cwic, from cwic, vivacious. So Leicestershire twitch-grass (Evans). See COUCH-GRASS.

TWITCH-BELL, a Cleveland word for the common earwig. The first part of the word is A. Sax. twicca = wiga (ear-wig), a beetle; -BELL is apparently identical with ball, bol, boll. (See Adams, in Philolog. Soc. Proc. 1858, p. 98).

TWITCHE-BOX, an old corruption of touch-box, a tinder-box, is quoted by Nares, Glossary, s.v.

TWITTER, a corruption of twit, to reproach or chide maliciously, itself an abbreviated form of old Eng. atwytte, A. Sax. ed-witan, to wite or blame over again (see WHITE), Goth. id-weitan, to reproach, id-weit, reproach, from weitan, to know (akin to Eng. wit, Lat. videre), Icel. vita, to know, vita, to fine.

And if he was so good to forgive me a word spoken in haste or so, it doth not become such a one as you to twitter me.—Fielding, Hist. of a Foundling, bk. viii. ch. 7 (p. 111, Works).

And gif þer is out to eadwiten, oðer lodlich, biderward heo schuleð mid eðer eien.—Ancren Riwle, p. 212.

[If there is aught to blame, or loathly, there they scowl with either eye.]

Hore lates loken warliche, þet non ne edwite ham ne ine huse, ne ut of huse.—Id. p. 426.

[Let them carefully observe their manners, that none may blame them, either in the house or out of the house.]

Man, hytt was full grett dyspyte
So offte to make me edwite!

Hymns to the Virgin and Child, p. 124,
l. 226 (ed. Furnivall).

Be not to hasty on brede for to bite
Of gredynes lest men the wolde atwite.

Stans Puer ad Mensam, l. 28 (Early Pop. Poetry, iii. 25).

But God be thanked, said the foxe, ther may noman endwyte me ne my lygnage ne kynne of suche werkys, but that we shal acwyte vs.—Carton, Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 115 (ed. Arber).

No man for despite
By worde or hy write
His felowe to twite

But further in honestie,
No good turnes entwite,
Nor olde sores recite.

Udall, Roister Doister, ii. 3 (p. 36,
ed. Arber).

Which, as it was a speciall honour (and wheresoever this Gospell is preached, shall be told for a memoriall of her:) so was it withall not without some kinde of enthwiting to them (to the Apostles) for sitting at home, so drowping in a corner.—Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, p. 556 (fol.).

And evermore she did him sharply twight,
For breach of faith to her, which he had firmely plight.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, V. vi. 12.

His misziggeþ nonliche and his clepyeþ truons and ham ziggeþ zwo uele atuytnges and of folyes er þan hi ham aʒt yeue þet wel is worþ þet zeluer.—Ayenbite of Inwyt, p.
194.

[[In giving alms to the poor some] slander them foully and call them truants and utter so many twittings and follies ere they give them aught, that the silver is well earned.]

TYPHOON, a tornado or hurricane in the Chinese seas, as if from the Gk. typhon (τυφών), akin to typhus, (1) smoke, mist, (2) stupor of fever. It is composed of the two Chinese words, tai, great, fung, wind (N. & Q. 4th S. No. 43, p. 389).

Typhôn, however, curiously enough, was with the Egyptians the personification of whirlwinds and storms, and is described by Hesiod as a terrible and outrageous wind (Theog. 307). See Dennis, Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. i. p. 329, ed. 1878; Wilkinson, Ancient Egyptians, vol. iii. p. 144 (ed. Birch).

The extreme rarefaction of the atmosphere now begins to operate as one of the causes tending to the production of those terrible hurricanes, or rushes of wind, called typhoons (Tae-foong—"great wind"), which are justly dreaded by the inhabitants of southern China; but which chiefly devastate the coasts of Haenân, and do not extend much to the north of Canton. The name typhoon, in itself a corruption of the Chinese term, bears a singular (though we must suppose an accidental) resemblance to the Greek τυφών.—Sir J. Davis, The Chinese, vol. iii. p. 143 (ed. 1844.)

But if the clift or breach be not great, so that the wind be constrained to turne round, to roll and whirle in his discent, without fire (i.) lightning, it makes a whirle-puffe or ghust called Typhon (i.) the storme Ecnephias aforesaid, sent out with a winding violence.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 24.

Typhon, moreover, or Vortex differeth from Turben, in flying backe, and as much as a crash from a cracke.—Id. p. 25.

The winde, which they call Tufan, is so violent, that it driueth ships on the land, ouer-throweth men and houses: it commeth almost enery yeere once, lasteth foure and twentie houres, in which space it compasseth the compass.—S. Purchas, Pilgrimages, p. 520.

Francis Fernandes writeth, that in the way from Malacca to Japan they are incountr'd with great stormes, which they call Tufons, that blow foure and twenty houres, beginning from the North to the East and so about the Compasse.—Id. p. 681.

It may also be remembred, that during this late tuffon, lightning was seen to fall and hang like fire, sometimes to skip too and fro about the Yards and Tackling of our Ships.—Sir Thos. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 12.

The circling Typhon, whirl'd from point to point,
Exhausting all the rage of all the sky,
And dire Ecnephia, reign.

Thomson, Seasons, Summer.

U.

ULM-TREE, an elm, in Wycliffe, Isaiah xli. 19, is an assimilation to Lat. ulmus, of old Eng. and A. Sax. elm (Icel. álmr, Dan. and Swed. alm). Similarly Ger. ulme, formerly elme, has been modified by ulmus (Skeat).

UNDERLING, a Cleveland word for a dwarfish, ill-grown child, seems to be a mistaken expansion of the synonymous word urling in the same dialect, Scot. urluch, vide Atkinson, s.vv. Urling, Orling.

UNEQUAL is often used by early writers as equivalent, not to Lat. inæqualis, but to iniquus, unjust, unfair, with which it was confused, e.g. A. V. Ezek. xviii. 25, and Geneva Version, ibid. See Abp. Trench, Select Glossary, who quotes:—

These imputations are too common, Sir,
And easily stuck on virtue, when she's poor;
You are unequal to me.

Ben Jonson, The Fox, act iii. sc. 1.

UNION, an old word for a single large pearl, Lat. unio, as if from unus, one. It is more likely that the pearl was so named from a fancied resemblance to the onion, Lat. unio (Fr. oignon), just as "pearl" itself comes probably from Lat. pirula, a little pear, and Lat. bacca denotes a berry and a pearl. Unio again, in this latter sense, may be only a Latinized form of a Gaulish word (? oinnio). Compare Gael. uinnean, Welsh wynwyn-in, Ir. uinneamain, an onion (W. Stokes, Irish Glosses, p. 102).

In the cup an union shall he throw
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn.

Hamlet, v. 2.

Here was that Venus which had hung in her ear the other Union that Cleopatra was about to dissolve and drink up as she had done its fellow.—Evelyn, Diary, Feb. 21, 1645, p. 138 (reprint, Murray).

Their [pearls] chief reputation consisteth in these five properties, namely, if they be orient white, great, round, smooth and weightie. Qualities I may tell you, not easily to be found all in one: insomuch as it is impossible to find out two perfectly sorted together in all these points, and hereupon it is, that our dainties and delicates here at Rome, have devised this name for them, and call them Vnions; as a man would say, Singular and by themselves alone.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist., vol. i. p. 255.

Ælius Stilo doth report in his Chronicle, that in the time of warre against Jugurtha, the faire and goodly great pearles began to be named Vniones.—Holland, ibid. p. 257.

Marvell, speaking of the tulip, says:—

Its union root they then so high did hold,
That one was for a meadow sold.

Poems, p. 67 (Murray repr.).

With the above extract from Pliny compare—

Unio ad nun ceste pere, nule ne pot estre plus chere,
Pur çeo est union numée, jà sa per n'ert mais trovée.

Philip de Thavn, The Bestiary, l. 1482 (12th cent.), ed. Wright.

[Unio is the name of this stone, none can be more precious, therefore it is named unio, its equal never was found.]

They are not those Unions, Pearles so called, because thrifty Nature only affordeth them by one and one; seeing that not only Twins, but Bunches and Clusters of these [diamonds] are found together.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 294.

By placing some of their dispersed meditations into a chain or sequel of discourse, I may with their precious stones make an "Union," and compose them into a jewel.—Jeremy Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. iv. sect. 4.

UNREADY, the sobriquet given in so many popular histories of England to Ethelred, as if the meaning were "unprepared" against his foes, is a misunderstanding of the old Eng. words rædles, devoid of ræd or counsel, unrad, bad advice. See Skeat, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 271.

Ten years after their [the Danes] first visit we find the King, deservedly nicknamed the Unready, purchasing the goodwill of the invaders by a large sum of money.—Dawe and Lawson, Elementary Hist. of England, p. 27.

Mr. Green, in his History of the English People (vol. i.), says of Ethelred:—

Handsome and pleasant of address, the young King's pride showed itself in a string of imperial titles, and his restless and self-confident temper drove him to push the pretensions of the Crown to their furthest extent. His aim throughout his reign was to free himself from the dictation of the great nobles, and it was his indifference to their "rede" or counsel that won him the name of "Æthelred the Redeless."

Similarly Richard II. was popularly known as the Redeless.

Now Richard þe redeles · reweth on þou self.
Langland, Richard the Redeles, 1399,
Pass. i. l. 1 (ed. Skeat).

An vnredy reue · þi residue shal spene,
That menyte mothþe was [maister] ynne · in a myntewhile.

Vision of Piers Plowman, C. xiii. 217.

As an instance of the other word unready, unprepared, Wycliffe has—

Leest macedonyes . . . fynden you vnredi.—2 Cor. ix. 4.

UNRULY has all the appearance of being a derivative of rule, and is so explained in all the dictionaries, e.g. in Bailey, "not to be ruled or governed;" "Vnruly, irregularis" (Levins, Manipulus, 1570). Etymologically the word has nothing to do with rule, and is to be analyzed, not as un-rul(e)-y, but as un-ru-ly (Morris), or more correctly un-roo-ly, un-rest-ful, derived from old Eng. unroo, unrest, roo or ro, rest, akin to Swed. and Dan. ro, Icel. ró, rest (A. Sax. rôw, pleasant), O. H. Ger. râwa, ruowa, Ger. ruhe, Sansk. ram, rest Unruly thus corresponds exactly to Dan. wrolig, and means restless, turbulent. The translators of the Authorized Version probably connected the word with rule, as they use it for a Greek word meaning "disorderly" (1 Thess. v. 14), "ungovernable" (Titus, i. 6 and 10), "irrestrainable," "that cannot be checked" (Jas. i. 8), "The tongue can no man tame, it is an unruly euill" (1611), "An vnruely vnyll" (Tyndale, 1534), "An unpesible yuel" Wycliffe, 1380). Abp. Trench quotes ruly from Foxe (Eng. Past and Present, Lect. iii.). A heathen stone, about 10th century, found in Sweden, has the runic inscription, "Thonar roa uit!" i.e. Thor give rest (G. Stephens, Thor the Thunderer, p. 42).

Then goe you to your Soueraygne,
 giue him obeysaunce duely;
 That done, withdraw your selfe asyde,
 at no tyme prooue vnruely.

H. Rhodes, Boke of Nurture, l. 368
 (Babes Book, p. 81).

We desyre you brethren, warne them that are vnruely.—Tyndale, 1534, 1 Thess. v. 14.

These people vsing to robbe and forrage, were many times by the neiging of their vnruely Horsses discovered.—Topsell, Hist. of Four-footed Beasts, p. 324 (1608).

Those that are well-skilled in handling Horses compell them from their vnruinesse.
 —Id. p. 288.

"Dere sone," saide scho (hym to),
 "Thou wirkeste th[ise]lfe mekille unroo,
 What wille thou with this mere do,
 That thou hase hame broghte?"
Thornton Romances, Sir Perceval, p. 15,
 l. 364.

Rooles, restless, occurs in the old
 Eng. poem, Of a mon Matheu pohte,
 l. 50:—

his world me wurchep wo,
 rooles ase þe roo,
 y sike for vnsete.

Bödeker, Altenglische Dichtungen, p. 186.

Ne mai vs ryse no rest, rycheis, ne ro.
Political Songs, Bödeker, p. 103.

And thou thus ryfes me rest and ro,
 And lettes thus lightly on me, lo
 Siche is thy catyfnes.

Towneley Mysteries, Crucifixio.

Thare we may ryste vs with roo, and raunsake oure wondys.

Morte Arthure, l. 4304.

In þe holy gost I lene welle;
 In holy chyrche and hyre spelle.
 In goddes body I be-leue nowe,
 A-monge hys seyntes to 3eue me rowe.

Myrc, Instructions of Parish Priests, p. 14,
 l. 447.

In me weore tacched sorwes two,
 In þe fader mihte non a-byde,
 For he was euer in reste and Ro.
Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 143, l. 358.

Thus com ur Lauerd Crist us to
 To bring us al fra, til rest and ro.
Eng. Metrical Homilies, p. 14 (ed. Small).

How readily the word would come to be regarded as meaning unruled may be seen from the following, where Wat Tyler's insurrection is spoken of:—

Theyse vnruelyd cōpany gatheryd vnto them great multytude of the cōmons, & after sped them towarde ye cytie of Lōdo.—Fabyan, Chronicles, 1516, p. 530 (ed. Ellis).

UPBRAID, to reproach or revile one,
 originally to cast something up to one,
 A. Sax. up-gebręgdan (Somner) and upåbręgdan (Ettmüller, p. 318), was sometime written abraid, as if identical with old Eng. abraide, to start up, or draw a sword, A. Sax. åbręgdan, to draw out, bręgdan, to turn or move quickly.
 Compare Icel. bregða, to move swiftly, draw a sword, start or make a sudden movement; Prov. Eng. braide, to start, leap, or strike.

How now, base brat! what, are thy wits thine own,

That thou dar'st thus abraid me in my land?
 'Tis hest for thee these speeches to recall.

Greene, Alphonsus, King of Aragon, 1599,
 p. 231 (ed. Dyce).

Wright quotes from Bochas:—

Bochas present felly gan abrayde
 To Messaline, and even thus he sayde.
 Liche as he had befallen in a rage
 [He] furiously abrayde in his language.

Latimer has the peculiar form em-brayd, as if compounded with en = in.

There was debate betweene these two wiues.
 Phenenna in the doying of sacrifice, embrayded
 Anna because she was barren and not fruit-full.—Sermons, p. 61.

We see something of the original meaning of the word in Prov. Eng.
upbraid, or as it is spelt in North Eng. abraid, said of food which rises in the stomach with a feeling of nausea.

In his maw he felt it commotion a little and upbraide him.—Nash, Lenten Stufe [Davies].

Here the meaning is, not (as has been supposed) that the food reproves the eater for over-indulgence, but that it rises or starts up.

Upbraid, to cast a thing up to one,
 is found in very early English. Where Tyndale has "That same also the theves . . . cast in his tethe" (Matt.
 xxvii. 44, 1534), Wycliffe has "The theues . . . vpbraiden hym of the same thing."

In his earen he hefde, þe heouenliche Louerd, al þet edwit, & al þet upbrud, & al þe schorn, & alle þe scheomen þet earen muhte iheren.—Ancren Riule, p. 108.

[In his ears he heard, the heavenly Lord, all the twitting, and all the upbraiding, and all the scorn, and all the shame, that ears might hear.]

And als I stod my dom to her,
Bifor Jesus, wit dreri cher,
Of fendes herd Ic mani upbrayd
And a boc was bifor me layd.

Eng. Metrical Homilies, p. 31 (ed. Small). þe soun of oure Souerayn þen swey in his ere,
þat vpbaydes þis burne vpon a breme wyse.
Alliterative Poems, p. 101, l. 430.

And alle he suffred here vpbreyd,
And neuer nagent aþens hem seyde.
R. Mannyng, Handlyng Synne, l. 5844.

Ne dide to his neghburgh inel ne gram,
Ne ogaines his neghburgh vpbraidng nam.
Northumbri in Psalter, Ps. xiv. 3.

UPHOLSTERER, a reduplicated form (like fruit-er-er, poult-er-er) of upholder, for upholdster. Old Eng. upholdere, "that sellythe smal thynges, velaber" (Prompt. Parv.), is also a broker or dealer in second-hand goods.

Vp-holderes on þe hul shullen haue hit to selle.
Vision of Piers Plowman, C. xiii. 218.

Gay uses upholder for an undertaker,—

Where the brass knocker, wrapt in flannel band,
Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand,
Th' upholder, rueful harbinger of death,
Waits with impatience for the dying breath.
Trivium, bk. ii. l. 470.

UPPER-LET, a Norfolk word for a shoulder-knot, is a corruption of epaulette.

UPRIST, sometimes used as a preterite = uproise, e.g.—

The glorious sun uprist.

Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, part ii.—
and as a past participle = uprisen, e.g.—

[Maia] That new is uprist from hed.

Spenser, S. Calendar, March— both from a mistaken view about the old Eng. up rist—

Up rist this jolly lover Absolon.

Chaucer, Milleres Tale, 503—
i.e. upriseth, present third pers. sing.

So Spenser by a blunder used yede as an infinitive, it being the past tense of the verb to go, as if "goed."

Grante ous, crist,

Wit þin uprist

to gone. Amen.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 199, l. 80.

UPROAR is the English form of the cognate Ger. aufrahr, and not a compound of up and roar. (See Marsh's Lectures on Eng. Lang. ed. Smith, p. 380.) Ger. aufrahr, a disturbance, tumult, or insurrection, is from auf-rühren, to stir up, excite. So Dut. op-roer, tumult, from roeren, to stir; Dan. op-rör, riot, uproar, from op-røre, to stir up. Compare A. Sax. véran, to rear or raise. The uncompounded word roar or rore is found in old English meaning an insurrection, rising, or commotion.

Rore, or truble amonge þe puple. Tumultus, commotio, disturbium.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Thus should all the realme fal in a roare.—Hall, Chronicle (see note in loc. cit.).

In the following the word is used for a seditious rising or insurrection:—

Arte not thou that Egypcian which before these dayes made an uproare and ledde out into the wildernes .iiii. thousande men that were motherers?—Acts xxi. 38, Tyndale Version, 1534.

For we are in ieopardy, to be accensd of thys dayes uproar.—Acts xix. 40, Geneva Version, 1557.

Nay, had I power, I should,
Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Macbeth, iv. 3.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood ruled; stood vast infinitude confined.

Milton, Paradise Lost, bk. iii. l. 711.

But they sayd; not on the holy daye, lest there be an uproare amonge the people.—Matt. xxvi. 5, Cranmer's Version, 1539.

UPROAR, a playful perversion among the populace of the word opera, as also roaratorio of oratorio.

While gentlefolks strut in their silver and satins

We poor folk are tramping in straw hat and pattens;

Yet as merrily old English ballads can sing-o,
As they at their opperoves outlandish ling-o.

G. A. Stevens, Description of Bartholomew Fair, 1762.

UPSEE FREEZE, in the phrase "to drink upsee freeze," found in old writers with the meaning of to drink in true toper's fashion, is a corruption of the Dutch op-zyn-fries, "in the Dutch fashion," or à la mode de Frise (Nares).

One that drinks upse-freeze.—Haywood, Philothonista, 1635, p. 45.

Drunke according to all the learned rules of Drunkennes, as Vpsy-Freeze, Crambo, Parmizant.—Dekker, Seuen Deadly Sinnes of London, 1606, p. 12 (ed. Arber).

He with his companions, George and Rafe, Doe meet together to drink vpsefreeze, Till they have made themselves as wise as geese.

The Times' Whistle, p. 60, l. 1816 (E.E.T.S.).

UPSHOT, the result or dénoûment of anything, is no doubt a corruption of up-shut, which is the form in use in Dorsetshire, and corresponds to the synonymous word "conclusion" (i.e. conclusio, from con-cludere), a "shutting-up." So "cockshoot" is found for "cock-shut" (time), vid. Nares, s.v.

Vnder the great King of Kings this king of men is substitute to his King with this vp-shut—the one is for ever the King of Goodnesse.—J. Forde, A Line of Life, 1620, p. 69 (Shaks. Soc.).

It is but their conceit of the cheapness; they pay dear for it in the upshot. The devil is no such frank chapman, to sell his wares for nothing.—Adams, The Fatal Banquet, Sermons, vol. i. p. 201.

And when the upshot comes, perhaps the mispleading of a word shall forfeit all.—T. Adams, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 482.

I am now so far in offence with my niece that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, act iv. sc. ii. l. 77.

I thanke you, Irenæus, for this your gentell paynes; withall not forgetting, nowe in the shutting up, to putt you in mynde of that which you have formerlye half promised.—Spenser, View of Present State of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 683.

To conclude was formerly used in exactly the same sense as the colloquial phrase "to shut a person up," i.e. to confute, put to silence.

Beep nat s-ferd of þat folke · for ich shal 3eue 3ow tonge,
Connyng and clergie · to conclude hem alle.
Vision of Piers Plowman, C. xii. 280.

Prof. Skeat illustrates this by citing:—

In all those temptations Christ concluded the fiend and withstood him.—Wordsworth, Eccles. Biography, i. 266.

UPSIDE-DOWN is no doubt, as Prof. Earle has pointed out in his Philology of the English Tongue (p. 432), an alteration by a false light of old Eng. up-so-down, i.e. up what (was) down, so being the old relative pronoun. Wycliffe has the forms upsodown, upsedown, Ex. xxiii. 8, Luke xv. 8. Richardson quotes from Vives the corruption upset down. Compare Prov. Eng. backsevoore.

Thee hast a' put on thy hat backsevoore.—Mrs. Palmer, Devonshire Courtship, p. 20.

What es man in shap hot a tre
Turned up þat es down, sls men may se.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 673.

þafor it es ryght and resoune,
þat þai be turned up-swa-downe,
And streyned in helle and honden fast.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 7230.

Truly þis ilk toun schal tylte to grounde,
Vp-so-down schal 3e dumpe depe to þe abyeme.
Alliterative Poems, p. 99, l. 362.

And shortly turned was all up so down,
Both habit and eke dispositioun
Of him, this woful lover, dan Arcite.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 1081.

þat þe kirk performe it solemply, candel slekenuid, bell ro[n]gun, and þe cros turnid vp so down.—Apology for the Lollards, p. 19 (Camden Soc.).

Comonly Wonders falle more ayenst wo than ayenst welthe as . . . the raynehowe toured up so downe.—Dives et Pauper, ch.
xxvii.

Thei turneden upsedown my feet, and oppressiden with her pathis as with floodis.—
Wycliffe, Job xxx. 12.

For þat þat is þe fendis chire[he], þat ben proude clerkis & coueitouse, þei clepen holy chirche to turnen alle þing upsodown as anticristis diciplis.—Unprinted Works of Wycliffe,
p. 119 (E.E.T.S.).

Me thynketh this court is al turned vp so doon, These false shrewes flaterers and deceyours arise and wexe grete by the lordes and been enhansed vp, And the good triewe and wyse hen put down.—*Caxton, Reynard
the Fox*, 1481, p. 74 (ed. Arber).

God saue the queenes maiestie snd confound hir foes,
Els turne their hartes quite upsidowne,
To become true subiectes, as well as those,
That faythfully snd truely hane serued the crowne!

Ancient Ballads and Broad-sides, p. 235
(ed. Lilly).

They turned iustice upsidowne. Eyther they would geue wrong judgement, or els put of, and delys poore mens matters.—
Latimer, Sermons, p. 63.

Josias began and made an alteration in his childheod, he turned all upside downe.—Id. p. 62.

These that haue turned the world upside downe, are come hither also.—Acts xvii. 6, Authorised Version, 1611.

URE-ox, a wild ox or buffle (Bailey), apparently compounded of Lat. urus, a wild ox (Ger. ur), and ox, Ger. auer-ochs, an aurochs, like auer-hahn, a heath-cock or wild-cock, auer-henne, a heath-hen or wild-hen. It is noticeable that "wild ox" in the Authorised Version (Deut. xiv. 5) represents the Greek ὄρυξ (Lxx.), Lat. oryx (Vulg.); see Bochart, Opera, vol. i. p. 948; Topsell, 570. May not ure-ox and aurochs be a corrupt transliteration of orux? Pictet identifies Ger. auer-(ochs), Scand. úr, Celt. wri, with Sansk. usra, a bull or cow (Origines Indo-Europ. i. 339).

USE, as a legal term for profit, benefit, according to Mr. Wedgwood has no connexion with use, Lat. usus, but is an altered form of Norman-French oues, oes, oeps, ops, benefit, service, pleasure, derived from Lat. opus, need.

UTTERANCE, in old writers often used in the sense of "to the last extremity" of a contest, as if to the utter-most, even to the utter or complete destruction of one of the combatants (A. Sax. úter, outer, extreme, úte, out). It is really an Anglicized form of Fr. à outrance, O. Fr. oultrance, from O. Fr. oultre (Mod. Fr. outre), beyond, Lat. ultra. "Combatre à outrance, to fight it out, or to the uttermost."—Cotgrave.

The famous actes of the noble Hercules,
That so many monsters put to utteraunce,
By his great wisdom and hie prowes.

S. Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, 1555,
p. 10 (Percy Soc.).

With al thare force than at the vterance,
Thay pingil aris vp to bend and hale
[They strive to bend and hale up oars].

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 134, l. 12.

And ze also feil bodyis of Troianis,
That wur not put by Greikis to vterance.

G. Douglas, p. 331, l. 49.

Rather than so, come fate into the list,
And champion me to the utterance.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, act iii. sc. 1, l. 72.

And now he proceeds to justify the word of defiance to the outrance with which he has replied, even as with such only He could reply, to the last proposal of the Tempter.—Ahp. Trench, Studies in the Gospels, p. 53.

V.

VACABOND, a common old spelling of vagabond, as if an idle, empty fellow, from vacuus, idle, empty, vacare, to be idle.

[Alcibiades] being before but a banished man, a vacabond, and a fugitive.—North, Plutarch, Life of Alcibiades, Skeat's ed. p. 300.

"The Fraternitie of Vacabondes; as wel of ruflyng Vacabondes as of beggerly, etc." is the title of a tract printed in 1575.

These be ydle vacaboundes, luyng vpon other mens labours: these be named honest barginers, and be in dede craftye couetouse extorcioners.—T. Lever, Sermons, 1550, p. 130 (ed. Arber).

VADE, a very common old spelling of fade, no doubt from an imagined connexion with Lat. vadere, to go, depart, vanish, perish (like Fr. passer, Lat. per-eo). Indeed, gone is often idiomatically used for vanished, perished, withered, e.g. Moore says of "the Last Rose of Summer":—

All her lovely companions
Are faded and gone,— and a faded beauty is said to have greatly "gone off," passée. Fade, originally used of a pale, weak colour, is from Fr. fade, weak, faint, insipid (Prov. fada), from Lat. fatuus, foolish, tasteless. Compare old Eng. "fatym, or lesyn colour, Marceo."—Prompt. Parv.

Couleur paste, the decayed, vaded, or imperfect yellow colour of Box-wood, &c.—Cotgrave.

Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good;

A shining gloss that vadeth suddenly; . . .
A doubtful good, a gloss, a glass, a flower,
Lost, vaded, broken, dead within an hour.

Shakespeare, The Passionate Pilgrim,
st. xiii.

When valyant corps shall yeeld the latter breath?

Shall pleasures vade? must puffing pride decay?

Shall flesh consume? must thought resigne to clay?

T. Proctor, Mirror of Mutability (Sel. Poetry, ii. 400, Parker Soc).

A breath-bereaving breath, a vading shade,
Even in motion,—So, as it appears,

He comes to tell us whereto we were made,
And, like a friend, to rid us of our feares.

R. Bruthwaite, Remains after Death, 1618.

Baseth

Her trembling tresses never-vading Spring.

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, 1621, p. 181.

We, that live on the Earth, draw toward our decay,

Our children fill our place awhile, and then they vade away.

Surrey, Poems, Ecclesiastes.

The sweet flowers of delight vade away in that season out of our hearts, as the leaves fall from the trees after harvest.—T. Hoby, in Southey, The Doctor, ch. clxxiv.

But that he promis made,

When he did heer remaine,

The world should never vade

By waters force againe.

Ballad, 1570, in Tarlton's Jestes, p. 129

(Shaks. Soc.).

I blindfold walk'd, disdainig to behold
That life doth vade, and young men must be old.

Greene, Works, p. 303 (ed. Dyce).

Like sunny beames,

That in a cloud their light did long time stay,
Their vapour vaded, shewe their golden gleames,

And through the persant aire shoote forth their azure streames.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, III. ix. 20.

Spenser, however, uses vade as a distinct word from fade, with the meaning of to go (as in per-vade, in-vade) or depart.

Her power, disperst, through all the world
did vade;

To shew that all in th' end to nought shall fade.

Spenser, The Ruines of Rome, xx.

Likewise the Earth is not augmented more,

By all that dying into it doe fade;

For of the Earth they formed were of yore;

How ever gay their blossom or their blade

Doe flourish now, they into dust shall vade.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, V. ii. 40.

VAIL, the old spelling of veil (O. Fr. veile, Lat. velum), apparently from a supposed connexion with the verb vale or vail, to let down, Fr. avaler, from O. Fr. aval, down (ad vallem; compare "mount," Fr. monter, amont, up, from ad montem). Valance, the little curtain let down at the sides of a bed, is from avaler. The original meaning of descending into a vale or valley comes out clearly in the following:—

Till at the last I came into a dale,

Amid two mighty hills on eyther side;

From whence a sweete streame downe dyd
avale

And cleare as christal through the same did slide.

F. Thynn, Debate between Pride and Lowliness (ab. 1568), p. 9 (Shaks. Soc.).

Summe of the Jewes han gon up the mountaynes, and avaled down to the valeyes.
—Sir J. Maundeville, Voiage and Travaile, p. 266.

He n'old avalen neither hood ne hat,

Ne abiden no man for his curtesie.

Chaucer, Milleres Tale, Prol. l. 3124.

At the last, when Phebus in the west,
Gan to avayle with all his beames mery.

S. Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, 1555,
p. 6 (Percy Soc.).

[They] from their sweaty Coursers did avale.
Spenser, F. Queene, II. ix. 10.

VAILS, gratuities given to servants, originally their perquisites or peculium; "profits that arise to officers or servants, besides Salary or Wages" (Bailey), probably from old Eng. awaills, profits, advantages.

It. paracore . . the Goosegiblets, or such Cooke's vails.—Florio, 1611.

We do not insist upon his having a character from his last place: there will be good vails.—Horace Walpole, Letters (1756), vol. iii. p. 39.

Then the number of the stocke reserued, all maner of vails besydes, bothe the hyre of the mylke, and the pryces of the yonge veales and olde fat wares, was disposed to the reliefe of the poore.—T. Lever, Sermons, 1550, p. 82 (ed. Arber).

I have gotten together . . . by my wages, my vails at Christmas, and otherwise, together with my rewards of kind gentlemen, that have found conrteous entertainment here, . . . a brace of hundred pounds.—R. Broome, A Jovial Crew, v. 1.

Ah! if the vails be thus sweet and glorious before pay-day comes, what will be the glory that Christ, etc.—Sibbes, Precious Remedies, 1676 (vol. i. p. 77).

Their wages, their veils, is joy, peace, comfort.—Id. Works, vol. iii. p. 59.

VALENCE, an old word for portmantau, an evident corruption of Fr. valise, which is from It. valigia, from Lat. vidulitia, vidulus, a leathern bag.

Before him he had . . . his cardinals hat, and a gentleman carrying his valence (otherwise called his cloak bag) which was made of fine scarlet, altogether embroidered very richly with gold, having in it a cloake.—Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, Wordsworth, Eccles. Biog. vol. i. p. 581.

VALENTINE, a temporary lover sportively bound to another for a year, old

Fr. valantin, is said to have no etymological connexion with St. Valentine of the Calendar, on the day of whose martyrdom, February 14th (probably from the fact of birds pairing at that time), the amatory missives called "valentines" are now sent. It comes from galantine, a Norman word for a lover (W. R. S. Ralston), Fr. galant, which is from galer, to enjoy one's self, to give one's self to pleasure, and connected with It., Sp., Fr. gala, A. Sax. gāl, O. H. Ger. geil, wanton, proud.

Rabelais speaks of "Viardiere le noble valentin," i.e. a gallant (liv. iii. ch. 8), on which M. Barré notes, "En Lorraine . . . les jeunes filles au 1<sup>er</sup> Mai se choisisaient un Valentin, c'est-à-dire un galant."

Ye knowe wel, how on Saint Valentines day,
By my statute, and through my governance,
Ye do chese your makes, and after fle away
With hem, as I pricke you with pleasaunce.
Chaucer, Assembly of Fowles, l. 390.

Dame Elizabeth Brews, writing to John Paston in 1476-7, who was wooing her daughter, says:—

And, cousin, upon Friday is Saint Valentine's Day, and every bird chuset him a make [mate]; and if it like you to come on Thursday at night . . . I trust to God that ye shall so speak to mine husband; and I shall pray that we shall bring the matter to a conclusion.
—Paston Letters, vol. ii. p. 104 (ed. Knight).

About the same time the young lady addresses him as "Right reverend and worshipful and my right well-beloved Valentine."—Ibid.

Haile Bishop Valentine, whose day this is,
All the Aire is thy Diocis,

And all the chirping Choristers,
And other birds are thy Parishioners,
Thou marryest every yeare
The lrique Larke, and the grave whispering Dove.

Doone, Epithalamion, or Marriage Song on the Lady Elizabeth, married on St. Valentine's Day, st. 1.

As Diamonds 'mongst Jewels bright,
As Cinthia 'mongst the lesser Lights;
So 'mongst the Northern Beauties shine,
So far excels my Valentine.

J. Howell, Familiar Letters, bk. i. v. 21 (1629).

VAMP, to mend or refurbish up, originally to furnish boots with new upper leathers, is corrupted from the older word vampy, which was perhaps confounded with adjectival forms like balmey, hairy, rusty, sandy, stony, &c., and supposed accordingly to imply a substantive vamp. Vampy or vampay (Bailey) is old Eng. "Vampey of a hose, Auantpie" (Palsgrave), "Vaunte of a hose, vantpie" (Id.), the "fours-foot," Fr. avant-pied, or upper part of a shoe or stocking.

Vampe of an hoose. Pedana.—Prompt. Parvolorum.

They make vampies for high shooes for honest country plowmen.—Taylor the Water-Poet, Works, 1630 [Nares].

Ine sumer 3e habbeð leaue uorto gon and sitten baroot; and hosen wiðuten uaumpe.—Ancren Riwele, p. 420.

[In summer ye have leave for to walk aad sit barefoot, and (to have) hose without vamps.]

VAN-COURIER, } from Fr. avant-
VAN-GUARD, } courier (O. Eng. vaunt-courier), avant-garde.

Onid sendeth out his scouters too Theaters to descry the enimie, and in steede of vaunte Curriers, with instruments of musicke, playing, singing, and dauncing geues the first charge.—Gasson, Schoole of Abuse, 1579, p. 29 (ed. Arber).

VANE, a weathercock, so spelt as if connected with Fr. van, Lat. vannus, from its catching the wind (Richardson), or perhaps, on account of its proverbial fickleness, from an association with Lat. vannus, is an incorrect form of fane, A. Sax., Icel., and Swed. fana, a streamer or banner, O. H. Ger. fano, Goth. fana, a cloth, akin to pane, penon, and Lat. pannus (Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 362). Compare Dut. vaan, a banner. For the change of f to v, compare VADE and VENEER; old Eng. vaille, vayn, vaire, &c., for fail, fain, fair; vixen for fixen, a female fox. Similarly Wycliffe uses vome indiscriminately for to foam and to vomit (Lat. vomere).—Forshall and Madden, Glossary, s.v.

O stormy peple, unsad and ever untrew,
And undiscrete, and changing as a fane.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 8872.

If speaking, why, a vane blown with all winds;

If silent, why, a block moved with none.
Shakespeare, Much Ado, iii. 1, 67.

VARNISH, a Leicestershire word meaning to be fat and well-liking. A farmer's wife said that a "gal" she had taken in quite thin was become "fat an' varnished" (Evans, Glossary, E.D.S.). It is a corrupt form of bar-nish or barness of the same meaning. See BURNISH. This usage reminds one of Chaucer's line:—

Wel bath this miller vernish:d his hed.

Cant. Tales, l. 4147—

meaning he had drunk deep potations of strong ale.

VAUDEVILLE, so spelt as if compounded with vill, a town, was originally "a country ballade or song; a Roundelay, or Virelay, so termed of Vaudevire, a Norman Town, wherein Olivier Bassel, the first inventor of them, lived."—Cotgrave.

The theatrical compositions called "Vaudevilles" take their name from the old songs called "Vaux-de-Vire," and these in turn are named from the pretty valleys of the river Vire. . . . Certainly the vaudevilles of the present day have much more to do with the life of the city than with the quieter existence of the people who dwell by the river Vire.—Saturday Review.

See The Vaux-de-Vire of Maistre Jean le Houx, Advocate, of Vire. Edited and translated by James Patrick Muirhead, M.A. London: Murray. 1875.

Virelay, Fr. virelai (from vire), a circling song, rondeau, or roundel, was once spelt verlay, and thus explained:—

Then is there an old kinde of Rithme called Verluyes, deriued (as I haue redde) of this word Verd, whiche betokeneth Greene, and Laye, which betokeneth a Song, as if you would say greene Songs.—Gascoigne, Steele Glas, 1576, p. 39 (ed. Arber).

VAUTRAY, a species of dog trained to hunt the boar in France in a particular manner, and explained to mean "the tumbler" in a volume entitled The Present State of France, translated by R. W., 1687 (see Saturday Review, vol. 46, p. 465), the word evidently being considered a derivative of vautrer, O. Fr. veautrer, to tumble, wallow, or roll over (Cotgrave), for voltre = Lat. volutare. The word is really Fr. vaultre, "a mungrel between a hound and a mastiff . . . fit for the chase or hunting of wild Bears and Boars" (whence vaultrer, to hunt with a vaultre).—Cotgrave. It is It. veltro, Prov. veltre, from Lat. vertragus, a word of Celtic origin, perhaps from ver, intensive, and traig, a foot (Diefenbach). From the French word came feuterer, an old Eng. name for a hound-keeper.

Topsell, speaking of the vertagus, says:—

This sort of Dogges, which compasseth all by craftes, fraudes, subtilties and deceiptes, we English men call Tumblers, because in hunting they turne and tumble, winding their bodies about in circle-wise.—History of Foure-footed Beasts, p. 168 (1608).

There is little doubt that he regarded vertagus as akin to vertigo, a turning round, verto, to turn, and so correctly represented by tumbler in English.

VEDETTE, a military outpost, we have borrowed from the French, where the word means "a Sentry or court of guard, placed without a fort or camp; and more generally, any high place from which one may see afar off."—Cotgrave. The French in turn is but the Italian vedetta, "a sentinels standing-place; also a watch-towre, also a beacon" (Florio), so spelt as if derived from vedere, to see, view, or survey, as if a watch set to spy or reconnoitre the enemy. Vedetta, however, is only another form of veletta of the same meaning, which is a diminutive of veglia (veggia), a watch, a sentinel, from Lat. vigilia (Diez, Scheler). For the change from l to d, cf. Fr. amidon, from Lat. amyllum; Portg. escada, from Lat. scala; also dautia, dacrima, old Lat. forms of lantia, lacrima.

VEIL, vb., a mis-spelling of to vale, to lower or let down, old Eng. avale, Fr. aval. See VAIL and the quotations there given.

This makes the Hollander to dash his Colours, and veil his Bonnet so low unto her.—Howell, Familiar Letters, book iv. 47.

Cardinal Pole, in 1556, ordered veiling of bonnets and bending knees in Hereford Cathedral, when the words were sung, Et Incarnatus ex Spiritu, and Et Homo factus est.—M. E. C. Walcott, Traditions and Customs of Cathedrals, p. 117.

But all so soone as heau'n his browes doth bend,

She veils her banners, and pulls in her beames,

The emtie barke the raging billows send,
Vp to the Olympique waues.

G. Fletcher, Christs Victorie on Earth,
1610, st. 36.

In the following passage from Bishop Hacket's Sermons, which reads so curiously like a contradiction to St. Paul's injunction about public worship, to veil the head is to vail, lower, or bow it:—

What a diabolical carriage it is to see a man step into a Church and neither veil his head, nor bend his knee, nor lift up his hands or eyes to heaven? Who dwells there I pray you that you are so familiar in the house? Could you be more saucy in a Tavern or in a Theater.—Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 301.

They observed all the gentlemen as well as labourers to veil bonnet and retire.—Life of Bp. Frampton (ed. T. S. Evans), p. 116.

Then mayst thou think that Mars himself came down,
To veil thy plumea and heave thee from thy pomp.

Green, Orlando Furioso, p. 107 (ed. Dyce).

Tho, whenas veiled was her lofty crest,
Her golden locks, that were in trammells gay
Uphounded, did them selves adowne display
And raught unto her heelea.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, III. ix. 20.

We shepheards are like them that vnder saile Doe speake high words, when all the coast is cleare,

Yet to a passenger will bonnet vaile.

Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, 1629, p. 224.

VELDEFARE, "a bird bigger than a thrush of the same colour," is Minshew's spelling of fieldfare (q.v.), apparently from the resemblance of the Spanish word corçál, which he is defining, to córça, a faune, a calf of a hinde, and a desire to assimilate it to the corresponding English "veal" (veald), a calf.

VENEER, to superimpose a thin layer of ornamental wood on a more common sort, so spelt as if to denote the veined or streaky appearance of the inlaid wood (Lat. vena, a vein), is a corrupt form of fineer, Dan. finere, Ger. furnieren, to veneer, originally to furnish (give an additional ornament), from French fournir, to furnish. See PERFORM.

The Italians call it pietre commuse, a sort of inlaying with stones, analogous to the fineering of cabinets in wood.—Smollett, France and Italy, Letter XXVIII.

This [Ash] wood and Walnut-tree . . . makes the best fineer.—Modern Husbandman, VII. ii. 43 (1750).

VENUE, a legal term for the neighbourhood in which a wrong has been committed, and in which it should be tried, so spelt as if to denote the place when the jury are summoned to come, from Fr. venue, a coming or arrival, like venue, in fencing, a coming on or attack (also spelt venew and venny), is said to be from Norm. Fr. vesiné, visnet, neighbourhood, Low Lat. visnetum, vicinetum, vicinity (Wedgwood).

The court will direct a change of the venue or visne (that is, the vicinia or neighbourhood in which the injury is declared to be done).—Blackstone [Richardson].

VERDIGREASE, an old spelling of verdigris, French vert-de-gris (as if "green-of-grey"), old Fr. vert de grice, which has been regarded as corruptions of verderis, Lat. viride æris, green of copper.

Vert-de-gris, Verdigrease.—Cotgrave.

In old French the word appears as verte-grez; the original of which Littré thinks may have been vert aigret, green produced by acid (l'aigre).

Bole armoniak, verdegrese, boras.

Chaucer, C. Tales, 16258.

Compare AMBERGREASE.

VERMIN, Fr. vermine. In Latin vermina is applied to writhings or throes of pain, but the word seems subsequently to have been confounded with vermis, a worm. Cf. vermino, (1) to writhe in pain, (2) to be troubled with worms.

VESSEL, a term in use at Winchester College for a wrapper of paper, especially the half-quarter of a sheet of foolscap, is said to be a corruption of Lat. fasciculus through It. vassiola (H. C. Adams, Wykehamica, p. 438).

Vessel was used for theme-papers formerly at Bury School.—Vocabulory of E. Anglia (E. D. Soc. Reprint B. 20).

VESSEL-CUPS, a Cleveland corruption of wassail-cups (Atkinson). In the Holderness dialect (E. Yorkshire), a Christmas carol-singer is called a vessel-cup (or bezzle-cup) woman. Formerly these singers used to carry about in a box "Advent Images" of the Virgin and Child (see Chambers, Book of Days, vol. ii. p. 725). Vessel-cupping at Christmas is still kept up in the Isle of Axholme (Sir C. H. J. Anderson, Lincoln Pocket Guide). On the other hand, in Joseph of Arimathie, "wasseheles wip haly water" (l. 288) are vessels for holy water; wesselle, Chev. Assigne, l. 156.

VICIOUS, an incorrect form, as if derived from Fr. vicieux (like vice from Fr. vice), for vitioux from Lat. vitosus; just as vitiate, formerly spelt viciate (Cotgrave, s.v. Vicier), is from Lat.

vitiare, and vitiosity, Lat. vitiositas. A similar mis-spelling sometimes found is negociate for negotiate, as if from Fr. negociier, instead of Lat. negotiare.

þe venym & þe vylanye & þe vycios fylþe, þat by-sulpe3 manne3 saule iu vnsounde hert.
Alliterative Poems, p. 53, l. 575.

Thou maist, dogged opinion,
Of thwarting cynicks. Today vitious,
List to their precepts; next day vertuous.
Marston, Scourge of Villanie, iv.
(vol. iii. p. 266).

VILE, in the Percy Folio MS., is a corruption of O. Eng. fēle, numerous, A. Sax. fēla (cf. Ger. viel).

Sir Lybius rode many a mile Sawe aduentures many & vile in England & in Wales.
vol. ii. p. 463, l. 1318.

VIPER'S DANCE, the ordinary name for St. Vitus dance in Rutland.

VIPER, a popular name in some places for the fish trachinus draco, is an alteration of its more common name wiver, weeвер, weaver, or quaviver. See WEAVER.

VILLANY, formerly used in the specific sense of foul or infamous language, was perhaps popularly associated with vile, as in the passage, "The vile person will speak villany" (A. V. Is. xxxii. 6), where the Genevan version, preserving a parallelism, has "The niggard will speake of niggardnesse." Abp. Trench, Select Glossary, quotes from Barrow on Evil-Speaking:—

In our modern language it is termed villany, as being proper for rustic boors [Lat. villani].

Scheler remarks that in French vil, vile, has helped to fix the modern acceptation of villain. Compare vilein, base, vilenie, vileness (Cotgrave), vilenier, to disgrace or revile, with vileté, vileness, old Eng. vilibtee (Elyot), baseness.

Afterward comþ þe zenne of yelpynge þet is wel grat, and wel uoul, wel uals, and wel vileyn [Afterward cometh the sin of hoasting that is very great, and very foul, very false, and very wicked].—Ayenbite of Inuuyt, p. 59.

Avoy! hit is your vylaynye, 3e vülen your seluen.

Alliterative Poems, p. 61, l. 863.

To make our tongue so clerely purifyed,
That the vyle termes should nothing arage,
As like a pye to chatter in a cage,

But for to speke wyth rethoryke formally
In the good order, wythouten vylany.

S. Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, 1555,
p. 46 (Percy Soc.).

He never yet no vilanie ne sayde
In alle his lif, unto no manere wight
He was a veray parfit gentil knight.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, Prolog. l. 70.

VINEYARD is perhaps a corruption of the old Eng. form vyner or vinere (Lat. vinearium), which with the common exerescence of d would become vyner-d, just as old Eng. lanere became lanyard. See further under STEELYARD. Compare old Eng. verger, a garden (Chaucer), Fr. vergier, from Lat. viridarium. Or more probably vineyard is a fusion of vyner with A. Sax. win-geard, wineard, a "wine-yard" (Goth. weina-gard). Compare:—

Manna nssatida weinagard.—S. Luke xx. 9, Goth. Version, 360.

Sum man plantode him wingearde.—Id. A. Sax. Vers. 995.

Sum man plantide a vyner.—Id. Wycliffe, 1389.

A certayne man planted a vyneyarde.—Id. Tyndale, 1526.

Thei settiden me a kepere in vyners; Y kepte not my vyner.—Wycliffe, Song of Solomon, i. 5.

VISNOMY, } are old corruptions of VISIOGNOMY, } physiognomy (Greek physiognōmonia, the knowledge of a man's nature (physis) by means of his face or expression), from a supposed connexion with visage, Fr. vis, the face or countenance, Lat. visus, the appearance.

It is recorded in The Perfect Diurnal, Nov. 23-30, 1646, that certain evil-disposed persons broke into Westminster Abbey and mutilated "the effigies of old learned Camden . . . broke off his nose, and otherwise defaced his visiognomy."

Spit in his visnomy.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman Pleas'd, iv. 1.

The goodly ymage of your visnomy,
Clearer then cristall, would therein appere.
Spenser, Sonnets, 45.

Each of the Gods, by his like visnomie
Eathe to be knowen; but Jove above them all,
By his great lookes and power Imperiall.

Spenser, Muiopotmos (Globe ed.), p. 535.

Spenser also has the form physnomie:—
Yet certes by her face and physnomie,
Whether she man or woman inly were,
That could not any creature well descry.
Faerie Queene, VII. vii. 5.

The gradual contraction of this word from an original physiognomony, through physiognomy, physnomie, down to phiz, is a curious instance of a common process. Compare symbology (De Quincey) for symbolology, and see IDOLATRY. Old French corruptions are phlymouse and phlomie (Cotgrave). The old Eng. vise, face, perhaps favoured the contraction to phiz.

That Inel þenne in gemmy3 gente,
Vered vp her vise with y3en graye.
Alliterative Poems, p. 8, l. 254.

[Raised up her face with gray eyes.]

VOL-AU-VENT. This term for a light sweet dish, which we have borrowed from the French (where it seems to mean something like a "windy flight"), was probably originally vole et vaine, an old expression for anything empty, light, or worthless (in this case unsubstantial). Scheler quotes the word vanvole, a futile, empty thing, from the Romant du Renard (compare our kickshaws); Prov. Fr. volé = light puff paste; and veule = hollow, loose, light. See FOOL.

W.

WAGGONER, a nautical term for a routier or book of sea-charts, pointing out the coasts, rocks, &c. (Falconer, Marine Dictionary, s.v.). An early folio volume of charts by a Baron von Wagenaer originated the name. A Wagenaer became a familiar generic name for any volume of a similar description, just as a Donet (Donatus' grammar) was a common word formerly for any grammar, something like our Lindley Murray, or as we might call a lexicon a Liddle-and-Scott, or a concordance a Cruden. So Avinet, from Avienus, and Esopet, from Æsop, are mediæval names for a book of fables, and Fr. calepin, a note-book or commonplace book, was originally a word-book or lexicon composed by Ambrose Calepin towards the end of the 15th century. So Dalrymple's Charts are called The English Waggoner.

The Captain . . . called for the wagoner, to enquire whither any rock had been observed by others that had formerly used those seas.—Life of Bp. Frampton (ed. by T. S. Evans), p. 30.

The full title of the original volumes is—

Wagenaer, Lucas, Speculum nauticum super navigatione maris occidentalis confectum, continens omnes oras maritimas, Gallia, Hispania, &c. in diversis mappis maritimis comprehensum. Leyden, 1588, fol.

WAIST-COAT, Mr. Wedgwood claims as a corruption from Fr. veste (Philolog. Trans. 1855, p. 69), but this seems more than doubtful.

WAINSCOT, an old mis-spelling of wainscot (e. g. Pepys' Diary, vol. ii. pp. 9, 61, ed. M. Bright), Dut. wagenschot, "wain-shutter," wainscot, originally perhaps "wall-shutter;" cf. Fris. wage, A. Sax. wah, a wall.

WAITS, the nightly musicians at Christmas time so called, have generally been regarded as those who wait, wake, watch, or keep vigil (O. Eng. to waite) during the night; "wayte, waker, vigil" (Prompt. Parv.), being an old word for a watchman, and Neckam actually translating veytes by ecubicis (Wright, Vocabularies, 106). However, waits seems from the first to signify musicians generally.

Waytes on the walle gan blowe,

Knyghtis assembled on a row.

Torrent of Portugal [in Wright].

It is used similarly in Kyng Allysaunder, ll. 4312, 7769, and is no doubt the same word as wait, a hautboy, Span. and Portg. gaita, a flageolet or bagpipe, which are from Arabic gai'tah, a flute (Diez).

They are generally met by women . . . who welcome them with dancing and singing, and are called timber-waits, perhaps a corruption of timbrèl-waits, players on timbrèls [or pipe and tabour], waits being an old word for those who play on musical instruments in the streets.—Tom Thumb's Travels, p. 96.

See Brand, Pop. Antiquities, vol. i. p. 195, ed. Bohn. He quotes "wakeful waits" from Christmas, a poem (p. 480), and Sir Thos. Overbury speaks of "the wakeful ketches on Christmas Eve," but this is nothing to the purpose.

Mr. Chappell with less probability regards the waight or hautboy as having been so called from being played by the castle waight or watchman.—History of Music, vol. i. p. 260.

Here waits are watchmen, spies in ambush:—

He sett his waites bi þe stret,
If þai mought wit þaa kinges mett.
Cursor Mundi (Specimens of Early Eng. ii. 74).

WAKE, the track of smooth water left behind her by a ship under sail, is a naturalized form of Fr. ouaiche (same sense), sometimes spelt ouage, which is the same word as Sp. aguage, a current, from Lat. aquagium.

WALL-EYED, said of a horse when the iris of the eye is white, as with a cataract ("All white like a plastered wall."—Grose!), corresponds to Icel. vagl-eygr of the same meaning (sometimes corrupted into vald-eygðr), from vagl á auga, lit. "a beam in the eye," a disease, from vagl, a beam. Cf. Swed. vagel, a perch.

A horse with a wall-eye, glauciolus.
Baret, Atwearie, 1580.

In old English writers whall, whaule, or whal eye denotes the disease of the eyes called glaucoma, and Spenser speaks of a bearded goat with

Whally eies, the signe of gelosy.
F. Q. I. iv. 24.

Compare—

Oeil de chevre, whall eye.
Cotgrave.

The form woldeneyed occurs in K. Alysander, l. 5274.

The vilest stroke,
That ever wall-eyed wrath or staring rage
Presented to the tears of soft remorse.
Shakespeare, King John, act iv.
sc. 3, l. 50.

WALNUT, } has no right to be WALL-NUT, } ranked among wall fruit, as its name might suggest. It was spelt formerly walshnut (Gerarde, 1595, p. 1252), A. Sax. wealh-hnut, and = Ger. Wälsche Nuss, "foreign nut," Dorset welsh nut. So Fr. gauge, from O. H. Ger. walah; Icel. val-hnot, Irish gall-chno. In old English it was sometimes with the same connotation called Frencoissen hnutu, French nut (Leechdoms, Wortcunning, &c., Cockayne, vol. iii. Glossary). The German have also wallnuss, as if from wall, a rampart.

Some difficulty there is in cracking the name thereof: why Wall-nuts, having no affinity with a Wall, whose substantial Trees need to borrow nothing thence for their support.

Nor are they so called because walled with Shells, which is common to all other Nuts. The truth is Gual or Wall in the old Dutch signifieth strange or exotick (whence Welsh that is Foreigners); these Nuts being no Natives of England or Europe, and probably first fetch'd from Persia, because called Nux Persique in the French tongue.—Fuller, Worthies of England, vol. ii. p. 352 (ed. Nichols).

Compare Ger. Wälsche Bohne, = Eng. French beans, i.e. foreign beans; Wälscher hahn, a turkey (cf. Fr. poule d'Inde, Dindon).

Ve goed for ge-roasted Welsh-hens.
Breitmann Ballads, p. 108 (ed. 1871).

Fagioli, feazols, welch heanes, kidney beans, French peason.—Florio.

Similarly in Icelandic Valir (foreigners) are the French, Val-land, France, vallari, one from foreign lands, a pilgrim, whence no doubt the surname Waller (cf. Ger. wallfahrten).

WALL-WORT, an old popular name for the dwarf-elder (Ebulus), as if called from its growing on walls, is old Eng. wealwyrt (Cockayne, Leechdoms, Wortcunning, &c., vol. iii. Glossary), properly the "foreign plant" (A. Sax. wealh wyrt, like walnut, from wealh-hnut), it being popularly supposed to have been introduced by the Danes, whence its other name Dane-wort. We also find the forms wal-wyrt (Wright, Vocabularies, p. 30, 10th cent.) and walle-wurte (Id. p. 265, 15th cent.). Gerarde spells it Wale woort and Wall woort (Herbal, p. 1237). It seems also to have been regarded as a compound of A. Sax. wäl, slaughter, and as having got its name from growing at Slaughterford, Wilts, where many of the Danes were destroyed (see Prior, s.v.).

The rootes of Wall woort boyled in wine and drunken, are good against the dropsie.
—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1238.

The road hereabouts too being overgrown with Daneweed, they fancy it sprung from the blood of the Danes slain in battle; and that if upon a certain day in the year you cut it, it bleeds.—D. Dejoe, Tour thro' Great Britain, ii. 416.

WANDEROO, the name of a baboon found in Ceylon, Ger. wanderu, as if called from its erratic habit, are naturalized forms of Cingalese elwandu.—Mahn's Webster.

WANHORN, the name of a plant of the genus Kœmpferia, is a corruption of the Siamese wanhom.—Mahn's Webster.

WANTON, sometimes understood as if it meant wanting (a mate), appetens, licentious, is the old Eng. wantown, or wan-towen, deficient in breeding, badly brought up, A. Sax. wan (implying deficiency) + towen (togen, p. partic. of teón, to lead or draw), educated. The word is thus equivalent to un-towune, undisciplined, and opposed to wel itowene (Ancren Riwle), well-bred. See Wedgwood, s.v.

Welsh gwantam, fickle, wanton, apparently from gwantu, to separate (as if "apt to run off"), is perhaps a borrowed word.

Mar. You are a wanton.

Rob. One I do confess,
I want-ed till you came; but now I have you,
I'll grow to your embraces.

B. Jonsan, The Sad Shepherd, i. 2.

Yonge wantons, whose parentes haue left them fayre houses, goods and landes, whiche be viciously, idle, vnlearnedly, yea or rather beastly brought vp.—W. Bulleyn, Booke of Simples, p. xxvii. verso.

WANTY, an old word for the girth or belly-band of a horse, still used in prov. English (e.g. Parish, Sussex Glossary), which Mahn thought to be connected with Dut. wandt, want, tackling, ropework, rigging, is a corruption of wambtie, a band or tie (A. Sax. tige) for the wamb or belly (A. Sax. wamb, old Eng. womb, the belly).

A pannell and wanty, pack saddle and ped,
A line to fetch litter, and halters for head.

Tusser, Husbandry Furniture, p. 11

[Richardson].

WAR-DAYS, a Cleveland word for week-days as opposed to Sundays, ordinary or working-days, is identical with Dan. hverdag, a week day, lit. "every day," from hver, every, Suio-Goth. hwardag. Wart-day (in Peacock's Glossary of Mamley, &c., Lincolnshire) is a further corruption.

WARDEN, as the name of a pear, is from the French garde, "Poire de garde, a Warden, or Winter Pear; a pear which may be kept [gardée] very long."—Cotgrave. This disposes of the theory that this variety was raised first by the Cistercian monks of Wardon in Bedfordshire (The Herefordshire Pomona, Pt. I.).

WAR-HEN is given in Bosworth, Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, as a name for the hen pheasant, under the word wor-hana, i.e. moor-hen (from waur, weed?), of which word it is a corruption.

Fursianus, Wor-hana.—Wright, Vocabularies, 11th cent.

WARLOCK, a wizard, presents a curious instance of reiterated corruption. The English word, as well as the Scotch warlo, a wicked person, is the modern form of old Eng. warlowe, A. Sax. waërloga, a "compact-liar," one who has belied or broken his (baptismal) covenant (waër), an apostate; in the Beowulf (8th century) we have a similar formation, treów-logan, faith-breakers (l. 2847, ed. Arnold). Waërloga, however, is an Anglicized form of Icelandic varð-lokkur, literally "ward-songs," "guardian-songs" (as if from varða, to ward), charms, incantations, witchcraft; but this also, as Cleasby points out, is a corruption of varðar-lokkur (or -lokkur), i. e. "weird-songs," spells, charms, from varðr = A. Sax. wyrd, "weird."

þe warlaghe saide on-loft with vois;—

"a ha Judas! quat has þou done."

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 121,
l. 467.

Bi-leueþ oure weorre. warlawes wode.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 91, l. 37.

In the following Jonah's whale is called a warlock :—

For nade þe hyse beuen kyng, þurȝ his honde
myst

Warded þis wrech man in warlowes guttes.

Alliterative Poems, p. 96, l. 258.

[For had not the high king of heaven, through his mighty hand, guarded this wretched man in the monster's guts.]

Ye surely hae some warlock-breef

Owre human hearts.

Burns, Poems, p. 34 (Globe ed.).

WARY-ANGLE, an old name for a "sort of Magpy, a Bird" (Bailey), is a corruption of wariangle, the shrike or butcher-bird, Ger. würg-engel, destroying angel. For instances of birds being called angels, see ARCHANGEL supra.

WATER-CROFT, a Leicestershire word for a water-bottle (Evans), a corruption of water-caraffe. See CROFT.

WATER-GRASS, a provincial corruption of water-cress (Wright). Water-grass-hill in Co. Cork is in the native Irish Cnocan-na-biolraighe, the hill of the watercresses (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, 1st S. p. 35).

Watter crashes is the Cumberland form of the word (Dickinson), water-cresses that of the South London folk.

W A V E R, a provincial word for a pond (Suffolk), old Eng. wayowre, ston-inge water, Piscina (Prompt. Parv.), are naturalized forms of Lat. vivarium, a pond for keeping fishes alive. Hence also Fr. vivier, O. H. Ger. wiwari, M. H. Ger. wiwer, Mod. Ger. weiher.

W A V E W I N E, a name for the bindweed or convolvulus, otherwise wither-wine, in Wilts. and Gloucestershire (Old Country and Farming Words, p. 163).

W A Y, in the nautical phrase "to get under way," is most probably a distinct word from way (= via), A. Sax. weg, Icel. vegr.

The way of a Ship is the course or progress which she makes on the water under sail. Thus when she begins her motion, she is said to be under way; and when that motion increases she is said to have fresh way through the water.—Falconer, Marine Dict.

The original meaning of the word would seem to be "motion," and so it may be a derivative of A. Sax. wegan, to move (cf. Ger. wägen, Goth. wagan, Icel. vega, and perhaps Lat. vagari); but perhaps A. Sax. weg itself originally meant motion onward, a passage, a journey, and then the road traversed, a "way." From the cognate O. H. Ger. wagôn, to move, altered into wogôn (whence Ger. wogen, to float), comes Fr. voguer, to set sail, vogue, a clear passage, as of a ship in a broad sea (Cotgrave). Consequently the phrase "to be in vogue," i. e. to pass current, Fr. être en vogue, avoir la vogue, O. H. Ger. in wagô wesan, exactly corresponds to being "under way" (inter viandum).

Weigh, which is sometimes substituted incorrectly in this phrase (from a confusion with "weighing anchor"), was occasionally written way. It is radi-cally the same word.

I will not have it to be prejudice to any body, but I offer it unto you to consider and way it.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 86.

Sailes hoised there, stroke here, and Anchors laid,
In Thames, w<sup>ch</sup> were at Tygris & Euphrates waide.

Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 304.

Oissa, the cry of Mariners hoisting sailes, waying of ancker, &c.—Florio.

W A Y - B I T, an old corruption of wee-bit; see the citations.

"An Yorkshire Way-bit."—That is, an Over-plus not accounted in the reckoning, which sometimes proveth as much as all the rest. Ask a Country-man here on the high-way, how far it is to such a Town, and they commonly return, "So many miles and a Way-bit;" which Way-bit is enough to make the wearied Travailer surfet of the length thereof. . . . But hitherto we have run along with common report and false spelling (the way not to win the race), and now return to the starting place again. It is not Way-bit, though generally so pronounced, but Wee-bit, a pure Yorkshirisme, which is a small bit in the Northern Language.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, ii. 495.

In some Places they [miles] contain forty Furlongs whereas ours have but eight, unless it be in Wales, where they are allowed better Measure, or in the North Parts, where there is a wea-bit to every mile.—Howell, Fam. Letters, bk. iv. 28.

Way-bit, a little piece, a little way, a Mile and a Way bit, Yorksh.—Ray, North Country Words.

Il n'y a qu'vne huquée (Much like our Northern Weebit) You have but a little (saies the clown, when you have a great) way thither.—Cotgrave, s. v. Huquée.

Compare wee, a little bit, as in the Scottish song, "We had better bide a wee," short for weeny, A. Sax. hwêne (Ger. wenig).

The kyng than vynkit a litill we,
And slepit nocht full ynkurly.

Barbour, The Bruce, bk. vii. l. 183.

W A Y - B R E A D, the popular name of the plantain, formerly spelt way-brede, wey-bred (Gerarde, p. 340), is in old English wæg-brêde, weg-brêde, i. e. "way-spread," so called from its frequenting waysides, from brêdan, to spread. Compare its foreign names, Dan. vej-bred, Ger. wegbreit, wegbreidt, "way-spread," Dut. weegbree (Sewel), Prov. Ger. wegwort.

Gif mannes heafod æce oððe sar sý genimme wegbrædan wýrtwalen [If a man's head ache or be sore let him take the roots of way-bread].—Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft, ed. Cockayne, vol. i. p. 81.

Way-bread, Plantain, ab AS. Waeg-braede, so called because growing everywhere in Streets and Ways.—Ray, North Country Wards.

WAY-GOOSE, the name of the annual dinner given to journeymen printers at the beginning of winter. "The Master Printer gives them a Way-goose; that is, he makes them a good feast, &c."—Moxon, Mechanick Exercises, 1683. The word is a corruption of wayz-goose, i.e. a stubble-goose, which used to be the head dish at these entertainments (N. & Q. 5th S. vi. 200). Bailey gives wayz-goose, a stubble-goose, and wayz, a bundle of straw. Old Eng. wase, a wisp (Baret).

WAY-WARD, generally understood to mean wilful, as if "turned everyone to his own way" (Is. liii. 6), is for awayward, old Eng. aweward, turned away (O. Eng. awey, A. Sax. aweg), perverted, perverse, obstinate, like "froward." Prov. Eng. offish, shy, unsocial (Whitby), Fr. revêche, It. rivescio (reversus), It. ritroso, stubborn (retrosus). See TOADY.

The first part of the word, away, awey, aweg (A. Sax. on-weg, Dut. weg), was perhaps confused with Prov. Ger. awech, übig, affig, old Ger. awikke, Icel. üf-ugr, turned the wrong way, whence old Eng. awke, perverse, wrong, and awkward, old Sax. awuh, perverse, evil. See Garnett, Philolog. Essays, p. 66.

It is a botles bale · bi god þat me fourmed, t[o] willne after a wif · þat is a waywarde euere. William of Paterne, l. 3985.

That thou be delyuered fro an yuel weie, and fro a man that spekith weiward thingis, Whiche forsaken a riztful weie, and goen bi derk weies . . . whose weies ben weywerd, and her goyngis ben of yuel fame.—Wycliffe, Prov. ii. 12, 14.

He that goith simpli, schal be saaf; he that goith bi weiward weies, schal falle down onys.—Wycliffe, Prov. xxviii. 18.

WAXY, a vulgar word for angry, used so far back as the time of Chas. I. (see the quotation from The Hamilton Papers relating to the years 1638-1650, Camden Soc.), is perhaps from the Scottish wax, for wax, and so = Fr. waxé, from Lat. waxare. So wax, to grow, was anciently sometimes written waxe. In Lowland Scottish w was often used for v.

The deuill fyndis a man wexit and torment with seknes.

Ratis Raving, &c. p. 3, l. 73 (E.E.T.S.).

Scot. "to be in a wax" or "wax," a state of vexation, corresponds to slang "in a wax."

They would place such persons in inferior commandis as ar to deboch the affections of the salers, from which being discoverid he him makes him the moir waxy.—Sir W. Belenden to Earl of Lanerick, July 9, 1648, Hamilton Papers, p. 229.

Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, supplies the following instances:—

She's in a terrible wax, but she'll be all right by the time he comes back from his holidays.—H. Kingsley, Ravenshoe, ch. v.

It would cheer him up more than anything if I could make him a little waxy with me.—Dickens, Bleak House, ch. xxiv.

WEARY, a Scotch word in Burns' line,

Weary fa' the wæfu' woodie, is a corruption of the old Eng. wary, werg, a curse or malediction (Oliphant, Old and Mid. Eng. p. 74), frequently spelt warie (Havelok) and wery (Minot), A. Sax. wergian, to curse, also wyrgan, to harm, akin to worry.

I may wery the wye, thatt this werre mouede.

Marte Arthure, l. 699.

[I may curse the man that stirred up this war.]

Ge ne achulen uor none þinge ne warien, ne awerien.—Ancren Riwe, p. 70.

[Ye must not for any thing curse or swear.]

Crist warie him with his mouth!

Waried wrthe he of norþ and suth!

Havelak the Dane, l. 434.

WEASEL, an old name for the gullet or windpipe, and sometimes for the uvula or epiglottis, is a corruption of A. Sax. wæssend or wässend, Fris. wässend, perhaps akin to A. Sax. hwæsan, to wheeze, Icel. hwæsa. Compare Bav. waisel, the gullet (Wedgwood), and perhaps the first part of Greek oisophágos, the gullet or œsophagus, Fr. oeson, the weason or throat-pipe (Cotgrave).

Florio, New World of Words (1611), defines Epiglottle to be "the couer or Weasell of the throat."

Gallillo, . . . the wezell or little tongue at the entrance of the throat, the throat holl.—Minsheu, Spanish Dict. 1623.

If ye seek to feed on Ammon's fruits, . . . The mastives of our land shall worry ye, And pull the weesels from your greedy throats.

Peele, David and Bethsabe, p. 465 (ed. Dyce).

In the head, as there be several parts, so there be diuersa grievancea . . . to omit all others which pertain to . . . mouth, palate, tongue, wesel, chops, face, &c.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, l. i. 1. 3.

So I was asked, what he was that made this restitution. But shoulde I haue named hym? nay they shoulde as soone haue thys wesaunt of mine.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 111 verso.

Forbid the banes or I will cut your wizzel.
The City March (Old Plays, vol. ix.).

In-steps that insolent insulter,
The cruel Quincy, leaping like a Vulture
At Adams throat, his hollow weasand w-ling.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 209 (1621).

Cut his wezand with thy knife.

Shakespeare, Tempest, iii. 2.

Campanilla, a little bell. Also the weesil or little tongue of the throat.—Minsheu, Spanish Dict. 1623.

See WHISTLE, which is perhaps the same word; and compare weasel-fish (Motella vulgaris), which seems to be a corruption of its other name whistle-fish or whistler.

WEATHER, To (a storm, &c.), is said to be a corruption of the A. Sax. wið-riam, to resist, to oppose successfully (Haldeman, Affixes, p. 96), from A. Sax. wiðer = Scot. wither-(shins), O. H. Ger. widar, Ger. wieder, Goth. wipra, Icel. viðr, against. I doubt it. But compare Lonsdale whitherin', strong and lusty (Glossary, R. B. Peacocke).

WEATHER-HEAD, a dolt or simpleton (Sir W. Scott), as if changeable and uncertain as the weather (ventosus), is a corrupt orthography of wether-head, having the head of a wether, A. Sax. wēðer, Goth. wið is (Ger. widder). Compare Lat. vervex, and vervecinum caput, a mutton-head.

Sir, is this usage for your Son?—for that old weather-headed fool, I know how to laugh at him; but you, Sir.—Congreve, Love for Love, ii. 7 [Davies].

The following seems to connect the word with old Eng. wede, madness (supposed to be produced by a worm in the brain).

The ramme or wedder is the lodysmen of other shepe, and he is the male or man of the oye, and is stronger than the other shepe, & he is also called a wedder because of a worme that he has in his hede & whan that beginneth for to stirre, than wyll he tucke and fight.—L. Andrewe, Noble Lufe, Pt. I. sig. h. i (hack).

Or probably the writer was thinking of the Lat. vervex, which was supposed to be derived from vernix (and perhaps weare, as if "worm-vexed"! ). Compare:—

Li multuns un verm ad,
Qui les corns li manjue, quant del hnrter se argue;

Pur ço nument divin vervecem en Latin.

P. de Thauin, Livre des Creatures, l. 563.

[The sheep has a worm,
Which gnaws his horns when he wants to butt;

Wherefore divines name it vervex in Latin.]

WEAVER, } the name of a fish, Tra-

WEEVER, } chinus vipera, is a corruption of wiver, viver, or quaviver, French
vive and quivre, from Lat. vivus, living (so called from the length of time it will continue to live when drawn out of the water), or perhaps of viper, which is another name for the same.

The Weever, which altho' his prickles venom
be. Drayton, Polyolbion.

Vive, the Quaviver or Sea-Dragon.—Cot-grave.

Dragon marin, the Viner or Quaviver, a monstrous and venomous fish.—Id.

There is a little fish in the form of a scorpion, and of the size of the fish quaquiver.—
Bailey, Erasmus's Colloq. p. 393.

Compare the heraldic wivern, from
Fr. vivré, O. Fr. wivre, also givre, quivre, from Lat. vipera (i.e. vivipara).

WEAVER, a term applied to watchmakers, ivory-turners, and other hand-craftsmen in the Registers of the French Protestant Church, Threadneedle Street, London, vol. 3, 1698-1711 (see G. Smiles, The Huguenots, p.
468), is a phonetic corruption of Fr.
ouvrier, O. Fr. uverier. Sigart quotes the forms ej waif, j'waif, I work (Glos-saire de Wallon de Mons, s.v. Ouvrier).

WED-LOCK, popularly understood to have a reference to the indissoluble nature of the marriage bond, "the loyall linkes of wedlocke" (Spenser, F. Q. I. vi.
22), whereby the contracting parties, as it were, are fettered together for life, is really the modern form of A. Sax. wed-lác, from wed, a pledge or engagement, and lác, an offering or gift, a marriage gift, cf. bryðlác.

The termination in knowledge, old Eng. cnowlach, cnow-lech, = cnaw-lac, is said to be the same. In the well-known signboard of The Man Loaded with Mischief, or in other words carrying his wife on his back, ascribed to Hogarth, the chain of Matrimony round his neck is fastened with a padlock, labelled "Wed-lock" (see History of Sign Boards, Hotten, p. 456).

In prison slang a fetter fixed to one leg is called a wife (Slang Dictionary). In Irish a couple-beggar used to be called cor-a-corrach, "foot-in-fetter" (O'Reilly). Compare BANDS. In old registers Lat. solutus, loose, unshackled, is often used for a bachelor or unmarried person.

Wedlock is a padlock.—Ray, Proverbial Observations, p. 43 (ed. 1742).

An usage,
Swilk dar I undertake,
Makes theym breke thare wedlake.

Towneley Mysteries, Juditium.

Wastoures and wrecches out of wedloke, I trowe,

Conceyed ben in yuel tyme as caym was on Eue.

Vision of Piers the Plowman, B. ix. 120.

WEEDS, useless vegetation the spontaneous growth of the ground, has been frequently confounded with weeds, clothing, garments (now only used of a widow's mourning garments), as if the word denoted the vesture which the earth puts on when "in verdure clad." So Richardson, and Abp. Trench, who says "Weeds were wbat ever covered the earth or the person" (Eng. Past and Present, Lect. IV.). Compare the following:—

Methocht freshe May befor my bed upstude,
In weid depaynt of mony diverse hew.

Dunbar, Thistle and Rose, sub init.

The words, however, are perfectly distinct, weed, a garment, being from A. Sax. wæd, vesture, Prov. Ger. gewate, old Ger. giuwati, and weed, herbage, from A. Sax. wēod, a plant, a weed.

Gyf æcyres wēod . . . God scrýt.—A. Sax. Version, Matth. vi. 30.

[If God clothe the weed of the field.]

Vnder vre wede vre kynde nom,
And al soþ-fast mon bi-com.

Grosseteste, Castel of Loue, 1320,
l. 658.

[Under our garb He took our nature and became very man.]

Tell me, Ned Lacy, didst thou mark the maid,
How lovely in her Country-weeds she look'd?

R. Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay, 1594 (p. 153).

I gave her twopence, reassumed my former garb, and left my weeds in her custody.—H. Brooke, Fool of Quality, i. 191 [Davies].

WEED-WIND, a corruption of with-wind, A. Sax. wiðwinde, from wið, about, and windan, to wind, the convolvulus (Prior).

Weed-wind that is withwind.—Gerarde, Index.

WELCOME has been generally regarded as a compound of well (A. Sax. wel, Goth. waila, Ger. wohl) and come (A. Sax. cuma, a comer, cumian, to come), as if, like It. ben-venuto, it meant "come well," or under happy circumstances (bien arrivé), similar to welfare, welborn (A. Sax. welboren), A. Sax. wel-dæd (good deed, benefit, Goth. waila-deds). It is really a slightly corrupted form of A. Sax. wilcume! wilcuma, a pleasant or wished-for comer, wil-cumian, to receive gladly, to salute; where wil, pleasing, is of the same family as A. Sax. wille, wish, desire, will, wil-lan, to wish (Goth. wiljan, Ger. wollen). Like formations are A. Sax. wil-gest, an acceptable guest, wil-boda (nuntius gratus), wil-dag, a wished-for day, wil-gesið, a pleasant companion (Ettmüller, p. 11).

And gyf ge ðæt án dóp ðæt ge eowre gebróðra wylcumiap, hwæt dó ge máre!—A. Sax. Vers. (995), S. Matt. v. 47.

[And if ye only do this, that ye greet your brethren, what do ye more?]

WELLADAY, probably a modern corruption of the old English exclamation welaway! welaway or walarwa! from the analogy of lack a day! Spenser further corrupted the word into weal-away, as if absence of weal. The true origin is A. Sax. wá lá wá, woe! lo! woe!

þo havelock micte sei "welawei."
Havelok the Dane, l. 570, ed. Skeat.

Harrow now out, and well away! he cryde.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, 11. vi. 43.

þai cried, "allas and wayloway,
For dole what sal we do þis day.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 95,
l. 307.

In folks-etymology the word was anciently regarded as being well-away, absence of weal. Compare CARAWAY understood as Care-away.

For wot no wight what werre is þer as pees
regneþ,
Ne what [is] witerliche wele · til wele-a-way
hym teche.

W. Langland, Vision of Piers Plowman,
C. xxi. 239.

A! weel away! weel away! fals hert, why
wylt thou not brest,
Syn thi maystyr so cowardly thou hast forsake?

Coventry Mysteries, p. 298 (Shaks. Soc.).

But weilauey! þat he ne wist · what wo y drye.

William of Palerne, l. 935.

They cryed so pitously, Alas and weleaway for the deth of her dere suster copen.—
Cuxton, Reynard the Fox, p. 9 (ed. Arber).

Wel-away the while I was so fonde,

To leave the good, that I had in hande,
In hope of better that was uncouth!

Spenser, Shepherds Cal. Sept.

WELL INK, a Cumberland name for the plant Veronica (Beccabunga; vide Dickinson, Glossary, s.v.), of which word it may be a corruption (wer'nik', wer'ink, wel'ink?).

WELSH RABBIT, a name for a dish of toasted cheese, Fr. Wouelche Rabbette or Lapin Gallois (Kettner, Book of Table, p. 486). It has been frequently alleged that rabbit here is a corruption of rare-bit (e.g. by Archbishop Trench), but no evidence has ever been produced of the latter word having been so used. Quite recently, indeed, some superfine restaurants have displayed their learning by admitting "Welsh Rare-bits" into their ménus; but in the bills of fare of mere eating-houses it is still vulgar rabbit. The fact is, the phrase is one of a numerous class of slang expressions—the mock-heroic of the eating-house—in which some common dish or product for which any place or people has a special reputation is called by the name of some more dainty article of food which it is supposed humorously to supersede or equal. Thus a sheep's head stewed with onions, a dish much affected by the German sugar-bakers in the East-end of London, is called "a German duck;" a Leicestershire Plover is a bag-pudding (Ray); a species of dried fish is "a Bombay duck" in Western India; a crust of bread rubbed with garlic is in French slang "a capon;" in Cambridgeshire cow-heel is "a cobbler's lobster" (Wright); red herrings are variously known as "Norfolk capons," "Dunbar wethers," or "Gourock hams." "Sheep's head" is an old name for a Virginian fish from which something like mutton broth could be made (Bailey). "Mummers' feed is a herring which we call a pheasant," says a strolling actor in Mayhew's London Labour and London Poor, vol. iii. p. 151. In French it is popularly called poulet de carême. A cheap dish composed of liver, potatoes, &c., is termed "a poor man's goose." Similarly a dish of roasted cheese was regarded as the Welshman's rabbit. So shrimps are "Gravesend sweetmeats," and potatoes "Irish apricots" or "Munster plums" (Tylor, Macmillan's Magazine, April, 1874). In Scottish, "a Norloch trout" was an old cant phrase for a leg of mutton (Jamieson).

Cape Cod Turkeys = codfish; Taunton Turkeys and Digby chickens = herrings; Albany Beef = sturgeon.—Burtlett, Dict. of Americanisms, 4th ed.

The goes of stout, the Chough and Crow, the welsh rabbit, the Red Cross Knight, . . . the song and the cup, in a word, passed round merrily.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. i.

The following I take from Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary :—

Go to the tavern, and call for your bottle, and your pipe, and your Welsh-rabbit.—Graves, Spiritual Quixote, bk. vii. ch. 9.

A desire for welsh-rabbits and good old gleesing led us to the Cave of Harmony.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. i.

Compare the following :—

The Weavers' Beef of Colchester.—These are Sprats, caught hereabouts, and brought hither in incredible abundance, whereon the poor Weavers (numerous in this City) make much of their repast, cutting Rands, Rumps, Surloyns, Chines, and all Joyns of Beef out of them, as lasting in season well nigh a quarter of a year.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, i. 340.

A Yarmouth Capon.—That is, a Red-herring. No news for creatures to be thus disguised under other names; . . . But, to countenance this expression, I understand that the Italian Friars (when disposed to eat flesh on Fridays) calls a Capon piscem à corte, a fish out of the Coop.—Fuller, Worthies of England, ii. 127.

"Bristol Milk."—Though as many elephants are fed as Cows grazed within the Walls of this City, yet great plenty of this metaphorical Milk, whereby Xeres or Sherry Sack is intended.—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, ii. 295.

See the somewhat similar phrases under LEVANT, and add to the instances there given:—

It was their sole refuge; they might seek their fortune in another place and come home by Spillsbury [i.e. he upset].—Hacket, Life of Williams, i. 208.

WENCH, now a depreciatory term for a young woman, is a shortened form of old Eng. wenche, which was probably mistaken for a diminutival form in -el (from a false analogy to diminutives like cockerel, kernel, satchel, pommel, libel, citadel, bottle, circle, &c.), and implying therefore a primitive wench; pretty much as if we evolved a word wat out of wattle (A. Sax. watel, watul). Similarly thrush has been formed from old Eng. thrushill, throsle or throstle; date from datel or datle; almond from amandel; Fr. ange from angel. Old Eng. wenche, used for a young person of either sex, A. Sax. wenche, a maid, seems to denote etymologically one that is weak, being akin to A. Sax. wenche, a weakling, wince, offspring, Prov. Eng. winkle, and wankle, feeble, weakly, pliant, Scot. wankill, unstable. "Quelen þa wanclen."—Layamon, iii. 280 [Died the weaklings, i.e. children]; A. Sax. wancol, wavering, A. Sax. wincian, to bend, waver, wincan, wican, to yield, to totter, Lat. vacillare, Sansk. wank, to bend, to go crooked. Ormynn calls Isaac a wenche, and an old Eng. poem makes the Virgin say "Ich am Godes wenche."

He biseinte Sodome & Gomorre, were, & wif, & wenche.—Ancren Riwle, p. 33½ (var. lec.).

[He sank Sodom and Gomorrah, man, woman, and child.]

þe segge herde þat soun to segor þat 3ede, & þe wenches hym wyth þat by þe way fol3ed.
Alliterative Poems, p. 65, l. 974.

[The man heard that sound that went to Zoar and the women with him that followed by the way.]

For that other is a powre woman,
She shal be cleped his wenche and his lemman.

Chaucer, The Manciples Tale.

I am a gentil woman, and no wenche.

Id. Marchantes Tale, l. 10076.

He painted also a minstrel wench playing vpon a Psaltry.—Holland, Pliny, vol. ii. p. 550.

A wench went and told them.—A. V. 2 Sum. xvii. 17.

WEYWARD, a mis-spelling, and perhaps misunderstanding, of O. Eng. wierde, wyrde, "weird," in the folio editions of Shakespeare:—

The weyward sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land.

Macbeth, act i. sc. 3.

Warburton and Tieck actually take the word here for wayward, wilful. But Holinshed, whom Shakespeare here is following, calls the witches the weird sisters, and Gawin Douglas (1553) gives the same title to the Parcæ or Fates:—

The weird Sisteris defendis that suld be wit.

Third Booke of Eneados, p. 80, l. 48.

Cloto . . . anglice, one of the three wyrde Sisters.—Ortus Vocabulorum, 1514.

It is the same word as O. Eng. wierde, fate, destiny, A. Sax. wyrd, Icel. urðr. See WARLOCK.

Fortune, executrice of wierdes.

Chaucer, Tro. and Cres. b. iii. 618.

WHALE, to beat soundly, is a vulgar pronunciation frequently heard in some places of "wale," or "weal," or welt, to raise stripes or wheels (A. Sax. walu, Goth. walus) on the skin with a lash.

Wale, to beat with a stick.—Holderness Glossary, Eng. Dialect Soc.

It Lerze, the blacke or blew wales or markes of a blow or stripe.—Florio.

Compare whaleing, boards used to keep the bank of a drain from falling in (Lincolnshire), with wale in gun-wale, &c., Goth. walus, a staff, Icel. völr.

An attempt has been actually made to bring this word into connexion with the monster of the deep. Whaling, says an old encyclopædia quoted with approval by Jamieson (Scotch Dict. s.v.), is "a lashing with a rope's end, from the name of a rope called a whale-line, used in fishing for whales."

WHAT in somewhat, O. Eng. much what (Sir Thos. More) is for whit, A. Sax. wiht, or wiht, a thing, a whit, Gothic wiht, the same word which enters into ought, A. Sax. awhit, "one-whit," and naught, A. Sax. nâ-whit, "no-whit."

Thus two things which are somewhat different, are some whit (or particle) different. Wycliffe (1389) uses what for whit in the following passage :—

The loues of two hundrid pens suffysen not to hem, that ech man take a litle what.—
John vi. 7.

See Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word Book, s.v. Whit. “þatt ilke whatt,” the same thing, occurs in Ormyn (ab. 1200), vol. ii. p. 293.

3e xal fynde hym a strawnge watt! [= wight].
The Coventry Mysteries (Shaks. Soc.),
p. 294.

So in the phrase “I’ll tell you what now of the devil” (Massinger, Virgin Martyr, iii. 3), what = a whit, something (aliquid). But see Morris, Historical Eng. Grammar, p. 122.

They prayd him sit, and gave him for to feed,
Such homely what as serves the simple clowne,
That doth despise the dainties of the towne.
Spenser, F. Queene, VI. ix. 7.

WHEAT-EAR, the name of a bird, has been considered a corruption of whit-tail (Wedgwood). It is really a perverted form of the older word wheat-ears for white-ears (from A. Sax. hwit and ears, the tail or rump), which was mistaken for a plural. Exactly similar is its other Eng. name the white-rump, Fr. cul blanc, the bird called a whittaille (Cotgrave; see also s.vv. Blanculet and Vit rée).

Wheat-ears is a Bird peculiar to this County [Sussex], hardly found out of it. It is so called because fattest when Wheat is ripe, whereon it feeds; being no bigger than a Lark, which it equalleth in the fineness of the flesh, far exceedeth in the fatness thereof.
—T. Fuller, Worthies of England, ii. 382.

“A Chichester lobster, a Selsey cockle, an Arundell mullet, a Pulborough eel, an Amberly trout, a Rye herring, a Bourn wheat-ear.”—Are the best in their kind, understand it of those that are taken in this Country.—
Ray, Proverbs (p. 262, ed. 1742).

Fain would I see the Wheatear show
In the dark sward, his rump of snow,
Of spotless brightness.

Bishop Mant, British Months.

Among the other common birds of China, we must not omit a delicate species of ortolan, which appears in the neighbourhood of Canton about the time when the last crop of rice is cut. As it feeds on the ears of grain, it is for that reason called the “rice bird,” in the same way that the term wheat-ear is applied to a similar description in the south of England.—Sir J. Davies, The Chinese, vol. iii. p. 111 (ed. 1844).

Wheat-ear (Saxicola oenanthe)—Fallow-chat, White-rump, White-tail, Fallow-smick,

Fallow-finch, Chacker, Chackbird, Clod-hopper, with some other quaint names still, which I have noted down, and yet another or two common to the Wheat-ear and Stone-chat, such as Stoue-chacker.—J. C. Atkinson, Brit. Birds' Nests and Eggs, p. 37.

I supposed that I was the first to discover the above origin, which is not given in the dictionaries; but after the above was written I found the following cited in Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary :—

There is . . . great plenty of the birds so much admired at Tunbridge under the name of wheat-ears. By the by, this is a pleasant corruption of white-a—e, the translation of their French name cul blanc, taken from their colour, for they are actually white towards the tail.—Smollett, Travels, Letter iii.

WHILE, in the phrase “to while away the time,” i.e. to spend or pass it away anyhow that it may not prove irksome, so spelt as if connected with while, A.Sax. hwil, time, is a perverted form of to wile, i.e. to beguile, the time, like the Latin idioms decipere diem, fallere tempus. “Never while away time,” was one of Wesley’s precepts to his preachers.—Southey, Life of Wesley, vol. ii. p. 72 (1858).

I amused myself with writing to while away the hours at the Raven at Shrewsbury.—A. J. C. Hare, Memorials of a Quiet Life, vol. i. p. 241.

Nor do I beg this slender inch, to while
The time away, or safely to beguile,
My thoughts with joy, there’s nothing worth a smile.

Quartes, Emblems, bk. iii. 13.

Longfellow uses the correct form :—

Here in seclusion, as a widow may,
The lovely lady wiled the hours away.

Tales of a Wayside Inn, Works
(Chandos ed.), p. 478.

Compare the following :—

The rural scandal, and the rural jest,
Fly harmless to deceive the tedious time,
And steal unfelt the sultry hours away.

Thomson, Seasons, Autumn.

WHINYARD, an old word for a sword (Wright).

But stay a while, unlesse my whinyard fail
Or is enchanted, l’le cut off th’ intail.

Cleveland, Poems, 1651.

It is another form of whinard, a crooked sword or Scimeter (Bailey), which is itself from whinger or whingar, a short sword, a word used in Suffolk and in Scotland (e.g. in The Lay of the Last Minstrel).

There's nane shall dare, by deed or word,
'Gainst her to wag a tongue or finger,
While I can wield my trusty sword,
Or frae my side whisk out a whinger.
A. Ramsay, The Highland Lassie.

Whinger is in all probability a corruption of HANGER (which see) under the influence of whinge or whang, to give a sounding blow, to cut in slices.

Closing with him, I gripped his sword arm under my left oxtar, and with my right hand caught his quingar.—Jas. Melville, Diary, 1578, p. 70 (Wodrow Soc.).

This said, his Courage to inflame,
He call'd upon his Mistress' Name,
His Pistol next he cock'd anew,
And out his nut-brown Whinyard drew.
Butler, Hudibras, I. canto iii. l. 480.

And whingers, now in friendship bare,
The social meal to part and share,
Had found a bloody sheath.

Scott, Lay of the Last Minstrel,
v. 7.

For the death-wound and death-halloo,
Muster'd his breath, his whinyard drew.

Lady of the Lake, i. 8.

Braquemar, a woodknife, hangar, whinyard.—Cotgrave.

WHIP-STOCK, the handle of a whip (Twelfth Night, ii. 3), is most probably a corruption of the older word whip-stalk, stalk (stawk) being still used in provincial Eng. for a whip-handle (Suffolk), Dan. stilk, a handle or stalk, cf. Gk. stélechos, steleá, Ger. stiele, O. Eng. stale, a handle.

Bought you a whistle and a whip-stalk too.
Spanish Tragedy (Dodsley, Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt).

Phœbus when
He broke his whipstocke, and exclaim'd against

The horses of the sun, but whiaperd, to
The lowdeness of his fury.

The Two Noble Kinsmen (1634), i. 2,
l. 86 (ed. Littledale).

WHIRLPOOL, an old name for a whale. May not this word be due to a confusion between whale, A. Sax. hwal, with the h, as so frequently, slurred in pronunciation, and Prov. Eng. wale, a whirlpool, N. Eng. weel, Soot. wale and wheel, an eddy or whirlpool, A. Sax. wél (Ælfric; Etmüller, p. 78)? See WHALE for wale.

Mulasle, the sea-monster called a whirle-pool.—Cotgrave.

Tinet, the Whall tearmed a Horlepool or Whirpool.—Id.

The Whales and Whirlepooles called Balaena take up in length as much as foure acres or arpens of land.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. i. 235.

The vii. daye of October were two great fishes taken at Gravesend, which were called whirlepooles. They wer afterward drawn up above the bridge.—Stowe, Chronicle, anno 1566.

þornebak, thurle polle, hound fysch, halybut, to hym þat hathe heele,
Alle þese cut in þe dische as youre
lord etethe at meele.

J. Russell, Boke of Nurture, l. 585
(Babees Book, p. 157).

Hec belua Anglia (vt dixi) Hore vocatur, & alio nomine Horlepoole & VVirlepoole etiam.—Aldrovandi Opera, p. 677 (in Babees Book, p. 215).

Gurgens, wæl.—Wright, Vocabularies, p. 80.

A Weel (Lancash), a Whirlpool, ab AS. Wael, vortex aquarum.—Ray, North Country Words.

Whylea owre a linn the burnie plays,

* * * *

Whyles in a wiel it dimpl't.

Burns, Poems, p. 47 (Globe ed.).

WHISKY, an Anglicized form of the Keltic word uisge, water, in the Gaelic and Irish expression uisge beatha, "water of life," eau de vie, aqua vitæ.

In Ireland they are more given to Milk, and strong-waters of all colours: The prime is Usquebaugh, which cannot be made anywhere in that Perfection.—Howell, Familiar Letters, bk. ii. 54 (1639).

Cf. Crofton Croker, Ballads of Ireland, pp. 17, 67.

Mal. The Dutchman for a drunkard.

Maq. The Dane for golden lockea.

Mal. The Irishman for usquebath.

Marston, The Malcontent, act v. ac. 1.

Are you there, you usquebath rascal with your metheglin juice?—Randolph, Aristippus, 1636, Works, p. 27 (ed. Hazlitt).

To make Usquebath the best Way.—Take two quarts of the best Aqua Vitæ, four ounces of scraped liquorish, and half a pound of sliced Raisins of the Sun.—The Queen's Closet Opened, 1658, p. 217.

In case of sickness, such bottles of Usquebaugh, black-cherry brandy, Cinnamon water, sack, tent, and strong beer, as made the old coach crack again.—Vanbrugh, Journey to London.

At the burial of the poorest here there is a refreshment given, consisting generally of some whiskybeath, or some foreign liquor, butter and cheese, with oat bread.—Sinclair, Statistical Acct. of Scotland, iii. 525 (in Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 286).

An English officer being in company with a certain chieftain, and several other Highland gentlemen, near Killichumen, had an argument with the great man; and both being well warmed with usky, at last the dispute grew very hot.—Letters from Scotland, 1754, ii. 159.

Captain Hawie asked for usquebagh “where-of Irish gentlemen are seldom dis furnished.”—Carew, Pacata Hibernia, vol. ii. p. 592, 1633.

Scoubac, the popular name for whisky in Parisian pot-houses, is substantially the same word, being an abbreviation of usquebac, the French form of usquebaugh.

The Keltic uisge is seen in Wis-bech, the Wash, Isca, Usk, Ux, Ox-ford, Ewe, Axe, Ouse, Isis, and many other river names.

WHISTLE, in the popular and very ancient expression, “to wet one’s whistle,” i.e. to moisten one’s throat, to drink, might seem to be a corruption of weasan or weasand, the wind-pipe, commonly spelt in former times weesil, wizzel (see WEASEL), Bav. waisel, wazel, A. Sax. wæsend (Diefenbach, i. 246).

Had she oones wett hyr whystyll she couth syng clere
Hyr pater noster.

Towneley Mysteries, Pastores
(15th cent.).

Some doubt is thrown on this by the analogous usage in French of flûte and larigot, a pipe or flute, for the throat, as in the old phrase “boire à tire larigot.” Whistle, A. Sax. hwistle, is near akin to weasand and Scot. whaizle, to wheeze (Burns).

As auy jay she light was and jolif,
So was hire joly whistle wel ywette.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 4152.

’Tis a match, my masters, let’s ev’n say grace, and turn to the fire, drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts.—I. Walton, Compleat Angler, 1653, chap. iii.

But till we meet and weet our whistle,
Tak this excuse for nae epistle.

Burns, Poems, p. 150 (Globe ed.).

He was, indeed, according to the vulgar phrase, whistle-drunk; for before he had swallowed the third bottle, he became entirely overpowered.—Fielding, Hist. of a Foundling, b. xii. ch. 2.

WHISTLE-FISH, an incorrect name for the weasel-cod or gadus mustela (Latham).

WHITE, in Northern English and N. Ireland to cut away a stick, &c., bit by bit (perhaps understood as laying bare the white wood), is the modern form of old Eng. thwyte (Palsgrave, 1530), A. Sax. pwitan, to cut. Cf. whittle, A. Sax. hwytel, a knife; Scot. wheat, quhyte, to cut wood with a knife.

Her lile ans sprawl’d on the hearth, some whiting speals.

W. Hutton, A Bran New Wark, l. 383
(E. D. S.), 1784.

A Sheffield thwitel bare he in his hose.
Chaucer, The Reves Tale.

WHITE, as a slang term for blame or fault (Grose), as in the phrase “you lay all the white off yourself,” or to white = to blame, is a corrupted form of the old Eng. and Scotch wite or wyte, A. Sax. witan, to know (something against one), to impute, O. H. Ger. wizan. Cf. twit, from A. Sax. edwitan, old Eng. wite, a fine or punishment, A. Sax. wite, Icel. viti.

To white, to blame (North Country).—Bailey, Dictionary.

Oh, if I had but Rabby M’Corkindale, for it’s a’ his wyte!—S. R. Whitehead, Daft Davie, p. 221.

To white; to blame: “You lean all the white off your sell,” i.e. You remove all the blame from yourself.—Ray, North Country Words.

þe couherde was in care · i can him no-þing
white.

William of Palerne, l. 304.

More to wyte is her wrange, þen any wyll gentyl.

Alliterative Poems, p. 39, l. 76.

For me weere þi sidis boþe pale & bloo !
To chastise me þou doist it, y trowe ;
Y wyte my silf myne owne woo !

Hymns to the Virgin and Child, p. 35,
l. 8 (E. E. T. S.).

[I impute to myself my own woe.]

Forþi miself I wole aquite,
And bereþ 3e 3oure oghne wite.

Gower, Conf. Amantis (Specimens of Early Eng. ii. 274).

Therefore he was not to wyte,
He sayd he wolde ete but lyte,
Tyll nyght that he home came.

A Mery Geste of The Frere and the Boye, l. 60.

It is a comyn prouerbe An Enemyes mouth, saith seeld wel, what leye ye, and wyte ye myn Eme Reynart.—Carton, Reynard the Fox, p. 7 (ed. Arber).

Fourty pound or fyfty loke of hym thu fech,
So that thu hit bryng, litull will I rech,
Neuer for to white.

Tale of the Basyn, l. 50.

Euer when I thinke on that bright bower,
White me not though my hart be sore.

Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 327, l. 215.

Ye hev nought to lig white on, but your awn frowardness.

W. Hutton, A Bran New Wark, l. 250 (E.D.S.).

Spenser has the word:—

Scoffing at him that did her justly wite,
She turnd her bote about, aud from them
rowed quite.

Faerie Queene, Bk. II. Canto xii. 16.

Elsewhere he incorrectly spells it
wight.

Pierce her heart with point of worthy wight
[i.e. deserved blame].

Shepherd's Calender, June, l. 100.

I wat the kirk was in the wyte,
In the wyte, in the wyte.

Burns, Works, Globe ed. p. 165.

Auld Caleb can tak the wyte of whatever is taen on for the house.—Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. viii.

Alake! that e'er my Muse has reason,
To wyte her countrymen w' treason!

Burns, Poems, p. 8 (Globe ed.).

WHITE, vb. (Scotch), to flatter, probably akin to our "wheedle," Welsh
hud, illusion, charm, hudo, to allure, beguile, hudol, enticing, alluring. Other phrases are white-folk, wheedlers, white-wind, flattery, whitie, whitelip, a flatterer, whiting, flattery (Jamieson);
Cleveland whiteheft, cajolery; Cumberland whitefish, flattery, where fish would seem to be pleonastic and akin to Scot. feese, Swed. fjüsa, to cajole (Ferguson); Lonsdale widdle, to beguile.

WHITE FLAW, } a popular name for

WHIT-FLAW, } a whitlow or small abscess near the finger-nail, North Eng. whick-flaw. It seems properly to denote a flaw, break, or sore, about the whit or whick, Prov. Eng. for the quick or living part of the nail.

The nails faln off by whit-flawes.

Herrick, i. 178 (ed. Hazlitt).

Nares quotes an instance of "white-flaw" from Langham's Garden of Health. Bailey (s.v. paronychia) spells it whiteloe.

Some doth say it is a white flaw vnder the nayle.—Andrew Boorde, Breviary of Health,
c. 265.

Perioniche, a white flawe.

Whytflowe in ones fyngre, Poil de chat.—
Palsgrave.

Whytlowe (whytflowe, sore). Panarucium.—
Prompt. Parv.

The powder of it [Flower-de-lis] is much used for whit-flawes.—*Holland, Pliny, Nat.
Hist.* ii. 105 (1634).

Gal-nuts . . . cure whitflaws, risings, & partings of the flesh and skin about the nail roots.—Id. p. 177.

A fellow take it, or some whit-flaw come,
For to unslate, or to untile that thumb!

Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, p. 68
(ed. Hazlitt).

In Cleveland an agnail is called a whittle, which is a corruption of wotwell, elsewhere a wortwall. The first part of the word is identical, no doubt, with
Dut. vraet, a place galled by rubbing
(Eng. wart), Bav. fratt (Atkinson).
Compare O. Eng. wertwall, Scot. wart-weil.

The powder of it [Horehound] drie, is of exceeding great efficacy to ripen a dry cough, to cure gaugrenes, whiteflaws, and wertwalls about the root of the nails.—Holland, Pliny,
ii. 75 (1634).

A Wartwayle, pterigium.—Levins, Manipulus, 1570, col. 199, l. 21.

WHITE TSAR, the name by which the Emperor of Russia is known throughout Asia, Russian Biely Tsar, Mongol
Tchagan Khan, is a literal translation of the present corrupted form of the Chinese character Hwang, "emperor." Originally this was composed of the symbols denoting "one's self" and "ruler," and so was equivalent to "autocrat." But by the omission of a stroke the symbol of "one's self" was changed into the symbol of "white,"
and hence the above title. Vid. Douglas, Language of China, p. 19, 1875;
N. & Q. S. VII. p. 25.

Our Sovereign desires that the White Tsar, following the example of his forefathers, should not permit himself to be led away by the greatness of the Empire with which God has entrusted him.—F. Burnaby, A Ride to Khiva, ch. xxvii.

WHITE-WALL, a Northampton name for the wode-wale or golden oriole, old Dut. wedewal. See WITTALL.

þe wilde laueroc, ant wolc, & þe wodewale.

Böddeker, Alt.-Eng. Dichtungen,
p. 145, l. 24.

No sound was heard, except from far away
The ringung of the whitwall's shrilly laughter.
Hood, Haunted House [Davies].

WHITE-WITCH, one employed to counteract witchcraft or the black art, a corruption of the Devonshire whit-witch, and this, according to Haldeman, is from the A. Sax. widh, Ger. wider, against, contrary to, seen in withstand, &c.

They are too near akin to those creatures who commonly pass under the name of "white witches." They that do hurt to others by the devils help are called "black witches," but there are a sort of persons in the world that will never hurt any; but only by the power of the infernal spirits they will un-bewitch those that seek unto them for relief. I know that by Constantius his law, black witches were to be punished and white ones indulged. . . . Balaam was a black witch, and Simon Magnus a white one.—J. Mather, Remarkable Providences, p. 190 (ed. Ofior).

The common people call him a wizard, a white-witch, a conjuror, a cunning-man, a necromancer.—Addison, The Drummer, act ii.

He was what the vulgar call a white-witch, a cunning-man, and such like.—Scott, Kenilworth, i. 170 [Davies].

WHITSUN-TIDE. } These forms have WHITSUN-MONDAY. } originated in a mistaken notion that Whitsunday was compounded of Whitsun (= Ger. pfing- sten) and day. However, as early as the time of La3amon we find white sun(n)e tide (l. 31524), and hwite sun(n)e daí, as three separate words, in Old
Eng. Homilies, vol. i. p. 209 (ed.
Morris). See WIT-SUNDAY.

WHOLE, a mis-spelling of hole, the older form, A. Sax. hal, hœl, Goth. hail-s, Gk. kálos, Sansk. kalya-sa (fit, sound, whole), from an mistaken analogy to who, which, when, white, &c. (M. Müller).

W seems often to have been prefixed to words formerly at haphazard, and thus we meet with such forms as whot for hot, whode for hood, whoot for hoot, wrack for rack, wrankle for rankle, whore for hore. Bp. Hacket speaks of "a base or wragged piece of cloth" (Sermons, 1675, p. 6), (see WRAPT, and WRETCHLESSNESS). So wreake for reck (Lyly, 1600); wray for ray (Cartwright, Workes, 1651, p. 311); wrote for rote (= routine), (Skinner); whoode for hood (Gerarde, Herball, p. 1247 (1597)).

The blessed God shall send the timely Rain,
And holsom Windes.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 375 (1621).

Tyndale in his version of the Bible has "wholy goost" for Holy Ghost.

WHOO, a mis-spelling of the name of the hoop, or hoopoe, as if it were called so from its whooping cry, in Ozell's translation of Rabelais.

Fr. "Hupe, huppe, the whoop or dunghill cock" (Cotgrave). However this, as well as Lat. upupa, Greek epops, Pers. pupu, Coptic kukupha, Arab. hudhud, Prov. Ger. wut-wut, may be intended to imitate the cry of the bird, which Mr. Yarrell says resembles the word hoop, hoop, hoop. The French word seems intended to be suggestive of the bird's crest, hupe, just as püb, one of its Persian names, is also a crest or comb.

WHORE. The w is no organic part of this word. It has long been regarded as a derivative of hire (A. Sax. hýriam, Dut. huuren), as if Venus venalis, on the model of Lat. meretrix, from mereo; Greek pórñē, from pernēmi, to sell; Sansk. panya, a harlot, from root pan, to buy; A. Sax. ceafes, cyfes, a whore, akin to ceáþian, to buy. However whore, A. Sax. hóre, has no more connexion with hire than have harlot, hyren (Shaks.), and hourí (Hind. húr). A. Sax. hór, hór-cwén, a harlot, old Fris. hór, O. H. Ger. huor, fornication, huora, a harlot, Icel. hóra, O. Dut. hoere, Ger. hure, Goth. hors (Diefenbach, ii. 593), are all doubtless near akin (though the vowel is different) to A. Sax. horh, horu, filth, horig, filthy, old Eng. hore, hor3, O. Fris. hore, O. H. Ger. horo, filth (Stratmann).

Hore, woman, Meretrix.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Horel, or bullowre, Fornicator, . . . leno, mechus.—Id.

So old Eng. hor, corruption, sin, lewdness, horowe, foul, unclean; Prov. Eng. horry, Devon. (Wright); howerly, dirty, foul, indecent, Lincoln. (Peacock). Ettmüller (p. 449) connects A. Sax. hóre, whore, with a root form haran, to pour out, to urine (cf. Ger. harn, urine), just as Greek moichós, an adulterer, is akin to Greek michó, Lat. mi(n)go, to urine, A. Sax. mige, meow, "mixin," Goth. maihstus, dung (Grimm; Curtius, Griech. Etym. i. 163), Old Eng. mix, a scoundrel (Wm. of Palerne, l. 125).

Compare Lat. matella (vase de chambre), used for a harlot.

Tamar would not yield to Judah without a hire. The hire makes the whore, “Stat meretrix certo quovis mercabilis ære,

Et miseras jusso corpore quaerit opes;—”

“Compared with harlots, the worst beast is good;
No beasts, but they, will sell their flesh and blood.”

Thomas Adams, Sermons, The Fatal Banquet, vol. i. p. 223.

The following are instances of the word in its literal meaning:—

They gathered dirt & mire full ffast,
Which befores was out cast,

* * * * *

They take in all their hore
That was cast out befores!

Percy Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 473, l. 1586.

Somtime envious folke with tonges horowe
Depraven hem.

Chaucer, Complaint of Mars and Venus,
l. 207.

Of vche clene comly kynde enclose seuen
makez,

Of vche horwed, in ark halde bot a payre.
Alliterative Poems, p. 46, l. 335.

We hadde don of us þe ealde man . þe us horegede alle. and don on þe newe þe clesneð alle.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 201.

[We have put off the old man that defiled us all, and have put on the new that cleanseth all.]

The following show the transition to the sense of sin, uncleanness, lascivious-
ness:—

Turtle ne wile hadde no make bute on .
and after þat non . and forþi it bitocneð þe clenesse . þe is bideled of þe hore: þat is cleped hordom . þat is alre horene hore . and ech man þat is ful þeroffe wapman oðer wim-man is hore.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p.
49 (ed. Morris).

[The turtle will have no mate but one, and after that none; and therefore it betokeneth purity that is distinguished from the uncleanness that is called whoredom, which is the impurity of all impurities, and every one that is defiled therewith, man or woman, is a whore.]

Iuelmennish and forhored mannish acseð after fortocne of heene . and hie ne shulen hauen bute eorðliche.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 81 (ed. Morris).

[An evil and adulterous generation ask after a sign from heaven, and they shall have only an earthly one.]

Har stides for to ful fille, þat wer i-falle for prude an hore:

God makid adam to is wille . to fille har
stides þat were ilor.

Early Eng. Poems (Philolog. Soc.),
p. 13, l. 18.

A seint Edmundes day þe king: þe gode child was ibore,
So clene he cam fram his moder; wiþout
enie hore.

Id. p. 71, l. 8.

Of one who lived in harlotry it is said,

Seint Marie Egipcicake in egipt was ibore
All hire zong lif heo ladde in sinne & in hore.

Cott. MS. in Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalendarium, ii. 257.

ðe me[i]stres of ðise hore-men, . . .

* * * * *
ðe bidde ic hangen ðat he ben;

* * * * *

He slug Zabri for godes luen,
Hise hore bi neðe and him abuen.

Genesis and Exodus, l. 4074-82.

Vorte makien þe deofles hore of hire is reouðe ouer reouðe.—Ancren Riwe, p. 290.

[For to make the devil's whore of her is pity upon pity.]

Ich am a ful stod mere, a stinckinde hore.
—Id. p. 316.

[I am a foul stud mare, a stinking whore.]

Beter were a riche mon
Forte spouse a god womon, þah hue [= she] he sumdel pore,
þen to brynge in to his hous
A proud quene & daungerous þat is sumdel hore.

Böddeker, Alt. Eng. Dicht. p. 299.

Alle harlottes and horres
And bawdes that procures,
To bryng thaym to lures
Welcom to my See.

Towneley Mysteries, Juditium.

I schal schewe to thee the dampnacioun of the greet hoore.—Wycliffe, Rev. xvii. 1 (Bagster's Hexapla).

There are many instances of words significant of lasciviousness, impurity, or wickedness, being derived from others meaning dirt, filth, mud, or dung, e.g. Sp. cotorrera, a whore, from cotorro, a sink of filth (Stevens).

One of your lascivious ingenderers . . . the very sinke of sensuality and poole of putri-faction.—Man in the Moone, 1669.

Drab, a harlot, a filthy woman, Gael.
and Ir. drab, near akin to Gael. and Ir.
drabh, refuse, “druff,” Icel. drabba, to dirty (cf. lutea meretrix.—Plautus).

Ladies of the mud, . . .

Nymphs, Nereids, or what vulgar tongues
call drabs,
Who vend at Billingsgate their sprats and crabs. Peter Pindur.

Madame de rebut [lady of refuse or offal], a rascally drah, a whore.—Cotgrave.

Trull, Bret. trulen, akin to Ir. truail-lim, I defile, truilled, corrupted; Sp.
troya, a bawd, from L. Lat. troja, a sow (Fr. traïe, Sard. troju, dirty (Diez), compare Gk. χοῖρος, I. zaccara, a common filthy whore (Florio), from zaccarrare, to bemire or dirty; Fr. ruffien, It.
ruffiano, a pimp or bawd, connected with It. ruffa, rufa, scurf, filth (Diez).
Icel. saur-lífi, unclean life, fornication,
saur-lífr, lewd, from saurr, mud, dirt (Cleasby). We may also compare smut, indecent talk, Cumberland
smutty, indelicate (Ferguson); bawdy, in old English, dirty, filthy, bemired.

What doest thou heere? thou stinketh all of the kitching; thy clothes bee all bawdy of the grease and tallow that thou hast gotten in king Arthurs kitching.—Molory, King Arthur, 1634, i. 239 (ed. Wright).

Of brokaris and sic baudry how suld I write?
Of quham the fylth stynketh in Goddis neis.

G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 96, l. 52.

Dan. skorn, a scoundrel, orig. dung, dirt (see SCORN); scurrilous, Lat. scurra, a low buffoon, connected with Greek
skór, dung (like koprias, Lat. cœnum); old Eng. quede, evil, cognate with
A. Sax. cwead, dung, filth (cf. "Dung ofsunne [sin]."—Ancren Riwle, p. 142);
O. Eng. gore, sin, A. Sax. gór, filth,
"gore;" Ir. cac, (1) dung, (2) evil
(? compare Greek κακός).

With these compare Lat. malus, bad,
originally dirty, akin to Sansk. mala,
(1) dirt, filth, (2) sin, malâkâ, a lewd woman, Dut. mal, lewd, wanton; in contrast to holy, (w)hole, hale, A. Sax.
hâl, identical with Greek kalôs, fair, beautiful (cf. "the beauty of holiness").

The w is an arbitrary prefix, as in whole; so "whore head," Monks of Evesham, p. 33; Percy Fol. MS. i. 327; old Eng. whot for hot, A. V. 1611 (Deut. ix.
19). Compare WRETCHLESSNESS.

WICK, the part of a candle which is lighted, the modern form of old Eng.
weeke, weke, A. Sax. wecce (Ettmüller, 85) or weoca (Id. 103), evidently derived from weoce, a rush, papyrus (Ælfric), which was originally used for a wick (Swed. veke, Dan. væge, wick). In accordance with the widelyspread conception that a candle or fuel starts into life when it catches fire, and dies when it ceases to burn, the wick seems to have come to have been regarded as the living part of the candle, and to have been confounded with the North Eng. word wick, living, lively (another form of quick, A. Sax. cwic), which is exactly paralleled by Icel.

kveylkr, a wick, from kveylkja, (1) to quicken, vivify, (2) to kindle; kveylkja, a kindling (Cleasby). Compare "a live coal" (Greek zôpuron); Ir. beo-cainneal, a live (i.e. lighted) candle; Fr. tuer la chandelle; Span. matar (to kill), to put out a candle (Minsheu).

Ma chaudielle est morte
Je n'ai plus de feu.

French Lullaby.

[Sparks] they life conceiv'd, and forth in flames did fly.

Spenser, F. Q. III. xii. 9.

"Jack's alive," a burning stick
(Halliwell, Nursery Rhymes, p. 213);
O. H. Ger. quichilunga, tinder. (But kindle, to bring forth young (of hares, &c.), O. Eng. kundle, is a distinct verb from kindle, to light.)

From the same root giv, Sansk. jiv, to live, which yields wick, quick, comes Pers. jibâ, wood for burning, that which vivifies the fire. Compare Pers. zindah,
(1) life, living, (2) wick, tinder; also Sansk. janayu, fire, from jan, to be born (Pictet, Origines, i. 234, 235).

The analogy of a burning wick or taper to a life which is gradually wearing itself out is a commonplace in poetry; compare such phrases as "His life is flickering in the socket;" "Out, out, brief candle (= life)!" (Shakespeare).
So Sansk. daśâ, a wick, also applied to a time of life, daśânta, end of a wick or of life.

"þe candel of lijf þi soule dide tende:
To lište þee hom," resoun dide saye. . . .
Vne þe y holde my candelis eende,
It is past euensonge of my day.

Hymns to the Virgin and Child, p. 70,
l. 374 (E.E.T.S.).

Look upon thy burning taper, and there see the embleme of thy life.—Quarles, Enchiridion, Cent. iv. 55.

By the time the present clamours are appeared, the wick of his old life will be snuffed out.—H. Walpole, Letters, ii. 319 (1752).

To husband out life's taper at the close,
And keep the flame from wasting by repose.
Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

Thus they spend
The little wick of life's poor shallow lamp
In playing tricks with nature.
Cowper, The Garden, bk. 3.

In yone tapirs ther be things iij,
Wax, week, and lyght, whiche I shall declare . . .

Lorde, wax betokyneth thyn humanyte,
And week betokyneth thy soule most sweete.
Candlemas-Day, 1512 (Murriott, Mysteries, p. 216).

For firste the wexe bitokeneth his manhede,
The weke his soule, the fire his godhede.
Lydgate [in Wright].

Ye Weak of a candle, lichens.—Levins, Manipulus, 1570, col. 206, l. 45.

But true it is that, when the oyle is spent,
The light goes out, and weeke is throwne
away.

Spenser, F. Queene, II. x. 30.

The flaxe or weeke smoaketh.—D. Featley, Clavis Mystica, 1636, p. 14.

WIDOW, as a slang name of the gallows, is no doubt the same word as WIDDIE, in the Scotch phrases, "To cheat the widdie," i.e. escape the gallows, and "The water 'll no wrang the widdie," "The water will ne'er waur the woodie," i.e. He who is born to be hanged will never be drowned. Widdie or woodie, originally meaning a halter, is evidently the same word as our "withy," A. S. wiðig, Scot. widdy, old Eng. wiði, Ger. weide, Dan. vidie, a willow twig, used in the sense of a rope or halter made of willow twigs. The gallows, however, is frequently styled in slang "the widow" (in Ireland pronounced "the widdie"), and hence, perhaps, French la veuve, in the same sense.

Her dove had been a Highland laddie,
But weary fa' the waeifu' woodie!
Burns, Poems, p. 50 (Globe ed.).

WIDOW-BIRD, Latinized as vidua, the name of a family of weaver-birds, is a corruption of Whydaw-bird, so called from the country of Whydau in Western Africa.

WIDOW WISSE, a curious old popular name for the plant Genistella tinctoria (Gerarde, Index), looks like a corruption of wood-waxen, another name for the same (Id. p. 1136), A. Sax. wudu- weawe (Somner), (? = wood-growth).

WILLIAM, in Sweet William, the name of the plant Dianthus barbatus, it has been ingeniously conjectured by Dr.

Prior, is the more formal presentation of Willy, the older name of the same flower; and this Willy an English corruption of Fr. œillet, which sounds much the same, Lat. ocellus, a little eye (Popular Names of British Plants,
s.v.).

WILL-O'-THE-WISP. It seems highly probable that the first part of this name for the ignis fatuus is not the familiar and contracted form of William, but akin to Icelandic villa, to bewilder, villr, erring, astray, villa, a losing one's way, e.g. villu-nótt, a night of error.
In old English wyl, wylle, wandering, having lost one's way, astray, is frequently found, as in the phrase, "wille
o wan," astray from abode, uncertain where to go (Morris); also biwille, to lead astray, to bewilder, Swed. förvilla.
Wild and wilderness are then akin.

In East Anglia "to be led will" (cf.
O. Eng. will, astray), is to be beguiled as by a will-o'-the-wisp (E. D. Soc.
Reprint B. 20). In some parts the phosphorescent gleam from decayed vegetable matter is called wild-fire, where wild = Icel. villi-, misleading,
false.

Wild-fire is also called will-fire by the Scotch, especially when denoting fire obtained by friction (Tylor, Early Hist. of Man, vol. 2, p. 257, 3rd ed.).

Will-led, led away or bewildered by false appearances, as a person would be who followed Will o' Wisp.—W. D. Parish, Sussex Glossary.

An old Norfolk woman, who conceived she was prevented by some invisible power from taking a certain path, and obliged consequently to go to her work by another and longer way, described herself as having been "Will led," or "Led Will."—Choice Notes, Folk Lore, p. 241.

How Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring.
clowns,
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs.

J. Gay, Shepherd's Week, vi. l. 58.

Wimman wið childe, one and sori,
In ðe diserd, wil and weri.

Genesis and Exodus, l. 974.

[A woman (Hagar) with child, alone and srd, in the desert, wandering and weary.]

The Kyng toward the vod is gane, Wery for-swat and vill of vayn.

Barbour, Bruce, bk. vii. l. 2.

[The king toward the wood is gone, weary, perspiring, and wild of weaning, i.e. uncertain of purpose.]

When I was wille and weriest
Ye harberd me fulle esely
Fulle glad then were ye of youre gest.
Towneley Mysteries, Juditium.

ben wakened þe wyze of his wyl dremes.
Alliterative Poems, p. 102, l. 1473.

To lincolne barfot he yede.
Hwan he kam þe[r], he was ful wil,
Ne hauede he no frend to gangen til.
Havelok the Dane, l. 864.

All wery I wex and wyle of my gate.
Troy Book, l. 2369.

Sone ware thay willid fra the way the wod was so thick.—King Alexander, p. 102.

Adam went out ful wille o wan.
Cott. MS. in Morris, Allit. Poems, p. 214.
Sorful hicom þat fals file [the devil]
And thought how he moght man biwille.
Cott. MS. ibid.

Of the same origin seems to be the German Willis, or young brides who have died before their wedding-day, and rise nightly from their graves to meet in groups on the country roads, and there give themselves up during the midnight hour to the wildest dances (H. Heine).

WINDLASS. } The latter, which is also WINDLACE. } the older form, as if the lace that winds up the weight or bucket, is a corruption of old Eng. windas (Chaucer; cf. Dut. windas), which corresponds to Icelandic wind-áss, a windlass, literally a winding pole, from winda, to wind, and áss, a pole or yard (cf. Goth. ans, a beam, Lat. asser.—Cleasby); Ger. wind-achse, “wind-axle.”

Wiȝt at þe wyndas weȝen her ankres.
Alliterative Poems, p. 92, l. 103.

[Quick at the windlass (they) weigh their anchors.]

The former are brought forth by a wind-latch of a trial to charge the latter with the foulest of crimes.—North, Examen, p. 307 [Davies].

The arblast was a cross-bow, the windlace the machine used in hending that weapon.—Scott, Ivanhoe, ii. 93 [Id.].

WINDORE, a false orthography of window, as if the word denoted the dore, or door, that admits the wind, occurs in Sam. Butler. Compare Sp. ventana, window, originally a vent or air-hole, from Lat. ventus, wind.

Knowing they were of doubtful gender,
And that they came in at a windore.
Hudibras, l. ii. 213.

Windore is still used in the Lincolnshire dialect, and winder is the common pronunciation of the Irish peasantry.

In Nicolas Udall's translation of The Apothegmes of Erasmus, 1554, is found “windore” and “prettie lattesse windores” (pp. 26, 134, reprint 1877). On this the editor, Mr. E. Johnson, remarks, glazed windows are supposed to have been introduced in the twelfth century as an improvement on doors to shut out the wind; and “glaze-windores” occur in Erasmus's preface to the Paraphrase on St. Luke. See also Paraphrase on the Acts, f. 68. An approving Saturday Reviewer (Nov. 24, 1877, p. 661) adds:—

In Wright and Halliwell “windore” only occurs as an unfathered various reading of “window”; and whilst Mr. Johnson admits that Piers Ploughman, Chaucer, and Gower have “window” or “windoe,” he rests his argument on the form windore being used by all the lower, and some of the middle class, in Lincolnshire. The question awaits a fuller collection of evidence. Mr. Johnson has at any rate made a good case for the vulgar form being the true one.

This, of course, is all wrong, and the evidence is complete enough. Windore, cf. Swed. windöga, Dan. wind-ue, is the modern representative of early Eng. windoge, A. Sax. wind-eäge, Icel. wind-auga, a window, literally a wind-eye, the essential features of which are faithfully preserved in the Scotch windak, windock, winnock. “Arches windoge undon it is.”—Genesis and Exodus (ab. 1250), l. 602, ed. Morris. The form windore was no doubt suggested by the synonymous words, eäg-duru, “eye-door,” eäg-pyrl, “eye-hole,” Goth. auga-dawro, O. H. Ger. augatora. Compare Sansk. vâtâyanam (wind-passage), a window (Diefenbach, i. 53). The window was perhaps regarded as the eye of the room; while on the other hand the eyes were conceived to be the windows that gave light to the body, e.g. Eccles. xii. 3; “fenestræ animi” (Cicero).

His eyes are crystal windows, clear and bright.
Quarles, On Fletcher's Purple Island.

When Satan tempted Eve, according to a quaint divine:—

The old Sacriligious theife when he first tooke possession of thy temple brake in at these windowes [her eyes].—W. Streat, The Dividing of the Hoof, 1654, p. 28.

They, waken'd with the noise, did fly,
From inward room to window eye,
And gently op'ning lid, the casement,
Look'd out, but yet with some amazement.

Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. canto 2.

Love is a Burglarer, a Felon
That at the Windore-Eye does steal in
To rob the Heart.

Id. pt. ii. canto 1, ed. 1732.

How curiously are these Windowes [the eyes] glazed with the Horny tunicle which is hard, thicke, transparent.—S. Purchas, Microcosmus, 1619, p. 88.

Life and Thought have gone away

Side by side,

Leaving door and windows wide.

Tennyson, The Deserted House.

Fowerti dais after ðis,

Arches windoge undon it is.

Genesis and Exodus, l. 602.

Nout one our earen, anh ower ie þurles tuneð aßeinidel speche.—Ancren Riwele, p. 70.

[Not only your ears, but also your eye windows, shut against idle speech.]

Fenestra, eh-ðyrl.—Wright, Vocabulary, p. 81.

WINDROW, Scot. winraw, hay or grass raked up into rows (Scot. raus), in order to be dried by the wind. A comparison with the Dutch winddrooge, Low Dutch windrög, winddrög, "wind-dry," seems to show that the latter half of the word is an accommodation (Wedgwood).

In some South parts the borders of a field dug up and laid in rows, in order to have the dry mould carried on upon the land to improve it, are called by this same name of wind-rows.—Kennett, Parochial Antiquities, 1695 (E. D. Soc. ed.).

A Wind-row; the Greens or Borders of a Field dug up, in order to the carrying the Earth on to the Land to mend it. It is called Wind-row, because it is laid in Rows, and exposed to the Wind.—Ray, North Country Words.

WINNING, as applied to a person's face or manner, in the sense of attractive, pleasant, is, no doubt, generally understood to be from win, to gain or earn (A. Sax. winman, Icel. vinna), as if procuring favour, and compare the expression, "He gains upon one in time." It is another form of winsome, pleasant, A. Sax. wynsum, old Eng. wintly, A. Sax. wynlic, from A. Sax. wynn, joy, akin to Goth (un-)wunands, (un-)joyous, Ger. wonne, delight, pleasure, and perhaps Lat. Venus, goddess of delight, venustus, graceful (Diefenbach, i. 166). Compare also Icel. vinr, an agreeable person, a friend; A. Sax. wine, Dan. ven, and the names Bald-wine, prince friend, Winfred, friend of peace; also Welsh gwen, fair, beautiful (whence the name Gwendolen, "Fair-browed"), Gwener, what yields bliss, Venus.

When St. Juliana was plunged into a vessel of boiling pitch, Ha cleopede to drihtin ant hit coledé anan ant warð hire as wunsum as euer eni wlech weter.—Liflade of St. Juliana, 1230, p. 70 (E.E.T.S.).

[She called on the Lord and it cooled anon, and became as pleasant to her as ever any luke(-warm) water.]

Vn-clannes to-cleues in corage dere,
Of þat wynnelych lorde þat wonyes in heuen.

Alliterative Poems, p. 88, l. 1807.

[Uncleanness separates in the dear heart of that gracious Lord that dwells in heaven.] þat was a perles place for ani prince of erþe, & wynli wiþ heie wal was closed al a-boute.

William of Palerne, l. 749.

Wha sal stegh in hille of Lauerd wimli,
Or wha sal stand in his stede hali?

Northumbrian Psalter, Ps. xxiii. 3.

þo valance on fyLOUR shalle henge with wyn, ijj curteyns stre3t drawn with-inne.

Boke of Curtasye, ab. 1430, l. 448.

[The valance on a rod shall hang with grace.]

WIPE, } Lincolnshire names for PY-WIPE, } the lapwing, imitative of its cry. So peewit, peaseweep, weep, Fr. piette, dixhuit, Dan. vibe, Scotch tequhyt, pit-cake, Cleveland teufit, Dan. tyvit! (thieves!), O. Eng. tyrwhit, Dutch kievit, Arabic Bu-teet (Father of the cry "teet").

WISE-ACRE, a corruption of the German Weissager (a "wise-sayer"), a soothsayer, Dut. weissager, all really corrupted from the O. H. Ger. wizago = A. Sax. witega, a prophet or seer, Icel. vitki, a wizard or wise man. "May I ask, sir, how many acres make a wise-acre?" was Curran's retort to a dull but wealthy lawyer who wished that none should be admitted to the bar who had not some landed property.

The wise-acre his son and executor, to the ende the worlde might not thinke that all that ringing was for the begger, but for his father, byred a trumpetter to stand all the ringing-while in the helfrie, and betweene every peale to sound his trumpet, and proclaime aloud and say, Sirres, this next peale is not for R., but for Maister N., his father.—Copley, Wits, Fits, and Fancies, 1614, p. 196.

Peter Gower a Grecian, journeyedde ffor kunnyng yn Egypte, and yn Syria, and yn everyche londe, whereas the Venetians hadde plauntedde maçonrye, and wynnynge entrance yn al lodges of Maçonnes he lerned muche, and returnedde, and yn Grecia Magna wachsynge and becommynge a myghtye wyseacre.—Certaine Questyons . . . concernynge the Mystery of Maçonrye [Gentleman's Magazine, July, 1753].

Besides, I wonder much (Wise-aker)
Who t' was that made you a Man-maker.
Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque
(p. 155).

WISE-HORN, a Scotch word for the gizzard, is a corruption of guissern, which is from Fr. gésier, Prov. Fr. gigier, Lat. gigerium. See GUSEHORN.

WISEN WYND, in Scotch a ludicrous name for the wind-pipe, is a corruption of weasand, as if from wisen, to be parched, and wynd, an alley or passage. Compare its popular name, "the red lane."

WISS, To, a modern manufacture from wiste, which is the past tense, not of wiss (there being no such verb), but of wot, or wat (to know).—Guest, in Philolog. Soc. Proc. ii. 160. So I wiss is a modern corruption of the common old adverb i-wiss (certainly), i.e. y-wiss, ge-wis. It takes the form of I wuss in the mouth of Bristle in Bartholomew Fair, "An you play away your buttons thus, you will want them ere night, for any store I see about you; you might keep them, and save pins, I wuss."—act iv. sc. 1.

Ac þreo wates principales : of alle opere heo

iwis
Humber & temese : seuerne þe þridde is. *
Life of St. Kenelm, l. 16.

In the Coventry Mysteries, 1468 (Shaks. Soc.), we find besides i-wys, i-fownde = found, i-knowe = known, i-prest = pressed, and i-num = understood, written I num.

I have that songe fful wele I num (p. 158).

The farmers . . . were at their wittes ende and wiste not what to doe.—North, Plutarch, 1595, p. 212.

In the following, however, ywist is wrongly put for I wist, "Had I (only) known," i.e. vain after-regret,

Most miserable man, whom wicked fate
Hath brought to Court, to sue for had ywist.
Mother Hubberds Tale.

WISTFUL, so spelt as if derived from wist, A. Sax. wiste, the preterite of witan, to know. But as this seems an impossible combination (knew-ful!), it is probably a corruption of wish-ful. The A. Saxon wist-ful means feast-full, plentiful.

WITCH-ELM, a corruption of wych-elm, i.e. an elm used for making wyches, whycches, or hutchs, A. Sax. hwæcce (Prior), Old Eng. wice.—Læce Boc, I. xxxvi. (Cockayne).

Butler. He [the Conjuror] has a long white wand in his hand.

Coachm. I fancy 'tis made out of witch-elm.
Gardener. I warrant you if the ghost appears he'll whisk you that wand before his eyes, &c.—Addison, The Drummer.

Noah's ark is called a which in the following:—

Alle woned in þe whichche þe wyld & be tame.

Alliterative Poems, p. 47, l. 362.

The chambre charged was with wyches
Full of egges, butter, and chese.

How the Plowman lerned his Paternoster.

Hutche, or whyche, Cista, archa.—Prompt. Parv.

Archa, a whyche, a arke, and a cofyre.—Medulla.

As for brasel, Elme, Wych, and Asshe experience doth prone them to be hut meane for howes.—Ascham, Tioxophilus, 1545, p. 113 (ed. Arber).

Harp of the North! that mouldering long hast hung

On the witch-elm that shades Saint Fillan's spring.

Sir W. Scott, Lady of the Lake, cant. i. l. 2.

WITCH-HAZEL, } popular names for WITCH-WOOD, } the rowan tree or mountain ash, with an allusion to its universally believed power of counteracting the charms of witches, are corrupted forms of wicken-tree, wich-tree, or wicky (Wright), which must be from the provincial word wick, alive, living, as the A. Sax. name is cwic-beám, i.e. wick-tree, and wice. See also wiggan-tree (Ferguson, Cumberland Glossary). Compare, however, Ger. Zauber-strauch, witch-tree, and see Henderson, Folk- lore of N. Counties, p. 189; Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, s.v. Witch.

Gerarde says:—

This Ornus or great Ash is named . . . in English wilde Ash, Quicken tree, Quickbeame tree, and Whicken tree.—Herball, p. 1290 (1597).

WIT-SAFE, frequently found in old writers (e.g. Grafton), also in the forms witsave (Barclay, 1570, and Wyat), whytsafe, and whitesafe, all corruptions of the older form vouch-safe (Wycliffe, Robert of Brunne), or as it came sometimes to be written, voutsafe, vovtsafe. The first part of the word seems to have been confused with old Eng. wite, to guard or keep (A. Sax. be-witan), as if the meaning were to preserve or keep safe, instead of to declare or warrant one safe. Compare:—

Gode wardeins he sette, vor to wite thut lond.
Robert of Gloucester, p. 487 (ed. 1810).

þat þe quen he of-sent sauf wol i fouche.
William of Palerne, ah. 1350,
p. 133, l. 4152.

If that Christe vovtsafed to talke with the Devyill, why not M. Luther with a Jew?—Harington, Nugæ Antiquæ, i. 267.

If her Highnes can voutsaf to play somtyme with her servawntes, according to theyr meaner abilities, I know not why we her servawntes showld skorne to play with our equals.—Harington, Nugæ Antiquæ, ii. 178.

But O Phebus,
All glistening in thy gorgious gowne,
Wouldest thou vuitsafe to slide a dovvne
And dvvell with vs.

Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie,
p. 245 (ed. Arber).

Howe be it though they be advouterers,
Extorsioners, or whormongers,
Yf to be their frendes they witsave.

Rede me and be noit wrothe, 1528,
p. 84 (ed. Arber).

Y heseche you mekely . . . that ye will wit save to praye to god for me.—Revelation to the Monk of Evesham (1486), p. 111 (ed. Arber).

Y blessyd our lorde . . . that he wolde white safe to chaste me onworthy in a fadyrly chastment.—Id. p. 28.

and so whytsafe, p. 70.

His Holynes shold witsaff to confyrme it hy decre in the Consistory expresslye.—Ellis, Orig. Letters, Ser. III. vol. i. p. 267 (1521).

Voutsafe to see another of their forms the Roman stamp.

Milton, Areopagitica (1644), p. 40
(ed. Arber).

and again, p. 48, and Paradise Lost (1st ed.), 1667.

WIT-SUNDAY, } very old corrup-WIT-SUNTIDE, } tions of Whitsun- day, Whitsuntide, as if the church festival was so called from the wit or wisdom with which the apostles were endued on the Day of Pentecost by the effusion of the Holy Spirit.

This day Witsonday is cald,
For wisdom and wit senenfold,
Was gounen to the Apostles on this day.
Richard Rolle of Hampole (d. 1358).

þes dei is ure pentecostes dei. þet is ure Witte sunnedei.—Old English Homilies (12th and 13th cent.), 1st ser. pt. i. p. 89 (E.E.T.S.)

William Langland, speaking of the gifts of the Spirit, says:—

To somme men he 3af wit · [wip] wordes to shewe,

To wyne with truthe · þat þe worlde askep,
As preostes and prechours · and prentises of lawe,

Thei to lyue leelly · by labour of tounge,
And by wit to wyssen opere · as grace wolde hem teche.

Vision concerning Piers the Plowman, 1393, Pass. xxii. ll. 229-233 (Text
C. E. E. T. S.)

And so an ancient Play of the Sacrament (c. 1461):—

yea & also they say he sent them wytt & wysdom

ffor to vnderstond euery langage when y<sup>e</sup> holy gost to them [dyd] come.

P. 120 (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1860-1).

Wycliffe's Bible has witsontide (1 Cor. xvi. 8); Cranmer's, 1551, wytsonnyde (loc. cit.); Robert of Gloucester witesone, and wyttesonetyd:—

The Thorsdai the Witesone wouke to Lon-done Lowis com.—Chronicle, Hearne's Works,
vol. iii. p. 512 (1810 ed.).

On this Hearne cites in his Glossary:—

Good men & wyemen this day is called Wytsonday by cause the holy ghoost brought wyte and wysdom in to Cristis discyple and so hy her prechyng after in to all cristendom.
—Festyvall of Wynkyn de Worde, fol. liiii. a.

Passages to the same effect, and almost in the same words, are quoted from the Harleian and Cottonian MSS. in Hampson's Medii Aevi Kalendarium, Glossary, s.vv. Witt Sunday, Wytsonday. Other forms are Wissonday (Robert of Brunne, Wyssontide (Cott. MS.), Whisson weke (Paston Letters)). All these, however, as well as Wit Sunday, are corruptions of whit-, or White-Sunday, O. Eng. hwit-Sunday, so called, it seems, from the white garments worn by neophytes at this one of the great seasons for baptisms. In Layamon's Brut (1205) it is White sunne tide; in the Ancoren Rirole (1225) hwite-sune-dei (p. 412); in the Saxon Chronicle (1067) hwitan sunnan dæg; and in Icelandic hwitasunnu-dagr. See Picton, in Notes and Queries, 5th S. viii. 2; also 5th S. i. 401; Cleasby and Vigfusson, s.v. hwitr; Hearne, Diary, vol. ii. p. 183. The Welsh word is sul-gwyn (white sun), Whitsuntide (Spurrell).

Vaughan the Silurist has a poem on White Sunday, beginning—

Wellcome, white day! a thousand Suns,
Though seen at once, were black to thee!
Silex Scintillans, 1650.

It would not be easy to define the exact reason why this festival was named the Day of the White Sun. Augustus Hare may have unconsciously approximated to it when he penned this reflection in his note-book in 1831:—

Whitsunday.—Who has not seen the sun on a fine spring morning pouring his rays through a transparent white cloud, filling all places with the purity of his presence, and kindling the birds into joy and song? Such, I conceive, would be the constant effects of the Holy Spirit on the soul, were there no evil in the world.—Memorials of a Quiet Life, vol. i. p. 372.

Whitsunday was sometimes, on account of the resemblance of the names, confounded with the mediæval Dominica in Albis (Sunday in Whites), or first Sunday after Easter, which in Germany is called Weisse Sonntag, in Switzerland Wisse Sontig (White Sunday).

In ye returne of ye Kyng out of Irelande was a woder thyng shewed vnto hym vpō Whitsundaye, which in the calender is called Dominica in albis.—Fabyan, Chronicles, 1516, p. 276 (Ellis' reprint).

WITTALL, } old English words for a WIT-ALL, } patient cuckold, as if a husband who wits all and is aware of his own disgrace, has been considered a corruption of A. Sax. wittol, knowing, and the word is spelt wittol in Shakespeare, Ford, and the old dramatists (see Nares). Wedgwood, however, holds it to be a corruption of woodwale, wit-wall, wittal, the name of a bird whose nest is often invaded by the cuckoo, and so has the offspring of another palmed off on it as its own, just as the cuckold is one who has been cuckooed, or wronged by a cuckoo (Lat. cuculus), from the old verb to cuckol.

Her happy lord is cuckol'd by Spadil.
Young, Love of Fame, Sat. 6.

Jannin: A wittall; one that knowes, and hears with, or winks at, his wives dishonesty.—Cotgrave.

Cocu cocu, a cuckold, or wittall.—Id.

Mary cocu. The hedge-sparrow; called so, because she hatches, and feeds the Cuckoes young ones, esteeming them her owne.—Id.

The same double entendre belongs to Picard. huyau, a greenfinch, It. becco, Mid. Lat. curruca. (See also Diez, s.v. Cucco; Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 196).

Sylvester uses cuckoo for an adulterer:—

What should I doo with such a wanton Wife,
Which night and day would cruciate my life,
With Jeloux pangs! Sith every way shee sets
Her borrow'd snares (not her owne hairs) for Nets
To catch her Cuckoos.

Du Bartas, 1621, p. 498.

The same poet calls the cuckoo—

Th' infamous bird that layes
His bastard eggs within the nests of other,
To have them hatcht by an unkindly Mother.
Fond wit-wal that wouldst load thy witless
head
With timely horns, before thy bridal bed.
Hall, Satires, bk. i. sat. 7.

Singer's note on this passage is:—

A Saxon word from witan, to know, or, as Philips says in his World of Words, "Wittall, a cuckold that wits all, i.e. knows all, i.e. knows that he is so." . . . I find Skelton spells this word wit-wold.

Or is it treason

For me, that am a subject, to endeavour
To save the honour of the duke, and that
He should not be a wittol on record?

Massinger, Duke of Milan, act iv. sc. 3.

What though I called thee old ox, egregious wittol, broken-bellied coward, rotten mummy?—Webster, The Malcontent, i. 1.

Wittol!—Cuckold! The devil himself hath not such a name.—Shakespeare, The Merry Wives of Windsor, act ii. sc. 2, sub fin.

You must know that all infidelity is not of the senses. We have as well intellectual as material wittols. These, whom you see decorated with the order of the book are triflers, who encourage about their wives' presence the society of your men of genius.—C. Lamb, Works, p. 670 (Routledge ed.).

Of Wittoll.

Well, let them laugh hereat that list and scoffe it

But thou dost find what makes most for thy profit.

Harington, Epigrams, bk. i. 94.

Against a Wittoll Broker that set his wife to sale.

Id. Epigram 72.

Their young neighbour was wronged, and dishonestly abused, through his kind simplicity. Wherevppon this honest man was dubbed amongst them a wittoll.—Tell-Trothes New-Yeaes Gift, 1593, p. 13 (Shaks. Soc.)

A adulterate law, and you prepare the way, Like wittals, th' issue your owne ruine is.

Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 144.

There was no peeping hole to clear, The wittall's eye from his incarnate fear.

Quarles, Emblems, bk. i. 5.

WIT-WALL, an old name for the woodpecker, is a corruption of wodewale. See WOODWALL.

Lorion, The bird called a Wittwall, Yellowbeake, Hickway.—Cotgrave.

WOMAN, the modern spelling of old Eng. wiman, wimman, or wimmann, from A. Sax. wif-mann, that is, the wife or feminine member of the genus homo, man. Compare leman or lemman, a sweetheart, from old Eng. leof-man, i.e. a lief or dear person. Wif is perhaps from an A. Sax. verb wifan, to join or weave, as if one who is joined or "knit together" with another, akin to wefan, to weave (Ettmüller, p. 183; cf. Lat. con-jūw).

It was euere the quene tho3t, so muche so heo mi3te thenche,
Mid conseil, other mid sonde, other mid wimman wrenche.

Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 535.

Wymon war & wys,
of prude hue bereþ þe pris,
burde on of þe best.

Bödeker, Alt. Eng. Dichtungen, p. 150, l. 36.

[Woman wary and wise of prettyness she beareth the prize, bride one of the best.]

Misled by the present incorrect orthography, some have thought, Skinner and Mr. Wedgwood among the number, that woman derives her name in English from her physical conformation, as if she had been regarded in primitive times as being distinctively the "womb-man" (q. d. homo uterata), adducing in attestation Fin. waimo, a woman; Sansk. vâma, (1) udder, (2) woman, cognate with Goth. vamba, Icel. vömb, Scot. wame, Eng. womb. So Samuel Purchas says of woman:—

The Place of her making was Paradise; the matter (not Dust of the Earth, but) the Ribbe of her Husband, a harder and heartier part; the Forme, not a forming (as is said of Adam), but a building, not a Potters vessell formed, but a House builded for generation and gestation, whence our language calls her Woman, quasi Womb-Man.—Microcosmus, 1619, p. 473.

It should indeed be written womb-man, for so it is of antiquity and rightly, the b. for easinesse and readinesse of sound being in the Pronunciation left out; and how apt a composed word this is, is plainly seene. And as Homo in Latin doth signifie both man, and woman, so in our tongue the feminine also hath as we see, the name of man, but more aptly in that it is for due distinction composed with wombe, shee being that kind of man that is wombed, or hath the womb of conception, which the man of the male kind hath not.—Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, p. 193.

We certainly meet other names for the female sex having a similar connotation, e.g. old and provincial English mauther or mother, a girl, beside moder, the womb; old Eng. mother, as in Lear, ii. 4:—

O, how this mother swells up toward my heart!

Hysterica passio!

Queenan, Dan. quind, Swed. quinna, Gk. gunê, Ir. coine, a woman, beside Lat. cunnius (used also by Horace for a girl), O. Eng. queint, all from the root jam, "to bring forth;" Heb. racham, (1) the womb, (2) a girl or woman.

The word womb, however, was formerly, like the Scotch wame, used in the most general way for the abdomen, and was not peculiarly applicable to women. Most modern philologists see in wifman, A. Sax. wif, Icel. wif, Ger. weib, a derivative of the root wé, vap, to weave, Icel. vefa, being so named from her chief occupation in primitive times. "The wife should weave her own apparel," says Clement of Alexandria, referring to Prov. xxxi. 19. Compare the words spinster, spindle-side, Fr. fuseau, "a spindle, also the feminine line" (Cotgrave); quenouille, a "distaffe, also the feminine line in a succession" (Id.); opposed to the spear-side, Fr. lance, "a lance, also the masculine line in a pedigree" (Id.); A. Sax. wæpman, "He worhte wæp-mann and wif-mann," A. S. version Matt. xix. 4, = He made them male and female. See also Pauli, Life of Alfred, p. 225 (ed. Bohn).

Some popular etymologists have ungallantly, but with curious unanimity, resolved the word into woe-man. Compare the note to MOILLERE.

What he they? women? masking in mens weedes?

With dutchkin dublets, and with Jerkins iagge?

With Spanish spangs, and ruffles set out of France,

With high copt hattes, and fethers flaunt a flaunt?

They be so sure euen VVo to men indede.
Gascoigne, Steele Glas, 1576, p. 83 (ed. Arber).

Thus women, woe of men, though wooed by men,

Still adde new matter to my plaintife pen.
Tom Tel-Troths Message, 1593, l. 660 (Shaks. Soc.).

The inviter. It is a woman, "she saith to him;" but that name is too good, for she hath recovered her credit: a woman, as she brought woe to man, so she brought forth a weal to man.—T. Adams, The Fatal Bunquet, Sermons, vol. i. p. 160.

Look at the very name—Woman, evidently meaning either man's woe—or abbreviated from woe to man, because by woman was woe brought into the world.—Southey, The Doctor, p. 558.

WONDER is given in Wright's Provincial Dictionary as a Stafford word for the afternoon. It is evidently a corrupt form of the old English undern, or "between time." See ORN-DINNER.

An husbounde man went into his gardeyn, or vineyarde, at prime, and ayen at undren or mydday.—Liber Festivialis, 1495 [in Wright].

WONDERS, a Cornish word for a tingling in the extremities produced by cold, also called gwenders, which was perhaps the original term, and of old Cornish extraction. The latter is also the Devonshire word. We may compare Welsh gwyndraw, numbness, stupor, and perhaps gwander, weakness, debility, from gwan, weak, akin to Lat. vanus, as W. gwener = Lat. Venus, and W. gwennol, Corn. guennol, a swallow = Lat. vanellus.

I have the gwenders in my fingers.

I have the wonders for the first time this winter.—M. A. Courtney, W. Cornwall Glossary, E. D. Soc.

WOOD-ROOF, a plant, asperula odorata, is said to be a corruption of wood-reeve (the overseer of the wood). The German name of it is Waldmeister, the master of the wood (Blackley, Word Gossip, p. 140). But the old Eng. names of it are woodroofe, woodrouwe, woodrowell (Gerarde, p. 966), and wode-roue, A. Sax. wudurôfe.

When woderoue springep.

Bödeker, Alt. Eng. Dicht. p. 164, l. 9.

WOOD-SPITE, } provincial names for WOOD-SPACK, } the woodpecker, are WOOD-SPRITE, } corruptions of the old English name specht or speight, Ger. specht, Dan. spætte.

Eue, walking forth about the Forrests, gathers Speights, Parrots, Peacocks, Estrich scattered feathers.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 222, fol. 1621.

Picchio, a wood pecker, a tree iobber, a hickway, a iobber, a spight.—Florio.

Wood-sprite, a woodpecker.—Suffolk (E. Dialect Soc. Reprint B. 21).

WOODWALL, a provincial name for the woodpecker, corrupted from Dut. weede-wael, the first part of the word, according to Wedgwood, expressing the weed or wood-like colour of the bird.

Pito, a bird called a wood-wall.—Minsheu, Spanish Dict. 1623.

See WITWALL.

The Percy Folio MS. has the peculiar spellings woodhall and woodweete:—

Early in that May morning, merrily when the burds can sing,
the throstlecock, the Nightingale,
the laueracke & the wild wood-hall.

Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 383, l. 922.

The woodwete sang & wold not cease
Amongst the leaues a lyne.

Percy Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 228, l. 5.

WOOL FIRE, a provincial word for a cutaneous eruption (? erysipelas), and for wild fire (Antrim and Down Glossary, Patterson), of which latter word it is a corruption.

WOOL, a nautical term, to wind a rope round a mast or spar, sometimes written woold, is from Dutch woelen, to wind about with a cord (Sewel), with which Wedgwood compares Fris. wol-lin, Swiss willen, to wrap round, and Northampton wooddled, wrapped up, muffled. The original meaning is to roll about, the word being akin to O. H. Ger. wuolan, Swed. vula, Dan. vule, Goth. valvjan, to roll (Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, i. 181).

WORLD, A. Sax. worold, weorold, has often been regarded, in accordance with its present corrupt orthography, as meaning that which is whorl'd or whirl'd around in its orbit, or upon its axis (so Eng. Synonyms, p. 137, ed. Abp. Whately). Its more correct form would be werld, A. Sax. werold, i.e. wer, a man (Goth. vairs), + eld, an age, and so denotes the number of men alive at one time, an age or generation, virorum ætas, sæculum. The Northampton folk still use the word for a long space of time, e.g. "It 'll be a world afore he's back" (Sternberg), and such is also its meaning in the doxology, "world without end," A. Sax. "on worulda woruld," Lat. in secula seculorum.

Behold the World, how it is whirled round, And for it is so whirl'd, is named so ;

* * * *

For your quicke eyes in wandring too and fro,

From East to West, on no one thing can glance,

But if you marke it well, it seemes to daunce.

Sir J. Davies, Orchestra, 1596, st. 34.

The cognate forms are Dut. wereld, waereld, Icel. ver-öld, Swed. wärld, O. H. Ger. wer-alt.

Eornfulness ðisse worulde . . forþrysmiaþ ðæt wurd.—A. Sax. Version, S. Matt. xiii. 22.

[Care of this world . . . choketh the word.]

And groundes of ertheli werlde vnhiLED are.

Northumbrian Psalter, Ps. xiv. 16.

Nought helde sal in werld of werld þis.

Id. Ps. ciii. 5.

And he gu wolde wissin,

Of wi[s]liche þinges,

Gu we migtin in werelde

wrsipe weldin.

Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 105, l. 33.

[And he would teach you about wise things, how ye might in the world attain honour.]

Tak we our biginning þan,

Of him þat al . þis werld bigan.

Cursor Mundi, l. 270 (E.E.T.S.).

The following seems to connect the word with old Eng. were, ware, confusion, trouble:—

ðe se is eure wagiende . . and hitocneð þe abroidene bureh þat is in swo wartliche stede; . . . þat is þis wrecche wored, þat eure is wagiende noht fro stede to stede, ac fro time to time.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 175.

[The sea is ever waving, and betokens the ruinous city that is in so troublous a place, that is this wretched world that is ever waving, not from place to place, but from time to time.]

An ancient folks-etymology analyzed wereld into wer elde, worse age:—

þarfor þe world, þat clerkes sees þus helde,
Es als mykel to say als þe wer elde.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1479.

But when the world woxe old, it woxe warre old,

(Whereof it hight) and, having shortly tride
The traines of wit, in wickednesse woxe bold,
And dared of all sinnes the secrets to unfold.

Spenser, The Faerie Queene, IV. viii. 31.

Similar is Ascham's derivation of war from old Eng. weor (Scot. waaur), worse:—

There is nothing worse then war, whereof it taketh his name, through the which great men be in daunger, meane men without succoure, ryche men in feare.—Taxophilus, 1545, p. 62 (ed. Arber).

WOULD TO GOD is perhaps a corruption of the old idiom "wolde God," which, with the final e pronounced, as was usual, sounds very similar, "wold-e-God." Mr. E. A. Abbott says:—

Possibly this phrase may be nothing but a corruption of the more correct idiom, "Would God that," which is more common in our version of the Bible than "I would." The "to" may be a remnant and corruption of the inflection of "would," "wolde," and the I may have been added for the supposed necessity of a nominative. Thus,

"Now wolde God that I might sleeper ever."

Chaucer, Monk's Tale, 14746.

This theory is rendered the more probable, because, as a rule, in Wickliffe's version of the Old Testament, "wolde God" is found in the older MSS., and is altered into "we wolden" in the latter. Thus Genesis xvi. 3; Numbers xx. 3; Joshua vii. 7; Judges ix. 29; 2 Kings v. 3 (Forshall and Madden, 1850). However Chaucer has "I hoped to God" repeatedly.—Shakespearean Grammar, p. 126.

Ne woldi God never betwix us tweine

As in my gilt, were either werre or strif.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 11068.

Woulde god [they] were rather in suertie with me, then I wer there in iuhardy with the.—Sir T. More, Works, 1557, p. 49 f.

Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets.—A. V. Numb. xi. 29.

I would to God some scholar would conjure her.

Shakespeare, Much Ado, ii. 1.

Would to God we had been content.—A. V. Josh. vii. 7.

WORM-WOOD, so spelt as if it denoted the bitter wood which is a specific for worms when taken as a medicine.

Hoc absinthium, wormwood.—Wright's Vocabularies (15th cent.), i. 226.

It is a corruption of old Eng. wer-mode, A. Sax. wermod (Ger. wer-muth), supposed by Dr. Prior (Names of Brit. Plants) to be compounded of A. Sax. werian, to keep off (wehren), and mod or mæde, a maggot (A. Sax. mæðu), as if "ware-maggot." In Leechdoms, Wort-cunning, &c., it is said of wermod that "hyt cwelþ þa wyrmas" (vol. i. p. 218), where it is interpreted by Mr. Cockayne as "ware-moth."

The true meaning of the word has been for the first time unravelled by Prof. Skeat. He points out that the proper division of the word is A. Sax. wer-mód, Dut. wer-moet, Ger. wer-muth, M. H. Ger. wer-muote, O. H. Ger. wera-môte, where the first element is A. Sax. warian, to protect, defend (O. Dut. weren, &c.), and the latter A. Sax. mód, mind or mood (O. Dut. moedt, Ger. muth, M. H. G. muot). Thus the compound means "ware-mood," or "mind-preserver," and points back to some primitive belief as to the curative properties of the plant in mental affections. Compare wéde-berge, "preservative against madness," an A. Sax. name for hellebore. Thus the form worm-wood is doubly corrupt. The Professor is not quite correct in adding that "we find no mention of the plant being used in the way indicated;" see the quotations from Burton.

But the last things ben bittir as wormod, and hir tunge is scharp as a swerd keruyng on ech side.—Wycliffe, Prov. v. 4.

The name of the sterre is seid warmed.—Wycliffe, Rev. viii. 11.

The name of the starre is called wormwod.—Tyndale, ibid.

Warmot is wormewood.—Gerarde, Supplement to the General Table.

Nature and his Parents alike dandle him, and tice him on with a bait of Sugar, to a draught of Worme wood.—John Earle, Micro-cosmographie, 1628, p. 21 (ed. Arber).

Agsine, Wormwood voideth away the wormes of the guts, not onely taken inwardly, but applied outwardly: . . . it keepeth garments also from the Mothes, it driueth away gnats, the bodie being anointed with the oyle thereof.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 938.

The herbe with his stalkes laid in chestes, presses, and wardrobs, keepeth clothes from mothes, and other vermine.—Id. p. 941.

This Wormwood called Sementina & Semen sanctum, which we haue Englished Holie is that kinde of Wormwood which beareth that seede which we haue in use, called Worm-seede.—Id. p. 941.

An enemy it [Wormwood] is to the Stomacke: howbeit the belly it loosneth, and chaseth worms out of the guts; for which purpose, it is good to drink it with oile and salt.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 277.

Wormwood, centaury, pennyroyall, are likewise magnified, and much prescribed (as I shall after shew) especially in hypochondriack melancholy, daily to be used, sod in whey: as Rufus Ephesius, Aretæus, relate, by breaking winde, helping concoction, many melancholy [= mad] men have been cured with the frequent use of them alone.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, Pt. II. sec. 4. Mem. i. subs. 3.

The wines ordinarily used to this disease are worme-wood-wine, tamarisk, and buglossatum.—Id. II. 4. i. 5.

Also conserves of wormwood.—Ibid.

WOUND, in the phrase "he wound his horn" or "bugle," frequently used as the past tense of to wind, meaning to blow, is an incorrect form for winded, from the verb wind, to give wind or breath to (Lat. ventilare), and so to sound by blowing. This word was evidently confounded with wind, to twist or turn (A. Sax. windan, Goth. vindan), with some reference to the convolutions of the instrument through which the air is made to pass. Somewhat similarly a pig's snout is said sometimes to be rung instead of ringed, i.e. furnished with a ring, from a confusion with the verb ring (rang, rung), to sound a bell.

But stay advent'rous muse, hast thou the force,

To wind the twisted horn, to guide the horse?
J. Gay, Rural Sports, l. 388.

"To wind" is to sound by "windy suspiration of forced breath."

When Robin Hood came into merry Sherwood,

He winded his bugle so clear.

A New Ballad of bold Robin Hood, l. 98
(Child's Ballads, v. 347; Ritson, Robin Hood, ii. 1).

Here the rude clamour of the sportsman's joy,
The gun fast-thundering, and the winded horn,
Would tempt the Muse to sing the rural game.

Thomson, Seasons, Autumn.

That I will have a recheat winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick, all women shall pardon me.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, act i. sc. 1, l. 244.

It will make the huntsman hunt the fox,

That never wound his horn;

It will bring the tinker to the stocks,

That people may him scorn.

Sir John Barleycorn, Ballads, &c. of the Peasantry, p. 81 (ed. Bell).

Tennyson has the line—

Thither he made and wound the gateway horn.

Idylls of the King, Elaine, l. 169
(p. 156, ed. 1859)—

but in later editions, e.g. 1878, Works, p. 446, I find this has been altered into “blew.”

Loudly the Beattison laugh'd in scorn;
“Little care we for thy winded horn.”

Scott, The Lay of the Last Minstrel, canto iv. 12.

But scarce again his horn he wound,
When lo! forth starting at the sound,

* * * * *

A little skiff shot to the bay.

Scott, The Lady of the Lake, canto i. 17.

With huntera who wound their horns.—
Pennant [in Richardson].

The horn was wound to celebrate certain dishes.—J. C. Jeaffreson, Book about the Tuhle, vol. i. p. 228.

Compare :—

If ev'ry tale of love,

Or love itself, or fool-bewitching beauty,
Make me cross-arm myself, study ah-mea,

. . . and dry my liver up,

With sighs enough to wind an argosy,

If ever I turn thus fantaatical,

Love plague me.

T. Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange, p. 18 (Shaka. Soc.).

WRANG-LANDS, a North country word for low stumpy trees growing on mountainous ground (Wright), as if wrong (i.e. bad) lands growth, is without doubt the same word as O. Eng. wraglands.

Raboudris, Wraglands, crooked or misgowne trees which will never prove timber.

Rabougrir, to grow crooked, and low withall; to wax mishapen, or imperfect of shape, to become a wragland, or grub.—Cotgrave.

Wragland itself is a corrupted form of wraglin', Prov. and old Eng. wreckling, Prov. Dan. wreçling, a dwarfish, ill-grown, or deformed person or thing, probably akin to O. Eng. wrick, Fris. wrecken, to twist, “wring,” &c.

WRANG NAYLE, “otherwyse callyd a Corne” (Political, Religious, and Love Poems, E. E. T. Soc. p. 36), so spelt as if to denote a “wrong nail,” is no doubt one of the many corruptions of agnail, agnel, angnail, hangnail, angernail, denoting sometimes a corn, sometimes a paronychia.

WRAPPED, } a mistaken orthography
WRAPT, } of rapt, carried away by enthusiasm or strong emotion, ravished, Lat. raptus, from rapiō, to carry away, e.g.—

The Patriarch, then rapt with sudden Joy,
Made answer thus.

Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 325 (1621).

Wrapt about apprehension.

The Faithful Friends, iii. 3.

His noble limmes in such proportion cast
As would have wrapt a sillie woman's thought.
Ferrex and Porrex.

She ought to be Sainted whilst on Earth, and when wrapped up into the brighter Mansions, far above this lower world, be Enthroned a Goddess.—The Coronation of Queen Elizabeth, 1680, act i. sc. 3.

Some editions (e.g. Ayscough's) read wrapped for rapt in the following passage :—

The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rapt in secret studie.

Shakespeare, The Tempest, act i. sc. 2,
l. 77 (Globe ed.).

Thus al dismayde, and wrapt in feare,
With doutfull mynde they stande.

B. Googe, Eglogs, 1563, p. 71
(ed. Arber).

Instead of orient pearls of jet,

I sent my love a carkanet,
About her spotlesse neck ahe knit

The lace, to honour me, or it :

Then think how wrapt was I to see

My jet t' enthral such poirie.

Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, p. 11
(ed. Hazlitt).

Wrapt in these sanguine and joyous reveries Glyndon . . . found himself amidst cultivated fields.—Bulwer-Lytton, Zanoni, bk. iv. ch. 6.

The disciples feared as they entered into the cloud, because they were not in a wrapt ecstatic state, but were dull and weary and heavy with sleep.—H. Macmillan, Sabbath of the Fields, p. 78.

Science standing wrapt in perplexity and astonishment before the mysteries of the origin of matter.—Samuel Cox, Expository Essays, p. 234.

He was . . . like a bahe new born wrapt

in swadling clouts, rather than like one in a winding sheet. But when he walk'd without the use of feet or hands, he was like Paul wrapt up into the third heavens.—Bp. Hacket, Century of Sermons, 1675, p. 573.

The eres herde not, for the mynde inward
Venus had rapt and taken fervently.

S. Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, p. 59
(Percy Soc.).

The four last verses are the celebration of his recovery, which shew him in holiness as it were rapt into heaven, and singing with the saints for joy.—H. Smith, Sermons, p. 180 (1637).

Being filld with furious insolence,
I feele my selfe like one grapt in spright!
Spenser, Colin Clouts Come Home Againe
(p. 555, Globe ed.).

Sylvester speaks of—

Divine accents tuning rarely right
Unto the rapping spirit the rapted spright.
Du Bartas, p. 302 (1621).

They bear witness to his [Walsh's] rapt and ecstasies.—Southey, Life of Wesley, vol. ii. p. 123 (1858).

It was customary formerly to prefix w to many words that had no etymological right to that letter. See WHOLE.

WREATH, in the Scotch and N. English "snow-wreath," a snow-storm, or drift, sometimes written wride, is a corrupted form of A. Sax. hrīð, Icel. hríð, a tempest, especially a snow-storm. Or perhaps it meant originally a collection or gathering of snow; compare A. Sax. wræd, wræð, a flock, Goth. writhus, a herd (Scot. wreath, an enclosure for cattle).

As wreath of snow, on mountain breast,
Slides from the rock that gave it rest,
Poor Ellen glided from her stay.

Scott, The Lady of the Lake.

The valley to a shining mountain swells,
Tipp'd with a wreath high-curling in the sky.
Thomson, Seasons, Winter.

There, warm together press'd, the trooping deer,

Sleep on the new-fallen snows; and scarce
his head

Raised o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk,

Lies slumbering sullen in the white abyss.
Thomson, Winter.

I'm wearin' awa', John,
Like snaw-wreaths in thaw, John,
I'm wearin' awa'.

Lady Niirn, Land o' the Leal.

WRETCHLESSNESS, a corruption of recklessness, the older form of recklessness, as if connected with wreck and wretch.

The Devil doth thrust them either into desperation, or into wretchlessness of most unclean living.—Prayer Book, Article xvii.

Lesing cometh of rechelesnes.

Chaucer, Parsons Tale.

They are such retchless flies as you are, that blow cutpurses abroad in every corner.—B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iii. 1.

He came not there, but God knowes where
This retchlesse Wit is run.

The Mariage of Witt and Wisdome, p. 54
(Shaks. Soc. ed.).

If thou hadst neuer felt no ioy, thy smart had bene the lesse,
And retchlesse of his life, he gan both sighe
and grone,
A ruffull thing me thought, it was, to hear him make such mone.

Tottel's Miscellany, 1557, p. 17
(ed. Arber).

The wandring gadling, in the sommer
tyde,
That findes the Adder with his rechlesse
foote,

Startes not dismayd so sodeinly aside.

Tottel's Miscellany, 1557, p. 41
(ed. Arber).

Nothing takes a man off more from his credit and businesse, and makes him more retchlessly carelesse, what becomes of all.—John Earle, Micro-cosmographie, 1628, A Drunkard.

I hold it a great disputable question, which is a more euill man, of him that is an idle glutton at home, or a retchlesse vnthrif abroad?—Nash, Pierce Penilesse, p. 57
(Shaks. Soc.).

The retchlesse race of youth's inconstant course,
Which weeping age with sorrowing teares
beholds;

* * * * *

Hath reard my muse, whose springs wan care had dried,

To warne them flie the dangers I haue tried.
Thos. Lloyd, Inconstancy of Youth (Sel.

Poetry, ii. 415, Parker Soc.).

A retcheles seruant, a mistres that scowles,
a rauening mastife, and hogs that eate fowles.
Tusser, 1580 (E. D. Soc.), p. 21.

Call . . . him true and plaine,
That rayleth rechlesse vnto ech mans shame.

Sir T. Wiat, Satire II. l. 71 (ab. 1540).

3if it so bifalle that any of the brotherhede falle in pouerte, or be anyentised thurw3 elde; . . . or any other hap, so it be nat on hym-selue alonge, ne thurw3, his owne wrechchednesse, he schal haue, in þe wyke.
xiiij.d.—English Gilds, p. 9 (E.E.T.S.).

Similarly Spenser has wreaked for recked—

What wreaked I of wintry ages waste?
Shepherd's Kalender (1579), De- cember, l. 29.

Compare WHORE.

WRIGHT, a workman, is a transposed form, for the sake of euphony, or by assimilation to wight, knight, &c., of wirght or wirht, A. Sax. wyrhta, a worker, which is pretty much the same as if we used wrok for work, or as we do actually use wrought (A. Sax. wrohete) as the past tense of work (A. Sax. wyrcan), instead of worht (A. Sax. worhte). Compare old Eng. wrim for worm (A. Sax. wyrm); old Eng. brid, a bird; cræt, a cart; gærs, "grass;" task, another form of (taks) tax; æ of ask; wasp, Prov. Eng. wops; hæsp and haps, &c. As further instances of words popularly metamorphosed by metathesis compare Leicestershire channils for challenge; conolize for colonize; crud, cruddle, for curd, curdle; apern for apron; starnil for starling; throff for froth; waps for wasp; thrupp for thorp; Thooks'n for Thurcaston (Evans, Glossary, p. 8, E.D.S.). See BURNISH and DUCK of the Evening, above.

First in his witte he all purueid,
His werc, als dos þe sotill wright.

Cursor Mundi, l. 325 (E.E.T.S.).

þe wrightes þat þe timber wrought
A mekill balk þam bud haue ane.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 79, l. 617.

Of a wryght I wyll you telle,
That some tyme in thys land gan dwelle.

The Wright's Chaste Wife, l. 11

(E. E. T. S.)

WRINKLE, in the colloquial phrase "to give one a wrinkle," i.e. a useful hint, to put one up to a dodge, as if the result of old experience symbolized by its outward manifestation (ruga), is in all probability a corruption of the old English wrence, wrink, a dodge (see Oliphant, Old and Mid. English, p. 77), Scot. wrink, a trick, also a winding; properly a crooked proceeding, a deceit, or stratagem, with a quasi-diminutival form like syllable for syllabé. Cf. Dan. rænke, Icel. hrækkr, a trick, Ger. rank, ränke.

þis heie sacrament . . . ouer alle oðer þinges unwrihð his wrenches [unmasks his artifices].—The Ancren Riwele (ab. 1225), p. 270 (Camden Soc.).

Harald þat euere was of luþer wrenche.

Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, ab. 1298.

His wizeles & his wrenches þet he us mide assailed, do ham alle o vluhte.—Ancren Riwele, p. 300.

[His wiles and artifices that he assailed us with all take them to flight.]

In the houre of ded the denill wyll cast mony wrenkis of falsait the quhilk suld nocht be trowyt.—Ratis Raving, p. 3, l. 60
(E.E.T.S.).

Sa quaynt and crafti mad thou itte,
That al bestes er red for man
Sa mani wyle and wrenk he can.

Eng. Metrical Homilies, p. 2 (ed. Small).

Many men þe world here fraystes,
Bot he es nocht wyse þat þar-in traistes;
For it ledes a man with wrenkes and wyles,
And at the last it hym begyles.

Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1361.

I schal wayte to be war her wrenche 3 to kepe.

Alliterative Poems, p. 45, l. 292.

þam thare drede no wrenkis ne no wyllis of the fende, for why God es with þame, and standis aye by þame als a trewe kepere and a strange ane.—Religious Pieces, p. 51
(E.E.T.S.).

Als lang as I did heir the freiris style,
In me, god wait, wes mony wrink and wyle.

W. Dunbar, Poems, 1503 (ed. Laing).

All the above words seem to be near akin to Goth. wruggo (= wrungo), a snare or net, A. Sax. wringam, to twist or wring (Diefenbach, i. 237).

You note me to be . . . so simple, so plain, and so far without all wrinkles.—
Lutimer, ii. 422 [Davies].

Miss. I never heard that.

Nev. Why then Miss, you have one wrinkle; more than ever you had before.
Swift, Polite Conversation, Conv. i. [Davies].

He has had experience of most kinds of known and of several sorts of, to us, unknown angling. He is thus able to describe "wrinkles" of a strangely sagacious character.—Sat. Review, vol. 51, p. 465.

For the assimilation compare the following, where the farmer's recent experiences are referred to:—

Every fresh figure in the Entomologists' Report is apt to print another wrinkle on his now sufficiently dismal face.—The Standard,
Jan. 18, 1882.

WURSE, an old Eng. name for the devil, appears to be the same word as worse, A. Sax. wyrsa, comparative of weorr, bad, perverse, just as he was also called "The Ill."

Thu farest so doth the ille,

Evrich blisse him is un-wille.

Owl and Nightingale, l. 422.

It is really, perhaps, only an altered form of A. Sax. byrs, Prov. Eng. thurse, a hobgoblin, spectre, or giant, the character for w and the thorn letter þ being easily confounded. Compare whittle for thwytel, white, to cut, for thwite.

Thyrce, wykkyd spyryte, Ducins.—Prompt. Parv.
Thykke theese as a thursse, and thikkere in the hanche.

Morte Arthure, l. 1100.

Stedefast to-genes god and men, alse Ioh was, þe wan wið þe wurse.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 187 (ed. Morris).

[Stedefast towards God and men, as Job was that fought against the devil.]

Neddre smuhgð diðeliche, swo doð þe wurse.—Id. p. 191.

[The adder creepeth secretly, so doth the devil.]

Wycliffe has worst for the devil,

Quenche alle the firi dartis of the worst.—Eph. vi. 16.

Wurse survives in a slightly altered form in Dorset oose (and ooser), a mask with opening jaws to frighten folk (Barnes, Glossary, p. 73). The loss of initial w occurs similarly in oose, for old Eng. wose (A. Sax. wós, N. Eng. weeze); old Eng. oof (Prompt. Parv.), for woof; oathe, mad (Id.), for woode; orchard for wortyard; and oad for woad, e.g.—

The stains of sin I see
Are oaded all, or dy'd in grain.
Quarles, School of the Heart, ode xvii.

Y.

YELLOW-PLASTER, a vulgar corruption of alabaster, as if "yellow-plaster," yellow being the Lincolnshire and common Irish pronunciation of yellow (cf. ALL-PLASTER). Alablaster is the Lincolnshire form of the word (Peacock, Brogden), which is found also in old writers, e.g.—

Poire de Sertean, the Allablaster Pear.—Cutgrave.

Yt ys nuwe frest and gyld, and ys armes gyllt, with the pyctur all in aleblaster lynng in ys armur gyllt.—Machyn, Diary, 1562, p. 235 (Camden Soc.).

YARK-ROD, a Lincolnshire name for the plant senecio, as if jerk-rod, yark being the form of "jerk" in that dialect, is apparently a corruption (by metathesis) of its ordinary name ragwort. Yack-yar, in the same county, the name of a plant, seems to be for ac-yarb, "oak-herb."

YELLOW-HAMMER has been supposed to have its name from its hammer-like

Beating for ever on one key
Pleased with his own monotony.

F. W. Faber, for example, thus describes the bird:—

Away he goes, and hammers still Without a rule but his free will,
A little gandy Elf!
And there he is within the rain,
And beats and beats his tune again,
Quite happy in himself.

Poems, 2nd ed. p. 454.

It is said to be a corruption of yellow-ammer, ammer in German signifying a bunting. Compare A. Sax. amora, a bird-name (Ettmüller, p. 10).

YELLOWS. This, when used as synonymous with jealousy (Wright), is perhaps only a conscious and playful perversion of that word. Yellow, as vulgarly, and perhaps anciently, pronounced yellow, differs but slightly from the French jaloux, jealous, and y often interchanges with j. Compare jade and Scot. yade, O. Eng. yawd; jerk, Scot. and O. Eng. yerk; yeomen, O. Eng. jemen (Bailey); yawl and jolly-boat; yoke, Ger. joch; young, Ger. jung, &c.

But for his yellows

Let me but lye with you, and let him know it,
His jealousy is gone.

Brome's Antipodes [in Nares].

Shakespeare similarly uses yellowness for jealousy:—

I will possess him with yellowness, for the revolt of mien is dangerous.—Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 3.

Civil as an orange, and something of that jealous complexion.—Much Ado about Nothing, i. 1.

Jealous would appear to have been at one time pronounced as a French word. Thus Sylvester asks—

What should I doo with such a wanton wife,
Which night and day would cruciate my life
With Ieloux pang?

Du Bartas, p. 498 (1621).

In W. Cornwall jallishy and jaller are used for yellow (M. A. Courtney, E. D. Soc.).

Hating all schollers for his sake, till at length he began to suspect, and turne a little yellow, as well he might; for it was his owne fault; and if men be jealous in such cases (as oft it falls out) the meads is in their owne hands.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, III. iii. 1, 2.

The indiscreet carriage of some lascivious gallant . . . may make a breach, and by his over familiarity, if he be inclined to yellowness, colour him quite out.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, III. iii. 1, 2.

In earnest to as jealous piques;
Which th' ancients wisely signify'd
By th' yellow mantuas of the bride.
Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. canto 1.

'Mongst all colours,
No yellow in't, lest she suspect, as he does,
Her children not her husband's.

Shakespeare, The Winter's Tale, act ii.
sc. iii. l. 107.

Hence "to wear yellow breeches" was an old phrase for "to be jealous."

If I were,
The duke (I freely must confess my weakness,
I should wear yellow breeches.

Massinger, The Duke of Milan, iv. 1.

If thy wife will be so bad,
That in such false coine she'll pay thee,

Why therefore

Should'st thou deplore,

Or wear stockings that are yellow?

Roxburgh Ballads, ii. 61 [Davies].

YEOMAN, a free born Englishman living on his own land, old Eng. yoman, yeman, zeman, an able-bodied man (compare "yeoman's service"), has been variously regarded as a derivative of Frisian gæman, a villager or countryman (Wedgwood), = Goth. gawi, country (old Fris. gâ, gô, Dut. gaw, goo, Ger. gau) + manna, man; as a contraction of yongman, youngman; or as another form of old Eng. geman, gemen, a comonomer (Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, 1634, p. 221), A. Sax. gemæne (= Lat. communis), Goth. gaimains, common. Mr. Oliphant identifies it with Scandinavian gæimaðr, an able-bodied fellow (Early and Mid. English, p. 417), maðr = man.

May it not be the same word as goman, a married man, a householder (Verstegan, p. 223), A. Sax. gum-mann (Beowulf), a compound of guma, a man? See GROOM. Grimm connects it with A. Sax. gemana, company, fellowship, Goth. ga-mana, a fellow-man, comrade, companion. Compare old Eng. ymone, together, in concert.

If Verstegan's suggestion were correct, the word would be no compound of man, and should make its plural yeomans. See MUSSULMEN, where it might have been added that Turcoman is from Pers. türkûmân.

For quen he throdod was to yoman,
He was archer wit best of an.

Cursor Mundi, l. 3077 (14th cent.).

& 3epli 3omen þan dede · þe 3ates schette,
& wi3ttli þan went · þe walles forto fende.

William of Pulerne, l. 3650.

[And quickly yeomen then did the gates shut, and nimbly then went the walls for to defend.]

Got3 to my vyne 3emen 3onge & wyrke3 & dot3 þat at 3e moun.

Alliterative Poems, p. 16, l. 536.

[Go to my vineyard, young yeomen, and work and do what ye are able.]

Take xii of thi wyght 3emen,
Well weppynd he thei side.

Robin Hood und the Monk, l. 32 (Child's Ballads, v. 2).

Ther was neuer 3oman in merry Ingland
I lungut so sore to see.

Id. l. 221.

The yoman beheld them gladlie and salued theym beningnely, and they answered nothing but ranne awaie before him.—History of Helyas, ch. xiii. (Thoms' Prose Romances, iii. 57).

þer is gentylnen, 3omon-vssher also,
Two gromes at þe lest, A page þer-to.

Boke of Curtasye, ab. 1430, l. 434
(Babees Book, p. 313).

A yemañ of þe crowne, Sargeaunt of armes with mace,

A herrowd of Armes as gret a dyngte has.
J. Russell, Boke of Nurture, l. 1035.

He made me 3omane at 3ole, and gaf me gret gyftes.

Morte Arthure, l. 2628.

Sir S. D. Scott quotes an instances of yeoman being converted into yongeman, youngeman :—

Any servantes, commonly called youngemen [yeomen in original] or gromes.—Statutes, 33 Hen. VIII. c. x. s. 6.

(See History of British Army, vol. i. pp. 504-507.)

In the Constitutions of King Canute concerning Forests, he orders four "ex mediocribus hominibus, quos Angli Lespegend [read les-þegend, less thanes] nuncupant, Dani vero yoong men vocant," to have the care of the vert and venery (Spelman, Glossarium, 1626, p. 289).

Robyn commaunded his wyght yong men,
Under the grene wood tre,

They shall lay in that same sorte ;

That the Sheryf myghte them se.

Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode, Thyrd Fytte,
l. 208 (ed. Ritson).

[Copland's edition throughout this ballad reads yeomen.]

Juniores pro ingenuis quos yeomen dicimus.—Spelman, Archaeologus, 1626, p. 397.

YESTY, in the following passage of Shakespeare—

Though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up.

Macbeth, iv. 1, 54—

has been generally regarded as meaning "foaming," frothing like yest or yeast (A. Sax. gīst, froth, spuma, Ger. güsch) when it works in beer; as elsewhere he speaks of a ship "swallow'd with yest and froth" (Winter's Tale, iii. 3). It is really, no doubt, the same word as Prov. Eng. yeasty, gusty, stormy.

A little rain would do us good, but we doant want it too oudacious yeasty.—W. D. Parish, Sussex Glossary, p. 131.

This yeasty is the A. Sax. ýstig, stormy (Sommer), from A. Sax. ýst, a storm (Ettmüller, p. 72), which seems to be akin to gust, geysir, gush, Icel. gjósa, to gush, gjóstá, a gust, Prov. Swed. gása, to blow.

And šá was mycel ýst windes geworden.—A. Sax. Vers. Mark iv. 37.

[There was a great storm of wind arisen.]

YEW-LOG, a popular misunderstanding of the word yule-log (Skeat, in Peacock's Glossary of Manley, &c.). Wright gives yew-game, a frolic, for "yule-game."

YOKEL, a country bumpkin, a stupid fellow, a simpleton, so spelt as if it had something to do with a yoke of oxen, and so meant a plough-boy, a rustic. It seems really to be a North country word, and of Scandinavian origin. Compare Banff. yochel (and yocho), a stupid awkward person (Gregor), which is probably the same word as Shetland yuggle, an owl (Edmondston), Dan. ugle, Swed. ugla, Icel. ugla, an owl (A. Sax. úle).

The owl, on account of its unspeculative eyes and portentously solemn demeanour, has often been made a by-word for stupidity. Compare goff, guff, a simpleton, old Eng. gofish, stupid ("Beware of gofisshe peoples spech."—Chaucer, Tro. and Cres. iii. 585), Fr.

gaffe, dull, sottish, It. gofo, gufo, guffo, "an owle, also a simple foole or grosse-pated gull, a minnie patch."—Florio (? Pers. kuf, an owl). Also Sp. loco, stupid, It. locco, a fool, alocco, (1) an owl, (2) a simple gull (Florio), from Lat. ulucus, an owl.

"This wasn't done by a yokel, eh, Duff?" . . . "And translating the word yokel for the benefit of the ladies, I apprehend your meaning to be that this attempt was not made by a countryman?" said Mr. Losberne, with a smile.—Dickens, Oliver Twist, ch. xxxi.

Thou art not altogether the clumsy yokel and the clod I took thee for.—Blackmore, Lorna Doone, ch. xl. [Davies].

YOUNGSTER, a familiar and somewhat contemptuous designation of a young person, so spelt from a mistaken analogy with such words as tapster, punster, spinster, is no doubt a corrupt form of younker, = Ger. junker, from jung-herr, young-sir (originally a title of honour), Belg. jonker, jonkheer, from jong and heer.

I have met with oldster, a fictitious correlative, in the Quarterly Review.

Ein junchérr unde ein ritter sol, hie an sich ouch behüeten wol.

Thomasin, Der Welsche Gast (1216), in M. Müller, Ger. Classics, i. 204.

[A younker and a knight shall Be careful in this too.]

Juniores, liberi domini, Junckheren.—Spelman, Archaeologus, 1626, p. 397.

The King was in an advantageous Posture to give Audience for there was a Parliament then at Rheinsburgh, where all the Younkers met.—Howell, Fam. Letters, bk. i. vi. 4.

Syr, if there be any younkers troubled with idelnesse and loytryng, hauyng neither learnyng, nor willyng handes to labour.—W. Bulleyn, Booke of Simples, p. xxvii. verso.

Now lusty younkers, look within the glass,
And tell me if you can discern your sires.

R. Greene, Friar Bacon und Friar Bungay,
1594 (p. 175).

A knot of yongkers tooke a nap in the fields: one of them laie snorting with his mouth gaping as though he would haue caught flies.—Stanihurst, Description of Ireland, p. 13 (Holinshed, vol. i. 1587).

Pagget, a school-boy, got a sword, and then He vow'd destruction both to birch and men:
Who wou'd not think this yonker fierce to fight?

Herrick, Hesperides, Poems, p. 67
(ed. Hazlitt).

This trull makes youngsters spend their patri-monie

In sauced meates and sugred delicates.

Tom Tel-Troths Message, l. 601 (1593).

The credit of the business, and the stste,
Are things that in a youngster's sense sound great.

Oldham, Satires, p. 223 (ed. Bell).

YOUTH-WORT, a popular name for the plant Drosera rotundiflora, is corrupted from A. Sax. ewð, a flock, and rotian, to rot, it being supposed to bane sheep
(Prior).

It is called in English . . . Youthwoort ;
in the North parts Red rot, because it rotteth sheepe.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1356.

A LIST OF FOREIGN WORDS CORRUPTED BY FALSE DERIVATION OR MISTAKEN ANALOGY.

A.

AAL-BEERE, "eel-berry," a German name for the black-currant (Johannis-beere), is a popular corruption of alant-beere, so called because its flavour resembles that of alant or elecampane (Grimm, Deutsches Wörterbuch, s.v.).

AALRAUPE, the German name of the barbot fish, as if from aal, eel, and raupe, caterpillar, stands for aalruppe, where the latter part of the word is Mid. High Ger. ruppe, Lat. rubeta, and the former probably âl for adel (Andresen, Volksetymologie).

ABAT-TOU, the word for a lean-to or penthouse in the French patois of Liège, as if compounded with tou, a roof, is the same word as Fr. abatue, the spring of an arch, in Wallon a penthouse (Sigart, Dict. du Wallon de Mons, p. 55).

ABDECKER (a flayer), a popular corruption in German of apotheker, an apothecary (Andresen).

ABENDTHEUER, a form of Ger. abentuers sometimes found, as if compounded of abend, evening, and theuer, dear, expensive. The word in both forms is corrupted from Mid. High Ger. âventiure, Fr. aventure, our "adventure," all derived from Mid. Lat. adventura, for the classical eventura (Andresen).

ABERGLAUBE, Ger. word for superstition, seems to be a corruption of ueberglaube.

ABOURSER, in the Wallon patois, to form an abscess, as if from bourse, a purse, a bag, is probably a corruption of the Liège abosé, from abcès, of the same meaning.

ABSEITE, "off-side," a German term for the wing of a building, Low Ger. âfsit, is formed from Mid. High Ger. absite (used only of churches), which is derived from Mid. Lat. absida, which again is from Lat. apsis, Gk. hapsis, an "apse" (Andresen).

ACCIPITER, the Latin name for the hawk, as if from accipere, to take or seize, is, according to Pott, a naturalized form in that language of Sansk. âçupatra, = Gk. ôküpteros, "swift-winged."

Compare Sansk. patrin, the falcon, lit. "the winged," from patra, a wing (Pictet, Origines Indo-Europ. tom. i. p. 465).

ACETUM, vinegar, a name very inappositely given by Pliny (Natural History, bk. xi. ch. 15) to virgin honey, which of itself flows from the combs without pressing, is for aceton, a corruption of Gk. âkoiton, virgin, applied also to honey. (See Forcellini, s.v.)

Another reading is acedon.

The best honey is that, which runneth of it selfe as new Wine and Oile; and called it is Acedon, as a man would say, gotten without care & trauell" [as if from Gk. akédês, uncared for].—Holland, Pliny, tom. i. p. 317.

ACHERÔN, the Greek name of one of the rivers of Hell, as if âchea reôn, the stream of woe, just as kôkutos, another infernal river, was from kôkouô, to lament, has been identified by Mr. Fox Talbot with the Hebrew Acharôn, western, especially applied to the Mediterranean Sea, achôr, the west, because since the sun ends his career in the west, the west was accounted the abode of departed spirits (Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archæology, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 188).

ADERMENNIG, } old German names
ANGERMENNIG, } for the plant agrimony, later odermennig, as if, regardless of sense, compounded of mennig, cinabar, vermilion, with ader (vein), anger (a grassy place), and oder (else), all corruptions of Lat. agrimonia.

ADHALTRAIDHE, Irish for an adulterer, so spelt as if connected with adhall, sin, corruption, is an evident corruption of the English word.

AFFODILL, a German corruption of Lat. and Gk. asphodelus, as if compounded with dille, dill (Andresen).

AGACIN, a popular French word for a corn on the foot, apparently from agacer, to irritate or provoke, is old Fr. agassin (Cotgrave), and is really from agasse, a magpie, Prov. agassa, from O. H. Ger. agulstra, a magpie, whence also Ger. elster, and elster-auge (magpie's eye), a corn (Scheler).

AGNUS CASTUS (Lat.), apparently "chaste lamb," a name of the vitex or chaste-tree. Agnus here was originally a mere transiteration of its Greek name ágnos (ἄγνος), which was confused with the Greek adjective hagnòs (ἁγνός), holy, chaste, and then believed to mean a safeguard of chastity. The old Ger. name schaffmull (given by Gerarde, p. 1202) seems to have originated in a misunderstanding of the meaning of agnus; and so Ger. Keusch-lamm, another name of the Keusch-baum.

Agnus Castus is a singular medicine and remedie for such as woulde willingly liue chaste, for it withstandeth all vnleannes, or desire to the flesh: . . . for which cause it was called castus, that is chaste, cleane and pure.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1202.

The seed of Agnus Castus, if it be taken in drinke, bath a certain rellish or tast of wine.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. ii. 187.

The Greeks, some cal it Lygos others Agnos, i. chast; for that the dames of Athens, during the feast of the goddess Ceres, that were named Thesmophoria, made their pallets and beds with the leanes thereof, to coole the heat of lust, and to keep themselves chast for the time.—Ibid.

AGRAVENTER, Norm. Fr., to overwhelm, is a corrupt form of a-craventer (Prov. crebantar, Fr. crever, Lat. crepare), the g probably owing to some confusion with aggraver, to weigh down, agrever, Lat. gravis (R. Atkinson).

De peres l'agraventent.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 1700.

[They overwhelm him with stones.]

AGUARDIENTE, a Spanish word for brandy, is often misunderstood to be derived from diente, a tooth, as if it meant "toothsome water," a dainty drink. Thus Mr. Ford, an acknowledged authority on all "things of Spain," speaks of a ventorillo, "at which water, bad wine, and brandy, 'aguardiente,' tooth-water, are to be sold."—Gatherings from Spain, p. 184.

The word is really compounded of agua and ardiente, and means "fire-water," strong drink. Aigue-ardentier was used formerly at Geneva to denote a brandy manufacturer (Littré, Supplément).

He first drinks a glass of pure aguardiente to keep the cold out.—H. J. Rose, Untrodden Spain, vol. ii. p. 147.

AIGREFIN. This French word, which seems to claim affinity with aigre and fin, exhibits some curious instances of corruption in its various acceptations. Formerly it denoted a certain money current in France; here it is the Portg. warafim, an East Indian coin, Low Lat. seraphi, from Arab. Pers. ashrafi, a golden coin, derived apparently from ashraf, very illustrious. Aigrefin, a sharper, may be derived ironically from the same word (Devic), but Littré explains it as having been originally aigre fait; Scheler as aigle fin, comparing the form églefín. Again, aigrefin, a species of fish, also called aiglefín, is O. Fr. escléfin (14th century), which is explained by scelfish, and this may be partially the origin (Scheler).

AIGREMOINE, a Fr. plant name, apparently compounded of aigre and moine, is corrupted from Lat. agrimonia, Greek agrēmōnē.

AIGRETTE (Fr.), a heron, an assimilation to aigre, aigret, &c. (from Lat.

acer), of O. H. Ger. heigir, heigro, whence also through old Fr. hairon (It. ag-hirone) our "heron."

AIGUE-MARINE, the French word for a beryl. The first part has no connexion with aigu, as if to intimate its sharp-cut brilliance, but is the old word for water, aigue, from Lat. aqua, and so the aqua marina. Compare aiguayer, to water, and aiguère, a ewer or water-vessel.

AIMANT (Fr.), the loadstone or magnet, old Fr. aimant (Sp. iman), seems to have been mentally associated with aimant, a lover, aimer, to love, as if the Latin adamas, adamantis, whence it is derived, was akin to adamans, adamantis, loving (from ad-amare), with allusion to its never-failing constancy to the North, and attractive influence upon iron. See AYMONT, p. 16.

Loue plai'd a victors part:

The beau'n-lone load-stone drew thy yron hart.

Sir P. Sydney, Arcadia, 1629, p. 87.

AIR (Fr.), mien, deportment, is from old Fr. aire, race, originally nest (from which one was sprung), Lat. area. See AIR, p. 5.

AIRE, in the Wallon patois "su l'aire du soir," towards evening, is properly the edge of the evening, Lat. ora (Sigart).

AITHRION (τὸ αἰθρίον), in Josephus, is a Grecized form of Lat. atrium, the great hall of a Roman house, as if from aithrios, open to the sky, a derivative of aithēr, æther.

AJO Y CEBOLLAS! a whimsical Spanish oath, "Garlic and onions!" Ajo (garlic) was originally the last and accentuated syllable of carajo! (a phallic abjuration of the evil eye), and to this cebollas has been added for the sake of a pun.—Ford, Gatherings from Spain, p. 66.

ALAUDA, a lark, supposed in mediæval times to have derived its name from its singing lauds, "A laude diei nomen sortita est" (Neckam, De Naturis Rerum, cap. lxxviii.), is a Latinized form of a Gallic word. Compare Bret. alc'houeder (? Welsh alaw + adar, music-bird).

ALÉNOIS (Fr.), the garden cress, as if from alène, an awl, a pointed leaf, is a corruption of orlénois (Littré).

ALLIGATOR (Fr.), a Latinization of Sp. el lagarto, the great lizard (Lat. lacertus). Compare old Ger. allegarden (1549).

ALME, Norm. Fr., the soul, Sp. and Pg. alma, are corruptions of anme, amma, Lat. anima, no doubt under the influence of Lat. alma, almus, life-giving (alere, to nourish).—Atkinson.

L'alme tuz jurs viit santz mortalité.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 360.

Alma in verse, in prose the mind,

By Aristotle's pen defined.

Prior, Alma, canto i.

ALMIDON (Sp.), starch, is an assimilation to the many other words in that language beginning with al (Arab. al, the article "the") of Lat. amylum, whence also It. amido, Fr. amidon.

ALOUETTE de la gorge (Fr.), as if "lark of the throat," i.e. "the flap that covers the top of the windpipe" (Cotgrave), is evidently a corruption of luette, the uvula, for uvulette, a dimin. of uvula (It. wola, ugola), itself a dimin. of Lat. uva, a grape (with allusion to its grape-like form). So Languedoc ni-vouletto.

ALTÉRER (Fr.), to make thirsty, is an assimilation to altérer, to change, impair, mar, trouble, of an older form artérier, Low Lat. arteriure. (See Scheler.)

ANCHOVIS, the Dutch form of anchovy, the last syllable being an evident assimilation to visch, pronounced vis, "fish," as if it meant the ancho-fish.

Compare cray-fish (Dr. A. V. W. Bickers).

ANCOLIE (Fr.), a plant name, is an assimilation to melancolie, &c., of old Fr. anquelié, a corruption of Lat. aquilegia, the "water collector" (sc. in its urn-shaped petals); Swed. akleja.

Hence also Ger. aglei through O. H. Ger. agaleia.

ANDOUILLER, and endouiller, Fr. names for the lowest branch of a deer's head (Cotgrave), so spelt as if connected with andouille, endouille, a sausage or pudding, is a corrupt form for antouiller (Eng. antler), from a Low Lat. antocularium, ante-ocularis, i.e. the brow tine which lies above the eyes. Compare Portug. antol-hos, spectacles, Sp. antojos, from ante oculum, "fore-the-eyes." The word has accordingly no connexion with O. H. Ger. andi, the forehead, though that word is akin to Lat. ante.

ANSIMA, an Ital. word for asthma, and ansimare, ansare, to pant, so spelt as if derived from ansio, ansioso, distressed, anxious, Lat. anxius, are corruptions of asima, asma, from Greek ásthma, wheezing, shortness of breath.

ANTIMOINE, the French word for antimony, It. antimonio (q. d. anti-moine, "anti-monk"), perhaps owes its present form to a belief in the story that one Valentine, a German monk, administered the drug to his fellows with the intent of fattening them, but with the result of killing them all off. It is more likely, however, that the story was invented to explain the name. It is told in the Mélanges d'Histoire et de Littérature of Noel d'Argonne (d. 1705).

Mahn thinks that the word may have been corrupted from alithmidum, al being the article in Arabic, and ithmid, the black oxide of antimony (borrowed from Greek stímmi). So Littré and Devic.

APIASTER, the name of a bird that eats bees (Lat. apis), the bee-eater (Lat. apiástra), seems to be compounded with the depreciatory suffix -aster (as in post-aster), in which case it ought to mean something like a miserable bee!

The latter part of the word seems to stand for a lost Latin ester or estor (= esor), an eater, implied by estriæ, a female eater (in Plautus), from edere, to eat.

APOTHEKER, leech or apothecary, an old popular name in Germany given to the fourteen saints (Nothkelfer) who protected the people from disease, as if "healers," is probably a corruption of Apotropæi, "averters," who turn away misfortune (Lat. averrunci).—Hecker, Epidemics of the Mid. Ages, p. 86 (Sydenham Soc.).

APÔTRES (Fr.), "apostles," a marine term for the two pieces of wood applied to the sides of the stem of a ship (Additions to Littré, p. 357), is evidently a corruption of apostis, of the same meaning (in Gattel), from aposter, to appost, place or station, from Low Lat. appositare (der. of apponere).

APPELKOSEN, a popular corruption in Saxony of aprikosen, apricots (Andresen).

APPIRYÛN, a late Hebrew word for homage, a testimony of favour (in canonical Hebrew, a bed of state, Song of Songs, iii. 9), is a corrupted form of the old Pers. âfrina or âfrivana (from fri, to love), which signifies benediction, blessing (Delitzsch, in loc. cit.).

ARCHITECTURA, } Latinized forms ARCHITECTUS, } from the Greek architéktôn, as if connected with tectura, a covering, tectum, a roof or house, tector, a plasterer.

ARCHIVO, } (Sp.), from Lat. archivum,
ARCHIBO, } Gk. archeion, a public building, were curiously misunderstood sometimes; e. g. Minshou defines these words to mean "The Arches," "The Arches court, a treasury of evidences" (Sp. Dict. 1623). Cotgrave explains Fr. Archifs as records, &c., "kept in chests and boxes," seemingly with reference to arche, a coffer or chest (Lat. arca).

ARDHI-CHAUKI, } Arabic names for ARDCHAUKA, } the artichoke, meaning the "earthy-thorny" plant, or "earth-thorn," are merely naturalized forms in that language of It. articiocco (Dozy, Devic).

ARESTATION, a name given to a "station" on the railway in some villages of Hainaut, as if the word meant the place where the train is arrested in its course, s'arrête (Sigart).

ARGOUSIN (Fr.), an overseer of galley slaves, as if connected with L. Lat. argis, a ship, an "argosie," is a corruption of the Sp. alguacil, It. aguzzino, Pg. alguazil, Arab. al-vazir.

ARGUER, a Fr. technical term, to draw gold or silver into wire, has no connexion with the ordinary verb arguer, but is derived from argue, a machine (esp. a wire-drawer's one), another usage of orgue, from Low Lat. organum or organum, a machine or instrument. Of the same origin seems to be Fr. arganeau or organeau, a metal ring.

ARMBRUST (Dutch armbrost), a German word for a cross-bow, as if from arm and brust, the breast, is a corruption of Mid. Lat. arballista, arcuballista, from arcus, a bow, and ballista, a machine for casting (Gk. ballein, to throw). Cf. Fr. arbalite (Diefenbach, i. 72).

ARMET, a French word for a helmet or headpiece, so spelt as if from arme, "armour for the head," is a corrupt form of almet, Sp. almete, for elmete, old Fr. healmet, "helmet," a diminutive of healme, halme, a helm (Diez, Scheler). Compare Fr. almoire and armoire; Languedoc arme, the soul (Cotgrave), It. alma. The origin is Goth. hilmis, a helmet, Icel. hjálmr.

ARQUEMIE (old Fr.), and Mod. Greek archēmia, alchemy, are corruptions of alchīmic, It. alchīmia, Sp. and Portg. alquimia (from Arab. al-kīmā, i.e. al (article) + χημεία), so spelt, perhaps, from a notion that it meant the arch or chief science. Compare ARCHIMASTRYE, p. 10.

Chacun veult souffler l'arquemye.
Recueil de Farces, 15th cent. p. 444
(ed. Jacob).

ARRIÈRE-BAN, a French word for "a proclamation, whereby those that hold of the king by a mesne tenure, are summoned to assemble, and serve him in his warres."—Cotgrave. It is a corruption of O. Fr. arban, military service, Ger. hariban, Low Lat. aribannum, haribannum, herebannum, an army-edict (indictio exercitus), from here, army, and bannum, an edict. See Spelman, Glossarium, s.v. Herebannum.

ARRIERO (Sp.), a muleteer, which at first sight suggests a connexion with Fr. arrière, Prov. arèire, he that walks in the rear (Lat. ad retro) of his beast to urge it forward, is really from arrear, to drive mules, from the common cry to his beasts, arre ! arre ! (Tylor, Prim. Culture, i. 173).

The muleteer of Spain is justly renowned; his generic name is arriero, a gee-upper, for his arre arre is pure Arabic, as indeed are almost all the terms connected with his craft, as the Moriscoes were long the great carriers of Spain.—Ford, Gatherings from Spain, p. 74.

Whenever a particularly bad bit of road occurs, notice is given to the team by calling over their names, and by crying out "arré, arré," gee-up.—Id. p. 64.

ASCHLAUCH, "pot-leek," as if from asch, a pot, a German name for the shallot, also sometimes spelt esslauch (as if edible leek), is a corruption of ascalonicum, i.e. the plant from Ascalon. Hence also our "scallion."

AŪSIS, Strabo's attempt to give a Greek appearance to the foreign word oasis (Arab. wah), as if from the verb abd, to be dry and hot.

AUGENBRAUNE, "eye-brown," a German word sometimes found for the eye-brow. The proper form is augenbraue, augbraue, Mid. High Ger. oueyrâ (brâue, brâ, brow, = ophrys).—Andresen.

AUGEN-LIED, German word for an eye-lid, of which it seems to be a corruption, as if from lied, a song.

AURICALCO (Span.), It. oricalco, Lat. aurichalcum, an assimilation to aurum, gold, of Greek oreichalkos, "mountain copper."

"AURINA [It.], as Vrina because it is yellow."—Florio. Similarly old Fr. orine is due to an imagined connexion with or.

Et mon orine

Vous dit-elle point que je meure ?
Maistre Pierre Pathelin, Recueil de Farces, 15th cent. p. 60 (ed. Jacob).

AURONE, the French name of the plant Artemisia abrotanum, is formed from the Lat. abrotanum, and has no connexion with aurum. Compare the Eng. form averoyne.

AUTHEUR, } old Fr. spellings, e.g.
AUTHORITE, } in Rabelais, of autcur (aucteur), due to a supposed connexion with authentique, Greek authēntēs.

AUVENT (Fr.), a penthouse of cloth, &c., before a shop window (Cotgrave), Prov. anvan, so spelt as if something extended to the wind (au vent), or as a shelter against the wind (ante ventum), Low Lat. auvannus, auventus, may be (Prof. Skeat thinks) of Oriental origin, cf. Pers. āwan, āwang, anything suspended, Eng. awning. Old Fr. forms, and further corruptions, are ostvent, ostevent (Scheler).

AVANT (French), "The time of Advent; which is about a month before Christmas."—Cotgrave. As if the fore-season, from avant, before.

AWGRYM, a Welsh word meaning a sign, when used for the old cryptic character called an Ogham is no doubt a corruption of that word. There is a "Welsh tradition that in the time of Beli the Great there were only 16 'awgryms.'"—I. Taylor, Greeks and Goths, p. 121.

Welsh awgrym would seem to have been borrowed from old Eng. awgrym (Prompt. Parv.), cyphering, calculation with the Arabic numerals, "His awgrim stones layen faire apart" (Chaucer, The Miller's Tale); Fr. algorisme, L. Lat. algarismus.

B.

BACALAO (Span.), Portg. bacalhao, dried cod-fish, "poor jack," ling, so spelt as if from Sp. baculo, Lat. baculum, a stick, because when drying it is kept open and extended by a small stick. So Ger. bakeljuu, a cod-fish, seems to be connected with bakel, a stick (Fr. cabeliau, cabillaud).

All these, however, as well as Dutch kabeljaauw, kabbeljaauw (Sewel), seem to be corrupted from Basque bacalaiba, the cod.

BACCALAUREUS, a corruption of the Low Lat. baccalareus, a bachelor, in order to suggest a connexion with the laurel berries (bacca laurea) with which the graduating student was (?) endued. The origin of baccalareus is doubtful.

Andresen suggests vaccalareus as the possible original. See BACCALAUREATE, p. 17.

La réception des médecins dans l'école de Montpellier était accompagnée de cérémonies particulières. . . . On ne pouvait se présenter à l'épreuve du baccalauréat qu'après trois années d'études. Le candidat qui la subissait d'une manière satisfaisante, recevait des juges une des baies (baccue) du laurier réservé à la couronne doctorale (c'est de là, selon quelques écrivains, que vient baccalauréat).—Chéruel, Dictionnaire des Institutions, p. 761.

BACHBOHNE, "Brook-bean," a German name for the plant brook-lime, is a corrupted form of bachbunge, the veronica beccabunga.

BALDRIAN (Ger.), the plant valerian, of which word it is a corruption.

BALDRSSKINN, i.e. Balder's skin, an Icelandic word for a baldakin or canopy, is a corrupted form of baldskin or baldakin, stuff made at Baldak, i.e. Bagdad.

At this day 'tis called Valdac, or Baldach.—Sir Thomas Herbert, Travels, p. 242 (1665). See BODKIN, p. 33.

BARBASTRELLO, an Italian name for the bat or reare-mouse (Florio), is a corruption of the Latin vespertilio. See SPORTIGLIONE.

BAROCCIO, } Ital. word for a two-
BIROCCIO, } wheeled vehicle, is an assimilation to carroccio, of Lat. birotum, two-wheeled, whence old Fr. barot, Fr. brouette (for birouette).

BATENGEL, } a German word for BATHENGEL, } the plant germander, formerly explained by the Greek bathūs āngelos (deep angel!), is corrupted from betoniculus, a dim. of betonica (Andresen).

BATTIFREDO (It.), a tower or shed used in war, as if from battere, to beat, a machine for assault and offence, was formerly spelt bettifredo, and is the Low Latin bertefredum, M. H. Ger. bercurit, O. Fr. berfrois, a tower of defence or security, from bergan, to protect, and frid, a tower. See BELFRY, p. 27.

BAUCHGRIMMEN, a German term for the gripes or colic in the stomach, as if denoting fierce (grimmig) pain, has not, as might be supposed, any connexion with grimmen, to rage, but, according to Andresen, is properly from krimmen (or grimmen), to clutch or grip.

BAUM-WOLLE, the German word for cotton, Low Ger. baum-bast, as if "tree-wool" procured from the bast or inner bark of a tree, Dut. boom-basyn, boom-wolle, boom-sye, "tree-wool" or "tree-silk" (Kilian), are all corruptions of Lat. bombycinum, bombyx, cotton, originally silk, the product of the bombyx, or silkworm, It. lombicina, Fr. bombasine, old Eng. bombast, cotton (Wedgwood).

BAUTA-STEINN, } an Icelandic word
BAUTARSTEINN, } for stone monuments in memory of the dead, which used to be erected along the high roads, as in ancient Rome, so called as if to denote "stones of the slain," from bauta, to slay. The word is most probably only a corruption from brautarsteinar, i.e. "road-stones" (by dropping the r); compare the analogous Swedish word brautar-kuml, road monument (Cleasby and Vigfusson, s.v.).

BEAN SHÌTH, "woman of peace," the Gaelic expression for a fairy (vid. Campbell's Popular Tales of the Western Highlands, vol. ii. pp. 42-5), as if from shìth, Ir. sìodh, peace. It is properly the same word as Ir. bean-sìdhe, woman of the fairy mansions or hills (sìdh), within which the fairies were believed to dwell.

"Fantastical spirits are by the Irish called men of the sìdh, because they are seen as it were to come out of beautiful hills, to infest men; and hence the vulgar belief that they reside in certain subterraneous habitations within these hills; and these habitations, and sometimes the hills themselves are called by the Irish sìdhe or sìodha" (Colgan). So O'Flaherty's Ogygia, p. 200. With sìdh or sìgh, a hill, compare Sansk. sikha, a hill. Similarly certain supernatural beings are called by the Chinese "hill-men" (Kidd, China, p. 288). Sìdh, pronounced shee, was transferred, like our word faerie, from their habitation to the fairies themselves (vide Joyce, Irish Names of Places, 1st S. pp. 172-179; Old Irish Folk Lore, pp. 32-37, 64, 75, 79; C. Croker, Killarney Legends, pp. 72, 126). Dr. O'Donovan thinks that the more probable origin of the word is sìdhe, a blast of wind, which (like Lat. spiritus, Gk. pneuma) may figuratively signify an aerial or spiritual being (O'Reilly, Ir. Dict. p. 699). Cf. sìgh, a fairy, and sìghe, a blast (? Eng. "sigh"). M. Pictet compares the words siddhās, beneficent spirits of the Indian mythology supposed to dwell in the Milky Way, siddha, a magician, siddhi, magic (Origines Indo-Europ. tom. ii. p. 639).

BEAUPRÉ, a French corruption of Dut. boegspriet, Eng. bowsprit, Ger. bogspriet.

BEHĒMŌTH (Heb., Job xl. 15), apparently the plural of behēmāh, a beast, is really a Hebraized form of the Egyptian p-eh-mau, i.e. "The-ox-(of the)-water," the river-horse or hippopotamus, It. bomarino (Delitzsch, Commentary on Job, vol. ii. p. 357); otherwise spelt p-eh-moût (Additions to Littré, p. 358).

BEIFUSZ, "By-foot," a German name for the plant mugwort (artemisia vulgaris), Low Ger. biföt, so called apparently with reference to the idea that a person carrying this about him will not become weary, is corrupted from Mid. High Ger. bibōz, from bōzen, to pound, it being pounded for use (Andresen).

BEINN, } Icelandic words for
BEIN-VIÐI, } ebony, which, as if properly e-bone-y, has been brought into connexion with bein, a bone (Ger. bein, Swed. and Dan. ben). Ebony, Lat. and Gk. ebenus, is really the stone wood, Heb. eben, stone.

BEISPIEL, in German an example, as if from spiel, a game, is from the Mid. High Ger. and Low Ger. bispel, as if a by-speech or by-word, O. H. Ger. piwort (Andresen).

The word kirchspiel, or parish, has similarly nothing whatever to do with spiel. The dialectic form kirspel (Low Ger. káspel) shows the ground-word more plainly, sc. spel. Cf. Eng. Gospel.

BEISZE, } German provincial cor-
BEISZKOHL, } ruptions (as if from beiszen, to bite) of the word Biesze, itself a dialectic form for Beete (Low Ger. bete, Dutch biet, Lat. beta), the beetroot.

BELLICONE (It.), a loving cup (Hung. billikom), is a disguised form, by assimilation to bello, bellico, &c., of old Fr. vilcom, used in the same sense, which is from A. Sax. wil-cume, greeting, welcome (Diez). See VIDRECOME.

BENJAMINE, a Wallon corruption of balsamine, also known as belyamine (Sigart).

BERGFRIEDE, a German corruption of Mid. Lat. berfredus, a war turret (Mid. High Ger. bērcvrit), as if with thought of berg (mountain), or from bergen, to save, or guard, and friede, peace (Andresen).

BERLONGER, a Wallon du Mons corruption of Fr. balancer (Sigart).

BERNSTEIN (Ger.), amber, as if "the stone that burns" (like Eng. brim-stone for bren-stone), is said to be a corruption of Gk. bernice, beronice, amber (G. Ebers, Egypt, Eng. trans., p. 14, ed. Birch; and so Sharpe, The Triple Mummy Case of Aroeri-ao, p. 5); but this is very improbable. From bernice come Mod. Gk. berniki, varnish (orig. made of amber), Sp. bernis, Welsh ber-nais, and perhaps Fr. vernis, "varnish."

BIBERNELLE, the German name of the plant pimpernel, as if from biber, a beaver, also spelt pimpinelle, Mid. High Ger. bibenelle, Dutch bevernel, all from Low Lat. pimpinella, which is perhaps from bipennula.

BIBLETTE (Wallon), a trifle, is a corruption of BLUETTE, which see.

BIEBERKLEE, "Beaver-clover," a German name for the marsh trefoil or hog-bean, seems to have been originally Fieberklee, "Fever-clover," it being esteemed useful in cases of that malady (cf. Mid. High Ger. biever for vieber, fever). Similarly Bieberkraut, Feverfew, and Bieberwurz are for Fieberkraut, Fieberwurz (Andresen).

BIENENKORB, German word for a beehive, as if compounded with korb, a basket, for Bienkorb, Mid. High Ger. binekorp, may be from O. H. Ger. binekar, kar being a vessel. Compare Prov. Ger. leichkorb, a coffin, Mid. High Ger. lichkar (Andresen).

BILWG, the Welsh word for a bill-hook, is evidently only the English word borrowed and disfigured into a Cambrian shape.

BISCHOLF, a Mid. High Ger. form of bischof, a bishop, which has been assimilated to the common termination -olf in Rudolf, &c. (Andresen).

BISZSCHAF, "Bite-sheep," in old German writings a satirical perversion of bischof, bishop (Andresen).

BLAN-COU, "white-tail," a Liège word for a flatterer, seems to be a corruption of Wallon blan-do, of the same meaning (Sigart), which is from Lat. blan-dus.

BLANKSCHEIT, a German term for the busk or support of a bodice, as if from blank, white, and scheit, a lath, is a corruption of Fr. planchette, a little plank (Andresen), BLUETTE (Fr.), a little spark, as if a blue particle (like bleuet, the blue cornflower), is a corruption of belluette or bellugette, diminutive of old Fr. bel-lugue (Prov. beluga), a spark, compounded of bes, bis (a pejorative particle), and Lat. lucem, light, and so meaning a feeble light. Hence also Fr. bertue. Compare It. barlume, bad light, Sp. vislumbre (Scheler).

BLÜMERANT, Low Ger. blümerant, a corruption of Fr. bleu mourant (faint blue), as if from blume (Andresen).

BOCK-BIER, a popular German name for a kind of beer, as if from bock, a buck, which indeed forms its trademark. It seems that the Hanoverian town Einbeck was formerly famous for the strong beer brewed there; this name was corrupted into Aimbock, and eventually into ein bock. Compare Fr. un boc, a glass of beer (Andresen).

BOIT DEL GRAISSE, in the curious popular phrase used in the Wallon du Mons patois, "es cœur boit del graisse," "his heart is drinking grease!" is a corruption of (son cœur) bat d'allégresse, his heart beats with vivacity (Sigart).

BON CHRÉTIEN, the name of a well-known pear (Ger. Christbirne), is said to be a corruption of panchreste (sc. thoroughly good), Gk. πάχρηστος (Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 20, and so Scheler).

BONHEUR (MALHEUR) for bon eür (= bonum augurium), the h interpolated, as if it meant born in a good, or evil, hour (heur), under a favourable horoscope. See HEUREUX.

Ki sert Den e fait la süe volonté
E murt en sun servise, à bon ure fu né.
Vie de Seint Auban, l. 351 (ed. Atkinson).

[Who serves God and does His will and dies in His service was born to good fortune.]

"BONÚS, a wood which is jet black, and of which chessmen and pen-cases are made" (M. Polo, ii. p. 213, ed. Yule), i. e. the Persian abnús, Sp. abenuz, ebony.

BOOM-WOLLE, a German word for cotton. When Mid. Latin bambacium, It. bambagio, Fr. bombasin (Eng. bombast), as a name for cotton "passed into the languages of Northern Europe, the tendency to give meaning to the elements of a word introduced from abroad, which has given rise to so many false etymologies, produced the Low. Ger. baum-bast, Ger. baum-wolle, as if made from the bast or inner bark of a tree; and Kihian explains it boom-basyn, boom-wolle, gossipium, lana lignea, sive de arbore; vulgo bombasium, q. d. boom-sye, i. e. sericum arboreum, from boom, tree, and syjde, sije, silk" (Wedgwood).

BOSSEMAN (Fr.), a seaman, as if one who had something to do with bosse, a sea-term for a rope's-end, and bossoir, the cat-head, is a corruption of Dut. bootsman, a boat's-man (Ger. bootsmann). Cf. Eng. bo's'n for boat's-wain.

BOUCANCOUQUE, a Wallon du Mons word for a cake, apparently from boucaner, to dry in the smoke, and couque, a cake (Flem. koek), is a corruption of Flem. boekweitkoek, "buck-wheat-cake" (Sigart). See BUCKWHEAT, p. 42.

BOULDOC, in the Wallon patois a thick-set person, a very strong child, as if from Fr. bouler, to swell out (cf. bouleux, a thick-set horse), is a corruption of Fr. boule-dogue, which is a naturalized form in French of Eng. bull-dog.

BOULEVARD (Fr.), a rampart, formerly spelt boulevard and boulevert (whence Voltaire thought it was derived from boule and vert), is derived from Ger. bollwerk (Eng. bulwark), a work constructed of boles or tree-trunks. So bivouac is from Ger. bei-wacht.

BOUQUERANT (old Fr.), buckram, Prov. boqueran, bocaran, are assimilations to bougue, bouc, boc, a buck, of It. bucherame, apparently from bucherare, to pierce with holes, and so an open-work tissue.

BOUQUETTE (Wallon du Mons), buck-wheat, is a corruption of Flem. boekweyt, "buck-wheat," Ger. buch-wcizen (Sigart).

BOUQUIN, a French word for an old book (bouquinier, to hunt after old books), is Dut. boekkin, Eng. "book," Flem. boek, Ger. buch, assimilated to bouquin, a buck.

BOÛTURON, the Greek word for butter, seemingly derived from the native words boûs, a cow, and turôs, cheese, was originally a Scythian word.

Cf. O. H. Ger. chaosmero (kuhschmer).

BRAINE (Wallon du Mons), a barren woman, as if akin to brain, filth, useless rubbish (Fr. bran), is a corruption of Fr. brachaigne, Bret. brahen, a barren woman. See BARREN, p. 23.

BRATSCHÉ, } German names for the PRÄTSCHÉL, } tenor violin, are corruptions of the latter part of the Italian name viola di braccio, i. e. arm-violin, opposed to the viola di gamba.

BRETWALDA, the old English name for the supreme ruler or wielder of Britain, is most probably a false rendering of the form Brytenwealda, which is also found, meaning the wide ruler, from bryten, wide (cf. brytencyning, Gk. eurukrêion, "wide ruling").—Kemble; and Freeman, Norman Conquest, vol. i. p. 543.

BRIMBORIONS (Fr.), nonsense, trifles, useless things, baubles, apparently akin to brimbeur, a paltry pedlar, old Fr. brimbe (= bribe), a morsel of bread, or brimbaler, to swing or jangle bells, O. Fr. brimbales, little bells worn by horses (cf. brimborions, bawbles of a fool's cap.—Cotgrave), brimbelette, a trifle (Rabelais), is really an altered form of old Fr. briborions or breborions, superstitious vanities, old women's charms, mumbled prayers, which words are corruptions of breviarium, the Romish breviary used as a by-word for superstitious and legendary matter. (So Littré and Pasquier.) Compare the following:—

Il dit ses brimborions; (for Breviaire), He saies over his whole Psalter; or he mumbles to himself his fond and superstitious devotions.—Cotgrave.

Briborions, prayers mumbled up.—Id.

Breborions, old dunsical bookes; also, the foolish Charms, or superstitious prayers, used by old, and simple women, against the tooth-ache, &c., any such thread bare, and musty, rags of blinde devotion.—Id.

C'est matiere de breviaire, Tis boly stuffe I tell you; ironically.—Rabelais.—Id.

Cette longue lunette à faire peur aux gens, Et cent brimborions dont l'aspect importune.

Molière, Les Femmes Savantes, ii. 7.

Among the books that Pantagruel found in the Library of St. Victor was “Les Brimborions des padres celestins.”

—Rabelais, Pantagruel, ch. vii.

BRIN D'ESTOC (Fr.), a leaping pole, as if “sprig of a trunk,” or “bit of a stock,” is said to be formed from Ger. spring-stock (Scheler).

BROSAMEN, a German word for crumbs, which appears (and has actually been considered by some) to be for Brotsam, i.e. in old German, brot, bread, as small as seed, samen. The Mid. High Ger. form, however, brosome, brosme, is probably from brechen, to break, by dropping out of the guttural, i.e. broken bread (cf. brocken).—Andresen.

BROT-FALL, the Icelandic term for an epileptic fit, as if from brot, a breaking, a convulsion, O. H. Ger. broiti, fragility, is really a corruption of bróðh-fall or bráðh-fall, a sudden fall. Compare old Eng. broþþ-fall.—Ormulum (Cleasby, p. 81). But against this Ælfric has:—

Epilepsia vel larvatio, bræc-coðu [breaking disease], fylle-seoc.—Wright's Vocabularies, p. 19.

BUCCINA (Lat.), a curved horn or trumpet, so spelt as if coming from bucca, the inflated cheek (Fr. bouche), whereas the more proper form seems to be bucina, a contracted word from bovicina. Compare our bugle and Lat. bucula, a heifer.

BUCHECKERN, “Beech-acorns,” German for beech-nuts, as if from Low Ger. ecker, for eichel, acorn, probably represents in the latter part Goth. ak-ran (fruit), from akrs (acre, tilled field).—Andresen.

BUFO, Italian name of the owl, Lat. bubo. The grave and reverend Grand Duke or Bubo maximus, was formerly considered a foolish and mirthful bird, apparently from a confounding of bufo with the words (buffo) buffone, Fr. bouffon, a pleasant jester, buffa, a jest.

Le Duc est dit comme le conducteur

D'autres oyseaux, quand d'un lieu se remuent.

Comme Bouffons changent de gestes, et
muent

Ainsi est-il folastre et plaisanteur.

Belon, Portraits d'Oyseaux, 1557.

See Broderip, Zoological Recreations, p. 109.

BUSCHKLEPPER (for which the form

buschklopfer is also found) a German term for a highwayman, as if from klepper, a nag, is perhaps a corrupted form of Buschklopfer, a bush-beater (Andresen).

C.

CADHLA, an Irish word for Catholic, as if identical with cadhla, fair, beautiful, from cadhas, honour, respect, glory.

CALAMANDREA, Ital. name for the plant germander, is an assimilation to calamo, a reed or cane, of Lat. chamæ-drys, Greek chamai-drus, “ground-oak,” whence also Sp. camedrio, Fr. germandrée, Eng. germander.

CALTERIRE (It.), to scratch or gall, also to make skilful or crafty, has been formed from scalterire, scaltrire, orig. to sharpen (probably from Lat. scalpturire), the s having been mistaken for the preposition ex (es), which it commonly represents at the beginning of Italian words, and then dropped. On the other hand scegliere, to choose, and scilinguare, to stammer, have been formed by prefixing s (= ex) to words already compounded with that preposition, and thus stand for Lat. ex-e(x)-ligere, ex-e(x)linguare (Diez).

CAMOG, an Irish word (pronounced comege) for the punctuating stop called a comma, Greek komma, of which word it is doubtless a corruption. Camog properly means a curve or curl, from the root cam, crooked, bent, and was applied to the stop (,) from its curved shape.

CAMPIDOGGIO, Ital. name of the Capitol at Rome, an assimilation to campo, a field, and doglio, a barrel, of capitolio, Lat. capitolium. The insertion of m before p or b in Italian is found in other instances, e.g. “Salto di Timberio” in Capri, “Tiberius' Leap.”

CANAILLENVÖGELN, a colloquial corruption in German of Canarienvögel, as if the bird of the rabble (Andresen).

CANDELABRE, as if a tree-shaped spectacle for candles, an occasional French corruption of candelabre, Lat. candelabrum.

CANGRENA (It. and Sp.), Fr. cangrine, a gangrene, from Lat. gangræna, spelt with a c from a false reference to can- cer (Diez).

CANIBAL (Span.), Fr. cannibale, It. cannibale, a man-eater, as if one having the voracity of a dog (Lat. canis), is a corrupt form of Caribal. Compare Span. caribe, an Indian which eateth mans flesh (Minsheu).

CANIS, a mediæval Lat. rendering of khan, a Tartar king (Pers. khan, a prince).

Rex Tartarorum qui et magnus canis dicitur. —Chron. Nangii, ann. 1299 [Gémin, Récréat. Philolog. ii. 255].

So It. cane, a dog, also in the Tartarian tongue an Emperor or absolute monarke (Florio).

The word Can signifieth Emperor.—Pur- chas, Pilgrimages, p. 454.

CARNIFEX, "Flesh-maker," the Latin word for an executioner or torturer. Pictet makes the ingenious suggestion that carni- here is the Latin representative of the Sanskrit word kârana, punishment, execution, putting to death, just as carcer is akin to Sk. kâ- râgara, house of punishment, prison. So the word would bear the appropriate signification of "Execution- maker."—Origines Indo-Europ. ii. 454.

CARO, an old Italian name for the carraway, as if it meant the dear or costly spice.

Cáro, deare, precious, beloved, leefe, costly . . . Also Caraway-seed.—Florio.

CARREAU (Fr.), an old corruption of carrouse, a carouse (Ger. gar aus, "all out," of a glass drained to the bottom), perhaps mistaken for a plural.

Il ne faisait nulle difficulté de faire des carreaus ou brindes avec eux à chaque repas. —François de Soles (Hist. de St. Chantal, i. 255, 1870).

CASERNE (Fr.), a barrack, formerly a small chamber where soldiers were lodged, which seems to be akin to O. Fr. case, a house, casette, casino, Lat. casa (with which, indeed, Diez connects it), is the same word as Prov. Fr. cazerno, cazerna, from Lat. quaterna, a chamber to hold four or a quaternion (like casern from quaternus).—Littre, Additions.

CEATA-CAM, an Irish name for the constellation Ursa Major, as if it had something to do with ceat, a hundred, or ceatha, a shower (like Hyades, = The Rainy), is a corrupted form of ceachta- cam, otherwise Cam-ceachta, i.e. The Crooked Plough.

CEITHIR RANNA RUATH AN DOMHAIN, a Gaelic popular phrase, "The four brown quarters of the universe," i.e. the whole wide world. Ruadh, reddish-brown, is probably a corruption of roth, a wheel or circle, "The four quarters of the circle of the world."—J. F. Campbell, Tales of the Western High- lands, vol. ii. p. 436.

COENA (Lat.), supper, the usual spelling of cena (cesna), as if it were the Greek koiné, the common meal.

CHAMP, a Fr. word for the edge or narrow side of a brick or piece of wood (de champ, edgewise), is an assimilation to champ, field (Lat. campus), of chant, a side, a corner, old Fr. cant (whence Fr. canton, chanteau, Eng. cantle, Dut., Dau., Swed. kant, an edge, whence old Eng. cant, an edge, also to tilt over on one side, and decant).

CHANTEPLEURE, the paradoxical French word for a watering-pot or funnel (whence It. and Sp. cantimplora), apparently that which sings while it weeps, the chant being the noise made by the water gushing from the minute holes, and the pleurs the water shed. It is perhaps a corruption of a form champleure, corresponding to Norm. champleure, Picard. champleuse, a funnel, from a verb champlere, to pierce or hollow (whence champleure, a hole).—Scheler.

CHARTRE, an old French term for a prison, as in the phrases Saint Denis de la Chartre, tenir en chartre-privée (to keep in confinement on one's own authority), is a corruption of the Latin carcer.

CHARTRIERS, prisoners, in "Hospice et rue de Chartriers" in the town of Mons, Hainaut, is probably a corruption of sartières or sartiés, a Wallon word meaning invalids (Sigart).

CHASMATE (old Fr.), used by Rabelais not only for a casemate or underground fortification (It. casa-matta), but for an abyss or opening in the ground, from a supposed connexion with Greek chásma, chásmatos, an abyss.

CHAT-HUANT, "Hooting-cat," a French word for a screech-owl, anciently chahuant, is doubtless a corruption of the Anjou chouan, Berry chavant, Prov. chauana, L. Lat. cavannus, akin to Wallon chaou, an owl, O. Fr. choe, M. H. Ger. chouch, Dut. kauw, Eng. "chough" (Diez, Scheler). Sigart gives also old Fr. chovant, Languedoc chauana, Low Lat. cauanna, Bret. kaouan, an owl.

Menger les œufs du cahuant.—Bovilli Prov. 16th cent. (Le Roux de Lincy, Prov. Franç. i. 159).

CHATOUILLER (French), to tickle, touch gently, apparently derived from chat, a cat, from the pleasure it takes in being stroked (like Fr. chatoyer, to to change colour, as does a cat's eye, Prov. Fr. to caress or fawn like a cat, chatterie, fawning). Compare It. gattarigolare (from gatto, a cat), to claw and tickle (Florio). The old Fr. word was catiller, and this is, no doubt, an adaptation of Flem. ketelen, kittelen, to tickle, Dut. kittelen, Swed. kittla, Ger. kitzeln, A. Sax. citelian, to tickle, Scot. kittle. Compare chatonner = kittle, to bring forth kittens; Scot. kittling, a kitten, also tickling.

New curage kitillis all gentil hertis.
G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, p. 403,
l. 14.

It never fails, on drinkin' deep
To kittle up our notion.
Burns, Poems, p. 17 (Globe ed.).

Prov. Fr. forms are catouye (Sigart), gatailli, gattie (Scheler).

CHATTEMITE (Fr.), a hypocrite, apparently a "soft cat," as if from Lat. cata mitis (cf. mitou, mitouard, a cat, a hypocrite), in Cotgrave. Chatemite is perhaps from Lat. catamitus used in an altered sense.

Ermites, hypocrites, chattemites, sanctorons, patepelues, torticollis.—Rabelais, Pantagrueline Prognostication, v.

CHAUVE-SOURIS (Fr.), "bald-mouse," the bat, is perhaps a corruption of choue-souris, "owl-mouse," the mouse which flies at night like an owl. So M. Sigart, comparing the Liège form chawe-sori, where chawe (Wallon chaou) means an owl. Compare Picard. cas- seuris, perhaps for cave-seuris. The baldness of the winged-mouse is certainly not so likely to have given it its popular name as would its resemblance to a bird. Compare Ger. fledermaus, Prov. rata pennada, "winged rat."

CHÈVREFEUILLE, the French name for the honeysuckle, as if from chevre and feuille, is a corrupted form of the Lat. capparifolium, so called from its resemblance to the caper leaf, Lat. capparis. Similar is the Ger. geiss-blatt, Eng. caprifoly (Prior).

CHOUANER, CHUINER, a Wallon verb meaning to make haste, affords a curious instance of a word originating in a series of popular misconceptions. According to M. Sigart it arose as follows: On the entry of the allied armies in 1814 the Hainaut peasants hearing the word geschwind, quick! every moment in the mouths of the impatient soldiers, supposed it to be an imperative gechuine! The first syllable being to them difficult of articulation, they adopted the word in the form of dechuine, then dropped the de-, and from the remainder made the verb chwiner, chwamer, chouaner.

CHOU BLANC FAIRE (en jeu de quilles), a colloquial French phrase, "To make a white cabbage," meaning to hit or win nothing, make a miss or failure. Chou here probably stands for choup, the Berry pronunciation of coup (Littré), so that the sense would be to make a blank stroke.

CHOUROUTE (sc. "cabbage-crust"), a French transformation of the German sauerkraut (sour cabbage). In the Family Papers at Caldwell (Maitland Club), pt. i. p. 207, Mrs. Scott speaks of "sour-crude, a stinking kind of kail."

CHRISTIANE, a Wallon du Mons corruption of Fr. chrysanthème, a chrysanthemum (Sigart).

CHRISTIANE, and Christanie, popular corruptions in German of kastanie, the chestnut (Andresen).

CIMIER, the French word for a rump or round of beef, is a transformation of the German ziemer, by assimilation to the native term cimier, the crest or highest part of anything, which is from cime, It., Sp. cima, Lat. cyma, Gk. kûma, a sprout.

CINGLER (Fr.), to sail, so spelt as if identical with cingler, to whip or scourge ("to cut the sea.")—Cotgrave), lit. to encircle with a phiant lash (Lat. cingulum, a girdle), is old Fr. singler (Sp. singlar), a nasalized form of old Fr. sigler, from O. H. Ger. segelên, to sail, Icel. sigla (Ger. segeln).—Diez, Scheler.

CLOPORTE, the French name of the wood-louse, as if "close-door," is a corruption of closporque, i.e. the pig that can shut itself up (by rolling itself into a ball), porca clausilis. This insect in many dialects is popularly known as a sow or pig, e.g. Languedoc pourcelets, in Italy porcellini, colloq. Fr. porcelets (Wallon pourciau-singlé); in Anjou and Brittany trées (= truies), in Dauphiné kaions (= cochins), in Champagne cochons de St. Antoine, Prov. Eng. sow.

COBARDE (Sp.), a coward, also covarde, supposed to mean a skulking fellow that hides himself in a coba or cova, a cave or recess (Stevens, 1706), is a corruption of old Fr. coward, the short-tailed hare. See COW-HEART, p. 78.

Hoy vereis, Cobardes Griegos,
De la manera que Circe
Irata cuantos pasajeros.
Aquestos umbrales tocan.
Calderon, El Mayor Encanto Amor.

[Coward Greeks, this day's experience
Teacheth you how Circe treats
Every traveller who steppeth
From his ship upon these shores.

F. D. MacCarthy.]

COLIDEI, a Low Lat. word for the old Celtic monks or Culdees, as if from Lat. colere Deum, to worship God (Dei-colce), is a corruption of Ir. ceilede, a "gilly," or servant, of God. Compare the Gaelic surnames, Gilchrist, Gill-espie, Gill-ies, Gil-more, servant of Christ, of the Bishop, of Jesus, of Mary. Scottish keledei. (See W. F. Skene, Celtic Scotland, vol. ii.)

COLMENA, a Spanish word for a beehive, Portug. colmea, as if a well-stocked place, from colmar, to fill up, is either from Arab. kuwâra min nahl, a hive of bees (Diez), or Basque kôlôen-wenan, of the same meaning (Donkin).

COMMENCER (Fr.), as well as Eng. commence, is spelt with two m's from a false analogy to words like commander, commettre, commenter, commend, commune, &c. The correct form would be comencerc and comence. Compare Norm. Fr. cumencer, It. convinciare, Sp. and Prov. comenzar, all from a Lat. cum-initiare, to cominitiate or begin together.

Veant Amphibal, ki cumence à precher.

Vie de Saint Auban, l. 1642 (ed. Atkinson).

[Seeing Amphibalus, who commenced to preach.]

COMPAGNO (It.), a companion, old Fr. compaign, spelt with a g from a mistaken reference to a Lat. com-paganus, a fellow-townsmen, compagnia, a confederation. A companion, O. Fr. compain, is properly one who breaks bread together, a mess-mate, from Low Lat. companies, com-, with, and panis, bread. Compare Goth. ga-hlaiba, a loaf-sharer, a companion; Runic gæ-hœleibcen, loaf-brother, a husband (Stephens, O. North Runic Monuments, p. 933); O. H. Ger. gi-mazo, gi-leip, a meat-sharer, a loaf-sharer.

M. Agnel, however, says the g is merely due to popular pronunciation, as in oignon from Lat. unicnem (Influence du Langage Populaire, p. 112).

COMPOSTELLA, SANTIAGO, or Santo Jaco de Compostella, was the common corruption of the famous Spanish shrine of Sancto Jacobo Apostolo, as if it had something in common with such words as compostura, compuesto, &c.

COMRADA (Ir.), a companion, as if a "talk-mate," from comh-radh, discourse, conversation (com, with, and radh, speech), is an adaptation of Eng. comrade, which stands for camrade, Fr. camerade, Sp. camarada, the sharer of one's chamber (Lat. camera).

CONCIO (Lat.), an assembly, so spelt as if from concio, to bring together, whereas the older form is contio and coventio, from convenire.

CONTREDANSE (Fr.), where used for a "danse rustique," is, according to M. Scheler, a corruption of Eng. country-dance.

CONTRE-POINTE, } the French word
COURTE-POINTE, } for a quilt, so spelt in the former case as if it denoted a covering stitched through and through, with a pattern on either side, in the latter as if it were une couverture piquée à points courts. Both are corruptions of the Latin culcita puncta. See COUNTERPANE above, p. 77.

CONVOITER (Fr.), to covet, so spelt as if compounded with the preposition con, is really, like Prov. cobeitar, It. cubitare, a derivative of Lat. cupidus, desirous (cupiditare).

COQUEMAR (Fr.), a boiler or caldron, so spelt as if akin to coque, a shell, O. Fr. coquasse, a kettle, or coq, a cook, is the same word as It. cogoma, Lat. cucuma.

CORBLEU, } French disguised
MORBLEU, } oaths substituting PARBLEU, } bleu for Dieu, i.e.
VENTRE-BLEU, } corps de Dieu, mort de Dieu, &c.

CORDONNIER (Fr.), a shoemaker, is an assimilation to cordonner, to line, cord, or entwine, cordon, a line, of cordouanier (It. cordovaniere), one who works in cordouan (It. cordovano) or Cordovan leather (Fr. cuire de Cordoue, Dut. Spaansch leder), Eng. Cordwainer.

Nopez sanz chauceüre de cordewon caprin.
Vie de Saint Auban, l. 1828 (ed. Atkinson.)
[Barefooted without shoes of goat-skin cordwain.]

CORONISTA (Sp.), another form of cronista, a chronicler; so coronica, a chronicle, as if connected with corona, "crown-documents." Shakespeare, on the other hand, seems to use "chroniclers" for "coroners" in As You Like It (act iv. sc. 1), where, speaking of Leander's death, Rosalind says that "the foolish chroniclers of that age found it was—Hero of Sestos." The reading of the Globe edition is "coroners."

CORPS SAINT, Enlevé comme un, a French proverb, is a corruption of "Enlevé comme un Caurcin," which has entirely changed its meaning from having ceased to be understood. At the time of the Crusades different companies of Italian merchants settled in France, and grew rich by usury. These were called Couercins, Caorcins, Cahorsins, either because the chief men of them belonged to the Corsini family at Florence, or had established themselves at Cahors. The harshness experienced by their debtors, and a desire to get possession of their wealth, frequently led to their banishment by their victims—"on les enleva pour les expatrier." Hence came the proverb. See on this subject Matt. Paris, sub anno 1235 (Le Roue de Lincy, Proverbes Français, i. 9).

COUETTE (Fr.), a feather-bed, as to form apparently a dimin. of cou, is a corrupt expansion of old Fr. couite, coite, colte, cuite (Eng. quilt), from culcta, a contraction of Lat. culcita, a cushion. Compare COUNTERPANE, p. 77.

COUPEROSE, "cut rose," the French word for copperas, a corruption apparently of Lat. cupri rosa, i.e. flower of copper (cf. Gk. chálkanthos), It. coppa-rosa, Sp., Portg. caparrosa (Scheler). Other corruptions are Flemish koper-rood, "red of copper," German kupfer-rauch, "smoke of copper."

COURTE-POINTE (Fr.), a quilt, apparently "short-stitch," stands for the older Fr. coulte pointe or coilte points (old Fr. colte, culti, cuite (=quilt), couite), Lat. culcita puncta, a stitched coverlet. See COUNTERPANE, p. 77.

De soie coiltes pointes n'a mais lit au chucher.
Vie de Saint Auban, l. 682 (ed. Atkinson).

COUTURE, a Wallon word for a division of a rural commune, or the situation of a field, is doubtless a corruption of culture (Sigart). Cotgrave gives in the same sense coulture, a close of tilled land, and closture, an enclosure.

CRAPAUDAILLE, a French word for a species of crape, as if "frogery" (from crapaud), is a corruption of crépaudaille, a derivative of crépe, old Fr. cresepe, the crisp material.

CRESCIONE, It. name for cress, so spelt as if named from its quick growth and derived from cresciare, Lat. crecere, to grow, is really of Teutonic origin, and akin to A. Sax. cærese, Dut. kers, Ger. kresse, O. H. Ger. chresso.

CRÉTIN (Fr.), the name given to the goitre-afflicted idiots of Switzerland, seems to describe the cretaceous or chalky whiteness of skin which characterizes them, as if from Lat. creta, chalk, like Ger. kreidling from kreide, chalk

(so Littré and Scheler). It is really no doubt a corrupt form of Chrétien, as if an innocent, one incapable of sin and a favourite of heaven, and so a "Christian" par excellence (so Gattel, and Génin, Récréat. Philolog. ii. 164). In the Additions to Littré's Supplément, p. 361, a quotation is given from the Statuts de Bordeaux, 1612, in which lepers or pariahs of supposed leperous descent, are called Chrestiens. At Bayonne they were known as Christians; and it is to such that Godefroy de Paris (15th cent.) refers when he says:—

Juifs, Templiers et Christiens
Furent pris et mis en liens.

CYRE (old Fr.), used by Rabelais for sire (Lat. senior), from an imagined connexion with Greek (cyrius) kúrios, lord (Barré).

Cyre, nous sommes à nostre devoir.—Gargantua, ch. xxiii.

Similarly cygneur, a swan-keeper, was sometimes used in derision for seigneur (Cotgrave).

D.

DALFINO (It.), a bishop at chesse (Florio), also a dolphin, is a corruption of alfino, from Pers. and Arab. al-fil, the elephant. So old Fr. dauphin. See ALFIN, p. 5.

DAME, as a French term in surveying, is a naturalized form of Flemish dam, Ger. damm, a mole, dike, or "dam."

DAME-JEANNE, a French word for a jar, is a corruption of damajan, Arabic damagan, originally manufactured at the town of Damaghan in Persia.

DAMMSPIEL is the usual North German spelling of the more accurate Damspiel, Damespiel or Damenspiel (Fr. jeu de dames), the game of draughts. The word of course has no connexion with damm, dam or dyke; nor is it so called from the fact that dames find mild and peaceful entertainment in this game; but from the designation of one of the pieces, and then of a whole row,—Dame, queen or lady. Cf. Schachspiel, the game of chess, with a similar reference to Shach [sc. Sheikh, Shah], King.—Andresen.

DAR-DAR, a colloquial Fr. expression meaning Quick! or swiftly (E. Sue, Labiche), perhaps mentally associated with darder, to dart or shoot, also written dare dare (Diderot, Balzac), seems to be a Prov. Fr. form of derrière, used in the sense of "Reculez vite!" "Look sharp there!" "Look out!" to warn a person back from some quickly approaching danger. (See Additions to Littré, p. 363.)

DEMOISELLE, a French word for a paving-beetle or rammer used in the construction of paths, is probably a playful perversion of dame, a term used in road-making, which is from Dut. dam, a dam or bank, dammen, to embank, Icel. dammr, a dam. Hence also Wallon madame, a pavior's beetle (Siggart).

DEVIL, used by the Eng. gipsies for God, is really a foreign word quite distinct from "devil" (A. Sax. deoful, Lat. diabolus, Gk. diábolos, "the accuser"). The gipsy word, sometimes spelt devel, is near akin to deva, (1) bright, (2) divine, God, Lith. devas, God, Lat. deus, divus, Greek Zeus.—Curtius, i. 202. (Greek theós, which Greek etymologists connected sometimes with theō, to run, as if the sun-god who "runs his course," pretty much as if we connected God with to gad, is not related.) In the Zend-Avesta, the Vedic gods having been degraded to make room for Ahura Mazda, the supreme deity of the Zoroastrians, old Pers. daēva (god) has come to be used for an evil spirit (M. Müller, Chips, i. p. 25).

The word's chance resemblance to our devil has led to one strange misunderstanding in "My Friend's Gipsy Journal":—"When my friend once read the psalm in which the expression 'King of Glory' occurs, and asked a Gipsy if he could say to whom it applied, she was horrified by his glib answer, 'Oh yes, Miss, to the devil!'"—F. H. Groome, In Gipsy Tents, p. 278.

DIAMANTE (It. and Sp.), Fr. diamant, diamond, formed from Lat. and Gk. adama(n)ts, "the untamed" or invincibly hard stone, under the influence seemingly of diafano, transparent.

DIENSTAG, the German name for Tuesday, as if the day of service, dienst, is a corrupted form of Mid. Ger. diestag, Low Ger. diesdag, Sax. tiesdag, A. Sax. tiwesdäg, "Tuesday," High Ger. zies- tac, i.e. the day of (O. Norse) Týr, High Ger. Ziw, the god of war. The Dutch form dingsdag has been assimilated to ding, jurisdiction; while the form zinstag used in Upper Germany literally means "rent-day" (dies census).—Andresen.

DINGESDAG, dinkstedag, diggesdag, diwvesdag, Low Dutch words for Tuesday, as if connected with Dut. dingen, to plead, to cheapen, instead of with the name of the God Tuisco, O. H. Ger. Ziw (Gk. Zeus), Icel. Týr. Compare Icel. Týs-dagr, Tuesday, Dan. Tirsdag.

DIΟΥΛ or JOUYL, the Manx name of the devil, as if from Di or Jee, God, and ouyl, destruction, fury (vid. The Manx Soc. Dict. s.v.), is evidently an adaptation of Lat. diabolus, Greek diábolos.

DIXHUIT, "Eighteen, also a Lapwing or Blackplover (so termed because her ordinary cry sounds not unlike this word" (Cotgrave), Eng. peaseweep, peewit, puet, Fr. piette, Dan. vibe ("the weep"), O. Eng. tirwhit. Three lapwings are the arms of the Tyrwhitt family.

Cleveland teufit, Holderness teefit, Scot. tequhyt.

Get the bones of ane tequhyt and carry thame in your clothes.—Trial of Elspeth Cursetter, 1629 (Dalyell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland, p. 150).

Pitcake, a Scotch imitative name for the plover. The Danes think that the bird cries tyvit! tyvit! "Thieves! thieves!" for which see the legend quoted in Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary, s.v. Teufit.

DOGANA (It.), a custom-house, toll, so spelt with inserted g, as if it denoted the impost levied by a doge or duke (like regalia, a king's impost), is really derived from Arab. divân, a state-council, a receipt of custom, whence also Prov. doana, Span. a-duana (for al-duana), Fr. douane.

DOIGT D'OLIVE, "olive-finger," a Wallon du Mons word for a severe whitlow attended with great inflammation. Sigart offers no suggestion as to its origin. It is perhaps a contraction of Doigt d'olifan, "elephant-finger," from Wallon olifan, an elephant. Compare Elephantique, leprous (Cotgrave), and Elephantiasis.

DORN-BUTT (Ger.), "thorn-but," the turbot, appears to be an alteration of Fr. turbot, Welsh torbwut (perhaps from Lat. turbo + ot (suffix), in order to simulate a meaning (Scheler).

DRAKON (Greek), a serpent (whence Lat. draco, a dragon), apparently a derivative of Gk. drakón, gazing, as if the "quick-sighted," is probably an adapted form corresponding to the Sanskrit drig-visha, "having poison in its eye," a serpent.

DRÍAKEL, as if "threecle," a compound of three (drei) ingredients, is a Mid. High Ger. corruption of Low Lat. theriaculum, Greek theriakón, whence Eng. treacle.

DUCKSTEIN, High Ger. tauchstein, as if from tauchen, to duck, Low Ger. ducken or duken, is a perverted form of tufstein (It. tufo, Lat. and Gk. tophus), probably from a confounding of It. tufo with tuffo, immersion or dipping (Andresen).

E.

EBENHOLZ, German word for ebony, probably regarded as the smooth or even wood (Eben), is a derivative of Lat. ebenus.

EBERRAUTE, "Boar-rue," also Aberraute, as if from raute, rue, German words for the plant southern-wood, are corruptions of Lat. abrotonum (Andresen).

ÉCORCE, Fr. (from corticem) and escarboucle (carbunculus), owe the prefixed e to a false assimilation to such words as étude (studium), étroit (strictus), épi (spica), which originally had an s (Brachet, Grammaire Hist. p. 133).

EFFRAIE (Fr.), a screech-owl (strix), so spelt as if it denoted "celle qui effraie," that which affrights, and so generally understood (e.g. by Scheler), it being regarded as a bird of evil omen, and anciently believed to suck the blood of children. It is really a corruption of old Fr. fresaie, which, as we see by Prov. Fr. forms bresague (Gascony), presaie (Poitou), is derived from Lat. præsaga (sc. avis), foreboding, the bird that "presages" or predicts misfortune (see E. Rolland, Faune Pop. de la France, s.v.). Compare its names O. Eng. liche-owl (i.e. corpse owl), Ger. leich-huhn, totten-vogel, Fr. oiseau de la mort.

Effraye, a scricheowle or Lychefowle, an unlucky night-bird.—Cotgrave.

The strix as an object of terror to the superstitious is called Puck in W. Sussex (Folk-lore Record, i. 18). For the form, compare Fr. orfraie, the "osprey," from Lat. ossifraga, "the bone-breaker."

EHREN, a German form of address to pastors, &c., is said to have nothing to do with ehre, honour, but to be a corruption of er, i. e. her, herre, herr (Andresen).

EICHHORN, German word for the squirrel, as if from its frequenting the oak, eiche, Icel. ikorni, Dut. eekhoren, eikhoren, Swed. ickorn, ekorre, A. Sax. ácwern, a popular corruption of the Romance word, Fr. écureuil, It. schiriuolo, "squirrel," Gk. ski-ouros, "shade-tail." Pictet, however, identifies A. Sax. -wern with Lettish wáweris, a squirrel, Pers. warwarah, Lat. viverra (Orig. Indo-Europ. i. 449).

EINBEERE, "one-berry," Ger. name of the juniper, seems a complete transformation of Lat. juniperus.

EINCHORANËR, an old H. Ger. corruption of Lat. anachoreta (Einsiedler), an anchorite, as if "allein gekorner" (Andresen).

EINÖDE, German for a wilderness, as if from ein (one) and oede, a desert, is really the Mid. High Ger. einoede, einoete, a simple derivative corresponding in formation to kleinoede, keinót, a jewel or treasure.

EKELNAME, a German word for a nickname, as if a name of aversion or dislike, ekel, is formed from the provincial word oekelname, the öknamn, ögenavn, arknefni of Northern Europe, i.e. eke-name, from auka = augere (Andresen). See NICKNAME, p. 255.

ELEND, in German for Elen or Elen-thier, the elk, so written as if it meant the foreign beast, Mid. High Ger. El-lende, foreign country (eli-lenti, "other land," Angl. Sax. eleland, and so Ger. elend, is originally "exile" and then "misery"). Elen itself appears to be a Slavonic form (jelen) corresponding to Mid. High Ger. elch or elk, Lat. alces (Andresen).

ELFEN-BEN, the Swedish word for ivory, as if "elfen-bone," from elf, elfvor, fairies, is for elefant-ben.

ENCONIA, an old Sp. word for malevolence, Mod. Sp. encono, is supposed by Diez to be corrupted from malenconia (= melancholia), which was understood as if compounded with mal, evil. In old English writers melancholy is frequently spelt malencholey.

ENDEKRIST, a Mid. High Ger. corruption (but found also as late as Luther) of Antichrist (Andresen).

ENE-BÆR, Danish name of the juniper, as if from ene, single, and bær, berry, is (like Spanish enebro, Dutch jenever) a corruption of the Latin juniperus.

ENGELSCHÉ-ZIEKTE, "The English Disease," the Dutch name for the rickets or weakness of the ankles that children are sometimes afflicted with. The original phrase it has been conjectured was enkel-ziekte, "ankle-disease," which became first engel-ziekte, and then Engelsche-ziekte, pronounced Engelse-ziekte. The parallelism, however, of the German Englische-krankheit as a name for the rickets may throw some doubt on the suggestion, unless this also is to be regarded as connected with aenkel, the ankle.

As a matter of fact the rickets did first appear in England (see RACHITIS, supra, p. 312). Dr. Skinner, writing before 1667, says it was "known to our islands alone," and that it was Dr. Glisson who invented for it "the elegant word Rachitis" (Etymologicon, s.v. Rickets).

ENKRÁTEIA (ἐγκράτεια), self-control. Socrates in Xenophon evidently regards this, his second virtue, as connected with τὸ κράτιστον, "the best" (Mem. I. vi. 10; IV. v. 11). It is the quality of kings (Ib. III. ix. 10). This probably had some bearing on the Stoic dogma that the wise man is a king.

ENTRAILLES (Fr.), the inwards, spelt with the collective suffix -aille, is a perverted form, from false analogy to tripaille, of old Fr. entraignes, Sp. entrañas, from Lat. interanea, plural of interaneum.

ENTRECHAT. This strange looking word in French for a caper, is a perversion of It. capriola intrecciata, lit. cabriole entrelacée (Scheler, Dictionnaire, s.v.).

EPHEU, the German name of ivy, as if compounded of Ep, the stem of Epich, ivy (Mid. High Ger. epfe, apium), and heu, hay, is a corrupted form of the older words epfi, epfe (Andresen).

ÉRABLE (Fr.), the maple tree, is a corruption of érabre, for esrabre, a coalescence of the two Lat. words acer, arbor, maple and tree (Scheler).

ERDAFFEL, a popular German word for the potato (but formerly for another bulbous root), as if the "earth-apple" (Fr. pomme-de-terre), is a corruption of kartoffel [originally tartoffel, from Ital. (dial.) tartuffola, sc. "truffle"] through the forms artoffel, ertoffel. Similarly erdschocke is found for artischocke, artichoke.

ERDTOFFEL (Ger.), potato, as if (like the French pomme-de-terre) it contained the word erde, earth, is an adaptation of It. tartuffola, tartufo, which stands for terre tuber, "earth truffle."

So artischocke (the artichoke) is often pronounced erdschocke, as if the earth-choke. I have heard an illiterate person point out the seeds with their woolly covering (pappus) in the calyx, as the "choke" of this vegetable.

ERIGNE (Fr.), a surgical instrument, apparently that which serves to raise (ériger) the parts that are to be operated on (so Gattel), is a corruption of old Fr. araigne, a spider (Lat. araneus), which it was supposed to resemble (Scheler).

ERL-KÖNIG, the grisly death-spectre of European poetry, is the Tatar Irlé-Chan who presides over the souls of the dead (Tylor, Prim. Culture, ii. 282). Dr. Prior says that "the similarity of the Danish elle, the alder, with the name of the fairies in that language, elle-trü and elle-folk, has misled Goethe to give the name of erlen-könig to the fairy-king" (Pop. Names of British Plants, p. 4). See also Cleasby, Ice- landic Dict. s.v. álfr, who agrees with Grimm that the correct form is found in the Danish Ellekonge, qs. Elverkonge.

ESCARBOUCLE, French word for the carbuncle (Lat. carbunculus), assimilated to boucle, a ring or buckle.

ESCARGOT (Fr.), a snail, seems to have been popularly regarded in France as a typical watchman or sentinel, probably from a confusion between that word and old Fr. eschargaite, escargaite (Mod. Fr. échaugnette), a watch, a watch-tower, which is an adaptation of Ger. schaar-wacht, a band of watchmen, a sentry. In an old chap-book entitled "Le Débat des gens-d'armes et d'une femme contre un lymasson," the snail mounted on a watch-tower holds the gens-d'armes at bay, refuses them admittance into the city, threatens to call the garrison to repel their attack, and behaves generally like a sentinel. See Nisard, Hist. des Livres Populaires, i. 117, who thinks escargot originally was the same word as escargaite.

ESCHEC, échec (old Fr.), a robber, as if he who gives one check (Fr. échec, old Fr. eschec, from Arab. Pers. esh-shāh (for al-shāh) "the king"! ) with the words "stand and deliver," is really an altered form of Mid. High Ger. schach, Ger. schächer, a "sacker" or plunderer (Diez, Scheler).

The coincidence of this word with échecs, chessmen, is curiously paralleled by Lat. latro, and latrunculus, (1) a robber, (2) a piece in the game of draughts; Egyptian tá, (1) a robber, (2) a man at draughts (Wilkinson, Ant. Egyptians, ii. 57, ed. Birch).

ESELMILCH, "Ass's milk," a German name of the plant euphorbia esula (also called esellkraut), is a corruption of the name esula minor (Andresen).

ÉTISIE (Fr.), consumption, is formed from étique (for hectique, hectic), from a false analogy to phthisie of the same meaning.

F.

FAFARINNA, a Grison word for a butterfly, Sard. faghe-farina, as if from Lat. fac farinam, "make meal," with allusion to the flourlike dust left by its wings when touched (Diez), is doubtless an altered form of Swiss farfall, It. farfalla, orig. farfaglione, from parpaglione, Lat. papilionem.

FAIM-VALLE (Fr.), excessive hunger, is a corruption of faim + gwall (Celtobret.), bad, as we may infer from the variants faim-galle, faim-calle, frain-galle, fringale, analogous to male-faim (Scheler). Compare Welsh gwall, defect, want.

FAINÉANT, a French word for a lazy fellow (in Cotgrave), as if a "do-nothing" (fait néant), like vaurien, It. far niente, is said to be a corruption of feignant (faignant), one who pretends he cannot work, lazy (so It. infingardo).

FALAWISKA, a word formed in O. H. German out of Lat. favilla, as if to denote yellow ashes (falo, sc. fahl, falb, and eschen).—Andresen.

FASIHUON, an old High Ger. word for the pheasant (Ger. Fasan), Mid. H. Ger. phasehuon (also vashan), are formations similar to what pheas-jen would be in English.

FASTNACHT, the German name of Shrove Tuesday, as if denoting the eve (nacht) preceding the Lenten fast (fasten), (compare Scotch Fasten'e'en), seems to be only another form of Fasnacht, Mid. High Ger. vasnacht, from vasen, to revel or riot (Mod. Ger. faseln, to be giddy and trifling), with allusion to the indulgence of Carnival-time.

FAUXBOURG (Fr.), a suburb, as if that which is not the true town, is for fors-bourg, outside the town, which is the form of the word in Froissart. So Bourg de Four, is Burgi Foris, Bourg de Dehors (Tooke, Diversions, ed. Taylor, p. 178).

Fors is the Lat. foris, Mod. Fr. hors, and Roquefort gives the form hors-borc (Diez otherwise). Scheler adds that for-bourg is the oldest form in the texts. Faux-bourgs, the suburbs (Cotgrave).

FEIGBLATTER, "Fig-bladder," sc. "Fig-pustule," and Feigwarze, "Fig-wart," German words for a boil or large pimple, and a large wart respectively, are not compounded with feige, a fig, but with the provincial word fiek, an affection which is supposed, like a species of worm, to produce sores, &c. (Andresen).

FEIGE (Ger.), "fig," a blow or box, ohr-feige, a box on the ear, is a corrupt spelling of fege, from fegen, to punish or correct, orig. to cleanse or purify (compare "chastise" from "chaste"), Feger, one who cleans, a sweeper. Near akin are old Eng. feague, to beat, old and prov. Eng. fie, fej, or feigh, to cleanse, fyin (Prompt. Parv. p. 159).

FEIN GRETCHEN, "Fine Maggie," a popular name in German for the plant fenugreek, Lat. fœnum Græcum (Fr. fénugrec, Dutch fynegriek), from which it has been corrupted. So in Low German Fine Grêt, Fin Margrêt (Andresen).

FELD-KÜMMEL, German word for the caraway, as if from kümmel, cummin, is corrupted from Mid. High Ger. velt-konele, veltquenel, derivatives of Gk. konilē, Lat. cunila, thyme (Andresen).

FELDSTUHL, "a field stool," a German word for a folding chair, as if from feld, field, is a corruption of Mid. High Ger. valtstuel, a folding stool (cf. Ger. falten, to fold, Fr. fauder). Hence also Fr. fauteuil, It., Sp. and Portg. faldistorio.

FELIX, "Happy," when applied by Latin writers to the south-west part of Arabia, was a misunderstanding of the native name Yemen, which denoted the land to the right of Mecca, but also might (like Lat. dexter) mean propitious, prosperous.

FELLEISEN, a German word for a portmanteau, as if a wallet made of leather (fell) and iron (eisen), is a corruption of Fr. valise, It. valigia, Sp. balija.

FERROLH (Provençal), Portg. ferrolho, Sp. herrojo, a bolt, so spelt from an accommodation to Lat. ferrum, iron, are corrupt forms of Prov. verrolh, Fr. verrouil, verrou, from Lat. veruculum, a dimin. of veru, a spit.

FEUILLETTE (Fr.), a quarter cask of wine, It. foglietta, so spelt as if derived from feuille, a leaf, It. foglia (Lat. folium). In South France it denotes a quart; Prov. Fr. forms are fillotte, fillette. Perhaps from fialette, a diminutive of phiala (Du Cange), or perhaps, taking account of the It. form, from Lat. foliis, folliculus, a leathern bag, and then a wine-skin (?), the primitive cask of most wine countries. Compare It. foglia, a purse in the rogues language (Florio).

FFODDGRAFF, Welsh, a "photograph," assimilated to the native word ffoddi, to cast a splendour,—itself, however, probably a congener of the Greek stem φωτ- (phot-), light.

FICHE, FIQUE, FICOTTE, in old French oaths Par ma fiche (= spade or dibble), fique, or ficotte, are corruptions of par ma foy, "as we say, by my feckins."—Cotgrave.

FIEDEL (Ger.), fiddle, so spelt as if derived from fidicula, the stringed instrument (from Lat. fides, strings), is really from Mid. Lat. vitula, an instrument to accompany songs and dances (Mid. High Ger. videle), from Lat. vitulor, to rejoice or frisk (like vitulus, a calf). Hence also our violin.

The Prov. Ger. word fideline is a combination of both forms.

FÍRILDI, an Icelandic name of the butterfly (Cleasby), as if derived from fiðri, feathers, with allusion to the fine feathery faringe that covers its wings, is another form of fiðrildi. (Compare Prov. Ger. feifalter, A. Sax. fifalde.)

FILAGRAMME (Fr.), the water-mark in paper, seems to be a corruption of filigrane, used in the same sense (Scheler), It. and Sp. filigrana, the grain (Fr. grain, Sp. and It. grano, Lat. grammum) or texture of a material wrought in wire (Fr. fil, Sp. fila, Lat. filum, a thread); influenced by words like epigramme, programme, monogramme, as if the meaning was something written (Greek grámma) in wire or woven work. Of the same origin is filigree, old Eng. filigrane.

FILASSE (Fr.), flax, as if spinning stuff (filer, to spin), is perhaps, but scarcely probably, an adaptation of Ger. flachs, O. H. Ger. flahs, Dut. vlas, flax.

FILUNGUELLO, an Italian word for a finch, is a corruption of an older form fringuello, which is from Lat. fringilla.

FIMBRIA (Portg.) "a corrupted word used instead of ephimera," the herb hermodactyl or May-lily (Vieyra), assimilated to fimbria, a fringe.

FLÆÐAR-MUS (Icel.), a "flood-mouse" (flæðr, a flood), a fabulous animal in nursery tales, is probably only a corruption from the German fleder-maus, the bat (Cleasby). See FLINTY-MOUSE, p. 122.

FLAGEOLET, a French name for a species of haricot bean, is a corrupt form of fageolet, a diminutive of fageol from Lat. phaseolus, a bean (Scheler), by assimilation to flageolet, a pipe.

FLAMBERGE (Fr.), a sword, apparently from flamber, to flame, shine, or glisten, flamme, flambe, a flame: like Fr. Argot flamme, a sword; Eng. brand, a sword, from A. Sax. brand, a burning, because it glitters when "brandished" like a flaming torch, just as the Cid's sword was named tizon, from Lat. titio, a firebrand. Compare Gen. iii. 24, "a flaming sword," Heb. lahat, a flame; Judges iii. 22, "blade," Heb. lahabh, a flame.

The brandish'd sword of God before them
 • blazed,
 Fierce as a comet.

Milton, Par. Lost, xii. 634.

Paradise, so late their happy seat,
 Waved over by that flaming brand.

Id. xii. 643.

Flamberge, however, has nothing to do with flamme, but is of German origin, from flanc, side, flank, and bergen, to protect. Compare Ger. froberge, a sword (from fró, lord), a "lord-protector" (Diez, Scheler).

FLAMME, } (Fr.), a lancet, so spelt FLAMMETTE } as if akin to flamme and flamberge (which see), as if a glittering blade, is a corruption of old Fr. flieme (Eng. flame), Prov. flecme (for fletme), Ger. fliete, M. H. Ger. fliedeme, O. H. Ger. fliodima, fliedima, all contracted from Lat. and Gk. phlebo-tomus, a "vein-cutter."

FLEUR, in the Fr. phrase à fleur de, on a level with, seems to be adapted from Ger. flur, Dut. vloer, A. Sax. flór, floor, as if on the same floor or plain.

FLEUR-DE-LIS, or fleur-de-Luce, is said to be a corruption of fleur-de-Louis, so called from Louis VII. of France having assumed it for his device.

FLORESTA (Span.), an accommodation to flor, a flower, floreceer, to flower, of It. and Prov. foresta, Low Lat. foresta, orig. unenclosed land, lying outside (Lat. foris) the park.

FOGOTE (Span.), a fagot, so spelt as if connected with fogar, fogón, a hearth or fire-place, fuego (Lat. focus), is the same word as It. fagotto, Fr. fagot, from Lat. facem, acc. of fax.

FOL, } an old French name for the FOU, } bishop in the game of chess, is a corruption of Pers. fil or pil, an elephant, the original name of the piece. See ALFIN, p. 5.

Fol, A foole, ass, goose, etc. . . . also a Bishop at Chess.—Cotgrave.

FOLIE (Fr.), a country-house, "maison de plaisance," seems to be due to a confusion between folie, foolishness, debauchery, and feuille, feuillee, a leafy bower, Low Lat. foleia, folia, from Lat. folium, a leaf. Compare lobby, a small hall, from Low Lat. lobia, laubia, M. H. Ger. loube, Ger. laube, an arbour, a leafy bower (Ger. laub, a leaf), whence also O. Fr. loge, and "lodge."

FORCENÉ (Fr.), mad, furious, raging, so spelt as if connected with force, violence, forcer, to use force, to overcome, is a corrupt orthography of old Fr. foršené, from for (fors, Mod. Fr. hors), outside, and sen (Mod. Fr. sens, Sp. and Prov. sen, It. senno, O. H. Ger. sin, sense), "out of one's senses;" Prov. foršenat, It. foršenato, old Fr. forsener, to lose one's reason, go mad.

FORCER de la laine (old Fr.), to pick or tease wool (Cotgrave), as if to do violence to it, was perhaps originally to divide it by forces or shears, which word is a contraction (forp'ces) of Lat. forpices.

FOU, a name for the beech-tree in prov. and old French (as if "fool"), is a corrupt form of fau, from Lat. fagus.

FREITAG, the German name of Friday, as if "Free-day," Mid. High Ger. vrítac, is properly the Day of the old Icelandic goddess Fria or Frigg.

FRETT, the German name of the ferret, a contracted form (compare Fr. furet, It. furetto, Mid. Lat. furetus, a little thief, fur), assimilated probably to the verb fretten, fressen, to eat or devour.

FRIEDHOF, the German word for a grave-yard, as if bearing the beautiful meaning of court (hof) of peace (friede), bore originally the prosaic sense of an enclosed place around the church (cf. einfrieden, to enclose), from friede (vride), Mid. High Ger. writhof (from writen, to preserve, Goth. freidjan, to spare). The form freithof was in use in the 16th century, and still survives in South Germany (Andresen).

FRIEDRICHSDOR, WILHELMSDOR, so written instead of Friederichdor, &c., as if dor meant a coin, from a misunderstanding of Louisdor (= Louis-d'or).—Andresen.

FRINGALE (Fr.), a corruption of faim-valle, which see.

FUMART, used as a Fr. name for the polecat (putois), and supposed to be descriptive of the fume (fumée) or offensive odour that it exhales (so Additions to Littré, p. 367), is really a corruption of Eng. foumart or foul-mart. See FULMERDE, p. 132.

FUMIER, French for a dung-hill, It. fumière, so spelt as if from fume, It. fumo, Lat. fumus, reek, smoke, fume, is really from Lat. fmus, filth, dung, old Fr. femier.

Chien sur son fumier est hardi.

French Proverb.

FURZOG, in Mid. High Ger. a corruption of pforzich, which is from Lat. porticus (Andresen).

G.

GAILLET (Fr.), rennet, apparently a diminutival form like cochet, sachet, mollet, is a corruption of caille-lait, "curdle-milk."

GALANTINE (Fr.), a cold dish made of minced meat, especially fowl, and jelly, so spelt apparently from an accommodation to Lat. gallina (Fr. geline), a fowl, or to galant, galantin, is a corruption of "gelatine, an excellent white broth made [originally] of the fish Maigre" (Cotgrave), Low Lat. galatina. Compare Ger. gallert, gelatine.

Le blanc manger, la galentine.
Recueil de Farces, 15th cent., p. 309
 (ed. Jacob).

GÄNSERICH, the German name for the little hardy plant potentilla or wild tansy, as if from gans, a goose, and identical with gänserich, a gander, is in O. H. Ger. gensinc and grensinc, from grans, a beak or bill, and is found in the older German as grenserich.

GARDEBŒUF, the name given by the French to the Egyptian bird, the Benu, from its following the plough and living in the cultivated fields, looks like a corruption of its native name aboogerdan; the change from l'aboogerdan to la bœufgardian or bœufgarde, and then to the usual compound form gardebœuf, being by no means improbable.

GARDINE, German word for a curtain, as if a hanging to guard against draughts, &c., Fr. garder, is a corruption of Fr. courtine, It. cortina (from Lat. chorus, an enclosure), through the form gordine, Dutch gordijn (Andresen).

GAROTAG, an old High. Ger. corruption of Kartag (i.e. Karffitag, Good Friday, lit. "Mourning Day"), as if it were "preparation day," the eve of a festival (Andresen). See CARE-SUNDAY, p. 50.

GARSTIGE, "nasty, filthy," as applied popularly in German to gastric fever, is a corruption of gastrische (Andresen).

GAULE HAUT, as it were "High Pole," an old term in legal French for the first day of August, is quoted by Hampson (Medii Aevi Calendarium, vol. ii. p. 182) from a Patent Roll, 42 Hen. III. "Le Dimenge prochein apres la gaule haut." It is a corruption of La Goule d'Aout, Low Lat. Gula Augusti (Throat of August), a mediæval date-name of doubtful origin (vid. Spelman, Glossarium, s.v.). Compare A. Sax. geôla, "yule."

GAUNER, a rogue or swindler in German, is connected neither with gau, country, nor Low Ger. gau, quick (cf. gaudiëb, a pick-pocket), but is of gipsy origin and stands for jauner (Andresen).

GEANMCHNU, an Irish word for a chestnut, evidently from geamnnaidh, chaste, and cnú, nut, from a misunderstanding of the Eng. word, as if it were chaste nut, nux casta, instead of nux castanea.

GEIERFALK, a German word for the jer-falcon or gerfalcon, as if compounded with geier, a vulture, is a corruption of the more correct form gerfalk.

GELAG, } a banquet or symposium
 GELAGE, } in German, a word having all the appearance of being derived from liegen, to lie (recumbere), was originally geloch, geloch, Low Ger. gelake, from lâch, lâche, a banquet, a token (Andresen).

GESCHIRR. The French phrase faire bonne chère has been transformed in German into gut Geschirr machen, to make good gear (or equipage).—Andresen.

GIOVIAL (It.), pleasant, jolly, apparently born under the happy planet Giove, Jupiter, but perhaps really derived from giovare (Lat. juvare), to please, be agreeable, or delight (Florio).—Scheler, s.v. Jovial.

GLETSCHER, a Germanized form of Fr. glacier, as if connected with glatt, smooth, slippery; sometimes spelt glättscher. Compare glatteis, glassy ice (= Fr. verglas).

GLIEDMASZEN, a German word supposed to have originally denoted the measure (masz) or length of the limbs (glied), but generally restricted in meaning to the arms and legs, the hands and fingers, in respect to their "litheness" and efficiency, Low Ger. ledematen, is said to be corrupted from O. Norse lidhamôt, the juncture of the limbs (from môt, meeting, cf. Eng. "meet," Low Ger. möten). Lidhamôt may itself be a corruption of O. H. Ger. lihhamo, the body.

GLOUTERON (Fr.), the bur, so spelt as if the name referred to its property of cleaving or sticking to a person's clothes like glue (Lat. gluten), formerly spelt gleteron and glatteron, the Clote bur (Cotgrave), is a modification of old Fr. gleton, cleton, from Ger. hlette, Flem.

klit (Scheler). Compare Eng. Clot Burre (Gerarde, p. 664).

GODAILLE (Fr.), a toping or drinking-bout (godailler, to tope), is a naturalized form of Eng. good ale (old Fr. goudale, godale), by assimilation to gogaille, feasting, good cheer, and other substantives in -aille. In the Bordelais patois goudale is a mixture of wine and bouillon. It has no connexion with godet, a drinking-glass. Rabelais has goudfallot, a boon companion, a "good fellow" (Cotgrave). Compare redingote, from Eng. "riding-coat."

GOGUELIN (Fr.), a goblin, a sailors' corruption of gobelin (from Low Lat. cobalus, Greek kóbalos), as if from gogues, merriment, wantonness, a frolicsome spirit (Scheler).

GOURME DE CHAMBRE (Fr.), one of the inferior officers of the household of the dukes of Bretagne, is a transposed form of old Fr. gromme, Flem. grom, Eng. groom, and has no connexion with gourme, affected gravity, stiffness, gourmer, to curb.

GRAVICEMBALO, an Ital. word for a musical instrument (Florio), apparently compounded with grave, solemn, grave, is a corruption of clavicembalo, from Lat. clavicymbalum, a cymbalum, or resonant instrument, furnished with keys, claves. Hence also Sp. clavecim-bano, Fr. clavecin.

GRIFFEL, a German word for a style, slate-pencil, &c., as if connected with griff, a grip, grasp, greifen, to seize, is a corrupted form of graphium, Mid. Lat. graphius, a writing implement.

GRIMOIRE (Fr.), a conjuring-book, seems to be an assimilation to Scand. grima, a ghost (whence Prov. Fr. grimarré, a sorcerer, and grimace), of old Fr. gramare, i.e. grammaire, literature (Greek grámmata), esp. the study of Latin, then mystic lore. Compare Eng. gramary (Génin, Littré).

Aussi, a-il leu le grimoire.

Maistre P. Pathelin, Récueil de Farces, 15th cent. p. 20 (ed. Jacob).

Here one MS. has gramaire; some editions grandmaire.

GROSZDANK! "great-thanks," "gramercy," a Swabian corruption of grusz-dank, from grusz, greeting (Andresen).

GRÜNDONNERSTAG, or Grüner Donnerstag, "Green Thursday," a German name for Maundy Thursday, or Thursday in Passion Week, it has been conjectured is a corruption of the Low Lat. carena (Fr. carême, from quadragena, quadagesima, the forty days' fast), Lent, as if the Thursday in Lent par excellence (Adelung); just as der Krumme Mittwoch (Crooked Wednesday) is said to be a popular corruption of Carême Mittwoch. In that case the Low Lat. name of the day Dies Viriduum, Day of Greens, must be a translation of the German word.

GUARDINFANTE, } an Italian word for GUARDANFANTE, } a woman's hoop
(Baretti), seems to be a corruption of vertugadin (vardingard), understood as fantingard (?). See FARTHINGALE, p. 116.

GUIDERDONE (It.), old Fr. guerredon, Low Lat. widerdonum, are corruptions, influenced by Lat. donum, of O. H. Ger. widarlôn, recompense (Diez).

GUIGNE (Fr.), the black-heart cherry, is an assimilation to such words as guigner, guignon, of old Fr. guisne ("termed so because at first they came out of Guyenne."—Cotgrave), for guisine (Wallach. visine, It. visciola), all apparently from O. H. Ger. wihselâ, Mod. Ger. weichsel (Scheler).

GUILLAUME (Fr.), the name William, used as "a nickname for a gull, dolt, fop, foole" (Cotgrave), from an imagined connexion with guillé, beguiled, guiller, to cozen or deceive. So Guilmin, a noddy.

GUILLEDIN (Fr.), a gelding, is a Frenchified form of Eng. gelding, assimilated to guiller, guilleret, gay, &c.

GWEDDW, used in Welsh for a widow, more properly for an unmarried or single person, nubile, apparently from gweddu, to yoke, to wed, gwedd, a yoke, is in all probability only an adaptation of the Eng. widow, Lat. vidua.

GYRO-FALCO, a Low Latin name for the ger-falcon (q.v.), as if from the Lat. gyrus, and called from its gyrating movements in the air, like the Greek kirkos, a falcon of circling flight, is probably corrupted from giéro-falco, = hierofalco. See GER-FALCON, p. 140.

H.

HAAERAUCH, also Heerrrauch, Heidenrauch, Höhenrauch, German words for a thick fog, as if a hair-, host-, heath-, or high-, fog, are all, according to Andresen, corrupted from an original heirrauch (heat-reek), where hei is equated with Gk. kaiō.

HACHE ROYALLE, "Royal Axe" (Fr. hache, axe), an old French name for "The Affodil or Asphodill flower; especially (the small kind thereof called) the spear for a king" (Cotgrave), seems to be a corruption of its other name haste royall (Fuchs, 1547), Lat. Hastula Regia, king's spear (Gerarde, 1597, p. 88), so called from its long pointed leaves, whence it was also named Xiphium (sword-plant).

Bright crown imperial, kingspear, holy-hocks.

B. Jonson, Pan's Anniversary, 1625.

HADES, the Greek word (Ἅιδης) for the state of the dead, the underworld, and sometimes the grave, as if "The Unseen World" (from á, not, and idēiv, to see). There is some reason, however, to believe that it may have been borrowed from the Assyrian, in which language Hedi is used for the general assembly of departed spirits. Thus, in the Legend of the Descent of Ishtar to Hades she is represented as going down to

The House where all meet: the dwelling of the god Irkalla:

The House [from] which those who enter it, never come out:

The Road which those who travel it, never return.

Column I. ll. 4-6.

Hades is here called Bit Hedi, "the House of Assembly" (cf. Heb. édāh, עֲדָה, assembly), i.e. the appointed rendezvous of the spirits of all flesh, just as in Job xxx. 23, it is called Béth Môéd, "the house of assembly for all living." Similarly Mr. Fox Talbot thinks that the Greek Erebos is derived from the Assyrian Bit Eribus, "the house of darkness" (lit. of the entry (= setting) of the sun, from Erib, to enter), and Acherón from the Hebrew Acharón, the West, the last (Society of Biblical Archaeology, Transactions, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 188; vol. iii. pt. i. p. 125).

With this meaning of Hades compare the following lines:—

This world's a citty full of straying streeets,
And death's the market-place, where each one meetes.

The Two Noble Kinsmen, act i. sc. 5, ll. 15, 16 (ed. Littledale).

See note in loco, where I have adduced several instances of this passage having been used on tombstones. Another form of the same word may be Aita, Hades, the Pluto or King of the Shades in the Etruscan mythology, whose majestic figure, with his name attached, has been discovered in the wall paintings of the Grotto dell' Orco at Corneto (see Dennis, Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. i. p. 350, ed. 1878).

HAGER-FALK (Ger.), a species of falcon, as if from hager, thin, lean, is a corruption of Prov. Ger. hagart-falk, French hagard, the falcon that lives in the wood or hedge (hag), and so is wild, untamed. See HAGGARD, p. 158.

HAGESTOLZ, a curious German term for an old bachelor, in its present form suggestive of stolz, pride, foppishness, stiltedness, &c., has its true origin shown in the Mid. High Ger. hagestalt, old Sax. hagastold (Angl. Sax. hagu- or haga-steald, "unmarried soldier"), i.e. in den Hag gestellten, quartered amongst the young unmarried retainers of the castle, in their special "hedge" or enclosure (Andresen).

HAHN, the German name for the cock of a gun, is, Mr. Wedgwood suggests (s.v. Cock), a misunderstanding of the English word. Cock, anything that sticks abruptly up, is probably another form of cog, an indentation, It. cocca, Fr. coche.

HAKENBUCHSE (Ger.). Andresen (Volksetymologie) denies that this is a corruption of "arquebuse," It. archibuso, and maintains that it bears its proper meaning on its face, a gun secured with a hook.

HAMARTÔLOS, a name sometimes given to the rural police or local militia of Thessaly, as if a "sinner," is a transposition of the letters of the word Harmatolos, a man-at-arms (Tozer, Researches in Highlands of Turkey, vol. ii. p. 46).

HANGE-MATTE (Ger.), a corruption of hammock, as if a suspended mat, Dutch hangmat, Fr. hamac, Sp. hamaca, It. amaca, all from a native American word hamaca.

HANTWERK, handiwork, was frequently confounded with, and usurped the place of antwerck, a machine (from entwircken), in Mid. High German (Andresen).

HAPPE-CHAIR, a "grip-flesh," a popular French word for a bailiff or policeman (like Eng. "catch-poll"), is the same word as Wallon happechar, greedy, gluttonous, Flemish hapschaer, a bailiff, one ready to seize, from happen, to seize. Chair, therefore, merely represents the termination -schaer. Compare Ger. häscher, a constable, from haschen, to seize (Sigart).

HARPÉ (Greek), ἄρπη (Nicander), a sickle-shaped sword, is a Grecized form of the Egyptian harpu = Heb. cherebh (Delitzsch, Comm. on Job, vol. ii. p. 361).

HARÜBEL, a vulgar corruption in German of horribel, horrible, as we might say hor-evil.

HASEHART, a Middle High German form of Hasard (prob. Arab. al zâr, the game of dice), with some thought of hase, a hare, according to the old couplet which thus warns the dice-hunter,

Swer disem hasen jaget nâch
Dem ist gën himelrich niht gâch.

Some, however, see in it rather the word hass, hatred, envy (Andresen).

HATE-LEVÉE, a Wallon word for a piece of toasted bacon, apparently "dressed-in-haste" (levée à la hâte). It was originally from Flemish lever, liver, and hasten, to roast or grill, and denoted a slice of pig's liver grilled (Sigart). Compare HASTENER, p. 163.

HAUSSÈRE (Fr.), a rope, so spelt as if derived from hausser, to raise or lift, sometimes spelt hansière, is borrowed from Eng. hawser or halser, from halse, to clew up a sail, Icel. halsa, derived from Scand. hals, (1) a neck, (2) the tack of a sail, the end of a rope. (See Skeat, s.v. Hawser).

HEBAMME, German word for a midwife, as if compounded with amme, a nurse, Mid. High Ger. hevamme, is corrupted from O. H. Ger. hevanna, from heffjan (heben, heave), to lift or raise (Andresen).

HEBRIEU, curiously used in the old Fr. phrase, "Il entend l'Hebrieu, He is drunk, or (as we say) learned: (from the Analogy of the Latine word Ebrius)." — Cotgrave.

The following is quoted in N. and Q. 4th S. ii. 42 :—

Je suis le docteur toujours ivre,
Notus inter Sorbonicos;
Je n'ai jamais lu d'autre livre
Qu' Epistolam ad Ebrios.

Ebræus is an old form of Hebræus; cf. Falstaff's "Ebrew Jew."

HEDERICH, a German name for the plant ground-ivy, as if compounded, says Andresen, with the common termination -rich, is corrupted from Lat. hederaceus, from hedera, ivy.

HEIMAKOMA, a colloquial Icelandic word for erysipelas, as if from heim, home, and ákoma, eruption, is a corruption of the proper word ama (see Cleasby, p. 43).

HELFAANT, } Mid. High Ger. words
HELFEHTIER, } for the elephant, from which they are corrupted, as if the helping beast (Andresen).

HELLEBARDE, the German name for a halberd or battle-axe, as if a "shear-beard," or "cleave-all," seems to be a corrupted form of helm-barde, from helm, a helve or handle (Swiss halm), and barte, a broad axe, "an axe with a handle." In older German the word appears as helm-parten, "helmet-crusher." Fr. hallebreda, a tall, ill-made man, seems to be a humorous perversion of the Fr. form of the word, hallebarde.

HÉRODE. In the French province of Perigord the wild hunt is called "La chasse Hérode," from a confusion of the name of Herodias, the murderess of John the Baptist, with Hróðso, i.e. the renowned, a surname of Odin the Wild Huntsman (Kelly, Curiosities of Indo-Europ. Tradition, p. 280). An old ecclesiastical decree mentions the diabolical illusion that witches could ride a-nights with Diana the goddess of the Pagans, or with Herodias, or Benzoria, and an innumerable multitude of women (Du Cange, s.v. Dianu). See Douce, Illustrations of Shakspeare, p. 236 (ed. 1839); Wright, Introd. to Proceedings against Dame Alice Kyteler (Camden Soc.).

HERRSCHAFT, dominion, lordship, in German, as if directly from herr, lord, is shown by the Mid. High Ger. form hêrschaft to be a derivative of hêr, Mod. Ger. hehr, exalted, high.

HEUREUX (Fr.), happy, bonheur, good fortune, so spelt as if connected with heur, bonne heur. However, the old French forms eûreux, eûr, aûr (bon-aûr), with their congeners the Provençal aûros, Wallon aveure, ura, It. urìa, show that the original in Latin is not hora, but augurium.

HLE-BARÐR, an Icelandic corruption, as if from hlé, shelter, lee, and barðr, is a corruption of leopard, O. Eng. libbard, Lat. leo-pardus, but applied indiscriminately to a bear, wolf, or giant (Cleasby).

HONGRE, the French word for a gelding (cantherius). According to Wachter it originated in a misunderstanding of the Teutonic word wallach, a gelding, as if it denoted a special class of horses brought from Walachia or Hungary, "The Hungarian horse." Compare Swedish vallack, a gelding, vallacka, to geld, connected, doubtless, with old Swed. gälla, Ger. geilen, O. Norse gelda, to geld, Lat. gallus, Greek gállos, a eunuch.

HORREUR, a Wallon corruption of erreur, while curiously enough the Liège folk use erreur for hatred, aversion (Sigart).

HUFLATTICH, a German name for the plant colt's-foot (tussilago), as if from huf, hoof, and lattich, lettuce (lactuca), Andresen thinks may be really derived from Mid. Lat. lapatica (= lapacium, or lapathium, sorrel).

HÜFTHORN, the German word for a bugle or hunting-horn, as if the horn which, hanging from the shoulder, rests on the hip, hüfte, is otherwise and better written hüfthorn, which is for hieffhorn, from Old High Ger. hiu-fan, to shout; compare hieff, a bugle-note (Andresen).

I.

IGNEL (old Fr.), swift, impetuous, seems to be an assimilation of old Fr. isnel, inel (Prov. isnel, It. snello, O. H. Ger. snel, warlike, whence would come esnel), to Lat. igneus (ignitellus), as if the meaning were "fiery."

U fort runcin, u grant destrer ignel.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 1421 (see Atkinson, in loco).

[Either a strong rouncie or a great swift warhorse.]

INCANTARE (It.), to sell by auction, as if from Lat. incantare, is from Lat. in quantum, How much (do you bid)? Hence also old Fr. enquanter, enchanter; incant, encant, an outcry of goods (Cotgrave), Mod. Fr. encan, Ger. gant.

INCINTA (It.), Low Lat. incincta, Fr. enceinte, pregnant, as if from a Latin incincta, ungirt, wearing one's clothes loose (or zonâ solutâ, devirginated); so Diez. Hallarse en cinta is the Spanish equivalent for "being in the family way."

The true origin, probably, is Lat. inciens, inciensis, breeding, pregnant, Greek êngkuos.

IVROGNE, "drunkard," the Wallon name of the plant artemisia abrotanum, is the same word as Fr. aurone (avrone), popular Fr. vrogne, from Lat. abrotanum.

J.

JANITRICES, in Latin the wives of two brothers, a corrupted form of the Gk. ειναρτες.

JANIZARIES, from Turkish yeni cheri, "new soldiers," sometimes supposed to be from janua, as if janitors, door-keepers, like usher, Fr. huissier, from huis (door). Vid. Spelman, Glossary, s.v. Admissionalis.

JORDEMODER, the Danish word for a midwife, as if "earth-mother," Swed. jorde-gumma, is in all probability a corruption of jodmoder, jöd being the O. Norse word for child-birth.

JUAN-TEAYST, the Manx name of the Jack-daw, is evidently a ludicrous misrendering of the English word, as if it were "Jack-dough," Juan being the familiar of John, and teayst, dough (Welsh taes, Irish taos).

JUST AM END, a popular German corruption of Fr. justement (M. Gaidoz, Revue Critique, 19 Août, 1876, p. 119).

K.

KĀLĀ PĀNI, "black water," the name given by Hindús to the sea or ocean, on which they have a religious aversion to embark, is a corruption of the proper expression khārā pāni, "salt water," (Monier Williams).

Kala Panee, or "the Black Water," is the term familiarly applied to the "beyond the sea," to which Indian convicts are usually banished, if their sentence is one of imprisonment for life.—The Monthly Packet, New Ser. ix. 585.

KAMAN, in Hindústáni, a "command," is an assimilation of the borrowed Eng. word to kamán, a cannon or bow, ka-máná, to perform. Similar adaptations are Hind. kalisa, a Christian church, of Sp. iglesia, Lat. ecclesia; kálbud, the last for a boot, of Greek kalopodion, a "wood-foot;" kámij (or qamiz), a shirt or shift, of Lat. camisia (Fr. chemise). So daftar, a record, from Greek diphthera, a skin or parchment; and apparently hála, a halo or circle round the moon, from Eng. halo, Greek halōs, perhaps associated with hál, the tire of a wheel.

KAMEEL-BLOMSTER, "Camel-flower," the Danish name of camomile, or chamomile, Lat. chamæmelon, of which word it is a corruption.

KAMMERTUCH, "Chamber-cloth," a German word for fine lawn, as if from kammer, a chamber, is a corruption of kamerich, Dutch kamerijk, "cambric," from the French town Cambray (Andresen).

KAMPERFOELI, a Dutch word for the woodbine (Sewel), as if connected with kamper, a warrior, kampen, to combat, is a corruption of the Latin name caprifolium, Fr. chevrefeuille (cf. Ger. geiss-blatt).

KAPP-HAHN, or Kapp-huhn, a capon, an ingenious naturalization in German of Lat. capo(n), Low Ger. kapin, as if a cock that has been cut, from kappen, to cut or castrate (Andresen).

KAPP-ZAUM, a German word for a species of curb for a horse, as if a severe bridle, from kappen, to cut, and zaum, a bridle, is corrupted from Fr. caveçon, It. cavezzana, "a cauezu, a headstraine" (Florio), Sp. cabeçon, from cabeça, the head; Eng. caveson, a kind of bridle put upon the nose of a horse in order to break and manage him (Bailey).

KARFUNKEL, the carbuncle, a Germanized form of Lat. carbunculus, as if from funkehn, to sparkle.

KÁRPĒĀ, a Greek word meaning dry sticks, which Herodotus (iii. 111) applies to cinnamon, may perhaps represent its Arabic name kerfat, kirfah (Lidell and Scott).

KATZBALL, a German name for the game of tennis or the ball used in the game, as if from katze, cat (Holstein kásball), is no doubt from Dutch kaats, i. e. Fr. chasse, a hunt (Andresen). Compare Netherland. kaetsbal, kaetsspel, tennis, kaetsen, to play at ball, kaetsnet, a racket (Olinger).

KATZENBLUME, "Cat-flower," a popular corruption of käseblume, "cheese-flower" (cf. our "butter-cup"), a German name for the anemone nemorosa or wind-blume (Grimm, Deutsches Wörterbuch, s. v.).

KATZENJAMMER, "Cat's-misery," a German word for crapulence, derangement of the stomach, is said by Andresen to have been originally formed from Gk. katarrh. Compare Scot. catter for catarrh, and vulgar Eng. cat = vomere, Ger. kotzen.

KAULBARSCH, and Kaulkopf, German names for the ruff fish and miller's thumb, as if from their frequenting holes (kaul, Low Ger. küle, a hole), are really derived from keule, a club.

KETTE, a term applied by sportsmen in Germany to a covey of birds (kette Hühner), as if a chain (kette) or continued flight of them, would more correctly be kitte or kütte (preserved in the S. German dialects), O. H. Ger. chutti, a flock, troop, or herd (Andresen).

KHARTUMMIM, the name given by Moses to the Egyptian magicians (e.g. Gen. xli. 8), understood to mean "sacred scribes," as if from Heb. kheret, a pen or stylus (Smith, Bib. Dict. vol. ii. p. 198), in spite of its Hebrew complexion is the same word as the Egyptian Khar-toh, "the Warrior," the name borne by the high-priests of Zor-Ramses, at Zoan (Brugsch, Egypt under the Pharaohs, vol. ii. p. 354).

KLARE, an antiquated German word for the white of an egg, as if the clear (klar) part, also eierklar, is derived, according to Grimm, from Eng. glair, Fr. glaire, if indeed both sets of words are not of a common origin.

KÖDER, a bait, lure (formerly querder, quander, queder, O. H. Ger. quērdar, a worm, a bait), when applied to a cross-seam in an article of dress, or the small leather thong of boots and shoes, as in some parts of Germany, is a confusion of querder, quander, with the word quartier (Andresen).

KOHLEBRATER, "Cabbage-roaster," a humorous perversion in popular German speech of the word collaborator.

KONING, the Dutch word for a king, as if the man of knowledge, Swed. konung, Runic kunung, O. Sax. cuning, less correct forms than O. Eng. cyning, son of the kin. See KING, p. 204. In Icelandic poetry, konungr is regarded as standing for konr ungr, "young noble."

KOPFNUSZ, } in German, a blow on KOPFNÜSSE, } the head, as if compounded with nusz, a nut, is from O. H. Ger. niozan, to hit or push, Prov. Ger. nussen and nutzen (Andresen).

KRANKIEU, a Wallon word applied to crooked trees and rickety children, as if from Ger. krank, sick (Eng. cranky), is probably identical with Liège cranche, used in the same sense, which is derived from Fr. chancreux, cankered (Sigart).

KRIECHE, } German words for KRIECHENTE, } the teal or fen-duck, as if from kriechen, to creep, is for krickente, from Low Ger. kricke (anas crecca), probably referring to the cry of the bird (Andresen).

KRUS-FLOR, a word for crape in Danish and Swedish, as if a compound of Dan. kruse, Swed. krusa, to curl or crisp, and flor, ganze, is in all probability a naturalized form of O. Fr. crêpe (Mod. Fr. crêpe), from Lat. crispus, lit. the crisped or wavy material, and so stands for crêp-flor, another form of the word in Danish being krep-flor, i.e. crêpe-flor. Compare Ger. krausflor.

KUGELHOFF, a word in some parts of Germany for a hood-shaped sort of pastry, as if from kugel, a ball or bullet, and hopf(en), hops, is really, according to Andresen, from kugel, = Lat. cucullus, a hood, and hefe, Bav. hepfen, yeast, barm.

KÜMMELBLÄTTCHEN, "Cummin-leaf," a popular name for the trick with three cards with which sharpers cheat country bumpkins in Germany, is said by Andresen to be a corruption of gimelblättchen, i.e. "Three leaflets" (or cards), gimel, the third letter of the Hebrew alphabet, being used in the Gipsy language for three.

KÜNHAS (sc. Königshase), "King-hare," a German dialectic word, Mid. High Ger. künigel, a rabbit, as if connected with küinec, könig, a king, are corruptions of Lat. cuniculus. Other perversions are küniglein and karnickel (Andresen). The resemblance of Flemish koning, king, to konyn, rabbit, has produced a similar play of words in an old Eng. poem (temp. Ed. I.):—

We shule flo the Conyng ant make roste is loyne.

Political Songs, p. 191 (Camden Soc.).

[We shall flay the rabbit (or king).]

KÜSSEN (Ger.), a cushion, is a corrupted assimilation to küssen, kissing, of Fr. cousin, It. cuscino, derived through a form culcitinum, from Lat. culcita, a cushion. See COUETTE.

KUTSCHE (German), "coach," the word for a bed used at Ziethen in Prussia where a French colony has been settled, is the German mispronunciation of the French couche (Revue des Deux Mondes, Feb. 15, 1876). Ger. kutsche, a hot-bed, is of the same origin (Andresen).

L.

LACHS, a German word for the salmon, so spelt as if connected with lache, a pool or lake, is really the same word as Scand. lav, a salmon.

LAKRITZE (Ger.), liquorice, is a Germanized form (cf. ritze, a scratch or chink) of Lat. liquiritia. See REGALIZ.

LAMANEUR (Fr.), a pilot, is an assimilation to gouverneur, a steersman, of old Fr. laman, which, as well as Fr. locman, has been formed from Dut. loodsman, old Eng. lodesman, lodeman, A. Sax. lād-man, "way-man," the man that shows the way, a guide.

LAMBERTSNUSZ, "Lambert's nut," a German name for the filbert, signified originally the nut from Lombardy, the Lombards (Langobarden), having formerly been called Lamparten (Andresen).

LAMPETRA, the modern Latin name of the lamprey (It. lampreda), does not occur in any classical author. Pliny calls this fish mustela. Dr. Badham observes that the real derivation of this word is our own lamprey through lamproie, lampryon, lampetron, but he is certainly mistaken when he says that lamprey is itself derived from lang, long, and prey, prick, pride, the name of the small river fish of the same species (Prose Halieutics, p. 438). Lampetra, as if lambens petram, "lick-stone," or "suck-stone," is an attempt to make the name of the fish significant of its characteristic habit of attaching itself firmly to stones by its mouth. The original meaning, however, may be traced probably in the Breton lamprez, from lamp, slippery.

LANTDERI (O. H. German), is for the Latin latro, as if a land-plague. Compare It. landra, slandra.

LANTERNER (Fr.), to talk nonsense, to trifle (lanternes, nonsense, lanter- nier, a trifle), has probably nothing to do with the light-giving lanterne. In old French it means to dally, loiter, or play the fool with (Cotgrave), apparently from Flem. lenteren, to delay, act lazily (Kilian; but? a misprint for leu-teren, to loiter). So It. lanternare, to goe loytring about and spend the time in foolish and idle matters (Florio). Compare Flem. lanterfanten, to trifle; Dut. lanterfanten, to loiter (Sewel); lundern, to loiter (Id.); Fr. lendre, O. Fr. landreux (Bret. landar), idle, lazy.

LANZKNECHTE, so spelt sometimes in German, as if to denote soldiers armed with a lance (lanze), is an ignorant corruption of Landsknecht, a foot-soldier in the service of the lord of the manor (Landesherr), because a lance, as distinguished from a spear (spiesz), was properly a knightly horseman's weapon.

LAUTE, the German word for a lute, as if connected with laut, sound, is obviously the same word as Prov. laút, Sp. laúd, Fr. luth, Portg. alaúd, Arab. al'úd.

LAUTUMÆ, a Latin word for a stone-quarry, is a form of latomicæ, Greek latomia, literally a "stone-cutting" (from laós and tomē), assimilated apparently, regardless of sense, to the adjective lautus, rich, sumptuous.

LEBKUCHEN, a German word for gingerbread, so spelt as if having some connexion with leben, is pleonastically compounded of Lat. libum, a cake, and kuchen. A Hessian corruption is leckkuchen, as if "dainty-cake" (cf. Ger. lecker, lickerish, nice).—Andresen.

LEBSUCHT, "Life-malady," a frequent perversion of the German word lebzuucht or leibzuucht, maintenance for life, jointure, annuity, from zucht, rearing, discipline, breeding (Andresen).

LECKERZWEIG, "licker-twig" or dainty-stick, a name for liquorice found in some of the German dialects, is a corruption of Lat. liquiritia, Greek glukurrhiza, Ger. lakritze.

LENDORE (Fr.), an idle, drowsy fellow, is altered from old Fr. landreux (Bret. landar, idle), under the influence of endormi, sleepy, il endort (Diez). Compare Picard. lendormi, idle, indifferent (Scheler).

LEPRACHAUN, an Anglo-Irish word for a pigmy sprite, like a little old man, generally engaged, when discovered, in cobbling a shoe, Irish leithbhrágan, as if derived from leith, one, brog, shoe, an, artificer. Another spelling is lupracháin, and the original form is said to be lughchorpáin or luchorpán, i.e. "little-body," from lugh, lu, little, and corpán, bodikin, from corp, a body.

LEUMUND, the German word for report, reputation, often understood to be for leutemund, as if from the mouth, mund, of the people, leute (cf. the saying, "In der Leute Mund sein"), is really from Mid. High Ger. liumunt, from Goth. hliuma, ear, O. Norse hliomr, clamour, report (Andresen), O. H. Ger. hliumunt, = Vedic sromata (good report, glory), and near akin to Ger. (ver-)leumdung (calumny), A. Sax. hlem (noise), hlud, "loud," Icel. liuman, Lat. clamare, and crimen (croemen, report, accusation), inclutus, cluere, Gk. κλέος, all from the root srus, to hear. (See M. Müller, Chips, vol. iv. p. 230.)

LEÜTNANT, a popular German corruption of lieutenant (Bavarian leutenant), as if from leute. Children are wont to say "Hauptmann" after the analogy of "Hauptmann" (= captain).—Andresen.

LIGNE (Fr.), a line, for old Fr. lin, Lat. linum, linea (so old Fr. linage = Mod. Fr. lignage, lineage), so spelt from a false analogy to signe, ligneux, woody, règne, where the g is organic (Lat. signum, lignum, regnum). So teigne, O. Fr. tigste, from Lat. tinea. On the other hand, in bénin, malin, for benigne, maligne, the g which should have been preserved has disappeared. Compare popular Fr. meugnier, prugnier, ugnion, for meunier, prunier, union (so oignon).—Agnel, Influence du Lang. Populaire, p. 112.

LIEBSTÖCKEL, the German name of the plant lovage, as if "Love-stock," a corrupted form of Mid. Lat. levisticum, lubisticum, from Lat. ligusticum, the Ligurian plant (Andresen). Compare O. Eng. LUFESTICE.

LINDWURM, a German word for a dragon, as if so called from linde, the linden-tree under which Sigfrid killed it, is from Mid. High Ger. lint, a snake, and wurm (Grimm).

LIONCORNO (It.), an Unicorn (Florio), a corruption of liocorno, and that of licorno (also written alicorno), all from Low Lat. unicornis; cf. Fr. licorne. So It. liofante, an elephant.

LIQUIRITIA, a Latin corruption of the Greek glukurrhiza ("sweet-root"), liquorice, the last part of the word being assimilated to the common Latin termination, and the first to liquor. Hence the curiously disguised words, Fr. réglisse, Wallon erculisse.

LIS DE VENT (Lily of the wind), an old French term for "A gust or flaw of wind, also an opposition of two contrary winds" (Cotgrave), seems to be a corrupted form of "Lit du vent, terme de Marine, direction exacte du vent" (Gattel).

LISONJA, Spanish and Portuguese, = flattery, so spelt as if connected with liso, smooth, like "flatter" from "flat," is really akin to It. lusinga, O. Fr. losenge, Prov. laruzenga, from laruzar, Lat. laudare, to praise, laus, praise.

LÖWIN, a name for the avalanche in some parts of Switzerland, as if "the lioness" (Ger. löwinn), is a corruption of the German lawine, Grisons lavina, O. H. Ger. lewina, Fr. lavange, L. Lat. lavina, labina, from Lat. labes, labor, to slip.

Und willst du die schlafende Löwin nicht wecken,
So wandle still durch die Strasse der Schrecken.

Schiller, Berglied.

The glacier's sea of huddling cones,
Its tossing tumult tranced in wonder;
And 'mid mysterious tempest-tones,
The luwvine's sliding thunder.

Donett, On the Stelvio.

LAVANT, a Sussex word for a violent flow of water, may be related. "The rain ran down the street in a lavant" (Parish).

LUKOKTÓNOS, Greek (Λυκοκτόνος), "the Wolf-slayer," an epithet of Apollo, appears to have arisen from a confusion of lukos, a wolf, with luké, light, another epithet of the same god being Lukrios.

LUNZE, a Mid. High Ger. word for a lioness, from a confusion of the name of that animal, lewinne (Ger. löwin), with It. lonza, Fr. once, Ger. unze, the "ounce" (Andresen).

LYNCURIUM, a Latin name for amber, Greek lungkourion, from lungkôs ourôs, lynx's urine, so called as if it were lynx's water petrified, is probably a corruption of lingurion, or ligurium, so named because found originally in Liguria in N. Italy. "Ligure" in Exodus xxviii. 19, translating Heb. leshem (? from lâsham, to lick up, attract), in the Vulgate is ligurius, in Lxx. ligurion (see Bible Dict. s.v.; Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-book, s.v.).

It is said of them [Linxes], that they knowing a certain virtue in their vrine, do hide it in the sand, and that thereof commeth a certaine pretious stone called Lyncurium, which for brightnesse resembleth the Amber. . . . But in my opinion it is but a fable: For Theophrast himselfe confesseth that Lyncurium, which he calet Lyngurium, is digged out of the earth in Lyguria. . . . It is also very probable, that seeing this Amber was first of all brought into Greece out of Lyguria, according to the denomination of all strange things, they called it Lyngurium after the name of the country, whereupon the ignorant Latines did feigne an etimology of the worde Lyncurium, quasi Lynxis vrinam, and vpon this weake foundation haue they raised that vaine buildinge.—Topsell, History of Four-footed Beasts, p. 493 (1608).

In those countries where the Onces breed, their vrine (after it is made) congealeth into a certain yeie substance, & waxes drie, & so it comes to be a certain pretious stone like a carbuncle, glittering and shining as red as fire, and called it is Lyncurium.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. History, tom. i. p. 218 (1634).

Demonstratus calls Amber Lyncurion, for that it commeth of the vrine of the wild beast named Onces or Lynces.—Id. tom. ii. p. 606.

M.

MAAKKLAAR. Sewel in his Woordenboek (1708) notes on the word maakelaar, a broker, a procurer of bargains, "some conceited fellows of that trade, that understand nothing of the true orthography, will write Maakklaar; just as if the signification of this word was Make clear or ready: But if they had learn'd the Etymology, they might know, that this substantive is derived from maakelen after the same manner as kakelaar proceeds from kakelen."

MACCHABÉES, DANSE DES, an old Fr. name for the Dance of Death, the favourite allegorical representation of the Middle Ages, as if it consisted of the seven Maccabee brothers and their mother, Low Lat. chorea Macchabeorum (Du Cange), is in all probability a corruption of danse macabre, i.e. dance of the cemetery or tombs, from Arab. maqābir, tombs (plu. of maqbara), whence also Prov. Span. macabes, a cemetery, Portg. al-mocavarr (Devic).

C'est la danse des Machabées,
Où chacun à danser apprend.

La Grande Danse Macabre des hommes et des femmes, 1728.

See Nisard, Histoire des Livres Populaires, tom. ii. p. 275 seq.

MÄHRETTIG, "Mare-radish," a pedantic attempt made to assimilate the German word meerretig (i.e. the rettig or radish that loves wet, marshy ground, meer) to the English "horse-radish" (Andresen, Vollesetymologie, p. 6).

MAIN-BOURNIE, } old French words
MAIN-BONNE, } for guardianship, patronage, protection (Cotgrave), so spelt as if derived from main, hand, like maintenance, are corrupted from older Fr. mainbour, mambourg, which are adaptations of O. H. Ger. muntboro, guardian, muntburti, protection, from munt, hand, and beran, to bear. Compare A. Sax. mund-bora, L. Lat. mundiburudus, a guardian (Diez). Similar corruptions are It. mano-valdo for monovaldo, mondualdo, from O. H. Ger. munt-walt, administrator; and Sp. mamicordio for monocordio, a monochord.

MAIN-DE-GLOIRE (French), the mandrake, is a corruption of mandegloire, mandragore (It. mandragola), from Lat. mandragoras. See HAND-OF-GLORY, p. 161.

MAIN-D'ŒUVRE (Fr.), "workmanship, manual labour," a word curiously inverted for œuvre de main (pretty much as if we wrote workyhand for handy-work), seems to be an unhappy assimilation of that expression to manœuvre.

MAJORANA (Portg.), Sp. mayorana, It. maggiorana, marjoram, are derived from Lat. amaracus (? amaracinum), but apparently assimilated to major, It. maggiore.

MALADRERIE (Fr.), an hospital for lepers, is an assimilation of the older form maladerie, house of malades, to ladrerie, an hospital for the leprous (ladre, one afflicted like Lazarus.—Luke xvi. 19).

MALAMOQUE, a name that French sailors give to the albatross, as if "ill to mock," it being a bird superstitiously venerated by seamen (see Coleridge's Ancient Mariner), is regarded by Devic as a probable corruption of mamelouk, a mameluke, Arab. mamlūk, a slave, with allusion to its dark plumage and beak.

MALHEUR (Fr.), misfortune, old Fr. mal eür (malum augurium), spelt with h from an imagined connexion with heure as used in the popular expression à la malheure! which is really quite distinct (being from mala hora). See HEUREUX.

Tant sunt maluré.

Vie de Seint Auban, l. 354.

A la malheure est-il venu d'Espagne.

Motière, L'Etourdî, ii. 13.

MALITORNE (Fr.), gawky, awkward, so spelt as if it meant mal tourné (male tornatus), ill turned out, badly made, like mal-bâti, ill-shaped, is a corruption of maritorne, a coarse, ugly girl, derived from Maritornes (Scheler; Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction), the name of a hideous Asturian wench in Don Quixote, a servant at the inn which the knight mistook for a castle, thus described:—

A broad-faced, flat-headed, saddle-nosed dowdy; blind of one eye, and the other almost out. . . . She was not above three feet high from her heels to her head; and her shoulders, which somewhat loaded her, as having too much flesh upon them, made her look downwards oftener than she could have wished.—Don Quixote, pt. i. ch. 16.

The Maritornes of the Saracen's Head, Newark, replied, Two women had passed that morning.—Sir W. Scott.

MÁMLAT, Hindústání corruption of the English word omelet, as if it had some connexion with mámlat, muámlat, affair or business.

MAMMONE, a baboon, according to Diez from Gk. mímo (μῦμός). If so, it has been assimilated to mamma, a nurse or mother, just as It. monna, Sp. mona, Bret. mouna, a "monkey," meant originally an old woman, and Fr. guenon, a female ape, is prob. akin to our "quean."

MANDEL, the German word for an almond, an assimilation to the native mandel, a mangle, of prov. Fr. amandele, Prov. almandola (for amandola), corrupted, with inserted n, from Lat. amygdala.

MANDRAAGERSKRUID, a corruption of mandragora, used in the Netherlands. Kruid = herb, wort (Ger. kräut).—Andresen, p. 27.

MANICORDIO (Span. and Portg.), Fr. manicordion, a musical instrument, a "manichord," as if from manus, is the It. monocordo, Gk. monochordon, a one-stringed instrument.

MAQUEREAU (French), a pander or go-between, is an assimilation to maquereau, a mackerel (O. Fr. makereh, the spotted fish, from Lat. macula, a spot), of Dut. makelaar, a pander or broker, from makelen, to procure, which is from maken, to make (Skeat, Scheler). See MAAKKLAAR.

MARÉE EN CARÊME, "Fish in Lent," is a modern French corruption of mars en carême, an old proverbial saying dating as far back at least as 1553, "As sure as March is found in Lent" (Gémin, Récréations Philolog. i. 225).

Rien plus que Mars faut en carême.

Proverbes de Jeh. Mielot (15th cent.).

However, Lamesangère says that the two expressions—"Cela arrive comme une marée en carême, ou bien comme Mars en carême"—must not be confounded; the former being used of a thing that comes pat or happens apropos, the latter of that which never fails to happen at a certain time (De Lincy, Proverbes Français, i. 95).

MARESCHAL (old French), a marshal, It. marescalco (meaning originally no more than a groom, O. H. Ger. maraschalh, a "horse-servant," from marah, a horse (or "mare"), and schalh, a servant), seems to have become a title of honour and dignity from an imagined connexion with Lat. martialis, martial, a follower of Mars, with which word it was frequently confounded. Thus Matt. Paris says that a warlike and active man was called "Marescallus, quasi Martis Senescallus" (p. 601). (See Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, 1634, p. 324.) See MARSHALL, p. 233.

Aubau—de la cité un haut mareschal.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 21 (ed. Atkinson).

Divers persons were . . . . executed by Marshal Law; one . . . . was brought by the Sheriffs of London and the Knight-Marshal . . . . to be executed upon a Gibbit.—Howell, Londinopolis, p. 56.

You may completely martial them in a Catalogue.—Evelyn, Correspondence, p. 614 (repr. 1871).

MARQUETENTE, } Wallon words for a MARQUETAINE, } sutler or vivandière, are corruptions of Ger. markettender, itself corrupted from It. mercandante, a chapman or merchant, another form of mercantante, from mercatare, to trade, mercato, a market.

MASTOUCHE (Prov. Fr. of Belgium), the nasturtium, is corrupted from It. masturzo, Sp. mastuerzo, which are corruptions of Lat. nasturtium, for nasitortium, i.e. "nose-twister," the plant whose hot taste causes one to make wry faces. So Catalon. morritort, "nose-twist," the nasturtium.

MATHA', "death," a Jewish corruption of the mass, or liturgical service (Von Bohlen, Genesis, i. 320).

MATHIEU SALÉ, VIEUX COMME, a Wallon corruption of the phrase "Vieux comme Mathusalem" (Sigart).

MAULAFFE, "Ape-mouth," a German word for a simpleton, is probably a corruption of maulauf, i.e. "open-mouth," a gaper. Compare Fr. béguéule, badaud, Greek chaínos, Prov. Eng. gawney, gawney, gaby, all denoting a gaping booby.

MAULESEL, } German words for a MAULTHER, } mule, are derived from Lat. mulus, which word, regardless of meaning, has been transformed into Ger. maul, the mouth.

MAULROSE, a provincial German corruption of malve, the mallow (Andresen).

MAULSCHELLE, a box (schelle) on the jaw or chops (maul), a name given to a kind of wheaten cake in Holstein and other parts of Germany, is corrupted from Mid. High Ger. mutschel (also muntschel, and muntschelle), dim. forms of mutsche (Mod. metze, = miller's multure or peck). A curious parallel is Fr. talmouse, (1) a box or blow on the mouth, (2) a cheese-cake.

MAULWURF, the German name of the mole, as if from its habit of casting (werfen) up earth with its snout (maul), shows its true origin in the older forms moltwürfe, moltwurfe, i.e. mould-caster, from molt, earth, O. Eng. mouldiwarp. In Low Ger. dialects it is called mülworm from its living in the earth like a worm, Franconian mauraff (maueraffe?).—Andresen.

With her feete she diggeth, and with her nose casteth away the earth, and therefore such earth is called in Germany mal werff, and in England Molehill.—Topsell, Historie of Foure-footed Beasts, p. 500 (1608).

MAUVAIS (Fr.), old Fr. and Prov. malvais, It. malvagio, is an assimilation to mal, Lat. malus, of an older word balvais, from O. H. Ger. balvási, Goth. balwa-wesis (?), bad, from balwa-wesei, wickedness, balvus, evil, akin to bale (Diez; Diefenbach, i. 272).

Ki obeissent à lur mauvois voler.

Vie de Saint Auhan, l. 1680.

[Who obeyed their evil will.]

MEERKATZE, "Sea-cat," a German name for a monkey, as if the long-tailed animal from over sea, is maintained by some to be a corrupt form of the Sanskrit markata, an ape (Andresen, p. 6).

MEIGRAMME, the name of the plant marjoram in Mid. High Ger., as if from Meie, May, is a corruption of majoran, Low Ger. meieran, It. majorana, from Lat. amaracum (Andresen).

MELIACA (It.), an apricot, is derived from Armeniaca (Diez), the Armenian fruit, but no doubt popularly confounded with mela, an apple. Florio give armeniaco and armellino, an apricot.

MENDRÁCULA, } Portuguese words
MENDRÁGULA, } denoting an allurement or enticement, are also used of the mandragora, of which word they are probably corruptions, under the influence of mendoso, lying, mendigar, to beg, &c. The mandrake was sometimes used as a love-philtre (cf. Gen. xxx. 15).

MENSONGE (Fr.), a lie, on account of its termination has sometimes been regarded as a compound of somnium, songe, and mentis, as if a dream of the mind, a delusion. The word probably represents Lat. mentitio (Prov. mentizó), and has been assimilated to the synonymous calonge (calogna, from Lat. calumnia), which it supplanted (Diez).

MERDORN, a myrtle in Mid. High. Ger., is a corruption of mirtel (Andresen).

MÈRE-GOUTTE (Fr.), the first juice which runs from the grape in the wine-vat, as if that which stood in the relation of mère or mother to that which followed (as in the Semitic idiom "mother of wine" = the vine; "son of grain" = bread; Gaelic macnabracha, "son of malt" = whisky), and so "primitive," "principal," is from Lat. mera gutta, a pure drop, Lat. merus, pure. So mère-laine, fine wool, and mère-perle (Scheler).

MÉRŪPĒS, an appellation given to meū in Homeric Greek, and generally understood to mean "possessing the gift of articulate speech," in accordance with its obvious derivation from meiromai and ēps (lit. dividing the voice, as Milton says the lark "divides her music"). M. Lenormant maintains that this ancient expression can only mean "those who issued from Mérou," i.e. Mount Mérou, a primeval residence of the Aryan tribes (Histoire Ancienne de l'Orient, tom. i. p. 34, 3rd ed.).

MESSNER, or Meszner, a German word for a sexton, as if connected with messe, the mass, is really for mesner, from O. H. Ger. mesināri, Mid. Lat. mansionarius, a building-keeper (Andresen).

METÁTHRONOS (Greek), as if from meta and thronos, is a corrupted form of the Heb. metatron (מטטרון), the Jewish name of the mediating angel.

METS (Fr.), a dish, altered from old Fr. mes, "a mess," It. messo, from Lat. missum, that which is sent up or put on the table, under the influence of mettre, It. mettere.

METTRE AU VIOLON, a French cant phrase meaning "to put in prison." It is only a modern substitute for a much older expression "mettre au salterion" (i.e. psalterion). This latter word denoted not a psaltery, nor the psalter, but especially the seven penitential psalms, and so the original meaning of the phrase was to put to penance, in a place where one would have abundant time to repent and think over his folly, to put in prison. When the instrument "psalterion" was superseded in public favour by the violin, the cant expression was changed to its present shape (Gémin, Récitations Philolog. i. 227). Perhaps, just as violon, viole, itself comes from Lat. vitula, the slang violon may be an adaptation of vitulos in the following phrase:—

Vitulos, The last word of a Latine Psalm of mercy, which beginning with the word Miserere hath bred the phrase, Tu aurus du miserere jusque à vitulos, for one that to be whipped, extremely, or a long time.—Cotgrave.

MEUR-BHEIL, } the Gaelic words for a MIORBHUIIL, } miracle, as if from the "finger of Bel"—Robertson, Gaelic Topography, p. 425, and Armstrong, Dictionary, s.v. (cf. "If I by the finger of God cast out devils."—Luke xi. 20), is a manifest corruption of "marvel," Fr. merveille, Lat. mirabile.

"The priests of Beil was the men that was called Druids, the miracles which they pretended to perform was called meurbheileachd (beil-fingering)," says a peasant in J. F. Campbell's Tales of W. Highlands, i. p. lx.

MIE (Fr.), a mistress, sweet-heart, or darling, apparently a figurative usage of mie, a crumb (Lat. mica), as if une petite, like mioche, a little urchin or brat (a crumbling), is formed from mamie, my love, which was mistakenly resolved into ma mie, instead of m'amie, the original form, standing for ma amie, my beloved one. Rabelais uses "par sainte m'amie" for "par sainte Marie" (Cotgrave).

Mais j'aime trop pour que je die
Qui j'ose aimer,
Et je veux mourir pour ma mie
Saus la nommer.

A. de Musset, Chanson de Fortunio.

Et cependant, avec toute sa diablerie,
Il faut que je l'appelle et mon cœur et mamie.
Molière, Les Femmes Savantes, ii. ix.

MIRABELLE (Fr.), a kind of plum, Sp. mirabel, It. mirabella, as if the wondrous beautiful, is a corruption of the more correct forms, Fr. myrobalan, It. mirabolano, Gk. myrobálanus, the ben-nut.

MIRECOTON (Fr.), "The delicate yellow peach, called a Melicotony" (Cotgrave), so spelt as if from mîrer, to admire, is a corrupt form of melicoton, Lat. malum cotoneum or cydonium. See MELICOTTON, p. 236.

MITOUCHE, SAINTE (Fr.), a prude, an affected hypocritical girl, is an alteration of the older form Saincte nitouche, a hypocrite (Cotgrave), one who n'y touche, pretends not to care for a desired object, not even touching it, under the influence of old Fr. mitis, hypocritical (Cotgrave), mitou, mitouin, a hypocrite (Id.).

MOELLON, rubble, loose pieces of stone used to fill up in building, so spelt as if to denote the moelle or marrow of a wall, is an alteration of old and prov. Fr. moilon, of the same meaning (Cotgrave), also middle (cf. moye = media, the middle of a stone), from mediolus. But moelle (for meolle), from Lat. medulla, the middle part, is ultimately of the same origin. However, old Fr. moilon, being used also for a soft or tender stone (Cotgrave), is perhaps from Lat. mollis, soft.

MOFETTE, } poisonous gas or va-MOUFETTE, } pour, is derived from
It. muffa, Dut. muf, musty, Ger. muff, mould, perhaps assimilated to It. mefite, mephitic, Lat. mephitis.

MOINEAU (Fr.), a sparrow, apparently formed from moine (like It. monaco, monk, used as a bird-name), as if the bird that sits "alone upon the housetop" (Ps. cii. 7), is really from moinel, moisnel, a contraction of moisonel, a diminutive of old Fr. moison, a small bird, Norm. moisson, from a Lat. muscio, derived from musca, a fly (Scheler, Diez). See TIT-MOUSE, which is of the same origin.

MON, an old Fr. particle meaning quite, surely, "c'est mon" (Molière), it is quite so, is from old Fr. monde, true, certain, from Lat. mundus, clearly (Diez).

MORBLEU! CORBLEU! MORT BLEU! SAMBLEU! TÊTE BLEU! decent and evasive perversions of the profane French oaths, Par la mort Dieu! le corps Dieu! Saint Dieu! tête de Dieu! These corruptions are said to have arisen in the time of St. Louis, who; being strongly opposed to the evil custom of swearing, decreed the penalty against all blasphemers of having the tongue pierced with a red-hot iron. (L'Intermediaire, Oct. 10, 1875, p. 593).

So Morguene! Morguienne! a popular expletive (like Dang it!), is for old Fr. mordienne, "Gogs deathlings" (Rabelais, Cotgrave), probably for mordie, i.e. mort Dieu. Compare Morgoy for mort Dieu (Cotgrave); Par le sang bieu (Maistre Pierre Pathelin); palsambleu and palsangué for "par le sang Dieu."

MORPOIL, or morpoye, "Dead hair," a Wallon word for down, is a corruption of Namur moir-pouyage, "fine hair," where moir, small, less, = Fr. moindre (Sigart).

MORTAISE (Fr.), a mortise, or hole in a piece of wood made to receive another piece called the tenon, Sp. mortaja, apparently akin to mors, old Fr. mords, a bit or biting, mortier, &c., as if that which grips or bites, is probably from Arab. mûrtazz, mûrtazza, fixed or inserted (Devic, Supp. to Littré).

MOSTRICH, German word for mustard, as if from most, must, with the common termination -rich, is a less correct form of Mid. High Ger. muſthart, Low Ger. mustert, mostert, Fr. moutarde.

MOUCHARENNE, a Wallon name for the earwig, is an accommodation to mouche, a fly, of musaraigne, which generally means a shrew-mouse (Sigart).

MULATTO (It.) a mulatto, Fr. mulâtre, Sp. mulato, "the son of a black Moore, and one of another nation" (Minsheu), so spelt as if it denoted one of a mixed breed like a mule, mulo, muleto, appears to be an altered form of Arab. mûallad, one horn of an Arab father and a foreign mother, or of a slave father and a free mother (so De Sacy, Engelmann, Devic).

MUNDUS, "the world," the name given by the Romans to the pit in the Comitium which was regarded as the mouth of Orcus, and was opened three days in the year for the souls to step to the upper world, is probably, according to Müller, Etrusker (iii. 4, 9), a Latinized form of the Etruscan Mantus, the King of the Shades, or Hades, from whom the city Mantua received its name. See G. Dennis, Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. i. p. lix. (ed. 1878).

MURMELTHIER, the German name of the marmot or mountain rat, as if the growling beast, from murmeln, to murmur (compare Fr. marmotte and marmotte, to murmur), is corrupted from mus montis, O. H. Ger. murmanti, Bav. murmentel, Swiss murmentier. See Von Tschudi, Nature in the Alps, trans. p. 229.

The Italians call it Marmota, and Murmont, and according to Matheolus, Murmontana, and the Rhaetians Montanella, . . . in France Marmote, although Marmot be a word also among them for a Munkey. The Germans & especially the Helvetians by a corrupt word drawn from a mouse of the mountain, Murmelthier and Murmentle and some Mistbellerle, by reason of his sharpe whining voyce, like a little Dogs.—Topsell, Hist. of Four-footed Beasts, 1608, p. 521.

MÜRRISCH, a German word equivalent to our morose (Lat. morosus, moody), seems to have been assimilated to the verb murren, to grumble or murmur.

MUSNIER. Cotgrave gives the French proverb, D'Evesque devenir musnier, "From a Bishop to become a miller," i.e. "To become of rich poor, of noble base, of venerable miserable; to fall from high estate to a low one; (The originall was Devenir d'Evesque Aumosnier [an Almoner]; but Time (and perhaps Reason) hath changed Aumosnier into Musnier)."

MUSZTHEIL, a German word for the amount allowed to a widow for her maintenance or alimony, as if a compulsory part (musz), was formerly muszteil, Low Ger. muszdel, i.e. portion of food or sustenance (Mid. High Ger. muos).—Andresen.

MUTTERKREBS, "Mother-crab," a German word for a crab when changing its shell, is properly muterkrebs, from Low German mutern (sc. mausz- ern), to moult, Lat. mutare, to change. Compare Muter, a crawfish in the state of casting its shell.

MUTTERSELIGALLEIN, a German provincial form of mutterseelen-allein, as if from selig, blessed (Andresen).

MYROBOLANT, used popularly in French for wonderful, marvellous, seems to be a whimsical application of myrobolan, an Indian fruit, from an assumption that the first part of the word was derived from mirer, Lat. mirari.

N.

NACHTMARDER, a German corruption of nachtmahr, the night-mare, as if night-marten, Low Ger. nachtmärte.

NEGROMANTE, } It. names for a "nig-NIGROMANTE, } romant orenchanter"
(Florio), Sp. and Portg. nigromante, old Fr. nigremance, so spelt as if derived from negro, nigro, black, Lat. niger, are corruptions of Greek nekromantis, a necromancer, one who raises the spirits of the dead (Greek nekros). See NEGROMANCER, p. 254.

De nigromancie mut fu endocriné.

Vie de Seint Auban, l. 996.

[In necromancy was he deeply learned.]

Que Circe no es una fiera,

Nigromante, encantadora,

Energümena, hechicera,

Súcuba, incuba.

Calderon, El Mayor Enconto Amor,
jorn. ii.

NICHT, } German words for a remedy
NICHTS, } for injurious affections of the eye, as if identical with nicht, nothing (whence the proverbial saying,
"Nichts ist gut für die Augen"), is,
according to Andresen, derived from Greek onychitis.

NIETNAGEL, a German word for an agnail, as if from niet, a rivet, nieten, to clinch, is from the Low Ger. niednagel (so Lessing), that is, High Ger. neidnagel, from neid, envy, it being a popular belief that the person affected has been envied by somebody. Compare the synonymous French word envie (Andresen).

The form nothnagel, "neednail," sc. pain-producing nail, is a later corruption also met with.

NODLOG, an Irish word for Christmas, also nollag, Gaelic nollaig, as if from nod, noble, or Gaelic nodh, new, and la, day, as nollaig also means New Year's Day, is a corruption probably of Fr. noël (Lat. natalis). See Campbell, Tales of W. Highlands, vol. iii. p. 19.

O.

OBUS (Fr.), a shell discharged from a mortar, is the curiously disguised form that Ger. haubitze (also haufnitz, from Bohem. haufnice, a sling), a howitz or howitzer, assumes in French (Diez, Scheler). Hence also It. obizzo, Sp. obuz.

ŒUF-MOLETTE, an old Fr. word for an omelet in Cotgrave; apparently molette (as if a dim. of Lat. mola), a little cake made with eggs, œufs, is a corruption of omelette, a pancake of eggs (Cotgrave), another form of aumelette (Id.), or rather (old and prov. Fr.) amelette, which is itself a corruption of alemette (changed by transposition), and that an altered form of alemelle, a plate, and so a thin flat cake. Finally alemelle is a corrupt form due to la lemelle (from Lat. lamella, i.e. laminula, a dimin. of lamina, a thin plate) being mistaken for l'alemelle, as if the a belonged to the noun instead of to the article (so Littré, Scheler, Skeat). A curious chapter of mistakes this by which lamina was converted into œuf-molette!

OHNMACHT, German for a swoon or fainting fit, as if from ohne, without, macht, power, powerlessness, is from omacht, Mid. High Ger. âmaht, weakness, â being the privative particle (Andresen).

OLEANDRO (It.), the rose bay-tree, or oleander, used also for a weed, and for the "daffadounedillie" (Florio), popularly connected no doubt with oleare, to smell or scent, is derived from L. Lat. lorandrum, a corruption of rhododendrum, under the influence of laurus, the bay-tree.

OLLEPOTTERIE, a German corruption of olla potrida (Fr. pot pourri), as if from Lat. olla, a jar, and pot (Andresen).

ONCTION, curiously used in the Wallon dialect for a right, privilege, or prerogative, is doubtless a corruption of option (Sigart).

ONDAINE, in the dialect of the Wallon du Mons a swath or row of mown grass, so spelt as if it meant figuratively a wave (onde) of the undulating sea of blades, is a corrupt form of Fr. andain, a swath, the quantity mowed or reaped by the labourer at each step he advances, from It. andare, to go.

OOGST-MAAND, the Dutch name for the month of August, is an assimilation of the latter word to oogst, harvest, oogsten, to reap or get in the harvest, as if it meant "the harvest month." If, as is probable, the root is seen in Lat. augere, Greek αἰωῖνο, Goth. aukan, Eng. eke, to increase (cf. Dut. oek, Ger. auch, Goth. auk, "eke," also), oogst and August (Augustus), are of kindred origin. In old Latin charters Augustus is actually used for harvest, as Aoust is in French. Robert of Gloucester uses heruest for the month of August, when he says of Henry I.:— þe Sondag he was ycrownd, & of heruest þe vȳfte day.—ii. p. 422.

Eigenhart calls August Arn Manath, harvest month. In Low Lat. it is called Mensis Messionum. See Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalendarium, pp. 25, 197, 269, 270.

ORANGE (Fr.), Low. Lat. aurantia, assimilations to or, gold, Lat. aurum, with reference to the colour of the fruit, of It. arancio, Sp. naranja, from Pers. nârenj. See ORANGE, p. 264.

ORDONNER (Fr.) is an assimilation to donner (as if ordre-donner) of old Fr. ordener, from Lat. ordinare.

ORENGEL, the German name of the plant eryngo, as if from or (an older form of ohr, ear), and engel, angel, with thought of its marvellous healing property in ear-affections, is a corrupted form of eryngium (Andresen).

ORFRAIE, the French name of the osprey, is for osfraie, Lat. ossifragus, "the bone-breaker," which has been assimilated to words like orfroi beginning with or.

ORION in Mid. High. Ger. was understood to be a morning star, from a presumed connexion with oriens, the East (Andresen).

ORMIER (Fr.), a species of shell-fish, is a corruption of Lat. auris maris, being otherwise known as oreille de mer.

ÖSKA-BJÖRN, "wish-bear," an Icelandic name for a kind of crab, which whoever possessed, it was believed, might have his wish (ösk; cf. A. Sax. wiscan), is probably a corruption of Lat. oniscus, a millepede, Gk. oniskos, a species of fish (see Cleasby, s.v.).

OSTERLUZEI, a German name for the plant birth-wort, as if compounded with oster, east, is corrupted from Lat. aristolochia. In Mid. Low Ger. there is the curious misunderstanding Aristotelis holwort (Andresen).

OSTE-VENTE (old Fr.), a penthouse, a piece of cloth hung or set up before a door, to keep off the wind (Cotgrave), as if a "ward-wind," from O. Fr. oster, to remove, drive off, expel, is a corruption of AUVENT, which see.

OTTER, a German word for an adder or viper, is a distinct work from "otter" in fischotter, and a corrupt form of Low Ger. adder, originally natter, O. H. Ger. natara (Andresen).

OUBLIE (Fr.), a wafer cake, originally the sacramental wafer, is a corruption (with assimilation to oubli, oublier, to forget) of the older form oblée, oblaie, oblaye, Lat. oblata (sc. res), an offering or oblation (Gattel). One French etymologist thought that the oublie denoted a cake so light that when eaten it is soon forgotten—oublié (see Scheler, s.v.).

OURSE (Fr.), as if "she-bear," the left side of a ship or the sheet which fastens the mainsail to the left side of a ship (Cotgrave), is a corruption of orse, Prov. orsa, It. orza, derived from Prov. Dut. lurts, Bav. lurz, the left, the initial l bring popularly mistaken for the article and then dropped (Scheler).

OURSIN (Fr.), a sea-urchin, is an assimilation to oursin, bearish, ursine (with a supposed reference doubtless to its roughness; cf. ourson, a bear's cub), of ourecin, a variety of hérisson (compare Wallon ureçon, Portg. ourico, "urchin"), from Lat. ericionem.

OUTARDE (Fr.), the bustard, old Fr. otarde (Cotgrave), (It. ottarda), probably so spelt from an imagined connexion with its Greek name ōtis, gen. ōtidos (the bird having long ears, ōti), -arde being regarded as the common suffix, as if out-arde (so Liddell and Scott, 3d ed.) Compare It. oti, a Bistard or Horne-owle, otida, a kind of slow-flying Goose (Florio). The more correct form would be autarde (corresponding to autruche), a contraction of Lat. avis-tarda, the "slow-bird"; whence also Sp. acoutarda, Prov. austarda, Portg. abetarda, betarda; also old and prov. Fr. bistarde (Cotgrave, for avistarde), whence Eng. bustard, altered in spelling perhaps under the influence of buzzard.

Next to these are those [Bustards] which in Spain they call the Slow-birds ["Avestardas"], and in Greece Otides.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. i. 281.

P.

PAILLE, CHAPEAU DE, the straw hat, the popular designation of the celebrated picture by Rubens, is a modern corruption of chapeau de poil, the felt hat.

PÁINTEIR, } Irish words for a snare
PÁINTEL, } or net, would seem to be allied forms to painte, a cord or string (cognate with Sansk. pankti, a line, from the root pac, to make fast). When we observe, however, that the Latin has panther, a hunting-net, and the Greek panthéron, "catching all beasts," whence comes Fr. pantière, O. Eng. paunter ("Pride hath in his paunter kauht the heie and the lowe."—Political Songs, Camden Soc. p. 344), we perceive that painteir in Irish is only a borrowed word naturalized by being assimilated to painte.

PALAFRENO (Ital.), a steed or palfrey, Sp. palafren, so spelt as if it denoted a horse led by a bridle (freno, Lat. frenum, as if par le frein), is a corruption of Low Lat. palafredus, parafredus, from Lat. paraveredus, a post-horse, a hybrid word from Greek pará (beside, over and above) + Lat. veredus (a post-horse). Hence also Fr. palefroi, our "palfrey," and by contraction of para- veredus, Ger. pferd, Dut. paard, and the old slang word prad, a horse.

PALAIS (Fr.), the palate, seems to owe its form to a confusion between old Fr. palat (which ought to yield a Mod. Fr. palé or palet), Lat. palatum, and palaïs, a hall or palace, Lat. palatium, with a reference to the high vaulted roof of the mouth. Diez compares Lat. cœli palatum, "palate (i.e. vault) of the sky," Greek ouraniskos (little sky-vault), the palate, It. cielo della bocca.

PALIER, supposed to have some connexion with the Fr. parleur (sc. the speaker or spokesman among his fellows), is still a common local perversion of Polierer, the polisher in mason's and carpenter's work; however *paliere*n was often found formerly for polieren.

PALISSE (old Fr.), "palissade," a popular corruption of Apocalypse. Cotgrave gives paliser, to reveal.

Vous en parlez comme saint Jean de la Palisse.—Rabelais, Pantagruel, ch. xvi.

PAMPINELLA, the Catalan name of the plant pimpinell (Piedm. pampinella), so spelt from a supposed connexion with Lat. pimpinus, a vineleaf, is a corruption of It. pimpinella, Sp. pimpinela, Fr. pimprenelle, all from Lat. bipennella, for bipennula, "two-winged."

PANARICIUM, a Latin name for a disease of the finger-nails, as if from panus, a swelling, is a corrupted form of Gk. paronychium, a sore beside the nail, from pará and ónux.

PANNE (Fr.), plush, velvety stuff, seems to be an assimilation to pan, panneau, Lat. pannus, of old Fr. pene, It. penna, penc, derived from Lat. penna, just as we find in M. H. Ger. federe, (1) a feather, (2) plush.

PANNETON (Fr.), a key-bit, so spelt as if derived from pan (panneau), and denoting the flap or lappet of the key, is a corruption of the older form panneton, the bit or neb of a key (Cotgrave), from penne, a feather or wing. Compare Ger. bart, the "beard" or ward of a key. See PANNE.

PANTOMINEN, a popular corruption in German of pantomimen, as if connected with mienen, mimicry (Andresen).

PÂQUERETTE (Fr.), the daisy, old Fr. pasquerette, so named, not because it flowers about the time of Pâques (Pasques) or Easter (as it flowers almost all the year round), but because it grows in pastures, old Fr. pasquis, or pasqueages. Compare PASCUA.

PAR, in the French phrase de par le roi, in the king's name, is a corrupt spelling of the older form part (Diez).

PARACHUTE (Fr.). This word, as well as parapluie, paravent, and Eng. parasol, is not (as sometimes supposed) compounded with Greek pará, beside or against, like paragraph, paraphrase, parasite, but derived from It. parare, Portg. parar, to ward, fend off, or "parry." Thus the meaning is a "ward-fall," "ward-rain," "ward-sun."

PARACLYTUS, meaning in Greek the "illustrious," is the distorted form in which Mahomet assumed to himself the name of the Paracletus, the "advocate" (Stanley, Eastern Church, p. 311).

PASCUA, Span. and Prov. name of Easter, so spelt from an imagined connexion with Lat. pascua, feeding, pasture, with an allusion to the feasting then indulged in after the Lenten fast, is of course the same word as It. pasqua, Fr. pâques (for pasques), from Lat. and Greek páscha, the Passover (a word often by early Christian writers affiliated on Greek paschein, to suffer), from Heb. pesach, a passing (sc. of the destroying angel).

PATARAFE (Fr.), a scrawl, bad writing, is a popular corruption of parafe, a flourish (Scheler), another form of paragraphe, Lat. and Greek paragrapheus (something written in addition), apparently assimilated to pataud, clumsy, patauger, to mess or muddle, &c.

PATIENCE (Fr.), the name of the sorrel-plant, as well as Low Ger. patich, seems to be corrupted from Lat. lapathum. Compare old Fr. lapas, lapace (Cotgrave). The initial syllable was probably mistaken for the article.

PATRON-MINETTE, se lever dès le, a French popular phrase for getting up early, a corruption of Potron-Minette, &c., lit. "the young of the cat," and so "to rise with the kitten" (Gémin, Récréations Philologiques, i. p. 247).

PEDELL, in German a beadle, as if a derivative of Lat. pes, pedis, because as a messenger he has often to be a-foot, is really the same word as Mid. High Ger. bitel, from bitten, to bid or proclaim, Fr. bédeau, Mid. Lat. bedellus (Andresen).

PENDON (Sp.), a flag or banner, so spelt as if from pendere, to hang, is a corrupt form of Fr. penon, It. pennone, a "pennant," originally a long feathery streamer, from Lat. penna, a feather.

PERTUISANE (Fr.), the offensive weapon called a partisan, so spelt as if from pertuiser, to pierce with holes, pertuis, a hole, is said to be a corruption of It. partigiana (Scheler).

PETRUS, and petrusen, Welsh names for the partridge, as if the startled or timid bird, from petrus, apt to start, petruso, to startle, are seemingly corruptions of the English word. Compare old Fr. perdis, pietris, Sp. perdis, Lat. perdis.

PFFIFFHOLDER, an Alsace word for a butterfly (Carl Engel, Musical Myths and Facts, vol. i. p. 9), as if from pfiff, a fife or whistle, is a corrupted form of an obsolete German word. Compare province Ger. feifalter, O. H. Ger. vieltre, A. Sax. fifalde, Swed. fjäril, Norse fvrelde, Icel. fjfrildil.

PETSCHAFT, a seal or signet in German, has acquired a naturalized aspect in the termination -schaft, but is of Slavonic origin, viz. Russian petschat (Mid. High Ger. betschat).—Andresen.

PFAHLBÜRGER, a citizen living in the suburbs (outside the "pale" or walls), is said to be, not from pfahl, a pale, and bürger, a citizen, but a corruption from Fr. faubourg, for falbourg (from faux, sc. falsus).—Andresen. See, however, FAUXBOURG, p. 475.

PFARRHERR, a German word for a parson, as if "lord of the parish," is perhaps a corruption of pfarrer, Mid. High Ger. pfarraere, a clergyman (Andresen).

PFEFFERMÜNZE, and krausemünze, German names for the plants peppermint and curled mint, were originally and properly compounded with minze, mint (mentha), and not with münze, money (moneta).

PFENNIGBREI, "Penny-pap," a popular word in Bavaria for a panada made of millet, is from Lat. panicum, millet, corrupted into pfennig (Andresen).

PFINGSTERNAKEL, a popular Ger. word for the parsnip, as if connected with Pfingst, Whitsuntide, is a corruption of pastinak, Lat. pastinaca (Philolog. Soc. Proc. v. 140).

PHILIPPE, a French term for a sweetheart, lover, or valentine, is shortened from Philippine, which is a corruption of the German vielliebchen (most darling), also Liebchen (darling), like Maifrau, a lover for a year, a valentine (W. R. S. Ralston, Contemporary Review, Feb. 1878).

"Bonjour, Philippine," is said, playfully, when asking a little present from an acquaintance, Philippine being from Philippchen, altered from Ger. vielliebchen, well-beloved (Littré).

PHILOMELA, a poetical name for the nightingale, probably from some confused notion that the word was derived from Greek philos and mēlos, as if "the song-loving." It seems originally to have been a name for the swallow, and in Greek philomēla is "the fruit-lever," from mēlon, fruit. See Conington, Vergil, Ecl. vi. 78.

PHOREION (φορεῖον), a late Greek word for a litter or palanquin, is thought by Dr. Delitzsch to be properly a Semitic word adopted from the Hebrew appiryōn of the same meaning, which word it is used to translate in the Septuagint version of The Song of Songs, iii. 9 (Vulgate ferculum). The Midrash identifies appiryōn with purryōn = phoreion.

PHROURAI (φρουραι), watches, guards, in Josephus and the Septuagint (Esth. ix. 26), is a corruption of Purim, the Jewish Feast, from the Persian bahre, "lots;" cf. pars (Farrar, Life of Christ, ii. 469).

PHTHARMOS (φθαρμός), a Cretan word for the Evil Eye, as if destruction (from φθειρώ), is for phthalmos (ὄφθαλμός), the eye (Lord Strangford, Letters and Papers, p. 114).

PICKELHAUBE, a German term for a sort of helmet, as if from Pickel and haube, a cap or coif, more correctly written Bickelhaube, is for Beckelhaube, a word most probably derived from becklen, a basin. Compare Mid. Lat. bacinetum from bacinum (Andresen).

PIMP-STEEN, the Danish name of the pumice-stone, as if the tipple-stone, from pimpe, to tipple, on account of its bibulous or absorbent nature, is a corruption of pumice-stone, Lat. pumex.

PIZZICAROLO, the modern Italian word for a dealer in salt provisions (as if from pizzicare, to huckster), is corrupted from pescigarolo, i.e. pesci + garo + lo, a dealer in fish garum (Badham, Prose Halieutics, p. 72).

PLAIN (Fr.), a vat wherein tanners steep their skins, apparently a flat (plain) receptacle, is a corrupt form of old Fr. pelain (Cotgrave), or pelin, from old Fr. pel (= peau), Lat. pellis, skin. Compare Eng. plush, from Fr. peluche. Hence plamer, to steep skins, for plainer.

So in popular French glée for gelée, plé for pelée, plisson for pelisson, purté, vilté, for pureté, vileté, &c. (Agnel, p. 125).

PLANTOFA, a Catalonian word for a slipper, so spelt as if derived from Lat. planta, the foot, the sole, is really a corruption of pantofla, It. pantofola, Fr. pantoufle, a nasalized form of patofle, from patte, the foot (Diez).

PLANTUREUX (Fr.), abundant, from old Fr. planté, abundance, a corrupt form of plenté, plenty, for plenité, Lat. plenitas, fulness, from plenus, full.

PLATA, CAMINO DE, "silver road," a common Spanish corruption of the old Roman via lata, a high road. In allusion to this, when the great road to La Coruña was finished, the expense was so enormous that the king inquired if it was paved with silver (Ford, Gatherings from Spain, p. 45).

PLUMETIS (Fr.), a rough draught, also short notes, a summary delivered in writing (in Cotgrave), also plumitif, a minute-book, apparently derived from plume, a pen, like plumeteur, a penman, quill-driver, or scrivener. M. Scheler thinks it may be from prumitif, a Prov.

Fr. form of primitif, comparing Low Lat. primitivum, a protocol (so Prov. Fr. prume for prime, Wallon prumié for premier). However plumetis, tambouring, embroidery, is no doubt from a verb plumeter, to adorn with feathery sprays, and heraldic plumeté is sprinkled with figures resembling bunches of feathers.

POIDS (Fr.), a weight, spelt with a d from an imagined connexion with Lat. pondus, is old Fr. pois, Prov. pens, from Lat. pensum, something hung on to the scale.

ΠΟΙΩΤῆΣ (ποιότης), quality (from ποιος = qualis), has acquired in Plato a connotation of activity from the reflex influence of the verb ποιεῖν, to make or do, with which it was supposed to be connected (Theæstet., 182, A.). This accounts for the argument of Speusippus, that pleasure, only being ποιότης, i.e. activity, was not good (Aristotle, Eth. Nic. X. iii. 1).

POIREAU, the French word for a leek, as if called so from its resemblance in shape to a pear (poire), is a corruption of porreau, from Lat. porrum.

POIRES DE MI-SERGEANT (Fr.), the occasional pronunciation of poires de misser-Jean, so called apparently from one Jean (misser = mesure), who introduced or propagated them (Génin, Récréations Philolog. i. 226).

POISSARD, as applied to a fish-woman, and to anything low and scurrilous, like our Billingsgate, as if from poisson, is a corrupt use of the old word poissard, "a filcher, nimmer, purloiner, pilferer; one whose fingers are as good as so many lime-twigs" (Cotgrave), as if "pitch-fingered," a derivative of poiv (Scheler, Compare Fr. argot poisser, to steal (Larchey).

POISSON (fish), a small measure of liquids in French, e.g. poisson d'eau-de-vie, a glass of brandy, is no doubt a corruption of the older word pochon, poçon, perhaps a diminutive of O. Fr. poch = pouce, an inch measure (Scheler, Larchey). Compare "Posson, a little measure for milk, verjuice, and vinegar, not altogether so big as the quarter of our pint" (Cotgrave).

Un posson de lait d'asnesse.

Satire Ménippée, ch. i.

See also Génin, Récréations Philologiques, tom. i. p. 177.

POIVRE (pepper), used for drunk in the Parisian argot, is a corruption of the old word poivre (Mod. Fr. pourpre), red-faced, purple, from drink (L. Larthey).

POKAL, a German word for a goblet or large cup, as if identical with Lat. poculum, a cup, is really from Fr. and Sp. bocal, It. boccale, derived through the Mid. Lat. baucala from Greek βαυκάλης, a drinking vessel (Andresen).

POLICE (Fr.), a contract of agreement, a policy, is It. polizza, from a Low Lat. polecticum, polyptychum, assimilated to police, policy, from Gk. politeia.

POLO-VERSÁ, a Limousin word for to turn upside down, bottom upwards (polo = clunis), is a corruption of Fr. bouleverser, to turn over like a ball (boule).—Diez.

PORC-ÉPIC (Fr.), the porcupine, as if "pig-spike," is a corruption of old Fr. porc-espi, = It. porco spinoso (porcus spinarum), "thorny pig," espi representing Prov. Fr. espín, Lat. spina, not Lat. spica.

PORTE-ÉPINE, a French name for the porcupine, Sp. puerco espino, Prov. porc-espin, It. porco spinoso, the "thorny pig," so spelt as if the animal that carries thorns or prickles, Lat. portans spinas.

Whatever virtue we attribute unto hedgehogs the same is more effectually in the porc-espine.—Holland, Pliny, tom. ii. p. 364 (1634).

POSTHUMUS, an old mis-spelling of postumus (superlative of post), as if denoting a child born after its father was under ground, "post humationem patris."

POT-LEPEL, the Mod. Dutch word for a ladle, as if a pot-spoon, is said to be a corrupted form of the older pol-lepel, i. e. the spoon with a long handle; cf. Eng. pole-axe (Dr. A. V. W. Bickers). Sewel (1708) gives both forms. The Dutch word for pole, however, seems to be pols.

POULAIN (Fr.), a botch, bubo, or tumour, seems to be an assimilation to poulain, a foal or colt, of (pullule) It. pullula, a little wheal or blister, It. pullulare, to blister, to bud or burgeon, pullulatione, a budding or blistering (Florio), Lat. pullulare, to sprout or germinate. There was perhaps some confusion with empoule, a blister or rising of the skin (from Lat. ampulla, a globular flask), where em may have been mistaken for en (= in) and dropped.

POULET (Fr.), a love-letter, apparently the same word as poulet, a chicken (compare Lat. pullus, as a term of endearment, my pigeon, my chicken; Fr. poulette, poulot, a darling), is perhaps from Low Lat. poletum, a shortened form of polecticum for polyptychum, a document of many leaves. Hence also pouillé, an inventory or register.

POULPE (Fr.), a mollusc, an octopus, has no reference to its pulpy or fleshy nature (poulpe, Lat. pulpa), but is contracted from Lat. polypus, like It. polpo.

POURCIAU, a "pig," a Wallon word for a swelling or bruise, stands for an original bourciau, Picard. boursiau, Liège boursai; Wallon abourser, to form into an abscess.

POURPIER (Fr.), the plant purslain, formerly pourpie and poulpie, stands for poulpiéd, Lat. pulli-pedem, "chicken's-foot," Prov. Fr. piépou.

PRÆSECA (Lat.), a corruption or etymological postulate of brassica, cabbage, in Varro (De Ling. Lat. 5, 21, § 104, ed. Müller), as if derived from præsecare, to cut off the tip, and so meaning the vegetable the top of which is cut off, leaving the stalk in the ground.

PRATIQUE (Fr.), the instrument by which a showman makes his puppets talk, is an assimilation of Sp. platica, conversation (from platicar, to converse), to Fr. pratiquer, a word ultimately identical (Scheler).

PREVEIRE (old Fr.), also prevoire, provoire, a priest, sometimes imagined to be from Lat. provisorem, are the old oblique cases of presbyterum, acc. of presbyter (Scheler).

PRIME (Fr.), a bounty or bonus, is not a primary or chief thing (prime, Lat. primus), but altered from Eng. *premiu*m, Lat. *premiu*m (Scheler).

Prime, a lapidary's term, is old Fr. presme, from Lat. Gk. prisma, a prism.

PRISANT, in Mid. High Ger. an honorary gift, like Fr. présent, is from Lat. presentare, but altered so as to suggest a connexion with pris, a prize (Andresen).

PROMONTORIUM (Lat.). Andresen asserts that this word is not a derivative from mons, as it appears to be, but is properly promuntorium, from prominere, to jut out, be prominent (Volks-etymologie, p. 16).

PROVENDE (Fr.), provisions, is from provenda, a corruption of præbenda, things to be supplied, under the influence of providenda, from providere, things to be provided or seen to beforehand.

PROVIGNER (Fr.), to plant a layer or slip, so spelt as if it had something to do with vigne, a vine, is from provin, a layer, old Fr. provaing, It. propaggine, Lat. propaginem.

PUISSANT (Fr.), powerful, Norm. Fr. poissant, It. possente, an incorrect form of "potent" (Lat. potentem), derived from a barbarous possentem, i.e. pot + esse + entem, due to an amalgamation of the infin. posse with the participle potens.

Cist est li tut poissant.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 807.

PULBRET, a Mid. High Ger. word for a lectern or reading-desk, so spelt as if from bret, a board, is a corrupted form of Lat. pulpitum, Fr. pupitre (Andresen).

PURÉE, the French word for soup, esp. a soup made of vegetables, so spelt as if to denote a clear soup, from pur, clear, is a corrupted form of an older word porée or porrée, Low Lat. porrata, a soup made of leeks (Lat. porrum). Compare Eng. porridge, old Eng. porrette, porray, porrey, perrey.

Porre, or purre, potage. Pisium.—Prompt. Parv.

Porée, Porrée, pot-herbs, and thence also potage made of Beets, or with other herbs.—Cotgrave.

It would not be altogether surprising if something of this sort were taking place with the Government purée—which term is especially applicable because of its etymology [pur!], so admirably suited to the immaculate virtue of a Cabinet presided over by Mr. Gladstone.—Saturday Review, vol. 53, p. 72.

Q.

QUATREPIERRE, "Four-stone," a Wallon name for the newt or lizard, in some places katerpiege, at Liège kwat pesse, "four pieces;" all evidently corruptions—but of what? Grandgagnage suggests of Dut. kwaaad beest, "evil beast," it being generally regarded with repulsion by the ignorant.

QUEUE D' SORITTE, a Wallon word for a bat, is a corruption of kaww sorite, "owl-mouse," Liège chawe-sori. See CHAUVE-SOURIS. An old Fr. word for the same is chaude-soris (Sigart).

QUINTE (Fr.), a fit of coughing, then anything that takes one suddenly, a freak or whim, so spelt from analogy to "fièvre quinte," a fever recurring every fifth (quint) day, seems to stand for quinque (like quinte-feuille for quinque-feuille), a modification of Netherland. kinck-(hoest), "chin(k)-cough," from kincken, to cough (Ger. keichen). Compare Prov. Fr. quintousse (Rouchi), whooping-cough, for quincousse; clinke (Bayeux).

R.

RABANO (Eng. rabone), a Spanish word for a radish, originally rawano, is a corruption of Lat. raphanus, Greek rháphanis, under the influence of rabon or rabo, a tail, which the long tap-root of the plant much resembles.

RADICAILLE, the name sometimes given to the French Republicans by their opponents, is a humorous formation on the model of racaille.

RAME, the French word for an oar, is from Lat. remus, modified by ramus, a branch (Trench, English Past and Present, p. 347).

RAME (Fr.), a printer's form, is a naturalized form of Ger. rahm, a frame, assimilated to rame, a stick (Lat. ramus), and rame, a ream.

RAMEQUIN (Fr.), a slice of toasted bread spread over with cream or cheese, originally a cream-cheese, supposed to have been so called from having been served on plaited twigs, rameaux (Gattel), like junket on rushes (junci), is a naturalized form of Ger. rahm (rahmchen), cream.

RAMOLACCIO (It.), a radish, so spelt as if akin to ramoloso, ramoso, branchy, from ramo, a sprig or branch, is an altered form of ramoraccio, from Lat. armoracia, a radish. Similarly It. ramerino, rosemary, has no connexion with ramo, but is a corruption of Lat. ros marinus.

There is one sausage kind of them [radishes] more which the Greeks name Agrion: the inhabitants of Pontus Armon; and our countrymen give it the name of Armoracia.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 16.

RANCEUR, an old French spelling of "rancour," O. Sp. rancor, It. rancore, L. Lat. rancor, as if compounded with cœur.

RANGER (Fr.), also rangier, the reindeer, It. rangifero, are corruptions of Lapp. raingo. See RANGED-DEER, p. 315.

RAT D'OR, "golden rat," the name for a species of dormouse (le muscardin) in the Bourgogne patois, is probably a corruption of rat-dort (or rat-dormant), which it is also called (E. Rolland, Faune Populaire, p. 40).

RATTEKAHL, "rat-callow," a popular perversion of radikal in Germany, as if to signify bald, bare, or poor as a rat.

REBATAR (Sp.), to snatch or carry off, is a corruption of raptar, Lat. raptare (Diez), under the influence of rebato, a tumult, rebatir, to beat back.

RECRUTER (Fr.), to reinforce or fill up the vacancies in a regiment by enlisting new soldiers, "to recruit," is formed from recrute, a levy, a mistaken form of recrue (Littré) or "recrue, a supply or filling up a defective company of souldiers" (Cotgrave), literally a new growth, from recru, p. parte. of recroître (from Lat. recrescere) to grow again (Skeat). Compare old Fr. recroist, a new or second growth (Cotgrave).

Prof. Atkinson thinks that Mid. Fr. recru, a recruit, is properly one incapable of full toil, identical with old Fr. recreu, beaten, vanquished, unable to do more, and so, like recreant, a derivative of M. Lat. recredere (Vie de St. Auban, note on l. 862). This is certainly wrong.

REDERIJKER, a Dutch corruption of Ger. rhetoriker, a rhetorician, as if from rederijk, given to speaking (rede).—Andresen. Cf. Ger. and Dutch redekunst, rhetoric.

REGAIN (Fr.), after-math, a second crop of hay, so spelt as if a derivative of regagner (like regain, a recovery of health), and so meaning an additional gain, a second benefit. It is really a compound made by prefixing re- (perhaps with the above idea) to old Fr. gain, wain, derived (through a form guaim, guadime) from O. H. Ger. weida, nourishment, pasture, grass. Corresponding forms are Wallon wayen, It. guaim (Diez, Scheler).

REGALIZ, } Span. and Portg. words
REGALIZA, } for liquorice, apparently akin to regalar, to melt, to regale, regalo, daintiness, is a corrupt form (for legariza) of Lat. liquiritia, from Greek glukúrrhiza. Hence also Fr. réglisse, It. regolizia.

RÉGLISSE, French name of liquorice, Provençal regulecia, regalicia, Portg. and Spanish regaliz, Ital. regolizio, legoriza, Picard. regoliche, ringoliche, ringolisse, Wallon rekouliss, Genevan and Berry arguelisse, all corruptions of the Latin liquiritia, which is itself corrupted from the Greek glukúrrhiza, "sweet-root" (Littré).

REGNA (Prov.), a rein or bridle, so spelt as if derived from regnar, to rule or govern, Lat. regnare (so Raynouard), is, as well as old Fr. reigne, resgne, resne (Mod. Fr. rène), an altered form of retna or reina, from a Lat. retina, a substantive derived from retinere, to hold back. Hence also It. redina, a rein, Portg. redca (Diez, Scheler).

REINETTE (Fr.), the name of a species of apple, the "Queening," as if from reine, queen, is a corruption of rainette, so called from its skin being spotted like a little frog, rainette, which is a dimin. of raîne (formerly spelt reine, Cotgrave), Lat. rana.

REITERSALBE, "Rider's-salve," a German name for a soothing ointment for the skin, is derived from Dutch ruit-salve, a salve for the scab or itch, ruit, Ger. räude (Andresen).

REMORQUER (Fr.), to tow a vessel, like its original Lat. remulcare, whence also It. remorchiare, Sp. remolcar, seems to be a compound of re-. The Lat. remulcare, which has been assimilated to verbs in re-, or perhaps to remus, an oar, is also spelt rymulcare, and is only another form of Gr. rumoulkēō, to tow, which is compounded of ruma, that which is drawn, a towing-rope, and helkō, to drag.

RENNEFIEREN, rêneführen (Göthe has reine führen), are colloquial corruptions in Germany of renovieren, to renew (Andresen).

RENNTHIER, the rein-deer, is not the "running-beast," from rennen, but a corrupted form of Icel. hreïn, hveïndyr, Swed. ren. See REIN-DEER, p. 321.

REPRESSALIEN, German for retaliation, reprisals, as if from a Lat. repressalia (repressus), is really from Fr. représailles (from reprendre, Lat. reprehendere, to take over again).

REINFALL, a German word for an excellent wine, as if produced on the Rhine, Mid. High Ger. Reinfal and Rainfal, all corruptions of Rivoglio, whence it was brought. A more recent perversion is Reinfall, as if from rein, pure (Andresen).

RHĒMÁDA, } the modern Greek
RHĒMARIZO, } words for rhyme, as if from Greek rhēma, a word, are really derived from the Italian rima, rimare (Tozer, Highlands of Turkey, vol. ii. p. 252).

RIDICULE (Fr.), a handbag, should be (as in English) reticule, being from Lat. reticulum, a little net. Corrupt forms of the same word in the German dialects are ritterkiel and rittekiel (Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 19).

RIGHDEIRE, } Gaelic words for a RIGHDIR, } knight, so written,
RIDIE, } and explained to be a compound, rioh-dei-ri, "king-after-king," i.e. a minor king, is without doubt a corruption of the German ritter, a knight (J. F. Campbell, Popular Tales of the W. Highlands, vol. ii. p. 35).

RIGOGOLO, an Italian name for the yellowhammer (a rook or daw, Florio), apparently akin to rigogoli, a springe to catch birds, is a corruption of Lat. aurigalgulus, galgulus being a small bird. Compare It. rigoglio (Florio), another form of orgoglio, pride.

RINCER (French), to whack (rincée, a whacking), so spelt as if identical with rincer, to wash or cleanse (from Icel. hreinsa, to cleanse), like "chastise," from castigare, to make pure (castus), which is also the primary meaning of "punish." It is really the same word as Wallon rainser, to beat, old Fr. rainser, derived from raincel, a stick (Mod. Fr. rainceau and rinceau), = Lat. ramicellus, from ramus, whence rain, rein.

RESPONSES (Fr.), rampions (a sallad root).—Cotgrave. A corruption of rapponce, which is from the Latin rapunculus, a small rapa, or turnip.

RIVIERA (It.), properly the bank or shore of a stream, the "riparian" parts (Fr. rivière), from Lat. ripavia (ripa, a bank), has come to be used for a river, from being confused with rivo, a river (Lat. rivus), with which it has really no connexion.

ROBERT, in sauce Robert, a term of the French cuisine, is said to have been corrupted by Taillevent from an old English Roebroth or Roebrewit, i.e. Roebuck sauce [?].—Kettner, Book of the Table, p. 210.

It is mentioned in La Condemnacion de Bancquet, 1507:—

Tout premier, vous sera donnée,
Sauce robert, et cameline.
Recueil de Farces, p. 308 (ed. Jacob).

ROHRDOMMEL, the German name of the bittern or butter-bump, so called as if from the drumming noise it makes among the reeds (rohr), whence also it has been called rohrtrommel from trommeln, to drum (compare the Eng. name mire-drumble, mire-drum). It is really corrupted from a O. H. Ger. form horotumbil, where the first part of the word is probably hor, mire, and the latter corresponds either to tumbler, a tumbler, or tump, stupid. Other forms are rordump and rôrdum (Andresen).

ROMERO (Span.), rosemary, apparently the same word as romero, a pilgrim, is an adaptation of Lat. ros marinus (Fr. rômarin).

ROMITA, } Italian words for "an Her-
ROMITO, } mit or solitarie man"
(Florio), so spelt as if from romiare, "to roame or wander vp and downe as a Palmer or solitarie man for deuotions sake" (Florio), originally to make a pilgrimage to Rome, is really a corrupted form of a Latin eremita, Greek erêmites, one who dwells in the desert, erêmos.

ROSSIGNOL, in the French rossignol d'Arcadie, "Arcadian nightingale," a humorous expression for an ass, with reference to its melodious voice, is a corruption of roussin d'Arcadie, roussin being a thick-set horse, another form of "rosse, a jade, tit" (Cotgrave), = hros, horse. Compare rossinante, a jade, Sp. rozin (whence the name of Don Quixote's steed), O. Eng. rouncie, Low Lat. run-cinus. Similarly frogs have been called "Dutch nightingales," "Canadian nightingales," and in the Eastern counties "March [?] marsh] birds."

ROUEN, the name popularly given in France to a species of duck considered especially good for the table, as if it came from the town of that name, was originally roan, referring to its colour (Kettner, Book of the Table, p. 161).

ROUX-VIEUX (Fr.), the mange in horses, as if compounded with roux, red, is a corrupt orthography of rouvieux, from rouffe, Ger. rufe, Dut. rof.

ROVISTICO, } Ital. names of privet,
RUVISTICO, } properly (as to form) derived from Lat. ligusticum, lovage, but confused with rigustro, from Lat. ligustrum, privet.

RUBAN (Fr.), a corruption of the old French riban, a ribbon, Dut. rijghband, as if connected with Lat. rubicus, It rubino, Sp. rubin, Fr. rubis, red.

RUBIGLIA, an Italian word for vetches or lentils, so spelt as if it denoted red lentils (like Heb. edom, "that red," Gen. xxv. 30), It. rubeo, Lat. rubeus, red, is another form of roviglia, altered by transposition from erviglia, Lat. ervilia (compare It. rigoglio for orgoglio). Similarly the so-called Revalenta (Arabica) is merely a transposed form of erva-lenta, under which name it was first brought into notice, it being the meal of the common lentil, Lat. ervum lens.

RÜCKRUTEN, a humorous corruption in German of rekruten, recruits, as if from rücken, to move, advance, or come forward, Low Ger. rück rüt (rück her- aus), come, or march out (Andresen).

RUISEÑOR, the Spanish name for the nightingale, as if to signify the lord of the groves and woods (señor, lord). This, however, as well as old Fr. roisignor, roisignol, Mod. Fr. rossignol, is a derivative of Lat. lusciniolus, dim. of luscinia, a nightingale (Diez; Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 27).

RUNDTHEIL, a popular German corruption of rondelle, as if from theil, a part. Cf. Dut. rondeel (Andresen).

S.

SACABUCHE (Sp.), the wind instrument which in English is called a "sackbut," so spelt as if from sacar del buche, to distend the stomach, "to fetch the breath from the bottom of the belly, because it requires a strong breath" (Bailey), is a corrupt form of Lat. sambuca, Gk. sambúkê, Heb. sabka. The Lat. word was doubtless regarded as meaning a pipe of elder wood (sambucus), which is actually the sense that sambuque bears in Prov. French.

SAGRO (It.), a falcon, Fr. sacre, old Eng. saker, as if the "sacred" bird (so Greek hierax, and Ger. weihe, the sacred bird, the kite), is, according to Pictet, a corruption of Arab. sakr, a falcon, akin to Sansk. çakra, strong. See p. 141, s.v. GERFALCON.

SAHLBAND, a German word for the border or listing of cloth, as if containing band, a binding, is perverted from the older form selbend, selbende, Low Ger. selfkant, i.e. self-edge, Eng. "selvage."

SALSAPARIGLIA (It.), salsaparilla, Fr.

sulsepareille, is a modification of Sp. zarza-parilla (derived from Sp. zarza, a bramble, whence it is obtained, and Parillo, the name of the doctor who introduced it), under the influence of salsa, salso.

SALSIFIS (Fr.), the plant salsify, is a corrupt form of old Fr. sassify, sassefigue, sassefrigue (Cotgrave), It. sassifrica or sassifraga, "the saxifrage or Breake-stone" (Florio), Lat. saxifragum adiantum.

SANTOREGGIA (It.), the plant savory, is an assimilation to santo, holy, of saturaja, Lat. satureia.

SARKIPHAGOS, a Greek corruption of the Latin saxifraga, "the stone-breaking" plant, as if from sarv, flesh, and phagein, to devour (Pott, Doppelung, p. 81).

SAUMON (Fr.), salmon, when used for a "pig" or "sow" of lead, seems to be a corruption of Prov. Fr. sommon (Scheler), derived from somme, a weight, a burden, It. soma, salma, Low Lat. salma, for sagma, Greek sagma, a burden.

SCHACHTELHALM and schachthalm, German names for the plant horsetail (equisetum), as if from schachtel, a box, and schacht, a shaft or pit, are corruptions of schafthalm, "shaft-haulm" or stalk. Another perversion is schaftheu (heu = hay).—Andresen.

SCHÂFZAGEL, "sheep-tail," and schächzagel, "chess-tail," ludicrous perversions in Mid. High Ger. of schächzabel, a chess-table (Andresen).

SCHALMEI (Ger.), or schalmuse, is a corrupt form of Fr. chalumeau, Eng. shavm, a clarinet or pipe, all from Lat. calamus, as if connected with schalmen, to peel or bark (Chappell, History of Music, vol. i. p. 264).

SCHANDAL, a popular corruption in German of skandal, as if from schande, shame. M. Gaidoz quotes schandlicht (as if an infamous light) as a grotesque German transformation of Fr. chandelle (Revue Critique, Août 19, 1876, p. 119).

SCHARLACH, a German corruption of "scarlet," Fr. écarlate, Prov. escarlat, Sp. escarlata, It. scarlatto, as if connected with schar, army, troop, and lack, a lac or dye.

SCHARLACH, a German word for bright red cloth, from a Mid. High Ger. form scharlachen, which seems to mean shorn cloth (tunica rasilis), as if from schar, shorn, and lachen, cloth (Ger. laken), is really corrupted from an older form scharlât, Mid. Lat. scarlatum, said to be of Turkish origin (Andresen).

SCHARMÜTZEL, a German word for a skirmish, as if derived from schar, a troop, and metzeln, to massacre, is really borrowed from It. scaramuccia, Fr. escarmouche, "skirmish," which are from Mid. High Ger. schirmen, to fight (Andresen), O. H. Ger. skerman.

SCHERSCHANT, scharschant, schersant, popular corruptions of sergent in Germany, suggestive of scherge, a beadle (Andresen).

SCHEURBUIK (Dutch), scurvy, as if derived from scheuren, to rend, and buik, the stomach, is a corruption of Fr. scorbut, It. scorbuto, Low Lat. scorbutus, whence also Ger. scharbock, Low Ger. schorbock, Icel. skyr-hjúgr. The latter word has the appearance of being compounded of skyr, curd, and bjúgr, a tumour. See SCHORBUCK, p. 343.

SCHIMPFENTIURE, ENSCHUMPFIEREN, Mid. High Ger. words, are said to have no connexion with schimpf, &c., but to be from It. sconfiggere (Fr. déconfire, Eng. discomfit).—Andresen.

SCHLAFROCK, a German word for a bedgown, as if a sleeping-gown, from schlafen, to sleep, is considered by Andresen to be a less correct form of schlauf-rock, a garment easily slipped on (compare Eng. slops), Mid. High Ger. slouf, sloufen, Prov. Low Ger. schlauf, schlaufen, from sliefen, to slip, Ger. schlüpfen. Cf. Prov. Ger. schluffer, schluppe, = Eng. slippers.

SCHLEIFKANNE, a German word for a wooden vessel with a handle, is an instance of schläufe (sluifan), Mid. High Ger. sloufe, a handle, being changed into schleife (slifen), a sling or loop (Andresen).

SCHLEUSE, German for a sluice or flood-gate, sometimes written schleusze, as if from schlieszen, to close, lock, is a derivative of Low Lat. exclusa, schlusa (from excludere, to shut out), Fr. écluse, Low Ger. slüs (Andresen).

SCHLITTSCHUH, a German word for a skate, as if compounded of slitten, a sledge, and schuh, a shoe, is really, according to Karl Andresen, an incorrect form of schrittschuh, which is from schrift, a stride or step, the older forms being schrüteschuoch, schrüttelschuoch. Compare the Low Ger. stridschû, stridschau, from striden (= Ger. schreiten), "to stride."

SCHÖNBARTSPIEL, a popular German word for the Carnival or Shrove Tuesday diversions, as if from schön, beautiful, is a corruption of schembartspiel, i.e. mask and beard play, from schem, schem, a mask (Andresen).

SCHWARZ - WURZ (Ger.), "Black-root," a name for the plant viper's grass, looks like a corruption of the It. name scorzonerà, which was understood as scorza-nera, "rind-black," but probably stands for scorzonièra, the plant good against the bite of the scorzona, or poisonous serpent.

SCHWEINIGEL, a hedgehog, a nickname in German for a dirty fellow, is said to have been originally schweinnickel, Nickel, from Nikolaus, being often used opprobriously. Compare the two-fold forms sauigel, a sloven, and sau-nickel (Andresen).

SCHWIBBOGEN, a German term for a vault or arch, appears to be from schweben (old Ger. swëpën, swëben), to hang or be suspended, and bogen, an arch, the form swëbeboege being actually found in the 15th century. But a different origin is implied by O. H. Ger. swipogo, Mid. High Ger. swiboge (Andresen).

SECRETAIN (old Fr.), a sexton (Cotgrave), is an assimilation to secrétaire, secret, of sacristain (whence Eng. sexton and Ger. sigrüst).

SECALE, the Latin name for rye (whence Fr. seigle), as if from seco, "that which is reaped," is most probably a corrupted form of sigala, which is also found, with which agree Ir. seagal, Armor. ségal (Pictet, Origines Indo-Europ. tom. 1. p. 274).

SEETEUFEL, "Sea-devil," the name of the fish so called, according to Karl Andresen, was originally seedöbel, döbel being the pollard fish (dobula).

SÉJOURNER (Fr.), a mis-spelling due to a false analogy with séduire, séparer, séquestrer, &c. (Lat. prefix se-, apart), of old Fr. sojorner, Norm. Fr. sujuerner, Prov. sojornar, It. soggiornare, to sojourn, from Lat. sub-diurnare, (1) to spend the day, (2) to remain long.

De Orient veng sanz sujuerner.
Vie de St. Auban, l. 33.

SEIDELBAST, a German name for the mezereon tree, as if (with thought of its glossy inner bark texture) connected with seide, silk, is properly zeidelbast, the bees' tree (or, according to others, from zio, the old German god of war.—Andresen). Cf. zeidel-meister, bee-master.

SEMILOR, a German word for sham gold, as if "half gold," is a mistaken form of Fr. similor, "like-gold," from Lat. simile auro.

SENSAL, a German word for a broker in financial matters, is a derivative, not of Lat. sensus, but of census, through Fr. consal (Andresen).

SERĀB, an Arabic word for the mirage of the desert, apparently from Pers. ser, head, and ab, water, as if caput aque, "the appearance of water," and so Lord Strangford derives it (Letters and Papers, p. 42). It is really a later form of Heb. shārābh, the mirage (Is. xxxv. 7), which Gesenius connects with the root shārabh, to be hot or dry.

Notwithstanding the extravagant claims which have been put forward by his friends with regard to something like omniscience having been attained by Lord Strangford in philological matters, he seems not to have been much of a Semitic scholar. Op. cit., p. 44, he connects Arab. yaumu'd dîn, day of judgment, with Zend daëna, oblivious of Heb. dîn, to judge, whence the names Dan, Daniel, Dinab, &c.

SEREIN (Fr.), Sp. sereno, evening dew, as well as Fr. sérénade, It. serenata, an evening song, seem to owe their form to a confusion between Lat. serenus and serus, late (whence It. sera [sc. hora], evening, Fr. soir).

SERMONE (It.), the salmon (Florio), a corruption of salmone, Lat. salmonem. Compare SALMON, p. 338.

SERRAGLIO (It.), "the great Turkes chief court or houshold; also a seraile, an enclosure, a close, a secluse, a cloyster, a Parke, any place shut or closed in" (Florio); evidently connected with ser-ragliare, to shut in or close round (compare Fr. "Parc aux cerfs," the harem of Louis XV.), serra, an enclosure or cloister, Lat. sera, a bolt or bar. It is really the same word as Sp. serrallo, Portg. serralho, Fr. serail, all adopted from Pers. serāi, a palace or court. M. Devic notes that the French word was sometimes spelt serrail in order to bring it into connexion with serrer, to place in safety.

SERVIETTE (Fr.), a napkin, is not a derivative of servir, but identical with Sp. servieta, which stands for servilleta, a table-napkin (Minsheu), that which discharges a servile (servil) or servant's office, like servilla, a clout. The It. word is salvietta (selvietta and servietta), as if that which saves, or acts as a safeguard to, one's clothes. Compare salver, It. salvilla.

SIEBENBAUM, "seven-tree," seggenbaum, "blessing-tree," sagebaum, "speech-tree," popular German corruptions of sabina, the savin or juniper tree (Andresen).

SIMON, or Siman, a name given to a weak henpecked husband in Germany, to hint that he is a she-man (sie and man).—Andresen.

SINGÔZ, a Mid. High Ger. word for a little bell, so spelt as if connected with singen, is really from Lat. signum, It. segnuzzo (Andresen).

SINNBILD (Ger), a symbol, as if from sim and bild, a "mind-figure," mental picture, or ideograph, is doubtless a naturalized form of symbol, Lat. symbolum.

SISTRUM, an ancient musical instrument of Egyptian origin, consisting of metal rods, &c., suspended in a frame, which made a jingling noise when shaken, Greek seistron, so spelt as if a derivative of seiō, to shake, is no doubt, as Dr. Birch points out, an Hellenic perversion of the native Egyptian name ses' (Wilkinson, Ancient Egyptians, vol. i. p. 499, ed. 1878).

SITTIG, a German word for the parrot

(Kaltschmidt), as if it meant the educated and civilized bird (compare sittig, well-behaved, well-mannered, sittigen, to civilize), is most probably corrupted from the Lat. psittacus, Greek psittakos, a parrot.

SKARFA-KÁL, an Icelandic name for the plant cochlearia, which grows on a rocky sea-shores, as if from skarfr, a cormorant (Shetland, scarf, Scot. scart), is a corruption of scurvy-grass, it being a cure for scorbutic diseases.

SKIPT, the Icelandic name for the camp of the Varangians at Constantinople, as if connected with skipti, a division, a contest, skipta, to divide, is corrupted from the Byzantine Greek ἑσκύβιον (eskubiton), and that from the Latin excubitum (Cleasby). So Russ. skeet, a hermit's cell, is from Greek asketērion, an ascetic abode.

SOIF (Fr.), altered from old Fr. soit, soi, Lat. sitis, thirst, apparently under the influence of Ger. saufen, to drink (Diez).

SOMMER, to summon, as if to give a final notice, an ultimatum, and derived from Lat. summus (like sonner, to sum up), seems to be a variety of old Fr. semoner (semener), = semondre, from Lat. submonere. Compare Eng. sumner for "summoner," Fr. semonneur.

SOPHIE, saphie, zallfi, corrupted forms in Mecklenburg of salbei, the plant sage (salvia).—Andresen.

SORBETTO, a Turkish drink, also any kind of thin supping broth (Florio), so spelt as if connected with sorbite, sipped, sorbire, to sup or sip, sorbo, a sip (Lat. sorbeo), is really an altered form of shorbet, which is the Turkish pronunciation of Arab. shorba, from sharib, to drink. Hence also Sp. sorbete, Fr. sorbet, Eng. sherbet. From the same root is Arab. sharāb, a drink, which yields It. siroppo, Sp. aurabe, Fr. sirap, Eng. syrup (Devic).

SOT-BRIQUET, an old Fr. form of sobriquet, a nickname, also a mock, flout, or jest (Cotgrave), as if compounded of sot, and O. Fr. briquet, a little ass (It. brichetto), is probably a corruption of the older soubzbriquet, originally a chuck under the chin, like soubarbe, an affront (Cotgrave). A Picard corruption is surpiquet.

SOUCI, French name of the marigold, O. Fr. soulsi, the marigold (Cotgrave), from Lat. solsequium, sun-follower, sun-flower. Cf. souci, care, O. Fr. soulci, from Lat. sollicitus.

Similar French names are espouse du soleil, "the marygold, so called by some" (Cotgrave), Herbe solaire, Herbe du soleil. Others forms are soucicle, solcicle, as if from solis cyclus, sun's orb or cycle.

Heo is lillie of largesse

Heo is parvenke of prouesse,

Heo is solsecle of swetnesse,

And ledy of lealte.

Lyric Poetry, ab. 1320, p. 52 (Percy Soc.).

Also Bøddeker, Alteng. Dichtungen, p. 170, who reads selsecle. The flower-name was probably sometimes confused with souci, care, sorrow, and consequently regarded as emblematical of mourning. A writer in the Monthly Packet (vol. xxi. p. 212) remarks that this was "a favourite funeral flower with our ancestors. Fletcher speaks of them as 'Marygolds on death-beds blowing;' . . . it still bears the ominous name in France of souci" (!).

Marigolds

Shall as a carpet hang upon thy grave

While summer days do last.

Shakespeare, Pericles, iv. 1, 16.

See The Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1, 11, and Littledale's note in loco.

SOUFFRETEUX (Fr.), needy, poor, unwell, is naturally regarded as a derivative of souffrir, to suffer (souffrant, ailing, ill). It really is an altered form of old Fr. soffraitous, poor (Prov. soffraitos), from old Fr. souffrete, souffraite, want, poverty (souffrette in Cotgrave), derived from Lat. suffractus, broken down, in reduced circumstances.

SOUFRONTE, a Wallon word for the interval between the ends of two joists supporting a roof, also spelt souvronte, is a corruption of old Fr. souronde, severonde, from Lat. subgronda (Sigart).

SPEICHERNAGEL, a German word for a certain kind of nail, as if from speicher, a warehouse, is a perversion of Low Ger. spikernagel or spiker, which is from Lat. spica (Andresen).

SPERBERBAUM, the German name of the service tree (sorbus), as if called after sperber, the sparrow-hawk, is most probably (like sorbeerbaum) compounded of sper, spir (the sorb, or service fruit, cf. speierling), ber (a berry), and baum (Andresen).

SPIESS, German for a spear, so spelt as if the same word as spiess, a spit. However, the Mid. High Ger. form spiez (distinct from spiz, a spit) is for spriez, a sprit, a bow-sprit, from spriezen, to project or jut out (Andresen). Compare speuk and sprechen.

SPITZNAME, German word for a nickname, as if from spitz, spitzig, sharp, biting, and spitzen, to prick, is another form of Low Ger. spitsname, connected with spitsch, jeering, scornful, Eng. spite [?].—Andresen. Compare spottname, a nickname, from spotten, to deride, spöttisch, satirical, mocking.

SPORTIGLIONE, or sportoglione, an Italian word for a bat (Florio), as if the bird which hangs under the eaves, sporti, sporto, is evidently a decapitated form of vespertiglione, Lat. vesperilionem.

STAMBECCO (Ital.), a corruption of the O. H. Ger. stainboc, Ger. steinbock, the wild goat, O. Fr. boucestain; as if from becco, a goat.

STED-, the prefix in Danish sted-barn, a step-child, sted-fader, a step-father, &c., as if those words denoted a child, father, &c., put in the stead (Dan. sted) of the actual relation, is a modern corruption of the older form stiv-, as in Ger. stief-, A. Sax. steóp-, Swed. stuf-, Icel. stjúp- (bereft) in stjúp-barn, step-child, &c.

STERNLICHTERN, a popular corruption of stearinlichter (tallow candles), as if star-lights (Andresen).

STIEFEL (Ger.), Icel. stigel and styfill, O. H. Ger. stiful, boots, are corruptions of It. stivale, estivale, O. Fr. estival, from a Latin estivale, a summer boot.

STÍG-VÉL, an Icelandic word for boots, as if a "stepping-device," from stiga, to step, and vél, a device, is a corruption of the older word styfill, that being itself a corruption of It. stivale. See STIEFEL.

STIPIDITO, "used anciently for Stupido" (Florio, Italian Dictionary, 1611), as if, like our word "block-head," from stipite, a log or block.

STÖLBRUODER, a minister of a church in Mid. High Ger., as if from stôle, a stole, is properly stuolbruoder (Andresen).

STRASSE, way, road, in German, from Lat. strata (sc. via), "a paved road" (whence our "street"), when applied to a strait, i.e. a straight, strict, or narrow, piece of water, "Die Strasse bei Gibraltar," is plainly a corruption of the latter word (Lat. strictus).

SUCULA, Latin, a sow, the name of the constellation of the Hyades, probably originated in a mistaken rendering of the Greek word huádes, the rainy constellation (from húo, to rain), as if it were from húes, swine. However, Lat. sucus = moisture.

SUIKERY, the Flemish name of the plant succory, Fr. chicorée, Greek kichoré, as if connected with suiker, sugar.

SÜND-FLUTH, the German word for the Deluge, as if it meant the Sin-flood, flood on account of sin, sünde, is a corruption of sin-fluth, O. H. Ger. sin-vluot, the great flood, sin being a prefix, denoting (1) always, (2) great, as in A. Sax. sinhere, a great army. A similar corruption is Dan. synd-flod, the sin-flood. See Goldziher, Mythology among the Hebrews, p. 442; M. Müller, Lectures, ii. 529, and Cleasby and Vigfusson, Icel. Dict. s.v. Si. Pictet less correctly thinks that the original meaning was "inundation of the sea" (or sound).—Orig. Indo-Europ. i. 119.

SUZERAIN (Fr.) seems to be an amalgamation of Fr. sus (Lat. susum, under) with the termination of souv-erain (i.e. superanus, from super, above), an underlord as opposed to a supreme or overlord (compare Prov. sotran, an inferior, from Prov. sotz, Lat. subtus, beneath).

SYMPHONIA (συμφώνια), a musical instrument, a Greek corruption of the Semitic word siphonia (סִפְיָנִיָּה), (Dan. iii. 5), introduced no doubt by the Phœnicians, as if from syn and φωνή.

So Fürst, Meier, and Payne Smith (Sermons on Isaiah, p. 291). Siphonyáh is from Heb. siphôn, a pipe (compare Greek siphôn, Copt. sēbi, a reed, and perhaps Lat. tibia). In the Peshito it is zefooneyo. The names of other musical instruments (e.g. Greek nábla, kinura, sambúke, Lat. ambubaia) are of Semitic origin (see Pusey, On Daniel, Lect. i.).

T.

TANNHIRSCH, an old name in German for a fallow-deer, as if from tanne, a fir-tree, is a corruption of dammhirsch, which is itself borrowed, in its first part, from Lat. dama, a doe (Andresen).

TARTARO (It.), the deposit or lees of wine, also used for the stone or gravel in the joints causing gout, or in the reins of a mans bodie (Florio), is a corruption of Arab-Pers. dourd, dourdz, sediment, deposit, Arab. darad, tartar or decay of the teeth (Devic). The word was introduced by the alchemists under the form of Low Lat. tartarum, and evidently influenced by tartarus, It. tartaro, the infernal regions, hell.

TAUSENDGÜLDENKRAUT, the German name of the plant centaury (really so called from Cheiron, the great centaur "leech"), a "thousand gulden plant," originating in a misunderstanding of Lat. centaurea, Gk. kentaúron, as if meaning centum aurei (Andresen).

TÈOM, an abyss, the deep, is the modern Jewish corruption of the Christian dom or cathedral (Von Bohlen, Genesis, i. 320).

TELLER (Ger.), a plate, is a naturalized and disguised form of Fr. tailloir, a platter on which to cut bread, from tailler, like "trencher," from trancher.

TEMUJIN, a name of the Mongolian hero Chingiz-Khan, was confounded with the Turkish word Temurji, "an iron-smith," and hence originated the tradition that Chingiz was a blacksmith, and one of the mountains of Arbus-ula the forge of his smithy (Col. Yule, in Prejevalsky's Mongolia, vol. i. p. 221).

TERRACINA, the Latin name which William de Rubruk gives to a certain Mongol beverage of rice wine, evidently assimilating it to terra, is a corruption of the native name darásuu or dara-soun.

Tunc ipse fecit a nobis queri quid velle-mus bibere, utrum vinum vel terracinam, hoc est cervisiam de risio (p. 305).

Vide Yule, in Prejevalsky's Mongolia,
vol. i. p. 276.

TERRE-PLEIN (Fr.), "earth-full," a platform, according to Scheler, ought to be spelt terre-plain, "level-ground," like "de plain pied," on the level.
However, the original meaning seems to have been earth filled into the inside of a bulwark or wall (Cotgrave), and so It. terrapieno (= terrâ plenum), the earth filled vp into the inside of a ram-pard (Florio). But the Italian has also terrapianato, levelled to the ground, and the words were perhaps confused.

TIMBALLO (It.), a drum or tambour,
Fr. timbale, Sp. timbal, are alterations of the forms It. taballo, Sp. a-tabal, from Arab. tabl (aṭṭab, "the tambour"), under the influence of Lat. tympanum
(It. timpano), a tambour (Devic, Scheler), and perhaps of cymbale, It. cimbalo, Lat. cymbalum.

TINTENAGUE (Fr.), tutinag, is a corrupt orthography of toutenague, Pers.
tutiā-nāk, "analogous to tutie" (oxide of zinc), as if akin to tinter, to tinkle, or yield a metallic sound.

TIRE-LIRE (Fr.), a money-box, sometimes understood as referring to the slit through which one "tire les lires," or draws out (Fr. tirer, It. tirare) one's francs (It. lira). But lire is not used for a franc in French, and the Italians have no word tira-lira. It probably meant originally the wherewithal to make merry, or a plaything, and so was a modification of tirelure, an exclamation of joy (Scheler). Compare tire-lire, the song of the lark.

TISSEBAND (Fr.), a weaver, is an assimilation to words like marchand (Lat.
mercantem) of old Fr. teisserenc, compounded of old Fr. tissier + enc (= Ger. suffix -inc, -ing).—Scheler.

TITEL (Title), a false pronunciation and writing in German of the word
tüttel, a point, which is said to be from tutte, the teat or nipple of the breast.
Cf. titel or tittel of the law in Bible language, Eng. tittle, the slight projection which differentiates certain letters of the Hebrew alphabet, as Resh from Dagesh (Andresen).

TOLPATSCH, a German word for an awkward fellow, apparently of native origin, from toll, crazy, odd (Eng.
"dull"), and patschen, to patter, rattle, dabble, is really derived from the Hungarian (Andresen).

TONLIEU (Fr.), toll due to the lord of a manor, so spelt as if it meant the place, lieu, of custom, stands for old
Fr. tonliu, Low Lat. tonleium, a corruption of telonium, Greek telonion, a toll-house, or custom-house (Scheler).

TORRENS, torrentis (Lat.), a "torrent," apparently the pres. participle of Lat. torreo, to burn, as if a fervid, and so a boiling, rapid, rushing stream, or,
according to others, one whose channel is torrid or dried up in summer, a "wady." The idea of heat readily merges into that of quick motion;
compare Fr. tôt, old Fr. tost, It. tosto, quickly, derived from Lat. tostus, burnt, hot, past part. of torreo (Atkinson). So burn, a stream, O. Eng. bourn, A. Sax.
burna, is near akin to A. Sax. byrnan, to burn, and Ger. brunnen to Goth.
brinnan, to burn.

There, high my boiling torrent smokes,
Wild roaring o'er a linn.

Burns, Petition of Bruar Water.

The word is perhaps really allied to Sansk. taranta, a torrent, from the present part. tarant, of the root ṭr, conveying the idea of rapid motion, to fleet away, swim, &c. (see Pictet, *Orig.
Indo-Europ.* i. 144).

TORZUELO (Sp.), a male hawk, also torcuelo (Minsheu), so spelt from a false analogy to torcer, to twist, torzicuello, the wry-neck, &c., is a corruption of terzuelo, It. terzuolo, old Fr. terciol, Eng.
tiercel, tarsel, tassel, from Lat. tertiolus.

TOUTEFOIS (Fr.), i.e. "every time," should properly be toute-voie, O. Fr.
toutesvoies, It. tuttavia, "always," Sp.
todavía (see Scheler, and Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 19).

TRAGMUNT, a Mid. High Ger. word for a swift-sailing ship, as if a "carry-quick," is a corruption of old Fr. dro-mon, Gk. drómōn, lit. a runner.

Tragemunt, an interpreter, is a corruption of dragoman (Andresen).

TRAIN-TRAIN (Fr.), regular course or routine, is an assimilation to train, course, way, style of living, with which it has really no connexion, of the other form tran-tran, e.g. "It saít le trantran du Palais" (Gattel). This is derived from old Fr. trantraner, borrowed from Dut. tranten, trantelen, to walk leisurely to and fro (trant, a pace, gemeenen trant, the common course (Sewel); so Littré and Scheler.

TRAMPELTHIER, a German name for the camel, as if "trample-beast" (from trampeln), is a corruption, through the 15th century form trummel-thier, of the word Dromedar, a dromedary (Andresen).

TRÉFONDS (Fr.), ground, subsoil, formerly spelt trèsfonds, as if ground (fonds) beyond (très = trans), i.e. beneath, the surface, is really from Lat. terre fundus.

TRÉMENTINA, an Italian word for turpentine given in Florio, so spelt as if connected with tremare, &c., is corrupted from terebentina (trebentina), the product of the terebinto or terebinth-tree. Another corruption of the word registered by the same authority is terminto.

TRÉMIÈRE (Fr.), rose-trémière, the hollyhock, apparently, like trémie, the shaking mill-hopper, from Lat. tremere, to tremble (and so Ger. zitter-rose, "tremble-rose," no doubt borrowed from the French), is probably a corruption of outrémer.

Rose d'outré mer, The garden Mallow, called Hocks, and Holyhocks.—Cotgrave.

So called because brought over sea from the Holy Land, where it is indigenous, like outrémer, an azure blue brought from the Levant. Rose outrémer was perhaps mistaken popularly for rose outrémer.

The Hollihocke is called . . . of diners Rosa ultramarina or outlandish Rose, . . . in French Rose d'outré mer.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 784.

TRETOIR and Trittoir are corruptions of Fr. trottoir that may be heard in in Berlin, as if connected with treten, to walk, and tritt, tread (Andresen).

TRICOISE (Fr.), pincers, Prov. Fr. tre-coise, seems to be an assimilation to tricot, tricotter, &c., of old Fr. turcoises, Turkish pincers (Littré). But compare old Fr. estricquoyes, iron pincers (Cotgrave), and estriquer, to pull on boots.

TROCART (Fr.), a surgical instrument, stands for an older form trois-quarts, which is a corruption of trois-carres, three edges, it being of a triangular form (Scheler).

TROU DE CHOU, an old French word for a cabbage-stalk (Cotgrave, Rabelais), apparently "cabbage hole." Trou here is an altered form of Liège tour, tourve, a stalk, Wallon touré, tuvo, Fr. turion, Lat. turio, a shoot, a young branch.

TURCIMANNO, an Italian form of Arab. tarjōmān, an interpreter (whence our "dragoman," &c., see TRUGHMAN, p. 406), as if connected with Turco, a Turk; Pers. tūr-kūmān.

TÜRSE, a Mid. High Ger. word for a giant, as if connected with turren, to dare (cf. türstec, daring), is really the same word as O. Norse thurs, A. Sax. thyrs (Andresen).

TVISTHIORT, a Danish name for the earwig, with the very inappropriate meaning of "twist-hart," is no doubt, as Molbech suggests, a corruption of tre-stjert, i.e. "two-start" (= two-tail), which is its name in Jutland, descriptive of its caudal forceps.

U.

ÚFR (Icel.), the uvula, as if identical with úfr, roughness (under which Cleashy ranges it), is evidently a corruption of M. H. Ger. uwe, Lat. uva, a grape, a grape-like appendage, whence our "uvula" and Fr. luette (for l'nette).

ÚLFALDI, the Icelandic name for the camel, has been adopted from Goth. ul-bandus, which designates that animal in Ulfilas, A. Sax. olfend, O. H. Ger. olpente (all from Greek elephá(nt)s, the elephant, O. Eng. olifawnte), and assimilated regardless of meaning to the native word úlf, ulfr, a wolf.

ÚLF-LIÐR, "wolf's-joint," an Icel. word for the wrist, believed to have been so called because the wolf Fenrir bit off Ty's hand at that joint (Edda 20), is really a corruption of öln-liðr, the "ell-joint" (pron. unliðr), from öln, the cubit, fore-arm, or "ell" (Lat. ulna), whence öln-bogi, el-bow, A. S. el-boga (Cleasby, 668, and 764).

UNTERSCHLEIF, a German word for fraud, knavery, as if "slipping under" (schleifen), is for unterschlauf, harbouring (of thieves), Mid. High Ger. underslouf, a lurking place (Andresen).

USTENSILE (Fr.), a utensil or implement, is a corruption of utensile (Low Lat. utensilia), under the influence of the synonymous old Fr. ustil (Mod. Fr. outil), from a Low Lat. usitalia for usibilia (Scheler, Littré).

V.

VACHES, in the French proverbial phrase, "Il parle Espagnol comme les vaches," is for Vaskes or Basques (Andresen, p. 21), "He speaks Spanish but poorly or not at all." Compare with this the Spanish saying, "Vascuence: Lo que está tan confuso y oscuro que no se puede entender," "Basque, anything so confused and obscure as to be unintelligible." A proverb preserved in the north of Spain pretends that the devil himself spent seven long years amongst the Basques without succeeding in understanding a single word of the language (Hovelacque, Science of Language, p. 113).

VÁG-REK, "Wave-wreck," the Icelandic word for flotsam, as if what is cast up (reki) by the wave (vágr), seems to be a popular attempt at etymology or a misapprehension of an older form vrek or vrak, Dan. wreck (see Cleasby, Icel. Dict. s.v.). Compare Fr. varech, for vrac, seaweed cast ashore, Eng. wrack.

VAGUE (Fr.), when used in the sense of void, empty, waste, as in "terres vaines et vagues," is Lat. vagus, assimilated in meaning to vacuus, empty.

VALI-DIRE, an old French term for "A footman, or servant, only for errands" (Cotgrave), as if called from his delivering compliments and salutations (vale), is a corruption of vale, valeter.

VAGUE-MESTRE (Fr.), waggon master, is a corruption of Ger. wagen-meister.

VEDETTE (Fr.), an outpost or watch, It. vedetta, so spelt as if from vedere, to see, Lat. videre, is a corruption probably of It. veletta, from veglia, a watch, scout, or sentinel, Lat. vigilia (Scheler).

VENTER, and se venter, to brag, old Fr. spellings (in Cotgrave) of vanter, to vaunt (Prov. vanter, It. vantare, Low Lat. vanitare, to say vain or idle things (vana), to boast, or indulge in vanity), on the supposition that it was the same word as venter, to blow or puff, of the wind (vent), and so meant to be puffed up or inflated like a wind-bag. Compare It. "sacco di vento, a bag of winde, also an idle boaster, a vaunting gull."—Florio; Ger. windbeutel, a braggart; Lat. ventosus; Ger. wind machen, to boast; Dut. wind breeken, to vaunt (Sewel); "a bladder full of wind" (= a boaster).—Bp. Hall, Works, 1634, p. 176.

With his own praise like windy bladder blown.

P. Fletcher, Purple Island, viii. 36.

Ne se pout nul vanter.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 1783.

VERDE (It.), green, "Petrarke hath used the word Verde for a final end, when he saith gionto al verde, alluding to a Candle which they were wont to colour greene."—Florio. It seems to be the same word as our verge, a limit, which is understood to be from Lat. vergere, to incline, tend, bend towards, or border. So Fr. verger, an orchard, stands for verdier, a greenery, Lat. viridiarium.

VÉRIN (Fr.), a machine with a screw, which some have supposed to be connected with ver, a worm (cf. "worm of a screw"), verineux, wormy, is the same word as It. verrina, a gimlet, Low Lat. verinus, a screw (as if from veru), Portg. verruma, Sp. barrena, all which words seem to be borrowed from Arab. barīma, a borer or gimlet (Vulg. Arab. barrina), from baram, to twist (Devic).

VERMOST, a popular German corruption of famos (Andresen).

VERT-DE-GRIS (Fr.), verdegris, "green-of-grey," anciently vertegrez, which is probably from vert aigret, green produced by acid (Littre).

VESPÆ, as it were "wasps," an old Latin word for a certain class of undertakers. "Those who discharge the office of burying corpses are so called, not from those little insects, but because they carry forth at eventide (vespertino tempore, vespere), those who could not afford the expense of a funeral procession" (Festus). The more usual term for them was vespillones.

VIÖRINI, an Icelandic word = impotens, according to Vigfusson and Cleasby is the same word as appears in A. Saxon as wæcne = libidinosus, and is not compounded, as would seem at first sight, with the proposition við.

VIELFRASZ, the German word for the glutton or wolverene, as if the great-eater, from fressen, to eat, is a corruption of Icel. fiállfrás (? a mountain bear or mountain ferret).—Andresen. But Cleasby gives no such compound.

VIERGE, a French name, according to Duncan Forbes, for the queen at chess, is a corruption of fierge or fierce, O. Eng. fers, M. Lat. farzia or fercia, Pers. farz or firz, a minister or counsellor (History of Chess, p. 209).

With her false draughtes full divers
She stale on me and toke my fers,
And when I sawe my fers away,
Alas, I couth no lenger play.

Chaucer, Book of the Dutchesse,
ll. 652-656.

VIDRECOME (Fr.), a large drinking-glass, so spelt as if from Ger. wiederkommen, to come again, as if descriptive of a circling cup which makes the tour of the table, is a corruption of old Fr. wilecome, vilcom, a loving cup, a word borrowed from A. Sax. wil-cume, welcome, greeting (see Diez, Etym. Dict. p. 461, trans. Donkin).

VILAIN, in French so spelt with one l as if derived from vil, vile, instead of from villanus, a countryman, boor or churl. Thus Cotgrave defines vilain, "villanous, vile, base;" vilein, "servile, base, vile."

Compare the same collocation in the Authorized Version, "The vile person will speak villany" (Is. xxxii. 6).

VIREBREQVIN, the old Fr. form of vilbrequin, a wimble or gimlet (in Cot-grave), still so called in Anjou (Gattel), on the assumption that it must be derived from virev, to turn round. Vilbrequin itself is a naturalized form of Flem. wielboorcken (= wheel-bore-kin), a little revolving borer, a drill. Further corruptions are old Fr. vibriquet (Palsgrave), Picard. biberquin, Sp. berbequi.

VITECOQ (O. French), a snipe, as if from vite, swift, is a corruption of Eng. woodcock, A. Sax. wudcoc (Diez). A further corruption is vit de coq (in Cotgrave), a woodcock.

VIUELAS (Sp.), small pox, so spelt with a probable reference to virus, is the same word as Fr. vérole (for virole), variole, Low Lat. variola, from varius, of many colours, spotted.

VIZTHUM, a deputy or vicegerent, a Germanized form of vicedominus, Fr. vidame, as if containing the common affix -thum, Eng. -dom.

VOILE, "a veil," in Wallon used for glass, is a corruption of old Fr. voivre (= verre), from Lat. vitrum (Sigart).

VOLER, to steal or rob, has been generally regarded as a shortened form of envoler, to fly away, Lat. involare, to fly upon, and then to fly away with (Diez, Scheler). Thus the word would be identical with voler, to fly. It seems to me to be derived from Fr. vole, the palm or hollow of the hand (Cotgrave), so that voler (like "to palm dice," Nares) would mean to conceal in the hollow of the hand, to steal. So It. involare, to filch, pilfer, or hide out of sight (Florio), from vola, the palm (Id.); Lat. involare, to steal, from Lat. vola, the hollow of the hand. "To palm (of palma, the hollow of the hand), to juggle in one's hand, to cog, or cheat at dice" (Bailey). Compare Grypyñ, involo.—Prompt. Parv. (ed. Pynson).

Involo, in volá aliquid continere.—Catholicon.

Hence old Fr. emblem, to steal (Vie de St. Auban, l. 956).

VORZEICHEN, properly meaning a token, is a popular German corruption of pforzich (= Lat. porticus).—Andresen.

VULLEMUNT, and vollemunt, Mid. High Ger. corruptions of Lat. fundam mentum, influenced probably by fulcimentum (Andresen).

W.

WACHHOLDER, the German name of the juniper, as if from wach (awake) and holder for holunder (the elder), is a corrupted form of Mid. High Ger. wecholder, wechalter, from wechal, lively (cf. Lat. vigil), and -ter (= tree, Goth. triu). The allusion is, no doubt, to its evergreen appearance, like Lat. juniperus, for juveni-perus, "young-bearing."

WAHLPLATZ, } German words for a WAHLSTATT, } field of battle, so spelt as if compounded with wahl, choice, election, are (like Walthalla, Icel. Valhöll, Walkürrien, Icel. Val-hyrja) from wal, signifying defeat, battlefield, the collection or number of the slain, Icel. valr, the slain, A. Sax. wael, wabre.

WÄHRWOLF, "ware-wolf," as if from währen, to beware, is a German perversion of werwolf, i.e. man-wolf, "Lycanthrope," from wër, a man. In Low Latin werwolf became gerulphus, whence garou (in Fr. loup-garou), which was mistaken (e.g. by Cotgrave) as a syncope of the words garez-vous, take heed, turn aside, look to yourselves, so that loup-garou was understood in exactly the same sense as Ger. währwolf.

WAHR-ZEICHEN (Ger.), a sign or token, literally a "true-token," as if from wahr, true, is a corruption of the old High German wort-zeichen (Icelandic jarleggn or jarleiken), a "word-token," denoting originally a ring or any other pledge brought by a messenger to prove the truth of his words. Another old corruption is wartzeichen, a watch-word, as if from warte.

WALLFISCH, the whale, and wallross, the walrus, so spelt in German, as if from wall, the shore, are incorrect forms from wal, the whale (Andresen).

Eng. walrus is a transposed form of ros-wal, old Eng. horse-whale, A. Sax. hors-hwæl, which seem to be corrupt forms of Icel. rosm-hwalr, where rosm is of doubtful origin (Cleashy, p. 501).

For the more commoditie of fishing of horsewhales.—Hakluyt, Voyages, 1598, p. 5.

WEHRGELD, in German a less correct form of wergeld, lit. a man's fine, i.e. an amercement for killing or inflicting serious injury on a man, wër (= Lat. vir, as in werwolf, man-wolf), so spelt as if from wehr, a defence.

WEICHBILD, German for a town, district, a mis-spelling as if connected with weich, weak, is from wich, = Lat. vicius, Eng. and Scot. wick, as in Berwick, "bailliewick."

WEICHSELZOPF, "Vistula-lock," a German name for the diseased state of the hair called Plica Polonica, as if the disease prevalent on the banks of the Vistula, is not compounded originally with weichsel, but with wichtel, wicht, a goblin, which was imagined to entangle the hair. The word thus exactly corresponds to our "elf-lock." So Andresen, Volksetymologie, p. 84; but M. Gaidoz throws some doubt upon the statement, Revue Critique, Août 19, 1876, p. 120.

WEIHBISCHOF, a German word for a suffragan or vicarious bishop, a bishop's substitute (as if "holy-bishop," from weihe, weihen), looks very like a corruption of vice-bischof.

In wegedistel (St. Mary's thistle) and wegedorn (Christ-thorn), weg probably has no connexion with weg, way, but is a corruption of weihe, holy (Swed. viga, to consecrate, Icel. viga, Goth. weihan, Dan. vie). Compare Eng. "Blessed Thistle," carduus benedictus.

WEIHER (Ger.), a fish-pond, so spelt as if akin to wehr, a dam or weir (fischwehr), Dut. weer, is merely a naturalized form of Fr. vivier, Lat. vivarium, a pond for keeping fishes alive; M. H. Ger. wiwer. See WAVER, p. 427.

WEINNACHTSTRAUM, an Americo-German word for a "Christmas Dream," as if a "Wine-night's Dream," weinnacht being a corruption of Ger. Weihnacht (Holy-night), Christmas.

Next dings ve had de Weinnachtstraum gesung by de Liederkranz.

Leland, Breitmann Ballads, p. 107 (ed. 1871).

WEISSAGER, German (Eng. "wise-acre"), as if directly from weise, wise, and sagen, to say, is a corruption of O. H. Ger. wizago, = A. Sax. witiga, a prophet, "wizard," "witch," Icel. vitki, a wizard.

WILDSCHUR, a German word for a furred garment, as if compounded of wild, wild, and schur, a shearing, and so the "fur of a wild-beast," is a corruption of the Slavonic word wilczura, a wolf's-skin coat (Andresen). The word undergoes a further disguise in Fr. vitchourra.

WINDBRAUS, "Wind-bluster," a Tirolese corruption of Ger. Windsbraut (q. v.).—Andresen.

WIDERTHON, the German name of the plant maiden-hair or Venus' hair, as if from wider, against, and thon, clay, is a corruption of the older forms wedertam, widertat, of uncertain origin. Another popular corruption of the same is widertod, as if from tod, death (Andresen).

WIEDEHOPF, "withe-hopper," the German name of the hoopoe, Mid. High Ger. witehopfe, as if the "wood-hopper," from O. H. Ger. witu = Eng. wood, and hüpfen. It is probably a corruption of Lat. upupa, Gk. ἰπὺς, Fr. huppe (Andresen).

WILDBRET, a German word for game, as if wild, game, dressed for the table, bret, is a modern and incorrect form of wildbraten, from braten, to roast, Mid. High Ger. wiltpraete.

WINDHUND, } German words for the WINDSPEL, } greyhound and coursing, as if denoting swift as the wind. The first part of the word, however, Mid. High Ger. wint, itself denotes the greyhound, and the compound windhund is a pleonastic uniting of the species with the genus, as in maulesel, mule-ass, walfisch, whalefish (Andresen).

WINDSBRAUT, "Wind's-bride," a German word for a squall or gust of wind, Mid. High Ger. windesbrüt, is from windes sprout, from sprüwen (= sprühen), spargere (Andresen).

WITTHUM, a German word for a dowry, so spelt as if of a common origin with witwe, a widow, wittfrau, a widow-woman, wittmann, a widower (just as "dower," Fr. douaire, is connected with "dowager"). Witwe, however, is from Lat. vidua, while witthum is another form of widum, from widem, a jointure (Andresen).

WOLFSBOHNE, i.e. Wolf's-bean, the German word for the lupine plant, seems to have originated in a misunderstanding of Lat. lupinus as being a derivative of lupus, a wolf. However, as Pictet points out, the Russian volci bobu, Illyr. vucji bob, are synonymous with the German word (Origines Indo-Europ. i. 286).

WÜTHENDE HEER (Ger.), "the wild host," wild huntsman, as if from wüthen, to be mad (old Eng. wood), is a corruption of Wuotanes her, i.e. Wodan's or Odin's army, as shown by the Swabian expression for an approaching storm, "'s Wuotes Heer kommt" (Andresen).

Wodan was originally a storm-god, his name akin to Sansk. wáta, the wind. (See Kelly, Indo-Europ. Trad. p. 267; Pictet, ii. 685; Carlyle, Heroes, Lect. i.)

Z.

ZANDER, the German name of the fish we call pike, as if so called from its formidable teeth, Prov. and Mid. High Ger. zand, a tooth, Ger. zahn, is otherwise written sunder, as if from sand, sand.

ZEEHOND (Dut.), "sea-dog," the seal, looks like a corruption of Dan. selhund, "seal-hound," Swed. själhund (Icel. selr, O. H. Ger. selah, A. Sax. seol, the seal).

Eng. seal was formerly regarded as a contraction of "sea-veal," a sea-calf.

The sea Calfe, in like maner, which our country mē for breuntie sake call a Seele, other more largely name a Sea Vele, maketh a spoyle of fishes betweene rockes and banckes, but it is not accounted in the catalogue or nuber of our Englishe dogges, notwithstanding we call it by the name of a Sea dogge or a sea Calfe.—A. Fleming, Caius of Eng. Dogges, 1576, p. 19 (repr. 1880).

ZETTOVARIO (It.), an Indian plant with a bitter medicinal root, so spelt as if compounded with vario, variegated, is a corrupt form of zedoaria, Sp. zedoaria, Portg. zeduaria, Fr. zédouaire, all from Arab-Pers. zedwār, or jedwar (Devic).

ZIEH-BOCK, a West Prussian word for the tube of a pipe (as if from ziehen, to draw, and bock, a buck), is a curious corruption of the Slavonic tschibuk, a chibouque (Andresen), or, more correctly, of Turkish tchibûq, or tchubûq, a pipe (Devic).

ZIEHJARN, a popular German corruption of cigarre, as if from ziehen, to draw.

ZITHER, the German name of a stringed instrument so called, as if connected with zitter, to shake or quaver, from the tremulous sound of the chords, is the same word as Lat. cithara.

ZWERGKÄSE, "dwarf-cheese," a German word for whey-cheese, as if called so from its small size (zwerg, a dwarf), is a corruption of quarkkäse (with the common change between qu and zw), from quark, curd, Mid. High Ger. twarc; the form twarg still being found in West Prussia (Andresen).

ZWIEBEL, a German word for a species of onion or chives, as if to denote its twofold bulb (from zwei, zwei-, two), like the plant-name zweiblatt, bifol; and so the Mid. High Ger. word zweibolle, "double-bulb," as if from bolle, a bulb. All these, however, are corruptions of It. cipolla, = Lat. cepula, from cepa, our "chives." Perhaps there may have been an oblique reference, in the way of contrast, to Lat. unio, from unus, the single bulb (whence Fr. oignon, our "onion").

A LIST OF PROPER NAMES OF PERSONS AND PLACES CORRUPTED BY FALSE DERIVATION OR MISTAKEN ANALOGY.

A.

ABBÉ HEUREUX, a Fr. place-name, is a popular corruption of Abécourou (L. Larchey, Dict. des Nomes).

ABBEY, a surname, is probably identical with Abo (in Domesday), old Ger. Abbi, Abbo, Ibba, Frisian Abbe, Dan. Ebbe, Ebba, A. Sax. Ibbe, all perhaps from aba, a man (R. Ferguson, English Surnames, p. 340).

ABEL, TOMB OF, 15 miles N. of Damascus, shown by the Arabs, is probably a mere misunderstanding of the name of the ancient city of Abila, the ruins of which are close at hand (Porter, Giant Cities of Bashan, p. 353).

ABERHILL, in the county of Kinross, is an English corruption of the Gaelic Abhir-thuill, which means "The confluence of the holes or pools" (Robertson, J. A., Gaelic Topography of Scotland, p. 72).

ABERLADY, in the county of Haddington, is a corruption of the old spelling Aberlevedy, Gaelic Abhir-liobh-aite, "The confluence of the smooth place" (Robertson, Gaelic Topography of Scotland, p. 94).

ABERMILK, in the county of Dumfries, is a corruption of the old name Abermelc or Aber-milc, Gaelic Abhir-milleach, "The confluence of the flowery sweet grass" (Robertson, Gaelic Topography of Scotland, p. 75).

ABERSKY, in Forfarshire, a corrupt form of the Gaelic Abhir-uisge, "The confluence of the water or stream" (Robertson, p. 96).

ABLEWHITE, an Eng. surname, is another form of the name Hebblewhite, Hebblewaite, or Hebblethwaite, originally of local signification, the thwaite, or clearing, of one Hebble or Hebel (Ferguson, 342).

ABOO-SEER, the modern Arabic name of the ancient Busiris (perhaps = Egyptian Pa-hesar, "the [abode?] of Osiris"), corrupted into a new meaning (Smith, Bible Dict. vol. ii. p. 578).

ACHTERSTRASSE, the name of a street in Bonn, as if "Back-street," was originally Akerstrasse or Acherstrasse, the street that leads to Achen (Andresen).

ACRE, in St. Jean d' Acre, is evidently a corruption of its ancient name in Hebrew 'Hakko (or Accho, Judges, i. 31), Egyptian 'Hakku, meaning "Hot sand," now Akka.

ACUTUS. Verstegan mentions that there was to be seen in Florence the monument and epitaph of an English knight Joannes Acutus, and some, he says,

Have wondered what John Sharp this might be, seeing in England they never heard of any such; his name rightly written being indeed Sir John Hawkwood, but by omitting the h in Latin as frivolous, and the k and w as unusual, he is here from Hawkwood turned unto Acutus, and from Acutus returned in English againe unto Sharp.—Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, 1634, p. 302.

Some account of this Sir John Hawkwood, who died in 1394, and also had a tomb in Sible Heveningham Church, Essex, is given by Weever, who says:—

The Florentines in testimony of his surpassing valour, and singular faithfull service to their state, adorned him with the statue of a man of armes, and a sumptuous Monument, wherein his ashes remaine honoured at this present day.—Funerall Monuments, 1631, p. 623.

ADDERVILLE, a place-name in Donegal, is a corruption of Ir. Eadar baile, "central town," Middleton (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, 2nd Ser. p. 417).

ADDLEHEAD, a surname, seems to be corrupted from O. Sax. and O. H. Ger. Adelheid (nobleness), whence the Christian name Adelaide (Ferguson, 263).

ADDLE STREET, near the Guildhall, London, is believed to owe its name to a royal residence of Athel-stane, which once stood there (Taylor, 284).

'ADELPHOI, "Brothers," is the form that the ancient Delphi has assumed in modern Greek.

ADELSCHLAG, the name of a Bavarian village, as if "Nob'e Blow," was originally Adalottesloh (Andresen).

ADIABENE, a Greek river-name, as if the "impassable," from a, not, and diabaino, to cross, is said to be a perversion of its proper name Adiab or Zab (Philolog. Soc. Proc. v. 142).

ÆNEAS, a personal name in Ireland, is a corruption, under classical influence, of Ir. Aengus (from aen, single, and gus, strength), Angus (O'Donovan). In Scotland it stands for Aonghas (excellent valour), in Wales for Einiawn (just).—Yonge, Christian Names, i. 176.

AGUE, a surname, is supposed to be the same as old Ger. Aigua, Agevus (Ferguson, 376).

AIR, } Eng. surnames, are probably AIRY, } from old Ger. names Aro,
Ara, Icel. Ari, a common proper name, from Icel. ari, an eagle, O. H. Ger. aro, Goth. ara.

AIRSOME, a place-name in the Cleveland district, Yorkshire, is a corrupted form of the ancient Arusum, Aresum, = Danish Aarhus in S. Jutland.

AIRSOME, a surname in Yorkshire, is a corruption of the old name Arhusum (Aarhus).—N. & Q. 4th S. ii. 231.

AKE MANNES CEASTER, or Acemannesburh, the Anglo-Saxon name of Bath, as if the aching man's, or invalid's, city, seems to be due to a misunderstanding of its old Roman name Aquæ (Taylor, Words and Places, 2nd ed. p. 465). Compare Ger. Aachen (= Fr. Aix la Chapelle), of similar origin.

AKENSIDE, an Eng. surname, seems to have been originally a local name, the side or possession of Aikin; compare Icel. name Aki, and Achi in Domesday (Ferguson, 192).

ALE, an Eng. surname, probably corresponds to old Ger. Aile, Ailo, Agilo; Mod. Ger. Eyl; A. Sax. Aegel, Icel. Egil (Ferguson, 374).

ALEMAN, a surname, is a corrupted form of old Eng. Almaine or Almayne, a German (Bardsley, Romance of London Directory, p. 116). Hence also Allman.

ALEXIA, a Latinized form of the name of Alice, found in mediæval documents, stands for Adelicia, Adelisa, and are variants of Adelaide, Frankish Adalheit, "noble cheer" (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 398).

ALKIMOS, "valiant," the Greek name of a Jewish priest (1 Macc. vii. 14), is the Grecized form of Eliakim (Heb. Elyâkim), "God hath set up."

ALLCOCK, a surname, probably stands for Hal-cock, "little Harry," like Hancock, little Hans or John, Jeff-cock, little Jeffrey, Bat-cock, little Bat or Bartholomew, Glas-cock (for Clas-cock), little Nicholas, Simcock, little Simon, Luckcock, little Luke, Wilcock, little William.

ALLCORN, an Eng. surname, is a corruption of the original local name Alchorne (Lower).

ALLÉE BLANCHE, a Fr. perversion of La Laye Blanche, "white milk," the name of a glacier on Mont Blanc (L. Larchey, Dict. des Nonmes).

ALMOND, the name of three rivers in Scotland, is a corruption of the old name Avmon, Gaelic Abhuinn, a river (Robertson, Gaelic Topography of Scotland, p. 123).

ALMOND, an Eng. surname, is probably from A. Sax. name Almund, Icel. Amundr, from mund, protection (Ferguson, 195).

ALTAVILLA. This classical looking name of a place in Limerick is an Anglicized way of writing Ir. Alt-a'-bhile, "The glen-side of the old tree" (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, vol. i. p. 374).

ALTMÜHL, a German place-name, as if "old-mill," Mid. High Ger. altmule, O. High Ger. altmuna, are from the Keltic Almona (Andresen).

AMAZÓN (Greek), "the breastless," the name given to the female warriors who were fabled to have destroyed the right breast that it might not impede their use of the bow, as if from a, not, and mázos, the breast, is said to have been a corruption of an Asiatic word, meaning a lunar deity (Tcherkes, Mazu, the moon).—Ristelhuber, in Revue Politique, 2nd S. v. 712.

The legend of a tribe of Northern Amazons or kingdom of women is supposed to have originated in a confusion between the word Qvæns, the name given by the Finns to themselves, and Swed. quinna, a woman or "queau" (Taylor, 395).

AMAZONENBERG, the form which map-makers have given to Matzenaberg (Andresen).

ANNA or Hannah in Ireland is often a representative of the native Ainè (joy).—Yonge, History of Christian Names, i. 103.

ANNABELLA, the name of a place near Mallow, is a corruption of Ir. Eanach-bile, "The marsh of the old tree" (Joyce, i. 446).

ANNA PERENNA, as if from annus and perennis, the bestower of fruitful seasons, is probably a corruption of the Sanscrit Apna-purna (the food giver), Apna containing the root ap (aqua), nourishment by water, and Purna the stem of parie (to produce).—Cox, Aryan Myth. i. 434.

ANTERIVO, the Italian name of the town Altrei, in Tirol, as if "before the river." Its original name was "All-treu," conferred on it by Henry, Duke of Bohemia (Busk, Valleys of Tirol, p. 375).

ANTHÊNAI, "The Flowery," is the modern Greek name of Athénai, Athens (Sayce, Principles of Comp. Philology, p. 362). This, however, is only a recurrence to the primitive meaning, if they be right who regard Athéné as meaning Florentia, "The Blooming," from a root ath, whence also anthos, a flower (Curtius, Griechischen Etymologie, vol. i. p. 216, vol. ii. p. 316).

ANTWERP, originally, no doubt, the town which sprang up "at the wharf" (Taylor, p. 393; compare Dut. aan, at, and werf, wharf), has long been popularly regarded as having had its name "of hands being there cut off and cast into the river of Skeld" (Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, 1634, p. 209), owing to its approximation in sound to Flemish handt werpen, hand throwing. A giant named Antigonus cut off the right hands of strangers who withheld their toll and threw them into the river; hence the two "couped" hands in the heraldic cognizance of the city (Illust. London News, May 25, 1872).

APHRODITÉ, the Greek name for Venus, so called as if for the reason that she sprang from the foam, aphros, of the sea. It is supposed that the Phœnician name of the goddess, Ash-toroth, would by Grecian lips be pronounced Aphteréthē, and that this was altered so as to give a Greek sense.

APPLEBY, a place-name in Westmoreland, appears to have been formed from the Roman Aballaba (Ferguson, 194).

APPLECROSS, in the county of Ross, is a corruption of the older name Aber-croisean, Gaelic Abhir-croisean, "The confluence of troubles" (Robertson, J. A., Gaelic Topography of Scotland, p. 98).

Skene gives the Gaelic name in the form Aphrercrosan.

ARCHIPELAGO, as if the "chief sea," is said to be a corruption of its Greek name Aigaion pelagos, the Ægean Sea.

Sandys says that the Ægean Sea, named after Ægeus, the father of Theseus, is "now vulgarly called the Arches" (Travels, p. 10).

AREOPOLIS, the city of Ar (or Rab-bath Moab, now Rabba), is so named by Greek and Roman writers, as if the city of Arés or Mars (Tristram, Land of Moab, p. 110).

'ARĪBEH, in Jebel 'Arībeh, the Arabic name of a Sinaitic mountain, as if called from the plant arībeh, with which it abounds, is a corruption of the old name Horeb, which having no meaning to the Arabear has long since perished (E. H. Palmer, Desert of the Exodus, vol. i. p. 21).

ARMEN GECKEN, "Poor fools," a popular Ger. corruption of les Armagnacs (Revue Politique, 2nd S. v. 711).

ARROW, the name of a river in Herefordshire, apparently indicative of the swiftness of its stream, has no more to do with arrow (= sagitta), O. Eng. arwe, than the Dart in Devonshire (for Darcent, Dorwent, Celt. Dwr-gwyn, "clear water") has to do with dart. It has been variously traced to the British Aurwy, "overflowing" (Quarterly Rev. No. 295, p. 158), and the Celtic arw, violent (I. Taylor, Words and Places, p. 216). The river Tigris, however, obtained its name from the arrowy swiftness of its course, being near akin to O. Pers. tigris, an arrow (? Zend tighra, rapid.—Benfey), Pers. tīg, and the swift bounding tiger, Lat. tigris (cf. Greek Actos, eagle, as a name for the Nile).

Old Sir John Maundeville (Voiage and Travaile, p. 304, ed. Halliwell) would seem to have had an inkling of this relationship—

The thridde Ryvere that is clept Tigris is as moche for to seye as faste rennyng; for he rennethe more faste than ony of the tother. And also there is a Best that is clepid Tigris, that is faste rennyng.

Sylvester speaks of Tear-bridge Tigris swallow-swifter surges.

Du Burtas, p. 276 (1621).

Compare—

Thou Simois, that, as an arowe, clere Through Troy rennest, aie downward to the see.

Chaucer, Troilus and Cresseide, l. 1548.

Arrow is probably identical with the river-names Arro (Warwick), Arvo (Monmouth), Aray (Argyle), Are and Aire (Yorkshire), Arga, Arva (Spain), Aar (Germany), &c.

ASHBOLT, an Eng. surname, is probably, like Osbald, from Icel. diss, a god (especially Thor), and báld, bold. So Osburn = Icel. As-tjörn (God-bear) exactly corresponding to Thorburn = Icel. Thor-tjörn (Thor-bear). Ashkettle = Icel. As-ketill, corresponding to Thurkettle = Icel. Thor-ketill (Thor's caldron).

ASH-BOURNE, like the similar river-names, Is-bourne, Wash-bourne, Ouseburn, is Celtic wisge + Eng. burne, "water-brook" (Taylor, 211). Compare EASTBOURNE.

ASHKETTLE, as a surname, is derived from the Danish Asketil. See ASHBOLT.

ASTROÁRCHĒ, "Star-ruler," a name given by the Greeks to Astarte (e.g. Herodian, v. 6, 10, identifying her with the Moon), is a corruption of that word, which is only another form of Heb. Ashtōreth. Cf. Assyrian Ishtar (Bib. Dict. i. 123).

AUDARD, ST., is a corruption of St. Theodhard, "people's firmness" (Fris. Tiard), Archbishop of Narbonne, from a false analogy probably to names like Audorn, Audovard, Audwine. The initial Th was merged and lost in the final t of "Saint." For the contrary mistake compare Tabbs for St. Ebbs, Tooley (St.) for St. Olaf, Tawdrey for St. Audrey, &c.

AUSTIN, or Augustin, is sometimes only an ecclesiastical modification of Danish Eysteín, "island-stone" (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 431; i. 337).

AUTEVERNE (in Eure), which ought to mean haute verne (grand aune), is really haute avoine, its Latin name in 12th century having been alta avesna (L. Larchey, Dict. des Nomes).

B.

BABEL, Heb. Bábel for Bábbel, as if from bábal, to confound, is a Semitic interpretation of Bab-el, "The gate of the God," which was originally a translation of the synonymous Accadian name Cadimirra (A. H. Sayce, Babylonian Literature, p. 33).

So Stanley, Jewish Church, vol. i. The Arabic name for the ruins is Bab-il, understood as the "gate of God" (Bib. Dict. i. 149).

BACCHUS, a surname, is the same as the north country name Backus, Bakkus, or Backhouse, i.e. Bake-house, in Cleveland pronounced backus (Atkinson). Compare the names Moorhouse, Stackhouse, Woodhouse.

Bakhouse, or bakyng howse. Pistrina.—Prompt. Parv.

BAGSHOT, near Ascot, is said to be the modern form of badger'sholt, the badger's wood (Ger. holz). So Aldershot for Alders' holt, and Badshot (Taylor, 360).

BAKE-WELL, in Derbyshire, spelt Bathequell in 13th century, in Domesday Book Badequella, is the A. Sax. Badecanvylle, i.e. "Badeca's Wells" (Sax. Chron.).

BALAAM, a surname, seems to be a mis-spelling of a local name (Bale-ham).—Ferguson, 382.

BALLY-WATER, a place-name in Wexford, stands for Ir. baile uachtar, "upper-town" (Joyce, i. 40).

BARBARY, in N. Africa, originally the kingdom of the Berbers, has been assimilated to the Lat. barbarus, Greek bárbaros, a foreigner (Taylor, 396).

BAREBONE, the name of the family to which the Puritan Praise-God belonged, is a corruption of Barbon, the name of a French Huguenot family (S. Smiles, The Huguenots, p. 361, 1880).

BARMOUTH, on west coast of Wales, was originally Aber-Mowdd, i.e. the mouth (aber) of the river Mowdd (Key, Language, p. vii.) or Mawddach. Spurrrell gives the name as Abermaw.

BARWYNION, the Welsh form of Pyrenees (said to be from Basque pyrge, high), as if derived from bar, summit, and wyn, lambs.

BASKERFIELD, } Eng. surnames, are BLOMFIELD, } said to be corruptions of the French Baskerville and Blondeville (Lower).

BATTERSEA, is never battered by the sea, but is corrupted from Peter's Eye (or island), taking its name from the adjacent Abbey of St. Peter, at Westminster. See Stanley, Memoirs of Westminster Abbey, p. 18.

BAUVILLE, a place-name in Donegal, is a Frenchified form of Ir. Bo-bhaile, "Cow-town" (Joyce, i. 338).

BAYSWATER is said to have got its name from a pool or pond situated there, which used to be called "Baryard's watering" (Jesse, London, vol. i. p. 22).

BEACHY HEAD, the name of a well-known promontory near Eastbourne in Sussex. "It is so called from the beach adjoining," says the Compleat History of Sussex, London, 4to. 1730, p. 520. It is really, however, a corruption of the name Beauchef, "Fine Head," just as Beauchamp is pronounced Beacham.

BEACONSFIELD, formerly spelt Bekonsfield, and Becansfield, was probably originally bécen-feld, indicating a clearing in the becches, A. Sax. búcen, which once covered the whole Chiltern range (Sat. Review, vol. 51, p. 649).

BEELZEBUB, "Lord of flies," the fly-god (S. Matt. x. 25), a conscious Jewish perversion of Baalzebûl, "Lord of the dwelling" (2 Kings i. 2), i.e. occupying a mansion in the seventh heaven (Smith, Bib. Dict. i. 178). J. Lightfoot however explains it "Lord of dung" (Works, vol. xi. p. 195).

BEER EL SEBA (Arabic), "The well of the lion," is a corruption of Heb. Beer-sheba, "The well of the oath."

BEIT-LAHM, "House of flesh," is the modern Arabic corruption of Beth-lehem, "House of bread."

BEIT-UR (Arab.), "House of the eye," is the modern form of Beth-horon, "House of caves."

BELGRADE, the name of a town in Servia, which seems to suggest a Romance origin, is properly in Slavonic Beo-grad, "The White Town."

BELIAL, frequently retained untranslated in the Authorized Version and Vulgate, apparently from a notion that it was a proper name for some false god akin to Bel, Baal, &c.; especially in the phrase "Sons of Belial" (Judges xix. 22; 1 Sam. ii. 12). It is really Heb. bēliyarūl, meaning worthlessness (lit. bēli, without, yaal, usefulness), hence "sons of worthlessness" for "good-for-nothing fellows" (Bib. Dict. i. 183). In 2 Cor. vi. 15, Belial is used in the Greek as a personification of evil.

What concorde hath Christ with Belial?—Cranmer's Version, 1539.

[Sarrazins] en Apolin creient Sathan e Belial.
Vie de St. Auban, l. 14.

A jest . . . verie conduicible to the reproofe of these fleshly-minded Belials. [Margin] Or rather belly-alls, because all their mind is on theyr belly.—Nash, Pierce Penitence, 1592, p. 49 (Shaks. Soc.).

BELISE, in Honduras, originally Balize or Balis, and that for Valis, the Spaniards' pronunciation of Wallis, the town having received that name from the first settler, Wallis the buccaneer, in 1638 (N. and Q. 1 S. iv. 436).

BELLE-PORT, in the county of Ross, is a corruption of Gaelic Baile-pluivirt, "The town of the port" (Robertson, p. 205).

BELLE POULE, a corruption by French sailors of the name of the island Belopoulos.

BELLOWS, a surname, is, according to Camden, a corruption of Bellhouse (Remaines, 1637, p. 122).

BELL-SAVAGE. "The sign of the Saba," is mentioned in Tarleton's Jests, 1611, as being a tavern, and Douce (Illustr. of Shakspeare) thinks that La Belle Sauvage is corrupted thence. He quotes from the old romance of Alexander the following lines describing a city Hit hotith Sabba in langage.

Thennes cam Sibely savage, of al theo world theo fairest quene,
To Jerusalem, Salamon to seone.

He thought Sibely savage was for si belle savage, but it is no doubt for Sibylla.

BERN, the Germanized form of Verrona, as if connected with bären, bears, which have consequently come to be regarded as a sort of totem of the city, a number of these animals being always kept on show in a bear-pit.

BIERHOLD, as a German name, sometimes Bierolf, is an intelligible perversion of the foreign name, Pirol (= yellow-thrush), Mid. High Ger. piro (Andresen).

BILLIARD, a surname, is perhaps a corruption of Billhard, Ger. Billhardt, connected by some with the Icelandic goddess Bil (Ferguson, 58).

BIRCHIN LANE, London, was originally Burchover Lane, "so called of Burchover the first builder thereof, now corruptly called Birchyn Lane" (Howell, Londinopolis, 81; Stow, Surway, 75).

BÎR-ES-SEBÂ (Arab.), "Well of the lion," is the modern form of Beersheba, "Well of the Seven" (Bib. Dict. i. 181).

BISHOP, a surname, is no doubt, in some instances, the same as old Sax. Biscop, a name borne by one of the heathen kings of the Lindisfari (Kemble), which Ferguson would connect with old Ger. names Bis, Biso, and A. Sax. cōf, strenuous, comparing the surname Wincup from A. Sax. Wincuf (Eng. Surnames, p. 405).

BLACKHEATH, south-east of London, is said to be a corruption of Bleak Heath (Taylor, 386).

BLACKNESS CAPE, is the very inappropriate rendering in some English charts of Blanc Nez, the name of a promontory of white chalk on the French coast opposite to Folkestone.—Tour of M. de la Boullaye le Gouz in Ireland, 1644 (ed. C. C. Croker, note, p. 49).

BLACKWALL HALL, London, an old perversion of Bakewell hall, so called from its occupier, temp. Ed. III., "corruptly called Blackewall Hall" (Stow, Surway, 1603, p. 108, ed. Thoms). Stow also spells it "Blakewell hall."

BLEIDORN, a German family-name, as if "Lead-thorn," from blei, lead, is a corruption of blühdorn, the flowering thorn, from blühen, to flower, through the Low Ger. forms bleudorn and blühdorn (Andresen).

BLIND CHAPEL COURT, London, is a corruption of Blanch-Appleton, the manor from which it derived its name (Ed. Review, No. 267, Jan. 1870).

Then have you Blanche Apleton; whereof I read in the 13th of Edward I. that a lane behind the said Blanch Apleton was granted by the King to be inclosed and shut up.—Stow, Survey of London, p. 56 (ed. Thoms).

BLOOD, a surname, is perhaps from Welsh Ap Llawd, "son of Lloyd" (S. De Vere), like Barry, Broderick, Price, Prockers, for ap Harry, ap Roderick, ap Rhys, ap Roger.

BLOOMSBURY, London, is a corruption of the older name Lomesbury (Taylor, 399).

In the year of Christ 1534 . . . the king having fair stabling at Lomsberu (a manor in the farthest west part of Oldborne) the same was fired and burnt.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 167 (ed. Thoms).

BLUBBER LANE, the name of a street in Leicester, is a corruption of Blue Boar, the sign of an inn (originally The White Boar) at which Richard III. is said to have slept just before the battle of Bosworth Field (Timbs, Nooks and Corners of English Life, p. 310).

BODEN-SEE, Mid. High Ger. Bodemsee, as if "The Bottom Sea," with an oblique allusion, perhaps, to the apparently bottomless depth of its waters, is corrupted from the old name lacus Potamicus, or Bodamicus, so called from the neighbouring Bodama, now Bodman (Andresen).

BOGHILL, a place-name in Ireland, is a corruption of Boughil, Ir. buachaill, "a boy," often applied to an isolated standing rock (Joyce, ii. 412).

BOG WALKS, the English name of a valley in Jamaica, is a transmutation of Bocaguas, or "Mouth of the Waters," as it used to be called by the Spaniards (Andrew Wilson, The Abode of Snow, p. 258).

BONNYGLEN, a place-name in Donegal, is a modification of Ir. Bun-a'-ghleanna, "End of the glen" (Joyce, ii. 65).

BOOKLESS, a family name, formerly (1749) Bugless, Buglas, or Buglass (Notes and Queries, 6th Ser. iv. 166), apparently of Gaelic origin, and meaning "yellow water," like Douglas, "black water."

BOROUGH, as a surname, is a corruption of the Huguenot name Bouherau.

Vid. Smiles, Huguenots, p. 367 (ed. 1876).

BORNHOLM, as if the spring or well island, is formed out of the older name Borgundarholmur, the Burgundian isle (Andresen).

BOSOM'S INN, an old hostelry in St. Laurence Lane, Cheapside, is a corruption of Blossom's Inn according to Stow, which "hath to sign St. Laurence the Deacon, in a border of blossoms or flowers" (Survey, p. 102, ed. Thoms). See Hotten, Hist. of Signboards, p. 297.

But now comes in, Tom of Bosoms-inn,
And he presenteth Mis-rule.
B. Jonson, Works, p. 601 (ed. Moxon).

BOSPHORUS, a corrupt spelling of Bosphorus ("ox-ford"), against which Macaulay used to protest. See Æschylus, Prom. Vincitus, l. 751.

BOTTLE, a surname, is corrupted from Botolf, i.e. Bodvulf, "commanding wolf," whence also Biddulph.

BOTTLEBRIDGE, in Huntingdonshire, is a popular corruption of Botolf's-bridge, called after St. Botolf or Bodvulf (d. 655), from whom also Boston (for Botolf's town) takes its name (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 402).

BOWEN (properly = Welsh Ap-Owen, "Owen-son"), as an Irish surname, is in some cases an Anglicization of Ir. O'Knavin, as knavin signifies a small bone (O'Donovan, Ir. Penny Journal, i. 397).

BOXER, a surname, is sometimes a corruption of the French name Bouchier (Smiles, The Huguenots, p. 323, 1880).

BOY-HILL, a place-name in Fermanagh, is an Anglicized spelling of Ir. buidhe-choill, "yellow-wood" (Joyce, i. 40).

BRANDENBURG, MERSEBURG. The latter part of these words is said to be corrupted from the Slavonic bor, a forest (Andresen).

BRANDY, a surname, is probably identical with the Norse name Brandr, "having a sword" (Icel. brandr).—Ferguson.

BRASEN-NOSE, an old name for a college at Oxford, less incorrectly spelt Brasenose, i.e. Brasen-ose, is said to be a very ancient corruption (as early as 1278!) of Brasin-house, so called because the original college was built on the site of the Brasinium, or "Brewing-house," pertaining to King Alfred's palace, "The King's Hall." (Compare L. Lat. brasiare, to brew, brasinium, Du Cange.) See Warter, Parochial Fragments, 188; Ingram, Memorials of Oxford. Compare WRYNOSÉ.

This corruption is perpetuated in brass at Oxford,

Where o'er the porch in brazen splendour glows
The vast projection of the mystic nose.

William Smith, Bishop of Lincoln, began Brasen-Nose Colledge, but dyed before he had finished one Nostrill thereof.—Fuller, Worthies of England, i. 191.

Testons are gone to Oxford to study in Brazen-nose.—Id. ii. 221.

BREED, a surname, perhaps identical with A. Sax. Bridd, Ger. Brede, old Ger. Briddo (Ferguson, 166).

BREEZE, a surname, is perhaps identical with the Norse name Bresi (Ferguson, 134).

BRIDGET, ST., or St. Brigitta of Sweden, properly Bergit, a shortened form of Bergljot, owes the ordinary form of her name to a confusion with the Irish St. Brigid, the patroness of Kildare (O'Donovan; Yonge, ii. 51).

BRIDGEWATER, originally the Burg of Walter, one of William the Conqueror's followers. Water was the old pronunciation of Walter, e.g. "Watere or Watte, propyr name. Walterus."—Prompt. Parvulorum.

BRITISH, a place-name in Antrim, is a corruption of Brittas, "speckled land," from Ir. brít, speckled (Joyce, ii. 282).

BROKENBOROUGH, in Wilts, is a corruption of the ancient name Broken-eber-egge, "Badger-boar-corner" (Taylor, 467).

BROOKLYN (New York) is said to have nothing to do with brook or lin, a pool, but to be a corruption of its former Dutch name Breukelen.

BROTHER HILL,	} all in Pembroke-	} shire, are said to BUTTER HILL,
CREAMSTON,			} owe their names
HONEY HILL,				} respectively to SILVER HILL,
Grim, Hogni, and Sólvar,	} Scandinavia.

vian vikings who made a settlement there (Taylor, 177).

BROWN WILLY, the name of a mountain in Cornwall, is the Cornish Bryn uhella, "highest hill" (M. Müller, Chips, iii. 304). According to others Bryn Huel, "the tin-mine ridge" (Taylor, 388).

BRUNNENTRÛT, an old corruption, in German, Pruntrut a more modern, of Pons Ragintrudis (Andresen).

BRUIN, } as surnames in Ireland,
BYRON, } are often merely disguised forms of O'Beirne (O'Donovan).

BUCKHURST, } English place-names,
BUCKLAND, } are derived, not from the animal, but from the beech, A. Sax. bóc.

BULL AND BUTCHER, a public-house sign formerly to be seen at Hever in Kent, was originally (it is said) Bullen Butchered, referring to the unhappy death of Queen Anne Bolleyn (Hotten, Hist. of Signboards, p. 47).

BULL AND GATE, as the sign of an inn in London, it was suggested by Stevens, was originally The Bullogne Gate ("as I learn from the title-page of an old play"), designed perhaps as a compliment to Henry VIII., who took that place in 1544.

BULL AND MOUTH, as an inn-sign, was probably originally The Bullogne Mouth, i.e. the mouth of the harbour of Bullogne (Stevens).

BULLOCK, the name of a place near Kingstown, co. Dublin, now called Sandycove, is a corruption of Blowick, i.e. Blá-vik, the blue cove.

The next day [we] landed at Bullock, six miles from Dublin, where we hired garçons to carrie vs to the citie. — Autobiography of Sir J. Bramston (ab. 1631), p. 37 (Camden Soc.).

BUNYAN, a surname, is a corruption of the old Eng. name Bonjon (1310), originally a French name, Bon Jean, Good John, like the French Gros-Jean, Grand-Pierre, &c. (Bardsley, Romance of the London Directory, p. 159).

BURENGAREN or Bauerngarten, "peasants' garden," is a Germanized form of Beauregard, the French colony in Brandenburg (Förstemaun; Taylor, 390).

BŪRSA, "hide," the name given by the Greeks to the citadel of Carthage (Strabo), on which was founded the legend that the Tyrian settlers who built it having been conceded so much land as an ox-hide would cover, cut it into thongs, and thus encircled the site of the future city. It was merely at first a Greek corruption of the Hebrew and Phœnician word bozrah, an enclosure, a fortified place or stronghold (Gesenius; Bochart, Canaan, Op. iii. 470, ed. 1682). Hence the modern place-name Busra (Bib. Dict. i. 235). Similarly a hide of land (A. Sax. higid) has often been confused with hide, a skin (Pictet, ii. 51), and Thong Castle in Kent, is supposed to have obtained its name from the same device on the part of Hengist (Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, p. 122, 1634; Nares, s.v.).

BUSENBAUM, "Bosom-tree," a German family name, is a corruption of bushbaum or buchsbaum, the box-tree, Low Ger. Busboom.

BUTTERWECK, "Butter-roll," the name of a district in Bonn, was originally Buterwerk, outwork (Andresen).

C.

CABBAGE GARDEN, THE, an old burial ground which stood opposite the Meath Hospital, Dublin, is a corruption of The Capuchins' Garden (Irish Pop. Superstitions, p. 34).

CADIE, } French forms of the name
CADIA, } Acadie or Acadia, a region of Canada, from the Micmac word acadi, a place; so Passamaquoddy Bay is from passam-acadi, the place of fish (Bryant and Gay, Hist. of the United States, vol. i. p. 313).

CAERGRAIG, "Rock-city" (craig, a rock), the Welsh name of Rochester (A. Sax. Rofe-ceaster, Hrofe-ceaster), understood as Rockchester, as if from Fr. roche, or Lat. rupis castra.

CÆSAR, LA TOUR DE, "Cæsar's Tower" at Aix, is the polite name for what the people call La tour de la Queirié, i.e. the tower of the fortification (Romance cairia).—J. D. Craig, Miejour, p. 399). On the other hand, Kaisar's Lane in old Dublin underwrote a transformation anything but polite, which may be found recorded in Stanishurst's Description of Ireland (Holinshed, Chron. vol. i. 1587).

CAKEBREAD, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Kirkbride (Charnock).

CALLOWHILL, a place-name frequent in Ireland, and Colehill, are corruptions of Ir. Coll-choill, "hazel wood" (Joyce, i. 496).

CAMBRIDGE, apparently the "bridge over the Cam," appears to be a corruption of the ancient name Cambo-rit-um, "the ford of the crooked (cam) river," compounded with Celtic rhyd, a ford, seen also in Rhed-ecina, the British name of Oxford (Taylor, 254).

CAMPBELL, a surname, as if, like Beauchamp, from canypus bellus, campo bello, "fair field," is a corrupt spelling of Gaelic Caimbel or Cambheul, "crooked mouth" (Academy, No. 30, p. 392), Ir. cambheulach. So Cameron is for Camshronach, "wry-nose," Ir. camshronach.

CANNING, as an Ulster surname, is an Anglicized form of Ir. Mac Conin (O'Donovan).

CANON ROW, close beside Westminster Abbey, as if called from the canons who lived there, is a corruption of its ancient name Channel Row (Stanley, Memoirs of Westminster Abbey, p. 7). Stow in his Survey calls it Channon Row.

CANNON STREET, London, is a corruption, due no doubt to the ecclesiastical associations of the adjoining cathedral, of the old name Candlewick Street, or as it seems originally to have been called Candlewright Street, the street of the candle-makers (Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 82, ed. Thoms). Pepys calls it Canning Street.

From Seypulkurs unto sant Martens Orgaynes in Kanwykstreet to be bered . . . the lord Justes Browne.—Machyn's Diary, 1562, p. 297.

CARABINE BRIDGE, near Callan, Kilkenny, is a corruption of the Irish name Droiched-na-gcarbad, "bridge of the chariots" (Joyce, ii. 172).

CAREWELL, an English corruption of the name of Henrietta de Querouaille in Evelyn's Life of Mrs. Godolphin, p. 255.

CARISBROOK, a place-name in the Isle of Wight, is a corruption of Wiht-gara-byrig, "The burgh of the men of Wight" (Taylor, 307).

CARLETON, a surname in Ulster, is an incorrect Anglicized form of O'Cairellan (O'Donovan).

CARRIGOGUNNELL, the Mod. Irish name of a castle near the Shannon, in Limerick, always understood as "the candle rock," Carraig-na-gcoinneal, with reference to an enchanted candle nightly lighted on it by an old witch, is a perversion of the old Ir. name Carraig-O-gCoinnell, "Rock of the O'Connells" (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, 1st S. p. 5.)

CASTLEKIRK, a ruin on an island in Lough Corrib, is an Anglicized form of Ir. Caislen-na-circe, "The hen's castle" (Joyce, ii. 290).

CASTLE OF MAIDENS, an old name given by the chroniclers to Edinburgh, Castrum Puellarum, also Mons Puellarum, Welsh Castell y Morwynion, seems to have originated in a misunderstanding of its Keltic name Magh-dun or Maidyn, "the fort of the plain" (Ir. magh, a plain).—Notes and Queries, 5th S. xii. 214; just as Magdeburg, which was also Latinized into Mons Puellarum, is properly the town on the plain. William Lyttil, however, speaking of Edinburgh, says, "Maydyn Castell, that is, teambhair nam marthan, the nobles' or princes' palace tower" (Landmarks of Scottish Life and Language). Cf. Ir. maith, a chief or noble. See MAIDEN CASTLE.

There was made a great cry of a tournament between King Carados of Scotland and the King of Northgalis, and either should just against other at the castle of Maidens.—Sir T. Malory, Historie of King Arthur, 1634, ii. 127 (ed. Wright).

Jan. 7. The Castle of Edinburgh was formerly call'd castrum puellarum, i.e. the Maiden castle, because, as some say, the Kings of the Picts kept their daughters in it while unmarried. But those who understand the ancient Scots or Highland Language say the words ma-eden signify only a castle built upon a hill or rock. This account of the name is just enough.—Hearnese, Reliquia, 1733 (vol. iii. p. 110).

The Pictish maidens of the blood-royal were kept in Edinburgh Castle, thence called Castrum Puellarum.

"A childish legend," said Oldbuck. . . "It was called the Maiden Castle, quasi lucus a non lucendo, because it resisted every attack, and women never do."—Sir W. Scott, The Antiquary, ch. vi.

CASTLE TERRA, the name of a town-land in Cavan, is a corruption of the native Ir. name (Cussatirry) Cos-a-tsiorraigh, "the foot of the colt" of legendary origin (Joyce, Irish Names and Places, i. 8).

CASTLE-VENTRY, the name of a parish in Cork, is a misrendering of the Irish Caislean-na-gaoithe, "castle of the wind," the Ir. word ventry (= white straud) being introduced from an imagined connexion with Lat. ventus, the wind (Joyce, i. 36).

CAT AND WHEEL, a public-house sign, is said by Flecknoe, 1665, to be a Puritan alteration of The Catherine Wheel (Larwood and Hotten, Hist. of Signboards, p. 11).

CECIL, as a surname, is said to be in some cases a corruption of Sitsil (Camden, Remaines, p. 148, 1637).

CEDREI, a name which Pliny (v. 11) gives to the Arabs, is his rendering of the Hebrew Kedar, black.

CENTUM NUCES, "Hundred Nuts," is a mediæval Latin interpretation of Sannois, the name of a village near Paris, as if cent noix (Devic).

CHANDELIER, a Fr. place-name, also Chandeliour, is a popular corruption of Champ de la Lioure, i.e. Champ du lièvre (L. Larchey, Dict. des Nomes).

CHARING CROSS, it has often been stated, was so called because a cross was set up there to mark it as one of the resting-places of the corpse of la chère reine, Eleanor. Unfortunately for the suggestion, the little village of Charing is found bearing that name in a petition of William de Radnor dated 1261, many years before Queen Eleanor's death (Jesse, London, vol. i. p. 397).

CHARLEMAGNE is probably a Gallicized form of Charlemaine, Ger. Karlman (Grimm).

CHEAPSIDE. The -side in the name of this thoroughfare is probably a corruption of seld, the old name for an alley of booths in which the sellers of different wares kept up a constant fair. Another part of it was called the Crown-seld (Saturday Review, vol. 50, p. 427). A. Sax. seld, a seat, a throne; the crown-seld was the place where the monarch sat to view the pageants or processions. Cf. A. Sax. ceap-setl, a tradesman's stall. Stow mentions that Edward III. "in the ward of Cheape caused this sild or shed to be made, and to be strongly built of stone, for himself, the queen, and other estates to stand in, there to behold the joustings and other shows at their pleasures." This building was subsequently known as Crounsilde or Tamersilde (Survey, 1603, p. 97, ed. Thoms).

CHEEK POINT, the name of a place on the Suir below Waterford, is an adaptation of Sheega Point, the Irish name being Póinte-na-Sige, the point of the fairies (Joyce, Irish Place Names, 1st S. p. 179).

CHEESE,
CHEESEMAN, } Eng. surnames, are
CHESSMAN, } regarded by Fergu-A. Sax. Cissa, Frisian Tsjisse (Eng. Surnames, p. 86). son as derivatives of

CHERRY-TREE, THE, the name of a place in Guernsey, is a corruption of La Tcherotterie, an old word signifying a tannery (N. and Q. 5th S. ii. p. 90).

CHORUS, a family name in Ireland, is a corruption of Corish, a shortened form of Mackorish, Irish Mac Fheorais (pronounced Mac Orish), "Son of Féoras" (= Pierce). Compare the Ir. names Keon for Mac Owen; Cribbin and Gribbon for Mac Robin, "Son of Robin;" Cadamstown (in Kildare) for Mac Adam's town (Joyce, ii. 140).

CHRESTUS, i.e. "The Good," in Greek, is a mistaken spelling of Christus found in Suetonius' Life of Claudius, which states that that Emperor "expelled the Jews from Rome because of the frequent riots that took place among them under the leadership of Chrestus" (c. xxv.).—Plumptre, Bible Studies, p. 419. Similarly Chrestiani for Christiani is used by Lactantius (iv. 7), and mentioned by Tertullian:—

Cum perperam Christianus [read Chrestianus] pronuntiatum a vobis . . . de suavitate vel benignitate compositum est.—Apologeticus, c. 3 (ed. Semler, v. 9, see his note vi. 386).

CLOAK, a surname, is perhaps from Icel. klóker, prudent (Ferguson, 325).

CLOWATER, the name of a place near Borris, in Carlow, stands for Ir. cloch-uachdar, "Upper stone (or stone-castle)."—Joyce, ii. 415.

COACH-AND-SIX LANE, off the north main street of the city of Cork, is a corruption of Couchanceaw, the name of a Huguenot who resided there more than a century ago, after whom it was called (S. Smiles, The Huguenots, p. 300, 1880).

COALMAN, a surname in Connaught, is an Anglicized form of O'Cluman (O'Donovan).

COFFEE, a surname, is probably, as Mr. Ferguson suggests, a corruption of the A. Saxon name Coif, which seems to be akin to Cóf, strenuous, active. So perhaps Coffin stands for Coffing, a patronymic (Eng. Surnames, 317).

COLE HARBOUR, near London Bridge, a corrupted form of Cold Harborough, its ancient name (Jesse, London, vol. ii. p. 230).

COME TO GOOD, the name of a place in Cornwall, is from the Cornish Cwm ty goed, Woodhouse Valley (M. Müller, Chips, iii. 304).

CONY CASTLE, the name of a height near Lyme Regis, sometimes called Conig Castle, was originally Cyning, or King, Castle (Cornhill Mag. Dec. 1880, p. 713).

CONKWELL, an Eng. place-name, is a corruption of the ancient Cunacaleah (Earle).

COOLFORE, a place-name of frequent occurrence in Ireland, meaning, not "cool before," but "cool behind," is Ir. cúl-fuar, "back cold," i.e. a hill having on its back a northern aspect. Thus comparing the original word with its disguised form, the latter part of the one (fuar) is synonymous with the former part of the other (cool), and the former part of the one (cúl) is the reverse of the latter part of the other (fore).

COOLHILL, a place-name in Kilkenny, is properly Ir. culchoill, "Back-wood" (Joyce, i. 40).

COOL-MOUNTAIN. } The latter part of KIL-MOUNTAIN. } these, and other similar townland names in Ireland, is an Anglicized form of mointin, a little bog, or of mointeán, boggy land (Joyce, i. 40).

COPPERSMITH, a place-name in E. Lothian, is said to be a corruption of Cockburn's Path, pron. "Coburn's Path" (Philolog. Soc. Proc. v. 140).

CORDELA (Ger. Cordula), the name of Lear's daughter, often regarded as a derivative of Lat. cor(d)-s, the heart, is an Anglicized form of Welsh Creir-dyddlydd, "token of the flood" (in the Mabinogion), the daughter of Llyr (Yonge, ii. 35). Other forms of the Welsh name are Creiddylad and Craw-dilat (Mabinogion).

COVER, a river in Yorkshire, from the Gaelic Cobhar, "the frothy river" (Robertson, p. 185).

COWBRAIN, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Colbran, Colbrand (Charnock, Ludus Patronymicus).

CRANFIELD, a place-name in Antrim, is a corruption of Ir. creamh-choill (pron. crawwhill), "wild-garlick wood;" whence also Craffield in Wicklow, and Crawhill in Sligo (Joyce, ii. 329).

CROMWELL, the name of a townland in Limerick, is an Anglicized form of Ir. erom-choill, "sloping wood" (Joyce, i. 40).

CROUY-LAID-PEUPLE, "Crouy the ugly people," is the popular name of a certain French village properly called Crouy-lès-peuples, "Crouy (near) the poplars" (N. and Q. 6th S. ii. 273).

CROWNFIELD, a surname, is known to be a corruption of the Dutch name Groenveld (Edinburgh Review, vol. 101, p. 382).

CUNNING GARTH, in Cumberland, stands for "king's yard," Norse konungr, king, and garðr, yard.

CUPID'S GARDENS, a place of popular resort south of the Thames in the beginning of the 18th century, originally named after one Cuper, gardener to the Earl of Arundel (N. and Q. 5th S. ii. p. 394).

CUSHION, } as family names are said
COUSINS, } to be corruptions of the Gaelic Mac Ossian, son of Ossian (R. S. Charnock, Ludus Patronymicus). Compare Cotter for Mac Otter (Norweg. Ottar).—Worsaae. So the Manx surname Kissack was originally Mac Isaac.

CUTBEARD, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Cuthbert (Charnock).

CUTLOVE, a surname, is supposed by Ferguson to be compounded of A. Sax. Cudh, known, famous, and leof, friend. The curious name Cutmutton he thinks may be compounded with old Ger. muatin, from muth, courage, and so "famous for courage" (Eng. Surnames, p. 394).

D.

DAMNÉ, the French sobriquet of the legendary hero Ogier le Danois (It. il dannato), is a corruption of the word Danois (It. il Danese). A story was invented that Ogier was a Saracen who became a Christian, whereupon his friends wrote to him politely "tu es damné," and this name he adopted at his baptism. Ogier le Danois, Sp. Danes Úrgal (Don Quixote), is Holger Danske, the national hero of Denmark (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 385; Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction, 264).

DANCE, a surname, is probably for Dansk, Danish, A. Sax. Denisc, and Danisca, a Dane.

DANESFIELD, the name of a demesne at Moycullen, Galway, is a translation of the Mod. Ir. name Gortyloughlin, as if the field (gort) of the Dane (Loch-lannach). That word, however, is a corruption of the old Ir. Gortylough-nane (Gort-vi-Lachtnain), "the field of the O'Loughnane family" (Joyce, ii. 134).

DANGERFIELD, as a family name, is a corruption of the Norman-French d'Angerville.

DANIEL, adopted in Ireland as equivalent to the native name Domnall (Yonge, Christian Names, i. 121).

DAPHNÆ (Greek Δάφναι, "laurels," or "bays"), the name given by Herodotus (ii. 30) to an Egyptian ancient, is only a Grecized form of fortress Egyptian Tabenet, Arab. (Tell-) Defenneh (Brugsch, Egypt under the Pharaohs, ii. 357).

D'ARCY, as a surname in Galway, is an assimilation to the Anglo-Norman name of Irish O'Dorey (O'Donovan).

DARK, a surname, is said to be a corruption of D'Arques, in France (Charnock).

DARTWELL. I am not sure whether this exists still as a surname. It is the old Eng. Dartuell, which is for d'Arteveldt, = von Arteveldt. Lord Berners, speaking of James, the father of Philip van Arteveldt, says:—

The kyng demaunded of the burgesses of Bruges howe Jaques Dartuell dyd.—Translation of Froissart, cap. i. (1523).

DEAD MAN, the name of a Cornish headland, is an Anglicization of the Celtic dad maen (Taylor, 388).

DEADMAN, or Dedman, as surnames, according to Mr. Bardsley, are, like Debnam, but corruptions of Debenham, a local name (Romance of the London Directory, p. 37).

DEADMAN'S PLACE, London, was originally Desmond Place (Taylor, 399).

DEATH, a surname, is a corruption of the French D'Aeth (Smiles, The Huguenots, p. 323, 1880).

DERRYWILLOW, the name of a town in Leitrim, is an Anglicized form of Ir. Doire-bhaile, "The oak-wood town" (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, vol. i. p. 339).

DESPAIR, a surname, is perhaps a corruption of the French Despard (Lower, Patronymica Britannica).

DIAMOND, in Scottish ballad lore, the name of a princess "Ladye Diamond," is a corruption of Ghismonda of the Decamerone (iv. 1, 9), on whose story these ballads are founded. Other corruptions are Dysmal and Lady Daisy.

There was a king, an' a curious king,
An' a king o' royal fame;
He had ae dochter, he had never mair,
Ladye Diamond was her name.

Child, Ballads, ii. 382.

DIAMOND, as a surname, is another form of Dumont, i.e. Du Mont (Bardsley, Romance of London Directory, p. 37).

DIANA, the Latin name of a station in the "Desert of the Exodus" (Peutinger Tables), is a disguised form of its Arabic name Ghadyán, which is identical with the Hebrew Ezion (E. H. Palmer, vol. ii. p. 514).

DIOSCORIDES, a Grecized form (as if from Dioskoroi, "sons of Zeus," the Twins, or tutelar deities of sailors) of the Sansk. Dvipa-Sukadara, "the island Abode of Bliss," contracted Diuscatra. Hence our Socotra (Yule, Marco Polo, ii. 342).

DIRK-MIT-DEN-BEER, "Theodoric with the beard," is a Low Country corruption of the name of the legendary Dietrich of Bern (i.e. Theodoric of Verona), corrupted by the Lusitanians into Dietrich Bernhard (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 336), Ger. Diet-rich = Icel. Thjóðh-rekr, "people-ruler."

DISTAFF LANE, in old London, off Friday Street, "corruptly for Distar Lane" (Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 129, ed. Thoms).

DOE, THE, the name of a district near Sheephaven in Donegal, is an adaptation of the Irish na dTuath, "the districts," pronounced na Doe (Joyce, i. 118).

DOGGRELL, as a surname, is a corruption of Duckerell, originally a nickname, "little duck," like Cockerel (Bardsley, Romance of the London Directory, p. 37).

DOLLMAN, as a surname, is a corruption of Fr. d'Almaine (Bardsley, Eng. Surnames, p. 138).

DOLOBELLAS, the Greek transcription of Dolabella, as if connected with dolos, guile.

DORCAS MEADOW, a Lancashire field-name in 1801, was called Douglas Meadow in 1684 (N. and Q. 5th S. i. 413).

DORTMUND, HOLZMINDEN. The latter part of the names of these two towns, according to J. Grimm, is corrupted from old Sax. meni (= Lat. monile), with allusion to the necklace of the heathen goddess Freya. The ancient names were Throtmeni and Holtesmeni.

DOVE, the river in the Lake District, is no doubt merely an Anglicized form of its old Celtic name; compare Welsh dwf, that which glides, dwfr, water; Ir. dobhar, water, also a river name, Scot. Doveran (Sansk. dabhra, the sea).—Joyce, ii. 379.

DRECKENACH, at Coblenz, as if from dreck, mire, dirt, in its older name Drachenach was suggestive of a dragon, like Drachenfels (Andresen).

DRINKWATER, a surname, is stated by Camden to be a corruption of the local name Derwcntwater (Remaines, 1637, p. 122).

DROUGHT, } surnames, seem to cor-TROUT, } respond to Ger. traut, dear, Low Ger. drud, beloved, O. H.
Ger. truten, to caress (Ferguson, 249).

DRUMBOY, in Dumfries and Ayr, is the Gaelic Drum-buidhe, "the yellow ridge" (Robertson, Gaelic Topography of Scotland, p. 294).

DRUMCLIFF, the name of a place near Sligo, is a perversion of the Irish Drum-chliabh, "the hill-ridge of baskets" (Joyce, ii. 194).

DUCK'S-FOOT LANE, adjoining Suffolk Lane, in London, was originally the Duke's foot-lane, or private road from his garden to the river (Ed. Review, No. 267, Jan. 1870). Forman in his Diary (April 30, 1611) speaks of the Duck of Lankaster.

DUMMERWITZ, a place-name, as if "dull-wit," is a Germanization of the Slavonic Dubrawice (Taylor, 389).

DUNAGOAT, a place-name in Devonshire, is a corruption of the Celtic Dun-y-coed, "Wooded hill" (Taylor, 388).

DURHAM, so spelt as if compounded with Celtic dur, water, and A. Sax. ham, home, is a corruption of its ancient name Dunholm, the island of the hill fort (Taylor, 381).

DUSK, a river in Ayrshire, is a corruption of the Gaelic Du-uisge, "The dark water" (Robertson, p. 132).

E.

EARLY, as a surname in Ireland, is an incorrect Anglicization of the old Irish name O'Mulmoghery, due to Ir. moch-eirghe signifying "early rising" (O'Donovan).

EASTBOURNE, a seaside town in Sussex, was, no doubt, originally the east-bourne, "water-brook," east being a modification of Celtic uisge, water, as in Is-bourne, Ash-bourne, Ouse-burn (Taylor, 211, 388).

EASTERSNOW, the name of a parish in Roscommon, is a corruption of the older name Issetnowne, or Issertnowne, all from Ir. Disert-Nuadhan (pron. Nooan), The Hermitage of St. Nuadha (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, vol. i. p. 313).

EHRENBREITSTEIN, on the Rhine, "Honour's broad stone," is from the old German Erinperahstein, where the middle word means brightness, not broadness (Andresen).

ELEPHANT LANE, in Dublin, is a corruption of its ancient name Mellifont Lane, which was so called after Henry Moore, Earl of Drogheda and Mellifont. The remainder of his name and title have survived in Henry Street, Moore Street, Earl Street, Off Lane, and Drogheda (now Sackville) Street.

ELLFELD, on the Rhine, is the modern corruption of its Roman name Alta Villa.

ELLI-SIF, a popular Icelandic form of Elizabeth, as if "old-sib," from Ell, aged, and sif, affinity, "sib." As personifications Ell was the giantess Old Age or Eld, and Sif the wife of Thor. Compare Ægisif from Greek Hagia Sophia (Burton, Ultima Thule, vol. i. p. 143).

EMBLEM, a feminine Christian name sometimes found in baptismal registers, is a corruption of Emblen, which has been remarked as a vulgar pronunciation of Emmeline (quasi Embelin).—Notes and Queries, 5th S. vii. pp. 149, 215, 278. I have even heard Emby for Emily.

ENGLISHMAN, a vague personage that has figured sometimes in the midst of Peruvian mythology, is only a mistake for Ingasman Cocapac, which is itself a corruption of Inca Manco Ccapac, the son of the Sun (vid. Tylor, Prim. Culture, i. 319).

ENOCH, SAINT, the name of a parish church in Glasgow, commemorates really St. Thenaw, the mother of the great Scotch missionary St. Mungo (or Kentigern), to whom there is a church dedicated in the same city (Chambers's Cyclopædia, s.v. Mungo).

ETHIOPIA, Greek Aithiopia, the country of the Aithiopes, apparently the men of the swarthy or sunburnt complexion, and so understood by the Greeks, as if from aíthein, to burn, and ops, the countenance. Aithiops, however, is probably only an adaptation of the native Egyptian name Ethausch (Bib. Dict. i. 588).

EUGENE, a Christian name common in Ireland, is an assimilation of the native Eoghan (pronounced Owen), "Well-born," to the synonymous Greek eugenés. Owen is the ordinary form of the same name.

EUPHRATES, the river-name, so called in Greek as if akin to euphrasia, delight, euphraino, to gladden, is a corruption of its Heb. name Phrâth (Ephrâth), the sweet or pleasant-tasted stream (from phârath, to be sweet.—Gesenius), or the fertilizing (from parak, to fructify.—The Conciliator, i. 27).

The fourth river is called Euphrates, that is to say, well bearing, for there groweth many good things upon that River.—Sir J. Maundeveile, Voyages, ch. ciii.

EVELEEN, as a Christian name, in Ireland often stands for Evin or Aevin, Ir. Aioibhinn (Yonge, ii. 40). So Eva is used for the Gaelic Aoiffe.

EVERSHOT, an English place-name, is etymologically the holt, or wood, of the wild boar (eofer).

F.

FAIRFIELD, a mountain in Westmoreland, is properly the fell (Norse fjeld) or hill of the sheep, Norse faar, Icel.

fer. Hence also Icel. Fær-eyjar (Sheep-isles), the Faroe Islands.

FAIRFOUL, a paradoxical looking surname, perhaps stands for "Farefowl," a bird of passage (M. A. Lower).

FAIR ISLE, belonging to Shetland, probably stands for Fær Isle, i.e. "sheep island," from Icel. fer, a sheep, Dan. faar, which is also the meaning of the Faroe Islands (Edmondston, Shetland Glossary, p. 153).

FAIRLIGHT, on the coast of Sussex, is a corruption of Farleigh (N. and Q. 6th S. iii. 15).

FALLS, THE, a district south of Belfast, formerly called Tuogh of the Fall and Tuoghnafall, Ir. Tuath-na-bhfál, "District of the hedges." The name, therefore, is the plural of the Irish fál (pron. faul), a hedge or enclosure, a word akin to Lat. vallum, "wall," &c. (Joyce, ii. 212).

FAMAGUSTA, the name of the principal port of Cyprus, which seems, like so many other place-names, to commemorate the fame of Augustus, as if Lat. Fama Augusti, spelt Famagosta by Sandys, and by Mandeville, who says, "Famagosta is the chief haven of Cyprus" (Early Travels in Palestine, p. 191), is a modern corruption of the Greek name Ammochôstos (Ammochôsta), apparently meaning a "sand-bank" (like ammo-chôsia, a silting up of sand), but really a Grecized form of the original Phœnician name. This is supposed to have been am nêchosheth, "mother of brass" (Schröder), or rather perhaps chamâth châdâsh, "the new citadel," or New Hamath or Amathus (N. and Q. 5th S. xii. 116). The Assyrian name was Amta Khadasta "the holy lady," in allusion no doubt to the great goddess, the Dea Syra, who was worshipped there (Id. xi. 430).

FARROWBUSH, a surname in New England, is a corruption of Farrabas, the name which the ancestors of the same family bore in the seventeenth century, the latter being probably itself a corrupt form of the name Forbes. Vide Furbush (N. and Q. 5th S. vi. p. 426).

FARTHING, a surname, is probably a corruption of Furdan in Domesday (Yorks.), from Icel. far-drengr, a sea-faring man.

FEDERICO, an Italian form of the name Frederick, as if derived from fede, faith. Compare Ger. Fidrich (Andresen).

FEIRÁN, Wády Feirán, in the Peninsula of Sinai, "The valley of mice" (plural of Arabic fárah, a mouse), is so called, according to the Bedawín, from the numerous holes or caves in the rocks into which the hermits once settled here "used to creep like mice." Feirán, however, is only a corruption of the Hebrew Paran (H. S. Palmer, Sinai, p. 21).

FELIX, MONS, the name of a mountain on the east coast of Africa, opposite Aden, is an old corruption of its Arabic name (Gebel) Fiel, "Elephant Mountain," so called from its shape (Taylor, 392).

FENDER, a river in Perthshire, is a corruption of the Gaelic Fionn-dur, "Fingal's water" (Robertson, p. 61).

FERDINAND, in Ireland, often stands for the native name Ferdoragh, "dark-visaged man" (O'Donovan).

FETTER LANE, in London, is a corruption of Fewtors' or Faitours' (i.e. professional mendicants') Lane. Compare Cripplegate (Ed. Review, No. 267, Jan. 1870).

Fewter Lane is so called of Fewters (or idle people) lying there, as in a way leading to Gardens.—Stow, Survey, p. 145.

FEVER RIVER, the name of a tributary of the Mississippi, is a corruption of (Fleuve) de la feve, so called by the French (Schele De Vere, Studies in English).

FILICASSI, the name of a place near Vetralla in Etruria, as if "Broken-thread," is a corruption by the peasantry of Forcassi, which represents the ancient Forum Cassii (G. Dennis, Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. i. p. 194, ed. 1878).

FILLPOT, a surname, for Philpot, i.e. Philipot, a pet name for Philip (Bardsley, Romance of the London Directory, p. 73), like Wilmot, Emmot, Marriot, Eliot, &c.

FIND-HORN, a river in Inverness, is for Findearn, and that for Fionn-car-an, "The clear east flowing river" (Robertson, p. 135).

FINHAVEN, in Forfar, is a corruption of the Gaelic Fionn-abhuinn, "The clear river" (Robertson, p. 325).

FINSTERMÜNZ, in the Tyrolese Alps, as if the "Dark Mint," is said to be a corruption of Venustæ Mons (?).—Andresen.

FINSTERN STERN, a corruption of Cape Finisterre, as if the place where the evening star sets in darkness, occurs in Notices sur les Voyages faits en Belgique par des Etrangers, 1466 (Ghent, 1847).

FIQUEFLEUR, in Normandy, apparently "Fig-flower," is considered to be a corruption of Wickfleet, "the bay river," as fleur in other names, e.g. Barfleur, Harfleur, is known to have been originally flet or fleet, Norse fliot, a small river (Taylor, p. 187).

FISCHHAUSEN, "Fish-house," in East Prussia, stands for Bisch, that is Bischof-hausen (Andresen, Volksetymologie).

FISHER, the surname of a Somersetshire family, is a corruption, through the forms Fishour and Fitzour, of Fitzurse (Bear's son), the name of Becket's murderer, who had an estate at Willeton in that county (Collinson, Somersetshire, iii. 487; Stanley, Memorials of Canterbury, p. 81; Quarterly Review, vol. 93, p. 379).

FITFUL HEAD, in Shetland, is a corruption, according to Rev. I. Taylor, of Scand. Hvit-fell, "White Hill" (Words and Places, 390). Mr. Edmondston thinks it stands for Fitfjell, from O. Norse fit, a promontory or rich plain, and fiáll, a mountain (Shetland Glossary, 158).

FLATMAN, a surname, seems to stand for A. Sax. flót-mann, a shipman or sailor.

FLOOD, a family name, is a corruption of Floyd, another form of the Welsh name Lloyd.

Taylor the Water-Poet mentions that Old Parr's second wife was—

The daughter of John Lloyd (corruptly Flood)
Of ancient house, and gentle Cambrian blood.
The Olde, Old, Very Olde Man, 1635.

FLOWERHILL, a place-name in Sligo, is a pretty transformation of the repulsive Irish name Cnoc-a'-Iobhair (Knocka-lower), "hill of the leper," by turning lower into flower (Joyce, ii. 81).

FOOTDEE, a fishing village at the entrance of the harbour of Aberdeen, and now, by the extension of the town, incorporated with it.

The original name was Futtie, the derivation of which I do not know, unless it has something to do with St. Fittrock, whose well is on the other side of the river. Futtie is now almost universally called Foot-dee under the impression that it gets its name from being at the Foot, or Mouth, of the Dee.—Mr. A. D. Morrice (communicated).

FOOTE, a surname in Connaught, is an erroneous Anglicization of the Irish O'Trehy (O'Donovan), as if it were derived from traigh, a foot.

FORDE, a surname in Leitrim, is an Anglicized form of Ir. Mac Connava, from an erroneous notion that ava, the last part of it, stood for atha, "of a ford" (O'Donovan).

FORKHILL, an Irish place-name in Armagh, more correctly Forkill, represents Ir. Fuar-choill, "Cold wood." Hence also Forekill in Kilkenny (Joyce, ii. 247).

FORMOSA (i.e. Beautiful), the name of the island so called, is probably a corruption of the Persian Harnuza, just as in Spanish hermosa is another form of formosa, and Mafomet is an old form of Mahomet. The mistake was furthered by Marco Polo's description of the beauty of that spot, which is termed by the natives "the Paradise of Persia" (Vid. Yule's Marco Polo, vol. i. p. 108).

FORTROSE, in Inverness-shire, is a corruption of Fort-ross, "the strong point" (Robertson, p. 128).

FOURKNOCKS, the name of a parish in co. Meath, denotes, not quadruplicated blows, but "cold hills," Ir. Fuar cnocs (Joyce, ii. 246).

FOXHALL, the old spelling of Vauxhall (e.g. Pepys, Diary, May 29, 1662, Bright's ed. vol. i. p. 455), originally Fulke's Hall, called after Fulke de Breaute, temp. King John.

FREEBODY, a surname, is supposed to be identical with Icel. friðar-boði (Dut. vreedebode), "peace-messenger," a herald of peace (A. Sax. frið, peace, boda, messenger). See GOODBODY.

FREEMANTLE, a surname, is a corruption of Freid-mantel, in Latin Frigidum-mantellum (Close Rolls).—Ed. Review, 101, 368.

FRESHFORD, the name of a place in Kilkenny, is a misrendering of the Irish Ahad-úr, "Fresh-field" (Joyce, i. 36).

FREUDENBACH, "Joyful brook," a German river-name, is probably a corruption of the Celtic fryðan, a stream (Taylor, 389).

FRIEDLOS, a Hessian village so called, as if "Peaceless," was originally Frid-waldes; other village names similarly corrupted are Machtlos (or Magdlos), "Mightless," from Mahtolfes; Sterbfritz from Starkfrides; Merkenfritz from Erchinfredis (Andresen).

FRISKYBALL was the name by which Frescobaldi, the Florentine banker, was known among the English of his day (Froude, Hist. of England, ii. 109, orig. ed.).

FURBUSH, } New England surnames, FURBISH, } are different varieties of FORBUSH, } the original name Farrabas, borne by the founder of the family, who died 1687 (vide FARROW-BUSH). Farrabas itself, however, it has been suggested, may be a corruption of the name Firebrace (N. and Q. 4th S. iii. 240), which is also found in the form of Furbras, Firebrass, and Ferbrace (Id. 5th S. vii. 97), = "Iron-arm" (?). Cf. Ludlow, Epics of Mid. Ages, ii. 420.

G.

GAMBLE, a surname, probably stands for A. Sax. gamol, old, Norse gamal, Dan. gammel, Swed. gammal, Icel. gamall. Gamli is frequently added as a sobriquet in Icelandic to distinguish an older man from a younger of the same name, e.g. Hákon Gamli (Cleasby, p. 188).

GARLICK, a surname, is apparently a variant of Gerlach, from A. Sax. gár, a spear, Icel. geirr, and lác, play, game. Compare Icel. name Geir-laug.

GARMENT, a surname, is no doubt a corruption of Garmund, from A. Sax. gár, spear, and mund, protection; O. H. Ger. Ger-munt, Icel. Geir-mundur.

GARNISH, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Gernons (Camden, Remaines, 148, 1637), of the same origin as the Christian name Algernon, i.e. als gernons, "whiskered," from Norm. Fr. gernons, moustachios.

GATESHEAD, on the Tyne, was originally the Goat's Head, from O. Eng. gât, a goat (Oliphant, Old and Mid. English, p. 201).

GAY ISLAND, in Fermanagh, is a half-translation, half-corruption, of Inis-nangédh, "The island of the goose" (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, vol. i. p. 471).

GAYLORD, the name of a Canadian family of French descent, is a corruption of Gaillard.

GELASIUS ("the laugher"), used in Ireland as a substitute for the native name Giolla Josa, "servant of Jesus" (Yonge, Christian Names, i. 255). So Gilchrist, "servant of Christ," Gillespie, "servant of the Bishop."

GENĒSARĪT, S. Matt. xiv. 34, Genēsār, 1 Macc. xi. 67, is probably a corruption of the Old Test. form Chinnereth or Cinneroth, Numb. xxxiv. 11, 1 Kings xv. 20, understood incorrectly as Heb. Gannah (garden) of Sharon, or with reference to the fertility of its plain "Garden of Princes" (Heb. nāzīr).

GENSERICH, the name of the Vandal king, understood as the "ganderking," is probably a corrupt form of Geisserich, "spear ruler," from gais, a spear (Lat. gæsum).—Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 328.

GEORGE AND CANNON, as an inn-sign, is said to have been originally The George Canning (Dub. University Mag. Oct. 1868).

GERRARD'S HALL, in old London, south of Basing Lane, believed to have been called from Gerrarde a giant, was an ancient popular corruption of Gisor's Hall, originally owned by John Gisors, Mayor of London 1245 (Stow, Survey, p. 181, ed. Thoms).

GIBRALTAR, the English form of Jibal Tārik, Arabic Jabalu't tarīk, or Tārik's Mountain, so called after a Moorish conqueror of that name, seems to have been assimilated to Eng. "altar," just as in Italian Gibilterra it has been assimilated to terra.

GLOSTER COURT, a corruption of Cloister Court, in Blackfriars (Philolog. Soc. Proc. vol. v. p. 140).

GOADBY MARWOOD, in Leicestershire, originally Gundeby Maureward (Evans, Glossary, p. 41, E. D. S.).

GODLYMAN is Pepys's form of Godalming.

We got a small bait at Leatherhead and so to Godlyman, where we lay all night.—Diary, April 30th, 1661.

GOLDEN, the name of a village in co. Tipperary, is a corruption of Ir. Gabháin (pron. gouleen, from gabhal, pron. goul, a fork), "The bifurcation," viz. of the river Suir at the point where it is situated (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, vol. i. p. 511).

GOLDEN ABBEY, or Gold Abbey, a popular name for the church of St. Nicholas Cold Abbey or Cold Bey, in old London, for "so hath the most ancient writings, as standing in a cold place."—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 182, ed. Thoms.

GOLDEN SQUARE, said to have been originally Gelding Square, from the sign of a neighbouring inn (Pennant, Hotten, History of Sign Boards, p. 177). But in the New View of London, 1708, it is stated to have derived its name from one Golding, by whom it was built (Jesse, London, vol. i. p. 18).

GOLDEN VALLEY, THE, or Dore Valley, on the border of Brecon and Monmouth, so called from the river Dore, which rises just above Dorston, supposed to be connected with Fr. doré, golden. Compare Doro, a river in Queen's County (Taylor, 199), Welsh dwr, water, Ir. dur (Joyce, ii. 380).

The derivation of Dorston is pretty certainly Dwr, "water," and ton, "an inclosure;" and it is now a generally accepted belief that the Golden Valley is a misnomer, due to the fanciful brain of some monk who, ignoring the identity of Dwr with Dore, chose to translate Nant Dwr into "Vallis Deaurata."—Saturday Review, vol. 43, p. 703.

GOODBODY, a surname, is probably from A. Sax. gûd, war, and boda, a messenger; Icel. guðr and boði, and so means a "war-messenger," a herald; just as GOODWIN is from A. Sax. gûð-wine, "a battle-friend," and GOODBURN is identical with Icel. Guðr-(or Gunn-)björn, "war bear."

GOODGRAVE, an English place-name, is from Celtic coed, a forest, and grave (Taylor, 362).

GOODHEART, a surname, probably stands for Goddart, Goddard, Ger. Gott-hard.

GOODLAKE, } Eng. surnames, are GOODLUCK, } doubtless from Guth-lac, A. Sax. gûð-lac, warfare. Compare Icel. name Guð-(or Gunn-)laugr.

GOODLUCK'S CLOSE, in Norwich, was originally Guthlac's Close.

GOODMANHAM, a place in E. Riding of Yorkshire, apparently the "home of a good man," stands for the ancient Godmundingaham (Beda, Eccles. Hist. ii. 13), "the home of the protection (mund) of the gods" (Taylor, 335).

GOODWIN, as a surname in Ulster, is an Anglicization of Mac Guiggin (O'Donovan).

GOODWOOD, the seat of the Duke of Richmond in Sussex, formerly Godin-wood, called probably from the Saxon Godwin.

GOSLING, a surname, old Ger. Goselin, Gozlin, is probably from Gossel, old Ger. Gozilo, a dimin. of old Ger. Goz, another form of Gaud (Ferguson, 171). It is thus really the same name as Joscelyn (Bardsley).

GOTOBED, an English family name, anciently Gotebedde and Godeberd, is a corruption of an original Godbert (Bardsley, English Surnames, p. 21).

GOTTLEIB, "God's love," a Ger. Christian name, is in some instances a modification of Gottleip, "remains of divinity" (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 262).

GRACECHURCH STREET, formerly also called Gracious Street, London, was originally "Grasse church, of the herb-market there."—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 80 (ed. Thoms).

The rarest dancing in Christendom . . . At a wedding in Gracious street.

Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange, i. 1, p. 29 (Shaks. Soc.).

Grasse-street, now Gracious-street.—Howell, Londinopolis, p. 77.

In Grasse-street is the Parish Church of St. Bennet called Grass-church, of the Herbe Market there kept.—Id. p. 87.

GRAHAM, as a surname in Connaught, is an Anglicized form of O'Greighan (O'Donovan).

GRAMMERCY SQUARE, New York, is a corruption of De Kromme Zee, "the crooked lake," the name of a pond which once occupied its site and is so called in old Dutch maps (Taylor, 400).

GRAMPOUND, in Cornwall, is a corruption of the Norman Grand Pont, the "great bridge" over the Fal (Taylor, 390).

GRANNY'S GRAVE, the name of a sepulchral pile in Antrim, is an English mis-rendering of Carn-Greiné, the carn of a woman named Grian (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, vol. i. p. 324).

GRAVESEND is a corruption of the older form Gravesham (Taylor, 381).

GRECIAN STAIRS, Lincoln, is a corruption (it is said) of Gristone Stairs.

GREENBURN, a common place-name in Scotland, is most probably a corruption of the Gaelic Grian-burn, i.e. "the stream of [or dedicated to] the sun" (Robertson, Gaelic Topography of Scotland, p. 354).

GREENOCK, a corruption of the Gaelic name Grianag, which is probably connected with Grian, the Sun (Campbell, Tales of W. Highlands, vol. iii. 19).

GRENVILLE, apparently of Fr. origin, compounded with ville, is probably a perversion of Grenefield (Q. Review, No. 153, p. 6). Compare the form Grenfell.

GREY, the name of the noble family of Grey, was originally a territorial appellation derived from De Croy in Normandy.

GUADALUPE, an American river-name, is a Spanish corruption, as if "river of the bay" (Guad = Arab. wadi), of the Indian Tlaltelolco (Taylor, p. 379).

GUÉPINS, "wasps," a nickname given to the people of Orléans, is said to be a corruption of the ancient tribal name Gcnabini (De Lincy, Proverbes Franç. i. vi.). Guespine in Cotgrave.

GUMBOIL, "the most villainous of all corruptions, is the same no doubt as an old Ger. name Gumpold or Gundbold" (Ferguson, 208), that is "bold in war" (O. H. Ger. gundia, war, Icel. gunnr, guðr). So Gunter or Gunther seems to be for Gunn-thor, "war-god," corresponding to the Icel. name Thor-gunnr; compare Icel. gunn-thorinn, warlike.

GUTTER LANE, off Cheapside, London, was originally Guthurun's Lane, "so called of Guthurun, sometime owner thereof."—Stow, Survey, p. 117 (ed. Thoms).

GWASGWYN, a "gentle rise," is the Welsh adaptation (Spurrell) of Gascony, Fr. Gascogne, named from the Vascones.

GWENER, the Welsh name for Venus (Veneris), seems to be an assimilation of that word to gwen, fair, beautiful, gwenu, to smile.

GWLAD YR HAF, "Region of Summer," the Welsh name of the shire of Somerset (Spurrell), understood literally as the "seat of summer" (A. Sax. Sumorscete). Compare SUMMER ISLANDS below.

GWYDDELIG, "sylvan," "savage," when used for Irish (gwyddel, an Irishman), as if one running wild in the bushes, gwyddeli (cf. gwydd, wild, also trees, gwyddu, a satyr or man of the woods), is really identical with Ir. Gaedhíl, the Gael or Irish; e.g. War of the Gaedhíl with the Gaill (ed. J. H. Todd), i.e. of the Irish with the Foreigner.

H.

HADDOCK, a surname, is supposed to correspond to an A. Sax. Hadeca, Ger. Hädicke, from O. H. Ger. Hadu (warlike?).—Ferguson, 46.

HALLWACHS, a German proper name which seems to be compounded of Hall, sound, and wachs, wax, is corrupted from the nickname halbwachs, half-grown (Andresen).

HANDS, } as surnames, are natu-HANDCOCK, } ralized forms of Hans, the Flemish and German shortening of Jo-hannes, John (Bardsley).

HANGMAN'S GAINS, a locality in the east of London, popularly associated no doubt with the adjoining place of execution on Tower Hill, is a corruption of Hames et Guynes, so called because refugees from those towns had settled there after the loss of Calais and its dependencies (Taylor, 398).

HANNAH, in Ireland, is sometimes an incorrectly Anglicized form of the native Ainé; as similarly Mary is of Mor; Sarah of Sorcha, "bright;" Grace of Graine; Winnie of Una (O'Donovan).

HARDIMAN, a surname in Connaught, is an Anglicized form of O'Hargadon (O'Donovan).

HARE, a Munster surname, is an Anglicized form of Ir. O'Hehir. Similarly Heron for O'Ahern (O'Donovan).

HARMSTONE, a place-name in Lincolnshire, is an altered form of the ancient Harmodestone, called after one Heremod (Taylor, 313).

HARPOCRATES, the god of silence, a mistaken interpretation by the Greeks of the name and attitude of the Egyptian Har-(p)-chrot, "Horus-(the)-Son," the god of the dawn, who was represented as a child with his finger on his lips, the gesture denoting one who cannot speak, infans (Tyler, Early Hist. of Mankind, p. 41).

HARRINGTON, as a surname in Ireland, is an Anglicization of O'Heraghty (O'Donovan).

HART, as a surname, is of Irish origin, and stands for O'Hart, Ir. O'h Airt, "Grandson of Art" or Arthur (Joyce, ii. 151).

HASENPFLUG, "Hare's-plough," a German surname, was originally Hascenpflug, "Hate the plough" (Andresen).

HASLUCK, an Eng. surname, otherwise Hasloch or Aslock, A. Sax. Oslac, the same as Icel. Aslákr (compounded with áss, a god).

HATRED, a surname, has been identified with Hadrot, old Ger. Hadurat, "war-counsel" (Ferguson, 17).

HAVELOCK, old Eng. Havelok, seems to be a corrupted form of Icelandic hafrekr, "sea-drifted." "Havelok the Dane" bears many points of resemblance to Heine havreki, "Heine the sea-drifted," the hero of a Faroe legend (Cleasby, p. 774).

HAY STACKS, a mountain-name in the Lake district of N. England, is said to stand for "high rocks," from Norweg. stucker, a columnar rock; whence also "the Sticks," "Stake," and "Pike o' Stickle" (Taylor, 174). See STAGS.

HEADACHE, a surname, probably stands for Headick also found, A. Sax. Hadeca, Ger. Hüdicke, akin to A. Sax. Had, Hedda, Norse Hödr (perhaps meaning war).—Ferguson, 47.

HECTOR is often only a modern perversion, under classical influence, of Danish Hagthor, "dexterous Thor" (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 320).

HELOGABALUS represents the Syrian Elagabal, the Sun-god, as if from Greek Helios, the sun.

HENTOE, the name of a hill near Coniston in the Lake district, is a corruption of its older name Henor, i.e. Welsh hen, old, and twr, a pile (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1855, p. 219).

HERBSTEHUDE, or Harvstehude, near Hamburg, as if from Herbste, Autumn, was originally Herwarteshude (Andresen).

HERBSTEIN, a Hessian place-name, as if "Herb-stone," is from the older form Heriperhteshûsum, i.e. Herbertshausen (Andresen).

HEREFORD, "The ford of the army" (A. Sax. here, an army), is a corruption or adaptation of the old British name Henffordd, "The old road" (Welsh hen, old, and ffordd, a road).

HEROD, an Eng. surname, seems to be a Scripturalized form of Scand. Heraudr (Ferguson, 231).

HERODIAS. By a curious confusion, the name of the murderess of St. John the Baptist in ancient popular superstitions was substituted for Hródsö, i.e. the Renowned, a surname of Odin. In the French province of Perigord the Wild Hunt or passing of the Wild-Hunt's-man, Odin, is called La Chasse Hérode (see Kelly, Indo-European Tradition, p. 282; Wright, Introduction to The Proceedings against Dame Alice Kyteler, Camden Soc.).

Douce quotes an ancient ecclesiastical denunciation against the superstitious belief that witches "ride abroad of nights with Diana, goddess of the pagans, or with Herodias" (Illustrations of Shakspeare, p. 236, ed. 1837).

Some wicked women resigning themselves to Satan and to the illusion of demons, believe and declare that they ride forth on certain animals in the night, along with Diana the goddess of the Pagans, or with Herodias, accompanied by a numberless multitude of women.—Gratian, Decretalia, p. ii. causa xxvi. q. 5 (in Dalyell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland, p. 537).

In Germany Herodias, who is confounded with her daughter, is a witch who is condemned to dance till the last day, and prowls about all night, the terror of children. In Franche-Comté the Wild Huntsman is believed to be Herod in pursuit of the Holy Innocents (see Henderson, Folk-lore of the N. Counties, pp. 101-106).

HERT-FORD, so spelt as if it denoted the ford of the hart (old Eng. heort), is an Anglicized form of Celtic rhyd, a ford, + Eng. ford, such reduplications being very frequent in place-names (Taylor, 213).

HERZBACH. In this and other German surnames, such as Herzberg, Herzbruch, Herzfeld, the original component element was Hirsch, hart, not Herz, heart (Andresen).

HIBERNIA, the Roman name of Ireland, as if from hibernus, wintry, with reference to its northern situation, just as the Welsh name of the same island Iwerddon stands in the same relation to iverydd (and eiryaidd, snowy?). Pictet explains Hibernia (Greek Iouernia, Iérnè) as derived from an hypothetical Irish ibh-erna, ibh-er, country or people, ibh, of the noble or warriors, er; the latter part er, seen also in Erin, and Ire-land, and Erna, a native tribe-name, corresponding to Sansk. arya, noble (Origines Indo-Européenes, i. 33). Spurrell gives Iwerddon and Gwerddon as Welsh names for (1) a green spot, (2) Ireland, apparently from gwerdd, green.

HIEROSOLUMA, the Greek spelling of Jerusalem (Heb. Yerushalaim, "Foundation of Peace"), as if from hiéros, sacred, holy, with some reference perhaps to its name of "The holy City" (Matt. iv. 5). The Arabic name is el-Khuds, "The Holy," or Beit-el-Makdis, "The Holy House." Other Greek forms of the name are Hiero Soluma, "the holy Solyma" (Josephus), Hieron Salomónos, "Solomon's holy-place" (Eupolemos), while others have traced a connexion with Hierosuloi, "spoilers of temples." Similar Greek formations are Hierecho and Hieromax (Bible Dict. s.v.). The Heb. word itself was perhaps an adaptation of the old Canaanitish name Yebús, Yebúsi (Josh. xviii. 28).

The city of Kadytis, mentioned by Herodotus (iii. 5), has been identified by some with Jerusalem, as if only a Grecized form of Kadesh, "The Holy Place" (Stanley, Jewish Church, vol. iii. p. 92).

HIGGINBOTTOM, an Eng. surname, is said to be a corruption of the German Ickenbaum, "oak-tree" (Lower, Eng. Surnames, 142).

HIGH PRESS TOWER, a popular corruption of the name of the old Yprés Tower in Rye, Sussex.

It used to be called the High Press tower, he replied, but now we generally call it the Jail.—L. J. Jennings, Field Paths and Green Lanes, p. 13.

HILL OF LLOYD, near Kells, co. Meath, is supposed to have taken its name from a family named Lloyd. It is really an English misunderstanding of the Ir. name Mul-Aidi, pronounced Mulloyda, and divided as Mul-Loyda. The oldest Ir. form is Mullach-Aiti, "Aiti's Hill?" (Joyce, ii. 169).

HINTERBACH, a Hessian place-name, as if "Hinder-brook," is said to have been originally Himbinbuch, i.e. "Hind and Beech" (Andresen).

HINDERWELL, the name of a place in Cleveland, Yorkshire, is corrupted from Ildreuelle, in the Domesday Survey.

HOGS-NORTON, a village in Oxfordshire, i.e. Hook-norton, A. Sax. Hoeneratun, the same name as Hockerton, Notts (Bosworth).

Hog's-Norton was famed for the rusticity of its inhabitants, as in the proverb, "You were born at Hog's Norton" (Nares, s.v.).

"You were born at Hogs-Norton."—This is a Village properly called Hoch-Norton, whose inhabitants (it seems formerly) were so rustical in their behaviour, that boarish and clownish people are said [to be] born at Hogs-Norton.—Fuller, Worthies, ii. 220.

See also Randolph, Muses' Looking-Glass, Works, p. 217 (ed. Hazlitt).

HOLBORN, in London, so called as if it were connected with hole, hollow, the burn in the hollow, is a corruption of the older name Old Bourne, "the ancient river," which ran through that thoroughfare. See Stanley, Memoirs of Westminster Abbey, p. 6.

Oldborne, or Hilborne, was the like water, breaking out about the place where now the bars do stand, and it ran down the whole street till Oldborne bridge.—Stow, Survey, p. 7.

Howell spells it Holdbourn (Londinopolis, 328) and Oldbourne (329).

HOLLAND WOODS, the name of certain woods at Messingham in Lincolnshire, so called from holland or hollond, the native name of the holly (vid. Peacock, Glossary of Manley and Corringham, s.v. Hollond), old Eng. holen or holin.

HOLSTEIN has only an apparent connexion with stein, a stone, being from the Low Ger. Holtseten (= Ger. Holz-sassen), "wood-settlers." Compare Dorset, Somerset.

HONEYBALL, a west country surname, no doubt from the common Cornish Christian name Hannyball, which is for Hannibal (Yonge, Christian Names, i. 103). But compare the name Hunibal, which Ferguson regards as compounded of hún, a giant, and báld, bold (Eng. Surnames, 65). But Icel. húnn is a young bear, or cub.

HONEYBUN. This luscious sounding surname seems to be another form of the name Honeyborn, which has been connected with Icel. hún-björn, from hún, giant [rather "cub"], and björn, a bear (Ferguson, 65).

HONEYMAN, a surname, is perhaps identical with old Ger. Hunimund, "Giant-protection" (Ferguson, 391).

HOWARD, as a surname in Ireland, is sometimes an incorrect Anglicizing of O'Hiomhair (O'Donovan).

HUDDLESTONE, a surname, is probably a corruption of Æthelstan, "noble stone," a jewel.

HUGH (= mind) is in Ireland the usual Anglicized form of Ir. Aodh (= fire).

HUGHES, as an Irish family-name, frequently stands for Mac Hugh, which is an Anglicized form of Mac Aedha (pron. Mac-Ay), whence the surnames Mackay, Magee, and McGee.

HUGHSON, a surname, is in some instances, it is said, a corruption of the Italian Hugezun (Lower, Eng. Surnames, 143).

HUNGARY, or Hungaria, is said to be properly the land of the Ugrians or Ungrians, which was afterwards assimilated to the Huns (Gibbon).

HUNGER, a surname, is perhaps the same as old Ger. Hun-gar, "Giant-spear" (Ferguson, 391).

HUNGERFORD, an Eng. place-name, is a corruption of the ancient Ingleford, or ford of the Angles (Taylor, 389).

HURLSTONE, a surname, Camdensays is a corruption of Huddleston (Remaines, 1637, p. 122). See HUDDLESTONE.

HUSBAND, as a surname, is sometimes a corruption of Osborne (N. and Q. 4th S. ii. 91).

HYDE PARK has nothing to do, I believe, with the Hyde family, but is a corruption of Heye, the cockney pronunciation of Eye, of which manor it forms a part.

Similarly Aye Hill, by which flowed the brook Aye or Eye, is now Hay Hill, and the Old Bourne is only known as Holborn.

I.

INCHGRAY, in Kincardineshire, is a corruption of the Gaelic Innis-greighe, "The island of the flock" (Robertson, p. 370).

IN-HEDGE LANE, the name of a thoroughfare in Dudley, is a corruption of innage, a field or enclosure, said to be from A. Sax. inge, a field (Notes and Queries, 5th S. ix. 494).

INKPEN, a surname, is said by Camden to be a corruption of the local name Ingepen (Remaines, 1637, p. 122). The place-name Inkpen, in Berkshire, is apparently from Celtic pen, a head, a mountain (Taylor, 220).

INSELBERG, "Island-mountain," in Germany, was formerly Enzenberg, the gigantic mountain. It is sometimes also called Emsenberg from the Ems there taking its rise (Andresen).

INWARDS, a surname, is perhaps a corruption of the old Saxon name Ingward, Ingvar, Inhwær, Hingwar (Ferguson, 280).

IONA, the ordinary name of the island which was the great Christian seminary of North Britain, is due to a false derivation. The oldest form of the name in the MSS. is Ioua, used as an adjective agreeing with insula, the true name substantively being Iou, or perhaps Hy or I. From a misreading of this, and from a fanciful connexion with the name of the saint with which it was chiefly identified, St. Columba, synonymous with Hebrew iona, a dove, Ioua was altered into Iona. Indeed Adamnan remarks that the island and the prophet Jonah had synonymous names, both meaning "a dove." So its other name Icolmkill, i.e. I-columb-cille, was understood as "island of the dove's cell" (Reeves; W. Stokes; Lord Strangford, Letters and Papers, 28; Robertson, Church Hist. ii. 324, cab. ed.).

IRELAND'S EYE, a small island off the coast of Dublin, Latinized by Usher as Oculus Hibernice, is a mis-spelling of Ireland's Ey (ey = island), itself a corrupt translation of the Irish name Inis-

Ereann, "the island of Eire" (a woman), understood as "isle of Erin" (Joyce, i. 104).

ISLAFALCON, a parish in Wexford, is a corruption of Ir. Oileán-a'-phocáin, "isle of the buck goat" (Joyce, i. 41).

ISLĀMBOOL, as if "The City of Islam," sometimes used in Turkish official documents, and often found on gold and silver Turkish coins struck at Constantinople, is a corruption of the usual form Istanbul (Catafago); see Dr. Chance's note in Notes and Queries, 5th S. ix. 423.

J.

JACK KETCH, the proverbial name of the English hangman, mentioned in 1678, is said to have been a fictitious name, if the following account be trustworthy. "The manor of Tyburn was formerly held by Richard Jaquett, where felons were for a long time executed; from whence we have Jack Ketch."—Lloyd's MS. Collection (Brit. Mus.), in Timbs, London and Westminster, i. 304.

JANEWAY, a surname, is a corruption of old Eng. Janwaye or Janwey, a Genoese (e.g. in Maundevile, Voyage and Travaile, p. 23, ed. Halliwell).

When a Jew meeteth with a Genoway . . he puts his fingers in his eyes.—J. Howell, Instructions for Forreine Truwell, 1642, p. 41 (ed. Arber).

JASON, the name of the high-priest under Antiochus Epiphanes, is a corruption of his true name Jesus.

JASOŪS, a form of the name Jēsoŭs (Jesus) found in the Sibylline Books, ii. 248, is a modification of the word to assimilate it to the Greek iasis, healing (Ionic īsis), whence Iāsōs, the goddess of healing, had her name. The Greek fathers frequently derived the word in this way (Geikie, Life and Words of Christ, i. 555). Compare old Sax. Heliant, A. Sax. Héland, "Healer," the Saviour.

JEREMY is in Ireland the usual Anglicization of Ir. Diarmaid, "freeman" (O'Donovan).

JEROME (from Greek Hieronimus, "holy name") sometimes stands for old Eng. Jerram, which is the old Teutonic name Gerramn, "Spear raven" (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 328).

JERUSALEBEN, a modern German corruption of Jerusalem (Andresen).

JOHANNA, the name of the African island so called, is said to have been corrupted through the forms Juanny, Anjuan, Anzuame, from the native name Hinzúan (Asiatic Soc. Trans.).

JOLLY TOWN, in Cornwall, situated on a very lonely moor, it has been suggested was originally Cornish diault-wan, "Devil's sand-hill" (A. H. Cummings, Churches, &c., in the Lizard District).

JORSALA-HEIM, a Scandinavian corruption of Jerusalem.

Those who, like Earl Rögnvald and King Sigurd, set out on a pilgrimage to the holy city, were called Jorsalafarers. Some Norsemen who broke into the tumulus of Maes-Howe in the Orkneys about the middle of the 12th century, left their names inscribed in the Runic characters, with the addition Jorsala Farers (see Ferguson's Rude Stone Monuments, p. 244). The inscription is: "iorsala farar brutu orkøuh" (The Jerusalem Journeymen broke Orkhowe).—Vigfusson and Powell, Icelandic Reader, p. 449.

JUHÚD KAPÚ, the Jews' gate, in Constantinople, "incorrectly called so by the vulgar." Originally its name was Shuhúd Kapú, i.e. the Martyrs' Gate, because "in the time of Hárúnur-rashíd some of the illustrious auxiliaries of the Prophet quaffed the cup of martyrdom there" (Travels of Evliya Efendi (translated for the Oriental Trans. Fund), vol. i. p. 36).

JUS NE GIGOT, a Fr. place-name, is a popular rendering of Jas de Ghigo (Larchey, Dict. des Noms).

K.

KAFFEMACHEREI, the name of a street in Hamburg (mentioned by Heine), as if the street of the coffee-makers, was originally Kaffamacherreihe, i.e. the row where kaffa, a kind of taffeta, was made or manufactured (Andresen).

KÄSEBIER, "Cheese and beer," a German family name, was originally Cassebeer. Cherry (Andresen).

KATZENELLENBOGEN, the place so called, "Cat's-elbow," is a corruption of the ancient Cattimelibocus (Andresen).

KAUFMACHERSTRASSE, "Bargain-makers'-street," in Copenhagen, Dan. Kjöbmagergade, was originally Kjöd-mangergade, "Victuallers'-street" (Andresen).

KEDRÔN, in the Greek of St. John xviii. 1, ὁ χειμάρρος τῶν κέδρων, the wady (or winter torrent) of the Cedars (and so LXX. 2 Sam. xv. 23) is a Grecized form, so as to give an intelligible sense, of the Hebrew name Kêdrôn, which seems to mean the dark ravine, from Kâdhar, to be black. So χειμάρρος τῶν κισσῶν, the wady of Ivy, was a corruption of Heb. kishôn, the crooked, winding torrent (vid. Bible Dict. s.vv.).

Firste we come to Torrens Cedron, which in somer tyme is drye, but in wynter, and specially in Lent, it is meruayously flouwen with rage of water.—Pylgrymage of Syr R. Gylfjard, p. 31 (Camden Soc.).

In the Lindisfarne version of the Gospels, 950, Olivarum, Luke xxii. 39, is Englished by Olebearu, as if the -varum answered to our word barrow (Oliphant, Old and Mid. Eng. p. 108). The Anglo-Saxon version, 995, has "munt Oluarum, ðæt is Ele-bergena."

KENTISH TOWN, a corruption of Cantelupe Town, it having been formerly the possession of Walter de Cantelupe, Bishop of Worcester (1236-66).—A. Hare, Walks about London, vol. i. p. 221.

KETTLE, THE, or The Cattle, a parish in Guernsey, is a corruption of Le Câtel (N. and Q. 5th S. ii. p. 90).

KILROOT, a place-name in Antrim, stands for Ir. Cill-ruadh, "red church" (Joyce, i. 544).

KING, a surname in Galway, is an incorrect translation of Mac Conry, on the assumption that the last syllable -ry is from Ir. righ, a king (O'Donovan).

KING-EDWARD, a parish in Aberdeen. The name, however, is pronounced by the native inhabitants Kin-edart, or Kin-eddar, and is probably a Gaelic word signifying "Head-point" (Alex. Smith, History of Aberdeenshire, vol. ii. p. 823).

KINGSLEY, a Munster surname, is an Anglicized form of Ir. O'Kinsellagh (O'Donovan).

KIRK MAIDEN, in Wigtownshire, the most southern town of Scotland, is, in all probability, not, as might be supposed, the Church of the Maiden, i.e. the Virgin Mary, but of St. Medan.

Burns uses "Frae Maidenkirk to Johnny Groats" (Globe ed. p. 95) as = "From Dan to Beersheba."

KIRK-WALL, in the Orkneys, a corruption of kirk-in-vagr, the creek of the kirk.

KIRSCHBERG, "Cherry-mountain," near Nordhaus, was originally Girsberg, "Vulture-mountain" (Andresen).

KIRSCHSTEIN, "Cherry-stone," as a personal name in Germany, is corrupted from Christian, through the familiar forms Kristan, Kristen, Kirsten, Kirschten, Kirstein (Andresen).

KISSER, a surname, originally one who made *cuisse*s, old Fr. quisters (Bardsley, Our Eng. Surnames, p. 188), Fr. cuisse, from Lat. cova.

KLAGENFURT, a German place-name, as if the "mournful ford," is corrupted from the ancient name Claudii forum (Andresen).

KNIFE, a surname, is perhaps identical with Oniva, the name of a Gothic king in the 3rd century (Ferguson, 8).

KNOCK-BROAD, a place-name in Wexford, is an Anglicized form of Ir. cnoc braighid, "Hill of the gorge" (Joyce, i. 40).

KNOCK-DOWN, a thoroughly Irish name for two townlands, one in Kerry, the other in Limerick, was originally peaceful enough, cnoc dun, "the brown hill" (Joyce, i. 41).

KOHLRAUSCH, and Kohlrost, German family names, apparently compounded of kohl, cabbage, cole, and rausch, drunkenness, or rost, rust, are corruptions of kohl- or kohlen-rusz, coal-soot (Andresen).

KÖNIGSWINTER, the German town, has no connexion with the word winter, but obtained its name from the culture of the vine, Goth. veinatriu, the vine (Andresen).

KORNMILCH, "Corn-milk," a German family name, was originally kernemelk, butter-milk, churn-milk (Andresen).

KÜHNAPFEL, as if "hardy-apple," a German family name, is a corruption of kienapfel, the cone of the pine (kien). —Andresen.

KUM LÚNG, in Chinese "The Golden Dragon," the name of a street in Hong-Kong, is said to be a transmutation of the English "Come 'long" street.

There was a street in Hong-Kong, in the early days of that so-called colony, much frequented by sailors, in which Chinese damsels used to sit at the windows and greet the passers-by with the invitation, "Come 'long, Jack," consequently the street became known by the name of the "Come 'long Street," which in the Chinese mouth was kum lúng, or "The Golden Dragon." So when the streets were named and placarded, "Come 'long Street" appeared, both in Chinese and English, as the Street of the Golden Dragon. —Andrew Wilson, The Abode of Snow, p. 258 (2nd ed.).

! KUNSTENÔPEL, an old corruption in German of Constantinople, as if from kunst, art.

KURFÜRSTEN, "the Electoral Princes," the name of a group of seven mountains in Switzerland, is said to have been originally Kuhfirsten, "the cow summits" (Andresen).

KÜSTENMACHER, "Coast-maker," as a German surname, is a corruption of Kistenmacher, a trunk-maker (Andresen).

KÜSSHAUER, a German surname, apparently "kiss-hewer," is corrupted from Kiesshauer, "gravel-digger" (Andresen).

KWAWA, the Chinese name of Java, signifies "gourd-sound," and was given to that island because the voice of its inhabitants was very like that of a dry gourd rolled upon the ground (Yule, Marco Polo, ii. 82).

L.

"LAMB AND PICKLES" was the popular name for Lamprocles, a horse of Lord Eglintoun's (Farrar, Origin of Language, p. 57).

LAMBERT, a Christian name, so spelt as if connected with Lamb, is a corruption of old Ger. Lantperahht, "Country's brightness" (Yonge, ii. 430).

LAMBERT'S CASTLE, the name of a hill near Lyme Regis, is a supposed more correct form of the popular Lammars Castle (Cornhill Mag. Dec. 1880, p. 713).

LAMMERSPIEL, "Lamb's-play," a German place-name, is a corruption of Liemars biühel (Andresen).

LANCING, the name of a place near Shoreham, is supposed to have been called after Wlencing, son of Ælle, king of the South Saxons (Taylor, 311).

LAYCOCK, a surname, is a corruption of the French Le Coq (Smiles, Huguenots, p. 323).

LEADEN-HALL, the name of a well-known market in London, was originally Leathern-Hall, the place for the sale of leather (Key, Language, p. 253).

LEADER, a river in Berwick, is a corruption of the Gaelic Leud-dur, "The broad water" (Robertson, p. 61).

LEARNED, a surname, as well as Learnard, is said to be a corruption of Leonard (Charnock).

LE CUBE ET L'APPAREIL, a Fr. place-name, is a popular corruption of Prov. Fr. Le Coubo et la Paré (L. Larchey, Dict. des Nommes).

LEGHORN, an English corruption of Ligurnum, Livorno.

LEIDGEBER, a German surname, as if "sorrow-giver," originally meant a tavern-keeper, from lit, wine; other forms of the name being Leidgebel and Leitgeb (Andresen).

LEIGHTON BUZZARD, from Leighton Beau-desert. The brazen eagle, formerly used for supporting the Bible in the church, is shown as the buzzard whence the town was named (Philolog. Transactions, 1855, p. 67).

The Buzzards are all gentlemen. We came in with the Conqueror. Our name (as the French has it) is Beau-desert; which signifies — Friends, what does it signify? — R. Brome, The English Moor, iii. 2 (1659).

LEOPARDSTOWN, the name of a place in co. Dublin, is a corruption of Lepers- town, which is a translation of its Irish name Ballynalour, i.e. Baile-na-lobhar, "town of the lepers" (Joyce, ii. 81).

LEOPOLD, Fr. Léopold, It. Leopoldo, so spelt as if derived from Leo, a lion, is a perversion of Ger. Leutpold, "people's prince" (Yonge, ii. 429).

LETTER-BRICK, an Irish place-name (Donegal, Mayo), suggestive of Assyrian cuneiforms, is an Anglicized form of Ir. Leitr-bruic, "hill-side of the badger" or "brock" (Joyce, i. 391).

LEUKIOS, } Greek transcriptions LEŪKOULLOS, } of Lucius, Lucullus, bringing them into connexion with leukòs, white. On the other hand, Lycus, often regarded as meaning the Wolf-river (Greek líkos, a wolf), was no doubt originally the White-river (Taylor, p. 396). Compare note on Λυκίος in Paley's Æschylus, p. 58.

LIBERTY, a surname, is perhaps a corruption of Ger. Liebert, old Ger. Liubhart (Ferguson).

LIGHTNING-IN-THE-MORNING, a popular perversion of Leighton-le-Morthen in Yorkshire (Philolog. Soc. Proc. v. 140), or Laughton-en-le-Morthen.

LILYWHITE, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Litel-thwaite, a local name, a little clearing or piece of stubbed ground (Charnock).

LIMEHOUSE, a suburb of London, a corruption of Limehurst, or Lime-host (Stowe). The original word no doubt was lyme-oste, oast being a Kentish word for a kiln.

LIVINGSTONE, a surname, represents in its first part old Eng. name Leofing or Lufing, "darling" (Latinized Livingus), formed from leóf, beloved (Ger. lieb).

LIZARD, a name applied to the part of several old towns where a rope walk is situated, is said to be from lazzaretti, the lepers, ropemaking being one of the few occupations permitted to them.—Mr. Jephson (quoted in Miss Yonge's History of Christian Names, i. 89). Compare the Lizard point in Cornwall and Lezar-drieux (Lizard on the Trieux) in Brittany, both of which have rope-walks near them, and Lizarea Wartha and Wollas (higher and lower) in Gwendron: vid. E. G. Harvey, Mullyon, its History, &c.

LIZARD (Point) is said to be derived from two Celtic words meaning the "high cape" (Taylor, 226).

LOCHBROOM, in Perthshire and in Ross-shire, is a corrupt form of Gaelic Loch-bhraoin, "The loch of showers or drizzling rain" (Robertson, Gaelic Topography of Scotland, p. 442).

LOCKER-BARROW, } place-names in LOCKER-BY, } the Lake district of N. England, are said to have been called after the Scandinavian Loki (Taylor, 174).

LOFTHOUSE, the name of a place in the Cleveland district, Yorkshire, is a corrupted form of the older name Lothhusum, in the Domesday Survey (Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. xv.).

LOGHILL, an Irish place-name, is a corruption of Ir. Leamh-choill, "elm wood" (Joyce, i. 491).

LOGIE-COLDSTONE, the name of a parish in Aberdeenshire, is from the Gaelic Lag-cul-duine, "the hollow behind the fort" (Robertson, p. 443).

LONGCREASE, the name of a place in Guernsey, a corruption of L'Ancreesse (N. and Q. 5th S. ii. p. 90).

LONGFIELD, the name of several townlands in Ireland, is corrupted from Ir. Leamchoill (pronounced law-whill), "the elm wood" (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, vol. i. p. 39).

LONGINUS, the traditional name in the Aurea Legenda of the soldier who pierced the Saviour's side with his spear at the Crucifixion, is a corrupt form of Longeus, a name also given to him in old English writers, apparently for Loncheus, a name evolved out of lónchē (λόγχη), the Greek word for the spear (St. John xix. 34) which he employed (whence lonchus, a lance, in Tertullian). Similarly St. Architrictin, frequently mentioned in mediæval writings, is merely the Greek word for the "governor of the feast" (St. John ii. 8), and the Gospel of Nicodemus (v.) speaks of "a man named Centurio." In the Poema del Cid, l. 352, he is called Longinos; in the Vie de St.

Auban, l. 158, Langis; in other old Fr. poems Longis (e.g. Bekker's Fera-bras).

Evelyn in 1644 saw in St. Peter's at Rome a statue "of Longinus of a Colossean magnitude" (Diary, Nov. 17).

Leland reports that a tower of Chestow Castle called Longine "was erected by one Longinus, a Jew, father of the soldier whose spear pierced the side of Christ."

See also Apocryphal Gospels, p. 264, ed. Cowper; Chambers, Book of Days, i. 372; Skeat, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 403.

His sacred sides had been so pierced . . . by that rude Roman Soldier, whose name by unwritten tradition was Longius, but a name (as I suppose) mistaken for the Wædon wherewith he pierced him, which was λόγχη—Thos. Jackson, Works, 1673, vol. ii. p. 927.

Se hundredes ealdor þe hine betelice stang on his halgan sidan . . . hatte longinus.—Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 107 (E.E.T.S.).

[The centurion that wickedly pierced Him in His holy side was named Longinus.]

Ac þer cam forþ a blynde knyght · with a kene spere y-grounde, Hihte longeus, as þe lettere telleþ · and longe had lore hus sight.

Langland, Vision of P. Plowman, C. xxi. 82.

Ar he hedde hondlet þe woude so wyde,
þat Longeus made in his syde.

Castel off Loue, l. 1432.

Your herte souerayne

Clouen in twayne,

By longes the blynde.

The New Notbroune Mayd, l. 131 (Early Eng. Pop. Poetry, iii. 7).

Longes, take the speare in hande,

And put from thee, thou ney wounde.

Chester Mysteries, ii. 66 (Shaks. Soc.).

LOOP HEAD, in the county Clare, appears to be a Danish modification of its Irish name Ceann-Leime, "Leap Head;" Loop being for Dan. hlaup, a leap (Joyce, i. 164).

LOTHBURY, a quarter of London supposed by Stow to have been so called from the loathsome noise made by the brass-turners who there made candlesticks "and such like copper or laton works" (he also spells it Lathberie and Loadberie.—Survey, 1603, p. 104, ed. Thoms), is a corruption of Lattenbury (Taylor, 283), it being the resort of workers in the composite metal called laton or latten.

LOWERTOWN, the name of several townlands in Ireland, is a corruption of Ir. lubh-ghortan (pron. loortaun), "a little garden," dimin. of lubh-gort (lit. "herb-yard"), a garden (Joyce, ii. 318).

"LUBBER'S HEAD," sign of an inn (2nd Pt. Hen. IV. ii. 1), i.e. the Libbard's, or Leopard's Head.

LUDERGASSE, "Riot Street," and Breitengasse, "Broad Street" (which is by no means broad), in Nuremberg, owe their names to the cloth-dressers, Lodern, and Tuch-bereitern, who formerly inhabited them (Andresen).

LUDGATE, London, so spelt as if named after the mythical King Lud, is said to be a corruption of Flood-gate, the old water gate of the Fleet (Saturday Review, vol. 46, p. 461; Stow, Survey, p. 15, ed. Thoms).

M.

MACELLIGOT, name of an Irish family, is a corruption of Mac Uí Leod, i.e. son of the grandson of Leod, from whom also are descended the Scotch Macleods (Notes and Queries, 5th S. vii. 33).

MADAME, a place-name in Cork, stands for Ir. magh-damh, "plain of the oxen" (Joyce, i. 43).

MAGDEBURG, "Maid's-town," in Germany, Latinized as "Mons Puel-larum," is a modification of the ancient Magetoburgum, "the town on the plain;" Celtic magh, a plain (Taylor, 232).

MAIDEN CASTLE, the name of a striking encampment in Dorsetshire, probably constructed by the Britons, and afterwards occupied by the Romans, is said to be compounded of mai and dun, "great hill" (Quarterly Review, No. 222, p. 305).

MAIDENHEAD, a place-name, is a corruption of Maidenhith (Taylor, 381).

MAIDSTONE is etymologically the town on the Medway (Taylor, 389).

MAI-LAND, the Germanized name of Milan (Mid. H. Ger. Meilan), as if "May land," with reference to the perpetual summer of its climate, so as to range with Florence, the flowery city whose device is a lily. Milan is from Latin Mediolanum, itself probably a modification of an older word. Compare POLAND.

MALACHY, in Ireland, a Christian name, is an incorrect Anglicization of Ir. Maiseachlainn or Melaghlín (O'Donovan).

MALEVENTUM, "Ill-come" (subsequently changed into Beneventum, "Well-come"), a corruption of the Greek name Malóeis.

MANCROFT, in St. Peter Mancroft, an old church in Norwich, so called because it stands on what was once the "Great Croft" of the castle, is from Magna Crofta, the main (O. Fr. magne, maigne) croft.

MAN OF WAR, a townland in the parish of Tubber, Ireland, was originally Mainwar (J. H. Todd, War of the Gaedhil with the Gaill, p. cxliv.).

MAR-BŒUF, } place-names in Nor-PAIN-BEUF, } mandy, bœuf or beuf, also found as bue, being an alteration of the by of Danish England (Taylor, 186).

MARGARETHE, in Denmark, sometimes represents the old name Grjotgard, where the first part of the word is Icel. grjot, = grit, Ger. gries (Yonge, Christ. Names, i. 295). For the contrary change, see MEREGROT, p. 236.

MARGARETHENKLOSTER in Cologne was originally the shrine of Maria ad gradus, from which, probably through the shortened form Margrad, the name has been corrupted (Andresen).

MARGUERITE, ST. The star Margarita Corona, The Pearl of the Northern Crown, it is said has been sometimes transformed into St. Marguerite (J. F. Blake, Astronomical Myths, p. 80).

MARKET FIELD, a Lancashire field-name, occurs in old documents as Margreat's Field, evidently Margaret's Field (N. and Q. 5th S. i. 413).

MARKET JEW, the name of a town in Cornwall, also called Marazion, is a corruption of its old name Mairaview or Marajewe, which is said to mean in Cornish "Thursday's market" (Carew; Norden; as if marché de Jeudi, mercatus Jovis diei, cf. Welsh dydd Jau, Thursday).

The name was popularly construed into an argument for Jews having settled thither by the Roman emperors to work the mines. See JEWS' TIN, p. 195.

Then a town among us, too, which we call Market Jew, but the old name was Marazion, that means the Bitterness of Zion, they tell me; and bitter work it was for them no doubt, poor souls!—C. Kingsley, Yeast, p. 255 (1851).

MARKHAM, as a surname in Ireland, is an Anglicizing of Ir. O'Marcacháin (O'Donovan).

MARK LANE, in London, is a corruption of Mart Lane.

Mart lane, so called of a privilege sometimes enjoined to keep a mart there, long since discontinued, and therefore forgotten, so as nothing remaineth for memory but the name of Mart Lane, and that corruptly termed Marke Lane.—Stow, Survey of London, 1603, p. 57, ed. Thoms.

MARLBOROUGH is not so named from its marl soil, but was originally (St. Maidulf's borough (Taylor, 392).

MARYLEBONE, the name of the church and parish so called, which looks like a corruption of Mary-la-bonne, is really from Mary-le-bourne, i.e. the chapel of St. Mary situated on the bourne or brook which flows down from Hampstead to the Thames, giving names by the way to Brook Street, Tyburn, &c.

The bourne or brook which has given its name, first to Tyburn, and afterwards to St. Mary "le Borne," and which, rising on the south-western slope of Hampstead Hill, runs close by Lord Hertford's villa in the Regent's Park, crosses the road opposite Sussex Place, and reaches High Street a little south of the cemetery.—Sat. Review. Vide Jesse, London, i. p. 47.

MATTERFACE, a surname, is said to be a corruption of De Martivas or Martin vast, "Martin's fortress" (Charnock).

MAUD (formerly Molde, Fr. Mahaud for Mahthild, Matilda) is sometimes in Ireland an incorrectly Anglicized form of Meadhbh (pron. Meave).

MAURITIUS, } in some Irish families,
MORTIMER, } are mere attempts to Anglicize the native name Muircheartach (pron. Murkertagh), the appellation of the hero of an old Irish poem (Tracts relating to Ireland, Ir. Archæolog. Soc. vol. i.). Hence also Murtagh, and Moriarty.

MÄUSETHURM, "Mouse-tower," the name of an ancient tower in the Rhine near Bingen, was originally Mautturm, i.e. toll-house, from mauth, toll, so called because the duty on goods passing up the river used to be collected there. The popular legend accounting for the modern name is told by Sir R. Barclay as follows:—

Hatto Bishop of Ments in Germanie, perceiving the poore people in great lacke of victuals by the scarcitie of corne, gathered a great many of them together, and shut them into a barne, and burnt them, saying: That they differed little from mice that consumed corne, and were profitable to nothing. But God left not so great a crueltie vnrueenged: for he made mice assault him in great heapes, which neuer left gnawing vpon him night nor day: he fled into a Tower which was in the midst of the Riuer of Rhyne (which to this day is called the Tower of Mice, of that euent) supposing hee should be safe from them in the midst of the Riuer: But an innumerable Companie of Mice swam over the riuer to execute the just judgement of God and deuoured him.—The Felicitie of Man, 1631, p. 458.

Southey has made this story the subject of a ballad.

A frontier town of N. Tirol is called Mauthaus, i.e. Custom-house.

It is asserted in Beauties of the Rhine, by H. G. Fearnside (p. 179), but I know not on what authority, that the Mausethurm was formerly Moussenthurm, so called because mounted with guns which bore the name of mousserie.

MEGABYZUS, MEGABIGNES, &c., are more Greek transliterations of Persian names beginning with the word Baga, God, as if the prefix meant "great," megas.

MELVILLE, a Connaught surname, is an Anglicized form of Ir. O'Mulvihil (O'Donovan).

MEMNONIA of the Greeks, the so-called buildings of Memnon, owe their name to a misunderstanding of the word menmen, which signifies vast monuments, especially sepulchral monuments (Bunsen, Egypt, vol. iii. p. 139).

MENDJOU, or Menjou, in Prov. Fr. = mangeurs, a local nickname given to the inhabitants of Alaise by those of Myon, is said to be a perversion of the old tribal name Mandubii (Mandhuib) in Cæsar (De Lincy, Proverbes Français, i. vi.).

MEN-OF-WAR, a ridge of rocks off the Cornish coast, is a modern corruption of Cornish Menavawr (= Welsh maeny-fawr), "the great rock" (N. and Q. 4th S. iv. 406).

MEPHISTOPHILES. If Andresen is to be credited, the original spelling of this name was Mephaustophiles, i.e. No-Faust-lover, i.e. Faust-hater. He thinks that the present form has an underthought as to his mephitic nature (Volksetymologie, p. 17).

MERRY MOUNT, the name which the Puritans gave to Mount Wollaston, south of Boston, New England, was a corruption of Ma-re Mount, the name given it by one of the early colonists (Bryant and Gay, Hist. of the United States, vol. i. p. 424).

MILESIAN, a term applied to the Irish of aristocratic descent, as if they came from Miletus, according to Dr. Meyer is from the Irish word mileadh, a soldier (Latham, Celtic Nations, p. 75).

MILFORD, a Connaught surname, is an Anglicized form of Ir. O'Mulfover (O'Donovan).

MINCING LANE, off Tower Street, London, is a corruption of Mincheon Lane, "so called of tenements there sometime pertaining to the Minchuns or nuns of St. Helen's in Bishopsgate Street" (Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 50, Thoms), from A. Sax. minicen, municene, a nun, a female monk (A. Sax. munuc).

MOAT HILL, in Hawick, Scotland, is not the hill with a moat or ditch, but identical with the Mote Hill or Moot Hill found in other places, that is, the meeting hill, or place of assembly, Norse mot (Taylor, 291).

MONEYGOLD, the name of a place near Grange, in Sligo, is a curious perversion of its Irish name Muine-

Dhubhaltaiagh, "The shrubbery of Duaid" (a man's name). The muine was changed into money; and, in order to match, Dhubhaltaiagh, contracted into Dhuald, and pronounced by phonetic change guald, was transformed into gold (Joyce, ii. 142).

MONEYROD, a place-name in Antrim, is an Anglicized form of Ir. muine ruide (or rod), "Shrubbery of the iron-scum" (Joyce, ii. 350).

MONEYSTERLING, a place-name in Londonderry, is an English corruption of the Irish name Monasterlynn, "the monastery of O'Lynn," divided as Mona-sterlynn (Joyce, ii. 146). The conversion of a monastery, whether O'Lynn's or otherwise, into money sterling is a process not unknown in English chronicles.

MONGIBELLO, the Sicilian name of Mt. Etna, is a corruption of Monte Gebel, literally "Mt. Mountain," from Arab. geb, a mountain.

MONSTER TEA GARDENS, a name for a certain place of popular resort on the banks of the Thames, was a corruption of the original name The Minster Gardens, or Monastery Gardens, an ancient appurtenance of the Abbey of Westminster. (See Scott, Gleanings from Westminster Abbey, p. 229.)

MONTAGUE, as a surname in Ulster, is an Anglicized form of Mac Teige (O'Donovan).

MONTE-FELICE, "Happy Mount," is a Portuguese rendering of djebel al-fil, "Mountain of the Elephant," in the kingdom of Adel (Devic).

MONTE-FELTBO, a mountainous district N. of Urbino, as if "the mount of the felt-hat" (like Pilatus = Pileatus, "Hatted"), was so named originally from a temple of Jupiter Feretrius which was there (Quarterly Review, No. 177, p. 97).

MONTE MATTO, as if "Mad mount," is an Italian corruption of Mons Hy-mettus.

MONTMARTRE, a district of Paris, is said to be a corruption of mons Martis, mountain of Mars (vid. Thorpe, Northern Mythology, i. p. 228).

MONTROSE, in Forfarshire, is a corruption of the ancient name monros, Gaelic monadh-rois, "The hill of the ravine" (Robertson, p. 454).

MONY-MUSK, a place in Aberdeenshire, is probably a corruption of monadh-muice, "Boar's Hill" (Robertson, Gaelic Topography, p. 455).

MOON, a surname, is a contracted form of Mohune (Camden, Remaines, 1637, p. 148).

MOORSHOLM, in the Cleveland district, is a corrupted orthography of Morehusum, in the Domesday Survey (Fraser's Magazine, Feb. 1877, p. 171; Atkinson, Cleveland Glossary, p. xv.).

MORDKAPELLE, "Murder-chapel," near Bonn, is corrupted from the original name Martyrerkapelle (Andresen).

MORE-CLARK, a curious old corruption of Mortlake, on the Thames near Richmond, which, by an incorrect division of the word as Mor-tlake, was frequently pronounced More-clack. Thus an old poem, 1705, speaks of "Moreclack Tapstry" (see Nares), and Cowley of "The richest work of Mortclakes noble loom."

And now Fervet Opus of Tapestry at More-clark.—Fuller, Worthies, ii. 354.

MORNING STAR, THE, the name of a river which flows through co. Limerick, is due to a popular mistake. Its old Ir. name Samhair was corrupted into Camhair, which signifies "the break of day," and this was further improved into "Morning Star" (Joyce, ii. 456).

MOUNT-SION, the Scriptural sounding name of several places in Ireland, is a half-translation, half-corruption, of Ir. Cnoc-a'-tsidheain, "Hill of the fairy-mount" (Joyce, i. 41).

MOUSEHOLE, the name of a fishing village near Penzance, is said to be a corruption of the Cornish words Môz-hayle, the "Maiden's brook," or Moz-hal, the "Sheep's moor" (N. and Q. 5th S. ii. p. 90).

MUD-CROFT, the name of a field near Eastbourne, was originally the Mont Croft Field (G. F. Chambers, Eastbourne, p. 21).

MÜLLROSE, "Mould-rose," a place-name, is a Germanized form of Slavonic Melraz (Taylor, 389).

MUSAI, or Musôn, the name of a place in Middle Egypt, on the east side of the river, so spelt as if it meant (in Greek) the abode of the Muses, is a perversion of the ancient name T-en-Moshé, "the river-bank (or island) of Moses," so called in a monument of the reign of Ramses III. (Brugsch, Egypt under the Pharaohs, vol. ii. p. 112).

MYLORD, a place near Briançon, is a popular corruption of Millavares (= milles vents).—L. Larchey, Dict. des Nomes, p. xiii.

N.

NANCY COUSIN'S BAY, in North America, is a corruption by English sailors of Anse des Cousins, or Bay of Mosquitoes, the name given to it by the French settlers.

NEGROPONT, "the black bridge," the modern name of the island of Eubœa, is a corruption, probably due to Italian sailors, of Negrîpo, which is a modification of Egrîpo or Evrîpo, the town built on the ancient Eurîpus (Taylor, 397). The mediate expression was Mod. Greek en Egrîpô.

NETTLE, as a proper name, seems to correspond to the old German Chnettîli, from O. H. Ger. kncht, A Sax. cnîht, a "knight" (Ferguson, Eng. Surnames, p. 24).

NEUMAGEN, "New Maw" (!), a Swiss place-name, is a Germanization of the ancient Noviomagus.

NEUNKIRCHEN, "nine churches," a German place-name, is a corruption of Neuenkirchen, "New church" (Taylor, 464).

NEWHOLM, near Whitby, a corruption of Neuham in the Domesday Survey.

NIGHTINGALE LANE (London) was originally named after the "Knighthen-guild" of Portsoken (Ed. Review, No. 267, Jan. 1870), A. Sax. cnîhtena guild.

There were thirteen Knights or soldiers, well-beloved to the King [Ædgar] and realm, for service by them done, which requested to have a certain portion of land on the east part of the city. . . . The King granted to their request . . . and named it Knighthen Guild.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 46 (ed. Thoms).

NORTON, a surname in Connaught, is an Anglicized form of O'Naghton (O'Donovan).

NUTFORD, an English place-name, is properly the ford of the neat cattle (Taylor, 466), sometimes called nout, A. Sax. neát.

O.

OAKHAMPTON, a town in Devonshire, as if "Oak-home-town," is a corruption of its ancient name Ochenitone (it is still popularly called Ockington), the town at the confluence of the two rivers Ock or Ockment.

OAKINGTON. Near Cambridge is a village, called phonetically by its inhabitants "Hokinton." This railway company imagined to be a local mispronunciation for "Oakington," which name they have painted up on the spot, and stereotyped by their time-tables. Archæological researches, however, proved that the real name is Hockynton, and that it is derived from an ancient family once resident there—the Hockings. See 42nd Annual Report of the Public Records, 1880; Standard, Aug. 29, 1880.

ODENSEE, sometimes also Odinsey, Odin's isle, was originally Odinsve, Odin's holy place (Andresen).

ÓÐINS-BORG, an Icelandic name for Athens in the Postula Sögur (Stories of the Apostles), as if "Odin's Borough" (Cleasby), where Óðins is a corruption of Athens, borg being commonly appended to town-names, as in Rómborg.

OELBACH, a German river-name, as if "oil-brook," is, according to Mone, from Ir. oil, a stone (Taylor, 389). Another form of that word is Ir. ail (pron. oil), a rock, whence "The Oil," a townland in Wexford, derives its name (Joyce, i. 24).

OLD ABERDEEN, or OLD TOWN. Mr.

A. D. Morice writes to me as follows :—
 “This place is much more modern than Aberdeen proper, and the original name, still colloquially in use, was Alton, meaning, I believe, in Celtic, ‘the Village of the Burn.’ Alton became naturally enough Old Town, and this eventually Old Aberdeen.” Allt is the Gaelic for “stream.”

OLD MAN, a name frequently given to a conspicuous rock, e.g. at Coniston, is a corruption of Celtic alt maen, “high rock” (Taylor, 388).

OLD MAUD, an estate in the parish of New Deer, north of Aberdeen. The original name was Aultmaud, meaning the Burn of the Fox’s Hole. This within the last century has become corrupted into Old Maud, and when the railway was made from Aberdeen to Inverness, and a village sprang up at one of the stations near Aultmaud the proprietor gave it the name of New Maud (Mr. A. D. Morice).

OLIVER, originally a name of chivalry, as in the phrase “A Rowland for an Oliver,” Fr. Olivier, It. Oliviero, so spelt as if derived from Lat. oliva, the olive, is, no doubt, a perversion of the Scandinavian Olaf, Olafr, or Anlaf (whence the church of St. Olave, London, derives its name). It was confused probably sometimes with the Danish name ølver, “ale bibber.”

ORANGE, the name of a town near Avignon, is a corruption of the ancient name Araision (Taylor, 204).

OSTEND, in Belgium, which would seem to mean the “east end” (like Ostend in Essex), is really the “west (west) end” of the great canal (Taylor, 463).

OURS, RUE AUX, “Bears’ Street,” in Paris, was originally Rue aux Oues, “Geese Street” (old Fr. oue = oie), so called from the cookshops there which made geese their speciality (P. L. Jacob, Recueil de Farces, 15th cent. p. 305).

OVENS, THE, the name of a village in co. Cork, is a corruption of Ir. Uamhainn, pronounced oovan, i.e. a cave, there being a very remarkable series of these at the place (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, vol. i. p. 426).

OVER, a place-name in Cambridge-shire, is from A. Sax. ofer, a shore, Ger. ufer (Taylor, 482).

OXFORD, old Eng. Oxen-ford, and Oxna-ford, apparently, like Bosporos, “the ford of oxen,” was probably originally Ousen-ford, or Ous-ford, i.e. the ford of the Isis (Isidis vadum), Ouse, Ose, Use, Ise, a frequent river-name, also found in the forms Usk, Esk, Ewe, Axe, and Ock, all from the Celtic uisge, water. Hence also Ux-bridge and Osen-ey near Oxford. Howell in his Londinopolis, p. 12, has the remark that the “Isis or Ouse . . . passeth at length by Oxenford, who some imagine should rather be call’d Ouseford of this River.”

OXMANTOWN, a quarter of old Dublin, is a corruption of Ostman-town, the Ostmen having made a settlement there.

OX MOUNTAINS, in Sligo, is a translation of their Mod. Ir. name Sliabh-dhamb, “mountain of the oxen,” but this is a perversion of the ancient Sliabh-ghamb, probably meaning “stormy mountain” (Joyce, i. 55).

OXSTEAD, } a parish near Godstone OXSTED, } in Surrey, is a corruption of Oak-stead, the settlement in the oak woods.

OYSTER-HILL, the name of the remains of a Roman encampment in the parish of Dinder, near Hereford, is supposed to be a survival of the name of Ostorius Scapula, the consular governor of Britain (Camden’s Britannia, p. 580, ed. Gibson; Tac. Agricola, c. 14, Bohn’s trans. note in loco).

P.

PAIN, or Payne, a surname, i.e. Payen, a pagan (Painim), from Lat. Paganus.

PALLETS, an old popular name for a parish church near Royston in Herefordshire, so called from a “saint Eppalet, whose reliques lie buried about the high Altar” (Weever, Funerall Monuments, p. 545, 1631). This Pallet or Eppalet is a curiously disguised form of Hippolytus (It. Sant Ippolito), who was martyred in 252 by being torn in pieces by wild horses, to fulfil the meaning of his name. The hamlet is still known as Ippolits (Yonge, Christ. Names, i. 184). The memory of this saint was long preserved by a curious custom thus recounted by Weever:—

This man [Eppalet] in his life time was a good tamer of colts, and as good a Horse-leach: And for these qualities so devoutly honoured after his death, that all passengers by that way on Horse-backe, thought themselves bound to bring their Steedes into the Church, euen vp to the high Altar, where this holy Horseman was shrined, and where a Priest continually attended, to bestow such fragments of Eppalets miracles, as would either tame yong horses, cure lame iades, or refresh old, wearied, and forworne Hackneyes. —Ancient Funerall Monuments, p. 545.

PARISH GARDEN,—

Do you take the court for Parish garden? ye rude slaves.—Shakespeare, Hen. VIII. v. 4. So in the original copies (Dyce),—a popular corruption of Paris Garden, “the House of Robert de Paris, which King Richard III. proclaimed a receptacle of Butchers Garbage, the Bear-garden in Southwark” (Bailey).

PAN, the pastoral god, the Greek form of the Sanskrit Pavana, the wind (M. Müller, Chips, vol. ii.), was commonly understood to mean the “all pervading god,” as if connected with pas, pan, all, or the “all delighting.”

Πᾶνα δὲ μιν καλέεσκον, ὅτι φρένα πᾶσιν ἔτερεψε.
Homer, Hymn, 18.

And Pan they call'd him, since he brought to all

Of mirth so rare and full a festival.

Chapman, p. 109 (ed. Hooper).

Pavana, from the root pā, to purify (Pictet, Orig. Indo-Europ. ii. 116), indicates the cleansing power of the wind, the true “broom that sweeps the cobwebs off the sky.” Compare:—

All the creatures ar his seruitours;
The windes do sweepe his chambers euery day;

And cloudes doe wash his rooms.

G. Fletcher, Christs Triumph after Death, st. 27 (1610).

Men see not the bright light which is in the clouds; but the wind passeth, and cleanseth them.—A. V. Job, xxxvii. 21.

PAUL, the Christian name of the celebrated painter Paul de la Roche, was originally Pol, an abbreviation of Hippolyte, the name by which he was christened (N. and Q. 4th S. ii. 231).

PAWN, an old name for a corridor, which formed a kind of bazaar, in the Royal Exchange, is a corruption of Ger. bahn, Dutch baan, a path or walk (see Jesse, London, vol. ii. p. 356).

In truth (kind cousse) my comming's from the Pawn.

'Tis merry when gossips meet, 1609.

You must to the Pawn to buy lawn.

Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 1 (see Dyce, in loc.).

PEERLESS POOL, a place near Old Street Road, London, is a corruption of Perilous, or Parlous Pool, formerly a spring that, overflowing its banks, caused a very dangerous pond wherein many persons lost their lives (Old Plays, vol. vi. p. 33, ed. 1825).

We'll show you the bravest sport at parlous pond.—The Roaring Girle, 1611, act i. sc. 1.

Not far from it [Holywell] is also one other clear water called Perillous pond, became divers youths, by swimming therein, have been drowned.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 7 (ed. Thoms).

PENNY COME QUICK, for Pen y cwm gwic, “Head of the Creek Valley,” the Cornish name for Falmouth (M. Müller, Chips, iii. p. 304).

PENNYCROSS, near Plymouth, is said to be from the old British name *Pen-y-crovy*s, the “height of the cross.”

PERCY CROSS, at Walham Green, Middlesex, is a corruption of the older form “Purser's Cross.” This in its turn may perhaps have been a corruption of the cross (roads) leading to the adjacent “Parson's Green” (Notes and Queries, 5th S. vi. 509).

PETER GOWER, an old corruption of Pythagoras, through the French Pythagore, occurs in the following extract from a document of doubtful authenticity:—

Peter Gower a Grecian journeyedde ffor Kunynge yn Egypte and yn Syria.—Certaine Questyons wyth Answeres to the same Concernynge the Mysterye of Maconrye (temp. Hen. V I.).—Soane's Curiosities of Literature, ii. 80; Fort, Antiquities of Freemasonry, Appendix.

PETER GUN, a personal name borne by an individual in America, is stated to be an Anglicized form of Pierre à Fusil, a name given to him by the French settlers as a literal rendering of his original German appellation Feuerstein ("fire-stone"), flint (F. H. Lieber, Stranger in America; Lower, Eng. Surnames, 145).

PETRA, and ARABIA PETRÆA, the capital and kingdom of the Nabatheans, are mistranslations by the Greeks of the native Arabic name, which is Hagar (the mother of Ishmael), a different word, having a different initial letter, from Hagar, a rock or stone. Hagarite was a recognized title for the sons of Ishmael (Forster, Historical Geography of Arabia, i. p. 237).

PETTY-CUR, in Fifeshire, is a corruption of the Gaelic Pit-a-choire, "Hollow of the corrie or dell" (Robertson, p. 477).

PFLAUMBAUM, "Plum-tree," has been found as the name of a German family, originally called Blei (lead), which being translated into Latin became Plumbum, and this in turn was mistaken for Low Ger. plumbôm, a plum-tree (Andresen).

PHARAOH, a surname, is a corruption of the old German name Faro, corresponding to Icel. fari, A. Sax. fara, a traveller (Ferguson, Eng. Surnames, p. 355).

PHARAOH, he whose daughter Scota is fabled to have first colonized Ireland with Egyptians (Stanihurst), seems to have originated in a misunderstanding of the old Irish war-cry, Farrih, Farrih! "which is a Scottish word, to weete, the name of one of the first kings of Scotland, called Fargus, Fergus, or Ferragus, which fought against the Pictes, as ye may read in Buchanan De rebus Scotticis; but as others write, it was long before that, the name of their cheif captayne, under whom they fought agaynst the Africans, the which was then soe fortunate unto them, that ever since they have used to call upon his name in their battells."—Spenser, State of Ireland, p. 632 (Globe ed.).

PHENIX PARK, an extensive park at Dublin, owes its name to a corruption of the original Irish Fionn-uisg, "a clear spring" of local celebrity there situated. The blunder contained in the name is visibly stereotyped in a stone effigy of "the Arabian bird" rising from its pyre on the summit of a column in a conspicuous part of the park.

PHENIXTOWN, an Irish place-name, formerly spelt Phenockstown, is a corruption of Ir. Baile-na-bhíonmog, "scaldcrows' (Ang. Ir. finnoges) town" (Joyce, i. 37).

PHYSICK, a surname, is said to be derived from an old Ger. name Fizo (Ferguson, 288).

PIAN DI VOCE, "Plain of the Voice," the name of a site in modern Etruria, is a corruption of Piano di Volci, so called from the ancient city of Vulci. (See Dennis, Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. i. p. 446, ed. 1878.)

PICKET-WIRE RIVER, the Canadian river so called, is a corruption of Rivière du Purgatoire, a name given to it by the French colonists (Schele De Vere, The English of the New World).

PICTI, "Painted," the Latin name for the Caledonian tribe whom we call the Picts (Claudian), supposed to be allusive to their custom of staining their bodies. So Lord Strangford: "The Picts got their name from the Romans, as being tattooed, distinct from the clothed and tamed Britons" (Letters and Papers, p. 162). It is probably a modification of the original Celtic name peicta, "the fighters" (Taylor, Sl. 396; Trench, Study of Words, 121), akin perhaps to Lat. pectere, to comb, to beat, Eng. fight. Compare also the Pictones (Pictet, Orig. Indo-Europ. ii. 208). A popular survival of the word appears, I think, in the Faichs, an ancient race of pygmies endowed with extraordinary strength, and capable of the greatest efforts in the shortest time, who are believed to have built Linlithgow Palace (J. G. Dalyell, Darker Superstitions of Scotland, p. 532). In N. Scotland a deformed and diminutive person is called a picht, while the Picts are known as Pechts or Pehts (Jamieson). Compare "A peghte, pigmeus" (Catholicon Anglicum). It is well known that the aborigines of a country commonly degenerate into pygmies, elves, or troglodytes in the superstitious beliefs of their supplanters (cf. Ewald, Hist. of Israel, i. 228; Pusey, On Daniel, 506; M'Lennan, Prim. Marriage, 80; M. Williams, Mod. India, 131; Wright, Celt, Roman, and Saxon, 85).

The Pictes, a people not so called of painting their bodies, as some have supposed, but upon mistaking their true name which was Pichtian that is to say fighters.—Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, p. 114 (1634).

Sylvester assures his patron James I. that he would surmount in excellence all those

Which have (before thee) Ru'l'd th' hard-ruled Scots

And ruder Picts (painted with Martiall spots).
Du Bartas, p. 306 (1621).

PIG AND CARROT, the sign of an inn at Newport, Isle of Wight, is said to have been originally Pique et carreau, the spade and diamond cards (Dublin University Magazine, Oct. 1868).

PIG AND WHISTLE, as a device on the signboard of an inn, is said to have been originally The Peg in the Wassail (-bow). But see Hist. of Signboards, 437.

PIG-FAT, a surname, is a corruption of Pickford (Charnock).

PILATUS, or Mont de Pilate, the mountain overhanging Lucerne, in a tarn on the summit of which Pontius Pilate is popularly believed to have drowned himself, is a corruption of Mons Pileatus, "the cloud-capped hill," mountains being everywhere said to have their hat on when their summits are covered with mist. Compare Chapeau Dieu near the bay of Fundy, now Shepody Mountain.

If Skiddaw hath a cap
Scruffel wots full well of that.

Ray's Proverbs.

PINK, a surname, seems to be a contraction of Pinnock, and probably the same as Pennick, Ger. Pennicke.

PITCHLEY, a place-name in Northamptonshire, is a corruption of Pictlei or Piltles-lea (in Doomsday), the laga or settlement of the Picts (Taylor, 270).

PITFOUR, in Perthshire, is a corruption of the Gaelic Pit-fuar, "The cold hollow" (Robertson, p. 477).

PLASTER, in Chapel Plaster, the name of a hamlet in the parish of Box, is more properly Plestor, a corruption of pleystow (A. Sax. pleg-stow), a "play place," and so denotes the chapel on the village green. (See White's Selborne.)

PLOTCKOCK, a curious Scottish name for the devil (Ramsay), as if from Scot. plot, to scald or burn, and cock, is probably a corruption of Icel. blót-guð, a heathen god (compare blót-goði, a heathen priest), from blót, worship, sacrifice, later especially heathen worship.

POLAND, a modification of old Eng. Polayn, equivalent to Ger. Polen or Pohlen, "men of the plains," from the Slavonic polie, a plain (Taylor, 397).

PONT-À-COULEUVRE (Oise), "Serpent bridge," was formerly Pont-à-Quileuvre, which stands for Pont à qui l'œuvre, in Latin Pons cui aperit, i.e. Pont à qui ouvre, the bridge which was only opened to passengers on paying a toll (L. Larchey, Dictionnaire des Nomes, p. xiii.).

PONTE MOLLE, an Italian corruption of Pons Milvius, the Milvian Bridge.

PORTLAND, the name of a townland in Tipperary, is a disguised form of Portolohane, originally Ir. Port-an-tolchain, "the bank (or landing-place) of the little hill" (Joyce, ii. 225).

PORT ROYAL, so called, not because on one occasion it furnished a royal refuge to Philip Augustus, but because the general name of the district in which the valley lies was Porrois, so called from Low Lat. Porra, or Borra, a hollow overgrown with brambles in which there is stagnant water (Lebœuf). So F. Martin, Angelique Arnauld, pp. 1, 2; Tulloch, Pascal, p. 79.

PORTWINE, a surname, anciently Potewyne, for Poitevin, a native of Poitou.

PRECIOUS, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Priesthouse (Charnock).

PRÉ-MARIE, in Poitou, which seems to be Pré de Marie, was formerly Pratum maledictum (pré maudit).—L. Larchey, Dict. des Nomes.

PRESTER JOHN, that is, Priest or Presbyter John (Lat. Presbyter Jo-

Johannes), a supposed Christian sovereign and priest reigning somewhere in Central Asia or Africa, famous in mediæval story, was probably meant for Gur-Khan. His name softened into Yur-Khan. M. Oppert thinks, may have been mistaken by the Syrian priests for Juchanan or Johannes (see Edinburgh Review, Jan. 1872, p. 25). It has also been regarded as a corruption of Ungh Khan (Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction, p. 300). Marco Polo identifies this mysterious monarch with Unk-Khan, spelt Unc Can and Uncan in Purchas (Pilgrimages, p. 834). Purchas has a long discussion as to the origin of the name. He observes that the Ethiopian Emperor bore the title Beldigian, meaning a precious stone, and that "this by corruption of the name by Merchants was pronounced Priest Gian or John" (Pilgrimages, p. 836). He also quotes Joseph Scaliger's theory that the Ethiopian Emperor was called Pretegianno, "which in the Persian tongue signifieth 'Apostolike,' inferring thereby that he is a Christian King of the right faith" (ibid. p. 834). "That title of Pretegianno, or Apostolically, others not understanding called Priest John, or Prete Janni," and sometimes even "Precious John" (ibid. p. 837). Maimonides mentions him as Preste-Cuan. His effigy constitutes the arms of the see of Chichester (see Baring-Gould, Curious Myths of the Mid. Ages, 1st Ser.; Journal of Ethnology Soc. Jan. 11, 1870; G. Oppert, Der Presbyter Johannes).

From this land of Bactrie men go in many days journey to the land of Prester John, that is a great Emperor of Inde.—Sir J. Maundeville, Travels, p. 121.

Prester John and Pretejane, according to Zaga Zabo, quoted in Selden, Titles of Honour, p. 65, is corrupted from Precious Gian, the name of that monarch in Ethiopic being Gian Belul, i.e. Precious John.

PRINZHEIM, in Alsace, was originally Bruningsesheim.

PROMETHEUS (in Greek the "Provider" or "Fore-thinker," from promēthēs, fore-thinking, provident), the fire-maker, is a corruption apparently of the Sanscrit pramantha, the spindle or fire-drill that provides man with fire (Tyler, Early Hist. of Mankind, p. 254). See also Kelly, Indo-Europ. Tradition, p. 41 seq.

PROBATIVE (Fr.), in the expression La piscine probatique for the pool of Bethesda (St. John, v. 2), is an adoption, probably from a supposed connexion with probation, probable, of Vulgate probatia piscini, which is merely the Greek probatiké, the sheep-gate, from prōbatōn, a sheep. It is called "the probationary pool" (!) in Didron's Christian Iconography, Eng. trans. p. 368.

PUI DU FOU, a French place-name, is not le puits du fou, as one might be tempted to suppose, but "the hill of the beech" (L. Larchey, Dict. des Nomes), from puy, a slope (podium), and old Fr. fou, beech, from Lat. faqus.

PURCHASE, a surname, is a corruption of Purkiss, another form of Perkins, a dimin. of Pierre (Charnock).

Q.

QUERFURT, the name of the German town so called, as if "cross-ford," is really from quërn, a mill (Andresen).

QUILLE-BEUF, } place-names in Nor-QUITTE-BEUF, } mandy, corresponding to English Kil-by, the byr (or village) of the well, and Whitby, i.e. white village (Taylor, 186).

QUINTIN, a Christian name in Ireland, is an incorrectly Anglicized form of Ir. Cu-maighe (pron. Cooley), "dog of the plain" (O'Donovan).

R.

RABBIT, a surname, is perhaps identical with Rabbod, the name of a "duke of the Frisians" (Roger of Wendover), a corruption of Radbod, "counsel-er" (Ferguson, 166).

RABEN, a Germanized form of Ravenna, as if connected with rabēn, ravens.

RAIMENT, a surname, is a corruption of Raymond (Charnock).

RAINBIRD, a surname, is a corruption of Rambert (Charnock).

RAINBOW, a surname, is a corruption of Ramboux or Raimbault (Charnock).

RAINSFORD, a surname, is a corruption of Ravensford (Camden, Remaines, 1637, p. 148).

RANSOM, an Eng. place-name, is a corruption of the ancient Rampisham (Earle).

RANSOM, a surname, "is evidently," says Mr. Ferguson, "the old Norse ransamr, piratical" (Eng. Surnames, p. 355).

RASTEDE, the name of a palace in Oldenburg, as if from rasten, to rest, was originally Radestede (a cultivated place).—Andresen.

RATHDOWNEY, a place-name in Queen's County, meaning "fort of the church" (domhnach), is a popular corruption of the old Ir. name Rath-tamh-naigh, "fort of the green field" (Joyce, i. 222).

RAWBONE, a surname, otherwise Ra-bone, stands for Rathbone, or perhaps for Ger. Hraban, "Raven" (Ferguson, 169).

REDCHAIR, otherwise Richchair, a place-name in Limerick, stands for Red-sheard, an old Eng. translation of its Ir. name Bearna-dhearg, "red gap;" Prov. Eng. sheard, a gap (Joyce, i. 420).

REDFOOT, a surname, is a corruption of Radford (Charnock).

REDPATH, a surname, seems to be the English form of old Ger. Ratperth, Ratpert (i.e. Rad-bert, "counsel-bright").—Ferguson, 166.

REDRIFF, on the Thames, in London, is a corruption of Rotherhithe, apparently the "cattle wharf." So Queen-hive is found in old writers for Queen-hithe. Lambeth is for Loamhithe.

RED SEA, Lat. Mare Rubrum, Greek Eruthra thalassa, the Septuagint rendering of Heb. Yam Suph, "sea of seaweed (or rushes)."—Brugsch, Egypt under the Pharaohs, ii. 339, has no reference to the colour of its waters, but probably meant originally the sea of the Edomites, Himyarites, Erythreans, or Phœnicians, who lived on its shores, all names denoting "red men," that is, the Semites as distinct from the black negroes and yellow Turanians (Renan, Hist. des Langues Sémétiques, p. 39; Bib. Dict. iii. 1011).

REGSVILLA, "Kingston," the Roman name of an ancient Pelasgic settlement on the coast of Etruria, is very probably a corruption of the Etruscan name Regæ, the place being so called seemingly from the clefts (Greek rhēgai) indicative of its situation (Dennis, Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. i. p. 439, ed. 1878).

RENATA, an Italianized form of the name Rénée, understood as "re-born," "regenerate." It is really the feminine form of Réné, which is a shortened form of Fr. Renier or Reignier (Ragnar in Domesday Book), Norse Ragnar, for Ragin-hera, "Warrior of judgment" (Yonge, ii. 378). So Réné in Italian became Renato.

REYNOLDS (i.e. Reginald's son), a surname in Connaught, is an Anglicized form of Mac Rannal (O'Donovan).

RHEINWALD, a place-name, is a Germanized form of the native Rin Val, "Valley of the Rhine" (Gaidoz).

RHINOKOLURA, } i.e. the "promon-RHINOKORURA, } tory of Koruna," Arabic anf Kurun, believed to have been a colony founded by men with "mutilated noses" (Von Bohlen, Genesis, i. 320), as if from Greek ῥις, ῥινός, the nose, and κόλουρος, docked, truncated. But compare The Nose, ness, &c.

Cambyses King of Persia . . . cut off the noses of all the people in Syria, by means whereof the place was afterwards called Rhinocolura.—Seneca, Works, translated by Lodge, 1614, p. 567.

RHYDWELY, the Welsh name (Spurrell) of Bedford (anciently Bedan ford, "Bedca's ford"), as if meaning "ford" (rhyd) of the "bed" (gwely).

RICHBOROUGH, near Sandwich, is the modern form of Ryptacester, from Lat. Rutupium castra.

Many cities . . . were walled with stone, and baked bricks or tiles, as Richborrow or Ryptacester, in the Isle of Thanet.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 2 (ed. Thoms).

RINGSEND, the paradoxical name of a seaside place near Dublin, was, no doubt, originally the "end of the rinn," in Irish a point of land (Joyce, i. 393).

RINGVILLE, the name of a place in Waterford, and Ringvillia, in Fermanagh, are corruptions of Ir. Rinnbhile, "the point of the ancient tree" (Joyce, i. 393).

RINGWOOD, a place-name in Hants, a corrupt form of Regnewood, said to preserve the name of the ancient tribe of the Regni (Taylor, 73).

RIVALS, THE, the name of three hills near Nevin, in Carnarvonshire, is a corruption of Yr Eifl, "The Fork," these hills being so called in Welsh from their peculiar shape (N. and Q. 5th S. i. p. 247; Rhys, Lectures on Welsh Philology, p. 157).

ROBIN. Miss Yonge observes that this name, as well as its original Robert, is popularly given to many red objects, e.g. to the redbreast (Latinized rubicula); to the red campion (Lychnis dioica), commonly called "robins;" to the Lychnis flos cuculis, called "Ragged Robin;" and "Herb Robert" (Christ. Names, ii. 368); perhaps from an imagined connexion with Lat. rubeus, red. So Ruprecht, which is the same name (from O. H. Ger. Hruad-peraht, "fame-bright"), was long supposed to be derived from "red," and was transformed into Redbert and Redbeard.

ROBIN'S REEF, the name of some projecting rocks at the mouth of the Kills off Staten Island, is a corruption of the old name Robyn's Rift, i.e. Seal Reef, so called from their being the favourite haunt of seals (Bryant and Gay, Hist. of United States, vol. i. p. 353).

ROCKCLIFF, the name of a place in the Cleveland district, Yorkshire, is corrupted from Roudclive in the Domesday Survey.

ROCK-END, the name of a bay in Guernsey, is a corruption of Rocquaine (N. and Q. 5th S. ii. p. 90).

ROGERS, a surname in Tyrone, is the English rendering of the old Irish name Mac Rory, Roger being the assumed synonym of Ir. Ruaidhri or Rory (O'Donovan).

ROLANDSECK, on the Rhine, supposed to have its name from the crusader Roland, is said to have been originally rollendes-ecke, with reference to the rolling waves at the bend (ecke) of the river (Taylor, 394).

ROLLRIGHT STONES, or Rollrich Stones, a curious and ancient monument of upright stones disposed in a circle, south of Long Comptou in Warwickshire, according to an old tradition noticed by Camden owes its name to Rollo the Dane. In modern times some have seen in these stones a sepulchral memorial, and suggested an origin for their name in the Gaelic roilig, a churchyard, or roithlean an rign, "the circle of the king" (Burgess, Historic Warwickshire). All this however seems very doubtful.

ROOK'S TRUNDAL, THE, the name of a singular "hoop-shaped hill" in Sussex, is "a corruption probably of Roundall and St. Roche" (Quarterly Review, No. 223, p. 56).

ROPER, as a surname, is in some instances not derived from him who makes ropes, but a corruption, through the forms Rooper, Rouspce, Rospear, of L. Lat. Rubra-Spatha (Fuller, Worthies, i. 50), "red-sword," like Longespée. However, Lower quotes from Wright:

There is a very antient family of the Ropers in Cumberland, who have lived immemorially near a quarry of red Spate there, from whence they first took the surname of Rubra-Spatha.—Essays on Eng. Surnames, p. 237.

ROSA, in the name of the Swiss mountain Monte Rosa, probably has no reference to the rosy tint of the Alpine glow as Wordsworth supposed:

The Alpine Mount, that takes its name
From roseate hues, far kenne'd at morn and even.

Ecclesiast. Sonnets, pt. 3, xlvi.

It is rather, like Roseg, Rosenlawi, Rosberg, Scotch Rosneath, Rosduy, a derivative of Celtic ros, a prominent peak or headland (I. Taylor, Words and Places, p. 225, 2nd ed.). Compare Roseland, a peninsula in Cornwall, containing the ancient parish of Eglos-Ros.

How faintly-flush'd, how phantom-fair,
Was Monte Rosa, hanging there,
A thousand shadowy-pencil'd valleys,
And snowy dells in a golden air.

Tennyson, The Daisy.

ROSAMOND, a Christian name, It. and Span. Rosamunda, has often been understood as meaning "chaste rose" (Lat. rosa mundi). It is a modification of the old Teutonic name Hrosmond or Hrossmund, "Famed protection" (hrôs, fame), or, according to others, "Horse protection" (hross, horse).—Yonge, Christ. Names, i. 421, ii. 279.

Rosamond the faire his [Henry II.'s] paramour . . . bad this, nothing answerable to her beauty:

Hac jacet in tumba rosa mundi non Rosa munda,

Non redolet, sed olet, quæ redolere solet.

Camden, Remaines, 1637, p. 372.

ROSARIE, a place in Banffshire, represents the Gaelic Ros-airidh, "The point of the shealing" (Robertson, p. 495).

ROSE, a Christian name, is generally regarded as identical (like the Greek Rhoda) with the flower-name, Lat. rosa. It is really a modification of old Eng. Roese, Fr. Rohais, Latinized as Roesia, derived from Teutonic hrôs, "fame" (Yonge, Christian Names, i. 420).

Rohesia, the daughter of Aubrey de Vere, Chief Justice of England under Henry V. erected a cross in the high-way to put passengers in mind of Christ's passion. This spot "in processe of time by little & little grew to be a Towne, which instead of Rohesiaes Crosse was called Rohesiaes Towne, and now contracted into Roiston."—J. Weever, Funerall Monuments, p. 548 (1631).

ROSEBERRY TOPPING, the name of a mountain in Yorkshire, is probably a corruption of its old name Othenes-bergh, "Odin's Mount" (O'ins-berry, Ose-berry).

ROSETTA, is an occidental perversion of the oriental Rashid or Reshid.

ROSSDEUTSCHER, "Horse-German," as a proper name, is a corruption of Rossteuscher, a horse-dealer (Andresen).

ROTHLAUF, "Red-course," a German proper name, was originally Rudolf (Andresen).

ROSTHERNE, one of the largest meres of Mid. Cheshire, is a complete disguise of its original name Rood's-tarn, the tarn of the Holy Rood, or Cross, which probably once existed in the adjoining churchyard.

ROTSCHILD, "Red-shield," the name of a town in Zealand, is corrupted from Dan. roeskilde, "rest well," which itself is said to be from old Norse Hroarskilde, "Hroars' well" (Andresen), or "well of King Roe" (Revue Politique, 2nd Ser. v. 711).

RÜHMEKORB, } a German surname,
RUHMKORF, } as if from ruhm, fame, glory, and korb, a basket. The first part of the word, however, is the same as is seen in the names Rumschüttel, Raumschüssel, Ramschüssel, &c., i.e. "raume die schüssel," "clear the platter" (Andresen).

RULE WATER, in Teviotdale, from Celtic rhull, apt to break out, hasty, Cymric rhu, a roar (Veitch, Scottish Border, p. 53).

RUMBLE, a surname, probably stands for Rumbold, O. H. Ger. Rumbold, i.e. "fame-(heruom)-bold."

RUNN, in "The Runn of Kutch," India, a tract of plain sometimes submerged, is said to be an Anglicized form of Sansk. aranya, a desert or forest (Sat. Review, vol. 53, p. 269).

S.

SABBATICUS, the ancient name of a river in Palestine, probably corrupted from a pre-historic name which appears as Shabatoon on the Egyptian monuments (Brugsch). On the name came to be founded a legendary belief, mentioned by Josephus (Wars of the Jews, vii. v. 1), that this river "on the Sabbath runs fast, and all the week else it standeth still, and runs nought or little" (Maundeville, Early Travels in Palestine, p. 191). See also Purchas, Pilgrimages, Asia, ch. 14, pp. 660, 661; Sir T. Browne, Pseudodoxia Epidemica, VII. xviii. 11. Sometimes the story ran that the river ceased flowing in honour of the Sabbath.

The sand of the river Sabbatajon is holy.

In an hour-glass it runs six days of the week ; but on the seventh it is immovable—Rabbi Eldad.—De Quincey, Works, vol. xiii. p. 287.

Josephus, that learned Jew, tells us of a river in Judea, that runs and moves swiftly all the six days of the week, and stands still and rests upon their Sabbath day.—I. Walton, Compleat Angler, 1653 (p. 15, Murray's repr.).

O! should I blanch the Lewes religious River,

Which every Sabbath dries his Channell over ;
Keeping his Waues from working on that Day

Which God ordain'd a sacred Rest for ay ?

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 52.

Amongst other curious things that are there [at Rome], a sand-glass the sand of which was taken out of the river Sambatyon. The sand runs all the week and stops on the sabbath-day.—M. Edrehi, Historical Account of the Ten Tribes settled beyond the River Sambatyon, p. 18.

SAINTE ANN'S CHURCH, the name of a ruin near Tallaght, co. Dublin, also called Kill St. Ann, and Killmasantun, all which names are corruptions of the old Irish Killmosanctan or Killsantun, the church (cill) of Bishop Sanctan. The true Eng. form therefore would be "Santan's church" (Joyce, ii. 22).

SALMON, a surname, seems to be the same as Samand, a popular form of St. Amand, St. Amandus. It has been Latinized as De Sancto Alemondo.

SALT-FORD, a place-name in Somerset, is a corruption of Sal-ford, i.e. the ford of the willow, A. Sax. salh. Consequent on this mistake a correlative Fresh-ford has arisen hard by (Sayce, Principles of Comp. Philology, p. 362).

SAMOYED, the name given to the tribesmen of Northern Europe, meaning "self-eater," as if to denote cannibals, appears to be a corruption of their proper Russian name "Samodin," which means an individual, one who cannot be mistaken for any other (A. E. Nordenskiöld, Voyage of the Vega, Eng. trans. 1881).

Most probably the old tradition of man-eaters (androphagi) living in the North, which originated with Herodotus, and was afterwards universally adopted in the geographical literature of the Middle Ages, reappears in a Russianised form in the name "Samoyed."—The Standard, Dec. 21, 1881.

SAMPLE, a surname, is a corrupt form of Sampole, St. Paul. See Camden, Britannia, p. 544.

SAMPSON'S SEAL, long the name of a house, was discovered to be in ancient documents originally the priory of Saint Cecile (Yonge, Christian Names, i. 311).

SANDEMAN, a surname, is a corruption of St. Amand.

SANDY ACRE, in Derbyshire, is said to be a corruption of St. Daere (S. De Vere).

SAN ORESTE, the name of a mountain in the Roman Campagna, is an alteration of San Oracte, itself a corruption of the ancient name Soracte misunderstood as S. Oracte.

SAPSFORD, a surname, is a corruption of the original local name Sabridge-worth (Lower).

SARAH ("princess"), sometimes the modern representative of the Irish name Saraid ("excellent").—Miss Yonge, Christian Names, i. 48.

SATTELHOF (Ger.), "Saddle-court," is a corruption of old Ger. Salhof, Salic court (Revue Politique, 2nd S. v. 711).

SAUERLAND, "Sour-land," the name given to the southern part of the old Saxon land, was originally Suder-land, South-land (Andresen).

SAYWELL, a surname, is a corruption of Saville (Charnock).

SCAREDEVIL, } surnames, are said to SKARFIELD, } be corruptions of the French Scardeville (Lower, Eng. Surnames, p. 141).

SCARLETT. The family so called were originally named Carlat or De Carlat, from a town and castle in Aquitaine (Anselme, The Norman People; P. C. Scarlett, Memoir of Lord Abinger, pp. 12, 403). Mr. Scarlett is mistaken when he says, "The word and colour écarlate is probably derived from the name of the family De Carlat, which bore that colour on their coat armour," viz., a lion rampant gules.

SCHAFFGANS. This German surname, with such an unmeaning combination, "sheep-goose," was originally Schaffganz, "Do-all." Cf. the old name Schaffenzitzel, "Do-little" (Andresen).

SCHAFMATTE, "Sheep-meadow," the name of one of the Jura passes, was originally Schachmatte, perhaps the place where the traveller was non-plused or check-mated, but Andresen thinks the word is connected with schächer, robber, as if "plunder-mead."

SCHNEINFLUG, a proper name in German, as if from schein, brightness, and pflug, plough, is for Scheunpflug, i.e. "Shun the plough," originally Scheuchenpflug (Andresen).

SHELLENBERG. This, like the other German surnames, Schellhorn, Schellkopf, are not derived from schelle, a bell, but from schëlch, the elk or giant-deer (Andresen).

SCHLICHTEGROLL, a German surname, as if "smooth rancour," is properly and originally Schlichtkrull, "smooth locks." Compare the synonymous name Schlichthaar, Glatthaar, "smooth hair" (Andresen).

SCHNEEWIND, "Snow-wind," a German proper name, was originally Schneidewind, "Cut-wind," i.e. a vagrant, Fr. Taillevent, the intermediate form being Schniewind (cf. Low Ger. Schnier = Ger. schneider).—Andresen.

SCHWERSTÄDT, "Heavy town," in Thuringia, is from sueigari, a herdsman (Andresen).

SCIENCE, } sometimes found as an SCIENTIA, } old English name, is CYNTHIA, } probably a corruption of the Provençal name Sancie or Sancia, Sp. Sancho, fem. of Sancho, Sanctus
(Yonge, Hist. Christ. Names, i. 369).

SCOTLAND BANK, the name of a place near Dorston in Herefordshire.

The following account of the name may be taken for what it is worth:—

Near Bach Tumulus, which may be connected with that at Newton, is a spot called "Scotland Bank," to which the tradition clings that it got its name from a Scot having been hunted to death by dogs here in the Civil War; but, as the Welsh name for thistles would in sound assimilate to the name Scotland, there is probably no real basis for the tradition, except the general fact that the Scots pillaged and overran the country during the troubles at this period.—Saturday Review, vol. 43, p. 703.

Ysgall, ysgallen, is the Welsh word for a thistle.

SEAFORTH, an Eng. surname, is a perversion of the old name Seuforth, Sigefrid, Ger. Siegfried, "victorious peace" (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 308).

SEELAND has no connexion with the word land, as its old Norse name Soelundr shows, but with Icel. lund, a wood (Andresen).

SEETHING LANE, anciently Sidon Lane (Jesse, London, vol. ii. p. 209).

SELTENREICH, "Seldom-rich," a German personal name, was originally only a nickname, saelden rich, i.e. "rich by luck" (Andresen).

SERENA, a feminine Christian name, is sometimes a Latinization of Siri, which is a shortened form of old Eng. Sired, Swed. Sigrid, Norse Sigríður, "conquering impulse" (Yonge, ii. 310).

SERMON LANE, London, popularly supposed to correspond to Paternoster Row, Amen Corner, and other ecclesiastically named streets hard by, is "corruptly called," says Stow, "for Sheremoniers' lane, for I find it by that name recorded in the 14th of Edward I. . . . It may, therefore, be well supposed that lane to take name of Sheremonyars, such as cut and rounded the plates to be coined or stamped into sterling pence."—Survey of London, 1603, p. 138 (ed. Thoms).

SEXTON, a Munster surname, is an Anglicized form of Ir. O'Sesnan (O'Donovan).

SHANAGOLDEN, a place-name in Limerick, is an Anglicized form of Ir. Sean-gualann, "old shoulder" (i.e. hill).—Joyce, i. 505.

SHANKILL, a common place-name in Ireland, is not, as sometimes understood, for Shank-hill, but for Ir. Seincheall, "Old church" (Joyce, i. 303), as if Lat. senex cella.

SHEEPSCOT RIVER, north of George's Island in the colony of New England, America, is a corruption of its Indian name Sipsa-couta, "flocking of birds." (See Bryant and Gay, Hist. of United States, vol. i. p. 319.)

SHIP STREET, the name of a street in the town of Brecon, is a corruption of its old name Shepe strot, so given in John Speed's plan of Brecknocke, 1610.

Similarly, the place-names Shipley and Shipton stand for Sheep-lea and Sheep-town.

SHOE LANE, off Fleet Street, London, formerly Shew-well-lane, anciently Shotland.

SHOTOVER, in Oxfordshire, it has often been asserted, is a corruption of Château Vert (Taylor, p. 390). This may be doubted, however, as the name is spelt Shothouere in a Patent Roll of 11 Edward I. (1282-3).

Yet old Sir Harry Bath was not forgot,
In the remembrance of whose wondrous shot
The forest by (believe it they that will)
Retains the surname of Shotover still.

G. Wither, Abuses Whipt and Stript, 1613.

SHUFFLEBOTTOM, a surname, is conjectured to have been originally a local name, "Shaw-field-bottom;" a bottom being a low ground or valley (Lower, Eng. Surnames, p. 43).

SIBELL, frequently used in old English as the name of the Queen of Sheba who visited Solomon, as if the same as Sibella, Sibyl, from Lat. sibylla, a dimin. of sibus, sabus, wise, and so a wise woman, a witch; it is really a corruption of Sheba.

þus lay þis tre þare, als I tell,
Vntill þe sage queene, dame sibell,
Come to ierusalem on a 3ere,
Wisdom of salomon to here.

Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 83, l. 752.

Sybille sayth, that the fyrst signe or token of loue is the loke or beholding.—Knight of La Tour-Landry, p. 185 (E.E.T.S.).

The original French MSS. here have "la royne de Sabba," and "la royne
Sebille" (Id. p. 219).

On þis-kin wise þis tre þar lai,
Til after lang and moni dai,
þat sibeles com sa farr fra kyght,
To salamon and spak him wit.

Cursor Mundi, l. 8956.

She was also frequently called Saba, probably understood as meaning sage (Sp. sabio).

Saba was neuer
More couetous of Wisedome, and faire Vertue
Than this pure Soule shall be.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII. v. 4 (1623).

Were she as chaste as was Penelope,
As wise as Saba.

Marlowe, Doctor Faustus, ii. 1.

Diana for her dainty life . . .

Sage Saba for her soberness.

Peele, Sir Clyomon and Sir Clamydes.

See Dyce, Remarks on Collier's and Knight's Shakespeare, p. 144.

SIDWELL, ST., the name of a church in Exeter, is a corruption of St. Satiwola (martyr, ab. 740), to whom it was dedicated.

SIEBENBURGEN, "Seven-towns," in Transylvania, is probably a corruption of Cibinburg (M. Gaidoz).

SIEBENEICH, "Seven-oak," a German place-name, is a corruption of the ancient Sebeniacum (M. Gaidoz).

SIEBENLIST, a German proper-name, as if "Seven-trick," was originally Siebelist, from Siebelis, the gen. of Siebel (Andresen).

SIMPER, a surname, a corruption of St. Pierre. So Simberd, an old form of St. Barbe (St. Barbara).

SIMPLE, as an English surname, also Semple and Sample, are corrupted forms of St. Paul, just as Simper and Semper are from St. Pierre (cf. the word Sampshire), and Sallow from St. Lowe. See Bardsley, Our English Surnames, p. 125.

SINGEWALD, } German surnames
SINGEHOLZ, } which have the appearance of being compounded with singen, to sing, are really from sengen (Eng. singe), and mean "wood-burner." Compare the names Singeisen (like Brenneisen), Sengebusch, Sengelaub, &c. (Andresen).

SION, the name of many townlands in Ireland, has nothing to do with the Scriptural mount, but is an Anglicized form of Ir. sidheán (pronounced sheeawn), a fairy mount, and was sometimes spelt Shiane, Shean, and Shane (Joyce, i. 180).

SIR DANAPAL, an old Eng. orthography of Sardanapalus.

Rd of Thomas Colwell for his lycense for pryntinge of a ballett intituled shewyng the miserable unhappy fall of a veynous Kyng called Syr Danapall. . . . iijj<sup>d</sup>.—Register of the Stationers' Company (Shaks. Soc. vol. i. p. 112).

SIR ROGER DOWLER, the Anglicized form in the newspapers of the day in which appeared the Hindustani name Siraju-d-daula, "The Lamp (or Sun) of the State," belonging to the nawwāb or viceroy of Bengal who took Calcutta in 1756 (D. Forbes, Hindustani Dictionary). Similarly, Sir Roger Dowlas, a name which was given by Foote to one of the characters, an East Indian proprietor, in his play of The Patron, is a sailor's corruption of this Surajah Dowlah. Compare Zachary Macaulay, which has been noted as a sailor's travesty of Zumalacarregui.

SIX HILL, in Leicestershire, otherwise Seg's Hill (Evans, Leicestershire Glossary, p. 46, E.D.S.).

SLOWMAN, a surname, is a corruption of Solomon (Ed. Rev. 101, p. 353).

SMACK COVER, an American place-name, is said to have been originally Chemin Couvert (S. De Vere, English of the New World).

SMITHFIELD, in London, is a corruption of Smethe-field, that is, "smooth-field;" smethe being the old Eng. form of smooth, and akin to smith. Fitzstephen, in his account of London (temp. Hen. II.), says, "There is, without one of the gates, immediately in the suburb, a certain smooth field in name and in reality" (quidam planus campus re et nomine). His subsequent remarks show he is speaking of Smithfield. See Stow, Survey, ed. Thoms, p. 211; Morley's Bartholomew Fair, p. 7, ed. Warne.

SNAILBATCH, a place-name in Shropshire, is equated by I. Taylor with Ger. schnell-bach (Words and Places, p. 481); compare A. Sax. snel, quick, and becc, brook (Somner), Swed. bäck, Icel. bekkr, a rivulet.

SNOWFIELD, or Snaifil, the English name for the highest mountain in the Isle of Man, is said to be a corruption of its Manx name Sniaul, which means "cloud-capt," from niaul, a cloud (Ir. and Gael. neul). See Manx Soc. Dict. s.vv. Bodjal, Niaul, and Sniaul.

SNOW HILL, London, is a corruption of its ancient name Snor Hill.

From the west side of this conduit is the high way, there called Snor hill; it stretcheth out by Oldborne bridge over the oft-named water of Turmill brook, and so up to Oldborne hill.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 114 (ed. Thoms).

SNOWS, THE, a spot on the Ottawa, was originally les Chénauw, "the channels," just as "the Swashings" has been evolved out of les Joachims (Q. Review, vol. 116, p. 27).

SOLOMON, in Denmark, sometimes represents the native name Solmund, i.e. "Sun's protection" (Yonge, History of Christian Names, i. 118).

SOMERSET, in St. Mary Somerset, the name of one of the old city churches in London, now destroyed, was originally Summer's hithe, a wharf adjoining being so called.

Timber hithe or Timber street . . is in the parish of St. Mary Somershithe, as I read in the 56th of Henry III.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 135 (ed. Thoms).

Sommer's Key . . took that name of one Sommer dwelling there.—Id. p. 78.

SOON-HOPE, a glen on the Tweed, is for Swine-hope, like the Scandinavian swine-thorpe in England, hope being Celtic for a valley. Janet's Brae, which it adjoins, is said to be a corruption of Dane's Brae (Veitch, History and Poetry of the Scottish Border, p. 30).

SOWCHICK, Hakluyt's reading of Suktsey or Sukchú, the capital of Sukchur (vid. Yule's Marco Polo, vol. i. p. 196).

SOWTAIL is the form popularly assumed by Sauterelle, the improved name given by enactment of the Kansas Legislature to the Grasshopper Falls (The Standard, Feb. 23, 1882).

SPANCEHILL, a village in co. Clare, is a translation of Mod. Ir. Cnoc-urchoill, "Hill of the Spancel." That word, however, is a popular corruption of old Ir. Cnoc-fuarchoilli, "Hill of the cold wood" (Joyce, ii. 247).

SPARK, as a surname, is a corruption (through the forms Sparh'k, Sparhawk) of Sparrowhawk (Bardsley, Romance of London Directory, p. 137). Compare Snooks for Senoaks, Seven-oaks.

SQUIRREL, the name of a stream at Sandgate, Newcastle, is a corruption of its ancient name the Swerle, i.e. a gliding water (Brockett). On the contrary part, swirrel is the Cleveland word for a squirrel (Atkinson).

ST. AGNES, one of the Scilly Isles, is a corruption of its Norse name Hagenes (Taylor, 391).

STAGS, THE, the name given to tall isolated rocks along the coast of Ireland, e.g. off Ireland's Eye, is a corruption of stacks (Joyce, ii. 59). Compare Shetland stack, an insulated rock of a columnar shape (Edmondston's Glossary; Jamieson), which word is to be connected, not (as generally assumed) with Dan. stak, Icel. stakkr, a stack, but probably with Icel. stakr, single, odd, e.g. stak-steinar, single-stones, stepping stones.

ST. ALBAN'S HEAD is the name generally given to St. Aldhelm's Head in Dorsetshire, although St. Alban had no connexion with it (Farrar, Origin of Language, p. 59).

STANDISH, a place-name in Gloucestershire, is a corruption of its old form Standus, "Stone-house" (Earle).

STAR OF THE SEA, a favourite designation of the Virgin Mary among the Roman Catholics (so Jerome, Isidore, and Bernard), perhaps from a confusion of Maria with the Latin mare, the sea. The Heb. form Maryam ("their contumacy"), Greek Mariam, was frequently understood as mar-yam, "bitterness" (or "myrrh") of the "sea" (yám). (See Pearson, Expos. of the Creed, Art. III.)

STERNBERG, and other German family-names beginning with stern (a star), as Sternbeck, Sternkopf, were originally compounded with ster, a ram (Andresen).

STILLORGAN, an unmusical place-name in co. Dublin, is a corruption of Ir. Tigh-Lorcain, "Lorcan's church" (Joyce, i. 61).

STIMULA, an old Latin corruption of the Greek Semele (Mommsen, Hist. of Rome, i. 235).

ST. JUST, Charles V.'s convent of Yuste, founded on the river of that name, has sometimes improperly been written so (e.g. by Robertson), as if dedicated to St. Just (Yonge, Hist. of Christian Names, i. 398).

ST. LEONARD MILK, the name of one of the old London churches, "so termed of one William Melker, an especial builder thereof."—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 80 (ed. Thoms).

ST. MAGLOIRE, a Celtic saint of the 6th century, was perhaps really a McClure, as his cousin, St. Maclou, who gave his name to St. Malo, was a McLeod (Taylor, 342).

ST. MARGARET'S HOPE, on the coast of Fife, is from Celtic hope, a valley, Icel. hop, a haven (Veitch, History and Poetry of Scottish Border, p. 27).

ST. MICHAEL AT THE QUERNE, one of the old London churches, originally "St. Michael ad Bladum, or at the Corn (corruptly at the Querne) so called, because in place thereof, was sometime a Corn-Market."—Howell, Londinopolis, p. 316 (from Stow, Survey, p. 128, ed. Thoms).

STONE, a surname in Sligo, is a metamorphosis of the old Irish name O'Mulclohy, from a confusion of the latter part, -clohy, with clock, a stone (O'Donovan).

ST. PULCHRE, an old corruption of Sepulchre, i.e. St. Sepulchre church in the Bailey.

And namely in this month of May,
The time I doo remember very well,
For it was just upon the sixteenth day,
And eyght a clock had rong S. Pulchres bell.
F. Thynn, Debate between Pride and Lowliness (ab. 1563), p. 7 (Shaks. Soc.).

To the wardens of St. Pulcres for the loan of certain frames for pageants 5s. [33 Henry 8].—The Losely Manuscripts, p. 71.

The xxij day of Januarij was raynyd [arraigned] . . . Rogars parsun or veker of sant Pulkers and dyvers odur.—Machyn's Diary, 1534-5, p. 80.

The xv day of Desember was cared by the Clarkes of London from Sepulkurs . . . the lord Justes Browne.—Id. 1562, p. 297.

Never did musick please him well,
Except it were St. Pulcher's bell.

Groans from Newgate, 1663.

They, as each torrent drives with rapid force,
From Smithfield to St. Pulcres's shape their course.

Swift, the City Shower.

STRADLING, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Easterling, commonly pronounced Starling, originally a merchant who came out of the east part of Germany (Camden, Remaines, 1637, p. 150).

STREICHHAHN, "Strike-cock," a German surname, is from Streichhan, which is for Streichan, a painter (Andresen).

STROKESTOWN, in Roscommon, is an incorrect rendering of the Irish name

Bel-atha-na-mbuille, "Ford of the strikes (or blows)," bel, a ford, being mistaken for baile, a town (Joyce, i. 36).

STUBBEN-KAMMER, the German name for the two chalk cliffs on the Rügen, which sink perpendicularly into the sea, is a corruption of the Slavonic Stupny-kamen, i.e. the Stair-rock. Compare the rocky "stairs" (Heb. madrégâh) of The Song of Songs, ii. 14, Delitzsch, in loc.

ST. UBES, a sailors' corruption of Setubal. Compare ST. PULCHRE and ST. ORESTE.

SUCOTH-BENOTH, apparently "Tents of daughters," an object of Babylonish worship (2 Kings xvii. 30), is supposed to be a Hebrew corruption of Zirat-banit (or Zir-banit), "the creating lady," the name of the Chaldæan goddess, wife of Merodach; zirat, "lady," being perhaps confounded with zarat, "tents" (Rawlinson, Speaker's Comm. in loco; Bib. Dict. iii. 1388; G. Smith, Chald. Acc. of Genesis, p. 58).

SUGAR, a surname in Ireland, is a corruption of the old Kerry name Sugrue or O'Shugherough (N. and Q. 4th S. ii. 231).

SUMMERFIELD, a surname, is a corruption of Smerville.

SUMMER ISLANDS. The Somers' Islands, or Bermudas, so named formerly in consequence of Sir George Somers, one of the deputy-governors of Virginia, having been shipwrecked there (Taylor, p. 29), are called "the Summer Islands" by Bishop Berkley, apparently with a latent reference to their warm climate, which is, he says, "of one equal tenour almost throughout the whole year, like the latter end of a fine May" (A Proposal for the better supply of Churches in our Foreign Plantations, 1725). Compare MAILAND, p. 542, and GWLAD YR HAF, p. 534.

SURAT, the name of a well-known port in India. Its original name is said to have been Sūraj (Sk. Sūrya), "City of the Sun," which was changed by a Muhammadan ruler into Sūrat, the name of a chapter in the Kurān, as more significant of Muslim domination (Monier Williams, Contemp. Rev. April, 1878, p. 32).

SWEET NOSE, a name for a certain promontory in the Polar Sea on English charts, is a corruption of the Russian name Sviatoi Noss, i.e. "Holy Point" (Dixon, Free Russia, vol. i. p. 2). It is also called Svetinoz in Hakluyt's Voiages, vol. i. p. 279 (fol.).

The great Arctic explorer, Norden-skjöld, observes that many promontories of Northern Russia, which are impassable on account of violent storms and ice, have received the name of Sejatoi Nos, the Holy Cape.

SWEETSIR, a surname, is a corruption of Switzer, Ger. Schweitzer (Charnock).

SYBIL HEAD, in Kerry, N. West of Dingle, is an Anglicized form of Ir. Shibbeal (-Head), i.e. "Isabel's Head," so called in legendary belief from a lady, Isabel Ferriter, having lost her life in a cave under this promontory where she had taken refuge (Joyce, ii. 167).

SYCHAR, the name given by the Jews to "a city of Samaria, which is called [i.e. nicknamed] Sychar" (St. John, iv. 5), that is, "city of lies," Heb. Sheker, with allusion to the false claims and idolatrous worship of the Samaritans, is a corruption of its older name, Heb. Shechem (Greek Sychem or Sichem), "a portion," viz. that given to Joseph by Jacob. See Hengstenberg, Comm. on St. John, i. 214, Eng. trans.; Trench, Studies in the Gospels, p. 87; Smith, Bib. Dict. iii. 1395.

T.

TALK-O'-THE-HILL, a village on a height in the parish of Audeley, Staffordshire, popularly supposed to have got its name from a conference or council of war held there either by Charles I., or, according to others, by Charles Edward in 1745; formerly called Thalk on the Hill (Hist. of House of Stanley, 1793, p. 8). The name of the height was no doubt originally in Celtic Tulach; compare Gaelic tulach, a hill, Irish tulach (tulaigh, tealach), whence the Ir. place-names Tullig, Tallow (Joyce, i. 376); Welsh tulch, a tump or knoll. The addition on-the-hill was made when the meaning of the old British word was forgotten. Similarly

Pendle-Hill (Lancashire) = Welsh pen (hill) + Norse holl (hill) + hill; Brindon Hill (Somerset) = Welsh bryn (hill) + dun (hill) + hill; Mongibello (Etna) = It. monte (mount) + Arab. gebel (mount).—Garnett, Essays, p. 70; I. Taylor, p. 212.

Talk-o'-the-Hill is also the name of a village on an eminence near Newcastle-under-Lyme. See Notes and Queries, 6th S. iv. 521; v. 297.

TALL-BOY, a surname, is the Norman Talboys (in Domesday Book), Fr. Taille-bois, "Cut-wood."

TANKARD, a surname, is a corruption of old Ger. Tanhard, Dankward, i.e. "thank(ful) ward(en)."

TARBOX. It has been conjectured with much plausibility that this curious surname, as well as that of Tarback, was originally the same as Starbuck, which has been identified with Icel. stór-bokki, a "big buck," lordling, mighty overbearing man (Ferguson); cf. stæri bokkar, bigger men. Icel. bokki is used exactly like colloquial English, "old buck," for a good fellow.

TARTARS, a mis-spelling of Tatars, intended to denote the Tartarian or hellish origin of these terrible hordes when they first ravaged Europe. Spenser and others use Tartary for hell (Lat. tartarus).—Trench, Eng. Past and Present, Lect. v. So a modern poet makes a young Pole characterize the Russians as the worse than demon hordes,

Who to the damned would bring fresh curse,
And enter Hell to make it worse.

A. Austin, Leszko the Bastard.

Matt. Paris speaks of them as "the detestable people of Satan, coming forth like demons let loose from Tartarus (hell), so that they were well called Tartars, as if Tartareans" (= Inferni).—Hist. Major, A.D. 1240 (Taylor, 397).

St. Louis, on hearing of their devastations, is said to have exclaimed:—"Vel nos ipsos quos vocamus Tartaros ad suas Tartareas sedes unde exierunt retrudemus, vel ipsi nos omnes ad cælum advehant" (Gibbon).

The Tatars perhaps derived their name from the Chinese ta-ta, a barbarian, imitative of unintelligible speech, like bar-bar-us, one who can only articulate bar-bar-bar, Hot-en-tot, &c.

The stream of writers make it called Tartaria from the river Tartar: But Europe and Asia will by wofull experience justifie the etymologie, if deduced from Tartarus, Hell. For when the spring-tides of this nation overflowed the banks, hell might seem to have broken loose, and to have sent so many devils abroad.—Thos. Fuller, Historie of the Holy Warre, p. 268 (1647).

To the High and Mightie Prince of Darkness, Dousell dell Lucifer, King of Acheron, Styx, and Phlegeton, Duke of Tartary.—Nash, Pierce Penilesse, 1592, p. 13 (Shaks. Soc.).

TEETH, a surname, is said to be a corruption of old Eng. atte Heath (Charnock).

TELEPH, a Scandinavian Christian name, is an assimilation to the Greek Telephus of Tellev, which is a shortened form of Tholleiv, from Thorleif, "Thor's relic" (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 262).

TELFAIR, } surnames, are corruptions
TELFORD, } of Telfer, Fr. Taille-fer,
"Cut-iron" (Charnock). See Ludlow, Epics of M. Ages, ii. 143.

TELLTOWN, the modern name of the old Irish Talten (vid. Fergusson, Rude Stone Monuments, 220). Joyce spells it Teltown, and says it was named Taillten by King Lewy in honour of his foster-mother Taillte (p. 194).

TEMPS, JOHN DU, the name commonly given to a veteran who is said to have died in France in 1128 upwards of 300 years old, is a natural perversion of his real name John d'Estampes or d'Estampes (The Conciliator of Mamasseh Ben Israel, ii. 106, ed. Lindo).

Johannes de Temporibus, John of the Times (so called for the sundrie times or ages he liued) was Shield-Knaue vnto the Emperour Charles the Great.—J. Weever, Funerall Monuments, p. 595, 1631.

TENPENNY, a Connaught surname, is an Anglicized form of Irish O'Tiom-pain (O'Donovan).

TERENCE, TERRY (from Lat. Teren-tius), is sometimes used in Ireland as a supposed equivalent of Turlough (Yonge, Hist. of Christ. Names, i. 324).

TERMAGANT, (1) a supposed Saracenic deity generally paired with Mahound or Mahomet, (2) a ranting character in the old English drama, now used for (3) a scolding virago, is a corruption of old Fr. Tervagant, It. Trivigante, which is perhaps for Tri-vagante or Ter-vagante, intended for Diana, Trivvia, or Hecate, "wandering under three names" (see Nares, and Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction). It was confused perhaps with It. termigisto, "a great boaster, quarreller, killer, . . . the child of the earthquake and of the thunder" (Florio), apparently another form of trismegisto, "thrice greatest." The Icelandic word is Terrogast (Spenser, F. Q. VI. vii. 47; Hamlet, iii. 2).

Kar guerpiszez Mahom, guerpiszez Tervugant.
Vie de St. Auban, l. 819.

[Then renounce Mahomet, renounce Tervugant.]

Blaspheming Trivigant and Mahomet
And all the Gods ador'd in Turks profession.
Harington, Orlando Furioso, xii. 44.

He sayde, Child, hy Termagaunt,
But if thou prike out of myn haunt,
Anon I slee thy stede with mace.

Chaucer, C. Tules, 13742.

Nor fright the reader with the pagan vaunt
Of mighty Mahound and great Termagaunt.
Hall, Satires, l. i. 1. 4.

TERRYLAND, a place-name in Galway, is a corruption of Ir. Tir-oiléin, "district of the island" (Joyce, i. 58).

THADDEUS, meaning "praise" in the Aramean, is in some instances merely a modern transformation of the Erse Tadhg (Teague, or Thady), "a poet" (Miss Yonge, History of Christian Names, vol. i. p. 5).

THANKFUL, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Tankerville (Charnock).

TRÆMIS (Greek), right, law, also the goddess of justice, seems to be an adaptation, under the influence of tithēmi, to set or lay down, of Egyptian Thmei, the goddess of truth and justice. Hence also perhaps Heb. Thummim (see Wilkinson, Ancient Egyptians, vol. i. p. 296, ed. Birch).

THONG CASTLE, near Sittingbourne, owes its name to the Norse word tunga, a tongue of land (Taylor, 393).

THOROUGHGOOD, a surname, is an expansion of Thurgood, originally a Danish name, corresponding to Icel. Thor-gautr.

THREADNEEDLE STREET, London, is a corruption of the older name Three-needle Street.

At a tavern door there is a passage through out of Cornehill into Threeneedle street.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 73 (ed. Thoms).

Then is the free school pertaining to the late dissolved hospital of St. Anthony, . . . and so up to Three needle street.—Id. p. 68.

Three-needle was easily and naturally corrupted into Threed-needle, threed being the old form of thread, as if a twist of three filaments, like Sp. Trença, "a Breed of three Threads, from tres, three"; "Trenea, a cord of three strands" (Stevens, 1706); and tress, orig. a threefold or triple plait, from Greek tricha, triple. See THREED, p. 389, and compare the following:—

They hane as strange a Fence or Hedge for their Gardens and possessions, namely, a threed of Cotton. . . . So much safer is their threed wouen with this imagination, then all our stone-wals.—S. Purchas, Pilgrimages, America, p. 1015.

TIDY, a surname, as well as Tide-mann, is said to be from Netherlandish Thiad, Icel. Thjodh, people (Yonge, ii. 338). Compare Frisian Tide, for Theodoric.

TIPPLE, } surnames, are corrup-TIPPET, } tions of Tibbald, the TWOPOTT, } popular form of Theobald. Mr. M. A. Lower says, "I know a place called Tipple's Green, which in old writings is called "Theobald's Green" (Essays on Eng. Surnames, p. 97).

TOMBS. This funereal surname is for Tomes, i.e. Toms or Tom's (sc. son), just as Timbs is for Tims, i.e. Timothy's son (Bardsley).

TOM KEDGWICK, a name popularly given to a river in New Brunswick, is a corruption of Petamkediak, itself a contraction of the native name Quah-Tah-Wah-Am-Quah-Duavic (Taylor, 391).

TORRE DEL PULCI (Tower of Fleas), a watch-tower in Sicily, standing on the site of what was once a temple del Polluce, of Pollux (Southey, Common Place Book, iv. p. 612).

TOSTINGS' WELL, the popular name of a spring in the western suburbs of the town of Leicester, which might seem to be a relic of the Saxon Tostig, is a corruption of its older name St. Austin's Well into 't Austin's Well, like Tooley, Tamlin's, Tellin's, for St. Olaf, St. Antholin's, St. Helen's. It was called St. Augustine's Well from its vicinity to an Augustine monastery (Choice Notes, Folk Lore, p. 205).

TOUR SANS VENIN, the tower which no poisonous animal can approach, owes its name and legend to a corruption of San Verena or Saint Vrain into san veneno, sans venin (M. Müller, Lectures, 2nd S. p. 368).

TOUSSAINT, "All Saints' (Day)," used as a Fr. Christian name, is said to be in some instances a corruption of Tostain, the name of a knight who fought at Hastings, which is another form of Thurstan; Scand. Thorstein, "Thor's stone," whence also Tunstan and Tun-stall (Yonge, Christian Names, ii. 206). Compare Norweg. Steinthor, Steindor.

Another corruption of Thorstone is, no doubt, Throwstone, who was sheriff of London (d. 1519).—Stow, Survey, p. 117.

TOWERMORE, an Irish place-name (Cork), is an Anglicized form of Ir. Teamhair mor, "the greater elevation" (Joyce, i. 284).

TOOGOOD, a surname; is a corruption of the Walloon family-name Thurgut (S. Smiles, The Huguenots, p. 320, 1880).

TRAILFLAT, in Dumfriesshire, a corruption of the older name Traverflat, from the Celtic treabhar, a naked side (Skene, Celtic Scotland, p. 215).

TREACLE FIELD, the name of a field near the Old Passage on the Severn, is a homely corruption of Thecla's Field, there being a very ancient chapel dedicated to St. Thecla, now in ruins, on an island adjoining (The Guardian, May 28, 1879, p. 752).

TRICALA, "thrice beautiful," a town in Thessaly, is a corruption of its ancient name Tricca. The change by which it has arrived at its present form is a good example of a process which is found more or less in most languages, but nowhere so conspicuously as in modern Greek;—this is, the modification of an old name in such a way as to give it a distinct meaning in the spoken tongue. Thus Scupi is altered into Scopia, "the look-out place;" Navos into Avia, "the worthy;" Peparethos into Piperi, "pepper;" Astypalæa into Astropalæa, "old as the stars;" Crissa into Chryso, "the golden." The Italians when occupying parts of Greece similarly changed Monte Hymetto into Monte Matto, "the mad mountain;" and Evripo or Egripo, the later form of Euripus, into Negroponte, "the black bridge," a name which was subsequently applied to the whole of Eubœa (Tozer, Highlands of Turkey, vol. ii. p. 148).

TRIBE COURT, London, was originally Strype's Court (Taylor, 399).

TRISTRAM, originally the name of a celebrated hero of mediæval romance, anciently spelt Tristrem, Tristan, Trystan, formed from the Cymric name Trwst (Welsh trwst, trystau, noise, din, thunder, trystan, a blusterer), understood as a herald or proclaimer (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 145).

The name was generally associated with Fr. trist, Lat. tristis, sad, and supposed to refer to the melancholy circumstances of the hero's birth. It was probably in allusion to this that Don Quixote accepted the sobriquet of "the Knight of the Rueful Countenance" (Id.). Compare also Welsh trwstan, unlucky. Sterne calls the name "Melancholy dissyllable of sound!" (Tristram Shandy, vol. i. ch. xix.).

Ah, my little sonne, thou hast murdered thy mother. . . . And because I shall die of the birth of thee, I charge thee, gentlewoman, that thou beseech my lord king Meliodas, that when my son shall be christened let him be named Tristram, that is as much to say as sorrowfull birth.—Malory, Historie of K. Arthur, 1634, vol. ii. p. 3 (ed. Wright).

Tristram, or sad face, became identified with the notion of sorrow; so that the child of St. Louis, born while his father was in captivity on the Nile, and his mother in danger at Damietta, was named Jean Tristan.—Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 145.

Tristrem in old romances is uniformly represented as the patron of the chase, and the first who reduced hunting to a science. "Sir Tristrem," or "an old Tristrem," passed into a common proverbial appellation for an expert huntsman (Sir W. Scott, Sir Tristrem, p. 273). This was due, perhaps, to an imagined connexion with trist, an old term of the chase for a station in hunting.

On hunting oft he yede,
To swiche alawe he drew,
Al thus;
More he couthe of veneri,
Than couthe Manerious.
Sir Tristrem, fyfte i. st. xxvii.

The hooke of venery of hawking and hunting is called the hooke of Sir Tristram.—Matory, Hist. of K. Arthur, ii. 6 (ed. Wright).

TROJA, the Greek name of an Egyptian town, is a corrupted form of Turah, ancient Egyptian Tu-roau, "the mountain of the great quarry" (Brugsch, Egypt under the Pharaohs, i. p. 74).

Strabo and Diodorus account for the name by feigning that the town was built by the Trojan captives of Menelaus who came to Egypt after the siege of Troy!

TROUBLEFIELD, a surname, is a corruption of Turberville (Camden, Remaines, 1637, p. 148).

TROYNOVANT, Troynova, or New Troy, a name frequently given to London in the old chronicles and poets, supposed to have been so called because founded by a mythical king Brute from old Troy, is a corruption of Trinovant, or Trinobantum, named from the Trinobantes, one of the native British tribes.

Whenne Brute had thus destroyed the Geaunts . . . he commyng by y<sup>e</sup> Ryuer of Thamsy, for pleasur that he had in that Ryuer, with also the Commodities therunto sdiouynge, beganne there to buylde a Cytie in the remembrance of the Cytie of Troye lately subuerted; and named it Troynouant: whiche is as moche to saye as newe Troye, which name enduryd tyll the commynge of Lud.—Fabyan, Chronicle, cap. iiii. p. 11 (ed. Ellis).

Cæsar nameth the city of Trinobantes, which hath a resemblance with Troynova, or Trinobantum.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 2 (ed. Thoms).

As Jeffreys of Monmoth, the Welche historian, reporteth, Brute . . . builded a cite neare unto a river now called Thames, and named it Troynouant, or Trenouant.—Id. ed. 1598, p. 1.

What famous off-spring of downe raced Troy,
King Brute the Conqueror of Giants fell, Built London first these Mansion Towers of ioy,

As all the spacious world may witness well,
Euen he it was, whose glory more to vaunt,
From burned Troy, sur-named this Troynouant.

R. Johnson, Londons Description, 1607.

Cæsar. You must forgive the towns which did revolt,
Nor seek revenge on Trinobants. . . .
. . . . So let these decrees
Be straight proclaim'd through Troynouant whose tower
Shall be more fairly built at my charge.
J. Fisher, Fumius Troes, act v. sc. 6 (1633).

Even to the beauteous verge of Troynouant,
That decks this Thamesis on either side.
Peele, Descensus Astrææ, p. 543
(ed. Dyce).

Gresham, the heir of golden Gresham's land,
That beautified New Troy with Royal Change
Badge of his honour and magnificence.

Peele, Polyhymnia, p. 570 (ed. Dyce).

With such an one was Thamsis beautifide;
That was to weete the famous Troynouant,
In which her kingdomes throne is chiefly re-siant.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV. 11, xxviii.

These bawdes which doe inhabite Troynouant,
And iet it vp & downe i' th' streetes, afaunt,
In the best fashion, thus vpholde their state.

R. C. The Times' Whistle, p. 86, l. 2727
(E.E.T.S.).

Like Minos, or just judging Rhadamant,
He walkes the darkesome streets of Troynouant.
Taylor the Water-Poet, p. 491.

Doubt not ye the Gods have answer'd Catiuchlanian Trinobant.
Tennyson, Boudicea.

In order to fit in with this theory as to their legendary progenitor the British were sometimes degraded into the Britishh.

The mightie Brute, firste prince of all this lande

Possessed the same and ruled it well in one. . .
But how much British blod hath sithence he spilt

To ioyne againe the sondred vnitie!
T. Nortone, Gorboduc, 1561, p. 109
(Shaks. Soc. ed.).

Out of this realme to rase the British Line.
Id. p. 123.

TROY TOWN, the name of a hamlet in Dorsetshire between Dorchester and Blandford, suggestive of Brute and his Trojan colony, appears to be a half-translation, half-perversion, of Welsh caer-troi, a tortuous city (or wall), a labyrinth, from troi, to turn; cf. troad and troiad, a turning, tro, a turn.

Such mazes or labyrinths were constructed by the old inhabitants of Britain with banks of turf, of which remains have been found in different parts of the kingdom. They are common in Wales, where they are called Caertroi, that is, turning towns.—Murray's Handbook of Dorset, &c. p. 110.

TRUEFIT, a surname, seems to be identical with Danish Truvid, from Thorvid, "Thor's wood" (Yonge, Christ. Names, ii. 206).

TRUEMAN, a surname, is said to be a corruption of the Cornish Tremaine (Charnock).

TULLYLAND, a place-name in Cork, is a corruption of Ir. Tulaigh-Eileain, "Helena's Hill" (Joyce, i. 58).

TÜRKHEIM. The German town so named has no connexion with the Turks, but rather with Thüringern, its old name being Thuringoheim (Andresen).

TURNBULL ST., in London, is a frequent old corruption of Turnmill St., originally named from the "Turnmill or Tremill brook, for that divers mills were erected upon it" (Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 6, ed. Thoms). Other old forms of the name are Trylmyl St., Trunball St., Turnball St., Trillmelle St. It is a by-word in the old drama as a resort of profligates (Timbs, London and Westminster, i. 266 seq.; Stanley, Memoirs of Westminster Abbey, p. 6).

Our Turnbull Street poor bawds to these are base.

Taylor the Water-Poet, A Bawd.

Turnball, the Bankside, or the Minorities.

Davenport, New Trick to Cheat the Devil.

Besides new-years capons, the lordship of Turnbull.

Randolph, Works, p. 247 (ed. Hazlitt).

TURNER, a surname, is in some instances a corruption of the foreign name Tolner (Ed. Rev. vol. 101, p. 382).

TWADDLE, an Irish surname common in the co. Clare, is a corruption of Dowdale (N. and Q. 4th S. ii. 231).

TWOPENNY. The surname so called is said to be a corruption of the Flemish name Tupigny.

U.

UGLY PIER, THE, a place in Guernsey, is a corruption of La Hougue-à-la-Perre (N. and Q. 5th S. ii. p. 90).

UNTER SACHSENHAUSEN, "Beneath the Saxon sturgeon," the name of a street in Cologne, was originally Unter

Sechzehn Häusern, "Beneath the sixteen houses." For the expression compare Unter Seidemacher, &c., Lat. intersicarios (Andresen).

V.

VALLAIS, a corruption of Wallis, the old name of a canton in Switzerland, identical with Welsh, Wälsch, "foreign," so called from being inhabited chiefly by Italian foreigners (Tozer, Highlands of Turkey, vol. ii. p. 170).

VARLINGACESTIR, "Camp of the Warlings," was an Anglo-Saxon corruption of the Roman Verolamium through the form Varlama-cestir (Beda).

VIELFRASS, a "glutton," used by the German missionaries to Greenland for a pigeon, as if the voracious bird, is a corruption of the Norwegian fjällfrass, "inhabitant of the rocks" (Ristelhuber, in Revue Polit. et Littéraire, 2nd S. v. 711).

VIELLMANN'S LUST, "many men's delight," the name of a German teagarden, or lust-garten, was originally (it is said) Philomeles Lust (Fürstmann in Taylor, 399).

VINIPÔPEL, an old corruption in German of Philippopol, Philippopolis.

VISION, MONASTÈRE DE LA, is the name given by the traveller Poncet to the monastery of Bisan in Abyssinia (see Bruce, ed. Panckouke, i. 509; ii. 160).

VOLATERRÆ, a Latinized form of the name of the Etruscan town Velathri, assimilating it to terra (Dennis, Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. ii. p. 139).

VULGAR, a surname, is a corruption of Wulgar or Wulfgar (Charnock).

W.

WARMLOW, a place in Worcestershire, was anciently Wærmundes hlæw, the hill of one Wærmund (Taylor, 313).

WATERFORD, in Ireland (anciently Vadrefjord), is a corruption of the Norse Vedra-fiordr, the firth of Rams (or wethers).—Taylor, 390.

WAYLAND-SMITH, the name of a place in Berkshire, anciently Welandes Smidde, "Wayland's forge, or smithy," so called after A. Sax. Weland; Ger. Wieland, Icel. Völundr, the mythical blacksmith or Vulcan of the northern mythology (akin apparently to Icel. vél, craft, wile, and so an artificer). Cf. Icel. Völundar-hús (Wayland's house), a labyrinth. See Scott, Kenilworth, ch. xiii.

WEARY-ALL HILL, at Glastonbury, seems to be a popular racking of the more ancient name Werall or Werrall, which is probably the same word as the Wirhael of Chester.

Three hawthornes also, that groweth in werall, Do burge and bere grene leaues at Christmas.

Life of Joseph of Armathia, l. 386 (1520, ed. Pynson).

Collinson says that Weary-all Hill was so called in legendary belief from St. Joseph and his companions sitting down there weary with their journey; he also mentions Weriel Park as belonging to Glastonbury Abbey (Hist. of Somerset, ii. 265, in Brand, Pop. Antiq. iii. 378).

& when she was taken with guile, he fled from that perill
west into Worrall (Cot. MS. Wyrrhale).
Percy Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 454, l. 1074.

WEISENAU, near Mayence, as if from weise, a meadow, is said to be corrupted from Lat. vicus novus (Andresen).

WELFARE, a surname, is apparently a corruption of Wolfer, A. Sax. Vulfere, Icel. Ulfar (Yonge, Christian Names, ii. 269).

WHITBREAD, a surname, is said to be a corruption of the old Eng. name Whitberht (Ferguson, 90).

WIESENFELD. } These places have WIESENSTEIG. } no connexion with WIESENTHAU. } wiese, a meadow, but got their names from the wisent, or buffalo, which roamed in the old German forests (Andresen).

WILBERFORCE, the surname, is said to be corrupted from Wilburg foss.

WILBRAHAM, a surname, is an assimilation to Abraham of the original local name Wilburgham (Lower).

WILDGOOSE, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Wilgoss or Wilgis (Charnock).

WILDSCHÖNAU, the name of a valley in N. Tirol, apparently descriptive of its "wild" and "beautiful" scenery, is said to be properly and locally pronounced Wiltshchnau, being derived from wiltshchen, to flow, and au, water (Monthly Packet, N. Ser. vii. 495).

WILLAMISE, a surname at Oxford, is a corruption of the Huguenot family-name Villebois (S. Smiles, The Huguenots, p. 323, 1880).

WILLOUGHBY. This very English-looking name for a place south of Calcutta, recorded in old maps and gazettes, is a corruption of the native name Uthbaria, so given in Hunter's Imperial Gazetteer of India (Sat. Review, vol. 53, p. 184).

WINE ST., in Bristol, was originally Wynche Street, so called from the collistrigium or instrument of torture formerly stood there (Calendar of Alhallowen, Brystowe, p. 64).

WINIFRED, or Winifrid, a Christian name, is an Anglicized form of Gwenfrewi, "white stream," the name of a Welsh saint, assimilated to A. Sax. Winfrith, "friend of peace" (Yonge, Christian Names, ii. 134).

WINKEL (corner, nook), in Lange Winkel, the name of a place on the Rhine, is a corruption of Weinzell, the Vini cella of the Romans (H. G. Fearnside, Beauties of the Rhine, p. 184).

WINTERTHUR, the name of a small town in Switzerland, as if "Winter-door," is a Germanized form of the Celtic Vitodurum (Förstemann).

WOHLFAHRT, "Welfare," as a German proper-name, is a corruption of Wolfhart (Andresen).

WOMENSWOLD, the popular pronunciation of the place-name Wilmingswold. So Simpson of Selmeston (Sussex); Wedgefield of Wedmesfield; Nursling of Nutshalling (see N. and Q. 5th S. ii. 94, 330).

WOODHOUSE, a family-name of East Anglia, is a corruption of the old Eng. word woodwoose, or wodewose (= pilosus).—Wycliffe, Isaiah xxxiv. 14 (homines sylvestres, Vulg.); cf. Is. xiii. 21, Jer. l. 39.

"Wodewese (woodwose), silvanus, satirus."—Prompt. Parvulorum, c. 1440, from A. Sax. wode, wood, and wesan, to be; "a man of the woods."

WOOLFORD, } surnames, are supposed WOOLEN, } to be corruptions of the
A. Sax. names Wulfweard and Wulf-hunn (Ferguson, 140).

WOOL LAVINGTON, in Sussex, is Wulf-láfing-tún, Wulflaf's property, as distinguished from Bar Lavington, i.e. Beórlafing-tún, Beorlaf's property (Kemble, in Philolog. Soc. Proc. iv. p. 4).

WOOLSTONE, a surname, is an instance of a wolf masquerading in sheep's clothing, being a disguised form of A. Sax. Wulfstein, "Wolf-stone," better known as St. Wulstan (Yonge, *Christ.
Names*, ii. 269). Compare Icel. name
Stein-ólfr, Norweg. Steinulf.

WOOLWICH, on the Thames, is a corruption of the ancient name Hulviz (in Domesday), i.e. "hill reach," of Norse origin (Taylor, 164).

WORMWOOD, a surname, is said to be a corruption of Ormond (Camden, Re-maines, 1637, p. 122).

WORMWOOD GATE, also called the "Earl's Gate," and "Ormond's Gate,"
Dublin, is a corruption of Gormond Gate (Gilbert, History of Dublin, vol. i.
p. 344).

WRATH, CAPE, on N. coast of Scotland, so called as if beaten by wrathful storms, was originally Cape Hwarf, a Norse name indicating a point where the land trends in a new direction (Taylor, 390). Cf. A. Sax. hwearf, a turning, a bank or shore, our "wharf."

WRENSIDE, in the Lake District, derives its name, not from the bird, but from Hrani, an Icelandic Viking, whence also Rainsbarrow (Taylor, 174).

WRYNOSE, a place-name on the borders of Westmoreland and Cumberland, is a corruption of the older name *Warine
Hause* (N. and Q. 4th S. i. 555).

Z.

ZERNEBOCK, the Teutonic corruption of Zernibog, "the Black God," the evil principle of the ancient Slavonians, which was supposed to be compounded of man and goat (bock).—C. W. King,
Handbook of Engraved Gems, p. 140.

WORDS CORRUPTED BY COALESCENCE OF THE ARTICLE WITH THE SUBSTANTIVE.

A.

A—AN—THE. In popular speech the article frequently coalesces so closely with its substantive, especially when it begins with a vowel, that the two virtually become one word, and it sometimes happens, when the two are sundered again in being committed to writing, that a fragment of the agglutinated article adheres to the substantive, or a portion of the substantive is carried away by the article. This especially applies to unusual or learned words. Speak to a rustic of an amethyst, an anagram, an epic, an oxytone, and it is an even chance whether he does not, on being required, write those words a namethyst, a nanagram, a nepic, a noxytone. It is equally doubtful whether, on the other hand, a narcotic, a narwhal, a nimbus, a nuncio, will not be to him an arcotic, an arwhal, an imbus, an uncio. Similarly aluminum, affray, amalgam, alarum, apothecary, academy, sound to uneducated ears undistinguishable from a luminum, a fray, a malgam, a larum, a pothecary, a cademy.

Many of these popular errors are now stereotyped in the language. Everybody writes a newt instead of an ewt, which was originally the correct form; a nickname, instead of an ekename; and again, by the opposite mistake, an adder instead of a nadder, an auger instead of a nauger, an apron instead of a napron, an orange instead of a norange, an umpire instead of a numpire.

Similar coalitions of the article are observable in French and other languages.

In old texts and MSS. these phenomena are of frequent occurrence. For example, Palsgrave (1530) has: "Hec insula, a nylle; hec acra, a nalyre; hic remus, a nore; hec ancora, a nankyre." In Wright's Vocabularies we find: "He can romy as a nasse;" "he can lowe as a noxe" (p. 151); "hoc pollicium, a nynche, hic oculus, a nie" (p. 206); "hec auris, a nere; hoc ostrium, a nostyre" (p. 179); "hec simea, a nape; hec aquila, a neggle; hic lutricius, a notyre" (p. 220); anguilla, a neele.

In William of Palerne we find no nei3, no negg, for non ei3, none egg; thi narmes for thine armes; a noyement for an oynement.

In the Three Metrical Romances (Camden Soc.) we meet a nayre = an heir, a nanlas = an anlas, a noke = an oak.

In the Holderness dialect t', the definite article, commonly becomes blended with the word it accompanies. And so with the indefinite article; not only such forms as "a nawd man" (an old man) may be heard, but even occasionally "two nawd men" (Holderness Glossary, Eng. Dialect Soc. p. 5). In infantile speech the same is observable. A child informed that he might have an egg for breakfast, begs that he may have "two neggs." Compare the following:—The tother was 3alowere thene the 3olke of a naye.

Morte Arthure, l. 3283 (E.E.T.S.).

[i. e. an aye, an egg.]

A napsy mow men sayne he makes.
The Boke of Cwrtasye (in Way, Prompt.
Parv. p. 346).

[i.e. an ape's mouth.]

To here of Wisdome thi neres be halfe defe,
Like a Nasse that lysteth upon an Harpe.
Hermes Bird (Ashmole, Theatrum Chemicum,
p. 222).

The 15th century MS. (Ashmole, 48) has A narrowe, A narchan, A nowar, for An archer, arrow, hour.

"He set a napyll upon a yron yarde"
(hence the name of Naples!).—Thoms,
Early Prose Romances, ii. 49. On the other hand, egromancy (for negromancy) occurs Id. p. 52.

A nother way.—Maundevice, Voiage, p. 126
(ed. Halliwell).

He sente to hem a nother seruaunt.—Wy- cliffe, Mark xii. 4.

Bake hem in a novyn.—MS. in Way,
Prompt. Parv.

Whenne thys werre ys at A nende.

Sege of Rone, Egerton MS. (Percy Folio MS.
iii. p. xliv.).

"What 'ave you got there?" asked Mac.
"A nerring!" said Benny.—Froggy's Little
Brother, p. 62.

It was the boast of an Oxford guide that he "could do the alls, collidges, and principal hedifices in a nour and a naff" (Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green, pt. i. ch. v.).

Coalitions of this description are not uncommon in the Manx dialect of the Keltic. Beside the borrowed words
naim, an uncle, for yn eam, old Eng.
an eam; naunt, an aunt; neeinfan, an infant, we find nastee, a gift, for yn
astee; neeam, the young of birds, for yn eean; Nearin, Ireland, for yn Erin;
Niar, the East, for yn ar; noash, a custom, for yn oash; noi, against, for yn
cai, the front; nest, the moon, for yn eayst; and, on the other hand, yn edd, a nest (as if an est), for yn nedd (Gaelic nead); yn eear, the West, for yn neear;
but nairin, hell, for yn iurin.

Compare in Italian aspo and naspo, abisso and nabisso, astro and nastro, in- ferno and ninferno, astrico and lustrico; Catalon. ansa and nansa; old Span.
leste, for l'este, the East (Minsheu);
Wall. égrimancien, from nécromancien (Diez).

The name of the village of Nezero in Northern Greece is derived from ezero, the Bulgarian word for a lake, near which it is situated, together with the prefix n, which is the termination of the accusative case of the Greek article attached to the noun. Similar instances are found in Nisvoro, the modern form of the ancient Isboros, Negropont, from Egripo, the corruption of Euripus, the full form having been ἐς τὸν Ἐξερὸν, ἐς

τὸν Ἰσβερον, &c.; Stanco, ἐς τὴν Κῶ, Stali- mene, ἐς τὴν Λήμνον, the modern names of Lemnos and Cos.

Again, in plural names, the s of the article becomes prefixed, as in Satinas, formerly the ordinary name for Athens,
i.e. ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας, while here again the full form may be seen in σοὺς στίλους, the peasant's name for the remains of the Temple at Bassæ, in Arcadia, i.e.
The Pillars (Tozer, Researches in the Highlands of Turkey, vol. ii. p. 42).

It is owing to a similar cause, probably, that in modern Etruria many ancient place-names beginning with a vowel now are written with an initial n—e.g. Norchia, anciently Orchia, Hor- chia, and Orcle, so Nannius for Annius, Nanna for Anna (Dennis, Cities and
Cemeteries of Etruria, vol. i. p. 204, ed.
1878).

§ The "natural vowel" ú, as in "thé book," pronounced very quick (Glossic
dhú), may be e, a, or u in print (Dr.
J. A. H. Murray, Grammar of W. Somers- set, E.D.S.); and so any short vowel at the beginning of a word might come to be mistaken for the indefinite article á (e.g. old Eng. ydropsy for a dropsy, isciatica for a sciatica), or to be merged in the definite article thé which preceded it (e.g. old Eng. the esample, thesample,
the sample).

Thus old Scotch bism, bysyme occur in G. Douglas for abysm, Fr. abysme.

The Duchess of Norfolk, writing to Pepys in 1681, speaks of "ten or a leven peses" of Scotch plaid (Pepys' Correspondence).

"Your papa ain't a 'Piscopal," says
a New England speaker in Mrs. Stowe's Poganuc People, "he don't have a 'lumination in his meeting-house."
Compare old Fr. li vesque for li évesques,
It. vescovo, from episcopus.

Barouns and Burgeis and Bonde-men also I sau3 in pat Semble as 3e schul heren her-aftur.

Vision of P. Plowman, A. Prol. l. 97.

A semblee of Peple.—Maundevice, Voiage and Travaile, p. 3 (ed. Halliwell).

Ruspiceris [i.e. aruspices] are þoo þat loken to horis or tymis.—Apology for Lollards, p. 95.

The Sun and the Mune was in the clips bewixt nin and ten in the morning and was darkish abut three quarters of a naur.—Register of St. Andrew's, Newcastle, Sept. 13, 1699 (Burns, Parish Registers, p. 192).

To the same cause perhaps is due the loss of an initial vowel in many mod. Greek words, e.g. τὸ σπρίδι, the oyster, for οἰσπρίδιον; τὸ φίδι, the snake, for ὀφίδιον; τὸ λάδι, the oil, for ἐλάδιον; ἡ γίδα, the goat, for αἰγίδιον; ξίδι, vinegar, for ὀξύδιον; σπιτι, house, for ὀσπιτιον, Lat. hospitium (compare old Eng. spital for hospital). Compare Italian nemico, pitaffio, ragno, vangelo, vena, oats (Florio), for inamico, epitaffio, aragno, evangelo, avena.

§ The agglutination of the definite article, the, le, with its substantive, was so complete in old English and old French that the two were generally written and printed as one word. For example, in a letter of "Edward par la grace de dieu Roi Dengleterre Seigneur Dirlande et Ducs Daquitaine" to "le Priour de Labbaye de Westmoster," directed against vagabond monks, and dated "le xxij jour de May lan de nostre regne tierz," we find lestat (= l'état) and leyde (= la aide).—Quoted in Stanley, Memoirs of Westminster Abbey, p. 537.

The title of a book published about 1508 is—

Les présentes Heures à l'usage de Rouan . . . auec . . . les figures de lapocalipse, . . . et aultres hystoires faictes à lantique (in Nisard, Hist. des Livres Populaires, ii. 290).

In the Oregon jargon spoken along the Columbia River, lamestin, medicine, is from Fr. la médecine; lalan, tongue, for la langue; litan, teeth, for les dents; lakiles, for la grasse; lawie for la vieille (Wilson, Prehistoric Man, vol. ii. pp. 587, 588).

Caxton has thincarnacion (Polychronicon, 1482, p. 1); thapostles (Id.); thende, thabbay (Godfrey of Boloyne, last page); thangel, theadvent, "thabyte of a monk," thentent, therthe, theyphanye, thistorie, thonour, thospytal, &c.

Talde luzhe, th' old law, occurs in Orminn, about 1200, vol. ii. p. 280; "towd hen." the old hen, was a popular name for the eagle of the lectern in Chester Cathedral.

Nowe let the women also praye after thex-ample of the men.—N. Udall, Trans. Paraph. of Erasmus, 1549.

"You would have vs uppon thipp, would you?" [i.e. the hip].—Sir Thomas More, MS. Harl. 7368, fol. 8. Tusser (1580) has thencrease for the encrase, thend for the end.

Chaucer speaks of "Daniel in thorrible cave" (Man of Lawes Tale, l. 4893, ed. Wright), which recalls the song of "a norrible tale," popular some twenty years ago.

The Cumberland folk say "Twether an' twasps hes spoilt o' *trasp*s" [the weather and the wasps have spoiled all the rasps].—Dickinson, Glossary, p. vi.

The natives of the Teme Valley, Herefordshire, commonly pronounce the as thun. Thus "thun Orchard," "thun Ash," "thun Oak," "thun Hole," farms which have since become "the Norchard," "the Nash," "the Noke," and "the Knoll" farms (N. and Q. 5th S. ii. 197).

So "Atten ale."—Vision concerning Piers the Plowman, Pass I. l. 43, Text C. (in some MSS. atte nale, and at the nale occurs in Chaucer, Cant. Tales, 6931), is to be analyzed into at, ten (or then), the dative of the article, and ale (= ale-house). So at the nende is for at then end; and compare surnames like Attenborough; atte noke, atte norchard, are also found for at then oke, at then orcharde.

A similar corruption is the tone, the tother, from that one, that other, where t is the sign of the neuter gender, as in tha-t, i-t (cf. Lat. d in i-d, quo-d, illu-d).—Skeat, Notes to Piers the Plowman, p. 8, and p. 118.

§ The initial letter changes in Celtic words, it has been pointed out by Lord Strangford (Letters and Papers, p. 182), were merely phonetic originally, and now have been raised to a grammatical value by the art of writing, which fixed them. That acute philologist remarks: "An Irish 'eclipse' is merely this: suppose modern Greek unwritten, and taken down for the first time as Irish was once taken down, τὸν τόπον, τὴν πόλιν, τὸν δόρυ, τὴν βόλιν, or τὸ δόρυ, τὴν βόλιν, if you choose, for no Greek conceives the alternatives to be other than the same thing. Literary fashion may separate them, when first written, as to ndopo, ti mboli; and grammarians, improving on it, and seeking to show the original letter and the pronunciation at once, may write to d-topo and ti b-poli; thus people would ultimately cease to recognize the d and b as part of the article. This is a pure, genuine Irish eclipse. So, in Welsh, you may call pen, a head, fy mhen, my head, grammatical permutation; but it is really merely phonetic in origin, min or mim mhen for min pen (meina penna); which min, I believe, is actually found."

Lord Strangford remarks that in Albanian imiri, tmirit, tamirana, &c., are inflectional forms of the word mir, good, and that these initial changes cannot possibly be other than "the stiffened dead remains of a prefixed article, once a separate word" (Letters and Papers, p. 145).

§ A curious instance of two words, when pronounced, running together and leading to a misunderstanding, occurred a few years ago in the House of Commons. A member, in supporting the Royal Titles Bill, spoke of "this legitimate and reasonable proposal." The Speaker, catching the words as "legitimate an' dreasonable," and thinking, with Soto in the play (Women Pleas'd, iv. 1)—

There's a strange parlous T before the reason,
A very tall T, which makes the word high-treason,— promptly called the honourable member to order for using the word "treasonable." The member explained, amidst loud cheers, that the word he used was "reasonable." In fact, he was unconsciously a victim to agglutination. The following miscellaneous instances of the influence of popular pronunciation upon words in this way may be noted:—

"The werlde es thy nowene" (Morte Arthure, l. 1806), i.e. The world is thine own.

"Wel bruc þu þin euening" (King Horn, l. 206), a miswriting for þi neuening, "Enjoy well thy naming" (as if in Mod. Eng. "thine aming").

We even find in Wycliffe, "Prestis seien nyse masse" (Unprinted Works, E.E.T.S. p. 336), "Priests say high mass," where the n of the previous word has got attached to nyse.

In an inventory of 1519 occurs "fuschan in appules" for "fustian o' Naples" (Peacock, Church Furniture, p. 200).

The colloquial French phrase, être en age, to be in a great perspiration, stands for être en nage, as if "to be in a swim" (Larchey, Scheler).

In the Creole patois, similarly, zanneau is for des anneaux; zêbe for des herbes; zoreté for des oreilles; divin, wine, for du vin (J. J. Thomas, Creole Grammar).

Tawdry, originally gaudy like the goods sold at St. Audry's fair, has appropriated the t of Saint, as in the old church- and street-names, Tabb's (St. Ebb's), Tann's, (St. Ann's), Tantolin's (St. Antholin's), Tooley (St. Olave).

So to before the infinitive is in old English often agglutinated.

He ne myghte out of his herte throwe
This merueillous desyr, his wyf tassaye, Needles, god wot, he thoughte hir for taffraye.

Chaucer, Clerkes Tale, l. 450.

In Vision of P. Plowman, A. ix. 20, one MS. has a tom for at hom, at home.

In the same poem we read of

A Castel of Kuynde I-mad · of fouré skynnes þinges.

Pass. X. l. 2 (MS. H. 2).

i.e. fouré kynnes, of four kinds of things.

The surname Nolt was originally atten-holt, At the wood, like Atwood, Atwell, Attenborough; Nash for atten-ash, Nalder for atten-alder; so Tash from "at th'Ash," Thynne from "at th'Inne" (Bardsley, Romance of the London Directory, p. 45).

The plain of Nasor (1 Maccabees xi. 67) is a mistake for Asor (= Hazor), due to the final n of the preceding word in the Greek (LXX.) version, "τὸ πεδίον Νασώρ," having become attached to it (Bib. Dict. ii. 466). Similarly Eusebius has ἔστω Ὀσάθ for ἔστω Νοσάθ, "it is Naarath" (Id. p. 458).

Lough Corrib, in Ireland, would be more correctly Loch Orrrib, but the two words got glued together, and, when parted, one carried away a portion of the other (Joyce, i. 158).

To trickle, Prof. Skeat holds, was once to strickle, O. Eng. strikelen (from O. E. striken, to flow), but the word being almost always used in the collocation "tears strickle," "teres strikelen," the initial s was merged in the preceding word and finally lost.

ABACOT, a word given in almost every Eng. dictionary, from Phillips downwards, with the meaning, "a cap of estate in the form of two crowns worn by the kings of England," and so in Spelman, Glossarium, 1664, and Baker, Chronicle, 1641, who apparently took it from Holinshed (ed. A. Fleming), 1587. Dr. J. A. H. Murray has shown that this abacot is a corruption (probably under the influence of Lat. abacus, Fr. abaque) of an older form abococket (in Hall, 1550), which again is merely a bococket, run together into one word, or rather a bycocket or bycocket (Fabyan, Chron. 1494, p. 654). Old Eng. bycocket is from old Fr. bicoquet, biquoquet, a military cap, a diminutive of old Fr. bicoque. Compare Sp. bicoquin, a cap with two points (The Athenæum, Feb. 4, 1882, p. 157). These latter words are perhaps akin to cock, a projection; then abacot would be just "a bi-cocked" (hat).

ABÉE (Fr.), the aperture through which the water flows that puts a mill in motion, has originated in la bée, the opening (from béer, to be open), being mistaken for l'abée (Scheler). Compare Prov. Fr. (Berry) "mettre à la coi" (in shelter) for à l'acoie, or à l'écoi (Littré, Hist. de la Langue Française, i. 127).

ABROSTINO (It.), a sort of wild grape, is for labrostino, from Lat. labruscum (Diez), the l being dropped as if belonging to the article.

ADDER stands for a nadder (Scot. a nether), misunderstood as an adder, old Eng. naddere, neddere, A. Sax. nædre, Icel. naðr, Goth. nadr's, probably derived from Lat. natriæ (swimmer), a water-snake, whence also Ir. nathair, a snake, Welsh nadr (see W. Stokes, Irish Glosses, p. 46). Benfey connects the word with Sansk. root snâ, to bathe, which is, indeed, common to Lat. nare, to swim, and natriæ.

Neddyr, or eddyr. Serpens. — Prompt. Parv.

Robert of Gloucester says of Ireland:

Nedres ny oþer wormes ne mow þer be no3t.—Chronicle, p. 43.

AGOSTA, or aragosta, a name in the Adriatic for the langouste, or cray-fish (Palinurus vulgaris), the initial l being mistaken for the article. See LONG-OYSTER, p. 222.

ALBATROS, formerly spelt alcatros, Sp. alcatraz, a sea-bird, originally the pelican, in the sense of a "water-carrier," stands for Arab. al-qâdûs, "the-watervessel," from (Arab.) al, the, + (Greek) kâdos, a water-vessel (Devic).

ALCOVE, Fr. alcove, Sp. alcoba, Portg. alcova, from Arab. al-qobba, "the-closet." Etymologically, therefore, if we say "the alcove," the expression is tautological; just as "an alkali" (Arab. al-gâlî) is equivalent to "an the-kali," and "the Alcoran" (Arab. al-qorân, "the reading") is "the the-Coran."

Similar formations involving the Arabic article al are ALCHEMY, from Arab. al-kîmiâ; ALCOHOL, from Arab. al-kohl; ALEMBIC, from Arab. al-anbîk; ALGEBRA, from Arab. al-jabr; ALMANACK, apparently from Arab. al-manakh.

The Arabic article al is latent in Sp. achaque, illness; acibar, aloe-tree; azofar, brass; azogue, quicksilver; azucena, lily. It appears more plainly in Sp. alacran, scorpion; alarde, a review; albornoz, mantle; alboroto, riot; alcabala, alcaide, &c.

ALLIGATOR contains a coalescent article, formerly spelt alagartoe, standing for Sp. el lagarto, "the lizard."

ALUMELLE (Fr.), old Fr. alemelle, owe their initial a to the article, and should properly be la lumelle, la lemelle (misunderstood as l'alemelle), from Lat. lamella, i.e. laminula, a dimin. of lamina (Scheler). See OMELET below.

AMMUNITION, an Eng. form of old Fr. amunition, which seems to be due to a popular misunderstanding of la munition as l'amunition (Skeat, Etym. Dict. p. 777).

AMPROIE (Prov. Fr. Wallon), a lamprey, is from Fr. lamproie (understood as l'amproie), Sp. and Portg. lamprea, It. lampreda, Lat. lampetra (Littré).

ANCESPADE, an old name for the petty officer called a lance-corporal, is another form of lancespade (also used), misunderstood as l'ancespade, Fr. lance-pessade (Cotgrave), It. lancia spezzata (from spezzare, to break), "a Lance-spezzado, a demie-lance, a light-horseman."—Florio.

ANGOUSTE, an old French word for a locust or grass-hopper (Cotgrave), is properly langouste. Compare AGOSTA.

Locust, Langouste, haneton, angouste.—Sherwood, Eng.-French Dict. 1660.

ANTILLE, a Wallon word for a freckle or red spot, is from Fr. lentille (Lat. lenticula), evidently mistaken as l'entille.

ANVEYERG, the name of a parish in Monaghan, is Ir. An-bheith-dhearg, i.e. "The-red-birch" (Joyce, i. 23).

APRICOT, Fr. abricot, Portg. albricoque, contain the Arab. article al, being from Arab. al-barqûq, i.e. al, the, + Lat. præcoqua, early ripe (fruit).

APRON is a corrupt form, originating in a napron being mistaken for an apron, exactly as if we used an apkin for a napkin. Napron or naprun is the form found in prov. and old English, from old Fr. naperon (or napperon), a large cloth, derived from old Fr. nape, a cloth (Mod. Fr. nappe), which word is a corruption of Lat. mappa.

Barncloth or naprun, Limas.—Prompt. Parv.

[He] put before his lap a napron white.

Spenser, F. Queene, V. v. 20.

Nappern, an apron.—Lancashire Glossary, E. D. S. p. 196.

Billmen in almaine rivets, and apernes of mail in great numbers.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 39 (ed. Thoms).

For a similar mistake compare:—

Clarevastre, An Ash Cloth, Nash-cloth, or Buckcloth.—Cotgrave.

ARGOT, the French word for slang, cant, was probably at first un nargot, denoting (1) a thief or robber, (2) thieves' language. Compare narguois, apparently for narguois [connected with narguer, to mock or sneer, nargues, a term of contempt, "Tush! pish!" (Cotgrave), from Lat. naricare, to turn up the nose (nares) at, to sneer], defined by Cotgrave as "An impostor, Counterfeit Rogue, . . . also the gibbridge or barbarous language used among them."

ARIGOT, which Cotgrave gives as an old Fr. word for the musical instrument called a recorder, is evidently the same word as larigau (for laringau, from larynx, the throat), "The head of the windpipe or throat, . . . the instrument of receiving and letting out breath; also a Flute or Pipe is called so by the clowns in some parts of France" (Id.).

ATOMY, used in old and prov. English for a skeleton, stands for anatomy, which was formerly used in that sense (Greek anatômē, a "cutting up" or dissection), mistaken as an atomy. Compare the following:—

The Egyptians had a custome . . . in the midst of their feasts to have brought before them Anatomie of a dead body dried.—Sir R. Barclay, Felicite of Man, 1631, p. 30.

Dol. Goodman death, goodman bones!

Host. Thou atomy, thou!

Dol. Come you thin thing; come, you rascal.

2 Hen. IV. v. 4, 33 (Globe ed.).

[The 1st folio, 1623, has anatomy, Booth's reprint.]

Our Jwhonny's just turn'd till a parfet atomy.
Anderson, Cumb. Ballads, p. 98 [Wright].

I hear she's grown a mere atomy.—Swift, Polite Conversation, i. [Davies].

Compare Oxfordshire natomy, a very thin person, "'Er little un's nuth'n but a natomy."—E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 91.

Also notomy, or nottamy, a skeleton (in the Cleveland dialect a notomize), from anatomy, understood as a natomy.

As thin as a notomize.—Whitby Glossary.

Notomia, i.e. Anatomia.—Steevens, Span. Dict. 1706.

'Nottamy, a very thin person.—Williams and Jones, Somerset Glossary.

Costard (Love's Labour's Lost, iii. 1) appears to have, in a similar way, understood enigma as an egma.

ATRIL (Sp.), a reading-desk or lectern, apparently el atril, being a mistake for el latril or el letril, "the lectern," old Fr. letrin (Diez).

AUBOURS, the French name for the laburnum tree or Cytisus, l'aubours having apparently originated in Lat. laburnum, just as It. abrostino in Lat. labruscum.

AUGER, a boring tool, stands for a nauger, mistaken for an auger, old Eng. nauger and navegor, A. Sax. nafegār, i.e. "nave-gorer," that which pierces the nave of a wheel, O. H. Ger. napa-gér. Compare Dut. avegaar for nave-gaar (Skeat, Wedgwood). The Lancashire word is noágur (E. D. Soc. Glossary).

They bore the trunk with a nawger.—Howell, Fam. Letters, ii. 54.

From this word in O. H. German comes Fr. navrer, Norm. Fr. naverer, nafra, to wound or pierce, It. naverare.

AUGHT, old Eng. awiht, A. Sax. áwihht, is an agglutination of the article a (A. Sax. á, ún) and wiht (A. Sax. wiht, a creature or thing), and so = "a whit."

AVEL (old Fr.), anything precious, stands for lavel, mistaken for l'avel, which is identical with It. lapillo, a gem or precious stone, Lat. lapillus.

Similarly, It. avello, a stone coffin, Modenese lavello, Milanese navell, are from Low Lat. lavellum, Lat. labellum, a vessel (Diez).

AZURE. In all the European forms of this word (Fr. azur, Sp. azul, It. azzurro) an initial l, which we still preserve in (lapis) lazuli, has been lost through having been mistaken for the article, as if the word were l'azur, instead of, as properly, lazur. Compare Low Lat. lazulum, lazur, Low Greek lazourion (Lewis, Astronomy of the Ancients, p. 215), from Arab. lazward or lájward, Pers. lajúwerd (Devic, Skeat), so called because found in the mines of Lájwurd (Yule, Ser Marco Polo, i. 153).

Asure, Asura.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

Lazur, the Lazall, or Azure stone.—Cotgrave.

B.

BACIO (It.), a site exposed to the North (a bacio, northward), stands for obacio for opacio, a shady spot (Lat. opacus), whence also Dauphinese lubuc for l'ubac (Diez).

BADIA, an Italian word for an abbey, as in the proverb, "Casa mia, casa mia, per piccina che tu sia, tu mi sembri una badia" ("My home, my home, humble though thou be, to me thou seemest an abbey"), i.e. una badia for un'abbadia.

BARS, the French name of the fish which we call in English basse, Ger. bars, barsche, is apparently formed from the Greek name labrax, i.e. the "rapacious" (cf. its names lupus, Fr. loup); which was supposed to be la brax.

BILLAMENT, for habillement, understood as a billement.

But then shee put of her head geere fine;
Shee hadd billaments worth a 100<sup>li</sup>.

Percy Folio MS. vol. ii. p. 330, l. 65.

Dorlot, a jewel . . . aglet, button, billement, &c., wherewith a woman sets out her apparell.—Cotgrave.

BITTACLE, a sea-term for a "Frame of Timber in the Steerage of a Ship, where the Compass stands" (Bailey), whence by corruption binnacle, stands for habitacle ('abitacle, a bitacle), a little lodge or habitation for the steersman, Fr. habitacle. Compare BILLAMENT.

In the toure I went, into the habytacle
Of dame Musyke, where she was syngyng
The ballades swete in her fayre tabernacle.

S. Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, cap. xx.
p. 97 (Percy Soc.).

Similarly, Lawaïne, a Scottish word for the eve of All-Hallows in The Lady of the Lake, is merely a corruption of Halloween ('alloween), probably understood as a loween.

BLÉ (Fr.), wheat, old Fr. bled, Prov. blat, has lost an initial a, seemingly from the Low Lat. ablata, with the article l'ablata, being mistaken for la blata (It. biada, old Fr. blée). See Scheler, s.v. Low Lat. ablata, ablatum, properly means that "carried away" from the field, produce.

BOUTIQUE (Fr.), as well as It. bottega, Sp. botica, has lost an initial a (for aboutique, Lat. apotheca) from its probably having been merged in the article. Compare Eng. potecary for apothecary.

C.

CASHEW. A cashew-nut would properly be acashew-nut, Fr. acajou, noix d'acajou, a foreign word; Ger. acajunusz.

CATE, a cake, or other food, provision, stands for old Eng. acate, victual, provision, originally achate, something bought, a marketing, a purchase (Chaucer, Prologue Cant. Tales, l. 571), old Fr. acat, achat, purchase, from Low Lat. accaptare (to take to one's self), purchase. Hence Mod. Fr. acheter. Bread, wine, acates, fowl, feather, fish or fin. Ben Jonson, Sud Shepherd, i. 2.

CESS, a rate or tax, so spelt, perhaps, under the influence of Lat. census, Fr. cencer, to tax, is for sess, a shortened form of assess (as if a sess), which appears to have originated in Ireland.

Compare SESSMENT below.

Eudor. But what is that which ye call Cesse? It is a woorde sure not used amongst us heere, therefore (I pray you) expounde the same.

Iren. Cesse is none other but that which your selfe called imposition.—Spenser, View of State of Ireland, p. 643 (Globe ed.).

CAYSHUN, a word used in Holderness, E. Yorkshire, for need, necessity, a mutilated form of occasion, probably mistaken for a casion.

He's neeah cayshun to waak.

Old Eng. chesun, or cawse, Causa (Prompt. Parv.), for achesun, old Fr. acheison, Low Lat. acheso, a corrupt form of occasio, occasion.

Compare It. cagione for occagione, Lat. occasionem, un occagione being mistaken for uno 'cagione; It. limosina for elimosina, Lat. eleēmosuna (old Fr. almosne, "alms"); lena for alena = Fr. haleine (from Lat. anhelare); labarda for alabarda = Fr. hallebarde; ruca (whence rucchetta, our "rocket") = Lat. eruca.

CLYPSE, a frequent form in old authors of eclipse, apparently misunderstood as a clips.

There fell a great rayne and a clyps.—Lord Berners, Froissart, cap. cxxx.

Hic clipsis, the clyppes of the sunne.—Wright's Vocabularies, p. 272.

And þat is cause of þis clips · þat closeth now þe sonne.

Visian of P. Plowman, B. xviii. 135.

Clyppye of þe sonne or money (al. clypse), Eclipsis.—Prompt. Parv.

Hyt is but the clyppus of the sune, I herd a clerk say.

Anturs of Arthur, st. viii. l. 3.

The N. W. Lincolnshire folk still speak of a clips of the sun (Peacock).

D.

DAB, a dexterous fellow, probably from adept (as if a dep'), see p. 91. Compare "a 'cute fellow" for acute, pert for apert, lone for alone (i.e. all-one, Ger. allein); and see LIVE (p. 219) for alive. See also T. Row in Walker's Selections from Gentleman's Magazine, ii. 142.

DACIOUS, a provincial word for audacious (e.g. Peacock, Glossary of N.W. Lincolnshire), probably originated in such phrases as "audacious fellow" being misunderstood as "a dacious fellow."

DAFFODIL, the narcissus, perhaps owes the excrescent d to the article and stands for th'affodil, north Eng. t'affodil, Kent de affodil (or d'affodil?), from old Fr. asphodile, "th' affodill" (Cotgrave); Lat. asphodelus. Daffadilly (Spenser) is an assimilation to lily; Daffadoundilly, when applied to the shrub Daphne Mezereon, is due to a supposed connexion of the word with the nymph Daphne, just as Fr. afrodille, Low Lat. aphrodillus, was confused with Aphrodite. (See Skeat, Etym. Dict. p. 787.)

DRAKE stands for old Eng. endrake (compare Icel. andriki, Swed. anddrake, Dan. andrik), of which the first syllable has been lost, perhaps from its being mistaken for the article, as if an drake. The n of an was retained in the oldest English before a noun beginning with a consonant, e.g. "an preost" (Layamon). End-rake or ened-rake denotes etymologically the "duck (ened) king," = Lat. anat(um)-rex.

Somewhat similarly vie, a wager or challenge in gambling, old Eng. a-vie, is for Fr. envi = It. invito, an inviting (Lat. invitare), equivalent to 'vite for an invite.

E.

EAR, a provincial word for the kidney (Suffolk, Northumberland, Scotland), from neer (Craven), O. Eng. neare, Ger. nieren, Dan. nyre, O. Norse nyra, Swed. njure.

Nears of a beast, roignon.—Palsgrave, 1530.

The near-end of a loin of veal, in Lincolnshire, is the part next the nears or kidneys (Peacock).

EL-ISKENDEREYEH, the modern name of Alexandria, Greek 'Αλεξάνδρεια, the initial syllable being mistaken for the article, as if al Escandria. Similarly el Azariyeh, the modern name of Bethany, stands for Lazariyeh, "Lazarus' village;" and Hadjar Lasbah (near the Dead Sea) for el Asbah. Compare LUXOR.

ELIXIR contains an implicit article, being Arab. el iksir, "the philosopher's stone" (Skeat).

EMBER-DAYS, perhaps for Tember-days (temper-days), mistaken for Th'ember-days. See p. 109.

In a similar way theorbo, the name of an old musical instrument, has been mistaken for the orboe, and appears so in an advertisement, 1720, quoted in Southey's Common-Place Book, ii. 333.

EMONY and enemy are popular corruptions of the flower-name anemone, the first syllable evidently being mistaken for the article an. "Our gardeners call them Emonies."—R. Turner, Bot. p. 18. See ENEMY, p. 111. Compare ATOMY above. A nasturtium is sometimes converted by the ignorant into an asturtion (Leary, Every Day Errors, p. 44), and even a stortioner.

Sperage, sparage (Cotgrave), sparagus (Evelyn), have by a similar mistake lost an initial a, being popular forms of asparagus.

EST, a Scottish form of nest, evidently a nest, mistaken for an est (Jamieson), "a bird-est" (Hogg), like West Country ettle for a nettle (Wright). See EYAS below, and compare Manx edd, a nest, yn edd, the nest, beside Ir. nead, Corn. neid, Welsh nyth.

On the other hand, Scot. nesscock, a boil, seems to be for an esscock or erscock (Jamieson).

ETTLER, a West Country word for a nettle (Wright), also used in Northamptonshire (Sternberg). Similarly an ear, an East Country word for a kidney (Wright), stands for a near, old Eng. nere, or neere, a kidney (Icel. nýra), whence kydneer, kidnere, now spelt kidney. The Cumberland folk have ear, kidney, and an est for a nest (Ferguson).

A Wiltshire charm against the sting of a nettle is "Out 'ettle, in dock; Dock zhall ha' a new smock; 'Ettle zhan't ha'narrun."—Britton, Beauties of Wiltshire, 1825.

EYAS, a young hawk (Shakespeare, Spenser), is a mistake for a nyas or nias, that is, a "nestling" (Nares, Halliwell), from Fr. nias, a nestling (Cotgrave), and that from Lat. nidus, a nest, through a form nidaceus, nidax (cf. It. nidiace). Compare EYE, a brood (of pheasants), probably from Fr. nid, a nest, p. 114 above. Indeed nye is given as an Essex word for a pheasant's nest (Jephson, Archæolog. Soc. Trans. 1863, vol. ii.). Cf. prov. Eng. noye, an egg, for old Eng. an ey.

COUATA, a couie . . . a nest-full, a lairie, an eyase.—Florio.

NIDIACE falcone, a Hawke taken young out of his nest, a Eyase-falcon.—Id.

NIASO, an Eyase-hawk.—Id.

F.

FRAY, a conflict, stands for old Eng. affray (from old Fr. esfrei, tumult, effraier, to make afraid, Low Lat. exfridare, to put out (ex) of peace (friſu), disquiet, make a disturbance (Skeat, Etym. Dict. 776), mistaken for a fray. Sendes aftyre phylosophers, and his affraye telles. Morte Arthure, l. 3226.

G.

GELL (g hard), a Scotch word for a leech, Welsh gel, seems to be akin to Swed. igel, a leech; cf. A. Sax. igil, the pricking hedgehog, egl, that which pricks or pierces, a thistle, &c.

GHERKIN stands for an older form agherkin, from Dut. agurkje, agurkken, and that from Arab. al + Pers. khayâr (cucumber) + ken (dimin. suffix).—Skeat.

GOBILLE, in modern French la gobille, is from the old Fr. la agobille, a form which is still preserved in the Wallon agobille, agoby.

GRIOTTE (Fr.), a sour or tart cherry, has lost an initial a, the older form l'agriotte (Cotgrave) being mistaken as la griotte. Agriotte or agriote (Eng. egriot) is said to come from Greek ἀγριος, wild (Littré, Scheler), but perhaps the original form was aigriote, from aigre, sour; O. de Serres (in Littré) has "les agriotes ou cerizes aigres."

GUGLIA, the Italian word for a needle, is formed from aguglia, the initial vowel having been merged and lost in the article, Lat. aculeus.

E.g. Villani, in his Istoria, lib. ix. speaks of Sir John Hawkwood, the great general of the 14th century, who had been originally a tailor, as "John della guglie" (i.e. John of the needle), properly "John dell' aguglie"; for whom see ACUTUS, p. 515.

GYPSY, for gypcian or gyptian, from Egyptian, probably understood as a gyptian.

(Sp.) Gitano, a counterfeit rogue called a gypson or Egyptian.—Minshew.

Like a Gipsen or Juggeler.

Spenser, Mother Hubberds Tale.

He saw a gypcian ful sore

Smythe a iuu.

Cursor Mundi (Göttingen MS.), l. 5656.

H.

HEAPS, a Cumberland word for turnips (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 109), probably originated in prov. Eng. a neap, a turnip (Lat. napus), being misunderstood as an 'eap or an heap. Hence also turnip (for ternepe, Lat. terre napus), which is not of great antiquity in English, as Turner, writing in 1548, says of the napus, "I haue hearde sume cal it in Englishe a turnepe."—Names of Herbes, p. 55 (E. D. S. ed.). Compare NEAVING, below.

I.

LARD (or yar), a Wallon word for a farthing or money, is from Fr. liard, understood as liard. Similarly, ieve (or yaife), a hare, from Fr. lièvre, understood as l'ievre (Sigart).

INGREMANCE, an old Fr. word for the black art or necromancy, is from the old Fr. nigremance (Gk. nekromanteia), the n initial having perhaps been attributed to the article un.

INKLE, a kind of tape or shoemaker's thread, stands for lingle or lingel, the initial l being lost through being mistaken for the French article, as if l'ingle. Compare lyngell (Palsgrave), old Fr. ligneuil, lignel, a dimin. of ligne, a thread or line, Lat. linea (Wedgwood, Skeat). Dryden has incle (Plays, vol. iv, p. 314). "As thick as inkle-weavers" is an old proverbial expression. Lingel in the first of the following passages Nares notes is yugal in the early editions, which he says is nonsense. It is evidently a misprint for yugal.

Every man shall have a special care of his own soul,
And in his pocket carry bis twó confessors,
His lingel, and his nawl.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Women Pleas'd, iv. 1 (ed. Darley).

The Cobler of Canterburie, armed with his Aull, his Lingell, and his Last.—Cobler of Canterburie, 1608 (Farlton's Jest, p. 107).

Inkles, caddisses, cambrics, lawns.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 4, 203.

We're as thick as a pair o' owd reawsty inkle-weyvers.—Lancashire Glossary, E. D. S. p. 166.

K.

KETON, a word meaning a soldier's cassock, quoted by Jamieson (Scotch Dict. s.v.) from Cox's Ireland, is evidently the same word as aketon, understood as a keton; haketon (Chaucer), haqueton (Spenser), Fr. hoqueton, a wadded coat worn under armour.

L.

LAMMER, a Scottish word for amber, is merely Fr. l'ambre.

Black luggie, lummer bead,
Rowan-tree and red thread,
Put the witches to their speed.

Henderson, Folk-love of N. Counties,
p. 183.

Itm̄ x bedes of lambrier.—Inventory, 1440
(Peacock, Church Furniture, p. 195).

Robert Fergusson in his Hame Content speaks of Bonny Tweed

As clear as ony lammer bead."

LAMPONE, } the raspberry, stands for LAMPIONE, } il ampone. Compare
Piedmont. ampola, Comasque ampòl, from Swiss ombeer (Diez).

LAMPOURDAN, a district of which the chief town was called in Latin Emporiæ (markets) and in French Ampouries, was formerly named l'Ampourdan, but is now le Lampourdan (Génin, Récréat. Philolog. i. 103).

LANDIER (Fr.), an andiron, stands for l'andier, from old Fr. andier, old Eng. aundyre, Low Lat. anderia.

LANDIT (Fr.), a fair, stands for l'endit, from Lat. indictum (forum), a market opened by proclamation.

LAPÔTE, a Creole word for a door (Trinidad), is from Fr. la porte, regarded as one word (J. J. Thomas). Similarly nomme, a man, is for un homme, and mounonque, an uncle, for mon oncle.

LA POUILLE, the French form of Apulia, for l'Apule.

LARCH, Sp. alerce, It. larice, Lat. laricem, Greek larix, apparently from Arab. al-arz or el-arz, "the-cedar," Heb. erez, cedar.

LARIGOT (Fr.), a pipe, for l'arigot or l'harigot (perhaps from Lat. arinca), according to Scheler; but see ARIGOT.

LARUM, a noisy summons or call to arms, is from alarum, another form of alarm (Fr. alarme, It. all' arme! to to arms!), perhaps understood as a larum.

Then shall we hear their larum.
Shakespeare, Coriol. i. 4, 9.

LA SOLFA (It.), the gamut, where la is understood as the article, is properly the three last syllables of Guido's notation, ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la, taken in reversed order (Diez). Those syllables were arbitrarily selected by Guido from this verse of a Latin hymn to St. John:—

*Ut queant laxis resonare fibris
Mira gestorum famuli tuorum
Solve polluti labii reatum, Sancte Joannes.*

LASTRA (It.), a stone-slab or flag,

Sp. lastre, has been formed, by prefixing the article, from old Fr. astre, aistre, a hearthstone (Mod. Fr. âtre), Low Lat. astrum, old and prov. Eng. aistre, estre, a hearth (Diez). But see Garnett, Philolog. Essays, p. 30.

LAVOLTA, the name of an old dance, apparently something like the modern waltz, is Fr. la volta, from It. volta, a turning round [Lat. voluta, from volvere]; "a kind of turning french dance called a Volta."—Florio. Compare waltz, from Ger. walzen, to revolve. However, it is often used for a dance which, like the mazurka, introduces vaults or bounds (see Nares). Compare Lenwoy (Chaucer) for l'enwoy.

And draw the dolphins to thy lovely eyes,
To dance lavoltas in the purple streams.
Green, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay,
1594 (p. 165, ed. Dyce).

Force the plump lilt god
Skip light lavoltas in your full sapt vaines.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida,
2nd pt. v. 4.

Yet is there one, the most delightful kind,
A loftie iumping, or a leaping round.
[Margin, Lavoltas.]

Sir J. Davies, Orchestra, 1622, st. 70.

Dance a lavolta, and be rude and sancy.
Massinger, Parliament of Love, i.
(p. 168, ed. Cunningham).

And teach lavoltas high and swift corantos.
Shakespeare, Hen. V. iii. 5, 33.

LEEWAN, the raised part of a kham for persons to sit on (Farrar, Life of Christ, i. 4), is for el-eeván.

LEMBIC or limbeck (see Nares), a frequent old form of alembic (Fr. and Sp. alambique, from Arab. al-anbik, "the-still"), understood as a lembic. But compare Portug. lambique, It. lambicco.

Imperfect creatures with helms of limbecks on their heads.—B. Jonson, Mercury Vindicated (Works, p. 596).

Memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck only.

Macbeth, i. 7, 67.

LEMFEG, a Wiltshire word for a fig, is for "Elleme fig" (E. D. Soc. Reprints, B. 19).

LENDEMAIN (Fr.), formed by coalescence of the article from le endemain, an extended form of demain.

LENGUE (Mod. Provençal) is for l'engue (= Fr. l'aine), Sp. engle, from Lat. inquen (Scheler).

LERO (It.), vetches, stands for l'ervo, from Lat. eruum (Diez).

LÉVIER (Fr.), a sink, always now spoken of in Paris as le levier or un levier, was formerly in old French l'évier or esvier, from old Fr. ève, water, Lat. agua (Agnel, Influence de Lang. Pop. p. 99; Génin, i. 103). See under SHORE, p. 354.

LIARD, "a brazen coyne worth three deniers" (Cotgrave), is the South Fr. li hardi, Sp. ardite, from Basque ardita, which is from ardia, a sheep, like pecunia from pecus (Diez).

LIERRE (Fr.), ivy, for l'hierre (Ronsard), from Lat. hedera.

LI-CIEN, a dog in the Creole patois of the Mauritius, is from Fr. le chien (Athenæum, Dec. 31, 1870, p. 889).

LINGOT, formerly used for a bar or lump of metal, is Fr. lingot, which is itself merely the Eng. ingot with the prefixed article, l'ingot (Skeat). Others have thought it meant a "tongue" of metal, from Lat. lingua (compare "a wedge of gold."—Joshua, vii. 21; Heb. "tongue"), but incorrectly.

Plaque, a flat Lingot a barre of metall.—Cotgrave.

Bille . . . a lingot, wedge, or gad of metall.—Id.

Lingot, An ingot, lumpe, or masse of metall.—Id.

Other matter hath bin used for money, as . . . iron lingets quenched with vinegar.—Camden, Remaines, 1637, p. 179.

LISLE, the place-name, was originally L'isle, being built on an island (Taylor, p. 355). So Algiers for al gezira, the island (now joined to the mainland).

LITRESS, a technical term in the manufacture of playing cards for two sheets of paper pasted together, is doubtless from the synonymous French word l'étrésse, mistaken for létresse. Many of the words used in this craft are of French origin (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1867, p. 66).

LOBA (Sp. and Portg.), a surplice, stands for Fr. l'aube, a white garment (Lat. alba), pretty much as if we spoke of "a nalb."

LODOLA, LODOLETTA (It.), the lark, O. Sp. aloeta, Prov. alauza, Fr. alouette, Lat. alauda. The Italian la lodola has merged the initial vowel in the article.

La festiva
Lodoletta, che trae verso l'aurora.
Aleardi, Arnalda di Roca.

LONE,
LONELY,
LONESOME, } are mutilated forms of alone, alonly, alone- some, i.e. all one, wholly by one's self, without company. Alonly person was understood as a lonely person, and alone was retained as the proper predicative form, just as in a similar case we say "a live coal," but the eel is alive, i.e. on lif, in life.

LONGE (Fr.), the rope of a halter, la longe, is a misunderstanding of old Fr. l'alonge, denoting (1) a lengthening out, (2) an extended cord, &c.

LOOVER, or lower, an opening in the roof of old houses to let out smoke, old Eng. lover, is from old Fr. louvert, a loop-hole or opening, which is for l'ouvert or l'overt, an "overt" or open spot (Haldemann, Skeat). So the lufferboards of a belfry are merely the lower, l'ouvert, or opening boards to transmit the sound.

LOQUET (Le), according to M. Agnel, is for loquet, i.e. le haquet (Influence de Lang. Populaire, p. 100).

LORIOT, the French name of the yellow-hammer, stands for l'oriot, old Fr. oriot (Cotgrave), the "golden bird," from Fr. or, whence also Eng. oriole. Compare its Low Lat. name auri-galgulus, whence It. ri-gogolo, ri-goletto.

LORIOT, in the French idiom compère loriot, a sty on the eyelid, has puzzled philologists. It is doubtless, as M. Sigart points out, identical with Wallon loriau, of the same meaning, which was originally loriau, Liège oriou, which he connects with Sp. orzuelo (Fr. orgeol, orgeolet), from Lat. hordeolus, (1) a grain of barley, (2) the grain-like pustule on the eyelid (Dict. du Wallon de Mons). So Wallon loqué and licotte, the hiccup, for l'hoquet and l'hicotte (Liège hikett), Wallon lamplumu, an apple charlotte, for l'amplumus, Flemish appelmoes.

LOWANCE, a Cleveland word meaning a portion, esp. a stipulated quantity of drink, for allowance. So also in N.W. Lincolnshire (Peacock). See POTECARY.

LUETTE (Fr.), the uvula, formed by agglutination of the article, from uette, i.e. wette, which (like our wvula) is a dimin. of Lat. uva, a grape.

LUGLIO (It.), July, seems to have the article prefixed to Lat. Julius. But Lulianus is, I believe, the Talmudic name of the Emperor Julian. Compare Lillebonne, from Julia Bona.

LURCH, in the phrase "to leave one in the lurch," contains an implicit article. It is a metaphor from the gaming table, when one party gains every point before the other makes one (Wedgwood). Lurch is an old word for a game, or a state of the game, Bavarian lurz, the loss of a double game of cards (Garnett), Fr. lourche, which stands for l'ourche. Cotgrave gives "ourche, the game at tables called lurch," and so Skinner. This is, no doubt, from Lat. orca, a dice-box, and not, as Prof. Skeat thinks, from Lat. urceus, a pitcher. Phrases of the same meaning borrowed from card-playing are It. lasciare uno in asso, and Ger. einen im stiche [= ace] lassen. See Diez, s.v. Asso.

[A cheat] when the gamesters doubt his play,
Conveys his false dice safe away,
And leaves the true ones in the lurch,
T'endure the torture of the search.

Sam. Butler, Genuine Remains, ii. 262
(ed. Clarke).

LUTE, Fr. luth, old Fr. lut, It. liuto, Sp. laud, have an involved article, as we see by comparing Portg. alaude, which comes from Arab. al-ūd, "the 'ood."

A representation of the instrument still called the 'ood is given in Thomson's The Land and the Book, p. 686.

Harpe, pype, and mery songe,
Bothe lewte and sawtre.

Romance of Octavian, l. 198 (Percy Soc.).

LUTIN (Fr.), a night goblin, old Fr. luito, which seems to be an alteration of nuiton, the Wallon form, from nuit. Perhaps un nuiton was popularly mistaken for un witon, when l'uiton would naturally follow. So old Fr. nabirinthe (as if un abirinthe) may be the result of a misunderstanding of labyrinthe, as if l'abirinthe. Compare Fr. nombril for lombriil, i.e. l'ombriil, and niveau, nivel for livel (Lat. libella); It. lanfa and nanfa.

LUXOR, on the site of ancient Thebes, stands for el Eksor, "the palaces."

M.

MACA, Portuguese word for a hammock, It. amāca, Sp. hamaca, Fr. hamac.

MATITA (Sp.), bloodstone, for amātita, Fr. hémateite, Lat. hæmatites, Greek haimatetes. Similarly, Sp. moroydes (Minsheu), for amoroydes, hæmorrhoids.

MEGRIM, Fr. migraine, a headache, originally a complaint of one side of the head, is in old English more correctly written emygrane, or emigrane, being the Low Lat. emigraneus, Lat. hemikranium, Greek hêmikranion (half-head).

Emygrane was probably mistaken for a mygrane, and themygrane resolved into the mygrane.

Mygreyme, sekeneſse, Emigranea.—Prompt. Parv.

It is now a popular word for a whim, caprice, crotchet, or absurd notion.

It was a pity she should take such megrims into her head.—G. Eliot, Adam Bede, chap. 18.

MERCEMENT, for amercement or fine.
Vp man for hus mysdedes þe mercement he taxeþ.

Langland, Vision of Piers the Plowman,
Pass II. l. 159 (text C.).

I suppose they wyl distreyne for the mersymentes.—Paston Letters (ed. Gairdner, i. 109).
(Skeat, Notes to P. the Plowman, loc. cit.)

MINE (Fr.), a measure of capacity, has lost an initial e, which was perhaps merged in the article; compare old Fr. emine, from Lat. hemina, Greek ἡμίνα. So Sp. guileña for Lat. aquilina.

MOPHRODITE, in N. W. Lincolnshire for hermaphrodite, which was no doubt taken for a maphrodite.

MUCK, in the phrase "to run a muck," originally "to run amock," is from Malay amucco. See p. 247.

N.

NABSY, a Northampton word for an abscess (Wright), which by a twofold blunder was turned into a nabscess, and that, being mistaken for a plural, into a supposed singular form, a nabsy. Similarly, the wife of a Middlesex labourer once informed me that her husband was suffering from a haps (singular of abscess!) under his arm. Cf. AXEY, p. 15.

NACKENDOLE, a Lancashire word for a weight of eight pounds, stands for an aghendole, old Eng. eygtyndeale, measure (Prompt. Parv.), the eighth part of a coom or half quarter, Dutch achtendeel.

She should yearly have one aghen-dole of meale.—Pott, Discoverie of Witches, p. 23 [in E. D. Soc. Lancashire Glossary, p. 154, where the origin is quite mistaken].

NADS. Tusser uses a nads for an adze.

An ax and a nads to make troffe for thy hogs.

Five Hundred Pointes, E. D. Soc. ed. p. 36.

NAGLET, for an aglet, the tag of a lace, aygulet (Spenser), Fr. aguillette, and auguillette.

Thou mayest buy as much love for a naglet in the middle of Scotland, as thou shalt winne by thy complaints.—Dux Grammaticus, 1633.

Compare "my nagget cupp" (The Unton Inventories, p. 32) for "mine agate cup."

NALE, in old authors is used for an ale-house, especially in the expression "at the nale" (Chaucer, C. Tales, 6981), or "atte nale." The original form was atten ale for at then ale, where then is the dative of the. At the nende is similarly found for at then end (Skeat, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 8).

And rather then they wyll not be as fine,

As who is finest, yea, as smooth and slicke,

And after sit uppermost at the wine,

Or nale, to make hard shift they wyll not sticke.

F. Thynn, Debate between Pride and Lowliness (ab. 1568), p. 53 (Shaks. Soc.).

NANBERRY, a N. W. Lincolnshire word for an anberry (which see, p. 7), a wen, A. Sax. ampre.

NANG-NAIL, a Cleveland word for a corn on the foot, for an angnail, which is the Cumberland word, i.e. an agnaille, which formerly denoted a "little corne upon a toe" (vid. Cotgrave, s.v. Corret). In N. W. Lincolnshire nangnail is an agnail and a corn (Peacock). In Lancashire it appears as a nagnail (Glossary, Nodal and Milner, E.D.S.), with an imagined reference probably to nag, to torment or irritate.

NARROW-WRIGGLE, see p. 252.

NASPO (It.), a reel, for un aspo (Sp. aspa). So nastro, a star (Florio), for un astro (Lat. astrum); ninferno for inferno; nabisso for un abisso.

NATERELLE, the same as nape (Prompt. Parvulorum), has arisen from an haterelle.

Occipicium, ðe haterelle of ðe hede.—Medulla.

An haterelle, cervix, cervicula, vertex.—Cuth. Ang.

Old Fr. haterel, hasterel, the nape of the neck.

NATTER-JACK, a prov. Eng. name for a kind of toad, is probably for an atter-jack, from A. Sax. atter, poison.

NAUL, the name of a village near Balbriggan, co. Dublin, is the Irish an aill ('n aill), "the rock" (Joyce, i. 24).

NAUNT, an aunt (Beaumont and Fletcher, Pilgrim, iv. 1; Dryden, Plays, vol. iv. p. 304), originated in mine aunt being mistaken for my naunt. Lancashire noan, an aunt (E. D. Soc.). So uncle (Lear, iii. 2) for mine uncle, Worcestershire my nunkle (Kennett); neam or neme, uncle, for old Eng. mine eam; ningle, a favourite, for mine ingle; "my sweet ningle" (Dekker). Compare Wallon mon mononk, my uncle (i.e. mon mon-oncle), el nonk, the uncle, and Fr. tante, aunt, either for ta ante (tua amita), (Littré), or for ma-tante, mine aunt (Scheler). Compare also ma mie for m'amie; and mamour, mourette, in Le Roux, Dict. Comique. Nowne is also found arising from mine own, "Be his nowne white sonne."—Roister Doister, i. 1 (Shaks. Soc.). The Scottish say "his nain, nawn, or nyawn" (Jamieson); Mid-Yorks. "thou nawn bairn" (Robinson, E.D.S.).

NAVAN, in Ireland, stands for nEamhuin, i.e. an Eamhuin, "the neck-brooch," fabled to have its name from the golden brooch of the Princess Macha (Joyce, i. 85).

NAVIRON, a Wallon form of Fr. un aviron, an oar (old Eng. MSS. a nore). The word was perhaps assimilated to another word naviron, meaning a float (Scheler).

NAWL, a frequent form of awl (A. Sax. ǣl) in old English (Beaumont and Fletcher), nal (Wycliffe, Ex. xxi. 6), nall (Tusser), from a misunderstanding of an awl as a nawl.

Canst thou . . . bore his chaftes through with a naule?—Bible, 1551, Job xli. 1.

Lance de S. Crespin, A shoemakers nawle.—Cotgrave.

Pointe, a bodkin or nawle.—Id.

Beware also to spurne againe a nall.

Good Counsaill of Chaucer.

Hole bridle and saddle, whit lether and nall.

Tusser, Five Hundred Pointes, 1580

(E. D. Soc. ed. p. 36).

NAYWORD, a provincial word for a by-word or proverb, seems to stand for an aye-word, a word or expression always or perpetually used (Gentleman's Magazine, July, 1777). The same writer quotes as sometimes found a narrow for an arrow; a nogler, a commercial traveller, probably originally a nagler for an hagler; a nailbourn, a torrent sometimes dry (Kent), for an ailbourn or eylebourn.

Nayword, a bye-word, a laughing-stock.—Forby, Vocabulary of East Anglia.

In any case have a nay-word, that you may know one another's mind.—Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

It is doubtless a corrupted form, a nayword for an ayword, the latter occurring in Twelfth Night, ii. 3: "gull him into an ayword" (fol.). Ayword is probably from ay, always, A. Sax. á, also customary, common; cf. é, common law.

NEAVING, yeast or barm (Worlidge, Dict. Rusticum, 1681), is a corruption of an heaving (Skeat). Compare HEAPS.

NEB-TIDE, an old form of an ebb-tide, quoted in Nares (ed. Halliwell and Wright), where it is confused with neap-tide, with which it has no connexion, although Bosworth gives ép-flód, as well as nép-flód, on the authority of Lye.

Bold ocean foames with spight, his neb-tides roare.

Historie of Albino and Bellama.

NEDDANS, a parish in Tipperary, is Ir. na feadáin, "the brooks" (Joyce, i. 24).

NEDDY, a fool, for an eddy. See p. 253, where the quotation referred to is:

Non immerito secundum vestratum usurpationem qui stultum vocant Edwinum, reputar Eadwinus.—J. C. Robertson, Hist. of T. Becket, vol. i.

How comes it (Youth) to pass, that you

Who all the Deities subdue,

And at thy Pleasure canst make Neddies

Of every God, and every Goddess,

Nay even me dost so inflame.

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, p. 245.

NENAGH, in Tipperary, is the Irish 'n Aenach (an Aenach), "the fair" (Joyce, i. 197). Similarly, the Irish place-name Nurney is for an Urnaidhe, "the oratory" (Id. p. 309); Noan for 'n-uamhainn, "the cave" (Id. p. 426).

NEDIRCOP, a spider (Wright), an old corruption of an addircop (Palsgrave), or attyrcope (Prompt. Parv.), A. Sax. atter-coppa, "poison-cup."

NEMONY. Skinner gives a nemony as apparently the common form of anemone in his day, Greek anemōnē, the wind-flower (Etymologicon, 1671). Anemone is sometimes popularly resolved into an enemy, see p. 111.

Neminies, the wind-flower.—Lancashire Glossary, E. D. Soc.

NERANE, a prov. Eng. word for a spider, stands for an arain (Northampton) or aran (Yorks.), old Eng. arayne, aranye, from Lat. araneus (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1859, p. 220).

Nerane, aranea.—MS. Vocab. [in Way].

Erane.—Cath. Ang.

Eranye, or spyder, or spyunare, Aranea.—Prompt. Parv.

Compare "a nykle" (Medulla MS.) for an ikyl, an ic-icle (Prompt. Parv. p. 259).

NESS, the name of the Scottish loch, is Gaelic na (the article) + ais, water-fall, just as Loch Nell, near Oban, is na + Eala, swan. Compare Nηδà in Crete for (ἠς) τὰν Ἰδὰ; Stamboul for σανπὸλν, i.e. ἰς τὴν πὸλν (Blackie, Horæ Helle- nics, p. 135; Strangford, Letters and Papers, p. 149).

NEWRY, in co. Down, stands for Irish 'n Iubhar, i.e. an Iubhar, "the yew-tree," the name commemorating a yew planted there by St. Patrick (Joyce, i. 494). From the same word comes Newrath, in Leinster, formerly spelt Newragh, and, without the article, Uragh.

NEWT, formed by agglutination of the article from an ewt, old Eng. ewte, for evete or evete, A. Sax. efeta, an eft (Skeat), which has been equated with Sansk. apāda (footless), a reptile, from a, privative, and pād, a foot (Kühn, Wedgwood). The Sussex word is efet.

Newte or ewte, wyrme, Lacertus.—Prompt. Parv.

NICKNAME, that is, an eke-name (or agnomen), misunderstood as a neke-name. See above, p. 255.

NIDGET, part of a plough in Kent (Wright), the same word as idget in Sussex, a horse-hoe, called also a nidget or edget (Parish).

NIDIOT, a common word for an idiot in old and provincial English.

"He's such a nidiot as I nivver seed afore" (Lincolnshire, Peacock).

A verye nodypoll nydyote myght be a shamed to say it.—Sir Thomas More, Works, p. 709 (1557).

Compare NIDDYWIT, p. 256.

Nigaud, A fop, nidget, ideot.—Cotgrave.

NIER, the name of a river in Waterford, is properly N'ier, "the grey" [river], where n is merely the article (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, ii. 279).

NIESPE (old Fr.), an Aspen tree (Cotgrave), a borrowed word, evidently a misunderstanding for une espe, old Eng. espe, asp.

NINCH, a place in co. Meath, is Ir. an inch, "the island." Similarly Naan, an island in Lough Erne, is for Ir. an ain, "the ring;" Nart, in Monaghan, for Ir. an fheart, "the grave;" Nuenna, a river in Kilkenny, for Ir. an uaithne, "the green river" (Joyce, i. 24).

NOMBRIL (Fr.) is formed by agglutination of the article (for un ombriil, due perhaps to l'ombriil) from old Fr. ombriil

(for ombliil), from a Lat. umbiliculus, umbilicus; whence also Cat. Llombrigol (Scheler). Similarly nomble (as if un omble) came to be substituted for lomble (from Lat. lumbulus), understood as l'omble; and niveau, old Fr. nivel (understood as un iveau or ivel), for livel (as if l'ivel), from Lat. libella.

NONCE, in the phrase "for the nonce," old Eng. "for the nonces," for the occasion, was originally "for then anes," for the once, where then is the dative of the, and anes, an adverbial form used as a noun (Skeat).

This was a thrifty tale for the nonces!

Chaucer, Prolog. to Shipmans Tale, 1165.

"For the nonces" occurs instead of for þan ænes or for þam ænes, for that alone, for the purpose, in Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 87.

For the nonys, Idcirco, ex proposito.—Prompt. Parv. p. 173.

He delayeth the matter for the nonys, de industriā.—Horman.

Compare the surnames Nokes for atten-oaks (Simme atte noke.—Piers Plowman, A. v. 115); Nash for atten-ash; Nalder for atten-alder; Norchard for atten-orchard, &c. (Bardsley, Our Eng. Surnames, p. 86; Skeat, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 118).

NOPE, an old name for the bullfinch used by Drayton (Wright), is a corrupt form for an ope, otherwise spelt aupe, olp, or alpe (Prompt. Parv.). See HOOP, p. 176.

Fraylezillo, a bird with blacke feathers on the head, like linget, called of some an Oupe.—Minsheu, Span. Dict. 1623.

Chochepierre, a kinde of Noupe or Bullfinch.—Cotgrave.

Nares quotes from Merrett, "Rubicilla, a bull-finch, a hoop, and bull epink, a nope." In Lancashire the word appears as maulp or mauwp (Glossary, E.D.S. 190).

NORATION, a provincial word for a report or rumour, norating, chattering (Wright), is evidently a misapprehension of an oration as a noration. In Cleveland it means a row or uproar (Atkinson).

Out of noration has been evolved in the broken German-English of America the verb to norate.

Und eher I norate furder, I dink it only fair,
Ve shoudt oonderstand each oder, prezackly,
chunk and square.

Breitmann Ballads, p. 145 (ed. 1871).

In Sussex both oration and noration are in use, with the meaning of an unnecessary fuss; and to norate is to talk officiously and fussily about other people's business (Parish). Compare with this the Mid-Yorkshire use of pis'le (i. e. epistle), for a tirade or rigmarole. "She went nagging on with a long pis'le that it would have tired a horse to stand and listen to" (Robinson, E.D.S.); and Lancashire nominy, a long tiresome speech (E. D. Soc.), which seems to stand for a nomily or an homily.

NORMOUS, a Lincolnshire form of enormous (Peacock).

NORWOOD, a Leicestershire word for a nickname or by-word (Wright), was most probably originally an o'erword, in the sense of over-, or additional-, name, an eke-name (see NICKNAME). Compare the Scotch ourword, overword, a word or expression frequently repeated, the burden of a song.

And aye the o'erword o' the spring
Was Irvine's bairns are bonie a'.

Burns, Works, p. 153 (Globe ed.).

Similarly nayword, a bye-word (Twelfth Night, ii. 3), is an ayword in the old copies (Dyce, Observations, p. 75).

NOSILLE, an old word for a blackbird (Wright), evidently stands for an oosel or ousel.

NOVER, a Sussex word for high land above a precipitous bank, is for an over, Mid. Eng. over, a bank, A. Sax. ofer (Skeat, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 393).

NUGGET, a lump of metal, is the modern form of niggot (North's Plutarch), which is probably a corruption of a ningot, standing for an ingot (A. Sax. in + goten, "poured into" a mould.—Skeat). Curiously enough the same word has suffered from agglutination in French, where lingot should properly be l'ingot, borrowed from the English.

NUMBLES, the inward parts of a deer, formerly considered a delicacy, Fr. nombles, generally used in the plural, but originally in the singular also, viz.

nomble, a portion cut from between the thighs of the deer (Roquefort), and numbile, numble (Ducange). The word being derived from Lat. umbilicus, the navel, must originally have been umble, the initial n being afterwards transferred to it from the article, an umble. Umbles is the ordinary form in later English. See HUMBLE-PIE supra, p. 183.

NUMPOST, a provincial corruption (Wright) of an imposthume, for an impost.

NURA, } (Irish), last year, stand NURIDH, } for an ura, an wiridh, which are the Erse forms, the latter part equated with Lat. hora, Greek ōpa, Sansk. vāra (Pictet, Orig. Indo-Europ. ii. 606).

NURSROW, a Staffordshire word for the shrew-mouse, is properly an ersrow, erd-shrew, or earth-shrew. Compare HARDSHREW, p. 163.

NUSSE, "fisshe."—Prompt. Parvulorum. This word has apparently originated from an huss,—huss being an O. Eng. word for the dogfish. "Husse, a fysshe, rousette."—Palsgrave. Compare "Huske, fysho, Squamus."—Prompt. Parv.

O.

OIDHCHE (Ir.), night, stands for noidhche, and Ir. wimhir, number, for wimhir, the initial n having been lost by confusion with n of the article an (Graves). The same is the case with Ir. eascu, an eel, old Ir. naiscu, and Ir. eas, a weasel, old Ir. ness (Joyce, i. 26). Compare old Ir. gilla nameach (for nan each), "servant of th' horses" (Stokes, Irish Glosses, p. 112); Ir. 'noir, from the east, for an oir; 'niar, from the west, for an iar, and Manx neear, for yn eear, "the west." So in Manx yn oie for yn noie, "the night"; noash for yn oash, "the custom."

OMELETTE (Fr.), our "omelet," owes its initial vowel to the a of old Fr. amelette, which that word has stolen from the article la. Amelette (for ale-mette, alamette) was originally la lemette or la lamette, a thin flat cake, the same as lemelle, lamelle (Lat. laminula), a diminutive of lame (Lat. lamina). La lamette by a mistake became l'alemette (Littré, Skeat), and then l'amelette.

ORANGE. Etymologically we should say, instead of "an orange," a norange or narenge. See above, p. 264.

ORBACCA (It.), a laurel berry, for lor-bacca, from Lat. lauri bacca. So Cotgrave has aureole and laureole, a small laurel.

ORDURE, from Fr. ordure, old Fr. ord, filthy, foul, ugly, It. ordura and ordo, filthy. Skeat, Scheler, and Diez incorrectly deduce these words from Lat. horridus, as if that which excites horror, and so is disgusting, repulsive. There is little doubt, however, that ordure was originally lordure, which was afterwards understood as l'ordure. Compare old It. lordura, lordezza, ordure, filthiness, lordare, to foul or sully, lordo (not ordo), foul, filthy (Florio), and these are from Lat. luridus, discoloured, livid, darkened, and so sullied, dirty (so Wedgwood); in later Latin used in the sense of foul, rotten. Hence also Fr. lourd (Prov. lort), unhandsome, sottish, clownish (Scheler), lourdaut, a lout or boor, also lordault (Cotgrave); It. lordone, a filthy sloven. Compare Swed. lort, dirt, dung; lorta, to dirty; lortig, dirty.

ORMA (It.), "a rule or direction, . . . a custome, vse, fashion" (Florio), is a mutilated form of Lat. norma.

ORSE (Fr.), a sea-term, is a misunderstanding, as l'orse, of an original lorse, = Netherland. lurts, left, according to Scheler.

OTTER might seem at first sight to have originated from Fr. loutre (mistaken for l'outre), which is from Lat. lutra, Greek ἐνυδρίς, the water-animal, the otter, Sp. nutria (Stevens, 1706). It is, however, an independent word, A. Sax. oter (Dut. otter, Icel. otr, Swed. utter), corresponding to Greek ἡύδρα, a water-snake or hydra (Skeat), with which Pictet equates Sansk. and Zend udra, the water-animal. Compare also its names, Welsh dufrgi, i. e. dufr-ci, "water-dog" (Stokes), and Irish dobhar-cu, "water-dog" (O'Reilly).

OTTONE (It.), brass, stands for lottone, lattone (Florio), the initial l being mistaken for the article; Sp. laton, Fr. laiton, Eng. latten.

OUCH or ouche, an old word for a gem, or the socket in which it is set (A. V. Ex. xxviii.), is a misunderstanding, an ouch for a nouch, from old Fr. nouche, nosche, a buckle, O. H. Ger. nusca, Low Lat. nusca (Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-Book, s. v.; Skeat), sometimes found in the forms, L. Lat. musca, Fr. mouche, as if a fly-shaped ornament (Atkinson, Vie de St. Auban, p. 65).

Nowche, monile.—Prompt. Parv.

An ouche of gold.

Chaucer, C. Tales, 6325.

Ful of nowches gret and smale.

Id. 8258.

Adorn'd with gemmes and owches wondrous fayre.

Spenser, F. Q. I. x. 31.

À robe d'or batüe e nusches de aesmal.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 20.

He gave her an ouche couched with pearlys and precious stonys.—Horman.

Ouche for a bonnet, afficquet.—Palsgrave.

So Fr. oche, the nick, nock, or notch, of an arrow (Cotgrave), also loche (Palsgrave), seems to be formed from Eng. notch (q. d. un noche, un 'oche).—Vid. Way, Prompt. Parv. s. v. Nokke.

OUGHVAL, the name of several parishes in Ireland, has lost an initial n, and should be Noughaval (Ir. Nuachongbhail, "new habitation"). The n was detached in consequence of being mistaken for the article 'n, an, "the." Compare Breton Ormandi for Normandy (Joyce, i. 25-26).

OUGHT, often used popularly for a nought or cypher in arithmetic, e. g. "carry ought."

OUNCE, the beast so called, a kind of lynx, Fr. once, Sp. onza, Portg. onça. We took the word from the French, where once stands for old Fr. lonce (Cotgrave), mistaken for l'once, It. lonza (also onza), which seems to be from Lat. lynx, Greek λύγξ (Diez); but Skeat compares Pers. yúz, a panther.

OUTHORNE, in the Percy Folio MS., for a nouthorn or neat's horn (nowt cattle).

There was many an outhorne in Carlile was blowne,

& the bells backward did ringe.

vol. iii. p. 89, l. 345.

P.

PAPER in the last analysis is found to contain a latent article agglutinated to a substantive. It is the same word as Fr. papier, Lat. papyrus, Greek pápyros, the Egyptian rush that yields paper. Compare Welsh pabir, rushes. All these words are from the ancient Egyptian pa apu (or pu apu), "the apu," or paper-reed (Cyperus antiquorum), mentioned in Isaiah xix. 7 (Wilkinson, Ancient Egyptians, vol. ii. pp. 120, 179, ed. Birch). Similarly, the city Pithom (Ex. i. 11) is probably for pi-Thoum, "the Thoum" (Gesenius); pyramid, Greek pyramis, for pi-ram, "the high" (Birch, in Bunsen's Egypt, vol. v.); pirómis (Herodotus, ii. 142) for pi-romi, "the man;" Pi-beseth (Ezek. xxx. 17), "the (city) Bast."

PARRITOR, a Lincolnshire form of apparitor, a bishop's officer; Lancashire paritor, a verger, and so Shakespear, Love's L. Lost. iii. 1, 188.

PASSIONS, and Patience, scientific Lat. Patientia, names for a species of dock, are perhaps from the Italian name under which it was introduced from the south, lapazio (in Florio lampazzo and lapato), Lat. lapathum, mistaken for la passio, the passion of Christ (Prior, Pop. Names of Brit. Plants). Lancashire payshun-dock (E. D. Soc. Glossary, 210).

Gathering . . . payshun-dock and "green-sauce" to put in their broth.—Waugh, Lanc. Sketches, p. 50.

PEAL, the loud continuous sounding of bells, guns, &c., is a corrupt form of appeal, old Eng. apele, apel, evidently misunderstood as a pele; old Fr. appel, apel, an appeal, from appeller, Lat. appellare, to call or summon.

A-pele of belle ryngyng (al. apele of bellis). Classicum.—Prompt. Parv.

POCALYPS, a common form in old documents of apocalypse, doubtless understood as a pocalypse, like pistle for epistle, as if a pistle.

With the Pocalyps of Jon
The Powlus Pystolus everychon.

Sir Degrevant, l. 1438 (Thornton Romances, p. 237).

POLLETTE, an old form of epaulette, understood as a paulette.

"POSTYME, sekenesse. Apostema."—Prompt. Parvulorum.

POTECARY, a very common form of apothecary in old writers (e.g. Latimer), and so pistle for epistle (Vision of P. Plowman, A. x. 106), and postle for apostle, popularly understood no doubt by the ignorant as "a pothecary," "a pistle," "a postle." Compare prentice for apprentice; penthouse for apentis; old Eng. collet for acolyte; complice for accomplice; sumcyon for assumption (Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 4); a polige for apology (Register of Stationers, Shaks. Soc. i. 47); brygement for abridgement (Id. p. 112); surance for assurance (Tit. Andronicus, v. 2); say, trial (Jonson), for assay; postume for apostume.

PRÊLE (Fr.), the plant horse-tail, formerly spelt la presté, is an incorrect form of old Fr. l'asprelle (mistaken for la presté), It. asprella, dimin. of Lat. asper, rough, so called from its rough stalk (Scheler).

PRENTICE, an old corruption of apprentice, one put to learn or "apprehend" a trade, no doubt understood as a prentice.

Apparayleden him as a prentis · þe Peple for to serue.

Vision of P. Plowman, A. ii. 190.

Q.

QUERY, A, an old form of equerry, the initial vowel being probably confounded with the indefinite articles. "Querries [of Ecuries, Fr. Stables] the Grooms of the King's Stables;" "A gentleman of the Query [Ecuyer F.] a Gentleman whose office is to hold the King's Stirrup when he mounts on Horseback."—Bailey. Compare spinet, formerly espinette (Pepys), old Fr. espinette.

(It.) Maestro di stalla, a maister of the querie, a gentleman of the horse.

Stalla, any kind of stable or querie for horses.—Florio.

As skilfull querry that commands the stable.
Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 145 (1621).

R.

RABYTE, an old Eng. word for a war horse, is said to be for Arabite, an Arab horse. See REBESK below.

Sir Guy bestrode a Rabyte
That was mickle and nought light,
That Sir Beves in Paynim londe
Hadde wounnen with his honde.

Sir Bevis of Hamptown.

RACCOON has lost an initial α, which was doubtless mistaken for the article, as was probable in the case of a foreign word, the earlier form being araha-coune (Haldeman, On American Dictionaries). In a glossary of N. American Indian words, about 1610, it is given as arathkone (Skeat, Etyim. Dict. p. 798). Similarly American 'possum is opossum, perhaps understood as a possum; and caiman from Caribbean acayuman, a crocodile (Scheler).

An Eagle from Russia; a Posown from Hispaniola.—Broadsheet temp. Q. Anne [Morley, Bartholomew Fair, ch. xx.].

RACK, an old popular form of arrack (Nares), formerly spelt arack (Arab. araq). Compare Sp. raque, arrack; Mod. Greek τὸ ράκι (brandy), for τὸ ἀρράκι.

The 9 Decr. [1616] we . . . sold them two quines of Rice with some few Hennes, & racke.—Journal of Master Nathaniel Court-hop (Sussex Archæolog. Coll. xxvii. p. 187).

RAIMENT, in Spenser rayment, stands for arraiment, old Eng. araiment, arayment, which was probably mistaken for a raiment. So old Eng. ray for array; and 'parel (Lear) for apparel; rainment (Fox) for arraignment; sumcyon for assumption; bitterment for arbitrement.

Ayment, Paramentum.—Prompt. Parv.

They put themaeluea in hattell ray & went to meet them.—North, Plutarch, 1595, p. 229.

And all the damzels of that towne in ray
Come dauncing forth, and joyous carrols song.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, V. xi. 34.

RAME, Italian word for copper or brass. The initial vowel, seen in Wallach. arame, Fr. airain, Sp. arambre, Lat. ceramina (Festus), has probably been swallowed up by the article.

RANNY, a Norfolk word for the shrew-mouse, stands for aranny or eranny, old Eng. ereyne (Capgrave), Lat. araneus, whence also It. ragno.

REBESK, an old art term for arabesque, ornamentation of the Arabic type (in Skinner, 1671).

Arabesque, Rebesk worke.—Cotgrave.

Compare :—

My god-phere was a Rabian or a Jew.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iv. 2.

REKLAS is given by Dickinson as a Cumberland word for the auricula. Probably reklas is a corruption of auriculas, rekla being for auricula understood as a ricula.

REST-HARROW. The name of the weed so called is for arrest-harrow, other names for it being remora aratri (delay plough), L. Lat. arresta bovis, Fr. aresté bœuf (Gerarde, Herball).

RIGOGOLO, It. for a rook, daw, or chough (Florio), according to Diez is from a Latin aurigalgulus, galgulus, whence Sp. galgulo, a goldfinch.

S.

SAMPLE, an old corruption of old Eng. asaumple (Ancren Riwle), another form of esaumple, old Fr. esemple, from Lat. exemplum (see Skeat).

SAY, a trial, test, or examination, is a frequent form in old authors (Nares) of assay (old Fr. essai), understood perhaps as a say. Shirley has a say-master for assay-master.

To take

A say of venison, or stale fowl, by your nose,
Which is a solecism at another's table.

Massinger, The Unnatural Combat, iii. 1.

SCALLION, for ascalonian (sc. onion), old Fr. escalogre, Lat. ascalonia, named from the city of Ascalon. Of the same origin is Fr. échalote, old Fr. eschalote, Eng. "a shallot."

Of onions the Greeks have devised sundry kinds, to wit, the Sardin, Samothracian, Alsidan, Setanian, Schista, and Ascalonia [i. little onions or Sealions] taking that name of Ascalon a city in Jury.—Holland, Pliny, 1634, tom. ii. p. 20.

SESSMENT, a rate or assessment, N. W. Lincolnshire (Peacock).

SIZE stands for old Eng. assize or assise (probably mistaken for a size), an assessed portion, a regulation or standard quantity, then any measure or dimension, Fr. assise, a settlement, It. assisa, from Lat. assessus. In the Romance of Sir Tryamour two persons are said to be "at oon assyse," i.e. of the one size (Wright). So size, an allowance of provisions (Lear), whence sizar at the University; and vulgar Eng. the sizes for the assizes. Compare old Eng. say, a trial, for assay; and seth (Fabyan) for aseth, assets.

An old version of Vegetius speaks of two kinds of darts, "one of the more assise [= greater size], the other of the lesse" (in Way, Prompt. Parv. p. 343). Size, glue, is substantially the same word, It. sisa, for assisa, an assizing, settling, or fixing (of colours, &c.), that which makes them lie close (Lat. assidere). See Skeat, s.v.

Where Life still lues, where God his Sises holds [Marg. Assises.]
Enuiron'd round with Seraphins.
J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 42.

SOLAN-GOOSE contains a latent article, solan (formerly also solan-d) representing Icel. súla-n, i.e. "the-gannet," súla (gannet) + n (the), the article being suffixed as is usual in the Scandinavian languages; e.g. Icel. tunga-n, "the tongue." Compare Shetland sooleen, "the sun," from Dan. sol-en, the-sun, (-en = the).—Skeat. So Swed. trä-d, tree, is a corruption of trä-et, "the-wood."

As numerous as Solond geese
I' th' islands of the Orcaides.

S. Butler, Genuine Remains, ii. 107, l. 92
(ed. Clarke).

SPARAGUS, sperage, and sparrow-grass, stand for Lat. asparagus, the initial a being dropt, perhaps from being mistaken for the indef. article.

SPREE, a prov. Eng. word for a frolic or jollification, is no doubt from Welsh asbri, a trick, mischief, understood as a sbrí (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1855, p. 239).

STARLING, or Sterling, an old name for a coin (see p. 371), stands for Esterling or Easterling, originally a term applied to the Eastphalian traders, who were famed for the purity of their coin.

STORSHON = a (n) ('a) sturtium!—East Anglia, B. 20, E. D. Soc.

SYLUM, the Lincolnshire form of asylum (Peacock), regarded as a sylum. Similarly Mr. Tulliver, in The Mill on the Floss, says, "I'll have nothing to do wi' a 'cademy."

They'll ha' to send him to th' 'sylum.—Lancashire Glossary, p. 205 (E. D. S.).

T.

TABIS (Fr.), a kind of silk, our "tabby," It., Sp. and Portg. tabi, are from Arab. attābī, the initial syllable having been dropt, probably because mistaken for the article al, which becomes at before t. 'Attābī was originally the name of the quarter of Bagdad where the stuff was manufactured (Devic).

TAIN (Fr.), tinfoil, an incorrect form of l'étain, understood as le tain.

TANSY, a plant-name, old Fr. tomasie, stand for atanasy, old Fr. athanasie, It. atanasia (from Lat. and Greek athanasia, immortality, so called perhaps from its durable flowers, like Fr. immortelles; compare amaranth, from Greek amarántos, unfading). The initial a was perhaps dropt from being confused with the article, as if a tansy, la thanasie.

TASSAN, } Irish place-names, owe TUMMERY, } their initial t to the TURAGH, } article an, after which it is inserted before a vowel, and stand respectively for Irish an-t-assan, "the-waterfall," an-t-iomaire, "the-ridge," an-t-iubhrach, "the-yew-land" (Joyce, i. 29).

TAYLOT, a Gloucestershire word for a hay-loft, is no doubt merely th' hay-loft or thayloft. So a writer in The Gentleman's Magazine, August, 1777, who also quotes tovel as a Derbyshire word for a hovel, i.e. th' hovel, t' hovel; tierne cross (Somner) for the iron cross.

I . . . determined to sleep in the tallat awhile, that place being cool and airy, and refreshing with the smell of sweet hay.—Blackmore, Lorna Doone, ch. xxxi.

TEGGIA, a dialectic Italian word for a hut, Grisons tegia (thea), a chalet, from Lat. attegaia (Diez), the initial vowel having been absorbed by the article.

THAXTED, a place-name in England, is probably The Axstead, and Thistleworth, The Istle-worth, says I. Taylor, Words and Places, p. 384.

THEBES, in Egypt, Greek Thēbai, Copt. Thaba, Memphitic Thapé, are from Egyptian Tápé, i.e. t (fem. article) + ápé, head, and so means "the capital" (Rawlinson's Herodotus, ii. 4).

THE VIZES, the popular form of the name of the town Devizes in Wiltshire. "Ner the Wizes" is said to have been the direction of a letter that passed through the Post Office, meaning "Near Devizes" (W. Tegg, Posts and Telegraphs). Camden has "the Vies" (see Nares, s.v.), evidently a corruption of De Vies. Compare the following, where the gre is a mistake for degree :—

Loke also þou skorne no mou,
In what þe gre þou se hym gon.

The Babees Book, p. 15, l. 66.

While the proud Vies your trophies hoast
And unrevenged walks Waller's ghost.

Hudibras, Pt. I. ii. 498.

Devizes is said to be a corruption of Low Lat. Divisæ (I. Taylor, Words and Places, p. 267).

TIRE, an ornament for the head, is for atire or attire, old Eng. "a-tyre, or tyre of women."—Prompt. Parv. See TIRE, p. 394. Compare ray for array, and parel for apparel.

I ha' but dight ye yet in the out-dress,
And 'parel of Earine.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 1.

TONE, } the tone and the tother,
TOTHER, } frequent in old and prov.
English for "the one" and "the other," stand for old Eng. thet one, thet other, where thet is Mod. Eng. that, the final t being the sign of the neuter gender (Skeat). A corresponding mistake in Latin would be i daliud, illu daliud for id aliud, illud aliud. Compare NALE.

The tan and the tother are often found in Scotch law papers.

þat on is Seint Peter and þat oðer Seint Andrew.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 175.

He schal hate oon, and loue the tothir.—Wycliffe, Luke xvi. 13.

Wan I by meit for money I selle þe money
þat þe toþer man bieþ, as I bye þing þat þe toþer selliþ.—Apology for Lollards, p. 9 (Camden Soc.).

In entent of chaunging to gidre þe toon for þe toþer.—Id. p. 53.

Had not the Angell thither directed the Shepheards; had not the Star thither pointed the Magi, neither tone nor tothir would ever there have sought Him.—Andrewes, Sermons, fol. p. 110.

TOPAZ, Fr. topase, Lat. topazus, topazion, Greek τόπαζος, τοπάζιον. The origin of this word has not been traced. I think it probable that the Greek word originated in a coalescence of the article with the substantive, and stands for τὸ πάζιον, which was the more likely to occur as the latter was a foreign word, borrowed from the Hebrew, viz. páz (פֶּז), pure gold, also translated a "precious stone" in the Septuagint. The topaz has frequently been called the "golden stone" on account of its colour, and is identical with the chrysolite, Greek χρυσόλιθος, "golden stone," Rev. xxi. 20 (see Bib. Dict. s. vv. Topaz, iii. 1563, and Beryl, Appendix, xxx.; Delitzsch, Song of Songs, p. 104). The Septuagint actually renders Heb. páz in Ps. cxix. 127 (A. V. "fine gold"), by τοπάζιον, topaz (Prayer Book, v. "precious stone"), where Schleusner proposed to resolve the word into τὸ πάζιον. For the agglutination of the article, compare ta-panta, used by Petronius for "universe," which is merely Greek τὰ πάντα; and olibanum, the frankincense of commerce, which appears to be Greek ὀλίβανος (Bible Educator, i. 374; Bib. Dict. i. 633); tautology from Greek ταυτολογία, i.e. τὸ-αὐτό-λογία, "the-same-(thing)-saying." For the meaning compare besides chrysolite, Welsh eurfaen (i.e. eur-maen), "gold-stone," and the following :—

The gold color in the Topaze gaue it the name Chrysolith.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. ii. 630.

The golden stone is the yellow topaz.—Bacon, Natural History.

To blasoune therin vertuys stanis, gold Is
More precious than oucht that ma be set.
In it bot stonne gold y, as thopasis.

Scotch Poem on Heraldry, l. 73 [Book of Precedence, E.E.T.S. p. 96.]

Pliny mentions a report of King Juba that this stone was first brought from an island called Topazas in the Red Sea, which is probably a fiction with a view to bring it into connexion with Greek τοπάζειν, to aim at or guess.

The which is oftentimes so mistie that sailers haue much ado to find it, whereupon it tooke that name: for in the Troglodytes language (saith he) Topazin is as much to say, as to search or seek for a thing.—Holland, Plinies Nat. Hist. ii. 618.

So thurlepole, quoted in Nares (ed. Halliwell and Wright) as one of the "great fishes of the sea," from Castell of Health, 1595, evidently stands for th' hurlepole or th' whirlpool, the old name of a species of whale. See further under WHIRLPOOL, p. 434, where thurle polle is quoted from Russell's Boke of Nurture.

It may be further noted that ρόπαζος is a rare word in Greek, and that other names for precious stones in that language are of Semitic origin, having no doubt been introduced by Phœnician merchants, e. g. ἰασπις, jasper, Heb. yâshpêh; σάπφειρος, sapphire, Heb. sappîr. Compare Pusey, On Daniel, p. 646 (3rd. ed.).

TUILM, a Gaelic name for the elm (Shaw), is no doubt for an-t-uilm, the elm, where the t belongs to the article. Compare Ir. uilm, ailm, elm, = Lat. ulmus (Pictet, i. 221).

TYBURN, west of London, was originally Teybourne (Stow) or Th'Eybourn, i. e. "the Eye bourn," named from the little river Eye or Aye, which also has given its name to Hay Hill, formerly Aye Hill; Ebury, the "bury" on the Eye, the old name for Pimlico, surviving in Ebury Street; and perhaps Hyde Park for Heye Park. (See Stanley, Memoirs of Westminster Abbey, pp. 8, 195.)

U.

UMPIRE, old Eng. an oumper or owmpere, an incorrect form of a noumpere, or nompeyre, from old Fr. nonpair, odd (Cotgrave), Lat. non par, not equal; as if we wrote onpareil for nonpareil. An umpire is properly an odd man, or third party, chosen to arbitrate between two litigants, and who standing apart from either side (cf. Lat. sequester, from secus) will indifferently minister justice. The correct form would be numpire. Compare for the loss of n, "an umbre hale."—Cursor Mundi, l. 419 (Fairfax MS.), for "a nombre hale" (Cotton MS.).

An oumper, impar.—Cath. Anglicum.
Nowmpere or owmpere, Arbitrer, sequester.
—Prompt. Parv.

Chese a mayde to be nompere to put the quarrell at ende.—Test. of Love, i. 319 [Tyrwhitt].

Robyn þe ropere · arose bi þe southe
And nempned hym for a noumpere · þat no debate nere,

For to trye þis chaffare · bitwixen hem þre.
Vision of P. Plowman, B. v. 338
(ed. Skeat).

Sylvester says that spirits—

'Twixt God and man retain a middle kinde:
And (Vmpires) mortall to th' immortall ioyne.
Du Bartas, p. 177 (1621).

With this meaning of the word as a third party called in to arbitrate when two disagree, compare the synonymous usages, Scot. odman or odisman, one having a casting vote (Jamieson); overman or oversman (Veitch, Poetry of Scot. Border, p. 307); thirdsman (Scott, St. Ronan's Well); Cumberland thirdman, an umpire (Dickinson); Sp. tercero (from tertius), a thirdman, a mediator, terciar, to mediate (Stevens); Fr. entiercer, to sequester or put into a third hand (Cotgrave), Low Lat. interitiare (Spelman, Du Cange).

USCIGNUOLO (It.), the nightingale, for luscignuolo (Lat. lusciniâ), understood as il uscignuolo.

V.

VAILES, profits accruing to servants, is from old Eng. avail, profit, no doubt misunderstood as a vail, and afterwards used in the plural.

You know your places well;
When better fall, for your avails they fell.
Shakespeare, All's Well that Ends Well,
iii. 1, 22.

VALANCHE (Smollett), and vollenge, occasional forms of avalanche (Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary), apparently understood as a valanche.

VAMBRACE, } English forms of Fr.
VANCOURIER, } avant-bras, armour for VANGUARD, } the arm (Cotgrave),

avant-coureur, and avant-garde, the initial a being in each case probably mistaken for the indefinite article. Compare VAMP, p. 420, for avampé.

VENTURE has originated in a misunderstanding of the old word aventure as a venture, Fr. aventure, from Low Lat. adventura, a thing about to come or happen, and so an uncertainty. The original and proper form of the phrase at a venture was at aventure. See Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-book, s.v.

But at aventure the instrument I toke,
And blewes so loude that all the toure I shoke.
S. Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, cap. xxvi.
p. 115 (Percy Soc.).

The enemies at aventure runne against theyr engines.—Hall, Chron. 1550, Hen. V.
p. 16 b.

He was some hielding Fellow, that had stolne
The Horse he rode-on : and vpon my life
Speake at adventure.

Shakespeare, 2 Hen. IV. i. 1 (l. 59), 1623.

[The Globe ed. here has "spoke at a venture."] ]

A certain man drew a bow at a venture.—
A. V. 1 Kings xxii. 34.

Compare a vantage for a(d)vantage :—

Therefore to them which are young, Salomon shews what a vantage they have above the aged.—H. Smith, Sermons, 1657, p. 216.

VANGELISTE, a frequent old Eng. form of evangelist, understood probably as a vangelist. Wycliffe has vangelie (1 Tim. i. 11) for evangel or gospel. So old Eng. lowance for allowance; rithmetique (B. Jonson) for arithmetic; ringo (Howell) for eringo.

Sayn Mathew the wangeliste.

Eng. Metrical Homilies, p. 34 (ed. Small).

Vow stands for the ordinary old Eng. avow or avowe (Prompt. Parv.), frequently in texts misprinted a vow, a derivative of old Eng. avowen, old Fr. avouer, from Lat. advotare. "This avow."—Chaucer, C. Tales, 2416; "[He] performed his avowe."—Legenda Aurea, p. 47 (Way).

A-wowyn, or to make a-wowe, Voveo.—Prompt. Parv.

I make myne avowe verreilly to Cryste.

Morte Arthure, l. 308.

Compare beatilles, an old culinary word for the giblets of fowl (Bailey, Wright), representing Fr. abatis. So tender, a small vessel attendant on another, is properly attender, evidently mistaken for a tender.

VOWTRE, frequently found in old writings for avowtry, adultery, old Fr. avoutrie. See ADVOWTRY, p. 3.

pat man how [=ought] to curse for crime of vowtre.—Apology for Lollards, p. 21 (Camden Soc.).

On sleþ an oþer hi . . . vowtrand or doing a voutri.—Id. p. 87.

W.

WHITTLE, an old word for a knife (Shakespeare), whence whittle, to cut away, is a corruption of old Eng. thwitel (from A. Sax. þwitan, to cut), perhaps mistaken for th' witel, "the wittle." Lancashire thwittle, a knife (E. D. Soc.). Compare riding for thriding, i.e. thirthing, the third part of a county.

WORDS CORRUPTED THROUGH MISTAKES ABOUT NUMBER.

SUBSTANTIVES ending in -s, -se, or -ce, which consequently either in sound or form simulate the appearance of plurals, are often popularly mistaken as such, and constructed with verbs in the plural. I have observed a class of Sunday School children in repeating their collect almost unanimous in thinking it due to grammar to say "forgiving us those things whereof our conscience are afraid."

Randle Holme, on the other hand, has "Innocence Day" (Academy, p. 131, 1688) for Innocents' Day. The claimant in the Tichborne trial, when questioned incidentally about "the Marseillaise" replied that he did not know "them."

Even the most correct speakers will not hesitate to say, "Where riches are, some alms are due." In some instances popular errors of this kind have so far reacted on the form of the word that new singulars have been evolved to correspond to the imaginary plural. Hence such words as a pea, a cherry, for a pease, a cherries, sherry for sherris, &c.

Instances of the contrary mistake, plurals being turned into singulars, are not wanting. Implements consisting of two inseparable parts, though plural in form, are generally treated as singulars, e.g. a bellows, a pincers, a scissors, a tongs.

In Middlesex, a habs or haps, used popularly by the common folk for a painful sore or gathering, is evidently an imaginary singular of the plural-sounding word abscess (Cockneyçè habscess). At different times I have heard the sentences, "My daughter has a habs in her jaw;" "My husband has a bad haps under his arm."

So rice (old Fr. ris) was once taken for a plural :

Nym rys, and lese hem, and wasch hem clene.—Warner, Antiq. Culin. p. 39.

Li zozo, a bird, in the Creole patois of Mauritius, is from Fr. les oiseaux sounding to the ear as le soiseau (Athenæum, Dec. 31, 1870, p. 889). In the same dialect zot, another (for 's'aut'), is from Fr. les autres.

In the Hebrew of Job v. 5, the word tzammim, an intriguer, having all the appearance of a plural (like our alms or riches), has actually been so taken by the Targumist, who renders it "robbers" (Delitzsch, in loc.).

These various irregularities have in fact arisen from a misguided endeavour to be regular, and they furnish curious examples of what may be termed the "pathology" of grammar (Philog. Soc. Trans. 1873-4, p. 259).

A.

ABORIGINE, sometimes ignorantly used as a singular of aborigines, Lat. aborigines, a word found only in the plural.

An aborigine of some region not far removed from the equator.—Church Record (Dublin), Dec. 1869, p. 18.

To the European sense of right they united the desperate energy of the aborigine.—The Standard, July 18, 1882, p. 5.

Similarly relic is a word, like "remains," originally employed only in the plural, old Eng. relikes, Fr. reliques, Lat. reliquias, acc. of reliquice, relics.

AGATE (for achate) stands for old Eng. achates, which was no doubt mistaken for a plural, but is really borrowed from Lat. and Greek achates, a stone named from the river Achates in Sicily near which it was discovered.

Onyx and achatis both more & lesse.

Play of the Sacrament, Philog. Soc. Trans. 1860-1, p. 110.

His stone and herbe as saith the scole Ben achates and primerole.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, iii. 130.

Achate, the precious stone Achates.—Cotgrave.

ALMS, now always regarded as a plural because it ends in -s, so that it would be "bad grammar" to say "alms was given to the poor." It is really a singular, being the mod. form of old Eng. almes, or almesse, A. Sax. almesse, or almæsse, which is merely a corrupted form of L. Lat. eleēmosyna, from Greek ἐλεῖμῶσίνῃ, pity (compare our "charity"). "Eleemosynary aid" is merely alms "writ large." Compare ÆLMESSE, p. 4. The A. V. is inconsistent in its usage:—

[He] asked an alms.—Acts iii. 3.

Thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.—Id. x. 4.

Alms is a good gift unto all that give it.—Tobit iv. 11.

The alms of a man is as a signet with him.—Eccles. xvii. 22.

Fruits, as it were, fastened on externally, alms given that they may be gloried in, prayers made that they may be seen.—Abp. Trench, Miracles, p. 336 (9th ed.).

Wycliffe's pun on almes and all-amiss shows how the word was pronounced in his time:—

þe endowynge of þe clergy wip worldly lorde-schipe owȝt not to be callid almes, but rather alle a mysse or wastynge of goddis godes.—Unprinted Eng. Works of Wyclif, p. 383 (E. E. T. S.).

But now þorou þis perpetual alamysse þat þe clerkis and religious folke callen almes, cristes ordenaunce is vndo.—Id. p. 389.

ANCHOVY is a corruption of an anchovies, or anchoves, Dut. "ansjovis, anchoves."—Sewel, 1708.

See above, p. 8.

ASSETS, a legal term and apparent plural, as when we say "no assets are forthcoming," is only an Anglicized form of Fr. assez, sufficient (i. e. to discharge a testator's debts and legacies), old Eng. assetz (P. Plowman), from Lat. ad satis. The word, therefore, is not, as generally understood, plural, but singular.

The value of the tenant's right is an available asset against his debt to the laudlord.—The Standard, July 22, 1882.

Old Eng. forms are aseth, assetth, asetth (= satisfaction), which appear to be fictitious singulars.

þerfor make to god a-seep for synne . . . Many men maken aseep bi sorrow of herte.—Wyclif's Unprinted Eng. Works, p. 340 (E. E. T. S.).

AUROCH. Dr. Latham mentions that he has met some instances of "an auroch" being used, as if the singular of aurochs (Dict. s.v. Bonasus)—a mistake pretty much the same as if we spoke of an oc instead of an ox, ochs being the German for ox.

It is strange to find an eminent philologist like Mr. T. L. K. Oliphant speaking of our fathers "hunting the auroch" (Old and Middle Eng. p. 13).

AXEY (Prov. Eng.), the ague, is a feigned singular of access, mistaken for a plural, as if aveys. See AXEY, p. 15, and NABSY, p. 581.

The terycan ye quartane or ye brynnyng ars. Play of the Sacrament, l. 611 (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1860-1).

B.

BAIZE, a woollen stuff, now used as a singular, was originally a plural, viz. bayes (Cotgrave), plu. of bay, Fr. baye (Dan. bai, Dut. baai), originally, perhaps, cloth of a bay colour (Fr. bai).—Skeat, Wedgwood. Compare Fr. bureau (O. Fr. burel, O. Eng. borel), orig. coarse cloth of a russet colour, from Lat. burrus, reddish.

Baye . . . the cloth called bayes.—Cotgrave.

BALANCE (Fr. balance, Lat. bi-lan-cem, "two-platter"), from its sounding like a plural and signifying two scales, is used by old writers as a plural. "A peyre of Ballaunce."—Drant (Morris, Accidence, p. 98).

Reproove our ballance when they are faultie.—Gosson, School of Abuse, p. 54.

Are these ballance here, to weigh the flesh.
Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.

BARBERRY is a corruption of Fr. berberis, Low Lat. berberis, Arab. barbâris (Skeat), perhaps understood as barberries, a plural. Compare heresy, O. Fr. heresie, from Lat. heresis, Greek hairêsis, the taking up (of a wrong opinion), which is much the same as if analysy had been formed out of analysis, Greek análusis. Shênstone somewhat similarly uses crise (Fr. crise) for crisis. See DOSE below.

Behold him, at some crise, prescribe
And raise with drugs the sick'ning tribe.

Progress of Taste, pt. iv. l. 56.

BELLOWS, now used as a singular, was originally the plural of old Eng. belowe (Prompt. Parv.), a bag, another form of the old Eng. beli, bali, A. Sax. bælig, a bag (Skeat). A bellows is properly a pair of leathern blow-bags joined together (Ger. blase-balg = Lat. folles).

þe deouel . . . mucheleð his beli bles.—
Ancruen Riwle, p. 296.

[The devil increaseth with his bellow(s)
the blast.]

BIBLE, Fr. bible, Lat. biblia, is the Greek βιβλία, books, the sacred writings, plural of βιβλίον, a book. The Latin word was sometimes taken as a fem. sing. substantive. See Westcott, The Bible in the Church, p. 5; Smith, Bible Dict. i. 209.

BIGA, and quadriga, used by later Latin writers for a chariot, are in earlier writers properly plurals, bigæ, quadrigæ, standing for bijugæ, quadrijugæ (sc. equæ), a double yoke, or quadruple yoke, of mares drawing a chariot. For these and other plural forms in Latin, see Philog. Soc. Trans. 1867, p. 105.

BLOUSE, a smock-frock, Fr. blouse, is from old Fr. bliaus, which is the plural of bliaut, a rich over-garment (see Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.).

BODICE, a stays, was originally a plural, the word being a corruption of *body*s (Fuller), or "a pair of bodies" (Sherwood), i.e. a front and back body laced together. Compare dice for dies, and pence for pennies.

Sometimes with sleeves and bodies wide,
And sometimes straiter than a hide.

Sam. Butler, Works, ii. 164, l. 30
(ed. Clarke).

With the plural bodices (= bodies-es)
compare oddses used by Butler.

Can tell the oddses of all games,
And when to answer to their names.

Sam. Butler, Works, ii. 155, l. 66
(ed. Clarke).

Like rooks, who drive a subtle trade,
By taking all the oddses laid.

Id. ii. 286.

BRACE, a pair, is the old Fr. brace, "the two arms," from Lat. brachia, the arms, plu. of brachium, an arm (Skeat).

BRACKEN, coarse fern, is properly the old plural in -en (Mid. Eng. braken, A. Sax. braccan) of brake (1, a fern, filix.—Prompt. Parv.; 2, a thicket), A. Sax. bracce, a fern. Thus bracken = brakes (see Skeat, s.v., and Prior).

BREE, a name for the gadfly in the Cleveland dialect and in N. English, from breese, A. Sax. briosa, brimsa, Swed. and Dan. bremis (Ger. bremse), the original word evidently having been mistaken for a plural. Similar corruptions are the following, given in Wright, Prov. and Obsolete Dictionary: Essex blay, a blaze (as if blays); chimny, a shift, from chemise (as if chimies); furny, a furnace (as if furnies); Somerset maz, a maze (as if mays); pray, a press or crowd, formerly spelt prease (as if prays).

The learned write an insect breeze

Is but a mongrel prince of bees,

That falls before a storm on crows

And stings the founders of his house.

Butler, Hudibras, Pt. III. ii. l. 4.

BREECHES is a double plural (as incorrect as geeses would be); breech, O. Eng. breche, breke, A. Sax. brêc, being already the plural of brôc, just as O. Eng. têth (teeth) is of tôth, fêt (feet) of fôt, &c. So Icel. brækr is the plural of brók. See BREECHES, p. 38.

Breche or breke, Braccæ.—Prompt. Parv.

He didd next his whyte lere

Of cloth of lake fyn and clere

A breech and eek a sherte.

Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 2049.

The plural hors-es is a refinement on the old Eng. and A. Saxon, which has hors for both plural and singular, pretty much as if we were to speak of sheeps and deers. We still say a battery, &c., of so many horse.

So scholde hors be drawe yn þe same wyse.
Trevisa, Morris and Skeat Specimens,
ii. 239, l. 108.

BROCCOLI is properly the plural of It. broccolo, a small sprout (Prior), a dimin. of brocco, a shoot (Skeat). Compare CELERY. The elder Disraeli has "a banditti," properly plu. of It. bandito, an outlaw (Calamities of Authors, p. 130).

BROTH, in the provincial dialects, is frequently treated as a plural, e.g. "a few broth," "Theeas broth is varyry good."—Holderness dialect (E. Yorkshire), "They are too hot" (Cambridge-shire). This is perhaps due to a confusion with the synonymous words brevis, brose, old Eng. browes, browesse, O. Fr. broues, which were used as plurals (Skeat). However, brose seems to be itself a singular, from Gael. brothas. Compare PORRIDGE below.

BURIAL, formerly beriel, is a fictitious singular of old Eng. burials, beryels, byrgels, which, though it looks like a plural, is itself a singular, A. Sax. birgels, a tomb. Compare old Eng. rekels, incense, and RIDDLE and SHUTTLE below.

And was his holie lichame leid in burietes in þe holie sepulchre, þat men sechen giet in ierusalem.—Old Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 21 (E. E. T. S.).

Prof. Skeat quotes "Beryels, sepulchrum."—Wright, Vocabularies, i. 178; and "An buryels."—Robt. of Glouc. p. 204.

Wycliffe is credited with having invented the quasi-singular form biriel (Matt. xxvii. 60), buriel (Mark vi. 29). See Skeat, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 430.

That þat blessed body of *buriel*s sholde aryse.

Vision of P. Plowman, C. xxii. 146.

C.

CAPERS, used as the name of a sauce, seems to have been properly a singular, capparis, the caper-shrub, in Wycliffe, taken directly from Lat. capparis, Greek kápparis, a caper-plant. The French have also made the word a singular, câpre, O. Fr. cappre.

A locust schal be maad fat, and capparis schal be distried.—Wycliffe, Eccles. xii. 5.

Gerarde, while noting "it is generally called Cappers, in most languages; in English Cappers, Caper, and Capers" (Herbal, p. 749), himself uses the form caper.

CELERY, Fr. céleri, from prov. It. seleri (Skeat), or sellari, which appears to be the plural of sellaro, selero, a corruption of Lat. selinum, Greek selínon, a kind of parsley (Prior, Pop. Names of Brit. Plants).

So Fr. salamis seems to be a double plural formed by adding s to salmi, from It. salami, salted meats, plu. of salame (Skeat).

CHERRY is a corrupt singular of cheris, mistaken for a plural, but really an Anglicized form of Fr. cerise, from Lat. cerasus, a cherry-tree. Compare merry (the fruit) from merise, sherry from sherris, &c.

CHERUBIN, or cherubim, the Hebrew plu. of cherub, is often incorrectly used in old writers as a sing. making its plural cherubins or cherubims.

Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubin.
Othello, iv. 2, l. 63.

Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins.

Merchant of Venice, v. i. l. 62.

Thou shalt make two cherubims of gold.—A. V. Exodus xxv. 18.

A fire-red cherubimnes face.—Cant. Tales, 626.

For God in either eye has placed a cherubin.

Dryden, Poems, p. 511, l. 156
(Globe ed.).

CHILDREN is a double plural, formed by adding the old plural formative -en (as in ox-en, prov. Eng. housen, houses) to childre or childer, which in old Eng., as still in prov. Eng. (e.g. in Lancashire and Ireland), is the plural of child (Carleton, Traits of Irish Peasantry, p. 219; Philolog. Soc. Proc. i. 115); A. Sax. cildru, infants. Childermass was the old name of Innocents' Day.

He sal say þan, "Commes now til me,
My fadir blissed childer fre."

Hampole, Prick of Conscience, l. 6148.

Myry tottyr, chyldeyrs game. Oscillum.—Prompt. Parv.

He was near eighty, . . . and had had a matter o' twenty childer.—Mrs. Gaskell, Life of C. Brontë, ch. ii. p. 13.

In soru sal þu þi childer bere.

Cursor Mundi, l. 904 (Göttingen MS.).

Compare brethren, i. e. brether (= brothers, Percy Fol. MS.) + en; old Eng. sisteren, lambren, lambs, calveren, calves.

Kyng Roboas let make 2 calveren of gold.—Maunderville, Voyage and Travaile, p. 105 (ed. Halliwell).

Feede thou my lambren.—Wycliffe, S. John xxi. 15.

CHINEE, a popular name for a Chinaman in some parts of America, as in Bret Harte's "heathen Chinee," is an assumed singular of the plural sounding word Chinese. On the other hand, Chinamen are called Chineses by Sam. Butler and Milton (Par. Lost, iii. 438). By a similar blunder sailors speak of a Portuguee for a Portuguese, and a Maltee for a Maltese (see Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1873-4, p. 253). It has even been supposed that Yankee stands for Yankees, a North American Indians' attempt to pronounce English, Anglais, Ingles.

The vulgar adjective from Malta, used by sailors and others in this island, is Maltee. I suppose they argued that as the singular of bees is bee, so the singular of Maltese is Maltee. Carrying their principle one step further, it seems to me that cheese ought to be plural and chee singular.—Sir G. C. Lewis, Letter to Sir E. Head, 1837.

COPIE, used by Tusser (1580) as a quasi-singular (prov. Eng. copy) of coppiece (old Fr. copeiz, cut-wood, brush-wood, from coper, to cut, Mod. Fr. couper), misunderstood as copies.

Fence copie in er heawers begin.

Five Hundred Pointes (E. D. Soc.),
p. 102.

CORPSE, formerly spelt corps, is frequently in old writers used as a plural, like remains (Lat. reliquiæ), as if there were a sing. form corp, which, indeed, there is in Scottish. The final -s is a part of the word, old Fr. corps, Lat. corpus, a body.

The corps of men of quality . . . are borne through the porch.—Fuller, Pisgah Sight, 1650, p. 247.

His corps were spared by special command.—Id. p. 250.

His soule thereby was nothing bettered
Because his corps were bravely buried.

Fuller, Dauids Heavie Punishment,
st. 38.

Some men . . . have in their breathless corps . . . suffered a kind of surviving shame.—Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, Art. iv.

His corps were very honourably attended.—Letter, 1672, in Athenæ Ozonienses, i. 81 (ed. Bliss).

The hall is heaped with corps.

Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia, 607.

[He was] brought hame a corp.—Noctes Ambrosiana, i. 179.

A corp set up on end by some cantrip.—Id. 161.

CUTS, in the phrase "to draw cuts," i. e. to draw lots, especially with cut strips of paper, seems to be properly a sing., being identical with Welsh cutws, a lot, cutysyn, a lot, a ticket. So the plural should be cutses, and cut is an imaginary sing.

Now draweth cutte, for that is min accord.

Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 827.

CYCLOP, a fictitious singular (Pope, Macaulay) of Cyclops, Lat. cyclops, Greek kuklops, "circular eye," mistaken for a plural; e. g. Borrow's Gypsies, p. 38. So Æthiop (Shakespeare) for Æthiops.

Taking from the God-foe Polypheme
His only eye; a Cyclop, that excelled
All other Cyclops.

Chapman, Odysseys, i. 120.

So wrought the Cyclop.

Id. x. 554.

The Cyclops did their strokes repeat.

Dryden, Threnodia Augustalis, 441.

A Cyclope, tending the fire, to the cornets began to sing.—B. Jonson, Mercury Vindicated (Works, p. 595).

Heer a huge Cyclop, there a pigme Elf.

J. Sylvester, Du Bartas, p. 92.

D.

DOSE. The original form of this word was dosis (Bacon), being the Greek dosis, a giving (cf. Ger. gift), which was probably mistaken for a plural.

A sugerd dosis

Of wormwood, and a death's-head crown'd with roses.

H. Vaughan, Siler Scintillans, 1650
(p. 146, ed. 1858).

Soeclipse from eclipsis (Gk. ekleipsis); effigy (effigy), originally an effigies (Lat. effigies); ecstasy, at first spelt ecstasis.

E.

EAVE, sometimes incorrectly used as if the singular of eavcs, which is old Eng. euesc, A. Sax. efese, Icel. ups, an "overing" or projection. The plural is eaveses. Compare prov. Eng. easing for eavesing.

Avant-toict, An house-eave, easing.—Cotgrave.

Scollops are osier twigs . . . inserted in the thatch to bind it at the ere and rigging.—W. Carleton, Traits and Stories of Irish Peasantry, vol. i. p. 87 (1843).

Metal eave gutters at 2d. per foot.—Irish Times, Dec. 12, 1868.

Mousche, . . . a spie, Eave-dropper, in former.—Cotgrave.

EFFIGY, a modern formation from effigies (Lat. effigies), popularly mistaken as a plural, just as if serj were manufactured out of series, or congerj from congeries.

So does his effigies exceed the rest in liveliness, proportion, and magnificence.—Ward, London Spy, p. 170.

As mine eye doth his effigies witness
Most truly limn'd and living in your face.

As You Like It, ii. 7, 194.

Similarly specie, or specy, is sometimes popularly used instead of species, "This dog is a different specie from the French breed."

Loud thunder dumb, and every speece of storm,

Laid in the lap of listening nature, hush'd.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, iii. 1.

F.

FLEW, or flue, down, feathery dust, seems to be an imaginary sing. of prov. Eng. flooze (or fleeze), Frisian fluus, Dut. vlies, pluis (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1856, p. 202). Compare Lancashire floose or floss, loose threads or fibres (E. D. Soc. Glossary), "a floose o hay" (Tim Bobbin). These words are probably identical with It. floscia, sleeve silk, Venet. flosso, from Lat. fluus, flowing, loose; whence also flush, a flow, and Lanc. floos, a sluice, and prov. Eng. fluke, waste cotton. Flue, a chimney passage, is a corruption of flute. Compare FLUKE.

FLUKE, or flook, a Scottish word for diarrhoea, is evidently an imaginary singular of flux (e.g. A. V. Acts xxviii. 8), understood as fluk-s, Fr. fluw, Lat. fluus, a flowing. Similarly prov. Eng. flick or fleck, the down of animals, has been formed from flir, the fur of a hare (Kent), akin to old Eng. flæw, flax (Chaucer), A. Sax. flæw.

His warm breath blows her flir up as she lies.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, 132.

FROG ought, perhaps, etymologically, to be a frogs or froks, as we see by comparing its old Eng. form frosk, A. Sax. frow, frosk, with Icel. froskr, O. H. Ger. frosk, Dut. vorsch, Ger. frosch, prov. Eng. frosk. It would be an analogous case if we had made a tug out of A. Sax. tux, tusc, a tusk or tush, or an og or och out of ox (Ger. ochs). The plural of A. Sax. frow is frowas. However, I find Prof. Skeat quotes an A. Sax. froga. Can this be a secondary form evolved from frow after having been resolved into frocs or frogs?

Frog, or frosk, a frog.—Peacock, Lonsdale Glossary.

FURZE, though now always used as a singular, e.g. "The furze is in bloom," seems to have been originally a plural, being spelt furres and furrys, and Turner in 1538 says, "Alii a furre nominant." Prof. Skeat, however, gives A. Sax. fyrs. Gerarde has furzes (Herbal, 1138).

G.

GALLOWS, now used always as a singular, a gibbet, is strictly speaking a plural, old Eng. galwes, plu. of galwe, A. Sax. galga, a cross (Skeat), and perhaps denoting two crosses or cross-pieces put together to form a gibbet. Compare STOCKS below.

GENTRY, old Eng. gentrie, is a quasi-singular formed from old Eng. gentrise, old Fr. genterise, another form of gentillece, gentleness. See GENTRY, p. 140.

Vor cas þat myzte come, vor hyre gentryse.
Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 434.

GRECE, in old Eng. a step, also spelt grees (Wychiffe, Esđ. viii. 4), is apparently from the plural of gre, Fr. gré, Lat. gradus (Way), like a stairs. Lancashire greese, stairs, steps (E. D. Soc.).

Grece, or tredyl, Gradus.—Prompt. Parv.
Degré, a staire, step, greese.—Cotgrave.

GREENERY, used for verdure, an aggregate of green things, formed apparently from analogy to shrubbery, fernery, perfumery, mercery, is as anomalous as bluery would be. It is perhaps, as H. Coleridge suggests, a corruption of old Eng. greneris, green branches (Glossarial Index), from grene, green, and ris, a branch, A. Sax. hrís. Compare GENTRY above.

What is þer in paradis

Bot grasse and flure and grene-ris.

Land of Cockayne, l. 8 (Philolog.
Soc. Trans. 1858, pt. ii. p. 156).

GRIPE, an old English word for a griffin or vulture, is a quasi-singular of Lat. gryps, Greek γρύψ.

Tantalus thirste, or proude Ixions wheele,
Or cruell gripe to gnawe my growing harte.

Tragedie of Gorboduc, 1561, ii. 1
(p. 114, Shaks. Soc. ed.).

The gripe also beside the here.

Halliwel, Archaic Dict.

The grype is foure fotedde and lyke to the egle in heed and in wynges.—Trevisa,
Bartholomeus, p. 171 (1535).

Vpon the topp a gripe stood,

Of shining gold, fine & good.

Sir Lambewell, l. 806 (Percy Fol.
MS. i. 148).

Alas hane I not paine enough my friend,

Vpon whose breast a fiercer Gripe doth tire

Than did on him who first stale downe the fire.

Sir P. Sidney, Astrophel, 14,
p. 571 (ed. 1629).

GROUSE seems to be a fictitious form first found about 1668. The older word is grice (Cotgrave), derived from old Fr. griesche, poule griesche, or greoche. As mice implies a sing. mouse, and lice, louse, it was supposed that grice involved a sing. form grouse, which was invented accordingly (see Skeat, s.v.). Contrast tit-mice incorrectly evolved out of titmouse. Griesche, greoche, is said to have meant originally the Grecian or Greekish bird (Lat. Græcisus). Compare "grig hens, called Hadrianae" (Holland, Pliny, i. 298), apparently from Fr. gregue, grégois, grégeois, = griesche, Greek; like old Eng. "fyr gregys," from Fr. feu grégeois (or grégois), "Greek fire"; and "merry grig" for "merry Greek." Lancashire grug, a dandy hen (E. D. Soc.).

H.

HEKINOK, used by a Sussex peasant as a singular of equinox.

History do tell us a high tide came up upon the hekinok, and what could stand against that?—L. Jennings, Field Paths and Green Lanes, p. 3.

I.

IGNORAMI, a learned plural of ignoramus, occurs with curious infelicity in a scientific review of a work of Mr. Darwin's:—

Indeed, among the younger savants, who have, as it were, been born into the Darwinian atmosphere, there is a tendency to pooh-pooh doubts regarding their pet hypothesis as the mad ravings of ignorami.—The Standard, Nov. 25, 1880, p. 2.

Lat. Ignoramus, "we are ignorant" (1st pers. plu. pres. indic.), is the legal formula by which a grand jury throw out an indictment for want of sufficient evidence.

Hiati is known to have been used instead of hiatuses, and even omnibi has been heard from the lips of an old gentleman of classical proclivities. These are what may be called the pitfalls of pedantry. So Fr. maître aliboron, an ignorant man who pretends to know everything, is said to have originated in a lawyer using aliborum as a genitive plural of alibi, as if it were a noun of the second declension (Huet in Scheler). Thackeray heard an old lady speak of some taking their affaires-davit—like letters-patent!

Let ignoramus juries find no traitors,

And ignoramus poets scribble satires.

Dryden, Prologue to the Duke of Guise, l. 44 (1682).

Butler has "gross phænomenas" (Hudibras, Pt. II. i. 189), and "different specices" (Pt. I. i. 865).

J.

JANEWAY, a surname, is derived from Januweys or Januayes, the old form of Genoese (Bardsley), which was probably mistaken for a plural, as if we were now to use Genoee for Genoesc. Compare Chinee, Maltee, Portuguee, for Chinese, &c.

JESSES, an old word for the straps of a hawk (Shakespeare, Oth. iii. 3, 261), is a double plural, and stands for ject-s-es; jess being old Fr. *ject*s, plu. of ject (from jecter, to throw, Lat. jactare), the jet or casting off of a hawk, that by which a hawk is cast off. Compare sixpences, i.e. six-pennies-es, prov. Eng. nesses for nests-es (Skeat).

K.

KEXES, hemlock stalks, or kecksies, is a double plural, kex, hemlock, being itself a plural and standing for kecks, Welsh ceccys (plu.), hollow stalks (Skeat). Compare pox for pocks.

As dry as a kex.—Lancashire Glossary, p. 171 (E. D. S.).

Tho' the rough kex break
The starr'd mosaic.

Tennyson, The Princess, iv. 59.

Nothing teemes

But bateful Docks, rough Thistles, Keksyes, Burres. Henry V. v. (2), 1623.

KINE is a double plural (= cowses), and stands for kie-en or ky-en, i.e. old Eng. and Scot. ky (cows, A. Sax. cý, plu. of cú, cow) + -en, the old plural ending (as in ox-en, hos-en). Compare old Eng. eyne for ey-en, eyes (Skeat). Lancashire kye, cows (E. D. S. Glossary).

The kye stood rowtin' i' the loan.

Burns, The Twa Dogs.

But they hem self that stelen kyen oxen and horses, they shal goo quyte and he lordes.—Caxton, Reynard the Fox, 1481, p. 78 (ed. Arber).

KNEE is in old Eng. know (Chaucer, Prioresses Tale, st. 6), cneo (Ancren Riwle), A. Sax. cneó, cneów (cf. chough, from A. Sax. ceó). Perhaps the modern form is due to internal vowel change denoting the plural, like old Eng. geet (Caxton), plu. of goat, teeth of tooth, &c. Sheep and deer remain unchanged in the plural, perhaps for this reason, that those words in old Eng. already wear a plural appearance, like geese, &c.

Similarly fleet, a number of ships, might have originally been a plu. of old Eng. flote, a ship, A. Sax. flota, Icel. floti.

The whiche erle, in keynge his course or passage, encountryd a myghty flote of Flemynge laden with Rochell wyne, and set vpon them and distressyd them and their shypys.—Fabyan, Chronicles, 1516, p. 533 (ed. Ellis).

L.

LACHE, a defect, failure, remissness, negligence (Richardson), is a mistaken sing. of the legal term laches or lachesse, slackness, negligence (Bailey), from an hypothetical Fr. laschesse, slackness. Similarly old Eng. noblely or nobluay, grandeur, nobleness (Morte Arthure, l. 76), seems to be an assumed sing. of noblesse, mistaken as a plural. Compare RICHES.

Lachesse . . . is he that whan he beginneth any good werk, anon he wol forelete it and stint.—Chaucer, Persones Tale (p. 162, ed. Tyrwhitt).

LARICK, a Scottish name for the larch tree (Janieson) is an assumed sing. of larix, as if laricks, its Latin name, by which it is also known. An exactly similar blunder is the Wallon lari, a larch, from old Fr. larise (Sigart).

LEA, a meadow, pasture land, seems to be a fictitious singular of lease, O. Eng. lese, lesewe, A. Sax. lese, lesu, pasture (Ettmüller, p. 159), just as "leae of threde, ligatura" (Prompt. Parv.), is only another form of lees (Id.) or lese (Cath. Ang.), old Fr. lesse, Lat. laxa (Mod. Eng. leash). Compare pea for pease.

[He] gæp in and út, and fínt lese.—A. Sax. Vers. St. John x. 9.

[He goeth in and out and findeth pasture].
He schal fynde lesewis.—Uycliffe, ibid.

This strong veniaunce is wrooth on the sheep of thi lesewe.—Id. Ps. lxxiii. 1.

[He] made yt al forest & lese, þe bestes vorto fede.

Robt. of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 375.

Sweeps from his land

His harvest hope of wheat, of rye, and pease,
And makes that channel which was shep-herd's lease.

Browne, Brit. Past, I. ii. p. 52
[Nares].

Browne also spells the word leyes (p. 66), whence evidently the prov. Eng. ley, a lea or pasture (Wright).

M.

MARQUEE, a large tent, is a fictitious singular of marquees, an Eng. spelling of Fr. marquise (originally, perhaps, the "tent of a marchioness" or grandee), which was mistaken for a plural (Skeat).

MEANS, intermediate or mediating things which come between the cause and the effect (Fr. moyens, Lat. mediana), middle measures, is frequently treated as a singular.

By this means thou shalt have no portion on this side the river.—A. V. Ezra iv. 16.

A means whereby we receive the same.—Catechism.

He possesses one mean only of ruining Great Britain.—Coleridge, The Friend, i. 256 (ed. 1863).

Compare "A wakes" (Hacket, Century of Sermons, p. 86), Wakesses (Stubs, Anatomic of Abuses, p. 95), "A pains not amiss" (T. Adams, Works, ii. 156), "This great pains" (A. V. 2 Macc. ii. 27).

Other words seldom found but in the plural are ashes, wages, and lees, though Butler uses lee.

All love at first, like generous wine,
Ferments and frets until 'tis fine;
But when 'tis settled on the lee,
And from th' impurer matter free,
Becomes the richer still the older,
And proves the pleasanter the colder.

S. Butler, Works, ii. 253
(ed. Clarke).

MERRY, a prov. Eng. word for a wild cherry, is an assumed sing. of Fr. mérise, mistaken for a plural. Compare CHERRY. Mérise is perhaps a contraction of mé-cerise, a bad (i.e. wild) cherry (cf. Liège meserasus, a wild cherry tree).—Scheler; or from Lat. mericca, adj. of merica, a berry (Prior).

Isle of Wight merry, a small black sweet cherry (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

MEWS, stabling, often used as a singular, and sometimes spelt mewse (Stow), is the plural of mew, old Eng. mewe, a house or cage for falcons, old Fr. mue, properly a moulting-place, from muer, to mou(l)t, or change the coat, Lat. mutare.

Mewses is quoted from a regulation of Sir R. Mayne in Good Words, 1863, p. 767.

Then is the Mewse, so called of the King's falcons there kept by the King's falconer.—Stow, Survey, p. 167 (ed. Thoms).

MINNOW, a small fish, is put for a minnows, much the same as if we were to speak of a bellow instead of a bellows. The older forms of the word are men-nous, menuse, menys, which Wedgwood traces to Gaelic miniasg (= minor piscis), little fish.

Menuce, fysche, Siturus, menusa.—Prompt. Parv.

Aforus est piscis, a menuse.—Medulla (in Way).

Menusa, a menys.—Nominate [also Wright, Vocab. i. 253].

Fr. menuise, small fish of divers sorts . . . a small Gudgeon, or fish bred of the spaw, but never growing to the bignesse of a Gudgeon.—Cotgrave.

Compare old Fr. menuiser, to minish or make small, Lat. minutiare.

MUCK, old Eng. "mukke, finus, letamen" (Prompt. Parv.), was in all probability originally mux, which came to be regarded as mucks; prov. Eng. mux, dirt, A. Sax. meox; cf. miæven, a dung-heap.

Their gownds . . . vagging in the wind or reeping in the mux.—Devonshire Courtship, p. 17.

Thee wut come oll a dugged and thy shoes oll mux.—Exmoor Scolding, l. 203.

A quite similar formation to this is the Sussex word moke or moak for the mesh of a net, a supposed sing. of the older form moæ (Brighton Costumal, 1580), identical with A. Sax. max, a net, whence (by resolution into masc) came old Eng. maske, mesh of a net (Prompt. Parv.), Norfolk mask, a mesh. See also

Parish, Sussex Glossary, pp. 76, 135, who quotes:—

No fisherman of the town should fish with any trawl net whereof the mouk holdeth not five inches size throughout.—Hastings Corporation Records, 1604.

Old Eng. cker, watercress, which H. Coleridge quotes from K. Alysawnder, 6175, seems to be an assumed sing. of A. Sax. éacerse, i.e. “water-cress.”

MUSSULMEN, a mistaken form of Mussulmans, see p. 249.

N.

NEPENTHE, the drug which Helen brought from Egypt, is without doubt the Coptic nibendj, which is the plural of bendj or benj, hemp, “bang,” used as an intoxicant (Lane, The Thousand and One Nights, vol. ii. p. 290). If this be right, the present form of the word which we take from the Greek (Odys. iv. 221) has been corrupted by false derivation, νηπενθής, “free from sorrow,” as if an anodyne or soothing drug (νη, not, and πένθος, sorrow). The true form of the Eng. word, as Prof. Skeat notes, is nepenthes (Holland), which was probably mistaken for a plural.

NEWS, formerly newes, now always regarded as a singular, e.g. “What is the news?” is properly a plural, “new things,” Lat. nova, Fr. nouvelles. Similarly, “this tidings,” “this means,” “this pains,” “this tactics,” “A stewes” (J. Mayne, Lucian, 1663, Preface, sub. fm.), “This marchis” (Ellis, Letters, i. 65, 3rd ser.).

And wherefore should these good newes Make me sicke?

Shakespeare, 2 Hen. IV. iv. 2 (1623).

But are these news in jest?

Greene, Friar Bacon, &c., Works, p. 162.

Seekyng to learne what news here are walkyng.

Edwards, Damon and Pithias, 1571.

To heare novells of his devise.

Spenser, Shep. Calender, Feb.

I can give thee the news which are dearest to thy heart.—E. Irving, in Mrs. Oliphant's Life of, p. 148.

The tactics of the opposition is to resist every step of the government.—Emerson, Eng. Traits, p. 83.

O.

ORFRAY, a rich border of gold embroidered work (Fr. orfroi), is a quasi-singular of orfraies (Bailey), old Eng. orfraiz, orfrais, or orfraies, from old French orfrais (Cotgrave), gold embroidery, which is derived from Low Lat. aurifrisium, or aurifrigium. Thus orfraies is or-frieze, a gold frieze or border. See FRIEZE, p. 131.

Armede hym in a actone with orfraez fulle ryche.

Morte Arthure, l. 902 (E.E.T.S.).

Ffretene of orfraies feste appone scheldez.

Id. l. 2142.

With orfreis laied was every dele.

Romaunt of the Rose, l. 1076.

Orfrey of a westymnt, Aurifigium, aurifrigium.—Prompt. Parvulorum.

P.

PEA, a fictitious singular of pease, which was assumed to be a plural form. The old singular form was a pese or pees, A. Sax. pisa (Fr. pois), Lat. pisum, and the plural pesen or peses.

And sette peers at a pese · pleyne hym wher he wolde.

Langland, Vision of Piers the Plowman, Pass. ix. l. 166, Text C.

And bred for my barnes · of benes and of peses.

Id. l. 307.

Hec pisa, a pese.—Wright, Vocabularies, p. 264.

[He] countede pers at a peose · and his plouh boþe.

Vision of P. Plowman, A. vii. 155.

The Pease, as Hippocrates saith, is lesse wodie than Beanes.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1047.

“The singular form pea really exhibits as great a blunder,” says Mr. Skeat, “as if we were to develop chee as the singular of cheese” (Notes to Piers the Plowman, p. 166); so we have “that heathen Chinee,” as a formation from Chinese, though our ancestors even spoke of Chineses, and similar instances are Yankee, Portuguee, Maltee, cherry, a quasi-singular of cherris, Lat. cerasus, merry, a black cherry, from merise, sherry from sherris, Sp. Xeres, shay from chaise.

POLYPI, an incorrect plural (which we inherit from the Latin) of polyppus, Lat. polyppus, which should properly be polyppūs (gen. polyppodis), being borrowed from Greek πολύπους (gen. πολύποδος), "many-footed." The strictly correct form would be polyppodes, as octopodes would be instead of octopi. A similar error would be tripi, as a plu. of Lat. tripus, Greek τρίπους, instead of tripods, old Eng. tripodes, Lat. tripodes, Greek τρίποδες (= Eng. "trivets"). The exact English counterpart of the classical polyppode is the heraldic term fyfot, old Eng. fele (= Ger. viel), many, and fof, foot. Compare Many-feet (Sylvester).

PORRIDGE is, I believe, a disguised plural standing for an older porrets, porrettes, from Low Lat. porrata, broth made with leeks (Lat. porrum), It. porrata. Compare BROTH above, regarded as a plural, and SLEDGE. See PURÉE, pp. 303, 499. Probably the Low Lat. porrata was regarded as a neuter plural, and then porrets following suit was assimilated to pottage, old Eng. and Fr. potage.

POTATO. This root seems to have been introduced under the name of potatoes, which was afterwards regarded as the plural of a singular form potato. Early travellers, writing in 1526, mention that the natives of Haiti call the root batatas. Florio gives "Batatas, a fruit so called in India;" Skinner "Potatoes, Sp. potados, from the American Battatas." The Spaniards similarly regarding the foreign name as a plu. have made a sing. batata, patata.

This plant which is called of some Sisarum Peruvianum, or skyrrits of Peru, is generally of vs called Potatus or Potatoes . . . Clusius calleth it Battata . . . in English Potatoes, Potatus, and Potades.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 780.

Virginia Potatoes hath many hollowe flexible branches.—Id. p. 781.

Igname, the roote we call Potatoes wherof in some places they make bread.—Florio.

POTENT, a quasi-singular word for a crutch (Prompt. Parv., Chaucer, Langland), formed from pottens, an East Anglian word for a pair of crutches, which is itself a singular, Fr. potence, "a crutch for a lame man" (Cotgrave), from Low Lat. potentia, power, that which strengthens or supports the impotent. See Vision of P. Plowman, C. xi. 94.

Potent, or crotche. Podium.—Prompt. Parv.

Potten, a Norfolk word for a stilt (Wright) or crutch (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1855, p. 35).

POY, an old word for a rope-dancer's balancing pole (in Skinner, Etymologicon), seems to be a singular coined out of poise, a balance (as if poys), old Fr. pois, a weight. Similarly shay (po-shay = post-chaise) was once a common corruption of chaise (Walker, Pron. Dict.). Compare BREE above. We even find ho as a Scottish singular of hose, stockings.

The bride was now laid in ber bed,

Her left leg ho was flung.

A. Ramsay, Christ's Kirk on the Green, canto ii.

PULSE, the beating of the heart (Fr. pouls, Lat. pulsus, a beating), is often popularly regarded as a plural. I have heard a country apothecary, with his fingers on a child's wrist, observe, "Her pulse are not so good to-day; they are decidedly weaker." F. Hall, Modern English, p. 250, quotes:—

Hee consumed away; and, after some few pults, he died.—Mabbe, The Rogue (1623), pt. i. p. 22.

How are your pulse to-day?—Mrs. Cowley, More Ways than One, act i.

PUNY, an old word for vermin that infest beds, from Fr. punaise, mistaken as a plural (see Cotgrave, s.v.).

Compare pumystone, which Sylvester uses for pumice stone.

Repleat with Sulphur, Pitch, and Pumy stone. Divine Weekes and Workes, p. 201.

The pumie stones I bastly hent.

Spenser, Shep. Calender, March.

R.

RAMPION, a plant-name, is an assumed sing. of rampions, where the s is an organic part of the word, it being from Fr. raiponce, Lat. rapunculus.

RAMSONS, broad-leaved garlic, standing for ramsens, is a reduplicated plural (as oæns would be) of ramse, Craven rams, ramps, old Eng. rammys, ramseys, ramzys (Prompt. Parv.), ramsey (Palsgrave), A. Sax. hramsa (plu. hramsan), Dan. ramse.

RASPICE, an old word for the raspberry (Holland), also spelt raspise (Florio), is a corruption of raspis or raspes (Bacon), the old plu. of prov. and old Eng. rasp, a rasp-berry. So raspises (Cotgrave) is a double plu., as if rasps-es.

RESCUE looks like an assumed sing. of old Eng. rescouis (Chaucer), from old Fr. rescouisse, Low Lat. rescussa, for re-excussa, a shaking off again (of some threatened danger), Lat. re-executere. E.g. St. Paul's escape from the viper (Acts xviii. 5) was literally a "rescue."

My might for thy rescouisse I did.
Gower, Conf. Amantis, iii. 155
(ed. Pauli).

RICHES, now always treated as a plural, is really a singular, which would be apparent if the word were spelt, as it might be, richess (like largess, Fr. noblesse). It is old Eng. richesse (making a plu. richesses), from Fr. richesse (= It. ricchezza), richness, wealth. There is no more reason why we should say "riches are deceitful," than "largess were given" (Fr. largesse), or "the distress are great" (O. Fr. destresse).

It is preciouesere than alle richessis.—Wycliffe, Prov. iii. 15.

The said Macabrunne . . . had great possession of lands and other infinite richesses.—Knight of the Swanne, ch. i. (Thoms, Early Prose Romances, iii. 23).

Mykel was the richesse.—Langtoft, Robert of Brunne, p. 30 [Skeat].

And for that riches where is my deserving?
Shakespeare, Sonnet lxxxvii.

In this marvelous hall, replete with richesse,
At the hye ende she sat full worthely.

Haves, Postime of Pleasure. chap. xxi.
(p. 99, Percy Soc. ed.).

He heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them.—A. V. Psalm xxxix. 6.

Riches certainly make themselves wings;
they fly away as an eagle.—Prov. xxiii. 5.

Those riches perish by evil travail.—Eccles.
v. 14.

Riches are not comely for a niggard.—
Eccles. xiv. 3.

Some nouns . . . lack the singular; as riches, goods.—B. Jonson, Eng. Grammar, ch. xiii.

RIDDLE, old Eng. redel (Cursor Mundi, p. 412), is a fictitious singular, and should properly be a riddles, with a plural riddles-es, as we see by comparing old Eng. a redels, which came to be mistaken for a plural, A. Sax. rédelse (rédels), an enigma, something to be read or interpreted, from A. Sax. rédan, to read or interpret. "The Kyng putte forth a rydels."—Trevisa, iii. 181. See Prof. Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v.

3ernen [3e] to rede redeles?

Piers Plowman, B. xiii. 184.

Compare:—

Read my riddle ye can't,

However much ye try.

Halliwell, Nursery Rhymes, p. 241.

Riddle me, riddle me ree [for read].

Redyñ, or expownyñ redellys or parabol'.

Redyng or expownyng of rydeths. Interpretacio.—Prompt. Parv.

Compare O. Eng. rychellys, incense, A. Sax. ricels, réels; rcnlys, rendlys, rennet; metels, a dream; byrigels, a grave. So hidel, a hiding-place, in Halliwell, is a mistake for hidels, O. Eng. hudles (Anceren Riwle), A. Sax. hydels, a retreat or hiding-place. Hence, no doubt, by corruption the Lancashire phrase "to be in hidlins," i.e. in hiding or concealment (Scot. "in hiddilis."—Barbour), sometimes "in hidlance" or "hidlands;" also hiddle, to hide (E. D. Soc. Lanc. Glossary, p. 158).

ROE, the eggs of fish, owes its form to a curious mistake. The true form, says Prof. Skeat, is roan, which seems to have been regarded as an old plural, liketoon (toes), shoon (shoes), eyne (eyes), oven, &c. So that the n (or -en) was dropped to make an hypothetical singular. Compare the prov. Eng. forms roan (Lincoln), Scot. raun, roun, Cleveland roun-d (Atkinson), Icel. hrogn, Dan. rogn.

Rowne, of a fysche, Liquaman.—Prompt. Parv.

Rone, the roe of fish.—Peacock, Lonsdale Glossary.

Similarly, the ordinary name for the rat in prov. and old Eng. is ratten (Cleveland), raton or rotten (Fr. raton), and from this perhaps regarded as a plural, rather than from the rare A. Sax. ret, comes rat. "Ratun or raton, Rato, Sorex."—Prompt. Parv.

ROMAUNT, an archaic word for a romance, as The Romaunt of the Rose, from old Fr. roman, romant, which seems to be an assumed sing. of the older form romans taken as a plural, but this is really a corruption of the Latin adverb romanice, "in the Roman (i.e. popular Latin) language."

Row, a disturbance, an uproar, is an assumed singular of rouse, a drunken tumult, originally drunkenness, e.g. "Have a rouse before the morn" (Tennyson), i.e. a carouse or drinking bout. It is the Danish ruus, drunkenness, Swed. rus, a drinking bout, Dutch roes, Ger. rausch. Dekker speaks of "the Danish rowsa," and Shakespeare introduces the word with strict, though probably unconscious, verbal accuracy, when he makes the King of Denmark "take his rouse" (Hamlet, i. 4). The original meaning of the word seems to be a moistening, soaking, or drenching of one's self with liquor, akin to old Eng. arowze, to moisten or bedew, old Fr. arrouser, arrouser. See my note in The Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 4, l. 104 (New Shaks. Soc.). Compare ROSE, p. 330, ROUSE, p. 332, and the following:—

This is the wine, which, in former time,

Each wise one of the magi

Was wont to arouse in a frolick house.

Beaumont [in Richardson].

RUBBISH, old Eng. rubyes (Arnold), robous (Prompt. Parv. p. 435), and ro-beux (1480), from a French robeux, plural of robel, rubble, broken stones, a dimin. form of a word robe, trash, = It. roba (whence robaccia, rubbish). Thus rubbish is strictly a plural, equivalent to rubbles. See Skeat, Etymolog. Dict. s.v.

S.

SCALES, i.e. the two dishes or bowls (A. Sax. twá scále, Lat. bilanæ), is frequently used as a singular noun by Shakespeare and his contemporaries. In that crystal scales, let there be weigh'd Your lady's love against some other maid.

Romeo and Juliet, act i. sc. 2, fol.

SCATE, or skate, a corrupt form of skates (plu. skateses), which was mistaken for a plural form merely because it ends with s. We got the word from the Dutch, who have always been great skaters, Dut. schaatsen (Sewel), i.e. skates-en (like ov-en) or skates-es; old Fr. eschasses, "stilts or scatches [= skateses] to go on" (Cotgrave), probably another form of Low Ger. schake, a shank, as the earliest skates were shank bones (tibiæ) tied under the feet. Stow quotes from Fitzstephen (before 1190) a statement that in London—

Many young men play upon the ice; . . . some tie bones to their feet and under their heels [orig. "alligantes ossa, tibiæ scilicet animalium"]; and shoving themselves by a little picked staff, do slide as swiftly as a bird flieth in the air, or an arrow out of a cross-bow.—Survey, 1603, p. 35 (ed. Thoms).

Mr. Thoms adds a note on this:—

The tibia of a horse, fashioned for the purpose of being used as a skait, the under surface being highly polished, was found in Moorfields some two or three years since [i.e. about 1840], and is now in the possession of Mr. C. Roach Smith, F.S.A.

Scatzes [for skateses] occurs in Carr's Remarks on Holland, 1695 (Nares). The invention was probably re-introduced from the Low Countries by Charles II. (Jesse, London, i. 137).

I first in my life, it being a great frost, did see people sliding with their skates, which is a very pretty art.—Pepys, Diary, Dec. 1, 1662.

Rosamond's Pond full of the rabble sliding, and with skates, if you know what those are.—Swift, Journal to Stella, Jan. 31, 1710-11.

SECT, an assumed singular of seæ (Fr. seze, Lat. sævus), as if sects, sometimes popularly used and frequent in old writers (see Nares).

A lady don't mind taking her bonnet off . . . before one of her own sect, which before a man proves objectionable.—(Street Photographer) Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, vol. iii. p. 214.

Of thy house they mean,

To make a nunnery, where none but their own sect,

Must enter in; men generally barr'd.

Marlowe, Jew of Malta, act i. (p. 151, ed. Dyce).

So is all her sect; as they be once in a calm, they are sick.—2 Hen. IV. ii. 4, 41.

SHERRY was originally sherries or sherris, which probably came to be regarded as a plural. "This valour comes of sherris," says Falstaff (2 Hen. IV. iv. 1). "Your best sacke are of Seres in Spaine" (i.e. Xeres).—Ger. Markham, Eng. Housewife, p. 162.

A book entitled Three to One (1625), by R. Peeke, is an account of a combat between an English gentleman and three Spaniards "at Sherries in Spain." Xeres was originally Cæsar's (town), from Lat. Cæsaris.

SHUTTLE, old Eng. shyttell, schetyl, scytyl, anything that is shot backwards and forwards, either a shuttle or the bolt of a door (compare shuttle-cock), ought etymologically to be a shuttles or shittles, the A. Saxon word being scyttels, plu. scyttelsas (shuttles-es). Compare BURIAL and RIDDLE above. Prof. Skeat quotes:

An honest weaver . . .

As e'er shot shuttle.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Coxcomb,
v. 1.

SLEDGE, a sliding carriage, appears to be nothing but a corruption of sleds, old Eng. sledis, the plural of the old word sled (Skeat, N. and Q. 6th S. v. 113), which is the form still used in Lancashire (E. D. S. Glossary, p. 244). The spelling sledge is perhaps due to a confusion with the commoner word sledge, a hammer (A. Sax. slecge).—Skeat. Compare sketch, standing for skets, a corruption of Dutch schets, a draught; and smudge or smutch for smuts. See PORRIDGE above.

When, yet a slender girl, she often led,
Skillful and bold, the horse and burthened
sled.

Wordsworth, Poems, p. 318
(ed. Rossetti).

SLONES, a Devonshire word for sloes, seems to be a double plural, from slone or sloen, old Eng. slon, plu. of slo, A. Sax. slán, plu. of sla, a sloe.

Compare the rhyme:—

Many stones, many groans;
Many nits, many pits.

So shoon = shoe-en, shoes, "clouded shoon." (Shakespeare, Milton), still used in Lancashire.

SMALL-POX, now become a singular, was originally a plural, poæ being a mere orthographical vagary for pocks, plu. of pock, A. Sax. poc, a pustule, as unwarranted as loæ would be for locks. We still speak of chicken-pock, cow-pock, and *pock*marked.

Pokkes and pestilences.

Piers Plowman, B. xx. 97.

It is good likewise for the measils and small pocks.—Holland, Pliny, ii. 422.

SMUT is a corrupt form of a smuts (of which another spelling is smutch or smudge), mistaken as a plural; Swed. smuts, a soil, Dan. smuds, filth, Ger. schmutz (Skeat).

STAVE is incorrectly formed out of the plural staves, which is really an inflexion of staff (old Eng. staf, plu. stauces).—Skeat. It would be a similar blunder if we were to make a singular scarve, turve, wharve out of the plural scarves, turves, wharves, or evolved a thieve, a wive, a wolve, out of thieves, wives, wolves. Beeve is sometimes used for an ox, an assumed sing. of beeves, the plu. of beef. Stave, a stanza of a song, formerly spelt sometimes staff, is perhaps an assumed sing. of A. Sax. stevan, a voice, mistaken as staven (see p. 371). Ettmüller quotes from Bêda, "sanges stefne" (? a stave of a song).

STOCKS, properly a plural, old Eng. stokkes (P. Plowman), containing the idea of a pair, the upper stock fitting down upon the lower stock, is sometimes treated as a singular, e.g.

The stocks was again the object of midnight desecration; it was bedaubed and bescratched—it was backed and hewed.—Bulwer Lytton, My Novel, vol. i. ch. xxiv.

Now the stocks is rebuilt, the stocks must be supported.—Id. loc. cit.

So gallows, now always used as a sing., is properly the plu. of gallow, old Eng. galwe, A. Sax. galga; "Gibbet, a gallow tree."—Cotgrave.

SUMMONS, old Eng. somouns, often treated as a plural, is really a sing., being the same word as Fr. semonce, formerly semonse (somonse), a citation, from semons (somons), the past part. of semondre (somondre), to summon. Prov. somonsa, a summons (Skeat).

A summons is another of these plural words become singular.—Dean Alford, Good Words, 1863, p. 767.

Love's first summons
Seldom are obeyed.

Waller.

SYCAMINE, the tree, Lat. sycaminus, Greek sukáminos, is perhaps a classical corruption of Heb. shiqmim, mulberry trees, plu. of shiqmâh (Skeat). Compare CHERUBIN.

SYNONYMA, frequently used as a sing. in old writers (e.g. Milton), from a misunderstanding of Lat. synonyma as a fem. sing., it being really a neuter plural (agreeing with verba understood), "synonymous words," Greek συνώνυμα, "same-naming words." Fr. synonyme, "a synonyma."—Cotgrave.

However, battalia (Jeremy Taylor; Shakespeare, Richard III. v. 3) is not a plural of battalion mistaken for a Greek neuter, as has been conjectured (Trench, Eng. Past and Present, Lect. ii.), but stands for It. battaglia.

SYTHE, in the phrase "make a sythe, Satisfacio."—Prompt. Parvulorum (Pynson's ed. 1499), "makyn sethe" (King's Coll. Cam. MS.), is a corrupted form of the older "make a-seethe." A-ceethe, aseethe, or assethe, is an Anglicized form of Fr. assez. See ASSETS above.

Do aseethe to thi seruauntis (=make satisfaction).—Wycliffe, 2 Kings xix.

T.

TALISMAN, Sp. talisman, from Arab. tilsamân, magical figures or charms (Diez), or tilismân (Scheler), which is the plural of Arab. ṭalsam or tilism (Lane, Thousand and One Nights, ii. 203), from Greek τέλεσμα, a mystery (Devic).

TENNIS, old Eng. teneis, tenyse, or teneyis, is conjectured by Prof. Skeat to be derived from old Fr. tenies, plural of tenie, a fillet or band (from Lat. tēnia), with reference to the string over which the ball is played, or the streak on the wall in rackets. So the Low Lat. name teniludium would be for tēniludium, "string-play" (Etym. Dict. s.v.).

THANKS, plu. of the old Eng. a thank (Chaucer), A. Sax. þanc, is sometimes treated as a singular. Compare "The amends was."—Robt. of Brunne. See MEANS above.

I hope your service merits more respect,
Than thus without a thanks to be sent hence.
Jonson, Poetaster, iv. 5.

[See Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, s.v.]

TITMICE, frequently used, instead of titmouses, as a plural of titmouse, a small bird, which is a corrupt form of old Eng. titmose, from tit, small, and A. Sax. māse, a species of bird. It has nothing to do with mouse. See TITMOUSE, p. 395, and the instances of titmice there given.

TRACE, part of a horse's harness, old Eng. trayce (Prompt. Parv.), old Fr. trays (Palsgrave), seems to be a plural taken as a sing., standing for Fr. traits or traicts, drawing straps. Thus traces is a double plu. = trait-s-es (Skeat). Compare JESSES.

Traict, a teame-trace or trait.—Cotgrave.

TRIUMVIR, one of three men associated together, Lat. triumvir, an assumed sing. of triumviri, itself a nom. plural evolved out of the genitive plu. trium virorum (magistratus), the office "of three men."

TRUCE is a disguised plural (like bodice, pence, &c.), and stands for old Eng. *trewe*s, trives, treowes, pledges of truth given and received, plu. of trewe, a pledge of reconciliation, A. Sax. trēwa, a compact, faith. See Skeat, s.v. So truce = trues.

Truwys, trwys, or truce of pees.—Prompt. Parv.

A trewe was agreed for certayne houres; durynge y<sup>e</sup> which trew, y<sup>e</sup> archehysshop of Caunterbury . . . sent a general pardon.—Fabyan, Chronicles, p. 625 (ed. 1811).

I moste trette of a trew towchande thise nedes.

Morte Arthure, l. 263.

Take trew for a tyme.

Id. l. 992.

TWEEZERS, a corruption, under the influence of nippers, pincers, &c., of the older form tweeses, which is a double plu. twee-s-es, since twees or tweese is an old word for a case of instruments, corresponding to Fr. étuis, old Fr. estwys, plu. of étui, estuy, whence tweezer, the instrument contained in a twees or case. See TWEEZERS, p. 411.

U.

UTAS, or utis (Shakespeare), an old word for merrymaking, orig. a festival and the week after till its octave, is a Norman Fr. equivalent of old Fr. oitauves, plu. of oitawe, the eighth day

(Lat. octava; compare old Fr. uit (= huit) from octo). So uitas = octaves (Skeat). See Nares, s.v., and Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalendarium, ii. 384.

W.

WHEAT-EAR, the bird-name, is a corruption of a wheat-ears or white-erse, equivalent to Greek pygargos, "white-rump," the name of an eagle. See WHEAT-EAR, p. 433.

WHIM, a prov. Eng. word for a machine turning on a screw (Wright), is a quasi-singular of whims, a windlass (Yorks.), mistaken for a plural. But whims is a mere corruption of winch, A. Sax. wince (Skeat).

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS.

A.

ABHOMINATION, p. 1. St. Augustine had already suggested a derivation of abominor as though it was abhomīnor, so to hate one as not to esteem him a man (Serm. ix. c. 9).—Abp. Trench, Augustine on Sermon on Mount, ch. ii.

How they ben to mankinde lothe
And to the god abhomīnable.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, iii. 204 (ed. Pauli).

ABLE, p. 2. Compare:—

“What beeste is þis,” quod þe childe · “þat I shalle on houe?”

“Hit is called an hors,” quod þe knyȝte · “a good & an abulle.”

Chevelere Assigne, l. 289 (E.E.T.S.).

ÆGLOGUES, p. 4. “Petrarch introduced the form Æglogue for Eclogue, imagining the word to be derived from aiġ (aiγός), ‘a goat,’ and to mean ‘the conversation of goatherds.’ But as Dr. Johnson observes in his Life of A. Philips, it could only mean ‘the talk of goats.’ Such a compound, however, could not even exist, as it would be aiγo-λογία, if anything.”—C. S. Jeram, Lycidas, p. 10.

AELMESSE, p. 4. The curious old derivation of alms as “God’s water” (Heb. el, God, and Egyptian mōs, water (Philo), Coptic mo) is evidently founded on this verse:—

Water will quench a flaming fire; and alms maketh an atonement for sins.—Ecclus. iii. 30.

Compare:—

Thet almesdede senne quenkeþ
Ase water that fer aquenkeþ.

Shoreham, Poems, p. 37.

For þa boc seið. Sicut aqua extinguit ignem; ita & elemosina extinguit peccatum. Al swa þet water acwencheð þet fur, swa þa elmesse acwencheð þa sunne.—Old Eng. Homilies, 1st ser. p. 39.

[The hook saith, &c. Just as water quencheþ the fire, so alms quencheþ sin].

AGNAIL, p. 5. Though this word and agnel, a corn, have no doubt been confused, the true origin is probably A. Sax. ang-nægl, that which pains the nail.

AIGREMOINE, p. 458. Lat. agrīmonia is itself a corruption of its other name argemonia, so called perhaps because used as a remedy for argema (Greek ἀργεμον), a white speck on the eye. See Skeat, p. 776.

AIR, p. 5. Prof. Skeat has since withdrawn the suggestion that Low Lat. area is of Icelandic origin.

Haukes of nobule eire.

Sir Degrevaunt, l. 46.

ALE-HOOF, a popular old Eng. name for the plant ground ivy, is not (as the Brothers Grimm imagined) adopted from Dut. ei-loof, i.e. “ivy-leaf,” a word of recent introduction, nor yet probably derived from ale, A. Sax. ealo, and (be)hoof, A. Sax. (be-)hōfiam, “so called, because it serves to clear ale or beer” (Bailey). Compare its other name Tun-hoof.

The women of our Northeru parts, especially about Wales and Cheshire, do tun the herbe Alehooue into their ale, but the reason thereof I knowe not, notwithstanding without all controuersie it is most singular against the griefes aforesaid; being tunned vp in ale and drunke, it also purgeth the head from rheumaticke humours flowing from the braine.—Gerarde, Herball (1597), p. 707.

It is quite impossible, too, that hoof should be a corruption of A. Sax. heafð, heafod, head (Mahn’s Webster).

The oldest forms of the word seem to be heyhoue, heyoue, haihoue (Way), which seem to have been corrupted into halehoue, alehoof. The Prompt. Parvulorum gives "hove, or ground yvy," also "hove of oyle, as barme, and ale." In this latter case hove seems to mean fermentation, the same word as A. Sax. hæfe, leaven (Mark viii. 15, prov. Eng. heaving), from hebban, to heave. Hove as applied to ground ivy would then mean the plant used, like yeast, to cause fermentation. The change to -hoof was favoured by its names folfoyt and horshove (Way).

ALEXANDERS, a plant-name, is said to be a corruption of the specific Latin name of the plant, olusatrum, i.e. the "black vegetable," olus atrum (Webster; Hunter, Encyclopæd. Dict.). But see Prior, Pop. Names of Brit. Plants, s.v.

ALLAY, so spelt as if the meaning were "to lay down," to cause to rest or cease (so Richardson), as in the phrase "to allay a tumult," old Eng. alaye, alaie (Gower), is an assimilation to the verb to lay of old Eng. alegge (Chaucer), to alleviate, from old Fr. aleger, to soften or ease, and that from Lat. alleviare, to lighten.

If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them.
Shakespeare, Tempest, i. 2, 2.

To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it.
Id. Henry VIII. ii. 1, 153.

ALLEY, p. 6, prov. Eng. for the aisle of a church, is seemingly an Anglicized form of Fr. aile, the "wing" of the building, Lat. ala. Compare the soldier's rivally for reveille. The s in aisle is probably due to a confusion with isle. See ISLE, p. 191. The following epitaph, exhibiting alley in this sense, I copied from a mural tablet in Lacock church, Wilts:—

Heare Lyeth In This Allye
Neere Vnto This Place
The Bodie Of Robert Hellier
Late One Of His Maiesties
Cryers To The Courts Of The Common Pleas In Westminster
Whoe Lived 63 Yeares And
Deceased y<sup>e</sup> 9 Of Aprill An<sup>o</sup> 1630.

ALMIDON, p. 459. Add Sp. almendra (Eng. almond), for amendra, the initial

α being assimilated to the Arab. article al, with which so many Spanish words are compounded.

ALEWIFE, the name of an American fish resembling the herring (Clupea serrata), is a corruption of the Indian name aloof.—Winthrop (see Mahn's Webster, s.v.).

AMARANTH, so spelt as if derived from Greek ánthos, a flower (like poly-anthos, chrysanthemum, anthology, &c.), was formerly more correctly written amarant (Milton), being derived from Lat., Greek, amarantus, "unfading." On the other hand, aerolite, chrysolite, should be, as they once were, spelt aerolith, chrysolith, as containing Greek lithos, a stone.

AMBRY, p. 8. Compare:—

The place . . . was called the Eleemosinary, or Almonry, now corruptly the Ambry, for that the alms of the abbey were there distributed to the poor.—Stow, Surway, 1603, p. 176 (ed. Thoms).

ANBERRY, p. 8. A Lonsdale corruption of this word is angle-berry (R. B. Peacock).

ANCIENT, p. 7.

Strike on your drummes, spread out your ancients.

Sir Andrew Barton, l. 183 (Percy, Fol. MS. iii. 412).

AND-PUSSEY-AND, p. 8. An Oxfordshire name for the sign "&" is amsiam, apparently for "and [per] se, and" (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 74).

ANGREC, the French name of a species of orchidaceous plant brought from the Indian Archipelago, Botan. Lat. angræcum, is an assimilation to foenu-græcum of the Malayan name anggrek (Devic).

ANKYR, p. 8. Add:—

Henry III. granted to Katherine, late wife to W. Hardell, twenty feet of land in length and breadth in Smithfield, . . . to build her a recluse or anchorage.—Stow, Surway, 1603, p. 139 (ed. Thoms).

ANOINTED, p. 8. Compare Isle of Wight niented, incorrigible, "a niented scoundrel," as if from nient, to anoint (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

APPARENT, p. 9.

Syr Roger Mortymer, erle of the Marche, & sone and heyre vnto syr Edmude Mortymer . . . was soone after proclaymyd heyer puraunt vnto ye crowne of Englonde.—

Fabyan, Chronicles, 1516, p. 533 (ed. Ellis.)

O, God thee save, thou Lady sweet,
My heir and Parand thou shalt be.
The Lovers' Quarrel, l. 16 (Early Pop.
Poetry, ii. 253).

ARBOUR, p. 10, properly a shelter, then a hut, a summer-house, the same word really as harbour, a shelter for ships, old Eng. herberue, herberze, Icel.
herbergi (= "army-shelter"), has been confused sometimes with herber (Lat.
herbarium), a garden of herbs, sometimes with Lat. arbor, a tree. For the loss of h compare ostler for hostler, old Eng. ost for host, and the pronunciation of honour, hour, hospital, &c. So it for old Eng. hit, which matches 'in for him.

Other trees there was mané one,
The pyany, the popler, and the plane,
With brode braunchea all aboute,
Within the arbar and eke withoute.
Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 42 (Early Pop.
Poetry, ii. 24).

The identity of arbour and harbour was soon forgotten. Compare:—

Who e'r rigg'd faire ship to lie in harbours,
And not to seeke new lands, or not to deale with all?
Or built faire houses, set trees, and arbors,
Onely to lock up, or else to let them fall?
Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 31.

Since Him the silent wilderness did house:
The heau'n His roofe and arbour harbour was,
The ground His bed, and His moist pillowe, grasse.

G. Fletcher, Christs Victorie on Earth, st. 14.

ARCHANGEL, p. 10. With reference to the angelic character attributed to birds, it may be noted that Giles Fletcher, speaking of Christ's ascension, and the attendant angels, says:—

So all the chorus sang
Of heau'nly birds, as to the starres they nimble sprang.
Christs Triumph after Death, st. 15, 1610.
Birds, Heavens choristers, organique throates,
Which (if they did not die) might seeme to be
A tenth ranke in the heavenly hierarchie.
Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 267.

ARGOSY. Mr. O. W. Tancock has a note in support of the Ragusan origin of this word in Notes and Queries, 6th
S. iv. 489, where he has the following citations:—

Furthermore, how acceptable a thing may this be to the Ragusyes, Hulks, Caravels, and other foreign rich laden ships, passing within or by any of the sea limits of Her Majesty's royalty.—Dr. John Dee, The Petty Navy Royal (in The English Garner, vol. ii. p. 67, date 1577).

A Sattee, which is a ship much like unto an Argosy of a very great burden and big-ness.—A Fight at Sea, 1617 (Eng. Garner, ii.
200).

It is said that those vaat Carrack's called Argosies, which are so much famed for the vastness of their burthen and Bulk were corruptly so denominated from Ragosies, and from the name of this city [Ragusa].—Sir
P. Rycant, Present State of the Ottoman Empire, 1675, p. 119.

In the following, argosie is a tumbler,
Fr. argousin, Sp. alguazil.

And on the South side of Poule's churchyarde an argosie came from the battilments of the same church upon a cable, beyng made faste to an auker at the deanes doore, lying uppon his breaste aidying hymself neither with hande nor foote.—Fabyan, Chron., Feb.
19, 1546, p. 709 (ed. Ellis).

ARSMETRICK, p. 12.

The first of whiche is arsmetique,
And the second is said musique.
Gower, Conf. Amantis, iii. 89 (ed. Pauli).
For God made all the begynnynge
In nombre perfyte well in certayne
Who knewe arsmetryke in every degre.
Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, cap. xv.
p. 57 (Percy Soc.).

ASPEN is a curious corruption, the same as if we spoke of an oaken instead of an oak. The proper name of the tree, as in prov. English, is the asp, old Eng. aspe, espe, A. Sax. æsp, the adjectival form of which was aspen
("an aspen leaf."—Chaucer). Similarly beechen, A. Sax. bécen, was the adjective of bóc (Icel. bólk); and from this was evolved the substantive beech
(A. Sax. béce). The true etymological name of the tree (fagus) would be book; the word for a volume being identically the same (see Skeat, s. vv.).
The Isle of Wight folk have corrupted the word into snapsen (E. D. S. *Orig.
Glossaries*, xxiii.).

An exactly similar error is linden, which is properly the adjectival form of lind (A. Sax. lind), whence corruptly line and lime, the tree-name.

So linen meant originally made of lin or flax (A. Sax. lín); we still say lin-seed, and the Lancashire folk speak of "a lin shirt," or "a lin sheet." Compare swine, which was prob. originally an adj. form (as if sowine, sow-ish), = Lat. suinus, like equine (see Skeat, s.v.).

ASTONISH, p. 18. The form stunny, to stun, is still used in Oxfordshire, e.g. "This noise is enough t' stunny anybody."—E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 99.

AYMONT, p. 15.
Like as the am'rous needle joys to bend
To her magnetic friend :
Or as the greedy lover's eye-balls fly
At his fair mistress' eye :
So, so we cling to earth ; we fly and puff,
Yet fly not fast enough.

Quarles, Emblems, bk. i. 13.

If we understood all the degrees of amability in the service of God, or if we had such love to God as he deserves . . . we could no more deliberate : for liberty of will is like the motion of a magnetic needle toward the north, full of trembling and uncertainty till it were fixed in the beloved point ; it wavers as long as it is free, and is at rest, when it can choose no more.—Jer. Taylor, Sermon on 1 Cor. xv. 23.

See also a passage in Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, fol. p. 383.

B.

BAFFLE, p. 18.

Should we (as you) borrow all out of others,
and gather nothing of our selues, our names would be buffuld on euerie booke-sellers stall.
—T. Nash, Pierce Penilesse, p. 40 (Shaks. Soc.).

BAGGAGE, p. 19. Compare:—

Kindly, sweet soule, she did unkindnesse take,
That bagged haggage of a misers mudd,
Should price of her, as in a market, make,
But gold can guild a rotten piece of wood.

Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, 1629, p. 85.

Baggage was formerly used in the sense of worthless, good-for-nothing.

Nunc tantum sinus et statio malefida carinis.
Now nothing but a baggage bay, & harbor nothing good.

Camden, Remaines, p. 284 (1637).

I'le neuer be so kinde,
As venture life, for such an vgly bag
That looks both like a baggage and a bag.
Sir J. Harrington, Epigrams, iv. 42.

BALLED, p. 19. Compare Lonsdale balled, white-faced (R. B. Peacock).

BANDICOOT, a species of Indian rat, is a corruption of the Telinga name pandikoku, i.e. "pig-rat" (Sir J. E. Tennent, Nat. History of Ceylon, p. 44).

BANDOG, p. 20.

Hush now, yee band-doggs, barke no more at me,

But let me slide away in secrecie.

Marston, Satyres, v. sub fin.

BARGE, p. 21. Compare:—

There be divers old Gaulic Words yet remaining in the French which are pure British, both for Sense and Pronunciation . . . but especially, when one speaks any old Word in French that cannot be understood they say, Il parle Baragouin, which is to this Day in Welsh, White-bread.—Howell, Fam. Letters, bk. iv. 19.

BARNABY, p. 22. In Tuscany the lady-bird is called lucia, the insect of light (De Gubernatis, Mythologie des Plantes, i. 211).

BASE-BORN, p. 23. With old Fr. filz de bast, son of a pack-saddle, compare Ger. bankart, a bastard, from bank, a bench, and old Eng. bulker, a prostitute. It, and Span. basto, Prov. bast, Fr. bât, a saddle, is of disputed origin. Mr. F. H. Groome says it is clearly of gipsy descent, comparing the Romani béshto, "saddle," pass. part. of besháva, "I sit" (In Gipsy Tents, p. 289). Fr. fil de bât, "child over the hatch," from It. basto, Pop. Latin bastum, a pack-saddle, connected with Gk. βάραξ (?), from βαράζειν, to carry, support. Compare Lat. basterna, a sedan-chair; Fr. bâton, bastun, a stick, as a support (Atkinson).

And ouer this he hadde of bast, whiche after were made legyttymat, by dame Katherine Swynforde. iii Sonny John, whiche was after duke of Somerset, Thomas erle of Huntynge done, or duke of Exetyr, & Henry, which was callyd ye ryche cardynall.—Fabyan, Chronicles, 1516, p. 533 (ed. Ellis).

They which are born out of Marriage are called Bastards, that is base-born, like the Mule which is ingendred of an Asse and a Mare.—H. Smith, Sermons, p. 14 (1637).

BATTLE-DORE, p. 24.

Now you talke of a bee, Ile tell you a tale of a battledore.—T. Nash, Pierce Penilesse, p. 69 (Shaks. Soc.).

Many a iole about the nole with a great battill dore.

A Mery Jest how a Sergeaunt wolde terne to be a Frere, l. 260.

BEAT, as a nautical word, e.g. in the phrase, "to beat up to windward," generally understood, no doubt, of a ship buffeting its way against wind and weather, and forcibly overcoming as with blows all opposing forces, has nothing to do with beat, to strike (A. Sax. beatan), as the spelling would imply. It is really the same word as Icel. beita, to cruise, tack, weather, or sail round, properly "to let the ship bite [i.e. grip or catch] the wind (Cleasby, p. 56), and so identical with Eng. to bait. Icel. beita is a derivative of bita, to bite (sc. the wind), to sail or cruise (Id. 64). See Skeat, Etym. Dict., s.v. Weather-beaten. Compare prov. Eng. bite, the hold which the short end of a lever has upon the thing to be lifted (Wright).

BEDRIDDEN, p. 25.

Of poremen þat hen bedrede & conchen in muk or dust is litel þou3t on or no3t.—Wy-cliffe, Unprinted Works, p. 211 (E.E.T.S.).

David—let him alone, for he was in hys childhooð a bedred man.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 34.

BEAU-POT. Mr. Wedgwood tells me that he has observed this word for a pot of flowers so spelt in a modern novel, as if from Fr. beau pot, pot of beauty. It is a corruption of bow-pot (Sala, in Latham), or more correctly bough-pot (Nomenclator, in Halliwell), a pot for boughs.

There's mighty matters in them, I'll assure you,

And in the spreading of a bough-pot.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, iv. 3.

BECOME, p. 25. Strike out "See COMELY."

BEEF-EATER, p. 25. Lady Cowper in her Diary, under date March 3, 1716, speaks of the Earl of Derby as "Captain of the Beef-eaters" (p. 90, ed. 1865). See N. & Q. 5th S. vii. 335.

BELIAL, p. 519. In the following sentence Carlyle evidently regards Belial and Beelzebub as kindred words:—

[He was watching to see] the sons of Mammon, and high sons of Belial and Beelzebub, become sons of God.—Mrs. Oliphant, Life of Ed. Irving, p. 211.

BEESEN, p. 28. Prof. Skeat tells me that this identification of beseen with bisen is quite incorrect. Compare:—

Though thyn array he hadde and yuel biseye.
Chaucer, Clerkes Tale, 965 (Clarendon Press).

Hir array, so richely biseye.

Id. 984.

BEWARING, curiously used by De Quincey for "being ware," apparently from a notion that the be is a prefix, as in bewilder, bewitch, &c. To beware is merely to be ware (esse cautus), ware, old Eng. war, meaning wary, cautious; A. Sax. wær. We might as correctly form besuring from to be sure.

"Oh, my lord, beware of jealousy!" Yes, and my lord couldn't possibly have more reason for bewaring of it than myself.—De Quincey, Autobiographic Sketches, Works, xiv. 65.

For the right usage compare:—

Of whom be thou ware also.—A. V. 2 Tim. iv. 15.

They were ware of it, and fled unto Lystra.—Acts xiv. 6.

I was ware of the fairest medler tree.

Chaucer, Flower and Leaf, l. 85.

Compare the peculiar use of fare-welling in the following:—

Till she brake from their armes (although indeed

Going from them, from them she could not goe)

And fare-welling the flocke, did homeward wend.

Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, 1629, p. 91.

BILE, p. 28, seems to be the right form, which has been corrupted to boil, from a confusion with boil, to bubble from heat. Compare the A. Sax. form byle, and Icel. beyla, a swelling (Skeat, p. 781).

BLESS, p. 31. Prof. Atkinson thinks Fr. blesser, Norm. Fr. blescer ("Ele se sent blescée."—Vie de St. Auban, 522), is connected with M. H. Ger. bletzen, to chop to pieces, O. H. Ger. plcz.

Curiously enough, this word seems to survive in prov. English. An East Lancashire cattle-dealer has been heard to ask a companion, one of whose fingers was bandaged, if he had a blesser (= blesure) upon his finger, meaning evidently a wound or hurt (N. & Q. 6th Ser. vi. 28).

BLINDFOLD, p. 31. As an instance of the general assumption that this word has reference to the folds of the material used to cover the eyes, compare the following verse of a poem on the words "They blindfolded Him" (St. Luke xxii. 64) :—

Now, hid beneath the twisted fold,
From sinful men their light withhold
Eyes, whose least flash of sovran ire
Might wrap the world in folds of fire.

The Monthly Packet, N. Ser. vol. xiii.
p. 415.

BLISSE, sometimes used in old Eng. for to bless (A. Sax. blētsian, bledsian, O. Northumb. bloedsian, to sacrifice, to consecrate with blood, A. Sax. blōd), as if it meant to make happy, A. Sax. blissian, blēssian, to bestow bliss (A. Sax. blis, blitheness, from blīðe, joyful, like Lat. beare, to bless, whence beatus, happy. So blissing is an old corruption of blessing (A. Sax. bloetsung, blood-sung).

[She] gan the child to kisse
And lulled it, and after gan it blisse.
Chaucer, Clerkes Tale, l. 553.

pis abel was a blissed blod.
Cursor Mundi, l. 1055 (Cotton MS.; blessed, Fairfax MS.).

Commes now til me,
My fadir blissed childer fre.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 6148.

Who lyste to offer shall have my blissinge.
—Heywood, The Four P's (Dodsley, i. 79, ed. 1825).

All that . . . were devoute sholde haue godes blissinge.—Life of the Holy and Blessed Virgin, St. Winifrede, Caxton, 1485.

Blissid is that seruaunt.—Wycklyffe, Mutt.
xxiv. 46.

See Diefenbach, Goth. Sprache, i. 313;
Ettmüller, p. 313; and Skeat, p. 781.
The account of BLESS, p. 31, should be modified in accordance with the above.

BLUSH, p. 33.

Thou durst not blushe once backe for better or worsae.

Death and Liffe, l. 388 (Percy Fol.
MS. iii. 72).

BONEFIRE, p. 34. An old use of the word is "Banefire; ignis ossium."
—Catholicon Anglicum, 1483 (Skeat, 781). The original meaning was, no doubt, a funeral pyre for consuming
the bones of a corpse.

BOOZING-KEN, p. 35. Compare boozah or boozeh, the barley-beer of modern Egypt (Lane, Thousand and One Nights,
i. 118).

Boss, p. 36. I now think this is another use of old Eng. boss, old Dut.

buys, a tube or conduit-pipe. See TRUNK, p. 408. Compare:—

Bosse Alley, so called of a boss of spring water continually running.—Stow, Survey,
p. 79 (ed. Thoms).

ΒΟΥΤΥΡΟΝ, p. 465. Similarly Greek βούβαλος (whence our buffalo), originally meaning an antelope, is believed to be a foreign word assimilated to Greek βούς, an ox (Skeat, 783).

BOWER, p. 36. As arbour has often been associated with Lat. arbor, a tree, so bower has come to be regarded as "a shaded place of retirement formed of trees or the bows [boughs] or branches of trees" (Richardson). Compare old Eng. "bowe of a tre, ramus."—Prompt.
Parv. Thus Shakespeare speaks of "the pleached bower" (Much Ado, iii. 1), i.e. plaited, interlacing bower, and Milton speaks repeatedly of Eve's
"shady bower."

Alone they pass'd

On to their blissful bower: . . . the roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade,
Laurel and myrtle, and what higher grew
Of firm and fragrant leaf.

Par. Lost, iv. 695.

You have heard of the building of Jonah, how God buildeth the one by art, the other by nature; the one a tabernacle of boughs, the other an arbor or bower of a living or growing tree, which the fatness of the earth nourished.
—Bp. J. King, On Jonah, 1594, p. 289 (ed.
Grosart).

Ere these have clothed their branchy bowers.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxvi.

A bower of vine and honey-suckle.

Id. Aylmer's Field, l. 156.

It originally denoted a small inner room distinct from the common hall,
esp. a lady's chamber, A. Sax. búr
(Icel. búr), from búan, to dwell.

Bowre, chambyr, thalamus.—Prompt.
Parv.

I shal lene þe a bower,
þat is up in þe heyte tour.

Huvelok the Dane, l. 2072.

Castles adoun falleþ
boþe halles ant bures.

Body and Soul, l. 132 (Böddeker, Alt.
Eng. Dicht. p. 240).

Orpheus did recoure

His Leman from the Stygian Princes boure.
Spenser, F. Queene, IV. x. 58.

BRANNY, an Oxfordshire word for freckled (and brans, freckles).—E. D. Soc.
Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 76. The word is not directly connected with bram, the grains of which freckles might be supposed to resemble, nor with N. Eng. bran, to burn, brant, brent, burnt, as if suu-burnings; it is rather from old Fr. bran or bren, (1) filth, ordure, (2) a spot or defilement (also (3) refuse of wheat, "bran"); compare Fr. breneux, filthy, Bret. brenn.

Frecken, or freccles in ones face, lentile, brand of Judas.—Palsgrave.

Bran de Iudas, freckles in the face.—Cotgrave.

BRAZEN-NOSE, p. 521.

Know that Prince Edward is at Brazen-nose.
Green, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay,
1594 (p. 164, ed. Dyce).

BREECHES, p. 38. For the old word breech with which this was confused, compare the following:—

Tristrem schare the brest,
The tong sat next the pride;
The heminges swithe on est,
He schar and layd beside;
The breche [= buttocks] adown he threst,
He ritt, and gan to right.
Sir Tristrem, st. xlv. (ed. Scott),
ab. 1220-50.

A. Sax. brec, breech (Lat. nates).—Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft, vol. iii. Glossary (ed. Cockayne).

It is no Dog or Bitch
That stands behind him at his Breech.
Butler, Hudibras, II. iii. 270.

Hearne says:—

The Scots highlanders call their pladds brachams; and brech, in that language, signifies spotted, as their plaids are of many colours. That the brache of the old Gauls were not britches, I presume from Suetonius, who says in Vitâ Cæs. "Iidem in curia Galli bracas deposuerunt."—Reliq. Hearnianæ, ii. 188 (ed. Bliss).

BRICK, p. 38.

"Ethel is a brick, and Alfred is a trump, I think you say," remarks Lady Kew.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. x. p. 106.

Brown, in the old English ballad phrase, "the bright browne sword," according to Cleasby and Vigfusson (p. 77) is corrupted from Icel. brugðinn, drawn, unsheathed. Compare Icel. "sverð brugðit," a drawn sword, from bregða, to draw or brandish, old Eng. braide. Compare old Eng. browdene, Soot. browdyne, extended, displayed.

In my hand a bright browne brand that will well bite of thee.

Percy Folio MS. vol. i. p. 56, l. 72.

If this be correct, the word is further corrupted in the following:—

Young Johnstone had a nut-brown sword,
Hung low down by his gair.
Legendary Ballads of Scotland, p. 227
(ed. Mackay).

But we meet "brandes of browne stele" in Morte Arthure, l. 1487.

BROWN BREAD, p. 40. Compare:—

All feats of arms are now abridged . . .
To digging-up of skeletons,
To make Brown Georges of the bones.
S. Butler, Works, ii. 290 (ed. Clarke).

BROWN STUDY, p. 40.

John Roynoldes founde his companion syttynge in a browne study at the Inne gate, to whom he sayd: for shame man how sytteth thou?—Mery Tales and Quicke Answers, lxxii.
(ab. 1535). See N. & Q. 6th S. v. 54.
Brown-deep, Lost in reflection, Kent.—
Wright, Prov. Dict.

BUBBLE, p. 41. The following is by Ned Ward about 1717:—

Should honest hrethren once discern
Our knaveries, they'd disown us
And bubb'l'd fools more wit should learn,
The Lord have mercy on us.
Cavalier Songs and Ballads, p. 198
(ed. Mackay).

And silly as that bubble every whit,
Who at the self-same blot is always hit.
Oldham, Poems (ab. 1680), p. 160
(ed. Bell).

No, no, friend, I shall never be bubbled out of my religion.—Fielding, Works, p. 175 (ed.
1841).

BUDGE, p. 42. Compare:—

Would not some head,
That is with seeming shadowes only fed,
Swear yon same damaske-coat, yon guarded man,
Were some grave sober Cato Utican?
When, let him but in judgements sight
uncase,
He's naught but budge, old gards, browne
fox-fur face.
Marston, Scourge of Villanie, Sat. vii.
(vol. iii. p. 280).

Compare Lincolnshire bug, fussy, pleased, conceited, lively, e.g. "As bug
as a lop [= flea].—E. D. Soc. Orig.
Glossaries, C. p. 116.

Compare:—

Boggyschyn [miswritten baggyshyn], bog- gysche, boggishe, Tumidus.—Prompt. Parv.
Boggy, bumptious, an old Norwich school-word.—Wright.
Old Eng. bog, self-sufficient.—Id.

BULL, p. 43.

In a letter of the Earl of Lauderdale, written in 1648, he mentions a report which he knows is false, and adds the cautionary parenthesis—"(A Bull)."—See The Hamilton Papers, 1638-50, p. 238 (Camden Soc.).

BULLY-ROOK, p. 44. An old colloquial corruption of bully seems to be bullock.

Then you have charged me with bullocking you into owning the truth. It is very likely, an't it, please your worship, that I should bullock him?—Fielding, Hist. of a Foundling, bk. ii. ch. 6.

BUMPER, p. 45. Compare:—

We have unloaded the bread-basket, the beef-kettle, and the beer-bumbards there, amongst your guests the beggars.—R. Brome, The Jovial Crew, act i. sc. 1 (1652).

Other bottles we have of leather, but they most used amongst the shepherds and harvest people of the country; . . . besides the great black-jack and bombards at the court, which when the Frenchmen first saw, they reported at their returne into their country, that the Englishmen used to drinke out of their bootes.—Philocotonista, or, The Drunkard opened, &c. p. 45 (1635).

Why do'st thou converse with that Trunke of Humors, that Boutling-Hutch of Beastliness, that swolne Parcell of Dropsies, that huge Bombard of Sacke.—Shakespeare, 1 Hen. IV. act ii. sc. 4.

BURDEN, p. 45. Burden of a song, from bourdon, a trumpet, an organ-pipe. Prof. Atkinson thinks that the latter word may be only another usage of burdo, a long staff, to which it bore a resemblance, It. bordone, a pilgrim's staff, a name facetiously derived from Lat. burdo, a mule; compare Sp. muleta, (1) a mule, (2) a crutch.

The confusion of burden with burthen (A. Sax. byrðen, what is borne, a load) was perhaps promoted by the scriptural usage of burden for a heavy strain, an oppressive or afflictive prophecy, e.g. "the burden of Nineveh" (Nahum i. 1); "the burden of the word of the Lord" (Zech. ix. 1). Compare the phrase, "This was the burden [i.e. gist or import] of all his remarks."

No Porter's Burthen pass'd along,
But serv'd for Burthen to his song.

Butler, Hudibras, II. iii. 390.

The troubles of a worthy priest,
The burthen of my song.

Cowper, The Yearly Distress, l. 4.

BURNISH, p. 45. Compare:—

Chascun an burjument arbres e lur fruit dument.
P. De Thauin, Livre des Creatures, l. 742
(12th cent.).

[Each year the trees shoot out and give their fruit.]

We must not all run up in height like a hop-pole, but also burnish and spread in breadth.—Fuller (Bailey, Life of T. Fuller, p. 199).

Who came to stock
The etherial pastures with so fair a flock,
Burnished and battenng on their food.

Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 390.

Burnish, to polish, is itself altered by metathesis (old Fr. burnir) from old Fr. brunir, It. brunire (O. H. Ger. brân, brown, dark), as if to brownish. Changes as violent, as that from burgen to burnige or burnish, might be adduced. Compare ancestor for antecessor, omelet for alemet; Fr. orseille for rochelle; Wallon erculisse for liquorice; Sp. lobrego, from lugubris; Sp. mastranto = It. mentastro; old Fr. ortrait (Cotgrave) for retrait. See further, under WRIGHT, p. 452, and WALLET below.

BUSH, an old and prov. Eng. word for the inner part of the nave of a wheel (Bailey; Lonsdale Glossary), is a corruption of old Fr. boiste, the same, orig. a box; Prov. bostia, boissa, from L. Lat. buanda, acc. of buvis, a box.

BUTCH, p. 46. Similarly to swindle has been evolved out of swindler (Ger. Schwindler), and to stoke, to tend a fire, from the older form stoker.

BUTTER-BUMP, p. 47.

Those of our connaw tell a bitterbump fro a gillhooter [= owl].—Collier, Works (Lancash. dialect), p. 34.

BUTTERY, p. 47. Dut. bottelery (Sevel). When used, as in the Lonsdale dialect, for a dairy, the form has evidently reacted on the meaning.

BY-LAW, p. 48. In Cumberland a custom or law established in a township or village is still called a byar law, or byr law (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 107).

C.

CALF, p. 48. The chief muscles of the body were named from lively animals; e.g. Icel. kinn-fiskr = cheek-muscle; kalfi (calf) of the leg (Vigfusson); mús, mouse, the biceps muscle of the arm, and so in A. Sax. and O. H. G. Cf. musculus, (1) a little mouse, (2) a muscle.

CANE-APPLE, p. 49. The berry of the arbutus is so called from the Irish caithne, pronounced cah'na, the arbutus (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, 2nd ser. p. 338).

CARNIVAL, p. 51. The popular etymology of this word still turns up in the newspapers:—

In its flourishing days, the Carnival was really and truly what its name implies, a temporary and by no means short farewell to all carnal enjoyments.—The Standard, Feb. 22, 1832.

CARRIAGE, p. 51.

To mount two-wheel'd caroches, worse Than managing a wooden horse.

Butler, Hudibras, Pt. III. iii. l. 212.

CAST, p. 52. Prof. Skeat writes to me that it is quite beside the mark to adduce A. Sax. costian, &c., as those words do not mean to attempt or try, but to tempt. We may perhaps compare the use of conjecture from conficere, to cast or throw together.

CAT, a boy's game played with a bit of stick called a cat, otherwise known as catty, bandy-cat (Lonsdale), kit-cat, or tip-cat. It seems to be a corruption of kit or kid, a stick or faggot, Manx kit, prov. Eng. chat (Cumberland) or chit, a small branch, a shoot (also used for an infant), A. Sax. cið, a sprout. Wycliffe translates catulos, Vulg. Is. xxxiv. 15, by chittes (Skeat). Compare Cumberland cat-talk, small-talk (Ferguson), for chat (chatter).

My storehouse of tops, gigs, balls, cat and catsticks.—Brome, New Academy, iv. 1 (Nares).

Can the cat, or cat-o'-nine-tails, be abbreviated from Low Lat. catomus, a leathern whip, a scourge loaded with lead, catomare, to scourge? L. Lat. catomus originated in a misapprehension of the Greek adverbial phrase, κατ' ὤμων, "upon the shoulders" (Maitland, Church in the Catacombs, p. 168).

CATER-COUSIN, p. 54. In the Lonsdale dialect caper-cousins, intimate friends (R. B. Peacock).

CATERPILLER, p. 54.

Of the Hebrews it is termed Ghzzain, because it sheareth, pilleth, & deuoureth the fruites of the earth as Kimhi vpon the first of Joell writeth. . . In the Germaine tongue Ein Raup, in the Belgian Ruipe.—Topsell, Hist. of Serpents, 1608, p. 103.

CAT IN PAN, TO TURN, p. 55. It has occurred to me, as a mere conjecture, that this phrase might have some connexion with the Wallon du Mons katinpaum, meaning the down that covers young birds before they are fully fledged. To turn katinpaum might conceivably mean to exchange one's immature condition for another more advanced, to make a change for one's advantage, in fact, literally in this sense, to become a "turn-coat," to change down for feathers.

Katinpaum is a corrupt form of Netherland. katoenboom (cotton-tree), confused with katoenpluim, cotton-down, katepluim, cat's fur, Ger. katzenflaum.

CAVE IN, to sink or tumble down as the side of a pit does when undermined or hollowed out, is popularly supposed to have some reference to the cave or cavity antecedently produced when the ground has been excavated. For instance, when, as in Spenser's words—

The mouldred earth had cav'd the banke.

Faerie Queene, IV. v. 33—

it might be expected that the bank would cave in. However, this connexion is probably imaginary. The original form of the word, and that still always used in Lincolnshire, is "to calve in," the falling portion of the bank being whimsically regarded as a "calf."

Some "bankers" were engaged in widening a drain, when suddenly three of them jumped out of the cutting, shouting out, "Tak heed, lads, there's a cawlf a comin'."—E. Peacock, N. & Q. 4th S. xii. p. 275.

So a Suffolk labourer talks of a ditch "caving in," and a hungry farmer will say the same of his stomach. The word is now generally used in a figurative sense for to give up, to cry craven, or acknowledge one's self beaten.

A puppy, three weeks old, joins the chase heart and soul, but caves in at about fifty yards.—H. Kingsley, Geoffrey Hamlyn, ch. xxviii. [Davies].

John Wesley writes:—

He was sitting cleaving stones when the rock calved in upon him.

See Notes and Queries, 4th S. xii. 166, 275. Mr. Wedgwood directs my attention to the fact that precisely the same idiom is found in W. Flanders, inkalven, to cave in; de gracht kalfst in, the ditch caves in (De Bo, West Flemish Dict.).

We also find Lancashire kayve, to overturn or upset (E. D. Soc.), and Scot. cave over, to fall over suddenly (Jamieson).

CAUGHT, the past tense of catch (O. F. caacier, chacier, Mod. Fr. chasser, to chase, from Low Lat. captiare = Lat. captare, to capture), formed, as if it were a true English verb, by analogy to old Eng. laughte, past tense of lotch, lacche, to seize, A. Sax. lœccan (Skeat), laught from reach, taught from teach, &c.

CAUSE-WAY, p. 56. Compare Wallon du Mons cauchie (= Fr. chaussée) and cauche, causse, chalk (Lat. calx).—Sigtart. So old Fr. cauchie, Flem. kautsje, kaussije, a path or pavement.

CHAFF, p. 57.

Vnder this pitch
He would not flie; I chuff'd him. But as Itch
Scratch'd into smart, and as blunt Iron grownd
Into an edge, hurts worse: So, I (foole)
found.

Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 137.

CHAINY OYSTERS, an Oxfordshire form of China asters (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 77).

CHANCE MEDLEY, p. 58. However, the following would seem to show that it is the learned forms of the word which are the corruptions:—

I doe not knowe what ye call chaunce medly in the law, it is not for my study. . . . If I shall fall out with a man, he is angry with me, and I with him, and lacking oportunitie and place, wee shall put it of for that tyme; in the meane season I prepare my weapon and sharpe it agaynst an other time, I swell and boyle in thys passion towards him, I seeke him, we meddle together, it is my chance by reason is better then hys, and so forth, to kyl him, I geue him his deathes stroke, in my vengeance and anger. This call I voluntary murder in Scripture: what it is in the law I cannot tell.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 68.

CHANGELING, p. 58.

Alluding to the opinion of Nurses, who are wont to say, that the Fayries use to steale the fairest children out of their cradles, and put other ill faounerd in their places, which they called changelings or Elfs.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (1589), p. 184 (ed. Arber).

CHAP, p. 58, a fellow. But Mr. Atkinson points out that this usage exactly corresponds to Dan. and prov. Swed. kjæft, käft, (1) a jaw or chap, (2) an individual or person; Dut. käft, Icel. kjaptr, a jaw (Lonsdale Glossary, s.v.).

CHAR-COAL, p. 58. And yet we read in William of Palerne (ab. 1350) of "choliars þat cayreden col" (l. 2520), i.e. colliers that charred coal, from old Eng. caire, to turn, A. Sax. cerran (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1868-9, p. 290).

CHATOUILLER, p. 468. Compare Lancashire kittle, to tickle, and kittle, to bring forth kittens (E. D. Soc. p. 175).

CHAW, p. 60.

I saw my wythered skyn,
How it doth show my dented chews
the flesh was worne so thyn:
And eke my tothelesse chaps.

Tottel, Miscellany, 1557, p. 31
(ed. Arber).

CHECK-LATON, p. 60. The origin of old Eng. ciclatoun (Chaucer) is rather Pers. saqlâtûn, scarlet cloth, another form of saqalât, meaning the same, whence It. scarlatto, old Fr. escarlate. See Skeat, s.v. SCARLET.

CHEER, to console, gladden, or exhilarate. There can be little doubt that this word has been popularly confused with cherish, to foster, to hold dear (cher), and that this mistake has influenced its usage. Thus Richardson, under Cheer, says, "see Cherish," and Cotgrave gives "Cherer, cherir, to cheer, to cherish." Compare also the following:—

Then salle I cherische the with chere as thou my child were.

Alexander, l. 367 (ed. Stevenson).

The proper meaning of to cheer is to countenance, to give one the "help of his countenance" (Ps. xli. 7, P. B. vers.; compare A. V. Ps. iv. 6; Ez. xxiii. 3), and so to favour, or make glad (opp. to "hide one's face from," Ps. xxx. 7); cheer being an old Eng. word for the face or countenance, derived from old Fr. chere, the face (also care and caire, Cotgrave), Low Lat. cara, the face, Greek kára, the head, whence also Sp. cara, "the face, looke or cheere of a man" (Minsheu), It. cera. The converse change of meaning is seen in the old use of favour for countenance or mien. So "to be of good cheer" is to be of good countenance. Compare:—

Faire bonne chere à, to entertain kindly, use friendly, welcome heartily, make good cheer unto.—Cotgrave.

Faire grande, ou ioyeuse chere, to be passing merry, to live most pleasantly and plentifully, to make great cheer.—Id.

She peineth hire to make good countenance.
—Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.

But with faire countenance, as beseeemed beat

Her entertayn'd.
Spenser, F. Queene, III. i. 55.

In old English chere is the common word for the visage, whether sad or joyous.

His chere es dreery and his sembland.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 791.

In swot of þi chere þu schalt eyt þi brede.
Apology for the Lollards, p. 105
(Camden Soc.).

[Where the editor thinks chere a mistake for cheke! Vulg. in sudore vultus tui.]

They make als mirry chere,
Als hit were 3ole day.

Three Met. Romances, p. 91 (Camden Soc.).

Her solemne cheare, and gazing in the fount,
Denote her anguish and her griefe of soule.

H. Peacham, Minerva Britanna,
Penitencia, 1612.

Griefe all in sable sorrowfully clad Downe hanging his dull head with heavy
chere.

Faerie Queene, III. xii. 16.

Or make a Spanish face with fawning cheer,
With th' lland congée like a cavalier.

Hall, Satires, iv. 2.

All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer.

Midsummer N. Dream, iii. 2.

The orig. force of cheer (to gladden with one's face) and cheerful (of a pleasant countenance, Lat. vultuosus) may be traced in a passage from Ward's Sermons on Rev. vi. 7:—

Behold also the colour of this horse, χλωρος, the colour of the withering leaf, pale & wan, symbolizing & noting the effect he hath first upon the living, whom he appals, as he did Belshazzar, whom all his concubines & courtiers could not cheer, nor all his wine in the bowls of the temple fetch colour into his countenance . . . . Whereas Christians . . . . change not their countenance, nor have their colour any whit abated, but as is recorded of Mrs. Joyce Lewis at the stake, & sundry other Christians, even of the fearfulest by nature & sex, looked as fresh and cheerfully at the hour of death as at their marriage.—Adams, iii. 56.

Though fortune be straunge,
To you a whyle turnynge of her face,
Her louring chere she may ryght some chunge.

Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, p. 68
(Percy Soc.).

When you come to her she wyl make you
chere

With countenance, accordyng unto love.

Id. p. 72.

Bid your friends welcome, show a merry cheer.

Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.

He that showeth mercy with cheerfulness.—
A. V. Rom. xii. 8.

Dat bene, dat multum, qui dat cum munere vultum.—Trench, Proverbs, p. 185.

To cheer, now often used in the specific sense of encouraging with loud acclamations, formerly meant to feast or entertain at a banquet.

They had not only feasted the king, queen, &c. . . . but also they cheered all the knights and burgesses of the common house in the parliament, and entertained the mayor of London . . . . at a dinner.—Stow, Surway, 1603, p. 167 (ed. Thoms).

CHEERUPPING CUP, p. 60.

When the Lowlanders want to drink a cheerupping cup, they go to the public-house called the change-house, and call for a chopin of twopenny.—Smollett, Humphrey Clinker, ii. 69.

You little know how a jolly Scotch gentleman . . . *chirrup*s over his honest cups.—
Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. xiii. p. 135.

CHEESEBOWL, p. 61.

Papauer is called in greeke Mecon, in englishe Poppy or Chesboul.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 59 (E. D. S.).

CHICKIN, p. 61. Add:—

At Feluchia the marchants plucke their boats in pieces, or else sell them for a small price, for that at Bir they cost the marchants forty or fifty chickens a piece, and they sell them at Feluchia for seven or eight chickens a piece.—Hakluyt, Voiages, ii. 213.

CHICK-PEA, p. 61. Compare:—

Cicer may be named in english Cich, or ciche pease after the Frenche tongue.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 27 (E. D. Soc.).

CHILD, p. 62. Prof. Atkinson thinks that baron, Norm. Fr. barun, man, husband, Low Lat. bāro (= the burden bearer for the troops), is derived from Goth. bairan, to bear, from which would come an O. H. Ger. bero (acc. beron), bearer, then an active man (Vie de St. Auban, note on l. 301). Compare Norm.

Fr. barnage, the nobility. Thus baron would be akin to A. Sax. beorn, a hero. With his baronage bolde & buernes full noble. Destruction of Troy, l. 324 (E.E.T.S.).

CHINCOUGH, p. 62, Lancashire kin-cough, whooping cough, kink-kaust, a violent cough, kink, to lose the breath with coughing or laughing (E. D. S. Glossary, p. 174).

CHISSEL-BOB, a word used in the Isle of Wight for the wood-louse (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii. p. 6), is a corruption of the old name for this insect, cheslip (Mouffet), or cheeselip (Topsell), sometimes called chisel-bol or cheese-boll. Adams compares Swed. suggaloppe, "sow-lop," the wood-louse (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1860-1, p. 12).

CHITTYFACED, p. 62. Compare also:—

Vous etes une vray chiche face.—Comédie des Prov., acte i. sc. iv. (xvii. siècle).

Chiche-face était un monstre symbolique qui se nourrissait des femmes obéissantes à leur maris: de là sa grande maigreur et l'emploi de son nom pour désigner une personne étique. On opposait à Chiche-face un autre monstre prodigieusement gros et gras, Bigorne, qui mange tous les hommes qui font le commandement de leur femmes. (Voyez sur ce sujet un excellent travail de M. A. de Montaiglon, Recueil de poésies françaises, &c. t. ii. p. 191, Bibliothèque elzévirienne.)—Le Roux de Lincy, Proverbes Français, 1. 165.

On Chaucer's mention of the Chiche Vache, i.e. "lean cow" (Clerk's Tale, l. 1182, Clarendon Press), Lest Chichevache yow swelwe in hir entraille,

Prof. Skeat quotes—

Gardez vous de la chicheface.

M. Jubinal, Mystères Inédits du XV. Siècle, i. 281.

Every lover admires his mistress though she . . . have a swoln juglers platter face, or a thin, lean, chitty face.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, III. ii. 4, 1.

I will catch thee up by one,
Of those fat Stumps thou walk'st upon,
And give your Rogueship such a Swing,
As (Monsieur Chitty-face) shall fling
You and your Implements to Hell.

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, p. 247.

CHOKEFUL, p. 63.

Charottez chokkefulle charegyde with golde.
Morte Arthure, l. 1552.

One of the kings of France died miserably by the chock of a hog.—T. Brooks, Works, 1662, vol. iv. p. 113 (Nichol's ed.).

The new edition of the Imperial Dictionary (1882) explains chock here as meaning shock or encounter!

CHOUGH, a species of jackdaw, pronounced chuff from false analogy to tough, rough, cough, trough, &c., instead of, as it ought to be, cho or chow, riming with though or plough, its A. Sax. name being ceō, Dut. kaauw. Indeed, the pronunciation of -gh in English has always been very unsettled. Enough was formerly spelt and pronounced enow or ynow. Daughter is in prov. Eng. sometimes pronounced dafter, bough as buff, bought as boft, though as thof. It seems that cough and rough were in olden times pronounced cow and row, as the Prompt. Parvulorum gives "Cowyn or hostyn, Tussio," and "Rowghe as here or oper lyke (al. row) Hispidus." In old epitaphs bethoft is found for bethought.

Who so hym bethoft, ful inwardly and oft
How hard tis to flit, from bed to the pit.
From pit vnto peyne, which sal neuer end
certeyne,

He wold not do on sin, al the world to win.
J. Weever, Funerall Monuments, 1631,
p. 625.

I have marks enow about my body to show of his cruelty to me.—Fielding, Hist. of a Foundling, bk. ii. ch. 6.

I thoft he had been an officer himself.—Id.
bk. vii. ch. 13.

I think yon oft [= ought] to favour us.—Id.

As thof I should be the occasion of her leaving the estate out o' the vamily.—Id.
bk. vii. ch. 5.

CITIZEN, an old corrupt form of citiyen (= Fr. citoyen), old Scot. citeyan, i.e. a city-ian, or native of a city, like Paris-ian, Corinth-ian (old Fr. citeain), originating in a misreading of old Eng. citi3en, where 3 is really y. Similar misreadings are perpetuated in capercailzie, gabertunzie, Cockenzie, Dalziel, Mackenzie, &c., which should be capercailzie, i.e. capercailzie, &c. See J. A. H. Murray, Dialect of S. Counties of Scotland, p. 129. The contrasted word is peasant, Fr. pays-an, a country-man.

Than ilk side began to exhort thair ciere-yanis and campiounis to schaw thair manhede.—J. Bellenden, Traduction of Livy, 1533 [op. cit. p. 62].

Citizen was perhaps influenced by artisan, partisan, &c. Similarly to chastise has been assimilated to cate- chise, civilise, criticise, &c. and ought to be chasty (like sully, tally, &c.) or chastish (like cherish, establish, &c.), being from old Eng. chastien, O. Fr. chastier, Lat. castigare.

CLEVER, p. 65. Charlotte Brontë had a true perception of the meaning of this word:—

Some one at school, said she, "was always talking about clever people; Johnson, Sheridan, &c." She said, "Now you don't know the meaning of clever; Sheridan might be clever; yes, Sheridan was clever,—scamps often are; but Johnson hadn't a spark of cleverality in him."—Mrs. Gaskell, Life of C. Brontë, ch. vi. p. 76.

CLIPPER, p. 66. Compare with the German the following description of a rabbit's pace:—

Brer Rabbit come—lippity-clippity, clippity-lippity—des a sailin' down de big road.—Uncle Remus, p. 43.

CLOPOTE, p. 469. In Oxfordshire the woodlouse is called Devil's pig, and sometimes God A'mighty's pig (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 104).

CLOVE GILLIFLOWER, the clove-scented gilliflower, where clove, for old Eng. cloue, clowe (Fr. clou, Sp. clavo), a nail, the nail-shaped spice (Lat. clavus), has been mistaken for a slip or cloven piece of gilliflower. Compare Fr. clou de girofle, a clove.

The word was confounded with old Eng. "cloue of garlek" (Prompt. Parv.), where cloue is from A. Sax. clufe, a cloven piece, from clufon, to cleave.

Which aldermanry, Ankerinus de Avernè held during his life, . . . yielding therefore yearly to the said Thomas and his heirs one cloue or slip of gilliflowers.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 116 (ed. Thoms).

CLUTCH, a prov. Eng. word for a brood of chickens hatched at the same time (in general use in Ireland), is obviously near akin to Icel. klekja, to hatch, Dan. klække, Swed. kläcka. Compare N. Lincolnshire cletch, a brood of chickens (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 116); Lonsdale clatch.

COCK-A-HOOP, p. 67. Add:—

Sir Nicholas Twiford, goldsmith, mayor, gave to that church a house, with the appurtenances, called the Griffon on the Hope, in the same street.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 120 (ed. Thoms).

COCKATRICE, p. 68. Compare Wal-lon du Mons coccodrille, a crocodile.

COCKLETY (prov. Eng.), shaky, unsteady, easily upset (as if like a cock, or small boat), is evidently the same word as Lancashire kecklety, unsteady, likely to topple over, "As kecklety us o wud waytur tub," otherwise keckley, "Thou stonds very keckley" (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 171), which words come from Lanc. keck, to upset. But compare "a cockling sea," prov. Eng. coggle, to be shaky (Skeat). A material which becomes wavy or uneven from being exposed to rain is said to cockle.

COCK-ROSE, p. 69. Compare:—

Papauer erraticū is called in greeke Rois, in englishe Redcorn-rose or wylde popy, in duche wilde man, korne rosen, or klapper rosen.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 59 (E. D. S.).

CŒNA, p. 467. Compare the title of a book published about 1658:—

Cœna quasi conviv. The New Enclosure broken down, or the Lord's Supper laid open in Common. By Will. Morrice.

COLONEL, p. 71.

The Centurian obeid the Millenarie, that had charge of a thousande. And he againe was subject to the grande Coronelle that had charge over ten thousande.—Fardle of Facions (1555), pt. ii. c. x. p. 211.

Have you not made among you Tenmen Citizens of your owne, to be your Capetaines, Coronels, and Marshalls?—Wylson, Demosthenes, 1570, p. 40.

At the journey too Bulleyne hee was appointed to followe the duke of Northfolck to the Siege of Mountreile, and was, I take it, Coronell of the footemen, though he that tearme in those dayes unuzed.—Life of Lord Grey of Wilton, p. 1 (Camden Society), ab. 1570.

The siege of Montreuil was in 1544. See Notes and Queries, 6th S. iv. 454.

See Skeat, p. 785, who strangely prefers the derivation from It. colonna, a column, which does not seem to have been used for the division of an army (see Florio).

COLT-STAFF, p. 72, was sometimes understood as a staff which helped to bear one as a colt would; like Span. muleta, a crutch, from mulus, and Fr. bordoun, a staff, It. bordone, from Lat. burdo, a mule.

There is an Adage or proverbe called "Mulus Mariauus." . . . It signifieth properly a bearing backe, or colt-staff, as we say in English, whereupon poore men carry their burdens, and from thence it was translated into a prouerbe to signifie all that do obey commaunds.—Topsell, Hist. of Four-footed Beasts, 1609, p. 563.

Compare :—

Take from me the same horse that was given him by the good Bishop Jewell, this staff.—Goldsmith, The Vicar of Wakefield, ch. iii.

COMB, p. 72.

And also on her head, parde,
Her rose garland white and red,
And her combe to kembe her hed.
Chaucer, House of Fame, i. 137.

COMROGUE, p. 73.

Let it be such a Land as he
Had better far, upon the Sea,
With all his Comroques have been drown'd
Than such a wretched Place have found.
Cottan, Virgil Travestie, bk. iv. p. 134.

CONTRIVE, frequently used by old authors with the meaning of to spend, pass, or wear away time, is due to a reminiscence of the Latin usage, contrivi ætatem meam (Terence), "I spent my age," contrivit tempus (Cicero), "he spent his time," where the verb is the perfect tense of conterere, to wear out. The formation is as incorrect as "to wore" would be, or as is Spenser's pseudo-old Eng. to yede for to go, properly a preterite, and so = to went. The word was confused, no doubt, with the genuine verb contrive. See N. and Q. 6th S. v. 75.

Not that sage Pylian syre, which did survive,
Three ages, such as mortall men contrive.
Spenser, F. Q. II. ix. 48.

Please ye we may contrive this afternoon,
And quaff carouses to our mistress' health.
Shakespeare, Taming of Shrew, i. 2, 276.
In travelyng countreyes, we three have contrived

Full many a yeare.
Edwards, Damon and Pithius (O. Plays, i. 194, ed. 1825).

COPPER, a slang word for a policeman, is one who makes a cop or capture, a seizer.

COUNTERPANE, p. 77. Add at the end :—

But the only counterpane indeed to match this original is the resurrection of the blessed Son of God from death to life, figured in the restitution of the prophet to his former estate of livelihood.—Bp. John King, On Jonah, 1594, p. 196 (Grosart's ed.).

COW-HEART, p. 78. Compare :—

Chien couart voir le loup ne vent.
(Mimes de Baif, fol. 50, XVI. Siècle.)
Le Roux de Lincy, Proverbes Français, i. 165.

COW-PAWED (prov. Eng.), left-handed, is perhaps a popular corruption of Scot. car-handed or ker-handit, from car, the left, Gaelic caerr.

COWSLIP, p. 80. As confirmatory of Prof. Skeat's account, compare :—

Tell me you flowers faire,
Cowslap and Columbine,
So may your Make this wholesome Spring time ayre
With you embraced lie,
And lately thence vtwine :
But with dew drops engender children hie.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, 1629, p. 395.

The Seconde is called in barbarus latin Paralysis, and in englishe a Cowslip, or a Cowslap, or a Pagle.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 79 (E. D. S.).

CRABBED, p. 81.

The arwes of thy crabbed eloquence
Shal perce his brest.
Chaucer, Clerks Tale, l. 1204.

CRACK REGIMENT, p. 82. Compare Lonsdale "He's neya girt cracks," i.e. He is nothing to boast of (R. B. Peacock, Glossary).

CRAVEN, p. 82. I find that substantially the same view of this word is taken by Mr. Nicol, who derives old Eng. cravant (cravant), conquered, overcome, as I have done, from old Fr. cravanté, from a verb cravanter, corresponding to a Lat. crepantare, to break (see Skeat, Appendix, p. 786).

CREEPIE, p. 83.

I sit on my creepie and spin at my wheel,
And think on the laddie that lo'es me sae weel.

G. Halket, Logie o' Buchan.

Of the same origin perhaps is cricket, a three-legged stool, for crippet.

The said rooms contain nine chairs, two tables, five stools, and a cricket.—Gray, Letter XXXI. (1740), p. 318 (ed. Balston).

CROSS, p. 84. Compare Cumberland curl, to take offence, be displeased (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 108).

Attending their revenge [they] grow wond'rouse crouse,
And threaten death and vengeance to our house.

Drayton [in Richardson].

The word was evidently confused with cross, to thwart, and crossness, contrariety, perverseness.

For the popular acceptance of cross, compare:—

When her chamber-door was closed, she scolded her maid, and was as cross as two sticks.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. xxxiii. p. 333.

CRUELS, p. 85. A corruption of scroyle mentioned under this word ("These scroyles of Angiers flout you."—K. John, ii. 2, 373) is Lancashire scrawl, a mean, despicable fellow, "As mean a scrawl as yo'll meet in a day's walk" (Lanc. Glossary, E. D. S. p. 233).

CRUSTY, p. 85. With curse for cross compare the expression "the curse of Scotland," a popular name for the nine of diamonds at cards, said to be so called because the pips were sometimes disposed in the figure of a saltire, the X-shaped cross (Scot. cors, corse) of St. Andrew, the patron saint of Scotland (Monthly Packet, N. Ser. xi. 423). Compare also old colloquial Eng. cursen for christen (crusen).

Nan. Do they speak as we do?

Madge. No, they never speak.

Nan. Are they cursen'd?

Madge. No, they call them infidels.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, iv. 3.

Compare Isle of Wight crousty, ill-tempered, snappish (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii. p. 8).

CUCKOO! the cry made by children in the game of hide-and-seek to announce that they are concealed, used in Ireland, and exactly in the same way in Hainaut. Compare Wallon faire coucou, to hide one's self, and as an infantine word to hide the head (so in English). These words have nothing to do with the bird so named, but are akin to old Fr. cucul, a cowl or hood concealing the head, Bas-Bret. kougoul, Welsh cucull, Corn. cugol (the Lat. cucullus is borrowed from a Gaulish word). Compare Basque cuculcea, to hide or disappear (Sigart). Similarly caw-caw in Kent is a childish corruption of cockal, a cramp-bone used as a plaything (Kitchiner, Cook's Oracle, p. 180). See HOT COCKLES, p. 180.

The persistent vitality of children's games and nursery words from age to age is highly remarkable. The game of "Buck, Buck, how many fingers do I hold up?" is common in Hampshire, and it is noticeable that Petronius Arbitrator mentions a similar game wherein one slaps another on the shoulders, and cries "Bucca, Bucca, quot sunt hic" (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, Ser. C. p. 64). See LOVE (1), p. 224.

CURRENT (prov. Eng.), to leap high, to caper (Isle of Wight, E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.), is evidently a corruption of Elizabethan Eng. coranto (or corranto), a quick pace or a lively dance, used by Shakespeare and Middleton (see Nares), It. corranta (Florio), from correre, to run, Lat. currere. Cavort, to ride or prance ostentatiously, is an American corruption of curvet (Bartlett), old Eng. corvet, which may be compared.

CURRY FAVOUR, p. 88. Add:—

Accordynge to the olde provearhe, "He thatt wylle in courte dwelle must corye favelle," and

He thatt wylle in courte abyde
Must cory favelle hake and syde, for souche gett moste gayne.—Underhill (ab. 1561), Narratives of the Reformation, p. 159 (Camden Soc.).

CYPHER, p. 90. Compare Arabic shofer, a musical horn (in Italian called sciofar), concerning which there is an article in Sat. Review, vol. 53, p. 695; Greek siphon, a pipe or reed. Compare It. zefiro, Low Lat. zephyrum, a cipher, an assimilation to zephyrus, a breeze, of Arab. sifr, a cipher.

D.

DAME STREET, in Dublin, until comparatively recently called Dam St., and in the 17th century spelt Damask St. or Dammes St., was originally named from the adjacent gate of "Sainte Marie del Dam," so called from the Dam of the King's Mills, subsequently known as "Dame's Mills," standing there in the 13th century (J. T. Gilbert, Hist. of Dublin, ii. 263).

It is spelt Damas Stret in Speed's Map of Dublin, 1610.

DECLENSION, a popular contraction of declination (old Fr. declinaison, Lat. de- clinatio), as a form inclension would be of inclination, by false analogy probably to dimension, extension, penson, suspension, &c.

The true and even levell of the declention of arts.—Tom of All Trades, 1631, p. 142 (Shaks. Soc.).

DEFILE, to pollute, older form to defoyl or defoul, is a corruption under the influence of old Eng. file, to pollute, A. Sax. fylan, to make filthy, and foul, of the old Eng. defoulen, to tread down, old Fr. defouler, to trample under foot (Skeat).

Power of defoulinge othir tredinge on serpentis.—Wycliffe, S. Luke, x. 19.

þei ben foule ypocritis, and not worþi hut to be putt out fro cristen men and defouliid.—Wycliffe, Unprinted Works, p. 18 (E.E.T.S.).

DEVIL'S POINT, in Plymouth Sound, is said to have been named from one Duval, an old Huguenot refugee who took up his abode there in the early part of the 18th century.

Devil, Greek diábolos, has furnished fine material for popular etymologists, e.g. Ir. diabhal, supposed to mean the god (dia) Baal; Manx jouyl or diouyl, the god (jee or di) of destruction (ouyl), Manx Soc. Dict.; while diabolos itself was conceived to be from Greek duo, two, and bólos, a morsel, as explained in the following:—

And yet fond man regardeth not one whit
Till he have made himselfe the devils bit,
Who at two bits, for so his name imports,
Devours both soule & body, mans two parts.

The Times' Whistle, 1616, p. 20, l. 572 (E.E.T.S.).

DEUCE, p. 97. The exclamation Deus! God! was no doubt confused with the deuce, or number two, regarded from ancient times as significant of evil and the Evil One. A Jewish superstition accounted for the second day of the Creation not being pronounced "very good" by the Almighty, by observing that it was on that day Satan and his angels fell (Jameson and Eastlake, Hist. of Our Lord, i. 63). Compare:—

Le Diable aussi est double, et l'ont aignifié les Pythagoriens par le nombre de deux, qu'ils disent estre principe de tout mal.—Boucher, Sermons, 1594, p. 3 (Southey, C. P. Book, iii. 411).

In Norman French there is the one form Deus for God and for two. Compare:—

Deus, ki hom furmer deignas à tun semblant,
Cel mal kar restorez!

Vie de St. Auban, l. 1157.

[God! who deignedst to form man in thy likeness, cure this evil.]

Ki estoient esluz par nombre deus faiz ais.

Id. l. 169.

[Who (the apostles) were chosen by number two times six.]

The curious transformation of Deus (= God) into deuce (= Devil) is paralleled by the change of old Pers. daéva, god, into Gipsy devil (though the meaning is different). See DEVIL, p. 471.

In the following from Langtoft's Chronicle, the two deuces are found side by side:—

Deus! cum Merlins dist sovent veritez . . .
Ore sunt le deus ewes en un arivez.

Political Songs, p. 307 (Camden Soc.).

[God! how often Merlin said truth . . .
Now are the two waters come into one.]

With the ducius we may compare the Breton duz, a goblin, also a changeling left by the fairies (Villemarqué, Chants Pop. de la Bretagne, p. liv.).

Whitley Stokes connects the duisi of the old Celtic mythology with Slav. duši, spirits, dusa, soul; dusmus, devil; Sansk. doshu, vice, dush, to sin (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1867, p. 261).

Do, p. 99. Add:—

Iff yow do þua in dede, hit doghis the better.
Destruction of Troy, l. 5001 (E.E.T.S.).

[If you do thus it does (= succeeds) the better.]

DOG CHEAP, p. 100. An early use of the expression is:—

They afforded their wares so dog cheape.—Stanihurst, Description of Ireland, p. 22 (Holinshed, vol. i. 1587).

DOGGED, p. 100.

How found þou þat filthe in þi fals wille,
Of so dogget a dede in þi derf hert.

Destruction of Troy, l. 10379 (E.E.T.S.).

And þou so doggetly has done in þi derfe hate.
Id. l. 1398.

Others are dogged & sullen both in looke and speech.—Dekker, Belman of London, aig. D 2 (1608).

Yet to the poore, that pyning mourn'd and wep't,
He was more dogged then the dogs he kept,
For they lickt sores when he deny'd his cromes.

S. Rowlands, Four Knaves, 1613, p. 104 (Percy Soc.).

DOGGEREL, p. 101.

This may wel be rym dogerele, quod he.
Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 2115.

DOGWOOD, p. 101.

Cornus—The female is plētuous in Eng-lande & the buchers make prickes of it, some cal it Gadrise or dog tree, howe be it there is an other tree that they cal dogrise also.—
W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 30
(E. D. Soc.).

DOILY, a small napkin placed under glasses on the table, seems to be an assimilation of prov. Eng. dwile, a napkin, Dut. dwaal, a "towel," to doily, a species of stuff so called because invented by one Doily (Skeat, 788).

DOLL, p. 101. There is no doubt that idol was sometimes spelt idoll, and perhaps accented on the last syllable. See the following very curious passage, which certainly identifies doll with ydoll:—

Because I spoke euen nowe of Images and Idoltes, I woulde you shoulde not igno-rauntlye coofounde and abuse those termes, takyng an Image for an Idolle and an Idolle for an Image, as I haue hearde manye doe in thys citey, as well of the fathers and mothers (that shoulde be wyse) as of their habies and chyl dren that haue learned foolyshnesse of their parentes. Nowe at the dissolucioa of Monasteries and of Freers houses many Images haue bene caryed abrod, and gyuen to children to playe wyth all. And when the chyl dren haue theym in their handes, dauncynge them after their childysbe maner,
commeth the father or the mother and saythe:
What nasse, what haste thou there?
the childe aunsweareth (as she is taught) I haue here myne ydoll, the father laugheth and maketh a gaye game at it. So saithe the mother to an other, Jugge, or Thommye, where haddest thou that pretye Idoll? John our parishe clarke gaue it me, saythe the childe, and for that the clarke must haue thanks, and shall lacke no good chere.—
Roger Edgeworth, Sermons, 1557, fol. xl.

Dibdin, in his Library Companion,
i. 83 (1824), actually prints the child's answer above in modern English, "I have here mine doll."

DONJON, p. 102. Compare for the meaning:—

Somme of hem wondrede on the mirour,
That born was vp in-to the maister tour.

Chaucer, Squieres Tale, l. 226 (Clarendon Press ed.).

DONKEY-BRED, an Oxfordshire word for low-bred (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glos- saries, C. p. 80), is evidently a corruption of dunggul bred, low-born, lit.

"dunghill bred," used in the same dialect.

DORMEDORY, a Herefordshire word for a heavy sleepy person (Wright), as if from Fr. dormir, is a corrupt form of dromedary, once used in the same sense.
See the quotation from Fuller above, p.
xxvii.

DORMER-WINDOW, a window in the roof, universally understood now to mean the window of a dormitory or sleeping room (Richardson, Wedgwood, Skeat), is properly that which rests on the dormers, which is another form of dormants, the sleepers or main beams supporting the rafters. Compare SLEEPER, p. 361. The reference therefore is not to the slumbers of the inmates, but to the fixed lying position of the immovable beams. See burde
dormande,—Catholicon Anglicum, p. 47
(ed. Herrtage).

DRY, p. 105. Lonsdale dree, long, tedious, wearisome (R. B. Peacock).
The Geste Hystoriale of the Destruction of Troy speaks of "the chekker, the drahtes, the dyse, and oper dreggh
gaumes," l. 1622, i. e. chess, draughts, dice, and other tedious games.

That night, whether we were tired, or whatten, I don't know, but it were dree work.—Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, ch. ix.

DUCK, p. 106. So Isle of Wight
Duck, the dusk of the day (E. D. S.
Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

The duck's coming on; I'll be off in astore.
A Dream of the Isle of Wight (l. p. 52).

In the same dialect tucks are the tusks of a boar (p. 39). Compare MUCK,
p. 600.

E.

EAGER, p. 107.

The Higre—Men as little know the cause of the name, as the thing thereby signified.
Some pronounce it the Eigre, as so called from the keeness and fierceness thereof.
It is the confluence or encounter (as supposed) of the salt and fresh water in Severne, equally terrible with its flashings and noise to the seers and hearers; and oh how much more then to the feelers thereof!—T. Fuller,
Worthies of England, vol. i. p. 376.

So farre, so fast the eygre drave,
The heart had hardly time to beat,
Before a shallow seething wave
Sobbed in the grasses at oure feet.

J. Ingelow, The High Tide.

Akyr of the see flowynge, Impetus maris.
—Prompt. Parv.

Well know they the reumē yf it a-ryse,
An aker it is clept, I vnderstonde.

MS. Poem (in Way).

EARABLE, a common Leicestershire form of arable, as if capable of being eared (Evans, Glossary, p. 10, E. D. S.). See EAR, p. 107.

ELOPE is a corruption of Dut. ont-loopen, to run away, by substituting the familiar prefix e- (Lat. e, ex, out) for the unfamiliar Dut. prefix ont- (Skeat), so as to range with evade, elude, educe, escape, &c. Dut. ont-loopen (= Ger. ent-laufen) is to leap, loaf, or run, away. (See Haldeman, Affixes, p. 64.)

Isle of Wight loop, to elope, "She loop'd away wi' un" (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

EMBOSS, an old word for to hide one's self, is a corruption of embush, old Fr. embuscher, to hide in the bush (whence ambush), It. imboscare. Compare imbosk (Nares).

Look quickly, lest the sight of us
Should cause the startled beast t'emboss.

Sam. Butler, Works, vol. ii. p. 107,
l. 130 (ed. Clarke).

ENDLONG, an old adverb meaning down along, continuously, without intermission (Holland), has no connexion with end, as if it meant "from end to end," but is the same word as A. Sax. andlang (Ger. entlang), where the first part of the compound is identical with Goth. anda, Greek ἀντι, Lat. ante, Sansk. anti, against, opposite (Skeat, Glossary to Prioresse's Tale, &c.).

[They] demden him to binden faste
Vp on an asse swiþe un-wraste,
Andeleng, nouht ouer-þwert.

Havelok, l. 2822.

[They decided to bind him fast upon a very worthless ass, lengthwise, not across.]

The dore was all of athamant eterne,
Yclenched overthwart and endelong
With yren tough.

Chaucer, C. Tales, l. 1992.

Who from East to West will endlong seeke
Cannot two fairer Cities find this day.

Spenser, F. Queene, III. ix. 51.

To seeke her endlong both by sea and lond.
Id. III. x. 19.

And every thing in his degre
Endelong upon a boarde he laide.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, ii. 233
(ed. Pauli).

ENSCONSE, to hide or place one's self in a retired position, old Fr. ensconser (Blonde of Oxford), so spelt as if compounded with en (Lat. in), stands for the more usual old Fr. esconser, Norm. Fr. escunser, derived from Lat. absconsus, hidden away (see Atkinson, Vie de St. Auban, l. 137, note, p. 74).

ERRANT, p. 112. Compare "Chevalier errant," "Juif errant."

II . . . dresce mun aiere e mun chemin.
Vie de St. Auban, l. 56.

[He directs my journey and my path.]

ERROR, so spelt as if borrowed directly from Lat. error, instead of mediately through Fr. erreur, old Fr. errur; the older and more correct form is errour. Similarly ardor, horror, mirror, rancor, splendor, stupor, terror, would be better spelt ardour, horour, mirroure, rancour, splendour, stupour, terrour, so as to range with the analogous words colour, favour, humour, honour, vigour, &c. (See Hare in Philolog. Museum, i. 648; Haldeman, Affixes, p. 204.)

Your hearts be full of sorrow, because your heads are full of errour.—Andrewes, Sermons, fol. p. 629.

This form of errour however is not one which has ever gained much currency.—J. C. Hure, Mission of Comforter, p. 172.

EVERHILLS, p. 113. It might be added to the illustrative words that Hearne has the spelling expect:—

Dr. Gibson . . . made a great entertainment for them, expecting something from them.—Diary, Sept. 8, 1719.

EYELET-HOLE is a corruption of Fr. œillet, "an oilet-hole."—Cotgrave (Skeat).

Olyet, made yn a clothe for sperynge, Ficularium.—Prompt. Parv.

Olyet, an eylet-hole.—Lonsdale Glossary.

F.

FAITH, Mid. Eng. feith, is an assimilation of the old Fr. feid, from Lat. fidem, fidelity, to words like truth, mirth, sloth, health, the suffix -th being the common ending for abstract nouns (Skeat, p. 790).

FARMER, p. 116. Compare Oxfordshire farm out, to clean out, "Farm out th' en-us [=hen-house]."—E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiv. So Isle of Wight varm out (Id. xxiii.).

FAYBERRY, a Lancashire word for a gooseberry, understood as if the berry of the fays or fairies (Nodal and Milner, Glossary, p. 126, E. D. Soc.). It is really for fea-berry, otherwise spelt feap-berry, fape-berry, fabe-berry, which are corruptions (by the common change of th to f) of theube-berry, or thape-berry, a name for the gooseberry in the eastern counties. Perhaps the original was thefe-berry, the berry that grows on the bramble or thorny bush, A. Sax. thefe. See Prior, Pop. Names of Brit. Plants. Compare DAYBERRY, p. 93.

There's a hare under th' fayberry tree.—Waugh, Old Cronies, p. 89.

Afore th' next fuy-berry time.—Id. Ben an' th' Bantam, p. 98.

Latine Vua spinella . . . Italian Vua spina . . . Gooseberrie bush, and Feaberrie Bush in Cheshire, my native countrie.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1143.

FEUD, p. 119. The derivation of feud, a fief, from feudalis, has since been given up by Prof. Skeat.

FIELDFARE, p. 120, i.e. "field-goer," may perhaps owe its popular name to the habit mentioned in the following:—

This bird [the field-fare] though it sits on trees in the day-time, and procures the greatest part of its food from white-thorn hedges, yea, moreover, builds on very high trees, as may be seen by the fauna suecica; yet always appears with us to roost on the ground. . . . Why these birds, in the matter of roosting, should differ from all their congeners, and from themselves also with respect to their proceedings by day, is a fact for which I am by no means able to account.—G. White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, Letter 27, p. 64 (ed. 1853).

FLAMINGO. This bird seems to owe its curiously formed name to a popular mistake. In Provence it was called flammant (or flambant), the "flaming," i.e. bright red bird. This was probably confused with Fr. Flamand, a Fleming or native of Flanders, and translated into Spanish as flamenco, Portg. fla-

mengo, which words signify (1) a Fleming, (2) the flamingo supposed to come from Flanders! (Skeat, p. 790). Cotgrave gives its old Fr. name as flaman or flumbant, and this is the word, no doubt, that got confounded with flamand, old Fr. flameng, Dut. vlaming, a Fleming. As the word stands, flamingo means "the Flemish bird."

FLASH, a sudden blaze, as of lightning, is probably from Fr. flèche, an arrow (whence fletcher, an arrow-maker), old Fr. flique, akin to flake, flitch (orig. a thin slice), O. Eng. flick, A. Sax. flice (Prof. Atkinson), the primitive arrow being probably a mere splinter of wood. If this be correct, the word has been assimilated to dash, splash, thrash, &c. Prof. Atkinson quotes as illustrative:—
And ever and anone the rosy red Flusht through her face, as it had been a flake
Of lightning through bright heven fulmined.
Spenser, F. Q. 111. ii. 5.

FLUSHED, p. 124, for fleshed. The following confirmatory passages I take from Richardson:—

Epimanondas . . . would not have his countrymen fleshed with spoil by sea.—North, Plutarch, p. 311 [also p. 354].

The Asturians . . . made more cruell and eagre with the taste of blood that had so fleshed them, flew upon the inhabitants.—Holland, Ammiunus, p. 346.

Him fleshed with slaughter and with conquest crown'd
I met, and overturn'd him to the ground.
Dryden, Ovid, Met. b. xiii.

Waterland and Middleton have "flushed with victory."

FODDER, p. 124. Compare Cumberland fudderment, warm wrappings or lining (Ferguson, Glossary, p. 49); and the metaphor underlying prov. Eng. belly-timber, food (Wright); Fr. "la moule du gippou cotonner [to line one's paunch], to feed excessively."—Cotgrave. The same twofold meaning belongs to It. fodero, old Fr. feurre, foarre, (1) a sheath or lining, (2) straw, fodder.

FOLD, to shut up sheep within hurdles, has generally been regarded as only another use of fold, to wrap up, to lay close together, to enclose, shut in (A. Sax. fealdan). See Richardson. It is really to put into a fold, A. Sax.

fald, a pen or enclosure, standing for fald, probably = a place "paled" in (see Skeat, p. 790).

FORCEHEAD, an old corruption of faucet, from old Fr. faulset (from faulser, to falsify, weaken, penetrate, pierce).

Piriolo, a spigot, or as Vintners call it a force-head. Also a tap for a barrell. Also a conduit cocke or robinet.—Floria, New World of Words, 1611.

FOREIGN, p. 126. In the following verrene is for ferrene, distant, far away.

þo þrie kinges of heþenesse, þet comen fram verrene londes ure louerd to seche.—Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 27 (E. E. T. S.).

FOREYN, p. 126. Compare "une maison foreine" (Vie de St. Auban, l. 75), i.e. an out-house.

FOUNDER, p. 127.

And therefore I must needs judge it to be no other thing but a plaine foundering, which word foundering is borrowed, as I take it, of the French word Fundu, that is to say, molten. For foundering is a melting or dissolution of humors, which the Italians call Infusione.—Topsell, Hist. of Fourefooted Beests, p. 380.

FRAME, p. 128. Lonsdale freyam, to set about, attempt.

Now ill, not aye thus: once Phebus to lowre
With how vnhent shall cesse, and frame to harp.

Surrey, Tottel's Miscellany, 1557, p. 27
(ed. Arber).

I pray that the learned will heare with me and to thinke the strangenesse thereof proceeds but of noueltie and disacquaintance with our eares, which in processe of tyme, and by custome will frame very well.—G. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, 1589, p. 169 (ed. Arber).

I remember I had preached vpon this Epistle once afore King Henry the 8. but now I coulde not frame with it, nor it liked me not in no sauce.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 104.

FRESHET, a stream of running water, is opposed not (as sometimes understood) to brackish or salt water, but to that which is stagnant (as a pond) or does not flow in a current (as the sea). Thus Browne says that fish

Now love the freshet and then love the sea.
Pastorals, 1613, h. ii. s. 3.

It is from A. Sax. fersc (e.g. "ne fersc ne merc") for far-isc, from far, to fare or travel (Skeat), Icel. ferskr, fresh, O. H. Ger. frisg, Ger. frisch, the same word as Icel. friskr, frisky, Swed. frisk.

So freshet is a little stream of farish, travelling or running water, which is lively (Lat. vivus) and frisky, not stagnant and motionless.

All fish, from sea or shore,
Freshet or purling brook, of shell or fin.

Milton, Par. Regained, bk. ii. l. 345.

The bream keeps head against the freshets.
Keats, Isabella, st. xxvii.

In the same way a person so far intoxicated as to be unpleasantly frisky or "jolly" is said to be fresh.

Hence also O. Fr. frisque (Roquefort), M. Fr. frais, fraîche, Norm Fr. frais, It. fresco (al fresco, in the fresh air).

Sis hons quors tut frais est e nuveus.
Vie de St. Auban, l. 1470.

[His good heart is wholly fresh and new.]

The freshie was so felle of the furse grekes.
Destruction of Troy, l. 4730 (E. E. T. S.).

[The torrent (= onset) was so fell of the fierce Greeks.]

I durst not for shame go with my heads amongst so many fresh gentlewomen as here were at that time.—Paston Letters, 1452, i. 40 (ed. Knight).

"You will ride, of course?" says Sir Wilford to Frederick.

"Oh, by all means; I shall go on the Dutchman. Here he is, poor old fellow, looking as fresh as paint."—Miss Braddon, Dead Men's Shoes, ch. xxx.

FRONTER, p. 132. Compare Lancashire thrinter, a three-year-old sheep, (Glossary, E. D. S.), i.e. "three-winter." So Lat. vitulus, a calf, Sansk. vatsa, was originally a "yearling," from vatsa, a year, Greek ετος, whence also Lat. vetus, full of years (annosus).

FULSOME, p. 133.

þann were spacli spices ·spended al a-houte,
futsumli at þe ful ·to eche freke þer-inne.
William of Palerne, l. 4325.

The Geste Hystoriale of the Destruction of Troy (l. 3068) describes Helen's neck as Nawþer fulsom, ne fat, but fetis & round.

But in the following the word is evidently associated with fowl:—

Hard is it for the patient which is ill,
Fulsome or bitter potions to digest.

The Times' Whistle, 1616, p. 127
(E. E. T. S.).

The fulsomete freke [= man] that fourmede was euere.

Morte Arthure, l. 1061.

G.

GALLO-SHOES, p. 136. A Parisian is the speaker in the following:—

I will put to shoar again, though I should be constrain'd, even without my Galoshoes, to land at Puddle-Dock.—Sir W. D'avenant, Works, p. 352 (1673).

Their hose and shoes were called Gallicæ, at this instant termed Gabches.—Favine, Theatre of Honour, 1623, p. 224.

GAME, p. 137. Lancashire gam-leg, a crooked or feeble leg; gammy, crooked or feeble (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 139).

GENII, p. 140. A full account of the Arabic Jinn or Ginn, plural of Jinnæ or Ginnæ, who are believed to have been created of fire, is given in Lane's Thoughts and One Nights, vol. i. p. 26 seq.

Addison with Sir Roger at the play, . . . is quite another man from Addison discoursing on the immortality of the soul, or standing with the Genius on the hill at Bagdad.—Sat. Review, vol. 54, p. 81.

GILLY-FLOWER, p. 143. Compare Isle of Wight gillafers, gillyflowers (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

The gentyll gylofer, the goodly columbyne. Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, p. 97.

Gilliver is still a form used in Lancashire (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 143). Jilliver, a termagant, in the same dialect (p. 168), looks like a corruption of old Eng. jill (or gill) fiirt, a wanton woman.

GINGERLY, p. 143. The original meaning of young and tender comes out well in the following:—

We use to call her at home, dame Coye,
A pretie gingertie piece, God save her and Saint Loye.

Jack Juggler, p. 9 (Roxburgh Club).

It is to be noted that ginger, soft, tender, was formerly pronounced with the second g hard.

But my Wings,

By voluntary Flutterings

Broke the main Fury of my Fall,

I think, I'd broke my Neck withal,

And yet was not the Squelch so ginger,

But that I sprain'd my little Finger.

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque,
p. 246.

Compare Isle of Wight "Zet the trap as ginger as you can" (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.), i.e. ticklish, with great nicety.

GLACIS, p. 144. Compare Lonsdale glad, smooth, easy (of a bolt, &c.), gladden, to make smooth.

GLORY-HOLE, p. 145. In a dialogue between two ravens, from the Weald of Kent, when one informs the other of a "mare dead," the reply to "Is she fat?" is "All glure; all glure" (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, Ser. C. p. 57).

GLOZE, p. 145. The confusion between the two words gloss is well seen in the following, where the meanings of flattering comment and smoothness of surface run into one another:—

This flaring mirror represents

No right proportion, view or feature:

Her very looks are compliments;

They make thee fairer, goodlier, greater;

The skilful gloss of her reflection

But paints the context of thy coarse complexion.

Quarles, Emblems, bk. ii. 6.

That other sex have fine fresh golden caules so sheen and glosing.—T. Drant, Sermons, 1599, K viij. [Dibdin, Lib. Compànion, i. 80].

He much more goodly glosse thereon doth shed,

To hide his falsehood, than if it were true.

Spenser, F. Q. IV. v.

Good, p. 146, to manure. A curious coincidence is Gael. mathaich, to manure land, orig. to ameliorate it, from maith, good.

GOOD-BYE, p. 147. Compare also:—

He is called Deus, à dando, of giving. And in English we call God, quasi good, because he is only and perfectly good of himself alone, Mat. xix. 17, and the giver of all goodness, and of all good gifts and blessings unto others, James i. 17.—H. Smith, God's Arrow against Atheism, Sermons (1593), vol. ii. p. 370 (Nichol's ed.).

The old Saxon word God is identical with good. God the Good One—personified goodness. There is in that derivation not a mere play of words—there is a deep truth. None loves God but he who loves good.—F. W. Robertson, Sermons, vol. iv. p. 81 (ed. 1864).

GOOSEBERRY, p. 149.

Vua crispà is also called Grossularia, in english a Groser bushe, a Gooseberry bush.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 88 (E. D. S.).

GOOSE-SHARE, p. 150.

Aparine siue Philanthropos, siue Omphacocarpos is called in english goosgrasse or Goosehareth, in Duche Klehkraute, in franche Grateron.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 13 (E. D. Soc.).

GRAINS, p. 150. Lancashire grain, the prong of a fork, "a three-grained fork" (E. D. S. Glossary, p. 147).

GRASS, HEART OF, p. 151. Compare:—

I send you these following prophetic Verses of Whitehall, which were made above twenty Years ago to my knowledge, upon a Book called Balaam's Ass, that consisted of some Invectives against K. James and the Court in Statu quo tunc.

Some Seven Years since Christ rid to Court,
And there he left his Ass,
The Courtiers kick'd him out of Doors,
Because they had no Grass. [Margin]

Grace.

Howell, Fam. Letters, bk. iii. 22.

GREASE OF AMBER, an old corruption of ambergris. See AMBERGREASE, p. 7. And set his beard, perfumde with greece of amber,

Or kembe his civet lockes.

The Times' Whistle, 1616, p. 34, l. 978 (E.E.T.S.).

GREAT, used as the designation of several parishes where the church is dedicated to St. Michael, seems to be the result of a curious popular mistake. Michael, formerly pronounced Mickle, as still in Michaelmas, was confounded with mickle, old Eng. michel, muchel, A. Sax. mycel, great, large, an extended form of much (hence the surname Mitchell), and for mickle was substituted the now more familiar word "great." Thus Great Tew, Oxfordshire, dedicated to St. Michael, is found described as "Great, or Mitchell's, Tew" (N. and Q. 6th S. vi. 7). Compare the parish names Much Hadham, Much Marele, Micheldean, Michel Troy, &c. Similarly, there has been a confusion in the German mind between Michael and the old michel (mickle, large), which, as a name, it has quite absorbed (Yonge, Christ. Names, i. 131).

GREAT, p. 152.

Philip kept at Pammenes house with whom Epaminondas was very great.—North, Plutarch, Life of Philip, p. 1127 (ed. 1612).

Mr. Luke . . . was great with some that kepte them cumepany.—Narratives of the Reformation, p. 171 (Camden Soc.).

GREY-HOUND, p. 153. Lancashire grewnt, a greyhound (E. D. Soc.), "os gaunt os o grewnt" (Collier, 1750).

In N. Lincolnshire a greyhound is still called a grew (E. D. Soc. Orig.

Glossaries, C. p. 117). In old English grew is Greek, and grew-hund (Greek-hound), a greyhound. Compare Lonsdale greaw-dog and grig (= Greek), a greyhound.

The swift grewhund, hardy of assay.

Lancelot of the Laik, l. 537.

Neuer grewhounde late glyde, ne gossehawke latt flye. Morte Arthure, l. 4001.

GROW-GRAIN, p. 156. Perhaps Lancashire grun-gron, homespun, native (E. D. Soc.), understood as "ground-grown," is really the same word.

H.

HALF AN EYE, p. 159. Compare old Eng. helven-del, a half part.

And if thu hulde a cler candle bi an appel rist,

Evene helven-del than appel heo wolde 3yve hire list.

Poem, 13th cent. (Wright, Pop. Treatises on Science, p. 133).

HALT, in A. V. "How long halt ye between two opinions?"—1 Kings xviii. 21, is frequently understood in popular sermons and tracts as meaning to stand still, to be at a stay, as if to make a halt or pause, as a soldier does at the word of command, halt! formerly alt! It. alto! Ger. halt! i.e. hold. It really means to be halt or lame (so Gen. xxxii. 31), A. Sax. healtian, to limp or go lamely; Vulg. claudicatis, LXX. χωναεῖρε.

HARP BACK, to return to anything already past and over, Mr. Wedgwood writes to me, is a corruption of to haap back (whence also he thinks to hark back), haap! being the waggoner's cry to back his horses (? for hold up!).

What is the use of tormenting yourself by constantly harping back to old days.—Dumbleton Common, i. 165 (1867).

HARDSHREW, p. 163.

It resisteth the poison inflicted by the sting of the hardishrew, the sea dragon and scorpions.—Holland, Pliny's Nat. Hist. vol. ii. p. 277.

In the following the name is further disguised by being resolved into two words:—

In Italy the hardy shrews are venomous in their biting.—Id. vol. i. p. 234.

HATCH-HORN, a Lancashire corruption of achern or acorn, sometimes in the same dialect called an akran (E. D. Soc. Glossary); "reet as a hatch-horn"; Lonsdale acren. See ACORN, p. 2.

HATTER, p. 164. Compare Lancashire hately, bad-tempered, "Dunno he so hately" (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 154). Also hotterin'-mad, in a great passion; "Hoo wur fayr hotterin' wi' vexashun" (Id. p. 162).

HAUF-ROCK'T, p. 165. Compare oaf-rocked, foolish, mentally weak from the cradle (Whitby Glossary); Lonsdale arup, a childish, silly person (R. B. Peacock), also hoafen, a half-witted person, a fool (Id.), as if akin to Lonsdale hoaf = half. Half-baked, half-silly, in the latter dialect, is perhaps similarly a corruption of hauwbuck, a silly clown (otherwise hawbaw, Wright), as if the meaning were "raw," and so inexperienced. Compare HOWBALL, p. 181.

HAWKER, p. 185. Compare:—

A merchant shall hardly keep himself from doing wrong; and an huckster shall not be freed from sin.—A. V. Ecclus. xxvi. 29.

HAWS, the popular name for the berries or fruit of the white-thorn (Crataegus Oxyacantha), has originated in a misunderstanding of the name of the tree haw-thorn, i. e. A. Sax. haga-born, Icel. hag-born, the "hedge-thorn," as if it were the thorn that bears haws, from analogy to cherry-tree, pear-tree, currant-bush, &c. The proper meanings therefore of haw (A. Sax. haga, Icel. hagi) is hedge.

Compare Lancashire hague, or haig, a haw, also the hawthorn; "hague-blossom"; hagberry, the bird cherry (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 151).

HEART, p. 166. Compare roted, learnt by heart.

Nor by the matter which your heart prompts
you,

But with such words that are but roted in
Your tongue. Coriolanus, iii. 2.

They say — has no heart; I deny it;
He has a heart, and gets his speeches by it.

Old Epigram.

HEART AT GRASS, p. 167. Mr. Wedgwood writes to me that he thinks the phrase "heart of grace" stands for

"hart of grease" (graisse); "a good hart" (i. e. a fat one, a hart of grease) being by a punning parody substituted for "a good heart" in the phrase "to take a good heart."

HEDGE-HOG. It has been conjectured with much probability that the original form of this word must have been edge-hog; the animal is certainly more likely to have had its name from A. Sax. ecg, a sharp point, than from hege, a hedge. Its names in other languages have reference, almost universally, to its characteristic of sharp spines, e. g. Gk. akanthochirois, "thorn-pig," Ital. porcospino, Ger. stachelschwein, Dan. pindsvin, "pin-pig."

The hedge-hog is called pricky-otshun in the Holderness dialect, equivalent to the "sharpe urchons" of the Romaunt of the Rose, l. 3135; and for the instability of the aspirate we may compare winter-edge, i. e. "winter-hedge," a quaint term in the same dialect for a kitchen clothes-horse for drying linen before the fire. The Gipsy name for the animal is hotchy witchy, hotscha witscha. Lilly has the curious spelling hediocke.

The form edge-hog, ecg-hog, seems to be implied as the original one by the cognate and synonymous words, A. Sax. igil, old Ger. igil, Dut. eegel, Scand. igull, Swed. igel-kott, all probably importing its prickly sharpness; while on the other hand there seems to be no name for the animal compounded with hedge, A. Sax. hege, in old English. Compare also Lat. echinus, Greek echinos, from root ac, to be sharp.

Many other words have acquired an initial aspirate. See HOSTAGE, p. 179.

HEIGHT, p. 168, for highth, from false analogy to sight, might, &c. So sleight is for sleithe (Langland) or sleighth (= sly-th, slyness), and theft for thefth, A. Sax. piefæ.

HENCHMAN, p. 169. Add:—

Tak heede to this hansemane; that he no horne blawe. Morte Arthure, l. 2662.

HESSIANS, p. 170.

How he has blistered "Thaddeus of Warsaw" with his tears, and drawn him in his Polish cap, and tights, and Hessians!—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. xi. p. 118.

HICKATHRIFT, the name of a legendary hero who, with an axle-tree for his sword and a cart-wheel for his buckler is said to have killed a giant, and to have done great service for the common people in the fenny part of England (see Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction), is said to be a corruption of an older form Hycophrix (Hearne, Glossary to Robert of Gloucester, p. 640).

HIGHBELIA, an American name for a flower of a large size, but of the same species as the Lobelia, understood as Lowbelia (S. De Vere, English of the New World), to which word it is a fanciful antithesis.

HOBTHRUSH, p. 173. The Lancashire form is hobthurst, an ungainly dunce, formerly a wood goblin (Tim Bobbin, 1750), which has been explained as Hob o' th' hurst, or Hob of the wood (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 160).

HOIDEN, p. 174.

With hoiting gambols his owne bones to breake
To make his Mistris merry.

Donne, Poems, 1635, p. 324.

HOLLY-HOCK, p. 175. As illustrating the form holy hock, it may be noted that by the lake of Gennesareth, Pink oleanders, and a rose-coloured species of hollyhock, in great profusion, wait upon every approach to a rill or spring.—Smith, Bible Dict. vol. i. p. 1131.

HOLY SHOW, a colloquial expression used in Ireland, and probably elsewhere; e.g. a person extravagantly or absurdly dressed is said to be "a holy show," that is a spectacle, exhibition, or "fright." This is evidently a corruption of ho-show, the form used in the Isle of Wight, which is explained as a whole show, everything exposed to sight (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii. p. 16).

HONEYMOON, p. 175.

Suppose you kill ze Fazér, . . . your Chimée will have a pretty moon of honey.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. xxix. p. 289.

HORTYARD, p. 179. With orchard for wortyard, compare Oxfordshire ood for wood, oond for wound, oosted for worsted (Orig. Glossaries, E. D. Soc. C. p. 70), oolf for wolf, oonder for wonder (Id. p. 92), and old Eng. oad (Quarles) for woad; "wad & not Ode as some corrupters of the Englishe tonge do nikename it."—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 40 (E. D. S.). Also perhaps irk for wirk; cf. prov. Eng. werk, wank, work, to pain or ache.

HOWDIE, p. 181. Other words derived from interrogations are Ques-a-ça (the Provençal form of Qu'est que cela?), the name given to the monstrous coiffure worn in the Court of Marie Antoinette (Lady Jackson, Court of Louis XVI.); Fr. lustacru, said to be from l'eusses-tu-cru? (Littre).

HUMBLE-BEE, p. 182. Compare Lancashire hummabee; "As thick as wasps in a hummobee-neest."—Collier, Works, 1750, p. 43 (E. D. Soc.).

It is better to saye it sententiously one time, then to ruuee it ouer an hundreth tymes with humbling and mumbling.—Lattimer, Sermons, p. 130 verso.

HUMBLE-PIE, p. 183.

You drank too much wine last night, and disgraced yourself, sir. . . . You must get up and eat humble pie this morning, my boy.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. xiv. p. 137.

HUON-CRY, p. 184.

Though my sick Joynts, cannot accompany Thy Hue-on-cry.

Sir W. D'avenant, Works, 1673, p. 229.

HURRICANE, p. 184. A connexion between hurry and hurricane seems to be suggested by the following:—

Hollow heaven and the hurricane
And hurry of the heavy rain.

Hurried clouds in the hollow heaven
And a heavy rain hard-driven.

The heavy rain it hurries amain
The heaven and the hurricane.

D. G. Rossetti, Ballads and Sonnets.

HUSSIF, p. 185.

Hur hussif wur eawt, un hur need thredud e quick toime.—Scholes, Jaunt to See the Queen, p. 47 (Lancashire dialect).

HYBLEANNE, an old pedantic word in French for a bee, i.e. a frequenter of Hybla, a mount famous for its honey, is made the subject of a curious folk-etymology by Cotgrave, "so tearmed because she feeds much on the dwarfse Eldern," hyble.

I.

ICE-BONE, p. 185. Lonsdale ice-bone, the aitch bone of beef, Dut. is or ischben, the haunch bone [not in Sewel], Dan. is-been, share bone (R. B. Peacock), words which seem to be akin to Greek ischion, the ham, properly the thigh socket, from ischō, to hold.

ICE-SHACKLE, p. 185. As bearing on the identity of ice, A. Sax. is, and iron, A. Sax. isen, which seems an extended form of is, (1) the hard cold metal (ferrum), (2) the hard cold formation on frozen water (glaciers), I find that H. Coleridge (Glossarial Index) quotes from Kyng Alysander, l. 5149, yse = iron. Monier Williams equates the word iron with Sansk. ayas, iron, metal, Lat. æs, Goth. ais, old Ger. er (Sanskrit Dict.). An old Eng. form of iron is ire.

There come a slab of ire that glowing a-fure were.

Wright, Pop. Treatises on Science, p. 135.

Perhaps old Eng. iren, A. Sax. iren, was originally an adj. form meaning "made of ire" (Lat. ferreus). Compare ASPEN above.

Compare the following:—

In Russia, Scandinavia, sub-Arctic Asia, Canada, the Fur Countries of North America, and the Western United States the earth is for five months at a time bound in frost. The rivers are as if roofed with iron; all Nature is asleep, and nearly all work comes temporarily to a close.—The Standard, April 16, 1881.

Every icy crag
Tinkled like iron.

Wordsworth.

Ice-shackle for ice-ickle. Compare Lancashire iccle, an icicle, "os cowl'd os iccles" (Collier, 1750); "stiff us iccles" (Scholes); "Be she firm, or be she iccle" (Cotton).—E. D. Soc. Lanc. Glossary, p. 165.

IDLE-HEADED, p. 186. Lily, in the Dedication of his Euphues, says—

As good it is to be an addle egge as an idle bird.

The superstitious idle-headed eld
Received and did deliver to our age
This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.
Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor,
iv. 3, 38.

IMPLEMENT, p. 188. Latimer uses employ where we would now say imply.

There be other things as euill as this, which are not spoken of scripture expressly, but they are employed in scripture, as well as though they were there expressly spoken of.—Sermons, p. 107 verso.

INVIDIA, "envy," a popular Italian name for the endive (Florio), is a corruption of the proper word indivia. In consequence of its name the plant is used as a charm against the evil eye, invidia (De Gubernatis, Mythologie des Plantes, i. 127).

I wis, p. 191.

bi self þou wite þi wa, i-wis.

Cursor Mundi, l. 876 (Cotton MS.).

[Thou mayest blame thyself for thy woe, assuredly.]

This line appears in the Fairfax MS.:—

bi self may wite þi wa I wys.

In the Trinity MS.:—

þi seluen is to wite I wis.

J.

JAMES AND MARY, the name of a shoal at the confluence of the Hooghly with two other rivers, is said to be a corruption of the two Bengali words Jal Mari, the "deadly water" (Eastwick, Handbook for Bengal), but this is disputed (Sat. Review, vol. 54, p. 22).

JAUNTY, p. 193. I observe Prof. Skeat, in his Appendix, p. 793, has come round to the same view of this word as I have taken. He quotes appositely:—

This jantee sleightness to the French we owe.
T. Shadwell, Timon, p. 71 (1688).

It is from Fr. gentil. Compare:—

Two aged Crocheteurs, heaue loaden with billets, who were so equally concern'd in the punctilios of Salutation, and of giving the way, that with the length of Ceremony (Monsieur cest a vous, &c.) they both sunk under their burdens, and so dy'd, dividing the eternal honour of Genty Education.—Sir W. D'avenant, Works, 1673, p. 358.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE, p. 194. Compare Sp. girasol.

Tras tí,
Que eres el fol, de quien fui,
Girasol; vida no espero
Ausente tu rosicler.

Calderon, El Mayor Encanto Amor.

[After thee,
Sun, whose sun-flower I must be:—
Till thy sweet light from above
Dawns on me no life I know.

MacCarthy.]

JOYLY, p. 197, for Jolly.

Why loue we longer dayes on earth to craue,
Where cark, and care, and all calamitie,
Where nought we fynde, but bitter ioylitie.
S. Gosson, Speculum Humanum, 1576.

In this toun was first invented the joylites
of mynstrelsie and syngynge merrie songes.
—Udoll.

JUDGE, being derived directly from Fr. judge, has no right to the d, which has been inserted in order to bring the word into visible connexion with Lat.
judex, "judicature," &c.

JUNETIN, p. 199. Porta mentions that the apple called in Italian Melo de San Giovanni got its name from ripening about the feast of St. John (Skeat, 793).

K.

KANGAROO, sometimes used popularly for a canker or gangrene.

A woman once described her husband, who was suffering from a gangrene, as having "a kanngaroo toe"
(N. and Q. 6th Ser. v. 496).

KENEBOWE, p. 201. The true origin of this old word (Mod. Eng. a-kimbo) seems to be Icel. keng-boginn (= kinkbowed), i.e. bowed or bent (boginn) into a crook or kink (kengr), as the arms are when the elbows stick out, and the hands are placed on the hips (see Skeat,
p. 776).

KENSPECKLE (p. 201), in the Lancashire dialect easy to recognize, also kenspak, "He's a kenspeckle mak of a face," has been identified with Icel.
kenni-speki, the faculty of recognition
(E. D. S. Glossary, p. 173).

KERSTONE, p. 201. The passage from Howell is, I find, taken bodily from Stow, Survey, 1603 (p. 72, ed.
Thoms).

KETTLE OF FISH, p. 201.

The mackerel kettle consists of a number of poles thrust into the sand in a circle, the net drawn round and fastened to them, and enclosing a large space.—The Standard, Aug.
26, 1881.

So the Isle of Wight expression kettle of fish is explained as a corruption of kiddel, a dam or open weir in a river to catch fish (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii. 18).

KETTLE-PINS, an old word for nine-pins in Skelton's Don Quixote (Wright), is a corrupt form of skittle-pins or skittles (old Eng. schytte, a projectile or shutt-le = shot-le), which by a false derivation was supposed to be from Greek σκιρδλη, a stick, "When shall our kettle-pins return again into the Grecian skyttals?"
—Sadler, 1649 [in Skeat], and sometimes, apparently, was identified with
Lat. sagitella, a little arrow or missile, which word glosses schytte in the
Prompt. Parvulorum.

KICKSHAW, p. 203. This word, no doubt from an imagined connexion with pshaw! was sometimes used for anything contemptible. Compare:—

Yew that are here may think he had power, but they made a very kickshaw of him in London.—Ludlow's Memoirs, 1697, p. 491.

L.

LABORINTH, p. 205. The word Laby- rinth has been identified with Egyptian lape-ro-hunt, "the temple at the flood-gate of the canal" (Brugsch, Egypt under the Pharaohs, i. 170), or "temple at the mouth of the Mœris" (Academy, No. 29, p. 385). Others have deduced it from Ra-marés (Quarterly Review,
No. 155, p. 167), and from Labaris, or Lamaris, its supposed builder (Trevor,
Ancient Egypt, pp. 265, 77).

This lusty Gallant heeing thus insnared in the inextricable laborinth of her beauteous
Phynomy.—Topsell, Historie of Serpents,
1608, p. 99.

LAMB, p. 205. The word hlemm, a lam or blow, occurs in the compound
inwid-hlemmas, wicked blows, in Cæd-mon, The Holy Rood, l. 93 (see Prof.
G. Stephens, The Ruthwell Cross,
p. 39).

LAMPER EEL, p. 206.

Some odd palace-lampreels that engender with snakes, and are full of eyes on both sides.—Webster, The Malcontent, i. 1.

LANTORN, p. 208; LANTERNER, p. 485.
Compare Lonsdale lointer, to lag or loiter, "to make lointerpins," to idle away time.

LAPWING, p. 208.

A lappewinke made he was
And thus he hoppeth on the gras.
Gower, Conf. Amantis, ii. 329 (ed. Pauli).

LAST, in the idiom at last, eventually, seems naturally to mean "at the latest moment," and is so universally understood, as if last stood for old Eng. latst, latost, superlative of late; like Lat. postremo, ad postremum (sc. tempus). Compare:—

God shall overcome at the last.—A. V. Gen. xlix. 19.
At the last it hiteth like a serpent.—A. V. Prov. xxiii. 32.

At last, if promise last,

I got a promise of this fair one here.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 2, 208.

However, our two best A. Saxon scholars, Mr. Skeat and Mr. Sweet, are agreed that the phrase has nothing to do with last = latest, but stands for A. Sax. on lāst or on lasð of the same meaning, where lāst is a foot-print, a track (the same word as the shoemaker's last, Gothic laists). See Ettmüller, p. 189; Skeat, p. 794.

On oðre wisan sint to monianne . . . ða þe longe ær ymb ðeahrigeað, & hit ðonne on last ðurhþeoð.—Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 20, l. 10 (ed. Sweet), also p. 474.

[In other wise are to be admonished those that meditate it long before and then at last carry it out.]

Perhaps on last here means "on the track," in continuation, or succession, continually, consequently. Compare Lat. ex vestigio, forthwith, instantly. The later meaning would then result from a confusion with last = latest.

Pollux with his pupull [= people] pursu on the laste.

Destruction of Troy, l. 1150.

LAYER, a stratum of earth, &c., laid or spread out, a shoot laid down from the parent plant, so spelt as if from lay (A. Sax. legan), is a corrupt form of lair, A. Sax. leger, a couch or bed, from licgan, to lie down. Ledger (a lier) is substantially the same word; see LEAGUER, p. 211 (Skeat, 794).

LAYLOCK, p. 210, is also an Oxfordshire form of lilac (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, Ser. C. p. 70).

LAYSTALL, p. 209.

He founded it in a part of the oft before-named morish ground, which was therefore a common laystall of all filth that was to be voided out of the city.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 140 (ed. Thoms).

LEATHER, p. 211. Compare Isle of Wight letherun, chastisement, lethur, to beat. "If thee doesn't mind what thee beest adwine [a-doing] thee'l ghit lethur'd" (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.). Lonsdale leather, to make great speed, e.g. of horses, "They com leatherin on" (R. B. Peacock).

LEEWÁN, p. 578.

The higher portion (of the raised floor) is called leewán (a corruption of el-eeván).—Lane, Thousand and One Nights, i. 192.

The 'Efreet . . . came towards us upon the leewán.—Id. i. 157.

LEISURE, p. 212, and pleasure, ought by analogy to be leiser or leiseer (O. Eng. leysere), and pleaseer, to range with domineer, engineer. La Chanson de Roland says of Charlemagne—

Sa custume est qu'il parolet à leisir.

Lenges alle at laysere [He remains all at leisure]. Morte Arthure, l. 2430.

If that I hadde leyser for to seye.

Chaucer, Knights Tale, l. 330.

LIFT, p. 216. As an instance of the confusion of this word with lift, to raise, The Freeman's Journal, Dublin, July 11, 1882, gives an account of a trial for "Cattle-raising," when a person was charged with stealing three cows and a heifer (N. and Q. 6th S. vi. 105).

LIKE, p. 216.

If it bee true that likenesse is a great cause of liking . . . the worthless Reader can neuer worthly esteeme of so worthy a writing.—Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, 1629, H. S. To the Reader.

With this apparent connexion compare seemly and beseem, A. Sax. seman, to make like, satisfy, conciliate, Icel. sama, to beseem, Goth. samjan, to please, "to be the same" (Icel. samr), to be like, to fit or suit. So seemly = "same-like" (Skeat).

Likeness glues love: and if that thou so doe,
To make us like and love, must I change too?
Danne, Poems, 1635, p. 75.

As he did thank God for sending him a fit Wife; so the unmarried should pray to God to send him a fit Wife: for if they be not like, they will not like.—H. Smith, Sermons, 1657, p. 19.

Wordsworth correctly defined this word as appropriate to preferences of the palate when he censured a child for saying it "loved" a roasted fowl:—

Say not you love the delicate treat,
But like it, enjoy it, and thankfully eat.
Loving and Liking.

LILLY LOW, a north country word for the flame of a candle, as in the nursery riddle—

Lilly low, lilly low, set up on an end.
Hulliwell, Nursery Rhymes, p. 240— is merely a naturalized form of Dan. lille lue, "little flame."

LIVE, p. 219.

What man on live can use suche governaunce
To attayne the favoure withouten varyaunce
Of every persone.

Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, p. 85
(Percy Soc.).

LOATHSOME, strange as it appears, has probably no real connexion with loath, to hate or feel disgust at (A. Sax. laðian), loath, reluctant (A. Sax. lá), old Eng. loathly (A. Sax. láð-lic), but is an assimilation to those more familiar words of old Eng. wlatsum (Chaucer), from old Eng. wlate, disgust, A. Sax. wlæta (Ettmüller, 148). Compare luke (-warm), O. Eng. wlak, A. Sax. wlæc.

The Prompt. Parvulorum gives lothsum as identical with lothly (p. 314); see Skeat, p. 795.

Thu miȝt mid wlate the este bugge.
Owl and Nightingale, l. 1504.

[Thou mightest with disgust the food buy.]

LOBSTER (1), p. 221. For A. Sax. loppestre = locusta, compare A. Sax. lopost = locusta (Skeat, 795).

LOLLARD, an old nickname for a follower of Wycliffe, from old Dutch lollaerd, a mumblor (of prayers), was sometimes confused with old Eng. loller, one who lounges or lolls about, an idle vagabond, e.g.—

Now kyndeliche, by crist · beȝ suche callyd
lolleres,
As by english of oure eldres · of olde menne
techyngne.

He that lolleȝ is lame · oȝer his leg out of ioynte.

Vision of P. Plowman, C. x. 190.

I smelle a loller in the wynd, quod he.
Chaucer, Prolog. to Shipman's Tale, l. 1173.

Sometimes it was confused with Lat. lolia (occasionally spelt lollia), cockle, tares, as if the new religionists were the tares among the wheat of the Church.

Lollardi sunt zizania,
Spinæ, uepres, ac lollia,
Quæ uastant hortum uinææ.

Political Poems, i. 232.

Similarly Gower speaks of lollardie—

Which now is come for to dwelle,
Two sowe cokkel with the corne.
Conf. Amantis, ii. 190 (ed. Pauli).

And Chaucer of a loller—

He wolde sowen som difficultee
Or sprungen cokkel in our clene corn.
Prolog. to Shipman's Tale, l. 1183.

See Prof. Skeat's note in loco, from which I draw the above.

LONGOYSTER, p. 222. The plant locust is also called langusta in Low Latin (De Gubernatis, Myth. des Plantes, i. 200).

LORD, p. 223. Compare Low Lat. lurdus, which is glossed lemp-halt (limping lame) in Wright's Vocabularies, ii. 113.

LOVAGE, p. 224.

Leuisticum is called in englishe Louage in duche Lubstocke or Lieb stokel, in french Liueshe.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 85 (E. D. S.).

LOVER, p. 225, a lower or luffer, is sometimes corrupted to glover, the opening at the top of a pigeon-cote through which the birds enter (J. G. Wood, Waterton's Wanderings, p. 10, pop. ed.). Loves, the racks on which Yarmouth bloaters are suspended in the smokehouse (Harper's Magazine, June, 1882), is the same word.

LOWER, p. 225. A connexion with lower, to let down or sink, might seem to be implied in the following:—

And as the lowring Wether lookes downe,
So semest thou like Good Fryday to frowne.
Spenser, Shepheards Calendar, Feb.

LUTE, p. 580, the Arab el-'ood, the ordinary instrument used at Egyptian entertainments (Lane, Thousand and One Nights, i. 204), 'ood signifying wood, esp. aloes-wood, also a lute (Id. ii. 287).

M.

MANE BREID, or breid of mane, or paynemayne, old Eng. words for the finest and whitest kind of bread (perhaps mistaken sometimes for pain mague), is a corruption of old Eng. demeine or demesne bread, pain-demayn, derived from Lat. panis Dominicus, "bread of our Lord," i.e. fine simnel bread impressed with the figure of the Saviour, as was once the custom (see Skeat, note on Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 1915). Apparently pain-demayn was misunderstood as pain-de-main, bread of mane, or mane bread.

MANY, p. 230. Compare :—

Atant of sa mesnée est li princes passé.
Vie de St. Auban, l. 968.

[Therenson the prince has passed with his troop.]

La vostre maisnée.

Id. l. 434.

Hyme thought that it his worschip wold degrade

If he hyme self in proper persone raide
Enarmyt ayane so few meny.

Lancelot of the Laik, l. 751.

The Cane [= Khan] rood with a few Meynee.—Maunderville, Voiage and Travaile,
p. 226 (ed. Halliwell).

The caitiff gnof sed to his crue,
My meny is many, my incomes but few.
Comment upon the Miller's Tale, &c. 1665, p. 8
[see Todd's Illustrations to Chaucer, p. 260].

MARE, NIGHT-MARE, p. 231. The Greek hobgoblin Empûsa was believed to come in the shape of an ass, whence her epithet Onoshelis, "ass-legged" (see Curiosities of Medical Experience, p. 264). This may have contributed to the popular mistake about the incubus. The Manx laayr-oié, the night-mare, is literally "the mare (laayr) of the night (oié)." Compare :—

Some the night-mare hath prest
With that weight on their breast, . . .
We can take off her saddle,
And turn out the night-mare to grasse.
Lluellin, Poems, p. 36, 1679 [Brand, Pop. Antiq. iii. 232].

MASHED SUGAR, in Oxfordshire (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 90), seems to be a corruption of "moist sugar," which is its meaning.

MASS, the Roman celebration of the Eucharist, seems to be an arbitrary assimilation of old Eng. messe (Icel., Swed., O. H. Ger. mess, Dan., Ger. messe), from Lat. missa, to the familiar word mass, Lat. massa, a lump (of dough, &c.), from Greek mâza, a cake (with perhaps some allusion to the sacrificial wafer). Or perhaps a connexion was imagined by the learned with Heb. mazzâh, the unleavened bread eaten at the Passover. The circular cake used in the Mithraic sacrament was called mizd (C. W. King, The Gnostics, p. 53); the cakes offered to Osiris mesit or mesit-t. See Speaker's Commentary, ii. 301.

MATRON, used by Howell as a name for the marten, is a corruption of martrone, or marteron (Wright), old Eng. martern (Beaumont and Fletcher), which again stands for marter, martre (Caxton), Fr. martre, Dut. marter, Ger. marder.

The Buck, the Doe, the Fox, the Matron, the Roe, are Beasts belonging to a Chase and Park.—Howell, Fam. Letters, bk. iv. 16 (ed. 1754).

The richest pay ordinarily 15 cases of Martens, 5 Rane Deere skinned, and one Beare.—Hakluyt, Voyages, 1598, vol. i. p. 5.

MAW-SEED, p. 235. Compare :—

Papauer is called . . . in duch magson or mausom, in french du pauot.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 59 (E. D. S.).

MEDDLE, p. 235. Compare the following :—

Being euerie day more vnable, the elderis desyred the bretheren he sould be prohibited to midle with any part of the ministeriall function.—Presbytery Book of Strathbogie, p. 65 (Spalding Club).

Ben Jonson calls a go-between a "middling gossip" (see Glossary to Dyce's ed.).

In the Destruction of Troy we find medill, middle (l. 3767), and medill, to mingle with.

Withouten mon, owther make, to medill
hom with. l. 10811.

A God he [Christ] bath; but never till then; never till He medled with us.—Andrewes, Sermons, fol. p. 562.

MESLINS, p. 237. Compare Lancashire mezzil-face, a fiery face, full of red pimples (E. D. S. Glossary, p. 192).

MIDDLE-EARTH, p. 239. Middangeard, i.e. mid-garth, or mid-yard, the central region, man-home, as distinguished from æs-yard (God-home) and out-yard (the giant-home), occurs in Cædmon (Prof. G. Stephens, The Ruthwell Cross, p. 40).

On þysne middangeard.

Cædmon, The Holy Road, l. 209.

MIDDLEMUS, an Isle of Wight corruption of Michaelmas (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

MISER, a wretched being (Lat. miser), has come to be naturalized in English with the specific sense of a niggard or avaricious hoarder, perhaps from some confusion with the old word micher (? micer), of the same meaning, which it supplanted. Compare:—

Senaud, a craftie Jacke, or a rich micher, a rich man that pretends himself to be very poore.—Cotgrave.

Pleure-pain, a puling micher or miser.—Id.

Caqueduc, a niggard, micher, miser, scrape-good, pinch-penny, penny-father, a covetous and greedy wretch.—Id.

Dramer, to miche, pinch, dodge; to use, dispose of, or deliver out, things by a precise weight or strict measure, or so scantily, so scarcely, as if the measurer were afraid to touch them, or loath to have them touched.—Id.

This last definition would suggest that the micher was properly one who dealt his bread crumbmeal, a derivative of old Eng. myche, O. Fr. miche, Lat. mica, a crumb. Moreover, another form of the old Eng. word for crumbs is "myse, or mysys" in the Promptorium Parvulorum (cf. "to myse bread" = crumble, Forme of Cury, p. 93), which shows that myser is a potential form of micher. See CURMUDGEON (perhaps for corn-mychnyn); cf. surgeon for chirurgion.

The most effectual Course to make a covetous Man miserable (in the right sense) is to impoverish him.—South, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 164 (ed. 1720).

MISTY, p. 242.

Thus stant this worlde fulfilled of miste.

Gower, C. A. b. v. (Richardson).

That whiche conserneth theyr dishonour or losse is . . . soo darkely or mystly wryten that the reder therof shall hardely come to ye knowledge of the trouthe.—Fabyan, cap. ccxlv. p. 288 (ed. Ellis).

Holy writt haþ mystly þis witt what euer þei wolen seye.—Wycliffe, Unprinted Works, p. 343 (E.E.T.S.).

þis mysty witt of þise dedis telliþ unto true men.—Id. p. 344.

To cloke the sentence under mysty figures
By many colours as I make relacyon,
As the olde poetes covered theyr scryptures.

S. Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, p. 38
(Percy Soc.).

How readily this mysty = mystic would become confused with misty, cloudy, may be seen by comparing this quotation with another from the same author:—

As writeth right many a noble clerke
Wyth mysty colour of cloudes derke . . .
Clokyng a trouthe wyth colour tenebrous.
Id. p. 29.

MOOD, p. 244. Modig (moody), fearless, brave, from mód, mind, occurs in the runes of the Ruthwell Cross, about 680 A.D.

ON GALGU GI-STIGA,

MODIO FORE

(ALE) MEN

G. Stephens, The Ruthwell Cross, ll. 4-6,
p. 19.

[On the gallow(s) He stied fearless fore all men.]

Than sayd that lady milde of mode.

Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 149.

MOSAIC, p. 244. Compare "After musycke" = in mosaic (style).—Destruction of Troy, l. 1662 (E.E.T.S.).

A flore þat was fret all of fyne stones,
Pauyt prudly all with proude colours,
Made after musycke, men on to loke.

MOSES, Heb. Moskeh, believed to be derived from the verb mâshâh, to draw out, because Pharaoh's daughter "drew him out of the water" (Ex. ii. 10). This is really no doubt a Hebraized form of an Egyptian name given him at Pharaoh's court, which probably meant "saved from the water," from Egypt. mo, water, and uses, saved (Josephus, Antiq. II. ix. 6), Coptic mo, water, and ushe, saved. Hence the Greek form of the name is Mō-usēs (LXX.), Lat. Moses (Vulgate). See Bible Dict. vol. ii. 425. Compare BABEL, p. 518.

MOULD, the minute fungus that grows on decaying matter, has nothing to do with mould, earth, soil, nor with mould, a spot of rust, but is formed out of mouled, grown musty, the past participle of the old verb moul, moulen, to decay or putrefy, otherwise mowle or muwlen. Old writers frequently speak of bread as being mowled, or mouled, or muled. Compare Icel. mygla, Swed. mögla, to grow "muggy" or musty. Hence mouldy. See Skeat, p. 796. The opposite mistake is seen in mulled wine for mould wine. See MULL, p. 247, and the last citation there given.

Mowlyd, as brede, Mussidus vel mucidus.—Prompt. Parv.

Moulyn, as bred. Mucidat.—Id.

Mucor, to mowle as brede.—Ortus.

All the brede waxed anone nouwly.—Golden Legend, p. 65 verso.

A loof . . . was mowlid & fordon.—Wy-cliffe, Unprinted Works, p. 153.

MOULT is a corruption by assimilation to poult, &c., of old Eng. mout, from Lat. mutare, to change (sc. one's coating). Hence also the corrupt Mod. Ger. mausen, through O. H. Ger. mu-zón, to moult (Skeat). Compare the intrusive l in could and fault, old Eng. faut.

Moutyn, as fowlys, Plumeo.—Prompt. Parv.

The Holy Ghost . . . changes not, casts not his bill, mouts not his feathers.—Andrewes, Sermons, fol. p. 682.

MOURNING OF THE CHINE [in Horses], a disease which causes Ulcers in the Liver (Bailey). See the extract.

This word mourning of the Chine, is a corrupt name borrowed of the French toong, wherein it is cald Mo[r]te deschien that is to say, the death of the backe. Because many do hold this opinion that this disease doth consume the marrow of the backe. . . The Italians do call this disease Ciamorro, the olde Authors do call it the moist malady.—Topsell, Hist. of Foure-footed Beasts, p. 371.

MOUSE. The peculiar usage of the verb to mouse in the following passage is not noticed in the dictionaries. It is probably understood by most people as meaning to play with and worry, as a cat does a mouse before she eats it.

O, now doth Death line his dead chaps with steel; . . .

And now he feasts, mousing the flesh of man.
Shakespeare, King John, ii. 1, 354.

Mouse here is to mouth or devour, to use the mouse, which is an old word for mouth (Provençal mus, It. muso), whence old Eng. moussell, mosel, the muzzle of a beast. See MUSE, p. 248, which is only a different form of the same word, being spelt mowsyn in the Prompt. Parvulorum, p. 347.

Mauspece of an oxe, mouse.—Palsgrave.

MOUSE-BARLEY, p. 246. A confirmatory passage is:—

Phenicea or Hordeum murinum of Plenie, is the Wal Barley, whiche groweth on mud walles.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 43 (E. D. Soc.).

MUDWALL, p. 247. This bird-name is evidently a corruption of mod-wall in Coles, 1714. That word being quite unknown in old English and the prov.

dialects, I am inclined to think it is a mere misreading of wod-wall, the woodpecker, to which species the bee-eater belongs, I believe; otherwise spelt wode-wale, wood-wall, and wit-wall. See WOODWALL, p. 447. In a black-letter book wodwall might readily be misread as modwall. Holy-Oke, 1640, has api-astra, a modwall, and "a woodpecker, mudwall, or ethee" (N. and Q. 6th S. vi. 217).

MUG-WORT, p. 247.

Arthemisia otherwyse called Parthenia, is commonly called in englishe mugworte.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 16 (E. D. Soc.).

MUSE, p. 248. A connexion between the verb and the personification of literature, as if the meaning were to study, to be in a study, might be popularly imagined from the following:—

And thou, unlucky Muse, that wotest to ease
My musing mynd, yet canst not when thou should.

Spenser, Shepheards Calender, Jan. l. 70.

Coleridge evidently regarded amusement as a withdrawing from the muses, a musis, a cessation of study. Speaking of novel-reading, he says:—

We should transfer this species of amusement (if indeed those can be said to retire a musis, who were never in their company . . .) from the genus, reading, to . . . indulgence of sloth and hatred of vacancy.—Biographia Literaria, p. 24 (ed. Bell).

MUSK-CAT seems to have nothing to do with cat, but to stand for Fr. muscat, musky, smelling of musk, It. muscato.

Of the Moschatte, or Mus-kat. . . The Italians call it Capriolo del Musca, & the French Cheureul du Musch, the musk itself is called in Italy Muschio, of the Latine Muschum and Muscatum.—Topsell, Hist. of Foure-footed Beasts, p. 550.

A very little part or quantity of a Muskecat is of great vertue and efficacy.—Id. p. 554.

MYSTERY, p. 250. For the elevation of mistry into mystery compare the following extract:—

The polishing of diamonds is almost a freemasonry. It is a craft known at Amsterdam, and the polishers of Amsterdam may be said to have a monopoly of it. There are secrets in the trade so mysterious that an apprentice is not allowed to learn them.—The Standard, Nov. 19, 1881.

N.

NAIL, p. 251. Compare Lancashire neeld, a needle (E. D. Soc.).

Well, want yo pins or neelds to-day?
Lanc. Rhymes, p. 54.

Old Eng. nyldys, needles.—Monke of Evesham, p. 111 (ed. Arber).

NEARER, p. 252. Compare Lancashire nee, nigh, near; nar, nearer, "Aw hardly know iv aw awt to ventur ony narr;" narst, nearest (E. D. S. Glossary, p. 196).

NETTLED, used in the sense of irritated, piqued, as if stung by nettles, is, no doubt, a more polite form of nettled, corresponding to Lancashire nattle, irritable, touchy, cross, "Hoo [=she] geet rayther nattle, an' wouldn't eyt no moor." In the following the word is distinguished from nettle, to gather nettles.

"Thou's never bin nettlin' of a Sunday again, basto?" "Why, what for?" he said, as nattle as could be.—Wuugh, Tattlin' Matty, p. 14.

This nattle is derived from Lanc. natter, to tease or irritate, originally to nibble or bite (compare nag, akin to gnaw), Icel. gnadda, to vex, to murmur, knetta, to grumble, Lonsdale gnattery, ill-tempered, gnatter, to gnaw, to grumble.

He's a natterin' soart of a chap—they'll nobody ha' mich rest as is near him.—See Nodal and Milner, Lanc. Glossary, p. 197 (E. D. Soc.).

On the other hand, the colloquial word natty, tidy, spruce, dandified, Lanc. natty, neat, handy, is a corruption of old Eng. nettie, neat (Tusser, 1580), from Fr. net, nettoyé, Lat. nitidus.

NICK, p. 255. For the common notion that Old Nick was identical with Nick Machiavelli, compare:—

Still, still a new Plot, or at least an old Trick;
We English were wont to be simple and true;

But ev'ry Man now is a Florentine nick,
A little Pere-Joseph, or great Richeliew.
Sir W. D'avenant, Works, 1673, p. 302.

The phrase "To play old Harry with" (referred to in this article) means to ruin or destroy as Henry VIII did the monasteries, and has nothing to do with Eric, as Thorpe (North. Mythology, vol. ii.) suggested.

NICK-NAME, p. 255. Add:—

We shulde geve no necnome wntoo the sacrament, as rownd Robin, or Jack in the box.—Narratives of the Reformation, p. 73 (Camden Soc.).

NIGHT-SHADE, p. 256. Mr. Wedgwood directs my attention to the prov. Swedish word nattskata-gras, the nightshade, the herb of the night-jar or night-pie, nattskata (Ger. nacht-schade).

NINEPENNY, p. 257. The rectitude of ninepence may perhaps refer to an old coin so called, which was often bent from its original shape into a love-token.

His wit was sent him for a token,
But in the carriage crack'd and broken;
Like commendation ninepence crook'd.

Butler, Hudibras, Pt. I. i. l. 487.

NINNYHAMMER, p. 257. Compare:—

Yo' ar a ninyhammer t' heed hur.—Collier, Works, p. 72 (1750, Lancash. dialect).

NOD, p. 258. From the supposed connexion of noddle with the verb to nod, a noddle-yed [noddle-head] is a Lancashire word for a person of loose, unsteady head or brain (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 201).

NORTH MIDLANDS, a place-name in the parish of Alkborough, Lincolnshire, so spelt in maps and plans, is a corruption of the name Norrermeddum given to it by old people in the neighbourhood, spelt Northermedholm in a MS. about 1280 (N. and Q. 6th S. v. 83).

NOTABLE, p. 259.

The stone is kept scrupulously clean by the notable Yorkshire housewives.—Mrs. Gaskell, Life of C. Brontë, p. 2.

If it be noteful to þe puple, þenne þat trew þe is þe gospel.—Wycliffe, Unprinted Works, p. 343 (E. E. T. S.).

NURSES, a Lonsdale word for the kidneys (R. B. Peacock), is a corruption of old and prov. Eng. neres, Icel. nýra. See KIDNEY, p. 203, and EAR, p. 575.

NUZZLE, p. 261. Compare Lancashire nozzle, the nose, and nozzle, nuzzle, to nestle, to lie close to (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 203).

He was sent by his seyð mother to Cambridge, where he was nosseled in the grossest kynd of sophistry.—Narratives of the Reformation (ab. 1560), p. 218 (Camden Soc.).

The dew no more will sleep
Nuzzel'd in the hily's neck.

Crashaw, The W'eeper, st. 7.

O.

ODDS AND ENDS, p. 262. Compare ord and ende, Floriz and Blanche fleur, l. 47 (E. E. T. S.); Garnett, Philolog. Essays, p. 37; Skeat, note on The Monkes Tale, l. 3911.

OF-SCAPE, p. 262, It. scappare, to give one the slip, to slip one's halter. The antithetical word is It. incappare, to cover or muffle with a cloak, to meet or encounter. Compare old Eng. un-cape, which seems to have been a term in fox-hunting, meaning to uncollar, uncouple, or let a hound loose from the leash or collar (cape), in fact to let it es-cape (ex cappâ). See Edinburgh Review, vol. 136, p. 347.

I'll warrant we'll unkenel the fox. Let me stop this way first. So, now uncape.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 3, 175.

Morz es e mauhailli, ne purrez eschaper.
Vie de St. Auban, l. 1656.

[Dead thou art and maltreated, you cannot escape.]

OILS, p. 263. Compare:—

Swift as the swallow, or that Greekish nymph,
That seem'd to overfly the eyles of corn.

Peele, Polyhymnia, 1590 (p. 571,
ed. Dyce).

ON-SETTER, a curious Lancashire word for a forefather or progenitor (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 206), as if it meant the prime mover or originator of a family who first set it going, is really, I have no doubt, a corruption of the old Eng. awncetyr or awncestre (Chaucer), old Fr. ancessour, Lat. antecessor, "a fore-goer." Ancestor is as dislocated a form of antecessor as predecessor would be of predecessor.

They liv't i'th' heawse . . . an' so did their on-setters afore 'em.—Waugh, Lancashire Sketches, p. 93.

Awncetyr, Progenitor.—Prompt. Parv.

The iij cranes which were percell of his awnciters armes.—Narratives of the Reformation, p. 251 (Camden Soc.).

OUNCEL, p. 266. With the proposed derivation of awncer, as if hauncer, compare Greek tálanon, a balance, akin to tlad, to bear, Lat. tollere, to lift; Sansk. tulá, a balance, from tul, to lift.

OUTRAGE, p. 267. In the following outrage means "something beyond" (ultra), an excessive portion. Adam has offered to give God the half or third of all his produce. God answers he will have nothing beyond the tenth or tithe:—

Adam I wil nane outrage hot þe teynde.
Cursor Mundi, l. 975.

Ox, in the curious Greek phrase "An ox is on his tongue," βούς ἐπὶ γλώσσῃ (Æschylus), meaning "He is silent," has not, I think, received a satisfactory explanation. In a list of interjections, with their meanings, made by a Greek grammarian, I find it stated that βῦ, βῦ, is an exclamation used to obtain silence, just as φὸ, φὸ, is addressed to those blowing a fire (Anecdota Barocciana, in Philolog. Museum, vol. ii. p. 115). Compare perhaps βόειν, to stop or bung up. Perhaps βούς is a playful corruption of βῦ, hush! whisht! and the proper meaning of the phrase is "Hush! is on his tongue." The English representation of βῦ would be "by," and it is interesting to note that in the language of the nursery by or bye is still addressed to infants with the meaning "Hush!" "Be quiet." Compare "Hush-a-bye, baby!" "Bye, O my baby!" "Hush-a-bye, lie still and bye" (Halliwell, Nursery Rhymes, p. 83, ed. Warne).

OYSTER-LOIT, p. 268.

Aristolochia rotunda . . . may be named in englische Oster Luci or astrolochia or round hertworte.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 15 (E. D. Soc.).

P.

PAGOD, p. 269.

They haue their idols . . . which they call Pagodes.—Hakluyt, Voyages, 1599, ii. 253.

Their classic model proved a maggot,
Their Direct'ry an Indian pagod.

S. Butler, Hudibras, Pt. II. ii. 534.

PALMER, p. 271. In the Isle of Wight palmer is still used for a kind of large caterpillar (E. D. S. Orig. Glos- saries, xxiii.). Compare old Eng. palme, or loke of wulle, palma.—Prompt. Parv., and the following:—

Then saffern swarms swing off from all the willers

So plump they look like yaller caterpillars.
Lowell, Biglow Papers, Poems, p. 532.

PAMPER, p. 270.

The pomped carkes wyth foode dilicious
They dyd not feed, but to theyr sustinaunce.
Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, cap. v.
p. 22 (Percy Soc.).

PANG, p. 271. Compare:—

Pronge, erumpna [i.e. erumpna, pain].—Prompt. Parv.
Throwe, wommanys pronge.—Id.

PATTER, p. 275. Prof. Skeat thinks that old Eng. ledene, language, a corruption of Latin, the language par excellence, was influenced both in form and meaning by A. Sax. hljfd, a noise, Northumb. Eng. lydeng, noise, cry. (See note on following, Clarendon Press ed.)

She understood wel euery thing

That any foul may in his ledene seyn.
Chaucer, Squieres Tale, l. 435.

The housekeeper, pattering on before us from chamber to chamber, was expatiating upon the magnificence of this picture.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ch. xi. p. 113.

PARACLYTUS, p. 495. Another corruption of Paracletus (παράκλητος, advocatus, "one called in"), the name of the Holy Spirit (St. John, xiv. 16), is Paracletus (as if παράκλητος, from παρακλίνω, to bend aside or swerve), in Latin writers. When the Greek original was forgotten, the Latin form easily gave rise to a mistake about its etymology; hence the penultima was supposed to be short, and is so treated even by Prudentius (J. C. Hare, Mission of the Comforter, p. 310, 4th ed.).

We make him [the Holy Spirit] a stranger, all our life long; He is Paracletus (as they were wont to pronounce him;) truly Paracletus, one whom we declined, and looked over our shoulders at: And then, in our extremity, sodenly He is Paracletus; we seeke, and send for Him, we would come a little acquainted with Him.—Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, fol. p. 636.

The Muslims pretend to trace a prophecy of Mohammed in the modern copies of St. John's Gospel, reading instead of Paraclete, "Periclyte," which is synonymous with Mohammed (i.e. "greatly praised").—Lane, Thousand and One Nights, vol. ii. p. 294.

PECULIAR, an Oxfordshire corruption of the flower-name petunia (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 93).

PEEP, p. 278. Compare Lancashire skrike-o'-day, day-break, the first voice of the day, from skrike, an outcry or "shriek." "I get up be skrike-o'-day."—Collier (1750).

By the pupe of daye.—Life of Lord Grey, p. 23, Camden Soc. [Skeat].

It. spontare, to bud or peepe out, as the light, the morning, or raies of the Suune doe.—Florio.

PELLITORY, p. 279.

The herbe, whiche englishe mē call Pillitorie of Spayne, the duch men Meisterwurtz, the Herbaries Osturtium and magistranciu, is Laserpitium gallicum.—W. Turner, Names of Herbs, 1548, p. 46 (E. D. Soc.).

PERFECT, a pedantic reduction to a Latinized form of the old Eng. word perfit or parfit (in use down to the 17th century), which is the more correct orthography, the word being derived immediately, not from the Lat. perfectus, but from old Fr. parfit, parfeit, parfait. Other old spellings are parfite, parfyte, parfight. Compare VICINAGE, VICTUALS below, and Introduction, p. xiii. See English Retraced, p. 156.

Parfyte (al. parfyzt)—perfectus.—Prompt. Parv.

Y schal speke perfit resouns fro the bigynnyng.—Wycliffe, Ps. lxxvii. 2.

To make redy a parfyte peple to the Lord.—Id. Luke, i. 17.

Edward established by acte of parliament so good and parfight a booke of religion . . . as ever was used since the Apostles' tyme.—Narratives of the Reformation, p. 225 (Camden Soc.).

O Tyrus, thou hast sayd I am of perfit beauty.—Geneva Vers. Ezek. xxvii. 3.

Nothing is begun and perfit at the same time.—A. V. 1611, Translators to the Reader.

What once you promis'd to my perfit love.
The Lost Lady, 1638 [Nares].

PERFORM, p. 280.

Noght only thy laude precious
Parfourned is by men of diguitee,
But by the mouth of children thy bountee
Parfourned is.

Chaucer, Prioresses Tale, l. 1649.

PERISH, p. 281. Compare Cumberland pearchin', penetrating (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 110).

Sum men faylen in feif, for it is so þynne, & eke list to perische wiþ dart by sau3t of þin enemye.—Wycliffe, Unprinted Works, p. 343 (E. E. T. S.).

I panche a man or a beast, I perysse his guttes with a weapen.—Palsgrave, Lesclar., 1530.

The fylme called the “pia mater” was perysed with the blow.—Narratives of the Reformation, p. 38 (Camden Soc.).

The light commeth thorow the glasse, yet the glasse is perished.—Andrewes, Sermons, fol. p. 74.

Perished, starved with cold.—Lonsdale Glossary.

Pearching, cold, penetrating, pinching.—Id.

PERUSE, p. 282.

The reading over of which [Pleadings &c.] judiciously and with intentness is called Pervisum, or, as we say, perusal of them.—Waterhous, Commentary on Fortescue, p. 574 [Todd's Illustrations, p. 246].

Prof. Skeat, however, maintains that peruse is just to use up till all is exhausted, and so to go through completely, examine thoroughly. Words were once freely compounded with per. Compare:—

With thought of yll my mynde was never myxte . . .

Bothe daye and nyght upon you hole perfyate.

Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, p. 87

(Percy Soc.).

PETER, BLUE, p. 283.

You'll think on me on Tuesday, Mary. That's the day we shall hoist our blue Peter.—Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, ch. xvii.

PETER GRIEVOUS, p. 283. In Oxfordshire almost the same expression is used for a cross, fretful child, e.g. “What a Peter Grievance you be!”—E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 93.

PETIT DEGREE, a curious old corruption, used by Stanihurst, of pedigree, old Eng. “pedegru or petygru, lyne of kynrede and awncetrye.”—Prompt. Parv. (perhaps for pe de gre, piéd de gres, “tree of steps”), as if it were that which gives the minute degrees of affinity. He uses it also in his translation of the Æneid. The orig. meaning of pe de gre (used temp. Hen. IV.; see M. Müller, Lectures, ii. 531) was probably “foot of the stair,” the founder of a family, with all the steps or degrees of kindred descending from him. To search for a pedigree is to seek the origin (pic, piéd), from which certain family steps or branches (gres) spring.

There is a sept of the Gerrots in Ireland, and they seeme forsooth by threating kinnesse and kindred of the true Giraldins, to fetch their petit degrees from their ancestors, but they are so neere of bloud one to the other, that two bushels of beanes would scantlie count their degrees.—Stanihurst's Description of Ireland, p. 33, in Holinshed's Chron. vol. i. 1587.

In Oxfordshire any long story is called a pedigree (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 93).

PETTITOE, p. 283.

He would not stir his pettitoes till he had both tunc and words.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 1, 620.

PFFINGSTERNAKEL, p. 496.

Sisaron sive siser, is called in englishe a Persnepe, in duche grosse Zammoren, and also Pinsternach.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 74 (E. D. S.).

PHILBERT, p. 284. Compare with the extract from Gower,

The tree of Phyllis for her Demophon.

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale, Introd. l. 65.

Lidgate actually writes filbert instead of Phyllis (Skeat, note in loco).

PICK, to purloin or pilfer, as in the Catechism, “to keep my hands from picking and stealing,” generally understood as meaning to choose and take up with the fingers thievishly, like Autolyceus, “the picker up of unconsidered trifles,” seems to be quite a distinct word from pick, A. Sax. pycan, to pick or peck. It is probably a verbal form evolved from old Eng. “pykare, lytlyl theef, fureculd” (Prompt. Parv.), identical with pickero (Spanish Gipsy, ii. 1), Sp. picaro, a thief, or as the old term in English was, a “a picaroon” (Howell). It is thus a shortened form of pickeer, to rob or pillage, used by Butler and by Cleveland (who also has pickeerer, a thief.—Poems, 1687), derived from Fr. picorer, to forage, rifle, rob, or prey upon, the poor husbandman (Cotgrave; also picoreur, a boot-haler, in a friend's country, a ravening or filching souldier), properly to go cattle-lifting, from Lat. pecus, pecora, cattle; Sp. pecoreca, marauding (all ultimately identical with peculation); It. picaro, a wandering rogue, picaria, roguerie, picare and picarare, to rogue up and downe (Florio). From Fr. picorée, “piccory, foraging, ransacking” (Cotgrave), came old Eng. and Scot. pickery, pickary, rapine, pillage (Jamieson), “Thefte and pickerie were quite suppressed"—Holinshead, 1577 (Nares), as a law term, "stealing of trifles" (Erskine). Against the above it is to be noted that an old meaning of Eng. pick was to obtain by mean underhand ways, e.g. pykepeny, Cupidinarium (Prompt. Parv.), to pick a thank (Lyly), pickpurse (Chaucer), "He piked of her all the good he might" (Legend of Good Women, l. 2456).

I had of late occasion to speak of picking and stealing.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 452 (Parker Soc.).

As picking theft is lesse than murtheryng robrye: so is the couetousnes of gredy lawers which begyle craftely, far lesse then the covetousnes of rebelles, whych spoylen cruelly.—T. Lever, Sermons, 1550, p. 38 (ed. Arber).

It is ill to be called a thief and aye found piking.—Scot. Proverb (Jamieson).

By these pickers and stealers.—Hamlet, iii. 2.

PILE, p. 286. Compare old Eng. pal, pale, a fort, Gest Historiale of Destruction of Troy, l. 322 (E.E.T.S.); and "towers of a pyramidal form which they call Pailes."—Lesly (note in loc.).

The minster's outlined mass
Rose dim from the morass,
And thitherward the stranger took his way.
Lo, on a sudden all the Pile is bright!
M. Arnold, Westminster Abbey.

PIN, p. 287.

Plucke vp thyne herte vpon a merry pyne.
Skelton, Bowge of Court, l. 386.
Hark how the frothy, empty heads within,
Roar and carouse ith' jovial Sin,
Amidst the wilde Levalto's on their merry
Pin!

Benlowe's Theophila, 1652, p. 3.

My Lady and her Maid upon a merry Pin
They made a match.
Antidote against Melancholy, 1661, p. 70
(See N. and Q. 6th S. v. 137).

PIPS, p. 288. Compare Lancashire picks, diamonds at cards (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 212).

PLAT, p. 289.

A stately Plat, both regular and vast,
Suting the rest, was by the Foundress cast,
In those incurious Times, under the rose,
Design'd, as one may saucily suppose,
For Lillies, Piones, Daffadils and Roses.
Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, p. 346.

PLOT, p. 290. Compare :—

Laying plats to effect further mischief.—
Tell-Trothes New-yeares Gift, 1593, p. 20
(Shaks. Soc.).

POPPET, p. 295.

This were a popet in an arm tenbrace
For any womman, smal and fair of face.
Chaucer, Prioresses Tale, l. 1892.

POPPY-HEAD, p. 295. Compare Icel. brúða, a puppet or doll, used also for a pillar in carved work on the side of an old-fashioned chair (Cleasby, p. 83).

PORE-BLIND, p. 295.

Yet his sight was not perfaite, for he was poore-blinde.—Narratives of the Reformation,
p. 240 (Camden Soc.).

But level not at me thy Tiller;
For if thou dost (thou pore-blind killer)
I've told thee what thou art to fear,
And I will do it, as I'm here.

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, p. 247.

POT, p. 296. Add Prov. potz, It. pozso, Sp. pozo, Portg. poço, Wallach. putz, all from Lat. puteus. Also prov. Swed. putt, pott, a dark hole, the pit of hell; at pyttes, to the devil, to destruction (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1868-9, p. 293). And for the phrase "go to pot" compare the following :—

Je n'oumbre pat out of heyuen fel
Con na tonge in erþ tel.
Ne fra je trone quare sattu pat sottte,
How fer ys in-til helle potte.

Cursor Mundi, l. 506, Fairfax MS.
(E. E. T. S.).

The Cotton MS. version of the last line is :—

How farr es in to hell pitte.

The riȝte put of helle is a-midde the urthe with-inne.

Poem, 13th cent. l. 1 (Wright, Pop.

Treatises on Science, p. 132).

I shal punisshen in purcatory or in pe put
of helle

Eche man for his misdede.

Vision of P. Plowman, A. xi. 249.

King Edward, no: we will admit no pause,
For goes this wretch, this traitor, to the pot.

Peele, Edward I. p. 389 (ed. Dyce).

Else Hudson had gone to the pot,

Who is he can abide him?

A Loyal Song of the Royall Feast, &c. 1647 (Cavalier Songs, p. 49, ed. Mackay).

PRESPIRE, a provincial form of perspire (e.g. Oxfordshire, Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 70, E. D. S.), with some reference perhaps to the idea of pressure or oppressive heat. A Middlesex cobbler once remarked to me that he suffered much from prespiration.

PRIAL, p. 299.

But when they came to trial,
Each one proved a fool,

Yet three knaves in the whole,
And that made up a pair-royal.
Sam. Butler, Works, ii. 219 (ed. Clarke).

PRIME-COCK, p. 300. Compare:—
Princy-cock, a dandified, conceited young fellow.—Lonsdale Glossary.

PUNCH, p. 303. Compare Lancash. punce, to kick, Mid. Eng. bunsen (see Skeat, s.v. Bounce), e.g. "He'll punce the door in;" "Aw could ha' punce't him;" "Aw've a good mind to gie thi shins a punce" (Nodal and Milner, Lanc. Glossary, p. 219, E. D. Soc.).

Q.

QUAFF, p. 305, for quaft. Compare Lancashire waft, a draught, "He took it deawn at a waft" (Glossary, E. D. Soc.). On the other hand waft, to blow along, or to wave the hand, has no right to the t, being identical with Scot. waff, to wave, Icel. vifa, to swing. Prof. Skeat says waft has been formed from the past tense waved, just as graft from grafted, and hoist from hoised. So scan was originally to scand (mistaken for a past partic.), old Fr. escander, Lat. scandere; and spill stands for spild, A. Sax. spildan (Skeat). Also Lancashire quift, to quaff or tipple, quiftin', a quaffing (E. D. Soc.). Compare weft and wajft (Spenser) for wajf.

Some people's fortunes, like a wajt or stray,
Are only gain'd by losing of their way.
S. Butler, Works, ii. 266 (ed. Clarke).

QUAGMIRE, p. 306. Compare "Aurippus, cvecc-sond."—Wright, Vocab. ii. 8, i.e. "quake-sand" (Skeat).

QUARRY, p. 307. Prof. Skeat says that this stands for querry, Mid. Eng. querré, from old Fr. cuiree, curée, a derivative of cuir, skin, Lat. corium (as if coriata), referring principally to the skin of the slain animal (Etym. Dict. p. 797).

QUILL, p. 311, akin to coil. Compare Isle of Wight quile, to coil, also a coil of rope (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

pen ben cyulid [= collected] pens of pore men.—Wycliffe, Unprinted Works, p. 433 (E.E.T.S.).

R.

RACE, p. 311. For the supposed connexion between racy and race, a root, as if tasting of the root, compare:—

Not but the human fabric from the birth
Imbibes a flavour of its parent earth:
As various tracts enforce a various toil,
The manners speak the idiom of their soil.
Gray, Education and Government.

RACHITIS, p. 312.

Multitudes of reverend men and critics
Have got a kind of intellectual rickets.
S. Butler, Works, ii. 239 (ed. Clarke).

RACKAN-HOOK, or reckin-hook, a Lancashire word for a hook swung over the fire to hold a pot or kettle, sometimes spelt rack-an'-hook, as if "rack and hook," is said to be merely another form of Cleveland reck-airn, i.e. reek-iron, or iron hung in the smoke (Atkinson, Skeat), see Lanc. Glossary (E. D. Soc.), p. 222:

An' then we sang glees,
Till the rack-an'-hook rung.
Waugh, Old Cronies, p. 54.

RAG, an old word for a shower or rain-cloud, North Eng. rag, drizzling rain, might seem to refer to the torn or lacerated appearance of the discharging cloud.

And all the west like silver shined; not one Black cloud appeared; no rags, no spot did stain
The welkin's beauty; nothing frowned like rain.

H. Vaughan, Pious Thoughts, Poems,
p. 241 (ed. 1858).

It is really the same word as old Eng. ryge, rain (Allit. Poems), A. Sax. racu, rain, Icel. hregg, a storm, A. Sax. regn, rain, Goth. rign, O. H. Ger. regan, Ger. regen, Lat. rigare (see Dieffenbach, Goth. Sprache, ii. 172). Compare raggy, stormy, and rag, hoar frost; "There's bin mich raggy weather upo' th' moors" (Lanc. Glossary, E. D. S. p. 223).

RAKEHELL, p. 313. Compare Lancashire rackle, reckless, rash (old Eng. rakel), racklesome, reckless.

Owd Tip's th' better chap i' th' bottom,
iv he be a bit rackle.—Waugh, Owd Blunket,
p. 89.

Is there any news o' that rackle brother o' thine?—Id. Hermit Cobbler, p. 29.

See Lanc. Glossary, E. D. Soc. p. 222.

Then niest outpak a raucle carlin,
Wha kent fu' weel to cleek the sterling.
Burns, Poems, p. 50 (Globe ed.).

In the following Venus is addressing Cupid:—

I do not, Rake-hell, mean those pranks
(Though even they deserve small Thanks)
Thou play'st on Earth, where thou hast done,

The strangest Things that e'er were known.
Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque, Poems,
p. 216.

Caught in a delicate soft silken net
By some lewd Earl, or rake-hell Baronet.
Cowper, Progress of Error.

RAMMISH, p. 314. Compare It. ramengo, "wandering, roauing, or gadding. . . . Also a rammish hawk."— Florio.

The rammish hanke is tamd by carefull heed,
And will be brought to stoope vnto the lewre,
The fercest Lyon will requite a deed
Of curtesie, with kindnesse to endure.

Tell-Trothes New-Yeares Gift, 1593,
p. 38 (Shaks. Soc.).

RANGED-DEER, p. 315. Compare also the following, where rayne-deer seems to be associated with ranez (= rains), branches, a thicket.

The roo and the rayne-dere reklesse thare
ronnene,

In ranez and in rosers to ryotte thame seluene.
Morte Arthure, l. 923 (E.E.T.S.).

RANSACK, p. 316. For the fancied connexion with to sack (for which word see The Siege of Rhodes, 1490,
p. 154, Murray's repr.), compare:—

Saccomettere, to put unto the sacke, ransack- ing, spoile, pillage.—Florio.

RAP AND REND, an old idiom meaning to get by hook or crook (Skinner, Johnson), also found in the forms rape and renne (Chaucer), repe and renne (Bailey), rap and run (Coles), rap and ran (Miege), rap and run for (Ainsworth), are various corruptions of the phrase found in the Cleveland dialect as "to rap and reeve," old Eng. repen and rinen (Ancren Riwele). See Atkinson in Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1867, p. 329. Prof. Skeat observes that the
mod. form "rape and rend" is a corruption due to Icel. hrapa, to seize, frequently combined with ræna, to plunder (Etym. Dict. s.v.).

I rap or rende, je rapine.—Palsgrave.

Arrabler, to rape, and rend; to ravine, rob, spoil; to get by hooke, or by crooke.—Cot-
grave.

RAT, p. 317.

Do you not smell a rat? I tell you truth,
I think all's knavery.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iv. 3.

RATE, p. 317. Compare Norm. Fr.
refter, L. Lat. reptare, from Lat. repu-
tare, to lay to one's charge.

Tut rettent Amphibal le cleric orientel.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 1407.

[They wholly blame Amphibal the oriental clerk.]

It was aretted him no vylonye.

Chaucer, C. Tales, l. 2731.

RATON, the French name for the raccoon (N. American arathikone), is an assimilation of that word to raton, a little rat.

REBOUND, when used with the meaning of to resound, reverberate, or re-echo, is strictly speaking not a figurative usage of re-bound, to leap back (as a sound does from an echoing surface), notwithstanding the analogy of Lat.
resilire, to bound back (of an echo), and Bacon's "resilience in ecchos." It is the same word as o'd Fr. and Provençal rebundir, to resound, probably from a Lat. re-bombitare, to buzz or drone again. The word then from meaning to re-echo came afterwards to be identified with rebound, to leap back (Prof. Atkinson).

L'air fait à sun talent rebundir e suner.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 1336.

[Makes the air at his desire re-echo and sound.]

[They] ran towards the far rebounded noyce.

Spenser, F. Q. I. vi. 8.

A gen'ral hiss from the whole tire of snakes
Rebounding, through Hell's inmost caverns came.

Crashaw, Sospetto d'Herode, st. 38.

The whole grove echoes, and the hills re- bound.

Cowper, Trans. of Virgil, Poems, p. 514
(ed. Wilmott).

The ponderous mass sinks in the cleaving
ground,

While vales and woods and echoing hills
rebound.

Gray, Translation of Statius, Letter I.
Works, p. 205 (ed. Balston).

Compare:—

Reboundyn, or sowndyn a-žene, Reboo.—
Prompt. Parv.

I rebounde, as the sownde of a horne, or the sownde of a bell, or ones voyce dothe, ie boundys, ie resonne.—Palsgrave.

Rebound seems to be an older word in the language than bound (not in Prompt. Parv.), and has preserved something of the original meaning, which bound has not. Compare Prov. bondir, to resound, old Fr. bondie, a resounding noise, Low Lat. bunda, sound of a drum, from bombitare contracted into bontare, bondare (Scheler).

RECOUNT, p. 319. Similarly repeal should properly be apeal, being derived from old Fr. rapeler (Mod. Fr. rappeler) Lat. re-ad-pellare, and so standing for re-appeal; the Fr. ra- has been altered into the ordinary prefix re-. Also re-vile stands for ravile, from old Fr. re-aviler (Skeat); and resemble for Fr. rassenbler, i.e. re-assemble, Lat. re-ad-simulare.

RECOVER, p. 319. Compare Norm. Fr. “Peri sanz recuverer.”—Vie de St. Auban, l. 1655.

REDCOAL, p. 319.

Thys kynde groweth in Morpeth in Northumberland and there it is called Redco. It shoulde be called after the olde saxon englishe Retthicol, that is Radishe colle.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 78 (E. D. S.).

REEL, a Scottish dance, formerly spelt reill (1591), is the Gaelic righil, apparently assimilated to reel, old Eng. relen, to wind about or turn round and round, as if a circular dance like waltz from Ger. walzen, just as It. rigoletto, a dance, is akin to rigolo, a little wheel, and rigolare, to roll round. So Glossary to G. Douglas, Bukes of Eneados, 1710, s.v. Rele, to roll.

Man and Maidens wheel

They themselves make the reel,

And their music's a prey which they seize.

Wordsworth, Poems of the Fancy, xxiv.

REFUSE, Prov., Portg. refusar, Sp. rehusar, Norm. Fr. refusum, to repudiate (Vie de St. Auban, 1635), It. ri-fusare, all modifications of Lat. recusare under the influence of Lat. refutare.

RELAY, a fresh supply, has nothing to do with re-lay, to lay again, but is an Anglicization of Fr. relais, a rest, a relief, a fresh set, a relay, apparently akin to re-laisser, Lat. relaxare, and so another form of release. But we also find in French relayer, to refresh, relieve, or ease another by an undertaking of his task (Cotgrave). Par relais, by turns, by change of hands, one resting while another labours (Id.).

Radly relayes and restez their horsez.

Morte Arthure, l. 1529.

[They quickly relax and rest their horses.]

REPARTEE, a mis-spelling of reparty (Howell), or repartie, Fr. repartie, a reply, from false analogy to words like refugee, lessee, patentee, &c. So guarantee is incorrect for guaranty or garanty, O. Fr. garrantie, a warranty; and grandee for Sp. grande.

RECKLING, p. 318, in Lancashire corruptly a ritling.

He's twice as strong as Sankey's little ritling of a lad, as works till he cries for his legs aching so.—Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, ch. viii.

RIFT, an eructation (Bailey; Cleveland Glossary; Lonsdale), supposed to be the same word as rift, a rent or breach (from to rive), as if a disruption or breaking of flatulence, is really a distinct word, akin to Dan. rabbe, to eructate, Swed. vapa.

ROAM, p. 326. Prof. Skeat compares prov. Eng. ramc, to ramble, gad about, spread out, A. Sax á-ráman, to spread. For the confusion with Rome-running, or going on pilgrimages, he notes the identity of idea in the lines:—

Religious romares “recordare” in here cloistres.

Vision of P. Plowman, B. iv. 120,

And alle Rome-renneres for robberes of biþonde

Bere no siluer ouer see.

Id. 123.

An early use of the word is—

And now respis hym to ryse & rom from his bede.

Destruction of Troy, l. 818.

[He now hastes him to rise and roam from his bed.]

The suggestion that the saunterer was originally a sans terre or “lack-land” (Notes from the Mummings of St. Mary Magdalen Coll., Oxford, ed. Macray, p. 97), and therefore a vagrant or wanderer—just as the migratory martin was constituted the heraldic difference of a younger son from his having no property of his own—rests on no sufficient basis.

ROOT, p. 329.

With wrathe he begynnus to wrote,
He ruskes vppe mony a rote,
With tusses of iij. fote.

Avouynge of Arthur, xii. 13.

ROSEMARY, p. 330. From a confusion between (Rosmarinus and Marianus, Bauhin in his book De Plantis a divis Sanctissime nomen habentibus (1591), includes romarin, "arbre de Marie" (De Gubernatis, Mythologie des Plantes, i. 217).

ROUND (2), p. 331. Compare Isle of Wight roings, the steps of a ladder (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

RUFFIAN, p. 333.

There may bee (in God's account) as great offence in cutting or shaving off the haire on either head or beard, as in the ruffin-like growth.—W. Streat, The Dividing of the Hoof, 1654, p. 1-8.

He would not spare to reprove whatsoever he found amiss in any sort, their very hair and habit it self, which he alwayes required to be grave and modest, becoming Divines the Embassadors of Christ, and not like Ruffians and the Woers of Penelope: To that purpose under his Signification Paper for Orders upon the Cathedral Door was sometimes also written, "Nemo accedat petitem sacros Ordines cum longâ Caesarie."—Plume, Life of Hacket, p. xxxvii. (prefixed to Hacket, Century of Sermons, 1675).

RUNNABLE, p. 335. Robert of Gloucester also uses renable (= old Fr. raisnable) of the tongue. He says of William Rufus:—

Renable nas he no3t of tonge, ac of speche hastyf,
Boffynge, & mest wanne he were in wrapþe, oper in stryf. Chronicle, p. 114.

Renable, loquacious, and never at a stop or inconsistent in telling a story.—R. B. Peacock, Lonsdale Glossary.

RUSTY, restive, stubborn, perverse (p. 335). Shakespeare evidently regarded this word as akin to rust, the oxide of iron.

Fair is my love, but not so fair as fickle;
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty; . .
Softer than wax, and yet, as iron, rusty.

The Passionate Pilgrim, st. 5.

In the Lancashire dialect reesty is used both of bacon which has become strong and rancid, and of anything rusted or discoloured (Lanc. Glossary, E. D. Soc.).

If their Masters see them, how nimble at a start are they, but if their backs bee turned, how resty and lazy!—Rogers, Nauman the Syrian, 1611, p. 304.

S.

SAGE, } words popularly re-SAGACIOUS, } garded as of the same family (e.g. by Richardson), have nothing in common, the first being Fr. sage, from Lat. sapius (sabius), sapient, wise, the latter from Lat. sugac-s, sagan, quick-witted, from sagire, to perceive. Compare the unrelated words proposal and proposition (p. 301), compose and composition, trifle and trivial (p. 405), litany and liturgy, pen and pencil, scullery and scullion below.

SAILOR, a mis-spelling of sailer, one who sails (corresponding to rower, builder, lover, &c.), from false analogy to tailor (from old Fr. tailleur), actor, author, conqueror, which are of Fr.-Lat. origin. Similarly beggar, caterpillar, liar, pedlar, which should be begger, &c., have been mistakenly assimilated to words like bursar, registrar, scholar, vicar, of Latin derivation.

SAND-BLIND, p. 339. Dr. R. Morris compares sam-halc, half-whole (Cursor Mundi); sam-rede, half-red (Langland); "Sand-blind, toothless, and deformed."—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy (Historical Eng. Grammar, p. 220). We may also compare Span. saucocchar, to parboil, from Lat. semi-coctus, half-cooked.

SANDERS, or saunders, an old word for sandal-wood, is a corruption, perhaps under the influence of the plant-name alexanders, of Fr. sandal, Pers. chandul, chandan, Sansk. chandana, sandal-wood (Skeat).

SCAVENGER'S DAUGHTER, p. 343, formerly called Skevington's Daughter, 1604; "Scavengeri Filia," 1675; Skevington's Givens, 1564. See Narratives of the Reformation, p. 189 (Camden Soc.).

SCENT, p. 343. So scythe is a false spelling of old Eng. sythe or sithe, A. Sax. sipe (Skeat).

SCHORBUCK, p. 343. Prof. Skeat maintains, and he is probably right, that Low Ger. schorbock, schürbuuck, though meaning "rupture of the belly" (as if "shear-bulk"), being also spelt scorbut, is the original of Low Lat. scorbutus, scurvy. The word and thing appear to have come from northern Europe.

About anno 1530, the Disease called the Scurvy did first infest Denmark, Norway and Lithuania only, but now 'tis become deadly almost in all maritime places, especially to Mariners.—N. Hanley, Wonders of the Little World, 1678, p. 57, col. 2.

SCOUR, to traverse hastily, e.g. "to scour the plain," supposed to have originated from scour, to rub hard, with reference to the quick motion used in scrubbing utensils, O. Fr. escurer, It. scurare, Lat. ex-curare, to care thoroughly (so Wedgwood and Skeat). But surely scour here, prov. and old Eng. scur, to move quickly (sometimes spelt skirr or skir, as in Shakespeare), are from old Fr. escourir, It. scorrere, "to runne ouer, to runne here and there, to gad or wander to and fro," from Lat. ex-currere or dis-currere. Hence also It. scorreria, "an outrode or excursion," which yields old Eng. scurrer (Berners), or scurryer (P. Vergil), a scout. So to scour is to make a scur, 'scurion, or excursion.

I . . . well-mounted scurr'd
A horse troop through and through.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Lover's Cure,
ii. 2.

Light shadows
That in a thought scur'o'er the fields of corn.
Id. [in Wedgwood].

Compare the related word score, to run out (excuse).

And from the country back to private farmes
he scorsed.

Spenser, F. Q. VI. ix. 3.

And yet here skowre means to clear,
cleanse, or free:—

He was appointed to skowre the seas from unlawfull adventurers.—Huyward, Annals of Elizabeth, ab. 1612, p. 49 (Camden Soc.).

Great shippes . . . to guard the coastes, to scoure the seas, and to be in a redinesse for all adventures.—Id. p. 76.

Curiously enough, the next article in Prof. Skeat's Dictionary is also, I believe, incorrect. Scourge, Fr. escourgée, "a thong, latchet, scourge" (Cotgrave), old Fr. escorgie, is the same word as It. scoreggia (scorreggia), a scourge, a whip (Florio), which is only an intensified form of correggia, a strap, a scourge, the latchet of a shoe (Id.), from Lat. corrigia, a shoe-latchet. Compare scorgere for ex-corrigere.

SCRAPE, p. 345.

Limits should be set to the conviviality which betrays respectable soldiers into irretrievable scrapes.—Saturday Review, vol. 53, p. 58.

Yon Mary Barton has gotten into some scrape or another.—Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, ch. xxx.

She . . . was peculiarly liable to be led into scrapes in such society.—Shorthouse, John Inglesant, i. 161.

SCRATCH, p. 346. Compare Lancashire Owd Scrat, the devil (E. D. Soc. Glossary).

SCREW, p. 346. The two words here referred to, Fr. écrouelles (from Lat. scrofula, dim. of scrofa, (1) a rooting or rending, (2) a rooting pig) and écrou (old Fr. escroue, from Lat. scrob-s, a digging, a trench), are radically identical, being from the same root scrab, scrawb, scrabble, to scrape.

SCREW, a Scottish word for a small stack of hay, is probably a corruption of Gael. cruach, a rick or heap (Jamieson).

SCROLL is a corruption, by assimilation to roll, of old Eng. scrow (Prompt. Parv.), skro (Laneham, 1575), scrowe (Ancren Riwle), of Scandinavian origin, Icel. skrá, a scroll, old Dan. skraa (pronounced skro), old Fr. escroue. So Marsh, Lectures on Eng. Language, p. 354 (ed. Smith), who quotes, "a scrowe of parchemyn."—Richard Coer de Lion; "The Lolardis set up scrowis."—Capgrave, p. 260. Compare Bristol, formerly spelt Bristowe, Briegstow, "Bridge-place."

The scrow of the edict sent was unfolded.—Holland, Ammianus Marcellinus, 1609 [Nares].

Filateries that ben smale scrowis.—Wycliffe, S. Matt. xxiii. 5.

Here bring I in a storie to mee lent,
That a good Squire in time of Parliament
Tooke vnto mee well written in a scrowe.

Libel of Eng. Policie, Hakluyt, Voïages, 1598, i. 190.

SCRUBBY-GRASS, p. 346, and skarfa-kál, p. 505 (cormorant's herb). It is probably scurvy-grass that is a corruption of the latter word, and not vice versa.

SCULLERY, p. 347. So also Prof. Skeat, who cites A. Sax. swilum, to wash (compare swill, to wash down, or swallow, copiously). Thus scullery stands for squillery or swillery, the room of the squiller, old Eng. squyllare, or swiller, or washer, and curious to say has no connexion with the name of its frequenter the scullion, which means a "sweeper," from Fr. escouillon foreshowillon, from Lat. scopce, a broom. On the other hand skillet, a small pot, stands for skullet, being derived from old Fr. escuellette, a dimin. of escuelle, a dish, Lat. scutella.

Childer for Offices in Household . . . The Kechyng j The Squillery j.—Northumberland Household Book, 1512, p. 45.

SEARCH, p. 347.

He will try, sift, search all things . . . according to every man's works.—Bp. Nicholson, On Catechism (1661), p. 61 (ed. 1849).

SELVAGE, p. 348. Prof. Skeat quotes "The self-edge makes show of the cloth."—Ray's Proverbs, ed. 1737.

SET, p. 348, another form of suit.

The fanon was usually of the same suit, "de eadem sectâ," as the stole.—Way, Prompt. Parv. p. 149, note 2.

Her visage spoke wisdom, and modesty too ;
Sets [= suits] with Robin Hood such a lass.
Robin Hood's Birth, &c. l. 26 (Child's Ballads, v. 348).

A siluer salt, a howle for wine (if not an whole neast) and a dozzen of spoones to furnish vp the sute.—Holinshed, Chron. i. 138 (1586).

Old Eng. to set is another form of to suit :—

Hit wold sothely me set as souerayne in Joye.

Destruction of Troy, l. 223.

It sets him weel, wi' vile unscrapit tongue
To cast up whether I he auld or young.

A. Ramsay, Gentle Shepherd.

SHAMEFACED, p. 351. Compare also :—

And next to her sate goodly Shamefastnesse, Ne ever durst her eyes from ground up-reare, . . .

That in her cheekes made roses oft appeare.
Spenser, F. Queene, IV. x. 50.

SHANKER, p. 351.

Your several new-found remedies
Of curing wounds and scabs in trees, . . .
Recovering shankers, crystallines,
And nodes and blotches in their rinds.

Butler, Hudibras, Pt. II. iii. 1242.

SHELL, p. 353.

Eruilia. It is lyke a pease, the shale is roughe wythin, and the seede hath litle blacke spottes in it.—H. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1543, p. 36 (E. D. S.).

SHELTER, so spelt as if an agential form, a "shielder" (so Wedgwood), like boiler, roller, scraper, fender, ladder (Haldeman, p. 146), is no doubt a corruption of old Eng. sheltrom, sheltrom, A. Sax. scyld-truma, a strong shield (lit. a troop-shield), also an armed troop ; e.g. "Ar the sheltroms come to-gedders."—Trevisa. (See Skeat, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 325.)

For-þi mesure we vs wel . and make owre faith eowre sheltrom.

Vision of P. Plowman, B. xiv. 81.

SHILLINGSTONE, a place-name in Dorset, formerly also Shilling Ockford, both corruptions of the old name Sche-lin's Ockford, i.e. Ockford, or Ackford, belonging to its Domesday Lord, Sche-liu (Antiquarian Mag., Aug. 1882, p. 104).

SHOOT, p. 354. Compare Isle of Wight shoot or chute, a steep hill in a lane or road (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

I was climbing the shoot at the side of the hutt.

A Dream of the Isle of Wight (Id. p. 51).

SHOTTEL, a Cumberland form of schedule (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 111).

SHUT, p. 356, rid, or quit of. Compare Lancashire, "Tha con howd it up when tha's gotten shut o' thi load."—Lahee, Charity Coat, p. 14 (Lanc. Glossary, E.D.S.); and shuttance, riddance, "Good shuttance to bad rubbish" (cf. "to shoot rubbish"); "He's gone, an' a good shuttance it is" (Id. p. 239).

Better . . . he were shut of this weary world, where there's neither justice nor mercy left.—Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, ch. xxx.

SIBELL, p. 557. Compare :—

They hold hym wyser y<sup>an</sup> euer was syble sage.
Play of the Sacrament, l. 431 (Philolog.
Soc. 1860-1).

And Syble the Sage, that well fayer maye
To tell you of prophesye.

Chester Mysteries, i. 100 (Shaks. Soc.).

SIGÊ (Greek), "Silence," the primitive substance of the universe in the Babylonian cosmogony of Berosus, represents the Accadian Zicu or Zigara, heaven, "the mother of gods and men" (Sayce; Lenormant, Chaldean Magic, p. 123). In the same writer Musaros, "abominable" (μυσαρός), a title of the god Oannes, is a mere transcription of the Assyrian musiru, "he who ordains justice, law" (Lenormant, p. 203); Ενεύβουλος for Assyrian Eni-bubu; Μεγάλαρος for Mulu-wrugal; Τιράν for Eta-ana (p. 204). So Asshūr, the Hebrew name of Assyria (as if from Heb. asshūr, a step), stands for Babylonian Ausar, Accadian a-usar, "border of the water" (Id. p. 334).

SINGLE, an old word for an animal's tail, is no doubt a corrupt form of swingle, A. Sax. swingel, a lash, a beating (from swengan, to swinge, or lash, Ettmüller, p. 757), and so denotes that which swings or flaps about like a swingle or flail.

I have both heme and lyne, . .
And a swynyll good and grete.
The Wright's Chaste Wife, l. 216.

So single-tree, the swinging bar to which horses are harnessed when drawing a coach, is a corruption of swingle-tree, and has originated a fresh mistake in double-tree, as a name for a corresponding cross-piece. For the loss of w, compare thong for thwong (A. Sax. þwang), and SIGHT, p. 357.

Davies, Supp. Eng. Glossary, quotes the following:—

There's a kind of acid humour that nature hath put in our singles, the smell whereof causeth our enemies, viz. the doggs, to fly from us.—Howell, Parly of Beasts, p. 63.

That single wagging at thy hutt,
Those gambrels, and that cloven foot.
Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque,
p. 277.

SINK, p. 358. Compare Lancashire sike, and syke, a drain or gutter.

SIRLOIN, p. 359. Wedgwood quotes "A surloyn beef" from a document temp. Henry VI.

SKILLET, a Suffolk word for a utensil for skimming milk, properly a little dish, O. Fr. escuellette, seems to have acquired its peculiar sense from confusion with Icel. skilja, to separate (Skeat), Dan. skille. Compare North Eng. skile, an implement for skimming the fat off broth (Wright), that which scales or separates, also skile, to separate; Cleveland scale-dish, a milk-skimmer.

SKEWER, p. 360. Compare Isle of Wight skure, to secure, and skiver, a skewer (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

SLACK, a prov. Eng. word (common in Ireland) for fine small coal used when wetted to bank up a fire so that it may continue to burn slowly without blazing, has no direct connexion with slack, loose, as if disintegrated coal, but is the same word as Lancashire stleck, of the same meaning, that which stlecks or slakes the fire, old Eng. stlecken, to quench, A. Sax. stleccan.

SLAVER, a modified and, as it were, a more "genteel" form of slabber or slobber (Skeat). It was perhaps assimilated by educated people to Lat. saliva, of the same meaning.

SLEEPER, p. 361. Notwithstanding the correspondence to dormant, which no doubt has had some influence on the form, this word appears to have no real connexion with sleep, to remain steady. Prof. Skeat says that it is due to the Norwegian sliep, meaning (1) smooth, slippery, (2) a smooth piece of timber laid as the foundation of a road, akin to Mid. Eng. slēpir, slippery, and slab, a smooth piece of stone, &c. Thus sleeper is merely an (old Eng.) slipper, or slippery, or smooth, block of wood. For the apparent connexion mentioned above, compare, "Beams, prickeposts, groundsels, summers or dormants."—Harrison, Description of England, p. 233 (E.E.T.S.). In the extract from Bailey (ed. 1753) summer is a misprint for summer. However, this sleeper and sleep are ultimately related, as to sleep probably meant originally to slip or become relaxed, as we still sometimes say "to slip off to sleep," and Scot. slippery is a form of sleepery or sleepy (Jamieson).

SLEEVELESS, useless, unprofitable, p. 361. Professor Skeat offers the suggestion, which will not, I think, recommend itself to many, that a sleeveless errand may have meant originally a herald's errand, because (1) a herald's coat had no sleeves, and (2) his errand frequently led to no useful result (!). Compare, in the Lancashire dialect, "Doancin' an' sich like sleeveless wark;" "Yoar'n gooin a sleeveless arnt."—Collier, 1750 (E. D. S. Glossary, p. 245).

They are the likelier, quoth Bracton,
To bring us many a sleeveless action.
S. Butler, Works, ii. 206 (ed. Clarke).

SLOW-WORM, p. 361. A better account of this word is that given by Prof. Skeat. He shows that it is old Eng. slo-wurm (Wright, Vocab. i. 91), A. Sax. slá-wyrm, meaning properly the "slay-worm," so called from it being popularly regarded as venomous. He compares Norweg. orm-slo, Swed. orm-slå, the worm that strikes or slays, which are just the Eng. word reversed. Thus the word has nothing to do with slow; and consequently has affinity, not with slug, the slow-moving snail, but with slug, the swift bullet (from A. Sax. slahan, to slay or strike, past tense slóg).

SLUG-HORN, p. 362. The true Gaelic word from which this is corrupted is sluagh-ghairm, i.e. "army-call," the signal for battle among the Highland clans, generally contracted into slogan (Skeat). The English form evidently led Browning to regard it as something of the nature of a bugle or horn which could be "set to the lips"! See the extract.

SMACK, a fishing-boat, old Dut. smak, smucke, appears to be a corruption of A. Sax. snacc, a small vessel, akin to snake, so called from its sneaking through the water like a snake. Compare Dan. snekke, (1) a snail, (2) a smack (Skeat).

SMELT, the fish, generally supposed to have its name from its fragrant thyme-like smell, whence its scientific name osmerus (Aperlanus), i.e. ὄσμηρός, sweet-smelling. Compare also thymallus, i.e. thymy, the name of the grayling or umber, It. thimalo, timalo, "a fish called a flower, goodly to looke upon, and sweet in taste and smell" (Florio). Prof. Skeat says this is an imaginary etymology, and that the name probably means "smooth," comparing A. Sax. smcolt, smylt, smooth.

SMITER, p. 362.

Then, Basket, put thy smiter up, and hear;
I dare not tell the truth to a drawn sword.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iv. 3.

SNOWFIELD, p. 558, for snafil—"cloud-capt;" compare:—

Off with yon cloud, old Snafell! that thine
eye

Over three Realms may take its widest range.
Wordsworth, Poems of the Imagination, xxi.

SODDEN, p. 363. Compare Lancashire sodden (and thodden), applied to bread which is close-grained and heavy from being imperfectly leavened, and sad, heavy, solid (of a pudding, &c.), sadden (paste, &c.), to thicken it (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 230). Also "pietonnec, to settle, sadden, lay, or beat down with often treading; pietonné, settled, sadmed with the feet."—Cotgrave.

The earth & water, one sad, the other fluid, make but one body.—Donne, Letter, in Poems,
1635, p. 297.

SOLOMON'S-AVON, that is Solomon's Even, a curious Shetland name for the 3rd of November, and for a superstition of ill-omen connected with that day (Edmondston, Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1866, p. 113).

I have no doubt that this is a corruption of Sowlemas Even or Soul-mass Even; Sowlemas Daye or Sowlemesday being an old name for the Feast of All Souls which fell on the 2nd of November.

I cam to Norwiche on Sowlemas daye.—Paston Letters (1452), iii. 170, ed. Fenn (Hampson, Medii Aevi Kalendarium, ii. 363; Brand, Pop. Antiq. i. 392).

SORRY, p. 364. This word was formerly spelt more correctly sory or sorie, i.e. scorish, feeling sore. A notable instance of the complete identification of "to be sorry" with "to sorrow," words totally unrelated, is presented in the following passage, where they are used to translate the one Greek word, ἐλπιθητε:—

Now I reioyce, not that ye were made sorie, but that yee sorowed to repentance: for ye were made sory after a godly maner.—A. V. 1611, 2 Cor. vii. 9.

I nowe reioyce, not that ye were sory, but that ye so sorowed that ye amended: for ye sorowed Godly.—Geneva Vers. 1557, ibid.

But I nowe reioyce, not that ye were sory, but that ye so sorowed, that ye repented. For ye sorowed godly.—Tyndale, 1534, ibid.

Now I haue ioie, not for ye weren made sorowful, but for ye weren made sarowful to penaunce, for whi ye ben made sorie aftir god.—Wiclif, 1380, ibid. (Bagster, Hexapla).

For a further confusion between A. Sax. súr, sour, and sár, sore, compare "Thou shalt . . . abyen it ful soure" (Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 2012), pay for it full sourly (for sorely; "þou salt it sore abugge."—Layamon, 8158). See Prof. Skeat's note in loco, Clar. Press ed. Compare Isle of Wight sorrow for sorrel (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.).

SPELL, a thin slip of wood, properly, as in old Eng. and A. Saxon, speld, has been assimilated to the verb to spell (A. Sax. spellian), from the old use in schools of a slip of wood, or "festue to spell with."—Palsgrave. So complete was the confusion that spelder, a splinter (from speld), is used as a verb meaning to spell, ab. 1500. (See Skeat.)

SPOUT is a perversion, under the influence of spit, Lat. sputare (Swed. spotta), of the primitive form sprout, Swed. spruta, to squirt, Dan. sprudc, sprutte, to spout, Low Ger. sprutten, akin to spreotan, to shoot out, spout (Skeat). Compare speak for spreak.

SPURRINGS, p. 368. In N. Lincolnshire this word is used for traces or footmarks (E. D. Soc. Orig. Glossaries, C. p. 121).

STAR CHAMBER, p. 370.

By the king's commandment, and assent of his council in the starred chamber, the chancellor and treasurer sent a writ unto the sheriffs of London.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 115 (ed. Thoms).

This place is called the Star chamber, because the roof thereof is decked with the likeness of stars gilt.—Id. p. 175 (ed. Thoms).

STARK-BLIND, p. 370. Prof. Skeat compares old Eng. stare-blind with Dan. stœrblind, from stær, a cataract in the eye.

As those that are stark blind can trace
The nearest way from place to place.

S. Butler, Works, ii. 261
(ed. Clarke).

STARK-NAKED, p. 370. Prof. Skeat (s. v.) says that stœre-naked in the Anceren Rivele must be a misreading of stœrt-naked; stœrt-naket in St. Juliaua, p. 16.

Anon he comes, and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green brim.

Shakespeare, Passionate Pilgrim, st. 2.

STARLING, p. 371.

The smaller sums also were paid in starlings which were pence so called. . . . William the Conqueror's penny also was fine silver of the weight of the easterling.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 20 (ed. Thoms).

The easterling pence took their name of the Easterlings which did first make this money in England, in the reign of Henry II.—Id. p. 21.

STAVES-ACRE, p. 372.

Staphis agria is called in englische Staues aker, in duch Bisz muntz or Lauskraut, in frenche de lee staues agrie.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 77 (E.D.S.).

As staphisagre medled in thaire mete
Wol hele her tonnge.

Palladius on Husbandrie (ab. 1420), l. 596.

STEELYARD, p. 372. As instances of the old verb stell or steel, to set or place, compare:—

Mine eye hath play'd the painter and hath stell'd [Quarto steeld]

Thy beauty's form in table of my heart.

Shakespeare, Sonnets, xxiv.

To find a face where all distress is stell'd.

Lucrece, l. 1444.

STERN, severe, which should rather be spelt sturn, being from A. Sax. styrne, severe, has been assimilated to the other word stern, the hinder part of a ship (Skeat). Or rather it has been confused with austern, an old Eng. form of austere, Scot. asterne (G. Douglas). Compare the following two versions of Wycliffe, where the Vulgate has "austerus homo":—

I dredde thee, for thou art an austerne man.—S. Luke, xix. 21 (ed. Bosworth and Waring).

I drede thee: for thou art a sternie man.—Ibid. (Bagster's Hexapla).

Antenor arghet with austerne wordes.

Destruction of Troy, l. 1976 (E.E.T.S.).

STEW, p. 374. Compare Isle of Wight stew, fear, anxiety (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, C. xxiii.), N. Lincolnshire dust, figuratively noise, turmoil (Id. C. xxvi.).

STEW, a place to keep fish alive for present use (Bailey), has not hitherto been explained. It is a distinct word from stew, a bath, which is only another form of stove.

Ful many a fat partrich hadde he in mewe,
And many a breme, and many a luce in stewe.
Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 351.

Two stews must thou make in erthe or stoone,
Not fer from home, and bryng water therto.
Palladius on Husbandrie (ab. 1420), l. 738.

The word properly means an enclosure, and was sometimes used for a small room or closet, e.g. :—

Troilus, that stode and might it see
Throughout a litel window in a stewe
Ther he beshet, sith midnight, was in mewe.
Id. Troilus and Creseide, iii. 602.

And gan the stewe dore al soft unpin.
Ibid. 699.

It is derived from old Eng. stewe, to enclose, old Fr. estuer, to enclose, encase, or shut up (Roquefort), and so is akin to TWEEZERS, p. 411.

[Thay] alle stewede wyth strenghe, that stode theme agaynes.

Morte Arthure, l. 1489.

STORE, p. 375. The Gest Hystorielle of the Destruction of Troy describes Paris as "A store man & a stoute" (l. 2886), and Helen as having a nose "sondyng full strenght & not of stor length." This old word for great, large, probably re-acted on the substantive store, a stock, giving it the meaning of a large quantity, abundance, a multitude. Compare the twofold use in the following :—

He [Oceau] also sends Armies of Fishes to her Coasts, to winne her Loue, even of his best store, and that in store and abundance.—Purchas, Pilgrimages, vol. i. p. 937.

Fram flore into flore þe strimes urneþ store.

Floriz and Blancheflur, l. 228.

[The streams ruu abundantly.]

When there hath been store of people to hear sermons and service in church, we suffer the communion to be administered to a few.—Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. ch. 68 (vol. ii. p. 14, Oxford ed.).

One little world or two (Alas!) will never do;
We must have store.

Crashaw, Name of Jesus, l. 26.

We found mariages great store both in townes and villages in many places where wee passed of boyes of eight or ten yeeres old.—Hakluyt, Voiages, 1599, ii. 253.

STRAND, the twist of a rope, is an assimilation to the more familiar word strand, beach, of Dut. streen, a skein, another form of Dut. streng, a hank or string, Ger. ströhne. On the other hand, compare string, p. 377, for strend, race.

STUBBORN, old Eng. stiborn, which should properly be stubbor, old Eng. stibor, i.e. stub-like, as immovable as the stub (A. Sax. styb) or stock of a tree, seems to owe the final n to a misdivision of the substantive stibornes (stubbornness) as stiborn-(n)ess, instead of stibor-nes (Skeat).

STUCK, p. 377, as if from the verb to stick, is rather from old Fr. estoc, a rapier or tuck, also a thrust (Cotgrave).

ST. VITUS DANCE, p. 377. St. Vitus, to whom the cathedral at Prague is dedicated, is said to be merely an ingenious adaptation of the name of an old Slavonic god Svatovit or Svantovit, converted into Svaty Vit, "Holy Vitis" (A. H. Wratislaw, Monthly Packet, New Ser. vol. xiii. p. 8). On the other hand, Southey asserts that Sanctus Vitus was converted by the people of the Isle of Rugen into Swantawith and regarded as a deity (Letters, vol. iv. p. 43).

STRY, p. 377. Prof. Skeat adds that the form styany, styonie, which was misunderstood probably as sty on eye, really stands for A. Sax. stigend eage, i.e. "styng eye," rising eye.

SUBDUE, p. 378. Prof. Skeat says that this word is an assimilation of old Eng. soduen (from old Fr. souduire, Lat. subducere) to other words compounded with sub, as subject, subjugate. That is to say, by a popular perversion the word was brought back nearer to its true original.

SUCKET, p. 378. J. Sylvester evidently regarded sucket as something to suck at, when in his Tobacco Battered and the Pipes Shattered, 1621, he says that none who take that herb can boast

That the excessive and continual vse
Of this dry Suck-at ever did produce
Him any Good, Civill, or Naturall.

Works, p. 1135.

There is some evidence that the Italian zucca, from which this comes, was once partly naturalized in English as zowche, a sweet-meat; compare :—

George Zouche, as he was named so was he a zowche, a swheete well-favored gentylman in dede.—Narratives of the Reformation, p. 54 (Camden Soc.).

There's thirty hearts there, that wad hae wanted bread ere ye had wanted sunkets, and spent their life-blood ere ye had scratched your finger.—Scott, Guy Mannering, ch. viii.

SUMPTER, p. 379. Prof. Skeat says this word properly denotes, not the pack-horse, but his driver, and is from old Fr. somme-tier, a pack-horse driver, corresponding to a Low Lat. sagmatarius.

SURCEASE owes its form and meaning to a remarkable folk-etymology, as has been pointed out by Prof. Skeat:—"It is obvious, from the usual spelling, that this word is popularly supposed to be allied to cease, with which it has no etymological connexion." It is a monstrous corruption of old Fr. sursis, a delay, properly the past part. (sursis, fem. sursise) of surseoir, to intermit, leave off, delay for a time, which is from Lat. supersedere, to sit over, then to pass over, omit, forbear. A surcease is therefore properly a supersession or intermission, and the original of the verb to surcease, to come to an end, and would be better spelt sursease, "The kyngdome of Mercia surseased."—Fabyan. Similarly the Fr. form superceder (as if from Lat. cedere) is a corruption of superseder (Etym. Dict.).

The Bishop shall surcease from Ordering that person until . . . (he) shall be found clear of that crime.—P. B. Ordering of Priests.

A surcease of armes was agreed upon betwene the Englishe and the French.—Hayward, Annals of Elizabeth (1612), p. 68 (Camden Soc.).

SURCOAT, p. 379.

A sercotte sett about her necke soe swheete with dyamond & with Margaret, & many a rich Emerall.

Libus Discomius, l. 942 (Percy Fol. MS. ii. 449).

The lords, Judges, maior and aldermen, put off their robes, mantles, and cloakes, . . . and the Lordes sate onelie in their circotes, and the Iudges and Aldermen in their gownes, and all the Lords that serued that daie serued in their circotes.—Stow, Chronicles, p. 955 (1600).

SURF is a false spelling with intrusive r (as in hoarse for hoase, &c.) of old Eng. suffe, which seems to be a phonetic spelling of sough (souf), a groundswell, properly the sound of the sea, which again stands for swough, a rushing sound, "The swoghe of the see" (Morte Arthure, l. 759); "The suffe of the sea" (Hakluyt, ii. 227, 1598). See Skeat, Etym. Dict. s.v. The word was perhaps influenced by Fr. sunflot (Lat. super-fluctus), the rising of wave over wave.

SURGERY is a corruption of sirurgy or cirurgy, from old Fr. cirurgie, sirurgie, Low Lat. chirurgia, Greek χειρουργία, "hand-working" (of operative manipulation), by assimilation apparently to midwifery, thievery, butchery, carpentry, sorcery, and other words implying the practice of an art.

SURRENDER, p. 380. Old Fr. surrendre is authorized by Palsgrave and Roquefort (Skeat).

SWARM, p. 381. Compare swarved in the following (printed swarned):—

With that hee swarued the maine-mast tree,
Soe did he itt with might and maine.

Percy Fol. MS. iii. 413.

SWEET-BREAD, the pancreas of a calf regarded as a delicate article of food (Fr. ris-de-veau), is perhaps a corruption of an original form corresponding to the synonymous Netherlandish zwezer, zwezerik, zweesrik, Dutch zweesrik, words which have no connexion with zoet, sweet.

SWIM. A person's head is said to swim when it is dizzy, and this is no doubt popularly connected with the verb swim, to float (natare), to move up and down with an uneasy motion, as one seems to do after being on board a ship (A. Sax. swimman). This is however a distinct word, being from old Eng. swime, swym, dizziness, vertigo, swoon; A. Sax. swima, a swoon or swimming in the head, ásurēman, to wander; Icel. svimi, a swimming in the head, svēima, to wander about; Swed. svimma, to be dizzy; Dan. svime, to faint. The original form was probably swin, compare A. Sax. swindan, to languish, Swed. swindel, dizziness, Ger. schwindel (see Skeat, s.v.). From this word comes squeamish, old Eng. sweymous, Cleveland swaimish, that is swimish, apt to turn faint, or have a swimming or dizziness, at anything distasteful or disgusting. See SWARM (2), p. 381.

He swoonnes one the swarthe and one swym fallis.

Morte Arthure, l. 4246 (E. E. T. S.).

[He swoons on the sward and in a faint falls.]

Sweem, of mornynge, Tristicia, molestia.—Prompt. Parv.

A swemfulle syght yt vs to looke vpon.

Play of the Sacrament, l. 803 (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1860-1).

SYLVAN, a false spelling of silvan, Lat. silvanus, from silva, a wood, in order to bring it into connexion with Greek hýlē (ἕλη), supposed to be the same word (Skeat). Compare SYREN, p. 383.

T.

TAFFRAIL, "the frame or rail of a ship behind, over the poop" (Phillips, 1706), is a corruption, as if compounded with rail, of Dut. tafereel (for tafel-eel), a little table, a dimin. of tafel, a table (Skeat).

TAILORS, p. 384.

"How many tellers make a man?" asked a clergyman of a working-man, as they listened to the tolling of a death-bell. "Nine," replied he, promptly.—See The Spectator, Aug. 26, 1832, p. 1111.

Compare:—

An idea has gone abroad, and fixed itself down into a wide-spreading rooted error, that Tailors are a distinct species in Physiology, not Men, but fractional Parts of a Man. . . . Does it not stand on record that the English Queen Elizabeth, receiving a deputation of Eighteen Tailors, addressed them with a "Good morning, gentlemen both!" Did not the same virago boast that she had a Cavalry Regiment, whereof neither horse nor man could be injured; her Regiment, namely, of Tailors on Mares!—Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, bk. iii. ch. 11.

TAINT, a blemish or pollution, is an altered form of tint, a spot or stain, old Fr. teint, teinct, a tincture or stain, Lat. tinctus, a dyeing, from tingere, to dye or tinge. The word was assimilated to and confused with attaint, properly meaning to convict, attach, lay hands on, attain, old Eng. atceynt, atteint, from old Fr. ateindre, to reach to, attain, Lat. attingere (i. e. ad-tangere), to touch upon (Skeat). The last word was probably conceived in some cases to be for ad-tingere, to dye or stain. Compare "Attaint, to taint, corrupt, stain the blood" (Bailey); "attainted, corrupted as flesh" (Id.); "attaint, atteint, a knock or hurt in a horse's leg" (Id.).

TALK is an assimilation to old Eng. talien, talen, to tell tales, of Swed. tolka, Dan. tolke, Icel. tálka, to interpret or explain (Skeat).

TAPE, an Isle of Wight word for a mole or "want" (E. D. S. Orig. Glossaries, xxiii.), is evidently an adaptation of Fr. taupe (Lat. talpa).

[It] either shall thees talpes void or sterve.
Palladius on Husbandrie (ab. 1420), l. 931.

TAUNT, to scoff or jeer at, formerly sometimes spelt tant, is an altered form of old Eng. tenten, to try, tempt, provoke, old Fr. tenter, from Lat. tentare, to attack, but influenced by old Fr. tancer, tencer, to chide, rebuke, taunt (see Skeat). For the change of vowel, compare tamper from temper, and tawny from Fr. tanné.

TEA-TOTALERS, p. 385. It may be noted that tee-total is the reduplication of a reduplication, as total is from Lat. totus, which is merely to-tu-s from the root tu, large, and so = "great-great."

THRESHOLD, p. 389.

She sette down hir water-pot anon
Byside the threshfold, in an oxes stalle.
Chaucer, The Clerkes Tale, l. 291.

THRUSH, a disease of the mouth, p. 390, according to Prof. Skeat is from Icel. þurr, dry, A. Sax. þýrr, + -sh (= ish), and so denotes a "dry-ish" state of the mouth. He compares the synonymous words Dan. trøske, prov. Swed. trösk, Swed. toršk; also Mid. Eng. thrust, thirst.

TIGHT, p. 391. Old Eng. tite, quickly, quoted under this heading, is perhaps a distinct word, but it was no doubt confused with teyte, lively, and was sometimes spelt tight.

Wherefore prouyde and se
That thou wele maye doo, shortly do it, &
tyght.

Dyffer not tyme, for I assertayue the right.
Fabyan, Chronicles, 1516, p. 281 (ed. Ellis).

"And how do miss and madam do,
The little boy and all?"

"All tight and well."

Cowper, The Yearly Distress.

TIT FOR TAT is a corruption of the older form tip for tap (Bullinger), i.e. blow for blow, retaliation, perhaps from some supposed connexion with this for that, Lat. quid pro quo. So tattoo, the soldier's recall to his quarters, is for taptoo, the signal that the tap is to or closed, or the public-house shut (Skeat).

TOAD-EATER, p. 395. For Whateley read Whately.

TOAST, p. 396. Compare :—

'Tis vented most in Taverns, Tippling-cots,
To Ruffians, Roarers, Tispie-Tosty-Pots.

Sylwester, Tobacco Battered, Works
(1621), p. 1133.

TOIL, old Eng. toil, properly meaning turmoil or disturbance (Scot. twill, and twilyic, a struggle), seems to have acquired the meaning of labour from having been confused with Mid. Eng. tulien, another form of tilien, to till (Skeat). In old writers "to toil the ground" is often found for "to till." Compare :—

To toilen wiþ þe erþe,
Tylyen & trewliche lyven.

Pierce Ploughman's Crede, l. 743.

Compare the confusion between SPOIL, p. 366, and spill.

TONGUE, the projecting part of a buckle that grips the strap, as if a tongue-like appendage (= Lat. lingua), is a corruption of tang, old Eng. tange and tongge, Icel. tangi, a projection, esp. the part of a knife which is fixed into the handle, anything that nips or bites (hence tongs; see Skeat, s.vv.). Old Eng. tonge also = a sting, e.g. "The scorpion forbare his tonge."—Cursor Mundi, l. 693 (Trin. vers.).

TOPSY-TURVY, p. 398. There was a confusion probably with the old Eng. phrase topsayles over (probably used at first of the capsizing of a vessel), Burus's topsal teerie (Green grow the Rashers).

Mony turnyt with tene topsayles over.

Destruction of Troy, l. 1219 (E.E.T.S.)

TOUCHY, p. 399. An assumed connexion with to touch seems to underlie the following :—

Those little sallies of ridicule, . . . owing to my miserable and wretched touchness of character, used formerly to make me wince, as if I had been touchèd with a hot iron.—Mrs. Gaskell, Life of C. Brontë, ch. viii. p. 107.

TOUCH-WOOD, tinder, as if that which will take fire at a touch, i.e. kindle at a spark, is a corruption of tache-wood, where tache is old Eng. tach or tasche, tinder (Skeat). Compare TOUCHY, p. 400, for techy or tachy.

Achewe fuyr of a flynt · four hundred wynter ;
Bote þon haue tache to take hit with · tunder
and broches,
Al þy labour is lost.

Vision of P. Plowman, C. xx. 212.

Fungi arborei, in English tree Mushrooms, or Touchwood.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1386.

TRACT, used in Shakespeare and old authors for track and trace, as if from Lat. tractus, whereas track, Fr. trac, is from O. Dut. treck, a draught. See SKEAT, s.v.

TRANSOM, p. 402. Prof. Skeat also holds this to be from Lat. transtrum, but he is certainly mistaken, I think, in supposing that it is formed from trans, by adding the suffix -trum, which seems impossible, as substantives are not formed in this way from prepositions. What would we say to de-trum, ab-trum, in-trum, per-trum?

TRAPES, p. 402. Compare Lancashire trawnce, to tramp, and trawnce, a long or roundabout walk (E. D. Soc.), apparently from Lat. transire, "I've had sich ð' trawnce this mornin'."—Collier, 1750. "Thae'rt noan fit to trawnce up an' deawn o' this shap."—Wagh, Factory Folk, p. 195.

TRICE, p. 404. Some of the quotations here given refer rather to trice, old Eng. trise, a pulley, the haul of a rope; but there has been some confusion. See the extracts from EDWARDS and SHAKESPEARE.

TRIFLE, p. 405. No doubt the same word as old Fr. truffle, or truffle, a truffle, taken as a by-word for anything worthless or of slight value. Prof. Skeat observes that the change from u to i in the spelling may be due to the old word trifle, in prov. Eng. trifled corn, i.e. corn fallen down in single ears, which is from A. Sax. trifelian, to pound small, a naturalized form of Lat. tribulare, to bruise corn.

TRINKETS, properly meaning small knives, old Eng. trenkets or trynkets (Sp. trinchete), seems to have acquired the sense of nicknacks or small ornaments from being confused with old Fr. triqueniques, trifles, things of no value, sounding to Eng. ears like trick-nicks (Skeat).

TROY-WEIGHT, p. 406, was probably at first a weight used at Troyes in France.

Grotes which lacked of y<sup>e</sup> weyghte of his former coyne. ii. s. vi. d. in a li. Troy.—Fabyan, Chronicles, p. 461 (ed. Ellis).

TRUCHMAN, p. 406. Compare the title of an old book, The Arabian Trvdgman, by W. B. (edwell), 1615.

TRUMP, p. 408. According to Littré Fr. tromper does mean (1) to sound a trumpet, (2) to amuse one's self at another's expense, to befool; with which we may compare Fr. flagorner, to flatter with false reports, from flageoler, to play the pipe.

Now upon the coming of Christ, very much, tho' not all, of this idolatrous Trumpery and Superstition was driven out of the World.—South, Sermons, 1720, i. 431.

TRUNK of an elephant, p. 408, is, according to Prof. Skeat, identical with the trunk or stem of a tree, "so named from its thickness" (Etym. Dict.). This is certainly wrong. It is the same word as trunk, a hollow tube, a trumpet. Compare:—

His truncke called Proboscis and Promnscis is a large hollow thing hanging from his nose like skinne to the groundward.—Topsell, Foure-footed Beasts, 1608, p. 195.

Their voice is . . . like the low sound of a Trumpet.—Id. p. 196.

Anything long, circular, and hollow like a tube might be called a trunk. Thus Lovelace says:—

As through the crane's trunk throat doth speed,

The asp doth on his feeder feed.

Posthume Poems, 1650, p. 38 (ed. Singer).

TUBEROSE, p. 408. This word was formerly pronounced as a trisyllable tu-ber-ose, e.g.:—

So would some tuberosé delight

That struck the pilgrim's wondering sight

'Mid lonely deserts drear.

Shenstone, A Pastoral Ode, st. 13.

TURBOT, p. 409, according to Diez and Skeat is just Lat. turb(o) + ot, i.e. the top-shaped or rhomboidal fish.

TURNCHAPEL, a popular corruption of the name of St. Ann's Chapel (as if

'Tann Chapel), near Plymouth (Philolog. Soc. Trans. 1862-3, p. 269). So Tabb's, Tawdry, Tantolin's, Tollin's, Tooley, are old popular forms of St. Ebb's, St. Audry, St. Antholin's, St. Helen's, St. Olave.

TURNER, p. 410. Other Scottish corruptions of French words are given in M. Francisque-Michel's Critical Enquiry into the Scottish Language, 1882, such as tarlies, a lattice, from treillis; aschet, a dish, from assiette; mayduke (cherry) from Médoc; argent content, ready money, from argent comptant. The last occurs also in old English writers, e.g.—

Wools . . . to be solde, the one halfe for Bolyon, and the other part for Argent content.—Stow, Annals, p. 692, sub anno 1463.

TURN-MERICK, p. 411, or turmeric (not in Gerarde), from Fr. terre-mérite, Low Lat. terra merita, "deserving earth," evidently a corruption, perhaps (says Prof. Skeat), of Arab. karkam. Another plant has a similar name:—

Tormentilla is called in greeke Heptaphyllon, in englishe Tormentil, or Tormerik, in duche Tormetil.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 37 (E. D. S.).

U.

UNLESS is a perversion, under the influence of the common prefix un-, not, as in un-even, of the older form onless, onlesse, for on less that, which was the old phrase, e.g. "I had fainted unless I had believed."—Ps. xxvii. 13, i.e. I had fainted on (a) less (supposition than that) I had believed. See Skeat, s.v.

UNRULY, p. 414, corresponds to Icel. ú-rólligr, restless, unruly, from ú-ró, unrest, disturbance (Cleasby, 664); Ger. unruhig, turbulent, from unruhe.

A number of unrulie youths on the tower hill . . . threw at them stones.—Stow, Annals, p. 1280 (1600).

Ruly & rightwise, a roghe man of hors.
Destruction of Troy, l. 3888.

UPBRAID, p. 415. Spenser uses the corrupt form to upbray, as if upbraid were a past partic., like afraid from affray.

Vile knight,
That knights and knighthood doest with shame upbray.

Faerie Queene, II. iv. 45.

UPHOLSTERER, p. 416. For the pleonastic termination, compare caterer for old Eng. cater, a buyer, and sorcer-er for sorcer, for old Fr. sorcier, Lat. sortiarius.

This lane . . . had ye for the most part dwelling Fripperers or Upholders, that sold old apparel and household stuff.—Stow, Survey, 1603, p. 75 (ed. Thoms).

UPSTART, a parvenu or nouveau riche, generally understood as meaning one who has suddenly started up into prominence like a mushroom (so Bailey), in accordance with the old lines:—

When Adam dalve and Eve span
Who was then the gentleman?
Up start the carle and gathered good,
And thereof came the gentle blood.

Bp. Pilkington, Works, p. 125 (Parker Soc.).

But the Icelandic word upp-stertr, or stertr, means haughty, stately, with the original meaning probably of finely dressed, from sterta, a fine dress, whence also sterti-maðr ("start-man"), a stately, finely-dressed person (Cleasby, p. 593). Otherwise up-start might fairly mean "with one's start (A. Sax. steort, Icel. stertr) or tail up," like a pert robin or a conceited peacock (Skeat, p. 592).

That young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow.—Shakespeare, Much Ado, i. 3, 69.

To start, old Eng. sterren, Dut. steerten, was originally no doubt to turn tail (old Eng. stert, Dut. steert, tail), to run away. Compare "et-sterren vlesches vuel."—Ancient Riddle, p. 370 (to escape flesh's evil). So Scot. startle, sturtle, to run wildly about with up-lifted tails, as cows sometimes do; Cumberland startle (of cattle), to fly with tail erect (Ferguson).

USE, p. 418, Norm. Fr. uoés, service, Prov. obs, old Fr. oeps, old Sp. huevos, huebos, It. uopo, Lat. opus.

Deus en ad des noz à sun uoes tant seisi.

Vie de St. Auban, l. 1554.

[God has taken so much from us for his use, i. e. service.]

UTTERANCE, p. 418.

Let us fight at ottrance.

He that fleth, God gyf hym mychaunce.

Prof. Child's Ballads, vol. v. p. 129.

All the deire of the ded be done on vs two,
To uttrance & yssue vne at this tyme.

Destruction of Troy, l. 7981.

[All the injury of the dead be done on us two to extremity and issue even at this time.]

V.

VAILS, p. 419. Mr. Cockayne thought that as pecus answers to Eng. fee (Ger. vieh), so vails might be equated with Lat. peculium, a slave's earnings (? for fails or feels).—Spoon and Sparrow, p. 108.

I pity you, serving men, who upon small wages creepe into your Masters houses, glad of meane vayles.—Rogers, Naaman the Syrian, 1641, p. 289.

VENT, an aperture or air-hole, in popular etymology generally connected with Fr. vent, the wind (Lat. ventus), as if a hole to let in wind or air, a small window (compare venting-hole, an outlet for vapour (Holland), ventail, the breathing orifice of a helmet), is an altered form of old Eng. fent or fente, a slit, old Fr. fente, a cleft, chink, slit, or cranny, derived from fendre, to cleave, Lat. findere. From this vent came a verb to vent = to emit, which was frequently confused with vent, to utter or put to sale (Fr. vente, sale), and vent, to snuff the air. See Skeat, s.vv. Vent is a S. W. Eng. form of fente, like vane for fane, and vixen for fixen, fem. of fox. Compare Somerset, "Vent, vent-hole, the button-hole of a wrist-band" (Williams and Jones).

My belly is as wine which hath no vent.—A. V. Job, xxxii. 19.

Could I believe, that winds for ages pent
In earth's dark womb have found at last a vent.

Cowper, The Needless Alarm.

VENT, sometimes used in the southern counties for a passage, lane, or cross-way, as "Flinwell-vent," "Seven vents" at Ightham (Pegge, Kentisms, p. 55, E. D. S.; Parish, Sussex Glossary, p. 128), so pronounced as if identical with vent, a passage or aperture, is a less correct form of prov. Eng. went, a way or lane, that by which one wends or goes, like gate, a street, from go; compare Scot. wynd, lane, alley, N. Yorkshire wcen, a passage between two houses (N. and Q. 6th S. v. 276) and perhaps Low Lat. venella, a lane or passage (if not from vena). An Essex form is went (Id. 167).

And in a forrest as they went,
At a tourning of a went,
How Crusa was ylost, alas!

Chaucer, House of Fame, i. 182.

At the meeting of the four wents.—Somner, Antiq. Cant. 1640, p. 20.

A went, lane, viculus, angiportus.—Levinus, Manipulus, col. 66, l. 8.

What man that withinne [the Labyrinth] went,

There was so many a sondry went,
That he ne shulde nought come out.

Gower, Conf. Amantis, ii. 304.

VIAL OR PHIAL, a small glass vessel, is a pedantic assimilation to the Lat. and Greek original, phiala, φιάλη, of the old Eng. viol, which is directly from old Fr. virole, firole. "Goldun viols ful of odouris."—Wycliffe, Rev. v. 8 (Hexapla), a passage where Bishop Morgan in his Welsh New Testament, 1567, translates the English word by crythan, i.e. crowds or fiddles, mistaking vials or viols for violins (Todd's Illustrations of Chaucer, &c. p. 242).

Similarly vicinage, formerly spelt voisinage (J. Taylor), and derived from Fr. voisinage, is a scholarly attempt to bring back the word to a Latin spelling by conforming it to Lat. vicinus, neighbouring (Skeat).

VICTUALS, which ought to be spelt, as pronounced, vittles or vitailles, old Eng. vitaille (Chaucer), derived from old Fr. vitaille, is grossly misspelt, says Prof. Skeat, by a blind pedantry, which, ignoring the Fr. origin, has brought it back to Lat. victualia, things pertaining to nourishment (victus). In the same way virtue is a pedantic assimilation to the Latin virtus, of the older form vertue (Fr. vertue), which was in use to the close of the 17th century.

It was a handsome Incentive to Vertue.—Sir M. Hale, Contemplations, 1685, i. 318.

The singular vertues and operations of brut beasts.—Holland, Pliny, ii. 310.

VINTAGE owes its form to a confusion with the associated words vintry, vintner (Lat. vinetum, a vineyard), being altered from old Eng. vindage (Wycliffe) or vendage (Langland), which again is a perversion, by assimilation to the common suffix -age, of vendange, from Fr. vendange (Lat. vindemia).—Skeat, Etym. Dict.

W.

WAF<sup>T</sup> is a corruption of waff'd or waved, formed by taking the past tense of the verb to wave, Lowland Scot. waff, as the infinitive mood of a new verb (Skeat, like Spenser's to yede, to go, properly "went" (A. Sax. eode, he went). So waffed = waved-ed. Compare to hoist for hoised, formerly to hoise, weld for well, and vulg. Eng. drownd-ed. See GRAFT, p. 150.

A brauer choyse of dauntlesse spirits
Then now the English bottomes haue waf'to're,
Did neuer flote vpon the swelling tide.

Shakespeare, K. John, i. 2 (1623).

Similarly wonted, accustomed, "wonted sight" (Midsum. N. Dream, iii. 2), is just woned-d, wont or woned being the past partic. of to won, to be used to, to dwell.

On the other hand, many verbs ending in -d or -t have been mistaken as past participles, and altered accordingly; as sprain for spraind (O. Fr. espreindre); strain for straind (O. Fr. estreinire); spill for spild, compact for compact (Sylvestre, p. 133), correck (Tyndale), negleck, disrespeck (Burns). The following are found used as past tenses or participles, afflycte = afflicted (Rogers), accept (Monk of Evesham, p. 30), acquit (Shakespeare), ewalt (Keats), complicate (Young), compact (Shakespeare), consecrate, dedicate (Andrews), joperde (Coverdale), debate (Warkworth Chron. p. 59), torment, salute (Monk of Evesham).

WAKE, p. 425. Prof. Skeat says Fr. ouaiche is from the Eng. wake, which he identifies with Icel. vök, Swed. vak, an ice-hole, a wet place.

WAKEFUL is a substitute for the A. Sax. wacol or wacul of the same meaning (= Lat. vig-il).—Skeat. Compare FORGETFUL, p. 126.

WALLET, often supposed, in accordance with its present form, to denote a pilgrim's scrip or a travelling bag, as if derived from A. Sax. weallian, to travel, Ger. wallen, is shown by Prof. Skeat to be a turning topsy-turvy of wattle or watel, (1) a woven thing, (2) a bag.

WALL-WORT, p. 425.

Ebulus is called in greeke Chameacte, in english Wallwurt or Danewurt.—W. Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 35 (E. D. Soc.).

WANTON, p. 426. Compare:—

Women are wantons, and yet men cannot want one.—Lodge, Euphuus golden Legacie, 1590, sig. B 2 [Dyce, Remarks, &c. p. 296].

WARRISON by a curious blunder is used by Sir W. Scott in the sense of a "note of assault" (note in loc. cit.), as if it were a warry soun, or warlike sound (= Fr. guerrier son or son de guerre). The word really means protection, help, old Eng. warisoun, from old Fr. warison, garison, safety, and is ultimately the same word as garrison. See Skeat, s.v.

Or straight they sound their warrison,
And storm and spoil thy garrison.

Lay of the Last Minstrel, IV. xxiv.

WARTY, a Lancashire corruption of work-day or working day, e.g. "warty clooas," work-day clothes, "He's at it Sunday and warty" (E. D. Soc.).

WASP, a perversion of the true form waps, still commonly used in prov. English, A. Sax. wæps (probably that which waps, strikes, or stings), from a desire to assimilate it to the Lat. vespa (Skeat). Compare wisp for old Eng. wips, hasp for haps, clasp for claps, ask for aw, task for taw; and see Duck above.

WAVE, that which fluctuates or undulates up and down, from old Eng. wauen, A. Sax. wafian, to waver (compare A. Sax. wafre, wandering, restless, Icel. vafra, to wobble), has superseded the old word waue, a word of distinct origin, with which it was no doubt confounded. Or perhaps waue was altered to wave from a supposed connexion with the verb. "Wawe, of the see or other water, flustrum, fluctus" (Prompt. Parv.), akin to Icel. vágr, Goth. wegs, a wave, Ger. woge, Fr. vague, a billow, is properly that which wags or wanders, from A. Sax. wagian (Goth. wagjan).

þe goodes in þis world · ben lyk þis grete waves.

Vision of P. Plowman, A. ix. 35.

WAXY, p. 428. Wax, to be angry or vexed, is evidently identical with Scot. wex, i.e. vex, as in the following:—

And mak thi self als mery as yboue may,
It helpith not thus fore to wex al way.
Lancelot of the Laik, l. 156 (ab. 1490).

WEATHER-BEATEN, apparently beaten or buffeted by the weather, is probably a corruption of the expression weather-bitten also found, i.e. bitten or corroded by the weather, which is the Scand. phrase, e.g. Swed. vüder-biten, Norweg. veder-biten, tanned by exposure to the weather (Skeat). With this we may compare the idiom hunger-bitten (A. V. Job xviii. 12) used by Cheke and Marston (see Bible Word-book, s.v.), and eye-bite, to fascinate (Holland).

A weather-bitten conduit of many king's reigns.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, v. 2, 60.

I hent him

Bootlesse home, and Weather-beaten backe.
1 Hen. IV. iii. 1 (1623).

This wether-beaten fieres-bird could not be satisfied with thus much.—Tell-Trothes New-year's Gift, 1593, p. 12 (Shaks. Soc.).

We were so whether-beatyn that of force we were glad to returne bake agayn.—Narratives of the Reformation, p. 210 (Camden Soc.).

WENCH. I find that Prof. Skeat's account of this word agrees closely with mine, which was written independently. He points out, as I have done, that the transitions of meaning through A. Sax. wencel, wenche, old Eng. wenche, Mod. Eng. wench, are (1) tottery, weak, (2) an infant of either sex, (3) one of the weaker sex, a girl.

Compare Lancashire wankle, weak, unstable, tottery (A. Sax. wancol), "That barne's terble wankle on its legs" (E. D. Soc. Glossary, p. 277).

As God bad hi Sara, kast out þe wench and her son.—Apology for the Lollards, p. 74 (Camden Soc.).

That he should drench

Lord, lady, groom and wench
Of all the Troyans nation.

Chaucer, House of Fame, bk. i.

Wench was formerly used in a specific sense, as it is still sometimes provincially, for a female infant, a little girl, in contrast to "a knave child." A Sunday School urchin once protested he had no wish to be born again for fear he should be born a wench. Compare the following:—

Before I removed from the sayde howse in London I hadde too chyldearne borne ther, a boye and a wence (wench).—Narratives of the Reformation (ab. 1561), p. 171 (Camden Soc.).

He sayd, Depart: for the wenche is not dead, but sleepeth.—Matt. ix. 24, Rheims Vers., 1582.

With the restriction of wench to females, originally meaning a young or feeble person of either sex, compare girl, used in old English for any child, a boy as well as a girl, and similarly harlot.

A-3eyn Godes heste · Gurles bei geeten.
Vision of P. Plowman, A. x. 155.

Gramer for gurles · I gon furste to write.
Id. xi. 131.

Compare It. meschina, a maid, a servant, old Fr. meschin, meschine, young person, the idea being that of a weakling, a tender person, from It. meschino, Sp. mezquino, Fr. mesquin, poor, wretched, Norm. Fr. meschin, young (Vie de St. Auban, l. 1840), all from Arab. meskin, poor.

WHEEL OF AUGUST, a popular name for the 1st of August:—

Till Lammas Day called August's Wheel,
When the long corn stinks of Camomile.

Swanson, Weather Folk-lore, p. 263.

An old name for it was "the gule of August," Norm. Fr. la goule d'August, Low. Lat. gula Augusti (as if the throat, i.e. entrance or beginning, of August). See Hearne, Glossary to Robt. of Gloucester, pp. 679, 680 (ed. 1810); Hampson, Med. Aevi Kalendarium, ii. 192. All these words are merely corruptions of A. Sax. geôla (sometimes spelt gehhel), a festival, Yule (Icel. jól); originally probably revelry or noisy merriment, akin to yell, old Eng. yowl, yollen. An old popular outcry was, ule, ule! (Hearne), or yule! youle! (Thome, Anecdotes and Traditions, pp. 81, 85).

WHERRY, a light boat, is an Anglicised form (for wherif) of Icel. hverfr, easily turning, crank, by assimilation to Eng. words like ferry, navy. So hasty for old Eng. hastif, and jolly for jolif. (See Skeat.)

WHILE, p. 433, for wile, to beguile. Compare:—

Whether to deceive the time, or to bestow it well, Ahasuerus shall spend his restless hours in the Chronicles of his time.—Bp.

Hull, Contemplations, bk. xxi. (Works, ii. 179, ed. Pratt).

How shall we beguile
The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Midsummer Night's Dream, v. 1, 40.

Perhaps you will be glad to hear some tales to while away the time.—J. H. Short-house, John Inglesant, ii. 51.

I felt inclined to stretch my limbs, and take up a book at hand, and while away the time.—Mrs. Oliphant, Life of Ed. Irving, p. 116.

WILD, frequently used in old authors for the weald (old Eng. wæld, wald, open country, A. Sax. wæld, a wood or wold) of Kent, as if it meant a wild or uncultivated region, a wilderness. Thus "in the wæld" [of Kent].—Caxton, Recuyell, is printed "in the wilde" in Copland's ed. See Skeat, s.v. Weald, who also cites:—

I was borne in the wilde of Kent.—Lyly, Euphues, p. 263 (ed. Arber).

There's a Frankin in the wilde of Kent hath brought three hundred Markes with him in Gold.—Shakespeare, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 1 (1623).

Compare:—

Where wilds, immeasurably spread,
Seem lengthening as I go.

Goldsmith, The Hermit.

WILL-O'-THE-WISP, p. 440. In the citation from the Troy Book (i.e. The Destruction of Troy, E.É.T.S.), for wyle read wyll (= astray, wandering), and see note in loco, p. 492.

WISS, p. 443, l. 4. For "wat (to know)," read "wát, I know, witan, to know."

WISTFUL, p. 443. Prof. Skeat thinks that wishful was assimilated to wistly, earnestly (for wisly), used by Shakespeare.

WITCH-ELM, p. 443. Prof. Skeat says that wych, old Eng. wice, is from A. Sax. wican, to bend, as if the drooping tree.

WIT-SAFE, p. 444. Compare the old form wichsafe.

Beseiching hyme he wold wichsaif to wende
To camelot the Cetee.

Lancelot of the Laik, l. 357.

WITTALL, p. 445. Compare also:—

Two staring horns, I often said,
But ill become a sparrow's head;
But then, to set that balance even,
Your cuckold sparrow goes to Heaven.

Prior, The Turtle and Sparrow, l. 335.

The Cuckoo then on every tree
Mocks married men.

Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2, 909.

WITTICISM, a coinage of Dryden's, is put for witty-ism by false analogy to criticism, Gallicism, fantasticism, solecism, where the c is organic.

WOMAN, p. 446, for wimman (wife-man).

Ihc am ibore to lowe
Such wimman to knowe.

King Horn, l. 418.

[I am too low born to know such a woman.]

With wife (femina), still used provincially for any female, married or unmarried (e.g. Lonsdale and Cleveland dialects), originally the "weaver" or spinster, compare the Madagascan expression "spindle-child" for a girl (J. Sibree, The Great African Island, 1880).

The origin of leman or lemman (lief-man) seems to have been forgotten at an early date, as we find

What ! lenestow, leue lemman, that i the leue wold ?

William of Palerne, l. 2358, which is quite the same as if we used the expression "dear darling."

WONDERS, p. 447. The Cornish gwander is weakness, infirmity, from gwan, weak (compare Eng. wan, Lat. vanus, Goth. wans).—Williams, Leuicon Cornu-Britannicum.

WONDROUS is an assimilation to words like marvellous of the older form wonders, properly an adverb (like needs) from adj. wonder, wonderful, a shortened form of wonderly. Compare "wonders dere" (wondrous dear).—Test. of Love; "Ye be wonders men."—Skelton; "A myracle wrought so wondersly."—Sir T. More (Skeat). Compare RIGHTEOUS, p. 325.

And eke therof she dyd make his face ;
Full lyke a mayd it was, a wonders case !

S. Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure, p. 188
(Percy Soc.).

WOOF, so spelt because supposed to be an immediate derivative of weave (like wef), is a corruption, says Prof. Skeat, of Mid. Eng. oof, which is a shortened form of A. Sax. ōwef, for onwef, i.e. on web, the warp laid on the warp. Thus the w ought to be in the middle of the word instead of at the beginning.

Oof, threde for webbynge, trama.—Prompt. Para.

Lynnen that hath a lepre in the oof, or in the werpe.—Wycliffe, Lev. xiii. 47.

WOBE, the preterite of the verb to wear, is an assimilation, by analogy, to bore from bear, tore from tear, &c., of old Eng. wered.

On his bak this sherte he wered al naked.

Chaucer, The Monkes Tale, l. 3320.

Godes seruyse heo hurde alont, & werede harde here.

Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle, p. 434.

Similarly stuck, used in the sense of was fixed or adhered (= Lat. haesit), as "he stuck in the mud," should be properly sticked, A. Sax. sticode, past tense of stician, to stick fast, e.g. "Seteldsticca sticode þurh his heafod."—Judges iv. 22; "he stykede faste"—Seven Sages, l. 1246 (Skeat). It has been assimilated to stuck = old Eng. stoke, part partic. of steken, to pierce or stab.

WORMWOOD, p. 449.

This thapsia, this wermoot, and elebre.

Palladius on Husbandrie (ab. 1420),
l. 1044.

Absinthium . . . in englishe wormwood, in Duche wermout.—Turner, Names of Herbes, 1548, p. 7 (E. D. S.).

By the juice of worm-woode, thou hast a bitter
braine !

Marston, What you Will, ii. 1.

WOUND, p. 449. Scott, however, also uses winded incorrectly for wound, curved, bent.

Small streams which winded by the hamlets of wooden huts.—Anne of Geierstein, ch. i.

Upon the church leads the trumpets sounded, the cornets winded, and the quirsisters sang an anthem.—Stow, Annals, p. 1281 (1600).

Other instances of wrongly formed past tenses are rove for reeved (= reefed), from reeve, to make a reef (Dut. reef); and strung, often used incorrectly for stringed, from string, to furnish with strings, from the false analogy of brung from bring, stung from sting, &c., e.g. "He strung his bow."

As sweet and musical
Apollo's lute, strung with his hair.
Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost, iv. 3, 343.

Divinely-warbled voice

Answering the stringed noise.

Milton, Christ's Nativity, l. 97.

WOUNDED KNEE, or Sore knee, the generally accepted meaning of Tsuigoab, the name of the Supreme Being among the Hottentots, with an explanatory legend attached that he once received a wound in the knee in his conflict with Gaunab, the spirit of evil, is due to a mistaken folk-etymology. Tsu means red-coloured, bloody, as well as wounded, sore; and goab, meaning originally a "comer" or "goer," is used not only for the knee (the walking joint), but for the approaching day, the dawn; and there is little doubt that the Hottentot deity was properly a personification of the "red dawn," the morning, and not a deification, as long imagined, of a certain lame-kneed medicine-man (Hahn; M. Müller; Nineteenth Cent. No. 59, p. 123).

A somewhat similar kind of misunderstanding of a name is seen in Michabo, "The Great Hare," the American Indian sun-god, which originally was intended to denote "The Great White One," the god of the silvery dawn (l'aube), nichi meaning "great," and wabos, both "hare" and "white" (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 154). In classical mythology the monstrous figment of Athéné springing from the head of Zeus is probably a misunderstanding of her name Trito-geneia, i. e. daughter of Tritos, the god of the waters and air (cf. Triton, Amphitrite), as if "head-born," from Æolic tritō, the head (Bréal; Cox, Aryan Mythology, i. 228). Compare the legends that have grown around Scaletta, a "staircase" or passage in the Alps, as if called from the skeletons of certain Moors long ago destroyed there (Fiske, p. 72); Bursa, the citadel of Carthage (Heb. bozrah), as if named from the hide (Greek bursa) employed by Dido (Kenrick, Phœnicia, p. 148; see above, p. 523); Damascus, the traditional scene of Abel's murder (Chaucer, Monkes Tale; Shakespeare, 1 Hen. VI. i. 3), as if the field of blood, from Heb. dâm, blood (B. Gould, Legends of Old Test. Characters, vol. i.). The myths that grew up at Lucerne around Mount Pilatus (Scott, Anne of Geierstein, ch. i.; Ruskin, Mod. Painters, v. 128) are supposed to be due to a false etymology of Mons Pilatus (above, p. 550).

But see Smith's Bib. Dict. ii. 875. Babel, the town of "confusion" (above, p. 518), is a Hebrew interpretation of Semitic Bab-il, "the gate of the god," which is also the meaning of its Accadian name Kâ-Dingira (Lenormant, Chaldean Magic, p. 353; Hist. Ancienne de l'Orient, i. 38).

WOUNDY, used in prov. English and slang as an intensive adverb meaning very, exceedingly, as "woundy cold," apparently from wound, like its vulgar synonyms plaguy from plague and bloody from blood. It is really a corruption of wonder, formerly used adverbially, as "Mine heart is wonder woe." Ford has "woundy bad" (Morris, Hist. Eng. Grammar, p. 190, 3rd ed.). Compare Ger. wunder-gross ("wonder-great") = woundy great, wunder-schön, &c. An old form was wunder, from old Eng. adverb wundrun, whence came wonders, wonderfully, Mod. Eng. wondrous, as in "wondrous wise," "Manners wondrous winning" (Goldsmith). See also F. C. B. Terry, N. and Q. 6th S. v. 156.

These tidings liketh me wonder well.

Hyckescorner, O. E. Plays, i. 166 (Hazlitt).

I wis, I wax wonder bold.

The World and the Child, 1522.

They war not manie men of weir

But they war wonder true.

Battle of Babrinnes (Dalyell, Scot.

Poems of 16th Cent.).

Indeed there is a woundy luck in names,
sirs . . .

Yes, you have done woundy cures, gossip Clench.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iv. 2 (sub init.).

WRINKLE, p. 452. This word for a cunning trick or artful dodge was probably associated popularly with wrinkle, a fold or plait, as if it meant an involved proceeding, a piece of "duplicity" (duplex) or double-foldedness, as opposed to what is plain or "simple" (Lat. simplex, "one-fold"; Scot. afald, honest). Cf. "God's wisdom has many folds." — Job xi. 6 (Heb.).

Palmer, as he was a man symple and without all wrynckles off cloked colusyone, opened to hym his whole intent. — Narratives of the Reformation, p. 102 (Camden Soc.).

Y.

YEARN, an old verb meaning to grieve or mourn, found in the Elizabethan dramatists, is an alteration of old Eng. ern (Chaucer), a corruption of ern, ermen, A. Sax. yrman, to grieve (from earn, wretched), by assimilation to the more common word yearn, to long for (A. Sax. gyrnan). See Skeat, s.v. So yearnful (Nares) = prov. Eng. ernful, sad.

My manly heart doth erne . . . for Falstaffe hee is dead, and wee must erne therefore.—Shakespeare, Hen. V. 1623 (ii. 3, l. 6).

YELLOW-HAMMER, p. 453. So Prof. Skeat, who compares Ger. gelb-ammer, Low Ger. geel-emerken.

YEOMAN, p. 454. Prof. Skeat holds this word to be from a hypothetical A. Sax. gá-man, i.e. "village-man," corresponding to Fris. gaman, a villager, from gá, Fris. ga, a district or village. The usual old Eng. form is yeman, and the Cleveland and Lonsdale pronunciation is still yenman.

Horseley with an-other broad Arrow strake the yeaman through the braine.
Sir A. Barton, l. 224 (Percy Fol.
MS. iii. 413).

POSTSCRIPT.

HESSIANS, p. 170. That this word is much older than the time of the Georges, and in fact identical with the old word huseans, is corroborated by the fact that Peter Heylin, writing in 1633, mentions that by an act of Edward IV. no cobbler in the city of London was allowed to sell on Sundays "any shoes, huseans (i.e. boots), or Galoches" (History of the Sabbath, pt. 2, ch. vii.).

ROSINED, a prov. Eng. word for intoxicated, fuddled (Lonsdale, Craven), as if primed and mellowed with drink as a fiddler's bow is with rosin, is really a corruption of Dan. rusende, fuddled, intoxicated, from ruus, inebriation, Swed. rus, drunkenness, rusa, to fuddle, rusig, tipsy. See ROSE, p. 330, ROUSE, p. 332, ROW, p. 604. The word being mistaken for a past participle, a verb to rosin, to drink to intoxication, naturally followed, as "He rosins hard" (R. B. Peacock, Lonsdale Glossary); and rosin is drink given to a musician playing for dancers (Slang Dict.).

THE END.

September 1884.

A CLASSIFIED LIST
OF EDUCATIONAL WORKS
PUBLISHED BY GEORGE BELL & SONS.

---

Full Catalogues will be sent post free on application.

---

BIBLIOTHECA CLASSICA.

A Series of Greek and Latin Authors, with English Notes, edited by eminent Scholars. 8vo.

- Æschylus. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 18s.
Cicero's Orations. By G. Long, M.A. 4 vols. 16s., 14s., 16s., 18s.
Demosthenes. By R. Whiston, M.A. 2 vols. 16s. each.
Euripides. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 3 vols. 16s. each.
Homer. By F. A. Paley, M.A. Vol. I. 12s.; Vol. II. 14s.
Herodotus. By Rev. J. W. Blakesley, B.D. 2 vols. 32s.
Hesiod. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 10s. 6d.
Horace. By Rev. A. J. Maclean, M.A. 18s.
Juvenal and Persius. By Rev. A. J. Maclean, M.A. 12s.
Lucan. The Pharsalia. By C. E. Haskins, M.A. [In the press.]
Plato. By W. H. Thompson, D.D. 2 vols. 7s. 6d. each.
Sophocles. Vol. I. By Rev. F. H. Blaydes, M.A. 18s.
——— Vol. II. Philoctetes. Electra. Ajax and Trachiniæ. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 12s.
Tacitus: The Annals. By the Rev. P. Frost. 15s.
Terence. By E. St. J. Parry, M.A. 18s.
Virgil. By J. Conington, M.A. 3 vols. 14s. each.
An Atlas of Classical Geography; Twenty-four Maps. By W. Hughes and George Long, M.A. New edition, with coloured Outlines. Imperial 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Uniform with above.

- A Complete Latin Grammar. By J. W. Donaldson, D.D. 3rd Edition. 14s.
-

GRAMMAR-SCHOOL CLASSICS.

- A Series of Greek and Latin Authors, with English Notes. Fcap. 8vo.*
Cæsar: De Bello Gallico. By George Long, M.A. 5s. 6d.
——— Books I.-III. For Junior Classes. By G. Long, M.A. 2s. 6d.
——— Books IV. and V. in 1 vol. 1s. 6d.
Catullus, Tibullus, and Propertius. Selected Poems. With Life. By Rev. A. H. Wratislaw. 3s. 6d.

- Cicero: De Senectute, De Amicitia, and Select Epistles. By George Long, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Cornelius Nepos. By Rev. J. F. Macmichael. 2s. 6d.
- Homer: Iliad. Books I.–XII. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 6s. 6d.
- Horace. With Life. By A. J. Maclean, M.A. 6s. 6d. [In 2 parts, 3s. 6d. each.]
- Juvenal: Sixteen Satires. By H. Prior, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Martial: Select Epigrams. With Life. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 6s. 6d.
- Ovid: the Fasti. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 5s.
- Sallust: Catilina and Jugurtha. With Life. By G. Long, M.A. and J. G. Frazer. 5s.
- Tacitus: Germania and Agricola. By Rev. P. Frost. 3s. 6d.
- Virgil: Bucolics, Georgics, and Æneid, Books I.–IV. Abridged from Professor Conington's Edition. 5s. 6d.—Æneid, Books V.–XII. 5s. 6d. Also in 9 separate Volumes, 1s. 6d. each.
- Xenophon: The Anabasis. With Life. By Rev. J. F. Macmichael. 5s. Also in 4 separate volumes, 1s. 6d. each.
- The Cyropædia. By G. M. Gorham, M.A. 6s.
- Memorabilia. By Percival Frost, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- A Grammar-School Atlas of Classical Geography, containing Ten selected Maps. Imperial 8vo. 5s.

Uniform with the Series.

- The New Testament, in Greek. With English Notes, &c. By Rev. J. F. Macmichael. 7s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE GREEK AND LATIN TEXTS.

- Æschylus. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 3s.
- Cæsar: De Bello Gallico. By G. Long, M.A. 2s.
- Cicero: De Senectute et de Amicitia, et Epistolæ Selectæ. By G. Long, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- Ciceronis Orationes. Vol. I. (in Verrem.) By G. Long, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Euripides. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 3 vols. 3s. 6d. each.
- Herodotus. By J. G. Blakesley, B.D. 2 vols. 7s.
- Homeri Ilias. I.–XII. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- Horatius. By A. J. Maclean, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- Juvenal et Persius. By A. J. Maclean, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- Lucretius. By H. A. J. Munro, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- Sallusti Crispi Catilina et Jugurtha. By G. Long, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- Sophocles. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Terenti Comædiæ. By W. Wagner, Ph.D. 3s.
- Thucydides. By J. G. Donaldson, D.D. 2 vols. 7s.
- Virgilius. By J. Conington, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Xenophontis Expeditio Cyri. By J. F. Macmichael, B.A. 2s. 6d.
- Novum Testamentum Græcum. By F. H. Scrivener, M.A. 4s. 6d. An edition with wide margin for notes, half bound, 12s.

CAMBRIDGE TEXTS WITH NOTES.

A Selection of the most usually read of the Greek and Latin Authors, Annotated for Schools. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d. each, with exceptions.

- Euripides. Alcestis.—Medea.—Hippolytus.—Hecuba.—Bacchæ.
Ion. 2s.—Orestes.—Phœnissæ.—Troades.—Hercules Furens. By F. A. Paley, M.A.
- Æschylus. Prometheus Vincetus.—Septem contra Thebas.—Agamemnon.—Persæ.—Eumenides. By F. A. Paley, M.A.
- Sophocles. Œdipus Tyrannus.—Œdipus Coloneus.—Antigone.
By F. A. Paley, M.A.
- Homer. Iliad. Book I. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 1s.
- Terence. Andria.—Hauton Timorumenos.—Phormio.—Adelphoe.
By Professor Wagner, Ph.D.
- Cicero. De Senectute, De Amicitia, and Epistolæ Selectæ. By G. Long, M.A.
- Ovid. Selections. By A. J. Maclean, M.A.
Others in preparation.

PUBLIC SCHOOL SERIES.

A Series of Classical Texts, annotated by well-known Scholars. Gr. 8vo.

- Aristophanes. The Peace. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 4s. 6d.
—— The Acharnians. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 4s. 6d.
—— The Frogs. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Cicero. The Letters to Atticus. Bk. I. By A. Pretor, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Demosthenes de Falsa Legatione. By R. Shilleto, M.A. 6s.
—— The Law of Leptines. By B. W. Beatson, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Plato. The Apology of Socrates and Crito. By W. Wagner, Ph.D.
8th Edition. 4s. 6d.
—— The Phædo. 7th Edition. By W. Wagner, Ph.D. 5s. 6d.
—— The Protagoras. 4th Edition. By W. Wayte, M.A. 4s. 6d.
—— The Euthyphro. 2nd Edition. By G. H. Wells, M.A. 3s.
—— The Euthydemus. By G. H. Wells, M.A. 4s.
—— The Republic. Books I. & II. By G. H. Wells, M.A. 5s. 6d.
- Plautus. The Aulularia. By W. Wagner, Ph.D. 3rd Edition. 4s. 6d.
—— Trinummus. By W. Wagner, Ph.D. 3rd Edition. 4s. 6d.
—— The Menaechmei. By W. Wagner, Ph.D. 4s. 6d.
—— The Mostellaria. By Prof. E. A. Sonnenschein. [In the press.]
- Sophocles Trachiniæ. By A. Pretor, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Terence. By W. Wagner, Ph.D. 10s. 6d.
- Theocritus. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Thucydides. Book VI. By T. W. Dougan, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 6s.
Others in preparation.

CRITICAL AND ANNOTATED EDITIONS.

- Ætna. By H. A. J. Munro, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Aristophanis Comœdiæ. By H. A. Holden, LL.D. 8vo. 2 vols.
23s. 6d. Plays sold separately.
- Pax. By F. A. Paley, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- Corpus Poëtarum Latinorum. Edited by Walker. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
- Horace. Quinti Horatii Flacci Opera. By H. A. J. Munro, M.A.
Large 8vo. 1l. 1s.

- Livy. The first five Books. By J. Prendeville. 12mo. roan, 5s.
Or Books I.-III. 3s. 6d. IV. and V. 3s. 6d.
- Ovid. P. Ovidii Nasonis Heroides XIV. By A. Palmer, M.A. 8vo. 6s.
- Propertius. Sex Aurelii Propertii Carmina. By F. A. Paley, M.A.
8vo. Cloth, 9s.
- Sex Propertii Elegiarum. Libri IV. By A. Palmer. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- Sophocles. The Ajax. By C. E. Palmer, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Thucydides. The History of the Peloponnesian War. By Richard Shilleto, M.A. Book I. 8vo. 6s. 6d. Book II. 8vo. 5s. 6d.

LATIN AND GREEK CLASS-BOOKS.

- Auxilia Latina. A Series of Progressive Latin Exercises. By
M. J. B. Baddeley, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. Part I. Accidence. 2nd Edition, revised.
2s. Part II. 4th Edition, revised. 2s. Key to Part II. 2s. 6d.
- Latin Prose Lessons. By Prof. Church, M.A. 6th Edit. Fcap. 8vo.
2s. 6d.
- Latin Exercises and Grammar Papers. By T. Collins, M.A. 4th Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Unseen Papers in Latin Prose and Verse. With Examination Questions. By T. Collins, M.A. 3rd Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- in Greek Prose and Verse. With Examination Questions.
By T. Collins, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- Analytical Latin Exercises. By C. P. Mason, B.A. 3rd Edit. 3s. 6d.
- Latin Mood Construction, Outlines of. With Exercises. By the Rev. G. E. C. Casey, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. Small post 8vo. 1s. 6d.
Latin of the Exercises. 1s. 6d.
- Scala Latina. Elementary Latin Exercises. By Rev. J. W.
Davis, M.A. New Edition, with Vocabulary. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Scala Græca: a Series of Elementary Greek Exercises. By Rev. J. W.
Davis, M.A., and R. W. Baddeley, M.A. 3rd Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Greek Verse Composition. By G. Preston, M.A. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- Greek Particles and their Combinations according to Attic Usage.
A Short Treatise. By F. A. Paley, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- BY THE REV. P. FROST, M.A., ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.
- Elogæ Latinæ; or, First Latin Reading-Book, with English Notes and a Dictionary. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Materials for Latin Prose Composition. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo.
2s. 6d. Key, 4s.
- A Latin Verse-Book. An Introductory Work on Hexameters and Pentameters. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. Key, 5s.
- Analecta Græca Minora, with Introductory Sentences, English
Notes, and a Dictionary. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Materials for Greek Prose Composition. New Edit. Fcap. 8vo.
3s. 6d. Key, 5s.
- Florilegium Poeticum. Elegiac Extracts from Ovid and Tibullus.
New Edition. With Notes. Fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- BY THE REV. F. E. GRETTON.
- A First Cheque-book for Latin Verse-makers. 1s. 6d.
- A Latin Version for Masters. 2s. 6d.
- Reddenda; or Passages with Parallel Hints for Translation into Latin Prose and Verse. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Reddenda Reddita (see below).

Anthologia Græca. A Selection of Choice Greek Poetry, with Notes. By F. St. John Thackeray. 4th and Cheaper Edition. 16mo. 4s. 6d.

Anthologia Latina. A Selection of Choice Latin Poetry, from Nævius to Bøthius, with Notes. By Rev. F. St. John Thackeray. Revised and Cheaper Edition. 16mo. 4s. 6d.

By H. A. HOLDEN, LL.D.

Foliorum Silvula. Part I. Passages for Translation into Latin Elegiac and Heroic Verse. 10th Edition. Post 8vo. 7s. 6d.

—— Part II. Select Passages for Translation into Latin Lyric and Comic Iambic Verse. 3rd Edition. Post 8vo. 5s.

—— Part III. Select Passages for Translation into Greek Verse. 3rd Edition. Post 8vo. 8s.

Folia Silvulæ, sive Eclogæ Poetarum Anglicorum in Latinum et Græcum conversæ. 8vo. Vol. II. 12s.

Foliorum Centuriæ. Select Passages for Translation into Latin and Greek Prose. 8th Edition. Post 8vo. 8s.

TRANSLATIONS, SELECTIONS, &c.

* * Many of the following books are well adapted for School Prizes.

Æschylus. Translated into English Prose by F. A. Paley, M.A. 2nd Edition. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

—— Translated into English Verse by Anna Swanwick. Post 8vo. 5s.

Horace. The Odes and Carmen Sæculare. In English Verse by J. Conington, M.A. 9th edition. Fcap. 8vo. 5s. 6d.

—— The Satires and Epistles. In English Verse by J. Conington, M.A. 6th edition. 6s. 6d.

—— Illustrated from Antique Gems by C. W. King, M.A. The text revised with Introduction by H. A. J. Munro, M.A. Large 8vo. 1l. 1s.

Horace's Odes. Englished and Imitated by various hands. Edited by C. W. F. Cooper. Crown 8vo. 6s. 6d.

Lusus Intercisi. Verses, Translated and Original, by H. J. Hodgson, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. 5s.

Propertius. Verse Translations from Book V., with revised Latin Text. By F. A. Paley, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 3s.

Plato. Gorgias. Translated by E. M. Cope, M.A. 8vo. 7s.

—— Philebus. Translated by F. A. Paley, M.A. Small 8vo. 4s.

—— Theætetus. Translated by F. A. Paley, M.A. Small 8vo. 4s.

—— Analysis and Index of the Dialogues. By Dr. Day. Post 8vo. 5s.

Reddenda Reddita : Passages from English Poetry, with a Latin Verse Translation. By F. E. Gretton. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Sabrinæ Corolla in hortulis Regiæ Scholæ Salopiensis contexuerunt tres viri floribus legendis. Editio tertia. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Theocritus. In English Verse, by C. S. Calverley, M.A. New Edition, revised. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Translations into English and Latin. By C. S. Calverley, M.A. Post 8vo. 7s. 6d.

—— into Greek and Latin Verse. By R. C. Jebb. 4to. cloth gilt. 10s. 6d.

Between Whiles. Translations by B. H. Kennedy. 2nd Edition. revised. Crown 8vo. 5s.

---

REFERENCE VOLUMES.

- A Latin Grammar. By Albert Harkness. Post 8vo. 6s.
 ——— By T. H. Key, M.A. 6th Thousand. Post 8vo. 8s.
- A Short Latin Grammar for Schools. By T. H. Key, M.A. F.R.S. 14th Edition. Post 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- A Guide to the Choice of Classical Books. By J. B. Mayor, M.A. Revised Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s.
- The Theatre of the Greeks. By J. W. Donaldson, D.D. 8th Edition. Post 8vo. 5s.
- Keightley's Mythology of Greece and Italy. 4th Edition. 5s.
- A Dictionary of Latin and Greek Quotations. By H. T. Riley. Post 8vo. 5s. With Index Verborum, 6s.
- A History of Roman Literature. By W. S. Tenffel, Professor at the University of Tübingen. By W. Wagner, Ph.D. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. 21s.
- Student's Guide to the University of Cambridge. 4th Edition revised. Fcap. 8vo. 6s. 6d.; or in Parts.—Part 1, 2s. 6d.; Parts 2 to 9, 1s. each.

---

CLASSICAL TABLES.

- Latin Accidence. By the Rev. P. Frost, M.A. 1s.
- Latin Versification. 1s.
- Notabilia Quædam; or the Principal Tenses of most of the Irregular Greek Verbs and Elementary Greek, Latin, and French Construction. New Edition. 1s.
- Richmond Rules for the Ovidian Distich, &c. By J. Tate, M.A. 1s.
- The Principles of Latin Syntax. 1s.
- Greek Verbs. A Catalogue of Verbs, Irregular and Defective; their leading formations, tenses, and inflexions, with Paradigms for conjugation, Rules for formation of tenses, &c. &c. By J. S. Baird, T.C.D. 2s. 6d.
- Greek Accents (Notes on). By A. Barry, D.D. New Edition. 1s.
- Homeric Dialect. Its Leading Forms and Peculiarities. By J. S. Baird, T.C.D. New Edition, by W. G. Rutherford. 1s.
- Greek Accidence. By the Rev. P. Frost, M.A. New Edition. 1s.

---

CAMBRIDGE MATHEMATICAL SERIES.

- Algebra. Choice and Chance. By W. A. Whitworth, M.A. 3rd Edition. 6s.
- Euclid. Exercises on Euclid and in Modern Geometry. By J. McDowell, M.A. 3rd Edition. 6s.
- Trigonometry. Plane. By Rev. T. Vyvyan, M.A. 2nd Edit. 3s. 6d.
- Geometrical Conic Sections. By H. G. Willis, M.A. Manchester Grammar School. 7s. 6d.
- Conics. The Elementary Geometry of. 4th Edition. By C. Taylor, D.D. 4s. 6d.
- Solid Geometry. By W. S. Aldis, M.A. 3rd Edition. 6s.

- Rigid Dynamics. By W. S. Aldis, M.A. 4s.
Elementary Dynamics. By W. Garnett, M.A. 3rd Edition. 6s.
Heat. An Elementary Treatise. By W. Garnett, M.A. 3rd Edit.
 3s. 6d.
Hydromechanics. By W. H. Besant, M.A., F.R.S. 4th Edition.
 Part I. Hydrostatics. 5s.
Mechanics. Problems in Elementary. By W. Walton, M.A. 6s.

---

CAMBRIDGE SCHOOL AND COLLEGE TEXT-BOOKS.

A Series of Elementary Treatises for the use of Students in the Universities, Schools, and Candidates for the Public Examinations. Fcap. 8vo.

- Arithmetic. By Rev. C. Elsee, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 11th Edit. 3s. 6d.
Algebra. By the Rev. C. Elsee, M.A. 6th Edit. 4s.
Arithmetic. By A. Wrigley, M.A. 3s. 6d.
 ——— A Progressive Course of Examples. With Answers. By J. Watson, M.A. 5th Edition. 2s. 6d.
Algebra. Progressive Course of Examples. By Rev. W. F.
 M'Michael, M.A., and R. Prowde Smith, M.A. 3rd Edition. 3s. 6d. With Answers. 4s. 6d.
Plane Astronomy, An Introduction to. By P. T. Main, M.A.
 5th Edition. 4s.
Conic Sections treated Geometrically. By W. H. Besant, M.A.
 4th Edition. 4s. 6d. Solution to the Examples. 4s.
Elementary Conic Sections treated Geometrically. By W. H.
 Besant, M.A. [In the press.
Conics. Enunciations and Figures. By W. H. Besant, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Statics, Elementary. By Rev. H. Goodwin, D.D. 2nd Edit. 3s.
Hydrostatics, Elementary. By W. H. Besant, M.A. 10th Edit. 4s.
Mensuration, An Elementary Treatise on. By B. T. Moore, M.A. 6s.
Newton's Principia, The First Three Sections of, with an Appendix; and the Ninth and Eleventh Sections. By J. H. Evans, M.A. 5th Edition, by P. T. Main, M.A. 4s.
Optics, Geometrical. With Answers. By W. S. Aldis, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Analytical Geometry for Schools. By T. G. Vyvyan. 4th Edit. 4s. 6d.
Greek Testament, Companion to the. By A. C. Barrett, A.M.
 5th Edition, revised. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.
Book of Common Prayer, An Historical and Explanatory Treatise on the. By W. G. Humphry, B.D. 6th Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.
Music, Text-book of. By H. C. Banister. 11th Edit. revised. 5s.
 ——— Concise History of. By Rev. H. G. Bonavia Hunt, B. Mus.
 Oxon. 6th Edition revised. 3s. 6d.

---

ARITHMETIC AND ALGEBRA.

See foregoing Series.

GEOMETRY AND EUCLID.

- Euclid. The First Two Books explained to Beginners. By C. P. Mason, B.A. 2nd Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- The Enunciations and Figures to Euclid's Elements. By Rev. J. Brasse, D.D. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. On Cards, in case, 5s. Without the Figures, 6d.
- Exercises on Euclid and in Modern Geometry. By J. McDowell, B.A. Crown 8vo. 3rd Edition revised. 6s.
- Geometrical Conic Sections. By H. G. Willis, M.A. 7s. 6d.
- Geometrical Conic Sections. By W. H. Besant, M.A. 4th Edit. 4s. 6d. Solution to the Examples. 4s.
- Elementary Geometrical Conic Sections. By W. H. Besant, M.A. [In the press.]
- Elementary Geometry of Conics. By C. Taylor, D.D. 4th Edit. 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- An Introduction to Ancient and Modern Geometry of Conics. By C. Taylor, M.A. 8vo. 15s.
- Solutions of Geometrical Problems, proposed at St. John's College from 1830 to 1846. By T. Gaskin, M.A. 8vo. 12s.

TRIGONOMETRY.

- Trigonometry, Introduction to Plane. By Rev. T. G. Vyvyan, Charterhouse. 2nd Edition. Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- An Elementary Treatise on Mensuration. By B. T. Moore, M.A. 5s.

ANALYTICAL GEOMETRY

AND DIFFERENTIAL CALCULUS.

- An Introduction to Analytical Plane Geometry. By W. P. Turnbull, M.A. 8vo. 12s.
- Problems on the Principles of Plane Co-ordinate Geometry. By W. Walton, M.A. 8vo. 16s.
- Trilinear Co-ordinates, and Modern Analytical Geometry of Two Dimensions. By W. A. Whitworth, M.A. 8vo. 16s.
- An Elementary Treatise on Solid Geometry. By W. S. Aldis, M.A. 3rd Edition revised. Cr. 8vo. 6s.
- Elementary Treatise on the Differential Calculus. By M. O'Brien, M.A. 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Elliptic Functions, Elementary Treatise on. By A. Cayley, M.A. Demy 8vo. 15s.

MECHANICS & NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.

- Statics, Elementary. By H. Goodwin, D.D. Fcap. 8vo. 2nd Edition. 3s.
- Dynamics, A Treatise on Elementary. By W. Garnett, M.A. 3rd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Dynamics. Rigid. By W. S. Aldis, M.A. 4s.

- Elementary Mechanics, Problems in. By W. Walton, M.A. New Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Theoretical Mechanics, Problems in. By W. Walton. 2nd Edit. revised and enlarged. Demy 8vo. 16s.
- Hydrostatics. By W. H. Besant, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 10th Edition. 4s.
- Hydromechanics, A Treatise on. By W. H. Besant, M.A., F.R.S. 8vo. 4th Edition, revised. Part I. Hydrostatics. 5s.
- Dynamics of a Particle, A Treatise on the. By W. H. Besant, M.A. [Preparing.]
- Optics, Geometrical. By W. S. Aldis, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Double Refraction, A Chapter on Fresnel's Theory of. By W. S. Aldis, M.A. 8vo. 2s.
- Heat, An Elementary Treatise on. By W. Garnett, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3rd Edition revised. 3s. 6d.
- Newton's Principia, The First Three Sections of, with an Appendix; and the Ninth and Eleventh Sections. By J. H. Evans, M.A. 5th Edition. Edited by P. T. Main, M.A. 4s.
- Astronomy, An Introduction to Plane. By P. T. Main, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. cloth. 4s.
- Astronomy, Practical and Spherical. By R. Main, M.A. 8vo. 14s.
- Astronomy, Elementary Chapters on, from the 'Astronomie Physique' of Biot. By H. Goodwin, D.D. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Pure Mathematics and Natural Philosophy, A Compendium of Facts and Formulæ in. By G. R. Smalley. 2nd Edition, revised by J. McDowell, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Elementary Mathematical Formulæ. By the Rev. T. W. Openshaw. 1s. 6d.
- Elementary Course of Mathematics. By H. Goodwin, D.D. 6th Edition. 8vo. 16s.
- Problems and Examples, adapted to the 'Elementary Course of Mathematics.' 3rd Edition. 8vo. 5s.
- Solutions of Goodwin's Collection of Problems and Examples. By W. W. Hutt, M.A. 3rd Edition, revised and enlarged. 8vo. 9s.
- Mechanics of Construction. With numerous Examples. By S. Fenwick, F.R.A.S. 8vo. 12s.
- Pure and Applied Calculation, Notes on the Principles of. By Rev. J. Challis, M.A. Demy 8vo. 15s.
- Physics, The Mathematical Principle of. By Rev. J. Challis, M.A. Demy 8vo. 5s.

TECHNOLOGICAL HANDBOOKS.

Edited by H. TRUEMAN WOOD, Secretary of the Society of Arts.

1. Dyeing and Tissue Printing. By W. Crookes, F.R.S. 5s.
2. Glass Manufacture. By Henry Chance, M.A.; H. J. Powell, B.A.; and H. G. Harris. 3s. 6d.
3. Cotton Manufacture. By Richard Marsden, Esq., of Manchester. 6s. 6d.
4. Telegraphs and Telephones. By W. H. Preece, F.R.S. [Preparing.]

HISTORY, TOPOGRAPHY, &c.

- Rome and the Campagna. By R. Burn, M.A. With 85 Engravings and 26 Maps and Plans. With Appendix. 4to. 3l. 3s.
- Old Rome. A Handbook for Travellers. By R. Burn, M.A. With Maps and Plans. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Modern Europe. By Dr. T. H. Dyer. 2nd Edition, revised and continued. 5 vols. Demy 8vo. 2l. 12s. 6d.
- The History of the Kings of Rome. By Dr. T. H. Dyer. 8vo. 16s.
- The History of Pompeii: its Buildings and Antiquities. By T. H. Dyer. 3rd Edition, brought down to 1874. Post 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- The City of Rome: its History and Monuments. 2nd Edition, revised by T. H. Dyer. 5s.
- Ancient Athens: its History, Topography, and Remains. By T. H. Dyer. Super-royal 8vo. Cloth. 1l. 5s.
- The Decline of the Roman Republic. By G. Long. 5 vols. 8vo. 14s. each.
- A History of England during the Early and Middle Ages. By C. H. Pearson, M.A. 2nd Edition revised and enlarged. 8vo. Vol. I. 16s. Vol. II. 14s.
- Historical Maps of England. By C. H. Pearson. Folio. 3rd Edition revised. 3l. 6d.
- History of England, 1800-15. By Harriet Martineau, with new and copious Index. 1 vol. 3s. 6d.
- History of the Thirty Years' Peace, 1815-46. By Harriet Martineau. 4 vols. 3s. 6d. each.
- A Practical Synopsis of English History. By A. Bowes. 4th Edition. 8vo. 2s.
- Student's Text-Book of English and General History. By D. Beale. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Lives of the Queens of England. By A. Strickland. Library Edition, 8 vols. 7s. 6d. each. Cheaper Edition, 6 vols. 5s. each. Abridged Edition, 1 vol. 6s. 6d.
- Eginhard's Life of Karl the Great (Charlemagne). Translated with Notes, by W. Glaister, M.A., B.C.L. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- Outlines of Indian History. By A. W. Hughes. Small Post 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- The Elements of General History. By Prof. Tytler. New Edition, brought down to 1874. Small Post 8vo. 3s. 6d.

ATLASES.

- An Atlas of Classical Geography. 24 Maps. By W. Hughes and G. Long, M.A. New Edition. Imperial 8vo. 12s. 6d.
- A Grammar-School Atlas of Classical Geography. Ten Maps selected from the above. New Edition. Imperial 8vo. 5s.
- First Classical Maps. By the Rev. J. Tate, M.A. 3rd Edition. Imperial 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Standard Library Atlas of Classical Geography. Imp. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

PHILOLOGY.

- WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. With Dr. Mahn's Etymology. 1 vol. 1628 pages, 3000 Illustrations. 21s. With Appendices and 70 additional pages of Illustrations, 1919 pages, 31s. 6d.
- 'THE BEST PRACTICAL ENGLISH DICTIONARY EXTANT.'—Quarterly Review, 1873.
Prospectuses, with specimen pages, post free on application.
- Richardson's Philological Dictionary of the English Language. Combining Explanation with Etymology, and copiously illustrated by Quotations from the best Authorities. With a Supplement. 2 vols. 4to. 4l. 14s. 6d.; half russia, 5l. 15s. 6d.; russia, 6l. 12s. Supplement separately. 4to. 12s.
An 8vo. Edit. without the Quotations, 15s.; half russia, 20s.; russia, 24s.
- Supplementary English Glossary. Containing 12,000 Words and Meanings occurring in English Literature, not found in any other Dictionary. By T. L. O. Davies. Demy 8vo. 16s.
- Folk-Etymology. A Dictionary of Words perverted in Form or Meaning by False Derivation or Mistaken Analogy. By Rev. A. S. Palmer. Demy 8vo. 21s.
- Brief History of the English Language. By Prof. James Hadley, LL.D., Yale College. Fcap. 8vo. 1s.
- The Elements of the English Language. By E. Adams, Ph.D. 19th Edition. Post 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- Philological Essays. By T. H. Key, M.A., F.R.S. 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Language, its Origin and Development. By T. H. Key, M.A., F.R.S. 8vo. 14s.
- Synonyms and Antonyms of the English Language. By Archdeacon Smith. 2nd Edition. Post 8vo. 5s.
- Synonyms Discriminated. By Archdeacon Smith. Demy 8vo. 16s.
- Bible English. By T. L. O. Davies. 5s.
- The Queen's English. A Manual of Idiom and Usage. By the late Dean Alford 6th Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- Etymological Glossary of nearly 2500 English Words derived from the Greek. By the Rev. E. J. Boyce. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- A Syriac Grammar. By G. Phillips, D.D. 3rd Edition, enlarged. 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- A Grammar of the Arabic Language. By Rev. W. J. Beaumont, M.A. 12mo. 7s.

DIVINITY, MORAL PHILOSOPHY, &amp;c.

- Novum Testamentum Græcum, Textus Stephanici, 1550. By F. H. Scrivener, A.M., LL.D., D.C.L. New Edition. 16mo. 4s. 6d. Also on Writing Paper, with Wide Margin. Half-bound. 12s.
- By the same Author.*
- Codex Bezae Cantabrigiensis. 4to. 26s.
- A Full Collation of the Codex Sinaiticus with the Received Text of the New Testament, with Critical Introduction. 2nd Edition, revised. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- A Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament. With Forty Facsimiles from Ancient Manuscripts. 3rd Edition. 8vo. 18s.

- Six Lectures on the Text of the New Testament. For English Readers. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- The New Testament for English Readers. By the late H. Alford, D.D. Vol. I. Part I. 3rd Edit. 12s. Vol. I. Part II. 2nd Edit. 10s. 6d. Vol. II. Part I. 2nd Edit. 16s. Vol. II. Part II. 2nd Edit. 16s.
- The Greek Testament. By the late H. Alford, D.D. Vol. I. 6th Edit. 11. 8s. Vol. II. 6th Edit. 11. 4s. Vol. III. 5th Edit. 18s. Vol. IV. Part I. 4th Edit. 18s. Vol. IV. Part II. 4th Edit. 14s. Vol. IV. 11. 12s.
- Companion to the Greek Testament. By A. C. Barrett, M.A. 5th Edition, revised. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- The Book of Psalms. A New Translation, with Introductions, &c. By the Very Rev. J. J. Stewart Perowne, D.D. 8vo. Vol. I. 5th Edition, 16s. Vol. II. 5th Edit. 16s.
- Abridged for Schools. 4th Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- History of the Articles of Religion. By C. H. Hardwick. 3rd Edition. Post 8vo. 5s.
- History of the Creeds. By J. R. Lumby, D.D. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Pearson on the Creed. Carefully printed from an early edition. With Analysis and Index by E. Walford, M.A. Post 8vo. 5s.
- An Historical and Explanatory Treatise on the Book of Common Prayer. By Rev. W. G. Humphry, B.D. 6th Edition, enlarged. Small Post 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- The New Table of Lessons Explained. By Rev. W. G. Humphry, B.D. Fcap. 1s. 6d.
- A Commentary on the Gospels for the Sundays and other Holy Days of the Christian Year. By Rev. W. Denton, A.M. New Edition. 3 vols. 8vo. 54s. Sold separately.
- Commentary on the Epistles for the Sundays and other Holy Days of the Christian Year. By Rev. W. Denton, A.M. 2 vols. 36s. Sold separately.
- Commentary on the Acts. By Rev. W. Denton, A.M. Vol. I. 8vo. 18s. Vol. II. 14s.
- Notes on the Catechism. By Rt. Rev. Bishop Barry. 7th Edit. Fcap. 2s.
- Catechetical Hints and Helps. By Rev. E. J. Boyce, M.A. 4th Edition, revised. Fcap. 2s. 6d.
- Examination Papers on Religious Instruction. By Rev. E. J. Boyce. Sewed. 1s. 6d.
- Church Teaching for the Church's Children. An Exposition of the Catechism. By the Rev. F. W. Harper. Sq. Fcap. 2s.
- The Winton Church Catechist. Questions and Answers on the Teaching of the Church Catechism. By the late Rev. J. S. B. Monsell, LL.D. 3rd Edition. Cloth, 3s.; or in Four Parts, sewed.
- The Church Teacher's Manual of Christian Instruction. By Rev. M. F. Sadler. 28th Thousand. 2s. 6d.
- Short Explanation of the Epistles and Gospels of the Christian Year, with Questions. Royal 32mo. 2s. 6d.; calf, 4s. 6d.
- Butler's Analogy of Religion; with Introduction and Index by Rev. Dr. Steere. New Edition. Fcap. 3s. 6d.

- Lectures on the History of Moral Philosophy in England. By W. Whewell, D.D. Crown 8vo. 8s.
- Kent's Commentary on International Law. By J. T. Abdy, LL.D. New and Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- A Manual of the Roman Civil Law. By G. Leapingwell, LL.D. 8vo. 12s.

FOREIGN CLASSICS.

A series for use in Schools, with English Notes, grammatical and explanatory, and renderings of difficult idiomatic expressions.

Fcap. 8vo.

- Schiller's Wallenstein. By Dr. A. Buchheim. 5th Edit. 6s. 6d.
Or the Lager and Piccolomini, 3s. 6d. Wallenstein's Tod, 3s. 6d.
- Maid of Orleans. By Dr. W. Wagner. 3s. 6d.
- Maria Stuart. By V. Kastner. 3s.
- Goethe's Hermann and Dorothea. By E. Bell, M.A., and E. Wölfel. 2s. 6d.
- German Ballads, from Uhland, Goethe, and Schiller. By C. L. Bielefeld. 3rd Edition. 3s. 6d.
- Charles XII., par Voltaire. By L. Direy. 4th Edition. 3s. 6d.
- Aventures de Télémaque, par Fénelon. By C. J. Delille. 2nd Edition. 4s. 6d.
- Select Fables of La Fontaine. By F. E. A. Gasc. 14th Edition. 3s.
- Piccola, by X. B. Saintine. By Dr. Dubuc. 13th Thousand. 1s. 6d.
- Lamartine's Le Tailleur de Pierres de Saint-Point. Edited, with Notes, by J. Boiello, Senior French Master, Dulwich College. Fcap. 8vo. 3s.

FRENCH CLASS-BOOKS.

- French Grammar for Public Schools. By Rev. A. C. Clapin, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 9th Edition, revised. 2s. 6d.
- French Primer. By Rev. A. C. Clapin, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 5th Edit. 1s.
- Primer of French Philology. By Rev. A. C. Clapin. Fcap. 8vo. 2nd Edit. 1s.
- Le Nouveau Trésor; or, French Student's Companion. By M. E. S. 16th Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Italian Primer. By Rev. A. C. Clapin. Fcap. 8vo. 1s.

F. E. A. GASC'S FRENCH COURSE.

- First French Book. Fcap. 8vo. 86th Thousand. 1s. 6d.
- Second French Book. 42nd Thousand. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Key to First and Second French Books. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- French Fables for Beginners, in Prose, with Index. 15th Thousand. 12mo. 2s.
- Select Fables of La Fontaine. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- Histoires Amusantes et Instructives. With Notes. 15th Thousand. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

- Practical Guide to Modern French Conversation. 12th Thousand. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- French Poetry for the Young. With Notes. 4th Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s.
- Materials for French Prose Composition; or, Selections from the best English Prose Writers. 17th Thousand. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d. Key, 6s.
- Prosateurs Contemporains. With Notes. 8vo. 7th Edition, revised. 5s.
- Le Petit Compagnon; a French Talk-Book for Little Children. 11th Thousand. 16mo. 2s. 6d.
- An Improved Modern Pocket Dictionary of the French and English Languages. 35th Thousand, with Additions. 16mo. Cloth. 4s. Also in 2 vols. in neat leatherette, 5s.
- Modern French-English and English-French Dictionary. 2nd Edition, revised. In 1 vol. 12s. 6d. (formerly 2 vols. 25s.)

GOMBERT'S FRENCH DRAMA.

Being a Selection of the best Tragedies and Comedies of Molière, Racine, Corneille, and Voltaire. With Arguments and Notes by A. Gombert. New Edition, revised by F. E. A. Gasc. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. each; sewed, 6d.

CONTENTS.

MOLIERE:—Le Misanthrope. L'Avare. Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme. Le Tartuffe. Le Malade Imaginaire. Les Femmes Savantes. Les Fourberies de Scapin. Les Précieuses Ridicules. L'Ecole des Femmes. L'Ecole des Maris. Le Médecin malgré Lui.

RACINE:—Phèdre. Esther. Athalie. Iphigénie. Les Plaideurs. La Thébaïde; ou, Les Frères Ennemis. Andromaque. Britannicus.

P. CORNEILLE:—Le Cid. Horace. Cinna. Polyucte.

VOLTAIRE:—Zaire.

GERMAN CLASS-BOOKS.

- Materials for German Prose Composition. By Dr Buchheim. 9th Edition. Fcap. 4s. 6d. Key, Parts I. and II., 3s. Parts III. and IV., 4s.
- Wortfolge, or Rules and Exercises on the Order of Words in German Sentences. By Dr. F. Stock. 1s. 6d.
- A German Grammar for Public Schools. By the Rev. A. C. Clapin and F. Holl Müller. 3rd Edition. Fcap. 2s. 6d.
- A German Primer, with Exercises. By Rev. A. C. Clapin. 1s.
- Kotzebue's Der Gefangene. With Notes by Dr. W. Stromberg. 1s.

ENGLISH CLASS-BOOKS.

- A Brief History of the English Language. By Prof. Jas. Hadley, LL.D., of Yale College. Fcap. 8vo. 1s.
- The Elements of the English Language. By E. Adams, Ph.D. 19th Edition. Post 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- The Rudiments of English Grammar and Analysis. By E. Adams, Ph.D. 14th Thousand. Fcap. 8vo. 2s.
- A Concise System of Parsing. By L. E. Adams, B.A. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

By C. P. Mason, Fellow of Univ. Coll. London.

- First Notions of Grammar for Young Learners. Fcap. 8vo. 18th Thousand. Cloth. 8d.
- First Steps in English Grammar for Junior Classes. Demy 18mo. 35th Thousand. 1s.
- Outlines of English Grammar for the use of Junior Classes. 43rd Thousand. Crown 8vo. 2s.
- English Grammar, including the Principles of Grammatical Analysis. 26th Edition. 86th Thousand. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- A Shorter English Grammar, with copious Exercises. 16th Thousand. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- English Grammar Practice, being the Exercises separately. 1s.
- Code Standard Grammars. Parts I. and II. 2d. each. Parts III., IV., and V., 3d. each.
-
- Practical Hints on Teaching. By Rev. J. Menet, M.A. 6th Edit. revised. Crown 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper, 2s.
- How to Earn the Merit Grant. A Manual of School Management. By H. Major, B.A., B.Sc. 2nd Edit. revised. Part I. Infant School, 3s. Part II. 4s. Complete, 6s.
- Test Lessons in Dictation. 2nd Edition. Paper cover, 1s. 6d.
- Questions for Examinations in English Literature. By Rev. W. W. Skeat, Prof. of Anglo-Saxon at Cambridge University. 2s. 6d.
- Drawing Copies. By P. H. Delamotte. Oblong 8vo. 12s. Sold also in parts at 1s. each.
- Poetry for the Schoolroom. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- Geographical Text-Book; a Practical Geography. By M. E. S. 12mo. 2s.
The Blank Maps done up separately, 4to. 2s. coloured.
- Loudon's (Mrs.) Entertaining Naturalist. New Edition. Revised by W. S. Dallas, F.L.S. 5s.
- Handbook of Botany. New Edition, greatly enlarged by D. Wooster. Fcap. 2s. 6d.
- The Botanist's Pocket-Book. With a copious Index. By W. R. Hayward. 4th Edit. revised. Crown 8vo. cloth limp. 4s. 6d.
- Experimental Chemistry, founded on the Work of Dr. Stöckhardt. By C. W. Heaton. Post 8vo. 5s.
- Double Entry Elucidated. By B. W. Foster. 12th Edit. 4to. 3s. 6d.
- A New Manual of Book-keeping. By P. Crellin, Accountant. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Picture School-Books. In Simple Language, with numerous Illustrations. Royal 16mo.

The Infant's Primer. 3d.—School Primer. 6d.—School Reader. By J. Tilleard. 1s.—Poetry Book for Schools. 1s.—The Life of Joseph. 1s.—The Scripture Parables. By the Rev. J. E. Clarke. 1s.—The Scripture Miracles. By the Rev. J. E. Clarke. 1s.—The New Testament History. By the Rev. J. G. Wood, M.A. 1s.—The Old Testament History. By the Rev. J. G. Wood, M.A. 1s.—The Story of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. 1s.—The Life of Christopher Columbus. By Sarah Crompton. 1s.—The Life of Martin Luther. By Sarah Crompton. 1s.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS.

A Series of Reading Books designed to facilitate the acquisition of the power of Reading by very young Children. In 8 vols. limp cloth, 8d. each.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| The Cat and the Hen. Sam and his Dog Red-leg.Bob and Tom Lee. A Wreck.                      | } SuitableforInfants.              |
| The New-born Lamb. The Rosewood Box. PoorFan. Sheep Dog.                                    |  |
| The Story of Three Monkeys.   | } SuitableforStandardsI. & II. |
| Story of a Cat. Told by Herself.  |  |
| The Blind Boy. The Mute Girl. A New Tale ofBabes in a Wood.                                 |  |
| The Dey and the Knight. The New Bank Note.The Royal Visit. A King's Walk on a Winter's Day. |  |
| Queen Bee and Busy Bee.   |  |
| Gull's Crag.  |  |
| A First Book of Geography. By the Rev. C. A. Johns.Illustrated. Double size, 1s.            |  |

BELL'S READING-BOOKS.

FOR SCHOOLS AND PAROCHIAL LIBRARIES.

The popularity of the 'Books for Young Readers' is a sufficient proof that teachers and pupils alike approve of the use of interesting stories, in place of the dry combination of letters and syllables, of which elementary reading-books generally consist. The Publishers have therefore thought it advisable to extend the application of this principle to books adapted for more advanced readers.

Now Ready. Post 8vo. Strongly bound.

- |   |                                       |
|---|---------------------------------------|
| Grimm's German Tales. (Selected.) 1s.                    | } SuitableforStandardIII. |
| Andersen's Danish Tales. (Selected.) 1s.                 |                                       |
| Great Englishmen. Short Lives for Young Children. 1s.    |                                       |
| Friends in Fur and Feathers. By Gwynfryn. 1s.            | } StandardIV.                     |
| Parables from Nature. (Selected.) By Mrs. Gatty. 1s.     |                                       |
| Gatty's Light of Truth, and other Parables. 1s.          |                                       |
| Great Englishwomen. Short Lives, 1s.                     |                                       |
| Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare. (Selected.) 1s.           |                                       |
| Edgeworth's Tales. A Selection. 1s.                      | } StandardV. & VI.                |
| Gulliver's Travels. (Abridged.) 1s.                      |                                       |
| Marie: Glimpses of Life in France. By A. R. Ellis. 1s.   |                                       |
| Masterman Ready. By Capt. Marryat. (Abgd.) 1s.           |                                       |
| Robinson Crusoe. 1s.                                     | } StandardV. & VI.                |
| The Vicar of Wakefield. Abridged. 1s.                    |                                       |
| Settlers in Canada. By Capt. Marryat. (Abgd.) 1s.        |                                       |
| Poetry for Boys. By D. Munro. 1s.                        |                                       |
| Southey's Life of Nelson. (Abridged.) 1s.                |                                       |
| Life of the Duke of Wellington, with Maps and Plans. 1s. |                                       |
| The Romance of the Coast. By J. Runciman. 1s.            |                                       |

